1849. अधिकं कुलमित्रं च दासगोपालनापितः। एते शूद्रेषु भोज्यान्ना यश्चात्मान निवेदयेत्॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 57. 16.

food of these four and of his own barber. Haradatta on Gaut. 17. 6 and Aparārka (p. 244) remark that a brāhmana can take the food of these persons among śūdras only in the event of extreme calamities. From this it appears that up to the 12th century A. D. the peremptory prohibition contained in this text was either unknown or was not much respected. The exclusiveness of caste in matters of food and marriage was made more strict by the Kalivarjya texts. Vide above (pp. 869 and 885) as to how Parāśara himself was overruled by this text.

32. 'Pilgrimages to very distant holy places' (1. 26).

A brāhmana was called upon to tend his Vedic or grhya fires. If he went to distant places on pilgrimage this duty would be interfered with. It is provided by Ap.[1850] Śr. IV 16. 18 that even when on a journey the agnihotrin has, after turning his face in the direction of his fire altar, to go mentally over the whole procedure of his daily fire worship and the Darśapūrnamāsa. The Gobhila-smrti II. 157 says the same. The Smrtikaustubha[1851] says that this prohibits pilgrimage to holy places beyond the sea or on the borders of Bharatavarsa. This text prohibits a brāhmana from going to distant places on pilgrimage, but it does not prevent him from undertaking a journey for earning wealth for performing sacrifices. K. V. N. (folio 10a) quotes a text of Satyavrata to this effect.

33. 'The rule that a pupil should habitually observe the same behaviour towards the wife of the guru as towards the guru himself' (1. 27). Ap. Dh.[1852] S. I. 2. 7. 27, Gaut. II. 31–34, Manu II. 210, Visnu Dh. S. 32. 1–2 prescribe that a student should perform the same acts of honour and obedience towards the wife or wives of his teacher as towards the teacher (except holding her feet in doing obeisance and eating the leavings of the food). As students were often grown-up young men and the teacher's wife might often be a young lady, Manu II. 212,

---

1850 प्रवसन् विहारमभिमुखो याजमानं जपति । आप. श्रौ. IV. 16 18, मनसा चैत्यकं कर्म प्रवसन्नप्यतन्द्रित. । उपविश्य शुचि. सर्वं यथाकालमनुद्रवेत् । गोभिल II. 157.

1851 या च प्रत्यन्तदेशगततीर्थयात्रा पौराणी सा कलौ नेति । स्मृतिकौ. p 478; धनान्यर्जयितुं युक्त. प्रवासो ह्यग्निहोत्रिण. । धनैर्यज्ञसम्भवेद्विज्या तीर्थार्थं न तु व्रजेदिति सत्यव्रतस्मरणात् । कलिवर्ज्यवि. folio 10a

1852. अन्यत्रोपसंग्रहणादुच्छिष्टाशनाच्चाचार्यवदाचार्यदारे वृत्ति. । आप. ध. I. 2, 7. 27, तद्भार्यासुत्रेषु चैवम् । नोच्छिष्टाशनस्नापनप्रसाधनपादप्रक्षालनोन्मर्दनोपसंग्रहणानि । विभोष्योपसंग्रहण गुरुभार्यायाम् । गौ. II. 37-39.

216, 217 (that are the same as Visnu Dh. S. 32. 13-15) provide that a pupil full twenty years old should not show honour to the young wife of his teacher by clasping her feet, but that he may prostrate himself on the ground before the teacher's young wife in performing obeisance and that he may hold her feet in obeisance only (once) when he returns from a journey. This text accepts the principle underlying the special rules laid down by Manu and Visnu and prohibits the daily touching of the feet of the guru's wife on the part of the pupil. The Sm [1853] Kau. and Dharmasindhu (III p. 353) hold that this sets aside the rule laid down in Yāj I 49 that a perpetual student may stay till his death with his teacher or with the teacher's son or (in default of both) with the teacher's wife.

34. 'The modes of maintenance conceded to brāhmanas in times of distress (or calamity)' (1. 28).

The special modes of maintenance prescribed for brāhmanas were receiving gifts, teaching the Veda and officiating as priests (Gaut. X. 2, Āp. Dh. S. II. 5. 10. 5, Manu X. 76, I. 88, Vas. II. 14, Yāj. I. 118). But it was recognised from very ancient times that if a brāhmana could not maintain himself by following the above modes of earning wealth he could in a season of distress pursue the avocations peculiar to a ksatriya or vaiśya (Gaut. VII. 6-7, Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 77-81, Vas II. 22, Manu X. 81-82, Yāj. III 35)[1854]. Vide H. of Dh vol. II. pp. 118-133 for detailed treatment of this matter and for the restrictions imposed even when brāhmanas were allowed to follow the avocations of ksatriyas and vaiśyas. The Kalivarjya prohibition is merely one on paper. From anoient times till now brāhmanas have pursued all sorts of avocations and hardly any importance has been attached to this dictum.

35. 'Not accumulating any wealth (or grains) for the morrow' (1. 28). Manu IV. 7 and Yāj. I. 128 provide that brāhmanas are of four kinds, viz. those who accumulate grain of the capacity of a kusūla, those who accumulate grain of the capacity of a kumbhī, those that accumulate grain enough to satisfy their needs for three days and those who do not collect grain even for the next day. The smṛtis prescribe that each later one is superior in merit to each preceding one. The commentators differ as to the meaning conveyed by kusūladhānya (some holding that it means one who has accumulated grain for three years, while others say it means one who has grain for 12 days) and kumbhīdhānya (a person accumulating grain for a year, or grain for six days). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 110, note 234 and p. 641 note 1502. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 128 says that the advice not to accumulate corn even for three days or one day is not addressed to all brāhmaṇas, but to those only who are called yāyāvara[1855]. This explanation of the Mit. indicates that the Kalivarjya text on this point was either not known to the Mit. or was not much thought of by it. The Kalivarjya text provides that the ideal of extreme poverty and absence of acquisitiveness for brāhmaṇas was not to be insisted upon in the Kali age.

---

1853. गुरुपत्नीसमीपे गुरुपुत्राभावे चिर स्थितिर्विहिता सा निषिध्यते। न तु गुरुवत्प्रति-... इति मनूक्ता पूजा ' वृत्तिशीलतेति पदेन पूजानभिधानात् । स्मृतिकौ. p 478, but कलिवर्ज्यवि. folio 10a asays, शिष्यस्य गुरुपत्न्यां गुरुवद् वृत्ति.—गुरुवत्प्रतिपूज्यास्तु सवर्णा गुरुयोषित इत्यादि मनूक्ता '

1854. क्षात्रेण कर्मणा जीवेद्विशं वाप्यापदि द्विजः। निस्तीर्य तामथात्मान पावयित्वा न्यसेत्पथि ॥ या.III. 35.

36. 'The acceptance of the kindling of a log of wood (i. e. setting up sacred Vedic fire) at the time of the homa of Jātakarma for the purpose of securing long life to the child born to a person' (l. 29). The araṇis are two logs of Aśvattha tree from which fire is produced by attrition, which (fire) is used for kindling the gārhapatya fire. In certain śākhās, it is the practice to kindle fire from araṇis and to use it for the homa in the Jātakarma rite. This fire was to be used in the subsequent rites for the child such as cūḍā, upanayana, marriage. It was supposed that this enabled the child to live long.[1856] The Sam K quotes a pariśiṣṭa text to this effect.[1857]

37. 'Constant journeys by brāhmaṇas' (l. 30). The Mahābhārata (Śānti 23. 15)[1858] says, 'As a snake swallows mice hiding in holes, the earth swallows two persons viz. a king who does not fight (an invader) and a brāhmaṇa who does not engage 1855. For the two kinds of brāhmaṇas, viz śālīna and yāyāvara, vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp 641–42 n 1502–1505.

---

1856. क्वचिच्छाखाया जातकर्महोमे प्रजाजीवनार्थमरणिपरिग्रहो विहितः। कृष्णभट्ट on नि. सि. pp. 1299–1300.

1857. परिशिष्टान्तरे तु कुमारस्य जातस्य अरणीं षोडशाङ्गुलाम् । आहृत्य चोत्तरारणीं तास्यामग्निं तु मन्थयेत् । ..... तस्मिन् कुमारकर्माणि विवाहान्तानि कारयेत् । सं कौ under जातकर्म.

1858. भूमिरेतौ निगिरति सर्पो बिलशया इव । राजानं चाविरोद्धारं ब्राह्मणं चाप्रवासिनम् ॥ शान्ति 23 15. Vide also Sabhā 55. 14 Śānti 57. 3 and Anuśāsana 36 16 for almost the same words.

in travel' (for acquiring learning from famous teachers) This text only forbids taking aimlessly to long journeys but not those for study or for religious purposes.

38. 'Blowing on fire with the mouth' in order to kindle it into flames (I. 30). Gaut. IX. 32, Manu IV. 53 and Brahmapurāna 221. 102 forbid the blowing on fire with the mouth (as in doing so it is likely that drops of saliva from the mouth may fall into the fire and pollute it). Haradatta on Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 20 notices that in the Vājasaneya Śākhā it is said that fire should be kindled into flames by blowing upon it with the breath from the mouth since it sprang from the mouth of the Creator (as stated in the Purusasūkta, Rg. X. 90. 13). Therefore, acc. to Haradata and the Gobhila-smrti (I. 135–136)[1859] the śrauta fire could be kindled by blowing upon it with the mouth, but smārta fire or ordinary fire should not be kindled in that way (but only by using a fan or a bamboo cylindrical piece). The Kalivarjya text forbids blowing with the mouth even on śrauta fire.

39. 'Allowing social intercourse to women who have become polluted by rape and the like (when they have performed prayaścitta) as prescribed in the sāstras' (I. 31).[1860] Vas. 28. 2–3 state, 'when a woman is polluted by being raped or kidnapped by a thief, she should not be abandoned; one should wait till her monthly illness (making her undergo certain expiations till then) and she becomes pure after it.' Atri (V. 2–3) has the same verses, which are quoted (from Vas.) by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 256 (p 133. Tri. ed.) and explained at great length. The Matsyapurāna 227. 126 is liberal enough to say that the man who commits rape should be punished with death but the woman raped incurs no blame. Parasara (X. 27) provides that if a woman is raped by an evil-doer only once she becomes pure by undergoing the Prajapatya expiation and after the following monthly illness. Even so late a smrti writer as Devala provides that if a woman of any class is raped by mlecchas and she conceives she can be purified by the expiation of Sāntapana.

1859. मुखेनैके धमन्त्याग्निं मुखाद्वक्त्रेणोत्पन्नमायत । नाग्निं मुखेनेति च यद्लौकिके योजयन्ति तत् ॥ गोभिलस्मृति I. 136. This is q. by the स्मृतिच. I. p. 212. नाग्निं मुखेन is मनु IV 53.

1860. योषा गर्भं विधत्ते या म्लेच्छात्कामादकामतः । ब्राह्मणी क्षत्रिया वैश्या शूद्रा वर्णेतरा च या । अभक्ष्यभक्षणं कुर्याच्चस्याः शुद्धिः कथं भवेत् । कृच्छ्रं सान्तपनं शुद्धिर्दृष्टा धौम्येश्च पाचनम् ॥ देवल 48–49.

But this text is harsher on such innocent and unlucky women when it says that they cannot be restored to social intercourse even after undergoing expiation.

40. 'Begging of food by a sannyāsin from members of all varnas (including śudras) according to the rules of the śāstra' (l. 32). The Sm. M. p. 201 (on varnāśrama) quotes Kāthaka Brāhmana,[1861] Aruni Up., Parāśara (in prose) to the effect that a yati may beg for food from members of all varnas. Baud. Dh. S. II. 10 69[1862] also quotes a verse which allows the begging of food from all varnas to a yati. Vas. X. 7 requires a yati to beg at seven houses not selected beforehand and in X. 24 states that he should subsist on what food he gets at the houses of brāhmanas.[1863] The present text requires even the yati to observe caste rules as to food.

41. 'Not using for ten days fresh rain water' (l. 33). Haradatta on Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 2, Bhattoji on Catur. (p. 54), Sm. Kau. p. 479 quote a verse, 'she-goats, cows, she-buffaloes and brāhmana women become free from impurity (due to delivery) after ten nights and so does fresh rain water accumulated on the ground'. According to this the long period of ten days in the case of rain water is set aside. But Bhattoji notes that according to another smrti 'rain water falling at the proper season is pure, but it is not to be used for drinking for three days; when rain falls at an unusual season rain water is impure for ten days and if a man drinks it within that period he should abstain from food for one day and night'. Bhattoji remarks that the Kalivarjya text only sets aside waiting for ten days, but does not set aside the rule against drinking it for three days.

42. '(Payment of) the fee demanded by the teacher' at the end of the period of brahmacarya (l. 33).

1861. काठकब्राह्मणे 'चतुर्वर्णेषु भैक्ष्यचर्यं चरेत् पाणिपात्रेणाशनं कुर्यादौषधवत्प्राश्नीयात्प्राणधारणार्थं यथा मेदोवृद्धिर्न जायते'। स्मृतिषु (वर्णा.) p. 201.

1862 भैक्ष्यं वा सर्ववर्णेभ्य एकान्नं वा द्विजातिषु । अपि वा सर्ववर्णेभ्यो न चैकान्नं द्विजातिषु । बौ. ध. सू. II 10. 69.

1863. सप्तागाराण्यसङ्कल्पितानि चरेद्भिक्षाम् । ब्राह्मणकुले यावल्लभेत तद्भुञ्जीत सायं प्रातर्मधुमांसवर्जम् । वसिष्ठ X. 7 and 24.

1864 अजा गावो महिष्यश्च ब्राह्मणी च प्रसूतिका । दशरात्रेण शुध्यन्ति भूमिष्ठं च नवोदकम् ॥ q by हरदत्त on आप. ध. सू. I. 5. 15 2; 'काले नवोदकं शुद्धं न पिबेच्च ह्यहं च तत् । अकाले तु दशाहं स्यात्पीत्वा नाद्यादहर्निशम् ॥ इति स्मृत्युक्तस्य दशाहमतिषेधस्यैवं प्रतिप्रसवो न तु ह्यहमतिषेधस्येति दर्शयति । भट्टोजि on चतुर्वि p. 53.

The ancient practice was to make no agreement as to fees for teaching. Vide Br. Up. IV. 1. 2. Gaut. (II. 54–55) prescribes[1865] that at the end of his studies the student should request the teacher to accept the wealth that he could offer or ask the teacher what should be given and after paying or doing what was required by the guru or if the teacher permitted him to go without demanding anything the student should take the ceremonial bath. Vide Manu II. 245–246 and H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 360–361 for details. Yāj. I. 51 provides that at the end of his studies the student may give to the teacher what he desires (or a cow) according to his ability or may with his permission take the ceremonial bath (without paying anything). On account of these provisions we have stories in the ancient literature that very rarely teachers or their wives made fanciful demands. This Kalivarjya text only sets aside the requirement of paying what the guru demands, but does not prohibit the voluntary gift of a fee by the student.[1866]

43. 'The engagement of a śūdra for such acts as cooking and the like in the houses of brāhmanas and the rest' (1. 34). Āp. Dh. S. (II. 2. 3 1–8) requires that[1867] the food for Vaiśvadeva should be prepared by pure men of the first three varnas and also optionally allows a sudra to be a cook for an ārya provided he is under the supervision of men of the first three varnas, provided he sips water whenever he touches the hair, any limb or his garment, provided he cuts the hair (on his head and his body), the beard and nails every day or every 8th day of the month or on the new and full moon day and provided he bathes with the clothes on. It is this permission that is set aside by this Kalivarjya text.

44. 'Suicide of very old people by falling into fire or from a precipice' (1. 35).

This is analogous to No. 13 above. Atri did not condemn suicide in certain cases. He states,[1868] (verses 218–219) 'if one be 1865. विद्यान्ते गुरुरर्थेन निमन्त्र्यः । कृत्वाऽनुज्ञातस्य वा स्नानम् । गौ II. 54–55.

1866. विद्यान्ते गुरुप्रेरणया दक्षिणादानं यथा सान्दीपनये श्रीकृष्णेन सुतपुत्रस्य । न तु गुरवे दक्षिणामात्रं चोदितेतिपदवैयर्थ्यापत्तेः । स्मृतिकौ p 479.

1867. आर्याः मयता वैश्वदेवेऽन्नसंस्कर्तारः स्युः । ...आर्याधिष्ठिता वा शूद्राः संस्कर्तारः स्युः । तेषां स एवाचमनकल्प । अधिकमहरहः केशश्मश्रुलोमनखवापनम् । उदकोपस्पर्शन च सह वाससा । अपि वाष्टमीष्वेव पर्वसु वा वपेरन् । आप ध. सू II 2. 3. 1–8.

1868 वृद्धः शौचस्मृतेर्लोपः प्रत्याख्यातभिक्षक्रियः । आत्मानं घातयेद्यस्तु भृग्वग्न्यनशनाम्बुभिः । तस्य त्रिरात्रमाशौचं द्वितीये त्वस्थिसञ्चयम् । तृतीये नूदकं कृत्वा चतुर्थे श्राद्धमाचरेत् । अत्रि 218–219 q by मेधातिथि on मनु V. 89, मिता. on या. III 6, अपरार्क p. 942

old (beyond 70), if one cannot observe the rules of bodily purification (owing to extreme weakness), if one is so ill that all medical help is discarded, and if one in these circumstances kills himself by throwing himself from a precipice or into fire or water or by fasting, mourning should be observed for him for three days and śrāddha may be performed for him.' Aparārka (p. 536) quotes several smrtis to the effect that a very old man or one suffering from very serious illness, one who has no desires left and has carried out his tasks may bring about his death by entering fire or water or falling from a precipice and he will incur no sin. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 926-927 for further details. This text may also be taken as forbidding suicide by falling from a precipice or into fire as an expiation in the case of those that are guilty of mahāpātakas knowingly committed. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 226 quotes a smrti to this effect[1869] The Śuddhitattva holds (pp. 284-285) that suicide by entering water and the like is allowed in Kali only to śūdras and forbidden to brāhmaṇas and others.

45. 'The performance of ācamana (purificatory sipping of water) by śistas in as much water as is sufficient for slaking the thirst of a cow' (I. 36).

Manu V. 128, Vas. III. 35, Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 65, Yāj. I. 192, Visnu 23. 43 provide[1870] that water collected on the ground is pure (and may be used for ācamana) provided it is sufficient in quantity to slake the thirst of a cow. But this text forbids on hygienic grounds the use of small quantities of water collected on the ground for sipping and similar purposes.

46. 'The residence of an ascetic in the house near which he happens to be in the evening' (I. 38).

Acc. to Āp. Dh. S. II. 9. 21. 10 and Manu VI. 43, 55-56, an ascetic was to kindle no fire, was to be houseless and was to beg only once a day in the afternoon or evening when no smoke ascends from the kitchens of people, when the embers have been extinguished, when people have finished their meals &c. Vas. (X.

1869. यः कामतो महापापं नरः कुर्यात्कथंचन। न तस्य निष्कृतिर्दृष्टा मृग्वग्निपतनादृते ॥ q. by mitā. on yā. III. 226. जलप्रवेशादिकं तु कलौ शूद्रस्यैव। ब्राह्मणादीनां तु अदित्यपुराणेन सगुणाधशौचमकरणोक्तेन निषेधात्। शुद्धितत्त्व pp. 284-285.

1870. शुचि गोतृप्तिकृत्तोयं प्रकृतिस्थं महीगतम्। या. I. 192; मद्वरादपि या गोस्तर्पणसमर्था. स्युः। वसिष्ठ III. 35; आपः पवित्र भूमिगता गोतृप्तिर्यासु जायते। गौ. ध सू. I. 5. 65

12–15) provides[1871] that a sannyasin was to change his residence frequently, was to stay at the boundary of the village or in a temple, or in an empty house or at the bottom of a tree and should constantly live in a forest. Śankha (VII. 6) states that an ascetic should stay in an empty house or he may stay wherever he may be when the sun sets. This provision of Śankha is set aside by the Kalivarjya text Another meaning of the words, according to Krsnabhatta on the Nir. S. (p. 1310), is that this runs counter to the recommendation of Manu VI. 56 that an ascetic should go for begging to the houses in a village in the evening when all smoke from kitchens has ceased i. e, by this text he is allowed to beg in the noon. In a way this appears to be a better explanation.

The above is a complete list of all Kalivarjyas quoted from the Ādityapurāna (except one or two). Some of the Kalivarjyas not included here, but included in other texts cited above will also be now set out for the sake of completeness of treatment.

47. 'Resorting to sannyāsa'. Vyāsa quoted above (n. 1793) forbade sannyāsa in the Kali age after 4400 years of it had elapsed, but then Devala[1872] made an exception to this extent that as long as the division of society into four varnas existed and as long as the Veda was studied sannyāsa could be resorted to even in Kali. The Nir. S. explains that what is forbidden is the sannyāsa with three daṇḍas and not the sannyāsa with one daṇḍa. Baud II. 10. 53 (ekadaṇḍī vā) gives an option that a sannyāsin may carry three staffs or one, while Yāj III. 58 speaks of a yati as only tridaṇḍī. Daṇḍa meas a staff and also 'restraint, curbing'. Manu XII. 10 (same as Daksa VII. 30) declares that that man is called tridaṇḍī who has restraint over his body, speech and mind. Daksa[1873] also says that a yati is not called tridaṇḍī by carrying three bamboo staffs, that he is called tridaṇḍī who has

---

1871 अनित्यां वसतिं वसेत् । ग्रामान्ते देवगृहे शून्यागारे वा वृक्षमूले वा । अरण्ये नित्य । वसिष्ठ X. 12–13 and 15, शून्यागारनिकेत. स्थायत्रसायंगृहो मुनि. । शङ्ख VII 6 The words यत्रसायंगृहो मुनिः occur also in वनपर्व 12. 11. गृहशब्दो गृहस्थवेश्मपर. सायंशब्दो प्रदोषवाचकः । ... भिक्षार्थं प्रविष्टस्य तत्र काले गृहवासो न दुष्ट इति तात्पर्यम् । अत एव श्रुति. । ग्रामं प्रविशेद्वासायेति । स्मृतिकौ. p. 479.

1872 यावद्वर्णविभागोस्ति यावद्वेदः प्रवर्तते । तावन्यासोग्निहोत्रं च कर्तव्यं तु कलौ युगे ॥ देवल q. by नि. सि III पूर्वार्ध p. 370, स्मृतिसु (वर्णाश्रम p 176 quoting it as from व्यास), यतिधर्मसंग्रह pp. 2–3.

1873. वैणवेन त्रिदण्डेन न त्रिदण्डीति कथ्यते । आध्यात्मदण्डयुक्तो यः स त्रिदण्डीति कथ्यते । वृद्ध VII 29 Several verses of वृद्ध VII are quoted by अपरार्क on p. 953.

the spiritual restraint in him (v. 29) In l. 12–13 Daksa says that just as a girdle, deer skin and a wooden staff are the outward signs of a vedic student, so three staffs are the peculiar sign of a yati. Vide H. of Dh vol II. pp. 937–938 for further details. If the Kalivarjya text were meant to forbid sannyāsa altogether, it must be said that it was never honoured and even now thousands become sannyāsins every year. If, as the Nir. S. says, this text only forbids the carrying of three dandas, it is a meaningless prohibition, giving importance only to outward symbols and not to the substance of the matter.

48. 'The observance of agnihotra' or 'the acceptance of three fires'. Vyāsa (n. 1793) forbade the performance of śrauta agnihotra along with sannyāsa in Kali, but an exception was made by Devala in favour of its observance as also of resort to sannyāsa on the grounds stated above (in No. 47). Some digests and authors such as the Nirnayasindhu[1874] and Bhattoji explain that agnihotra of the sarvādhāna type is forbidden in Kali, but that of the ardhādhāna type is allowed. Agnihotra means 'ādhāna', that is, setting up of the śrauta fires. When a man consecrates the three śrauta fires he may do so with half of his smārta fire and keep up the other half of the smārta fire. This is called ardhādhāna. If he does not keep the smārta fire separate, it is sarvādhāna Laugāksi quoted by the Nir. S. (III. p. 370), Bhattoji and others states this. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 45 mentions these two modes Therefore, according to these explanations, sarvādhāna was allowed in former ages (and acc. to one interpretation up to 4400 years of Kali), while in Kali (or at least after 4400 years of Kali) only ardhādhāna is allowed

49. 'Human sacrifice' (vide note 1798 giving extract from Nāradapurāna).

The Tai. Br.[1875] (III. 4 1–19) contains a description of the procedure of human sacrifice. The oldest texts even do not show that a human being was killed. The whole procedure is

---

1874 अर्धाधान स्मृतं श्रौतस्मार्ताग्न्योस्तु पृथक्कृतिः। सर्वाधान तयोरैक्यकृतिः पूर्वयुगाश्रया। लौगाक्षि q. in स्मृतिच. acc. to निर्णयसिन्धु III. p. 370. अत्र पूर्वयुगाश्रितेति लौगाक्षिवाक्ये पूर्वयुगानि कृतादीनीत्येकोर्थः। अन्ये तु युगस्य पूर्वे कले. पूर्वो भागः स चत्वार्यब्दसहस्राणीति पूर्वोक्तिवाक्याच्चतुश्चत्वारिंशच्चतुर्थावच्छिन्नः तस्मिन् भागे सर्वाधानं कार्यं तदुत्तरं तु यावद्वर्णविभागोस्तीति वाक्यात् वर्णविभागपर्यन्तमर्धाधानमित्याहुः। नि. सि

1875. ब्रह्मणे ब्राह्मणमालभते क्षत्राय राजन्यम्। मरुद्भ्यो वैश्यम्। तपसे शूद्रम्॥ तै ब्रा. III 4. 1.

symbolical. The Vāj. S. (XXX. 5 ff.) has many passages in common with the Tai. Br. The Tai. Br. III. 4. 1 (= Vaj. S. 30. 5) begins, 'the brāhmaṇa should be offered to brahman (spiritual power), the kṣatriya to kṣatra (military power), the vaiśya to the Maruts' &c. Acc. to Āp. Śr. XX. 24, a brāhmaṇa or kṣatriya performs this sacrifice, whereby he attains power and valour and all prosperity. There are eleven sacrificial posts and eleven animals to be offered to Agni and Soma. After the rite of paryagnikaraṇa is performed on the brāhmaṇa and others, they are presented to the several deities and then discharged from the sacrificial posts, eleven goats are killed and oblations of their flesh and limbs are offered. Acc. to the com. on Vāj. S., it is begun on the 10th day of the bright half of Caitra and goes on for 40 days, which are occupied with 23 dīkṣās, 12 upasads and five sutyas (days on which soma is extracted). After this yāga, the yajamāna usually resorted to a forest as a sannyāsin.[1876]

50. 'Aśvamedha' (n. 1798). The Tai. S. V. 3. 12. 2 states,[1877] 'he who performs the Aśvamedha becomes free from (the sin of) brāhmaṇa murder'. In spite of this Vedic authority the Bṛhan-Nāradīya and other purāṇas prohibited it. But no one heeded this prohibition and numerous historic kings performed this sacrifice from at least 200 B. C. to Jayasing in the 18th century A. D. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1238–1239 and pp. 70–71 above for numerous historical performers of Aśvamedha.

51. 'Rājasūya' (acc. to the Garudapurāṇa, p. 929 above). This was a very complex rite extending over two years and could be performed only by a kṣatriya. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1214–1223 for a brief description. The Rājasūya was performed by the Kaliṅga Emperor Khāravela as he proclaims in his Hāthigumphā Inscription (E. I. vol. XX p. 71 at p. 79) and by queen Nāyanikā as stated in the Nānāghāt Inscription (A. S. W. I. vol. V. p. 60).

52. 'Perpetual studenthood' (n. 1798). Vedic students were of two kinds, upakurvāṇa (who offered some return or fee at the time when they returned home) and the naiṣṭhika (who remained students till death). Vide p. 764 n. 1471 above.

1876. त्रैधातवीययोर्वसाय पृथमरणीब्रह्मणीन्समारोप्योत्तरनारायणेनाविरयमुपस्थाया-ण्यमवतिष्ठेत । ग्राम्य पा प्रविहृय त्रैधातवीयया यजेत । आप. श्रौ. XX. 24. 16–17.

1877. तरति ब्रह्महत्यां योऽश्वमेधेन यजते । तै. सं. V. 3. 12. 2.

Hārīta, Daksa[1878] (I. 7) and others mention these two varieties, while Yāj. I 49, Vedavyāsa I. 41 and Visnu Dh. S. 28. 46 name and describe the naisthika. Manu II. 243–244, Yāj. I. 49–50, Vas. VII. 4–5 provide that a perpetual Vedic student should stay with his teacher till his own death, that on the teacher's death he should stay with the teacher's son or the teacher's wife or should tend fire, that if he curbs his senses till his death, he reaches the world of brahma (immortality) and is not born again. This was a very difficult mode of life, there were great temptations as the flesh is weak and therefore the Brhan-Nāradīya and others prohibited perpetual studenthood. Some works such as the Madanapārijata (p. 16), the Kalivarjyavinirnaya of Dāmodara, and the Nir. S. read 'dīrgha-kālam brahmacaryam' in place of 'naisthikam brahmacaryam' in the Brhan-Nāradīva.

53. 'Brahmacarya for long periods' (n. 1799). The Baud. Dh. S. (I.2.1–5) declares, "the term of studentship for Veda study as observed in ancient times lasted for 48 years, or 24 years, or 12 years for each Veda or at least one year for each kāṇḍa (of the Tai. S.) or it lasted till the Veda was committed to memory, as life is evanescent and as the Veda ordains 'let him kindle the sacred fires while his hair is still black'." The Āp. Dh. S. (I. 1 2. 11–16) provides that the student's stay with the teacher's household should be 48 years, 24 years or 12 years at the lowest. Manu III. 1 also states that the vow of studying the three Vedas under a guru must be observed for 36 years or for half of that time or for a quarter of it or until the student has mastered (the Veda). These long periods of 48 years, 36 or 24 years for Veda study (before a man could become an householder) are here forbidden in Kali. This was nothing new. Yāj. I. 36 had allowed 12 years for each Veda or five and if a man did not want to study all vedas but only one he could finish his studenthood in five years. Only an extremely small number could have spent 48 or 36 years in Veda study. Śabara on Jai. I. 3. 3 held that this text of Baud. was opposed to the śruti about kindling fires when a man was a young householder with black hair and was to be discarded. Vide pp. 832–834 above for a discussion of this. The authors of the Samayamayūkha and the Sm. Kau. both of whom had before them the reading 'dīrghakālam brahmacaryam' held that this prohibition was aimed at the words of Āp. and Baud. and that the vow of perpetual studentship which was undertaken with a special purpose in view (viz. realization of brahma and non-return to saṁsāra) was not prohibited by the Kalivarjya text and that there was nothing wrong in the practice of perpetual studenthood among the Dravidas.

---

1878 द्विविधो ब्रह्मचारी उपकुर्वाणो नैष्ठिकश्च। तयोरुपकुर्वाणको व्याख्यात:। निष्ठो चेद्दच्छेदा शरीरनिपाताद् गुरावासीत। हारीत q. by अपरार्क p. 71; द्विविधो ब्रह्मचारी स्यादाद्योत्युपकुर्वाणक:। द्वितीयो नैष्ठिकश्चैव तस्मिन्नेव व्रते स्थित:॥ दक्ष I 7 q. by स्मृतिच I. p 64.

54. 'Animal sacrifice.' In the Mārkandeya as quoted in Aparārka p. 929 above animal sacrifice was forbidden in the Kali age. Though popular feeling had gradually veered round to the view that meat should not be offered in śrāddhas, in madhuparka (No. 22 above), yet animal sacrifices were performed at all times and are even now performed, though very rarely.

55. 'Intoxicating drinks (madya)'. There were startling vicissitudes in the attitude to intoxicants.

In Vedic times soma was a beverage drunk by the priests and surā was a beverage for common men and usually not meant to be offered to the gods. Soma and sura are sharply distinguished (vide Tai. S. II. 5. 1. 1, Vāj. S. 19. 7, Sat. Br. V. 1. 5. 28). The Śat. Br. (V. 1. 5. 28) has the striking antithesis 'For, Soma is truth, prosperity, light; and surā is untruth, misery, darkness'. In the Sautrāmaṇī iṣṭi a brāhmana had to be hired for drinking the dregs of surā offered in it and if a brāhmana could not be found the surā was poured on an anthill (Tai. Br. I. 8. 6 and Śabara on Jai. III. 5. 14–15). It appears from the Kāthaka-saṁhitā XII. 12 that[1879] brāhmanas had by that time come to regard the drinking of surā as sinful. From Chān. Up. V. 10. 9 it appears that a drinker of surā was enumerated among five grave sinners. In the Āśv. gr. II. 5. 3–5 it is said that in the rites of the Anvastakā day when pindas are offered to the male ancestors, the female ancestors viz. the mother, the paternal grandmother and great-grandmother are offered surā and the scum of boiled rice in addition[1880]. The Nir. S. (III.

1879. तस्माद् ब्राह्मणः सुरा न पिबति पाप्मना नेत्संसृज्या इति । काठकसं. XII 12, quoted by the तन्त्रवार्तिक on जै I. 3. 7 p. 210 and by शङ्कराचार्य on वेदान्तसूत्र III. 4. 31.

1880. पिण्डपितृयज्ञकल्पेन । हृत्वा मधुमन्थवर्जं पितृभ्यो वृथात् । क्रीम्यश्च सुरामाचाममित्यधिकम् । आश्व. गृ II. 5. 3–5.

p. 367) refers to this passage of the Āśv. Gr. and holds that the Kalivarjya text against intoxicants forbids this also.

Madya is a generic term applicable to all intoxicating drinks; surā is said to be of three kinds, viz that prepared from molasses, that from honey (or madhūka flowers or from grapes) and that from corn flour (Manu XI. 94, Visnu Dh. S 22. 82 and Saṁvarta 117). The Visṇu Dh. S. (22. 83-84) specifies ten kinds of madya, all of which a brāhmana was not even to touch. Gaut. II. 25[1881], Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 17. 21, Manu XI. 95 forbid all kinds of madya to brāhmanas at all stages of life. Āp. I. 7. 21. 8, Vas. I. 20, Manu XI 54, Visnu Dh. S. 35. 1 hold that the drinking of surā is one of the five grave sins (mahāpātakas), while Yāj. III. 227 employs the word 'madya' in place of surā in this connection. Baud. Dh. S. I. 1. 22 however notes that among the five practices peculiar to the brāhmanas of the north was that of drinking rum and Baud. condemns it. The verses of Manu XI. 93-94 about the three kinds of surā have been the subject of frequent and varying interpretations. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 222, the Mit. on Yāj. III. 253, Aparārka p 1069 and others establish that the word 'surā' primarily applies to paṣṭī (liquor prepared from flour) alone, that paiṣṭī is forbidden to all brāhmanas, ksatriyas and vaiśyas, that it is the drinking of paiṣṭī alone that constitutes a mahāpātaka, that all intoxicating drinks are forbidden to brāhmanas in all ages, but intoxicants other than paṣṭī (such as those prepared from molasses or madhūka flowers) are not forbidden to ksatriyas and vaiśyas. Manu XI. 93 says that surā is the refuse of cooked food (rice); therefore members of the three higher castes should not drink surā. This clearly shows that Manu took surā as meaning only paiṣṭī (liquor prepared from rice flour). The Visnu Dh. S. (22. 84) expressly says that ksatriyas and vaiśyas are not polluted by touching the ten kinds of madyas specified by it. In the Udyogaparva (59 5) both Vāsudeva (Krsna) and Arjuna are described as intoxicated by drinking the liquor prepared from honey and the Tantravārtika establishes that there was nothing wrong in this as both were ksatriyas. Intoxicants were not forbidden to śudras. Brahmacārins of whatever varna had to abstain from intoxicants of all kinds. Aparārka[1882] (p 63)

1881. मद्यं नित्यं ब्राह्मणः। गौ. II. 25, सर्वे मद्यमपेयम्। आप. ध. सू. I 5.17. 21.

1882. मद्यं नित्यं ब्राह्मणः। नित्यमिति वचनान्मद्यं कृतयुगादावपि ब्राह्मणेन वर्ज्यं क्षत्रियवैश्याभ्यां तु कलावेव। यद् ब्रह्मपुराणं ... नराश्वमेधौ मद्यं च कलौ वर्ज्यं द्विजातिभिः अपरार्क p. 63

after quoting the Brahmapurāna states that intoxicating drinks were forbidden to the three varnas in Kali and to brāhmanas in all yugas (ages). But this is opposed to tradition. The Ādiparva (chap. 76) narrates[1883] that Śukrācārya prohibited for the first time brāhmanas from drinking intoxicants (vide H. Dh. vol II. pp 792–799 for detailed discussion of this topic). The Kalivarjya text forbids the drinking of intoxicants to all the three twice-born classes. But ksatriyas and vaiśyas pay scant attention to this prohibition and even some brāhmanas in these days have taken to drink as a fashionable indulgence The K. V. N. (folio 5a), Krsnabhatta[1884] and Sm. Kau. note that in the sākta treatises (called Vāmāgama) madya is allowed to be offered to the idol for all the three varnas and to ksatriyas in the propitiatory rites for Vināyaka and for birth on the Mūla constellation but this kalivarjya text forbids all that.

An analysis of these 55 kalivarjyas yields very interesting results. About one-fourth out of the above 55 relate to Śrauta matters. There are several texts forbidding Agnihotra, Asvamedha, Rājasūya, Purusamedha, sattras, Gosava, animal sacrifices, while a few others are concerned with matters of detail in sacrifices (vide No. 11, 14–16, 29–30, 38, 48–51, 54) The first nine of these 55 are concerned with legal matters and relations. Some prohibitions are due to growing caste exclusiveness (No 5, 10, 31, 40, 43). Others again spring from ideas of greater insistence on the sacredness of the marriage tie, a stricter morality and a demand for greater decency and purity, particularly in women (No. 2, 3, 4, 9, 15, 23, 24, 33, 39, 55). A few are based on notions of compassion, justice and equity (No 1, 8, 24, 25, 42). Some owe their origin to the growing sacredness of the brāhmana's person and his high social position (No. 7, 10, 27, 29, 30). Some must have been suggested by hygienic considerations (No. 12, 16, 28, 38, 41, 45), some arose from strict ideas of sin, expiation and ceremonial purity and impurity (No 13, 18–21, 28, 44). Two of these, when they prohibit the stage of forest hermit and of sannyāsa, strike at the very root of the ancient scheme of āsramas.

1883. यो ब्राह्मणोद्यप्रभृतीह कश्चिन्मोहात्सुरां पास्यति मन्दबुद्धिः । अपेतधर्मा ब्रह्महा चैव स स्यादस्मिँल्लोके गर्हितः स्यात्परे च । आदिपर्व 76. 67 = मत्स्यपुराण 25. 62.

1884. यद्वा वामागमादौ त्रैवर्णिकपुरस्कारेणोक्तं देवनैवेद्यादौ मद्यविधानं तदिह निषिध्यते । अथवा विनायकशान्तौ मूलजातशान्तौ च — तुर्यं (पुर्यं ?) चित्रं सुगन्धं च सुरा च त्रिविधामपि । तथा-सुरापोलिकमांसाद्यैर्नैवेद्यैर्भोजनादिभिः—इत्येताभ्यां यन्मद्यं प्रातं तच्च यद्यपि-मद्यमासमुरादीनि ब्राह्मणं (ब्राह्मणो ?) विनिवर्जयेदित्यनेन ब्राह्मणाना निषिद्धं तथापि क्षत्रियादिपुरस्कारेणापि कलौ निषिध्यत इति । कालिवर्ज्यवि. (folio 5a). कृष्णभट्ट p 1291 ives a summary of this.

The chapter on Kalivarjyas can be employed as a very effective answer to those who trot out the theory of the 'unchanging East'. Social ideas and practices undergo substantial changes even in the most static societies. Many of the practices, that had the authority of the Veda (which was supposed to be self-existent and eternal) and of such ancient smrtis as those of Āp, Manu and Yāj, had either come to be given up or had become obnoxious to popular sentiment. This fiction of great men meeting together and laying down conventions for the Kali age was the method that was hit upon to admit changes in religious practices and ideas of morality. The Kalivarjya texts are also a complete answer to those who hold fast to the notion that dharma (particularly acaradharma) is immutable and unchangeable (aparivartanīya). This chapter on Kalivarjya unmistakably shows how the most authoritative dicta of the Veda and of ancient sages and law-givers were set aside and held to be of no binding authority because they ran counter to prevailing notions and furnishes a powerful weapon in the hands of those who want to introduce reforms in the incidents of marriage, inheritance and other matters touching modern Hindu society. One can further see how some practices still persist in spite of the prohibitions in the Kalivarjya texts viz. marriage with one's maternal uncle's daughter, sannyāsa, agnihotra and even srauta animal sacrifices (rarely).

Some works add two more to the Kalivarjya verses which mean, 'imprecations, omens, dreams, palmistry, listening for supernatural voices or messages, promises to make presents to a deity if a certain prayer were granted, prophetic replies by astrologers to questions, may rarely turn out to be true. One should not, however, resort to these through the desire to secure results from them Similarly there are other actions also (that have to be abandoned) in the Kali age, because they have come to be included (by people) under improper acts (adharma)'[1885]

1885. अत्र शपथा. काशीस्थलोलार्कतीर्थस्नानादय. । शकुनाः पूर्णकुम्भादयः । स्वप्नाः एकर्षं कृष्ण कृष्णदन्तं पश्यति स एन हन्तीत्यादिश्रुतिस्मृतिसिद्धा. । उपश्रुति. सन्ध्याया निर्णेजकादिगृहेऽक्षतप्रक्षेपपूर्वकं स्वेष्टादिसूचकतत्रस्थशब्दाकर्णनम् । उपयाचितमस्मिन् कार्ये सिद्धे भैरवाय सतैल कुसराद्यं दास्यामीत्यादिसङ्कल्पः । आदेशः प्रश्नवशेन ज्योतिर्विद्भिर्मविष्यत्कथनम् । एतत्सूचितस्यापीटादेः प्रतिबन्धकादृष्टभावाभावाभ्यां संवादलाभनियमाभावाच्च शकुनादिलाभनाक्षेण जयाद्युद्देश्यकविवादादिप्रवृत्तिरुचितेति दृष्टार्थकार्यनिषेध एव क्रियते

(Continued on the next page)

From the fact that no ancient smṛti speaks of Kalivarjya, that the ancient commentaries of Viśvarūpa, Medhātithi and even Vijñāneśvara do not cite long lists of Kalivarjyas, that such lists first make their appearance in the Smṛtyarthasāra, the Sm. C. and Hemādri (works and authors of 12th and 13th centuries), the most probable inference is that these lists of Kalivarjyas were first put together at the earliest in the 10th or 11th century A. D. [1886]

(Continued from the last page)

न त्वदृष्टार्थस्य शान्त्यादेः । स्मृतिकौ. p 477. The passage 'पुरुषं कृष्ण ... हन्ति' is quoted by शङ्कराचार्य on वेदान्तसूत्र III. 2 4. The कलिवर्ज्यवि. (folio 11b) explains 'शकुना. काककपोतादिचेष्टाविशेषाः । . . उपश्रुतिश्चैलधावादिगृहपार्श्वे स्थित्वा चिन्तितार्थसूचनशब्दाकर्णनम् । ... आदेशः आशीर्वादः प्रश्नबलेन भविष्यकथन वा . . एते च निबंधा इति वार्तिकानुसारिणः । निबन्धानुसारिणस्तु (निबन्धनानु० ?) धर्मविप्लवापत्तेरेते पर्युदासा एवेति मन्यन्ते ।.' वार्तिक means here the तन्त्रवार्तिक of कुमारिल and निबन्ध refers to the work of Prabhākara, who was called निबन्धनकार by the शास्त्रदीपिका on जै. II 1. 1.

1886 An attempt at a systematical collection of the Kalivarjya texts and elucidation thereof was made by me in a paper submitted to the 8th All India Oriental Conference held at Mysore in December 1935. The paper was published in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. 12 pp 1–18 (New Series), 1936. Recently (1943) Mr Batuknath Bhattacharya has published a book which contains a full treatment of Kalivarjyas. He states in the preface that it is 'an exact reprint of the thesis for Jogendrachandra Ghose Research Prize in Comparative Indian Law for 1933', that the subject is 'comparatively fresh and unexplored' and that the treatment is on lines marked out by the writer himself He claims that his work is 'original as a whole except one section on secondary sons'. He does not state exactly in what year the thesis for a prize of 1933 was submitted to the Calcutta University Presumably a thesis for a prize of 1933 should have been submitted in 1934 or 1935 at the latest. No satisfactory explanation is given why the thesis was published in 1943, so long after the year of the prize, nor does he mention my paper published so far back as 1936 It appears from quotations in the book as printed that it was probably retouched, if not actually written, after 1937 For example, on p 76 he quotes a passage from the Smṛtimuktāphala (section on Varnāśrama p. 201), which was published by Principal J. R Gharpure only in 1937 in Devanāgarī If the original thesis was written or revised in or after 1937 my paper published in 1936 should have been mentioned. Mr Batuknath Bhattacharya in his paper 'the sources of dharma and their comparative authority' published in the Proceedings of the 10th Oriental Conference at Tirupati held in 1940 refers to my paper on Kalivarjyas (p. 160) as 'brief and compact'. Thus shows that he knew my paper years before he published his work in 1943. The claim of the subject being 'unexplored' and the thesis being 'original' is hardly admissible.

CHAPTER XXXV

CUSTOMS IN MODERN INDIAN LAW

Though an elaborate treatment of customs in modern Anglo-Indian Law is far beyond the scope of the present work, yet a few words on customs in modern times may not be altogether out of place here When the British began to acquire political domination in India they realized the importance attached to customs by all persons in India and the Charter of the Mayor's court at Bombay in 1753, unconsciously following the ancient dicta of Manu (VII. 203) and Yāj (I. 343), contains the earliest trace in British royal charters of a reservation to the peoples of India of their laws and customs.[1887] The British Parliament and the Indian Legislatures have allowed customs to occupy a very high place in the administration of law and justice. The preamble to 21 Geo. III chap. 70 (1781 A. D.) recited that one of the purposes for which the Act was passed was that the inhabitants of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa should be maintained and protected in the enjoyment of all their laws, usages, rights and privileges and sec. 17 of that Act provided among other things that, in the case of the inhabitants of Calcutta, their inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans by the laws and usages of Mahomedans and in the case of Gentus by the laws and usages of Gentus[1888] and, where only one of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or Gentu, by the laws and usages of the defendant. 37 Geo. III chap. 142 (1796 A D), sec 13, Bombay Regulation IV of 1827, sec. 26, the Government of India Act of 1915 (5 and 6 Geo V chap 61, sec. 112), Government of India Act 1935 (25 Geo. V chap. 2, sec 223), the 1887. Vide Lopes v Lopes 5 Bom. H. C. R. (O C J.) 172, 183.

---

1888. The word 'Gentu' (or Gentoo) was the Portuguese word for 'Gentile' and appears to mean a pagan inhabitant of Hindustan who is not a Mahomedan. Its use in a judicial document first occurs in the judgment of Lord Chief Justice Willes in Omichand v. Barker (Durnford's Reports of cases, 1737–1769, p 538) Vide on the word Gentoo 'Khojas and Memons case' in Perry's Oriental cases 110, 123 and Lopes v Lopes 5 Bom. H. C. R. (O. C. J.) 172, 185–186.

Madras Civil Courts Act (III of 1873, sec 16), the Bengal, North-west Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887 sec. 37), Central Provinces Laws Act (XX of 1875, sec 5), the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876, sec. 3), the Bengal Laws Act (XVI of 1872, sec 5) enact that the custom of the parties or of the defendant shall be the rule of decision in matters of succession and inheritance, marriage, caste, religious institutions and the like.

The burden of proving a custom opposed to the general law or in derogation of the ordinary rights of another lies heavily on the person alleging it.[1889] The decided cases lay down several essentials of a valid custom In order to make a particular custom valid it must be proved to be immemorial or ancient, uniform, certain, reasonable, obligatory and it must not be immoral or opposed to public policy or to any express enactment of the Legislature. What antiquity must be proved before a custom can be accepted as valid depends upon the circumstances of each case [1890] When it is said that a custom must be ancient it is not meant that the antiquity must be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man. According to the Mit. on Yāj. II. 27 smārta-kāla (time within living memory) in relation to possession means a period of one hundred years, while according to Kātyāyana and Vyāsa it is only a period of sixty years [1891] On evidence of the prevalence of a custom even for 20, 30, 80 or 90 years the Courts have held that a presumption may arise that the custom is ancient and that if the presumption is not rebutted the Court may accept it as a valid and ancient custom.[1892] Many instances have generally to be adduced for proof of a custom. No hard and fast rule can be laid down about the number of instances required to prove a 1889. Neelkisto Deb v Beer Chunder 12 Moo. I A. 523, 542; Shiba Prasad v Prayagkumari 59 I. A. 331, 345; Baba Narayan v. Saboosa 46 Bom. L. R 312 (P. C.), 314.

---

1890. Subham v. Nawab 68 I A 1, followed in Panchanon Roy v. Fazlur Rahman 76 C. L. J 479.

1891. मुख्या पैतामही भुक्तिः पैतृकी चापि समता। त्रिभिरेतैरविच्छिन्ना स्थिरा पञ्चाद्विपूरुषी मता॥ काल्या q. by अपरार्क p. 636; पञ्चाशत् विंशतिं भुक्ता स्वामिनाप्यहता सती। भुक्तिः सा पौरुषी ज्ञेयेष्टिगुणा तु द्विपौरुषी। त्रिपौरुषी च त्रिगुणा न ततोऽन्येन आगमः॥ व्यास q. by स्मृतिच. II. p. 75.

1892. Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas 42 Cal. 455, 472, Garuradhwaja v. Saparandhwaja 27 I. A. 238, Basant v. Brijraj 62 I. A. 180, 193, Parshottam v. Venichand 45 Bom. 754, 767.

custom.[1893] In certain cases it has been held that specific instances are not absolutely necessary, but the opinions of persons likely to know the existence of the custom is entitled to great weight, even though they may not be able to cite specific instances.[1893a] Customs once prevalant, particularly family customs, may come to be discontinued on account of accident, change in popular sentiment or by the concurrent will of all the members concerned.[1894] Customs must be strictly construed and cannot be extended by analogy or parity of reasoning. Because in a particular caste marriage with a maternal uncle's daughter is allowed by custom it does not follow that marriage with a maternal aunt's or paternal aunt's daughter will necessarily be valid. Vide H. of Dh. vol II. p. 467 notes 1095–6. The evidence about a custom should be such as to prove the uniformity and continuity of the usage, the conviction of those following it that they were acting in accordance with law and the consciousness of obligatorines and the custom should not spring from mere habit, imitation and ignorance or mutual arrangement.[1895] A custom must not be unreasonable. A custom of excluding daughters from inheritance was held to be not unreasonable according to the ideas of the Hindu community.[1896] A custom that only members of certain castes (and not of others) were entitled to make use of a temple and to worship therein was held not unreasonable in India, though it may appear obnoxious to cultured people at the present day.[1897]

Customs must not be immoral. Whether a custom is immoral is to be judged by the sense of the whole community[1898].

1893. Vide Ratilal v Motilal 27 Bom L R 880; Chandika v. Muna 29 I. A 70.

1893a Vide Ahmed Khan v. Channi Bibi 52 I A. 372; S. K. Wodeyar v. Ganapati 37 Bom. L. R 584; Ajai Verma v Vijai Kumari 41 Bom. L. R. 700 (P. C); Madhavrao v. Raghavendrarao 48 Bom. L. R 196.

1894. Vannia Kone v. Vannichi 51 Mad. 1 (F. B.), Rajkishen Singh v Ramjoy 1 Cal 186, 195–96.

1895. Mathura v. Esu 4 Bom 545, 557, Gopalayyan v Raghupatiayyan 7 Mad. H. C. R 250 (F. B.), 254; Ramrao v. Yeshvantrao 10 Bom. 327.

1896 Bhau v Sundrabai 11 Bom H. C R. 249, 277.

1897. Anandrao v Shankar 7 Bom. 323; Sankaralinga v. Rajeshwar 31 Mad 236 (P C); S. K. Wodeyar v. Ganapati 37 Bom L. R 584; but vide Narhari v Bhimrao 39 Bom. L R 1295 (about a tank).

1898 Devanayaga v Muthu 44 Mad. 329, 333.

A custom which authorizes a woman of the lower castes to contract a second marriage without divorce on payment of a certain sum to the caste was held to be immoral[1899] and the Bombay High Court refused to recognize the authority of the caste to declare a marriage void or to give a woman permission to remarry without a release from the husband.[1900] The adoption of girls by dancing girls (naikans) has not been recognized by the Bombay High Court,[1901] though the Madras High Court would recognize such an adoption if there was no intention to make it for purposes of prostitution.[1902] Dagger marriages are practised among certain castes. The Brahmapurāna (chap. 111. 15 and 44-46) states that among ksatriyas there are several forms of marriage such as forcibly carrying away the bride (which is the form called rāksasa) or marriage with the weapons (of the bridegroom). In modern times dagger or sword marriages have not been held valid by the courts even among śūdras; vide Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram 48 Mad. 1, Ram Saran v. Mahabir 61 I. A. 106.

Many customs and usages have been expressly forbidden by the Central Indian or Provincial Legislatures e. g. Sati[1903], female infanticide,[1904] slavery,[1905] marriages of children under a certain age,[1906] the dedication of women as devadāsis to temples or idols.[1907] This being so, no court will allow a party to plead a custom against these positive enactments. It was recognised in a number of cases that in the Bombay Presidency[1908] a vatandar josht had the right to recover by suit from 1899. Reg v. Karsan 2 Bom. H. C. R. 117, 125; Ufi v. Hathi 7 Bom. H. C. R. (A. C. J.) 133.

---

1900. Keshav v. Bai Gandi 39 Bom. 538, 543.

1901. Mathura v. Esu 4 Bom. 545, Hira v Radha 37 Bom. 116; Girimallappa v. Kenchava 45 Bom. 768, 784-5; Ghasiti Umrao v. Umrao Jan 20 I. A. 193.

1902 Venku v Mahalinga 11 Mad. 393 ; Kamalakshi v. Ramasami 19 Mad. 127 ; Duggirala Veeranna v. Duggirala Sarasiratnam 71 M. L. J. 53 , Gangamma v. Cuddappah Kuppammal I. L. R. (1938) Mad. 789.

1903. Vide Regulation XVII of 1829 and sec. 306 of I. P. C.

1904. Vide the Female Infanticide Prevention Act (VIII of 1870).

1905. Vide Act V of 1843 and sections 370 and 371 of I. P. C.

1906. The Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929 as amended by Act XIX of 1938).

1907. Bombay Act X of 1934, sections 3-5.

1908. Vide Vithal v. Anant 11 Bom. H C. R. 6; Dinanath v. Sadashiva 3 Bom 9 ; Raja v. Krishnabhat 3 Bom. 232, Waman v. Balaji 14 Bom. 167.

a yajaman who had employed another priest to perform religious ceremonies the amount of the fees which would properly be payable to the vatandar joshi if he had been employed to perform such ceremonies and also the right to recover damages from a person who intrudes upon his office. But Bombay Act XI of 1926 (the Invalidation of Hindu Ceremonial Emoluments Act) now enacts (by sec. 4) that no person shall be entitled to claim as a matter of right any ceremonial emoluments from any Hindu who does not call in the services of the person claiming those emoluments. Therefore, suits of the nature described above cannot be brought now in Bombay by a vatandar joshi

How customs and practices once prevalent may come to be discontinued or abrogated is well illustrated in the section on Kalivarjyas Some of those that have a legal bearing have been already discussed above.

APPENDIX

NOTE 191

Long lists of high functionaries and other officers occur in several inscriptions. Vide E. I. vol. VII at p. 91 (Kahla plate of Soḍhadeva), E. I. vol. XII at p. 40, E. I. vol. XIV at p. 327 (grant of Mahīpāla). There are about 40 titles in some inscriptions. They are generally arranged in order of dignity and importance, the highest coming first. Sometimes several offices are held by the same man. For example, in the Jesar plate of Śīlāditya (dated in Valabhi year 357) the high officer Mammaka is styled 'sandhivigrahādhikrta, divirapati, mahāpratīhāra, sāmanta' (E. I. XXII at p. 120). It is not claimed that the following is a thoroughly exhaustive list. It is, however, exhaustive enough. Titles and dignitaries in South Indian languages have been generally omitted. Vogel stands for Dr. Vogel's work on 'Antiquities of Chamba State' where, on pp. 120–136, he furnishes informing notes on some officers. There is difference of opinion among scholars about the exact meaning of certain office names. The individual functions of several officers are not quite clear. The references given here as to where an office occurs are not exhaustive. Chronologically older references alone are generally given and they are mostly taken (so far as inscriptions are concerned) from the Epigraphia Indica (E. I.) and the Indian Antiquary (I. A.). Many official titles have the word 'mahā' prefixed without any change in meaning in some cases. Vide India Office Plate of Laksmanasena in his 27th year (E. I. XXVI. p. 1 at p. 7) for many official titles beginning with 'mahā'.

अक्षपटलिक—Vide Mahāksapaṭalika below. 'Akṣapaṭala' means 'Account office' (Stein) or 'Record office' (Fleet). There is 'grāmāksapatalika' mentioned in the Harsacarita (VII, para 2). Vide Chandela plate dated saṁvat 1108 (E I. XX at p. 128) and Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva dated saṁvat 1148 (E I. IX at p. 305). Kauṭilya has a section on the superintendent of 'aksapatala' (II. 7).

अक्षपटलाधिकृत—This is synonymous with 'aksapatalika'. This word occurs in Gupta Ins No. 60 p. 257 and in Rājatarangini V. 301, 397–398.

अक्षपटलाध्यक्ष —Superintendent of records and accounts Vide Kautilya II. 7 and p. 143 above for his duties.

अक्षशालिक or अक्षशालिन्—Officer in charge of the gambling-hall. Vide Komanda plate of Nettabhañja in E. I. XXIV p. 172 at p. 173 (about 4th century A. D.)

अक्षावाप—Superintendent of gambling. He was one of the 'ratnins' mentioned in the Tai. S and Śat Br. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1216 and above p 112

अट्टपति—'Market-master'. Vide Rājat. V. 167.

अधिकरणलेखक—Official recorder or scribe (who drew up deeds of sale and the like after having the land sold measured in his presence). Vide Rājat. VI. 38 and note 436 above where Visnu Dh. S. VII. 3 is quoted.

अन्तपाल—Officer in charge of boundaries. Vide Kautilya I 12 (one of the 18 tīrthas), II. 21, V. 1. and Kāmandaka XII. 5. The word occurs in the Mālavikāgnimitra, Act I.

अन्तःपुरमहामात्र—Officer in charge of the inner apartments or of the harem. Vide Masulipatam plate of Ammarāja II in E I. XXIV p. 268 at p. 276.

अन्तःपुरिक—Officer in charge of the king's inner apartments or harem of the king. Vide Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva of Kanoj (in saṁvat 1148) in E I. IX. at p. 305.

अन्तरङ्ग—A class of royal servants very intimate with the king (probably same as ābhyantara) Vide Parikud plate of Madhyamarājadeva of Śailadanta family in E. I. XI at p. 286 and grant of Laksmanasena in E. I. XII p. 91 (of 1122 A. D.).

अन्तर्वंशिक—Officer in charge of the inner apartments or harem. Kautilya I. 12 mentions this officer among the 18 tīrthas. The word occurs in the Kādambarī (para 88), the Daśa-kumāracarita III. p. 71 and is defined by the Amarakośa.

अभित्वरमाणक—A messenger. The word occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāladeva in E. I. XVII at p. 321 (the words are 'dūtapraisanika-gamāgamika-abhitvaramānaka') and in the Khalimpur plate of Dharmapāla (E I. vol. IV p. 243 at p. 250). Vide also Chamba Ins. No. 15 p. 166 for the same and Vogel (pp. 125–126).

अमच—(Prākrit for अमात्य). Vide Nasik Ins. Nos. 4 and 5 in E. I. VIII pp. 71, 73)

अमात्य—Minister. Vide p. 104 and note 150 above.

अश्वघास-कायस्थ—A petty officer in charge of the fodder for horses. Vide Rājat. III. 489.

अश्वपति—A cavalry officer. Vide Gupta Ins. No 61 at p 259 (in the Gupta year 106).

आक्षपटलिक—Officer in charge of the account or record office. Vide E. I. vol. I pp 316, 318 (grant of Karna I dated samvat 1148).

आग्रहारिक—Officer in charge of an agrahāra or agrahāras. Vide Gupta Ins. No. 12 (Bihar stone Ins. of Skandagupta) p. 47 at p. 52 and Mallasarul plate of Vijayasena in E. I. XXIII p. 155 at p 159 The word may also be 'agrahārika' or 'agrahārin'. Vide E I XXIV at p. 127 for a note on 'agrahāra'.

आज्ञप्ति—One who communicates at the order of the king the details about a landgrant to local officers (probably the same as dūtaka) This word occurs in some of the earliest Ins. of Pallava Śivaskandavarman (in E. I. VI p. 84 at p. 88). Vide also E I VIII at p. 146 (plates of the great Pallava queen Cārudevī), JBBRAS vol. X p 365 of śake 532 (where the ājñapti is Durgapatī), E I. XII p. 3, E. I. XV p. 70 (plate of Sundara Cola) In the grant of the eastern Cālukya king Amma II we have 'ajñaptiḥ katakādhīśo bhattadevaśca lekhakaḥ' (E. I. VII at p. 188). Vide p. 184 of the same for a discussion of the meaning आज्ञा—a synonym of आज्ञप्ति. Vide Parle plate of Indravarman in E I. XIV p 360 at p. 362 (of the Ganga year 149) where the words are 'ājñā mahāmahattara-Śivavarmā'. When in the Gupta Ins. No 25 at p. 115 (of Mahārāja Sanksobha) or in the plate of Dronasimha in the Valabhi year 183 in E. I. XVI at p. 19 the words at the end are 'svayam-ājñā' the meaning is that the king employed no dūtaka to convey the details of his grant to the local officers but that he gave the details in person.

आज्ञादापके—Probably the same as 'ājñapti' or 'dūtaka'. Vide I A. 14 p. 161 in the record of Vākpatirāja of Dhārā dated samvat 1036.

आटविक—Officer in charge of forest tracts. The word occurs in Kautilya I. 12 among the 18 tīrthas

आधिकारिक—Officer. The exact function cannot be indicated. Vide grant of Dhārāvarsa in śake 702 (E. I. XXIV p. 176 at p 184), Cambay plates of Govinda IV in śake 852 (E I VII p. 26 at p. 40), Kauthem plate of Vikramāditya V in śake 930 (I. A. 16 p 15 at p. 24).

आभ्यन्तर—Officers specially intimate or in close contact with the king. Vide Rājat. VIII 426.

आयुक्त—An officer. The exact duties are not clear. Pāṇini II. 3 40 indicates that he knows the word in the sense of a servant or officer. Vide Gupta Ins. No. 1 p. 1 at p. 8 (Allahabad Stone pillar Ins. of Samudragupta) which has 'āyukta-purusa '.

आयुक्तक—Same as आयुक्त. The word occurs in Kāmasūtra V. 5. 5 and Kāmandaka V. 82 (q. in note 73 above). Vide Omgudu grant of Vijayaskandavarman (E. I. XI at p. 250), Paharpur plate (E I XX p. 59 at p 61 in Gupta year 159), plate of Dronasimha in Valabhi year 183 (E.I. XI p. 17), grant of Dharasena II in Valabhi year 252 (in I. A. vol. 15 p. 187), the Maitraka plate in Gupta year 252 (E. I XI p 83).

आर्यपुत्र—(Prākrit अयपुत्र)—occurs in Brahmagiri Rock Inscription of Aśoka (in Corpus I. I. vol. I p 175)

आशापाल—lit. guardian of quarters. Acc to Sukra I. 192 he is a chief ruling over 10000 villages

उपयुक्त—A subordinate officer Kautilya II 5 has that word The duties cannot be specified उपयुक्तक—Probably the same as 'upayukta'. The word occurs in Karhad plates of Krsna III dated śake 880 (E I IV p 278, at p 285), the Cambay plates of Govinda IV in śake 852 (in E. I. VII p 26 at p 40).

उपरिक—A very high officer, somewhat like a Governor of a province. Vide Damodarpur plate of Kumāragupta I in the Gupta year 125 (i. e. 443-44 A. D) where an uparika is said to have been selected by Emperor Kumāragupta to govern Pundravardhanabhukti and where the uparika is said to have appointed the kumaramatya Vetravarman to govern the district (visaya) of Kotivarsa (E. I. XV p 130). He is sometimes styled mahārāja and rājaputra. Vide also Gupta Inscriptions pp. 213, 216, the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapala (I. A 15 p. 304 at p. 306), the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E. I. IV p. 208 at p. 211) where uparika occurs after 'kumaramatya' and before 'visayapati Visvarūpa on Yāj. I. 307 quotes a prose passage from Brhaspati where the qualities requisite in an uparika are set out. Vide Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar Festschrift pp. 231–233 for note and Vogel p 123.

एकाङ्क—The exact meaning is not certain; probably an officer belonging to a body organized in military fashion for collecting revenue or performing police duties. The word occurs in Rājat V 249, VII. 1604.

कटकेश or कटकराज or कटकाधीश—Superintendent of the royal camp Vide E I. VII at p. 185 (grant of Amma II who ruled from 945 to 970 A. D.).

कटुक—Exact function not known. The word occurs in two Taleśvara plates in E I XIII at p 117. Vide महाकटुक below.

कम्पनाधिपति or कम्पनापति or कम्पनेश—Commander-in-chief Vide Rājat V. 447, VII 1362 and 1366.

कम्पनोद्ग्राहक—An officer connected with the army Vide Rājat. VIII. 1430

करण—A clerk. The word occurs in the Irda plate of Kamboja king Narapāladeva in E. I. XXII p. 150 at p 155 (about 10th century A. D).

करण-कायस्थ—A scribe of legal documents. Occurs in Chamba Ins No 25 p. 187 at p. 194. Vide Vogel p 133

करणिक—Officer in charge of a State department or office. The word occurs in the Nālandā stone Ins of Yaśovarmadeva's reign about 530 A. D. in E I. XX p 37 at p 44, in the Chatsu Ins. of Guhilot Bālāditya of about the 10th century in E. I XII p. 10 at p. 17, in a grant dated samvat 1203 of Govindacandra's son in E I. VIII p 158 (where we have 'karanika-thakkura-śrīvivika), in E I XX Appendix p 52 No. 350 of saṁvat 1228 (about the donation of a karanika-brāhmana-Chāhada)

करणिन्—Same as 'karanika'. The word occurs in the Harsacarita VII para 2 (sakala-karani-parikarah).

कर्मसचिव—Executive minister. The word occurs in Rudradāman's Junagadh Ins of 150 A. D. in E I. vol. VIII p 36 Vide p 105 above

कायस्थ—A scribe or writer in the revenue department of the king. The oldest references are probably those in Yāj I. 322, Visnu Dh. S. VII. 3 and Br. Sam 86. 12. Vide Aśvaghāsa-kāyastha above and grāmakāyastha in Rājat. V. 175 and Indian Historical Quarterly, vol. IX p 12 (a grant of Gupta year 120 i. e. 439-40 A. D.) Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 75-77 for a note on Kāyastha.

कार्मान्तिक—Superintendent of all mines and State manufactories. Kauṭilya I. 12 mentions him among the 18 tīrthas. Kautilya II. 12 is headed 'ākara-karmāntapravartanam' i. e. 'conducting mining operations and manufactories'.

कुमार—A prince younger than a Yuvarāja (the heir apparent). The word 'Kumāla' occurs in the first separate Rock Edict of Aśoka at Dhauli (Corpus I. I vol I pp. 93, 97). Vide also Corpus I. I. vol. II pp. 40 and 48 (Mathurā Lion Pillar capital).

कुमारामात्य—A high officer below a provincial Governor. Vide 'uparika' above. In the Allahabad praśasti of Samudragupta, Harisena is described as kumārāmātya and also sāndhivigrahika and mahādaṇḍanāyaka (Gupta Ins. No. 1 at p. 16) Vide Gupta Ins. No. 46 p. 213 at p. 216, the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E. I. IV p 208 at p. 211), E. I. X at p. 72 in the reign of Kumāragupta in Gupta year 117 (a brāhmana is described as mantrin, kumārāmātya and mahābalādhikṛta) Vide Dr. U. N Ghoshal's paper on 'kumārāmātya' in the proceedings of the 6th All India Oriental Conference pp. 211 ff, p 117 above and Vogel p. 123.

कुलकरणि—a hereditary clerk or officer. The word occurs in the Sūdi Ins. of śake 981 in E I. XV p. 85 at p. 91.

कुलिक—An officer in charge of ten villages who was granted a 'kula' of land for his salary. Vide Manu VII. 119 and Kullūka thereon. In the Damodarpur plate of Gupta year 124 it is said that the head of the district was assisted by the nagara-śresthin, prathama-kulika and prathama-kayastha (E. I. XV at p 130). In the Nālandā plate of Devapāladeva we read 'Odra-mālava-khasa-kulika-karnāta-hūna-cāta-bhatasevakādīn' (E. I. XVII at p. 321). Vide Chamba Ins. No. 15 at p. 166. Vogel says that 'Kulika' is a tribe (pp. 126-127) Probably the passage means 'officers in Orissa, Khaśa and Mālvā and the cātas and soldiers of Karnāta and Hūna origin'. Kulika also means 'an arbitrator as a tribunal'. Vide pp 280-282 above and Indian Historical Quarterly, vol. 19 p. 12 at p 14. Vide महापाषकुलिक

कोट्टपाल—Officer in charge of a fort. The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Narayanapala (I. A. 15 p 304 at p 306) and in the Nālandā plate of Devapaladeva in E. I. XVII at p 321 where the word is read as koṭapāla

क्षत्तृ—Chamberlain Vide p 111 above He is one of the 'ratnins' According to Manu X. 16 and Yāj I. 94 the offspring of a ksatriya woman from a sudra male was called ksattr and it is probable that such mixed offspring were employed as door-keepers or chamberlains क्षत्रप—A provincial chief. The word occurs in Corpus I.I. vol. II p XXXIV and pp 23, 28 (Taxila plate of Patika of the year 78) and in the plate of Vidagdha in 'Antiquities of Chamba', Ins No. 15 p. 164 at p. 166 Vogel says it must be read as 'ksetrapa'. Vide 'mahāksatrapa' below. The word is probably a Sanskritized form of Persian 'satrap'.

क्षेत्रप—The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p. 304 at 306).

क्षेत्रपाल—Occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāladeva (E. I. XVII at p 321)

खण्डरक्ष—The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p. 304 at p. 306), in the Nālandā plate of Devapāladeva (E. I. XVII at p 321) and in the Chamba Inscription Nos 15 and 26 In 'Antiquities of Chamba' Ins No. 25 the form is 'khadgaraksa'. Vide Vogel pp 127–128.

खण्डपाल—Occurs in the Kahla plate of Sodhadeva of samvat 1134 (E I VII p. 85 at p 91). The form खण्डपाल occurs in the Panchobh plate of संग्रामगुप्त (JBORS. vol. V p 582 at p. 588).

खोल—Occurs in the Khalimpur plate of Dharmapāladeva (E I vol IV p. 243 at p 250). The meaning is uncertain गजपति—Officer in charge of the elephant arm in an army. The word occurs in the plate of Jayacandra of Kanoj dated samvat 1225 in I. A. vol. 15 at p 7.

गजपति—Occurs in the Talesvara plate (6th to 8th centuries A. D.) in E I. XIII. p 109 at 115. उत्पल on बृहत्संहिता 52. 13 says 'कोशभवनं गजः'.

गजवर—(a Persian word for 'treasurer')—occurs in the Ins of Mahāksatrapa Sodāsa found at Mathurā (in E I. IX p 247) Vide Rājat V. 177.

गमागमिक—The meaning is uncertain It probably means some kind of messenger. It occurs in Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A 15 p 304 at p. 306), the Nālandā plate of Devapāladeva (E I. XVII at p. 321), the Rajor Ins. of Mathanadeva in samvat 1016 (in E I. vol III p. 263 at p 266) उत्पल on बृहत्संहिता 85. 34 explains दूत as गमागमिक. In the Khalimpur plate (E. I. vol. IV pp. 243, 250) the words दूतखोलगमागमिकाभित्वरमाण occur one after another.

गावुण्ड—Same as grāmakūta below Vide Ins. from Hottur in E I XVI p 74 (of śake 929)

गावुण्डु—Same as above It occurs in the Ratta Ins from Saundatti of śake 902 (in JBBRAS. vol X at p. 208)

गुल्मपति—Officer in charge of a गुल्म, for which see p 205 above It occurs in the Panchobh plate of Sangrāmagupta (12th century) in JBORS. vol. V p. 582 at p. 588

गूढपुरुष—Secret service men. Vide Irda plate of Kamboja king Narapāladeva in E. I. XXII p 150 at p 156 (about 10th century).

गोप—Officer over five or ten villages. Vide Kaut. II. 35 and p 143 above.

गौल्मिक—' Superintendent of woods and forests ' (Fleet) The word occurs in Gupta Ins. No. 12 p. 47 at p. 50, in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I. XVII at p 321), Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p 304 at p 306), in the grant of Laksmanasena (E. I. XII p. 6 at p 9). The word is formed from ' gulma ' acc. to Vārtika 13.(āyasthanebhyasthaka) on Pānini IV. 2. 104 Vogel (p. 127) boldly asserts that ' the words śaulkika and gaulmika are unknown in Sanskrit Literature ' in spite of Buhler's note in E. I. vol. I p. 2 at p. 7 that saulkikas are frequently mentioned in inscriptions. But śaulkika also occurs in Yāj. II. 173 and both words occur in the Mahābhāsya. Gulma means a post of guards. Vide p. 141 above The word ' gumike ' read in the grant of Pallava Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol I p. 2 at p 5) is correctly held by Buhler to stand for ' gaulmika '.

ग्रामकायस्थ—Village scribe. Occurs in Rājat V. 175

ग्रामकूट—Village headman. Vide p 154 for reference from Paithinasi Kaut. IV. 4 has that word and the com on Kāmasūtra V. 5 5 explains ' halotthavrtti ' as ' grāmakūta Vide also Karhad plates of Krsna III dated śake 880 (E I.

IV p. 278 at p. 285), the Sanjan plates of Buddha-varasa (E. I XIV p 144 at p. 150), the grant of Karka Suvarnavarsa in śake 746 (E. I XXIV p. 77 at p. 84), Cambay plates of Govinda IV in śake 852 (E. I. VII pp. 26, 39)

ग्रामकूटक—Same as above. This form occurs in Kauthem plate of Vikramāditya V dated śake 930 (I. A. vol. 16 p. 15 at p. 24).

ग्रामणी—Village headman. Vide pp. 153–154 above for ancient references Pānini V. 2 78 has this word.

ग्रामनेतृ—Same as above. Occurs in Śukra II. 120.

ग्रामपति—Occurs in the Mit. on Yāj. II. 271.

ग्राममतृ—Occurs in Yāj. II 271.

ग्रामाधिपति—Vide Kāmasūtra V. 5 5.

ग्रामिक—Village headman. Occurs in Manu VII. 116, Kaut. III. 10 and in Bhūmara stone Pillar Ins. of Hastin and Śarvanātha in Gupta year 189 (Gupta Inscription No. 24 p. 112).

घट्टपति—Officer in charge of quays or landing places (ghats). Occurs in Kahla plate of Sodhadeva in saṁvat 1134 (E. I. VII. p. 85 at p. 91). For घट्टपाल vide JBORS vol. V pp. 582, 588.

चाट—This word has given rise to various opinions. Fleet and Buhler translate as 'irregular soldiers'. Vogel (pp. 130–132) points out that Chamba is the only place where the ancient word 'cāta' is still extant in the modern form 'chat' meaning 'head of a pargana'. Grants of villages are often expressed as 'acātabhatapraveśya' (not to be entered by cātas and bhatas)'. For example, in the Surat plate of Maitraka Vyāghrasena (E. I. XI at p. 221) it is stated that the granted land was not to be entered by cātas and bhatas except for (seizing) robbers and those guilty of harm or treason to the king Similar words occur in the Betul plates of Sanksobha in Gupta year 199 (acātabhaṭapraveśyam coradrohakavarjam) in E. I. VIII p. 287. The words occur also in the Khoh plate of Mahārāja Hastin in Gupta year 191 (Gupta Ins. No. 23 p. 106). Yāj I 336 states that it is the duty of the king to protect people from the harassment caused by cātas, robbers and kāyasthas and the Mit explains cāta' as persons who deprive people of their wealth after producing false confidence in them. Three quarters of the same verse occur in the Pañcatantra I p. 72 verse 343 Aparārka (p. 792) quotes Brhaspati that 'dangers common to all are those arising from cātas and thieves'.

Prof. Pathak while editing the Abhona plates of Sankaragana dated in Kalacuri samvat 347 in E. I. IX p. 296 quotes the words of Śankarācārya (tārkika-cāta-bhatarājāpravesyam) in his Bhāsya on Br Up. and Anandagiri's explanation thereon viz. cātas are those that transgress the rules of conduct for decent people and bhatas are servants telling falsehoods. Vide the Valabhi grant of Dharasana II in 252 Gupta year (I. A. 15 p 187) and the Palitana plates of the same king and of the same year in E I XI. p. 80 at p. 83 and the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E I. IV p 208, at p. 211 where we read 'bhatacāta-sevakādīn) for other early occurrences of the word In the Naihati grant of Ballālasena we have the words 'cattabhatta-jātīyān janapadān' (E I. XIV p. 156 at p. 160)

चोरग्राह—Thief-catcher. The word occurs in Nārada (parisista verse 18) and in Kāt. q by Aparārka p. 844

चोररज्जुक—Probably an officer whose duty it was to secure robbers with ropes. Kaut. IV. 13 mentions this officer and II. 6 refers to 'corarajjū' as one constituent of 'rāstra'.

चौरोद्धरणिक—Thief-catcher or one who exterminates thieves This word occurs in Gupta Ins No. 46 p 213 at p 216, the Valabhi grant of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252 (I. A. 15 p. 187) and the Palitana plate of the same king in the same year (E. I XI p. 80 at p 83), the Rāstrakūta grant of śake 697 (JBBRAS vol 16 p 105 at p 108), Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I A. 15 p 304 at p. 306), the grant of Laksmanasena (E. I XI p. 6 at p 9).

चौरोद्धर्तृ—Same as above The word occurs in Yāj II. 271 and in Kātyāyana quoted by Aparārka p 844

छत्रछायिक—Umbrella bearer This word occurs in 'Antiquities of Chamba', Ins. No. 15 at p 166 Vide Vogel p 128

ठक्कुर—It appears to have been a mere title and not an office whereby the holder was entitled to wield some kind of power in the State The word occurs in samvat 1005 (E I. XIX p. 243), in the plate of Govindacandra in samvat 1186 (in E. I. XIII p 295 at p 297), the Sevadi plate of Cāhamāna Ratnapāla in samvat 1176 (E. I. XI p 304 at p 310) It occurs as a title in Rājat VII. 290, 706, 738

तन्त्रपति—A Judge (dharmādhikārin) Occurs in Rājat VIII 2422.

तन्त्रपाल—Seems to mean some officer like "Charged' affaires". The word occurs in a record at Sūdi in Ron Taluka of Cālukya Someśvara I in śake 973 (E. I. V at p. 77) and in Partabgarh Ins. of Pratīhāra king Mahendrapāla in saṁvat 1003 (in E. I. XIV p. 176 at p. 185), one Mādhava being styled ' tantrapāla-mahāsāmanta-mahādandanāyaka'.

तरपति—Superintendent of all ferries. Vide Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I. XVII at p. 321) and Kahla plate of Sodhadeva in saṁvat 1134 (E. I. VII at p. 91). In the Nālandā plate ' tarika ' and ' tarapatika ' come immediately after one another and must be distinguished as to meaning.

तरिक—Probably means ' one who plies a ferry boat '. Occurs in Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E. I. XVII at p. 321), Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p. 304 at p. 306).

तलार or तलरक्ष—Meaning uncertain. The word occurs in the Ins. of Samarasiṁha of Mewar in saṁvat 1330 (E. I. vol. XX. Appendix No. 579 p. 82). In Punjab a subdivision of high class kshatris is called Tālwār.

तलावाटक—Meaning not apparent. Bhagavanlal suggested that it is the same as modern ' Talāti ' (petty revenue officer). It occurs in the Deo-Baranark Ins. of Jīvitagupta (Gupta Ins. No. 46 p. 213 at p. 216).

दण्डनाथ—Commander of an army. In E. I. vol. V. p. 28 at p. 31 mention is made of a Dandanātha Sahadeva under the Yādava king Jaitugi or Jaitapāla (about 1200 A. D.).

दण्डनायक—Various meanings are assigned by several scholars. Stein on Rājat. VII. 951 takes it to mean ' prefect of police '. In many cases it appears to mean a ' General or Magistrate '. In E. I. VII, Appendix No. 291, 292 and 296 Ins. of the years 1178 to 1181 A. D. there is one Keśimayya styled ' dandanāyaka ' lower in rank than mahāmaṇḍaleśvara. Vide also Ins of Jayakeśi Kadamba of 1125 A. D. in E. I. XIII p 298 and p. 317 (Daṇḍanāyaka Lakkharasa), JBBRAS XII p. 11 in śake 1145 (Daṇḍanāyaka Purusottama of Yādava Singhana), the Abhir Ins. in E. I. V p. 234 where one Mahādevarasa is styled mahāsāmantādhipati and daṇḍanāyaka and his subordinate Māyideva is also called ' daṇḍanāyaka ' (about 1153 A. D.), in several Kalacurya Inscriptions (E. I. V p. 24 at p. 28, E I. V. p. 213 at p 215). Lakanna and Mādanna were dandanāyakas of Devarāya II of Vijayanagara (about 1388 śake) in E. I. XV at p. 15. Vide p. 115 and n. 152 above. E I. XIX p 265 at p. 269 (grant of Dharmarāja) reads 'dāndanāyaka'. In Br. Saṁ. 72. 4 the queen, yuvarāja, senāpati and dandanāyaka are placed on the same level in the matter of the staff (danda) to be prepared for them.

दण्डपति—Commander of forces or a governor. Vide Abu Vimala temple Ins. dated samvat 1378 in E. I. IX pp. 148, 156.

दण्डपाल—An officer in charge of all branches of the army. Vide Kauṭ. I. 12 and p. 112 n. 147 above.

दण्डपाशिक—Officer in charge of punishment i. e. criminal justice. The word occurs in the Palitana plates of Dharasena II dated in Gupta year 252 (E. I. XI p 83), in the Valabhi grant of the same king in the same year (I. A. 15 p. 187), in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p. 304 at p. 306 which reads 'dāndapāśika') and Laksmanasena's grant (E. I. XII at p. 9), also in Yaśastilaka I. p. 50.

दण्डवासिक—(a prākrit form of dandapāśika). Occurs in Chamba Ins. No. 15 at p. 166. Vide Vogel p. 129.

दण्डशक्ति—Meaning uncertain. The word occurs in Khalimpur plate of Dharmapāla in E. I. vol. IV p. 243 at p. 250.

दण्डाधिनाथ—Same as dandapāla. The word occurs in the Chittur plates of Kullottunga Codadeva (I. A. 14 p. 55 in śake 1056).

दण्डाधिप—Same as above. The word occurs in a quotation in the com. on Yaśastilaka I. p. 91 and the Abu Vimala temple Ins. dated samvat 1378 in E. I. IX p. 148 at p. 151. Vide note 148 above for quotation.

दण्डिक—Same as 'daṇḍavāsika'. Vide Chamba Ins. No. 15 at p. 166.

दण्डेश—Same as दण्डनाथ. In J. B. B. R. A. S. vol. 15 p. 386 (of śake 1160) there is a commander (dandeśa) Bicirāya under Yādava king Singhana.

दाण्डपाशिक—Same as 'dandapāśika'. This word occurs in the Pañcatantra II, Kathā 4 (as dandapāśaka meaning a watchman), in the grant of Mahābhavagupta I (E. I. XI at p. 94), in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E. I. XVII at p. 321), in E. I. XIX p. 265 at p. 269. Vide Vogel p. 129.

दाण्डभोगिक—Probably the same as दाण्डपाशिक. The word occurs in the Wala plate of Guhasena in Valabhi year 246 (E. I. XIII at p 339).

दाण्डिक—A police officer. The word occurs in the Gupta Ins. No. 46 p. 213 at p. 216, in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A 15 p 304 at p. 306), in the Nāḷandā plate of Devapāla

(E. I. XVII at p. 321). In this last 'dāndika' and 'dāṇḍapāśika' come immediately after one another.

दापक—Appears to be the same as 'dūtaka'. The word occurs in the grant of Paramāra king Siyakadeva dated samvat 1026 (in E. I. XIX p. 177) and in E. I. XIX at p. 243 (dated saṁvat 1005).

दाशापराधिक—meaning doubtful. Probably an officer whose concern was with the ten aparādhas of which the king could take cognisance suo motu. The word occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I. XVII at p. 321) and in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p. 304 at p. 306). Vide p. 264 above for the ten aparādhas.

दिक्पाल—Probably officers in charge of the borders of a kingdom. The word occurs in Nārada (Dr. Jolly's edition, pariśista verse 17) q. by the Mit. on Yāj. II 271 and Kāt. (813) q. by Aparārka p. 844.

दिविर—a clerk. The Rājat. VIII. 131 makes it clear that 'divira' was distinct from the 'kāyastha'. The word occurs in the Gupta Ins. No. 27 at p. 122 of Mahārāja Jayanātha in Gupta year 177 (where one of the donees is a divira Sarvavādha).

दिवीरपति (or दिविरपति)—chief of clerks. In the grant of Śīlāditya of the Gupta year 286 a certain officer is styled 'sāndhivigrahādhikrta-divirapati' (E. I. XI p. 174 at p. 180); vide also Jesar plate of Śīlāditya in 357 Valabhi year (E. I. XXII p. 114 at p. 117) where a person called Mammaka is styled 'divirapati' and also sandhivigrahika-mahāpratihāra and sāmanta'.

दुःसाधसाधनिक—Vide दौःसाधसाधनिक below.

दुर्गपाल—Superintendent of a fort. Vide p. 112 note 147 above.

दुष्टसाधक—meaning uncertain. The word occurs in the Kahla plate of Sodhadeva of samvat 1134 (E. I. VII at p 91).

दूत—Messenger, envoy. Vide Visnudharmottara II. 24. 13-14, 28 for his qualifications and pp. 112, 127 above. In the 13th Rock Edit of Aśoka at Shahabazgadhi we have 'duta' (vide Corpus I. I. vol. I p. 67).

दूतक—A high officer or delegate who conveys the king's command about the grant of land to local officers The word occurs in the Betul plate of Saṅksobha in 199 Gupta year (Gupta Ins. pp. 286-289), and in the plate of Mahārāja Jayanātha of Gupta year 174 (Gupta Ins. No 26 p. 117 at p. 119 where the 'dūtaka' is Uparikadiksita Sarvadatta), in the Banskhera plate of Harsa in E. I. IV p. 208 (dūtakotra mahāpramātāra-mahāsāmanta-śrī-Skandagupta) and also in the Madhuban plate of Harsa (E I. VII at p. 158). In the Daulatpur plate of Bhojadeva I in Harsa samvat 100 the dūtaka is said to be 'Yuvarāja-Nāgabhata'. Vide also E. I. VI p 285, E. I. VIII 287, XI p 80 In the Khalimpur plate of Dharmapāla (in E. I. vol. IV p. 243 at p 250) the king states that he was requested to make a grant by Mahāsāmantādhipati Nārāyanavarman through the Prince Tribhuvanpāla as dūtaka.

दूतप्रेषणिक—Meaning doubtful. The word occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I. XVII at p. 321) and the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 p. 304 at p. 306)

देशाधिकृत—(Prākit 'desadhikata')—Governor of a Province The Prakrit form occurs in the Ins. of Pallava Sivaskandavarman in the year 8 (E I. vol. I. at p. 5).

दोःसाधसाधनिक—Meaning doubtful. Probably means 'those who catch dangerous robbers whom it is difficult to secure'. The word occurs in the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E I. IV p. 208 at p 211). The form 'duhsādha-sādhanika' occurs in the Sevadi plates of Cāhamāna Ratnapāla in samvat 1176 (E I. XI at p. 310). Vide also E. I. XXVI at p. 206 and 'mahāsādhanika' below.

दोःसाधिक—Probably the same as above. The word occurs in the grant of Laksmanasena in the 3rd year of his reign (i. e. 1122 A. D.) in E. I. XII at p. 9.

द्वारिक—Doorkeeper. Vide Kautilya I. 12, Lalitavistara p. 136, Visnudharmottara II. 24. 30.

द्रङ्गिक—Officer in charge of a city station or watch tower for collecting customs duties. 'Dranga' means either 'a town' (as in E. I. XX, No. 810 of śake 1509) or 'a watch station' (as in Rājat. VIII. 2010). The word occurs in Valabhi plate of Dharasena II in Valabhi samvat 252 (I. A. 15 p 187), Gupta Ins. No. 38 at p. 169, Palitana plate of Simhāditya in 255 Valabhi year (E. I. XI p. 16 at p. 18), Bhavanagar plate of Dhruvasena I in Valabhi year 210 (E. I. XV p. 257), Wala plate of Guhasena (E. I. XIII at p. 339), the Navalakhi plate of Śīlāditya (E. I. XI at p. 179).

द्राङ्गेश—Guardian of frontiers. Vide Stein's translation of Rājat. vol. II pp. 291–292 for the meaning of 'dranga'.

द्वारनाथ, द्वारपति, द्वाराधिप—Superintendent of passes leading into the kingdom (Stein). Vide Rājat. V. 214.

धर्ममहामात्र—Superintendent of morality. Vide Aśoka's Edicts in Corpus I. I. vol. I p. 96 (first Rock edict at Girnar).

धर्माधिकरण—Judge. Vide Visnudharmottara II. 24. 24-25.

धर्माधिकरणिन्—Judge. Vide Matsyapurāna 215. 24 and note 167 above.

धर्माध्यक्ष—Vide p. 126 above.

ध्रुव—Collector of the royal share of grain. The word occurs in the Bhinmal Ins. of samvat 1320 (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. I part 1 p. 477).

ध्रुवाधिकरणिक—Probably the same as above. The word occurs in Gupta Ins. No. 38 pp. 164-166 (Māliya plate of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252), the Wala plate of Guhasena (E. I. VII at p. 339 of Valabhi year 246).

नगरपति—City Prefect. The word occurs in the Silāra grant of śake 1016 (I. A. vol. 9 p. 33 at p. 35).

नगरव्यावहारिक—City Magistrate. Vide Kautilya I. 12 for Pauravyāvahārika and note 147 on p. 112 above. The word 'Nagalaviyohālaka' occurs in the First separate Rock Edict of Asoka at Dhauli (Corpus I. I. vol. I. p. 92).

नगरश्रेष्ठिन्—City Banker or guild president of the town. The word occurs in the Damodarpur plate No. 4 of the time of Budhagupta (E. I. XV at p. 115) and in the Paharpur plate (E. I. XX at p. 63).

नगराधिकृत or नगराधिप—City prefect. Occurs in Rājat. IV. 81, VI. 70, VIII. 3334

नरपति—Exact function doubtful. The word occurs in the plate of Jayacandra of Kanoj in samvat 1225 (I. A. vol. 15 p. 6 at p. 7) and in the Panchobh plate of Sangrāmagupta in JBORS. vol. V p. 582 at p. 588.

नागरक—Chief Officer of the city. The word occurs in Kautilya II. 36, Kāmasūtra V. 5. 9 (the com. on which explains nāgaraka as daṇḍapāśika). Vide p. 149 above for his functions.

नागरिक—Chief of the police. The word occurs in the Vikramorvaśiya V (after verse 4), the Daśakumāracarita II. pp. 58 and 59. The Vaijayanti explains the word as 'karapati, (Jail Superintendent).

नायक—Head of (ten) villages. The word occurs in Kautilya I 12, Śukra I. 192.

नियुक्तक—An officer, whose exact function is not known. The word occurs in the grant of Karka dated śake 746 (E I XXIV p. 77 at p 84), in the Kauthem plate of Vikramāditya V dated śake 930 (I. A. vol. 16 p 15 at p 24), in the Rajor Ins. of Mathanadeva dated samvat 1016 (E. I. III p. 263 at p 266).

निहेलपति—Governor of some part of a kingdom. In Chamba Ins. No 15 p 164 at p 166 we read in Vidagdha's plate 'Visaya-pati-nihelapati-ksatrapa'. Vide Vogel p. 124 In Gupta Ins. No. 80 p. 286 at p. 289 the 'dūta' of the grant is 'nihila-pati' Kuśala-prakāśa. So 'nihila' and 'nihela' probably mean the same thing.

नैमित्तिक—Probably 'soothsayer or astrologer'. The word occurs in the plate of Candradeva of Kanoj of samvat 1148 (E. I. IX p. 302 at p. 305).

पञ्चकुल—An officer over a certain number of villages. The word occurs in the grant of Arjunadeva of Anahillapātaka in Vikrama year 1320 (I. A. vol. 11 at p. 242, where we read 'Srī-Abhayasīhaprabhṛti-pañcakulapratipattau'), in the Bhinmal Ins. No. 12 dated samvat 1333 (Bombay Gazetteer vol. I part I p 480) where we read 'tan-niyukta-mahā-Gajasīha-prabhrti-pancakula-pratipattau'). In E. I. XXIV at p. 89 (in an Ins. from Udaipur) we have a Pañcolī of the Gughāvata family. Here, it appears that 'pañcakula' was a board of officers of whom Gajasimha was one (or the chief). Vide महापाञ्चकुलिक below.

पञ्चमण्डली—A board of five officers or a panchayat. The word occurs in the Sanchi Stone Ins. of Candragupta II in Gupta year 93 (vide Gupta Ins. No. 5 at p. 31)

पट्टकिल—Village headman The word occurs in the Malva plates of Vākpatirāja in saṁvat 1031 and 1078 (I. A. vol. 6 at pp. 51 and 53), in the Māndhātā plate of Jayasimha of Dhārā in saṁvat 1112 (E I. vol. III p. 46 at p. 48), in the plate of the Paramāra king Udayavarman of samvat 1256 (I. A. vol. 16 p. 252 at p. 254). Vide p. 154 above for other references.

पट्टोपाध्याय—Recorder of official documents. Vide Rājat. V. 397.

पण्डित—Vide note 150 above.

पिशुनवेत्रिक—probably means 'an officer who drives away undesirable persons with a cane'. The word occurs in the plate of Mahābhavagupta I (E I. XI p 93 at p 94).

पीठिकावित्ति—Meaning uncertain The word occurs in the Belava plate of Bhojavarmadeva (E I. XII p 37 at p. 40).

पुरुष—means 'inferior servant' (as in Kautilya II. 5) or a bailiff attached to a Court of justice (as in Br.). Vide p. 278 above.

पुरोहित—Vide pp. 111–112 and 117 above. The purohita occurs in the list of functionaries in the Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva of Kanoj in saṁvat 1148 (E I. IX at p. 305) and in the grant of Laksmanasena (E I. XII p 6 at p. 9).

पुस्तपाल—Keeper of land records The word occurs in the Damodarpur plates dated Gupta year 124 and 129 (E I XV p. 113, at p. 130) and in the Paharpur plates (E. I. vol XX. p. 61).

पारव्यावहारिक—Vide p. 112 note 147 above. Compare 'nagalaviyohālaka' above under 'nagara-vyāvahārika'.

प्रतिनर्तक—Herald This word occurs in Gupta Ins No. 39 p 171 at p. 190 dated 766–67 A. D (The words are 'tan-niyuktapratinartaka-kulaputrāmātya-Guhena').

प्रतिनिधि—Vide note 150 above.

प्रतिहार—Chamberlain or 'inditer of grants'. In Nasik Ins. No. 5 the word paṭihāra (pratihāra) occurs (E I VIII p. 73). Brhaspati quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 307 states the qualifications of a 'pratihāra'. Vide Ādiparva 85, 28–29, Visnudharmottara II. 24. 12, Śukra I. 121 for definitions. In the grant of Dhruvasena dated Valabhi year 206 the dūtaka of the grant is pratihāra Mammaka.

प्रतीहार—Same as above. The form occurs in the Vasantagadh Ins. of Varmalāta (E I IX p 187 at p 192), in the Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva of Kanoj in saṁvat 1148 (E I IX at p 305); in E I IX p 117 at p. 119 Paramāra king Jayavarma II causes pratīhāra Gaṅgadeva to give a village to three brāhmanas (in saṁvat 1317).

प्रथमकायस्थ—Chief scribe The word occurs in the Damodarpur plate 1 of Kumāragupta in Gupta year 124 (E. I. XV at p 130).

प्रदेष्टृ—Police Magistrate. Vide Kautilya I. 12, IV. 1, IV. 10 (last verse). The word occurs in the Irda plate of the Kamboja king Nayapāladeva (of about the 10th century) in E. I. XXII. pp. 150 at p 156.

प्रधान—Vide note 150 above. The word occurs in the Śilāra plate of Mahāmandaleśvara Anantadeva (I. A 9 p 33 at p 35 where 'mantrin', 'amātya' and 'pradhāna' are mentioned)

प्रमातार—Vogel (pp. 122-123) holds that this officer was concerned with the administration of justice The word occurs in the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E. I. IV p 208 at p 211).

प्रमातृ—Probably 'civil judge'. The word occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E. I. XVII at p. 321) and in the grant of Dhruvasena III in the Gupta year 334 (E I. vol. 1 p 85 at p. 88). Vide also E I vol. I at p. 115

प्रवेशभागिक—Meaning doubtful. Stein conjectures that he is a subordinate officer of the treasury who received cash payments. The word occurs in Rājat. VIII. 278.

प्रशास्तृ—Probably chief magistrate. The word occurs in Kaut. I. 12; vide p. 112 n. 147 above.

प्राणाचार्य—Medical adviser to the king. Vide Visnudharmottara II. 24. 33-34 for his qualifications.

प्राड्विवाक—Chief Justice Vide Manu IX. 234 and p. 272 above.

प्रातिसारक—Meaning doubtful. The word occurs in the Valabhi grant of Dharasena II dated Gupta year 252 (I. A. 15 p. 187)

प्रादेशिक-(प्रादेसिक)—An officer under Aśoka, probably the same as the mahāmātra. The word occurs in the 3rd Rock Edict of Aśoka at Girnar (Corpus I. I. vol. I. pp. 4-5).

प्रान्तपाल—Governor of a Province or guardian of the frontiers. The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. vol. 15 p 304, at p. 306) and in 'Antiquities of Chamba' Ins. No. 15 at p. 166. Vide Vogel p. 124.

प्रायोपवेशाधिकृत—Officer who watched those that had resolved to fast unto death. Vide Rājat. VI. 14.

बलाधिकृत—Commander of an army. The word occurs in the Kādambarī (para 74) of Bāna (where Balāhaka is so called) and in the Rāstrakūta (Gujerat branch) grant of śake 679 (J. B. B. R. A. S vol. 16 p. 105 at p. 108 where 'balādhikrta' follows 'senāpati)'.

बाह्य—A class of royal servants (as distinguished from 'antaranga'. Vide Rājat. VIII. 426, 680, 1542.

बृहदुपरिक—Great Governor of a province. The word occurs in the grant of Laksmanāsena (E. I. XII p. 6 at p. 9). See 'uparika' above.

भट—The word occurs very frequently in conjunction with 'cāta' for which see above. Vide also Dudia plates of Pravarasena II in E I III p. 258 at p 261 and Banskhera plate of Harsa (E. I. IV p. 208 at p. 211), grant of Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol. I. p 2 at p 5) where 'bhada' stands for 'bhata'.

भागदुघ—Vide p 112 above.

भागहार—He who recovers the king's share of the produce of land; one of the six officers of each village, acc. to Śukra II. 120

भागिक—Meaning uncertain. The word has something to do with 'bhāga' and 'bhoga' which frequently occur in the Gupta Inscriptions (e g 'bhogabhāgam' in Gupta Ins. No. 40 at p. 194 and No. 41 at p. 198). Vide two Taleśvara plates (E. I XIII, p 109 at p 115) and 'Antiquities of Chamba' (Ins No. 15 p 166) where both 'bhāgika' and 'bhogika' are found. Mr. Y. R. Gupte renders it as 'owner of land'. Vide Vogel p. 130.

भाण्डागारप्रथम—The chief of the royal store-house or treasury. The word occurs in the Ambarnath Ins. of Mamvāni in sake 782 (J B B R A S. vol. 9 p. 219).

भाण्डागारिक—A storekeeper or keeper of royal treasury The word occurs as 'bhandākarikaya' ('bhāndāgārikasya', of a store-keeper) in Nasik Ins No. 19 (E I VIII p 91) and in the Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva of Kanoj dated saṁvat 1148 (E. I IX p. 302 at p. 305).

भिषक्—King's medical adviser Vide E. I IX p. 302 at p. 305.

भोगपति—Head of a district It occurs in the Mitāksarā on Yāj. I. 320, in E I. IX p 296 at p 298 plates of Śankarkagana where we read 'anyairvāgāminṛpati-bhogapatibhih', as contrasted with a king and in 'Antiquities of Chamba' Ins. No 45 at p. 166

भोगिक—Head of a district or Collector of the State share of land produce taken in kind (Bombay Gazetteer I part 1 p 82) The word occurs in Gupta Ins No. 21 p 93 at p 96 and No 22 p 100 at p 104 (of the Gupta year 163), No 23 p. 106 at p 108 (of the Gupta year 191), in the Kavi grant of

Jayabhata about the beginning of 5th century A. D. (I. A. vol. V at p 114), in the Taleśvara plates (E I. XIII p 109 at p. 117)

भोगोदरणिक—The same as 'bhogika' above

भोजक—A village headman or 'freeholder' (Buhler). The word occurs in the Deo Baranark Ins. of Jīvitagupta II (Gupta Ins. No. 46 p. 213 at p. 216) and in the grant of Pallava Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol I. p 2 at p 5)

मण्डलेश—'Lord of a maṇḍala', a provincial governor Vide Rājat VI. 73, VII. 996, VIII. 1228, 1814, 2029.

मण्डलेश्वर—Same meaning as above. The word occurs frequently in the inscriptions of the Raṭṭas of Saundatti. Vide Bombay Gazetteer, vol. 21 p 354 and 'mahāmaṇḍalesvara' below

मतिसचिव—Councillor. The word occurs in the Inscription of Rudradāman. Vide p 105 above.

मन्त्रिन्—Minister or councillor. The word occurs in Kaut I. 8, Yāj. I. 312 and in Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva of Kanoj dated saṁvat 1148 (E. I. IX p. 302 at p. 305). Vide pp. 105–106 and n. 150 above.

महत्तक—Meaning uncertain. The word occurs as Mahāmahattaka in the Bodh Gaya Ins dated in the 74th year of the Lakṣmana-sena era (i. e about 1194 A. D.) in E. I. XII p 27 at p. 30.

महत्तम—Meaning uncertain. The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. vol. 15 at p. 306) and the Rajor grant of Mathanadeva in saṁvat 1016 (E. I. III p 263 at p 266 where both 'mahattara' and 'mahattama' occur one after another) and in Rājat VII. 438.

महत्तर—lit meaning 'elder' (of a town or village). Stein on Rājat VII. 659 translates it as 'chamberlain' The word occurs in the Kavi plate of Jayabhata of the beginning of the 5th century A. D. (I. A. vol. V p 114, 'rāstragrāma-mahattara'), Gupta Ins. No 38 p 164 at p. 169 (the Maliya plate of Dharasena II), Abhona plates of Śaṅkaragana (595 A. D.) in E I. IX p. 297, Palitana plates of Simhāditya in the Gupta year 255 (E I. XI pp. 16, 18), Valabhi grant of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252 (I. A. 15 p. 187). Vide also E. I. VIII p 26 at p. 39 (śake 852), E. I. IV p. 278, 285 (śake 880), E. I. III p. 263, 266 (Vikrama year 1016), I. A.

vol. 16 p. 15 at p. 24 (śake 930) In the Daśakumāra-carita III p 77 there is 'janapada-mahattara'. Vide note 148 above.

महाकरणिक—Vide 'karanika' above. The word occurs in the Benares plate of Cedi king Karnadeva in Cedi era 793 (i. e. 1042 A. D) in E. I. vol II p. 297 at p. 309.

महाकर्ताकृतिक or महाकार्ताकृतिक—Meaning uncertain. The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. vol. 15 p. 304 at p. 306) and in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E. I. XVII at p 321) and the Wala grant of Dhruvasena I in Gupta year 216 (I A vol 4 p. 105).

महाकुमारामात्य—Vide 'Kumārāmātya' above. The word occurs in the same two plates as are mentioned under 'mahākartākrtika'.

महाक्षत्रप—The great satrap or provincial Governor. The Mathurā Lion Pillar capital (Corpus I. I. vol. II p. 30 at p. 48) and the coins of Rajula are the earliest to mention this word. Vide the Mathurā stone Ins. of Śondāsa (E. I. IX p. 247) and Rudradāman's Ins. (E. I. VIII p. 36 at p. 44).

महाक्षपटलिक—Vide 'aksapatatika' above. The word occurs in Gupta Ins No 39 at p 120 (in 766 A. D), in the Bhagalpur plate (I. A. 15 pp 304, 316), Benares plate of Karnadeva (A. D. 1042) in E. I. vol II p. 309, in Laksmanasena's grant (E I. XII p 91), E I X at p. 100 (Vikrama year 1253). In the Madhuban plate of Harsa (E I VII p. 155 at p. 158) we have 'mahāksapatalādhikaranādhikrta'.

महागणस्थ—meaning uncertain. The word occurs in the Naihati grant of Ballālasena (E I. vol XIV p. 156 at p. 160).

महातलवर—The functions of this high officer are not clear. See the Nagarjunikonda Ins. in E. I. XX at pp 6 and 16 where a person is styled mahāsenāpati and mahātalavara. Has the word anything to do with the modern word 'talvār' meaning a sword? If it has then it would mean 'a great swordsman' The word 'taravārī' in the sense of a double-edged sword occurs in the Yasastilaka I. p 50.

महादण्डनायक—Vide 'dandanāyaka' above and p. 115 note 152. In the Gupta Ins No. 1 pp 10, 15 Harisena, the author of the praśasti, is styled sāndhivigrahika, kumārāmātya and mahādandanāyaka; vide also Gupta Ins No 46 pp. 213, 216, Mathurā (Kusana) Ins of the year 74 (E I. IX p. 242), E. I. XVI p. 230 the Kankhera stone Ins. of the year 201 (279 A D ?) where we read 'mahādandanāyakena śakena srīdharavarmanā'), in Nagarjunikonda Ins (3rd century A D.) in E I. XX at p 7; in the Wala grant of the Valabhi king Dhruvasena I in the Gupta year 216 there are five titles applied to Dhruvasena of which mahādandanāyaka is one (I. A. vol 4 p 105), the other four being mahāsāmanta, mahāpratīhāra, mahākārtākrtika and mahārāja

महादानपति—The great lord of gifts The word occurs probably as a title only in the Taxila plate of Patika of the year 78 (Corpus I I. vol. II p. 23 at p 28)

महादानिक—Officer superintending the great gifts of the king called mahādānas For mahādānas vide H of Dh. vol II pp 869-870 The word occurs in the Kahla plate of Sodhadeva (E I. vol. VII at p. 91).

महादेवी—The first wife of a king. The mahādevī or mahārājñī often heads the list of persons to whom royal grants are addressed Vide Karnadeva's plate dated in 1077 A. D. (E. I XI. at p 141)

महादौःसाधसाधनिक—Vide 'dauhsādhasādhanika' above The word occurs in Nārāyanapāla's plate (I. A. 15 p 304 at p. 306) and Devapāla's Nālandā plate (E I. XVII p 310 at p 321).

महाधर्माधिकरणिक—The chief justice. The word occurs in the Benares plate of Karnadeva in A D. 1042 (E. I. II p 309) and also in his Goharwa plate (E I. XI p 139 at p 141)

महाधर्माध्यक्ष—Vide 'dharmādhyaksa' above. The word occurs in Laksmanasena's grant (E. I. XII p. 6 at p. 9)

महापाञ्चकुलिक—Vide पञ्चकुल above The word occurs in Sangrāmagupta's Panchobh plate (JBORS vol. V p 582 at p 588)

महापीलुपति—The great superintendent of elephants Mahāpilupati Pāśupata was the dūtaka of the Abhona plates of Kataccuri Śankaragana in Kataccuri samvat 347 (i. e 595-6 A D) in E I IX p 296 at p. 298 The word also occurs in Laksmanasena's grant (E. I. XII p 6 at p 9).

महाप्रतिहार—Superior officer above all doorkeepers, great chamberlain The word occurs in the Kādambarī of Bāna para 97, in the Rājat IV. 142. It occurs in the plates of Sangamasimha (541 A D.) in E. I. X p 72 at p. 75, in the Jesar plate of Śilāditya in 357 Valabhi year (E I. XXII p. 117), in Gupta Ins No. 46 pp 213, 216, Benares plate of Karnadeva in 1042 A. D. (E. I. vol II p. 309).

महाप्रधान—Great Minister (or Prime Minister). A mahāpradhāna and dandanāyaka Brahmadeva is found in an ins of Kalacurya Sankama's time in 1178 A. D. (E. I. V p 26 at p. 28) Vide also E. I XV p 32 at p. 36, I A. vol. 9 p 33 at p. 35 (where a mahāpradhāna Mahādevaiya under mahāmaṇḍaleśvara Anantadeva is mentioned in śake 1016.)

महाप्रभु—Governor. Vide Ehūra record of 1173 A. D. (E. I. XII at p 335)

महाप्रमत्तवार (महाप्रमातार)—Vide the Godharva plate of Karnadeva dated 1047 A. D. (E. I. XI p 141).

महाप्रमातार—see प्रमातार above The word occurs in the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E I IV p. 208) and Benares plate of Karnadeva (1042 A D.) in E I. vol. II p 297 at p. 309.

महावलाधिकृत—Great commander. Vide Gupta Ins. No 23 at p. 109 in 191 Gupta year, the same person being also the dūtaka of the grant; E I. X at p 72 (valabhi samvat 117 in Kumāragupta's reign), E. I VI p. 294 at p. 299 (609–610 A. D.), E. I XI at p 83 (Maitraka grant of Gupta year 252), E. I XII p. 30 at p. 35.

महाभाण्डागारिक—Vide Bhāndāgārika above. The word occurs in Karnadeva's Benares plate (in 1042 A. D.) in E I. vol II p. 39 and in his other plate in E I. XI p. 141 (in 1047 A. D.). For the Mahābhāṇḍāgāra office, vide Rājat IV 142.

महाभोगिक—Vide भोगिक above. Vide Laksmanasena's grant in E. I. XII p 6 at p. 9.

महामण्डलनाथ—Same as mahāmaṇḍaleśvara The word occurs in the Waghli ins of Seuna dated śake 991 (E I II at p 227)

महामण्डलीक—Same as the next. Occurs in Śilāra plate of Anantadeva in śake 1016 (I. A. vol. 9 p 33 at p 35).

महामण्डलेश्वर—Lord of a great territory. This title is borne by many of the Rattas of Saundatti (vide Bombay Gazetteer vol. 21 p 354 for Belgaum), by Śilāhāra chiefs of the Konkan, by the Kadambas of Hangal and other cities and several other chiefs throughout central and south India Vide E I. XIII at p 16 (for Rattas of Saundatti, 1204 A. D), E I. XIII p 299 (for Kadamba Jayakeśi II being so called in A. D 1125), E I. V p. 234 at p 236 and p 238, E I. XII p 250 (for Bhandup plates of Śilāhāra Chittarājadeva in 1026 A. D), J B B R A S vol. 9 p 219 (Ambarnath Ins dated śake 782), I. A. vol 12 p 119 (Bassein plates of Yādava Seunacandra II, śake 991), I A. vol 11 p. 9 for Kākatīya Mahā-Rudradeva in śake 1084, E. I. VIII p. 205 for the Vāghela chiefs Lavanaprasāda and Vīradhavala being called Mahā-), E I XIV pp. 265-66 (Sinda chief Rācamalla II of Kurgod in śake 1095 and 1103), E I. XIX p 75 at p. 80 (Haihaya king Prthvīdeva I is styled Mahā- though he ruled over 20000 villages of Mahākosala.

महामन्त्रिन्—'Great Minister or councillor'. Occurs in the Benares plate of Cedi king Karnadeva (E I. vol II p 309 in 1042 A. D.) and his Goharwa plate dated 1047 A D. (E I. XI p 141)

महामहत्तक—Vide mahattaka above. The word occurs in the Bodh Gaya Ins. dated in Laksmanasena year 74 (E I. XII p. 27 at p. 30).

महामहत्तर—Vide mahattara above The word occurs in the Purle plate of Ganga year 149 (E. I. XIV p. 362, where we read ājñā mahāmahattara-Śivaśarmā

महामहन्तक—Occurs in the Kahla plate of Sodhadeva in saṁvat 1134 (E I. VII p. 85 at p. 91)

महामात्य—'Great or Prime Minister'. Vide note 148 above and Vogel p 122. Occurs in Ambarnath Ins of śake 782 (J B B R A S, vol. 9 p 219), Bhadana plates of Śilāra Aparājita in śake 919 (E I. III p 267 at p. 290), plate of Karṇadeva in 1042 A. D. (E. I. vol. II. p 309), I A. vol. 11 p 242 in Vikrama year 1320 equal to Valabhi year 945 where mahāmātyarānaka-Māladeva is said to have done all the business of the seal of Veraval Ins of Arjunavarmadeva of Anahillapātaka and where a Mahomedan donor from Hurmuz grants some income to a masjid built by him, Mussulman congregations of Somanātha being appointed trustees.

महामात्र—High Officer Vide Kautilya I. 12, V 1 &c and Kāmasūtra V. 5 17, 33 and 35 The word occurs frequently in the Aśoka inscriptions e g the two separate Rock Edicts at Dhauli are addressed to the Mahāmātras of Tosali (Corpus I. I. vol. I pp 92, 95, 97, 99 and 175). In the Sohagpur plate (of about 300 B. C) also the 'Mahāmatas' of 'Savastī are mentioned (E I. XXII p 1) In Nasik Ins No. 22 in E I VIII p 93 (about 1st Century B. C) the word 'mahāmatena' is interpreted as mahāmātyena in Bombay Gazetteer vol 16 p 592, but it is better to take it as mahāmātrena. Manu employs the word mahāmātrāh

(in IX. 259, which Medhātithi explains as 'mantrins, purohita and others', while Kullūka explains it as meaning those whose profession is to tame elephants)

महामुद्राधिकृत—Officer in charge of the Royal seal. Occurs in the grant of Laksmanasena in E. I. XII p 6 at p. 9.

महाराज—'King or feudatory'. This is not an official under a king, but in some inscriptions an emperor addresses his order as to a grant of land to 'mahārāja mahārājñī-mahārājaputra' &c Vide Banskhera plate of Harsa (E. I. IV p. 208 at p 211).

महाराजपुत्र—'Great prince'–occurs in Benares plate of Karnadeva (E I. vol. II p 309 of 1042 A D) and his Goharwa plate in 1047 A D (E I XI p 141) and Kahla plate of Sodhadeva in samvat 1134 (E I. VII p 85 at p 91)

महाराज्ञी—Vide E I. VII p. 85 at p 91.

महाराणक—Vide I. A. vol 18 p 214 (of samvat 1216)

महाव्यूहपति—'Chief Master of battle arrays' Occurs in the plate of Bhojavarmadeva in E I XII p 37 at p 40

महाश्रेष्ठिन्—Great banker Occurs in Kahla plate of Soḍhadeva (E I. VII pp 85, 91)

महाश्वशाल—One of the five high offices instituted by Lalitāditya of Kashmir. Vide Rājat. IV 142

महाश्वसाधनिक—Commander of a cavalry force Occurs in the Benares and Goharwa plates of Karnadeva (in E I vol II p 309 and E I. XI p 141), Kharha plate of Yaśahkarnadeva (E. I. XII p 205 at p 213)

महासन्धिविग्रहिक—Great Minister of peace and war. Occurs in Benares plate of Karnadeva in 1041 A. D. (E. I. II p. 309)

महासन्धिविग्रहाधिकृत—Great minister of peace and war Occurs in the Palitana plate of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252 (E I XI p. 80), in plate of Buddharāja (E I VI at p 299 in 609–10 A. D.), in the Pimpari plate of Dhruvarāja (E I X at p 89) in śake 697 In the Harsacarita (VI) Harsa is said to have dictated his proclamation of digvijaya to 'Mahā. .krta' who sat near him. In E I IX at p. 290 (plates of Śaṅkaragana) and E I. XII p 30 at p. 35, we have 'mahāsandhivigrahādhikaranādhikrta महासाधनिक—Great Commander Occurs in Kahla plate of Sodhadeva in Vikrama 1134 (E I. VII p 85 at p 91).

महामाधनभाग—One of five high officers instituted by Lalitāditya of Kashmir. Vide Rājat. IV 142-43 .

महासान्धिविग्रहिक—Same as महासन्धिविग्रहिक Occurs in Gupta Ins No 22 p. 100 at p 104 (the Khoh plate of Gupta year 163), the Ambarnath Ins dated śake 782 (JBBRAS vol 9 p 219), the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I A 15 p 304 at p 306), E. I. XI p 141, E. I. XII p. 6 at p 9 (Laksmanasena's grant).

महासामन्त—Great chieftain The Yādavas of Sindinagara (vide E I II p 317 of sake 922, I A. 17 p 120 of śake 948) and the Rattas of Saundatti were often so styled (Bombay Gazetteer vol. 21 p 354) The Valabhi king Dhruvasena is called mahārāja and mahāsāmanta in E I XI p 107 (in Gupta year 206) and E I. XV at 256 (in Gupta Year 210) and E I XIX p 302 and p 304 The word occurs in the Banskhera plate of Harsa in his 22nd year i e about 628-29 A. D (E I IV p 208, at p 211) and in the Madhuban plate of the 25th year of Harsa's reign (E I vol. I pp 63, 67) Vide also Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I A. vol 15 pp 304, 306), Rāstrakūta grant of śake 679 (JBBRAS vol 16 pp 105, 108), E I XV p 85 in śake 981 (where one Nāgadeva is both mahāsāmantādhipati and dandānāyaka of Someśvara I), E I vol. II p. 309 (Benares plate of Karnadeva)

महासामन्ताधिपति—Probably means the same thing as महासामन्त In E I. IV p 259 one Bhogadevarasa is styled mahāsāmantādhipati and dandanāyaka (Kelavadi Ins of the time of Somesvara I in 1053 A D), E I. VI pp 285, 292 (plate of Mahā-Dandivarma of Gujerat in śake 789), E I XX p 61 (one Kesavayya is dandanāyaka and mahā- of Belvola 300 in śake 934), E I. V p 234, I A. vol 48 p 1, E. I IV p. 243 at p. 250

महासेनापति—Great Commander of armies The word occurs in the Nasik Ins No. 24 We have a mahāsenāpati Bhavagopa (E I VIII at p 94) and in Nasik Ins. No. 3 of Vasithiputa Siripulumāvi (Bombay Gazetteer vol 16 p. 556), in the Nagarjunikonda Ins (of 3rd century A D.) Chāntisiri is said to have been married to a person entitled mahāo and mahātalavara (E. I. XX p. 1 and pp 6 and 16), in E. I. XII p 6, 9 (Laksmanasena's grant).

मार्गपति—Guardian of frontiers or passes Occurs in Nālandā stone Ins of Yaśovarmadeva's time about 530 A D. in E I. XX pp 37, 41.

मार्गपाल—Same as above Occurs in Nārada quoted by the Mit on Yāj II. 271. Vide dikpāla above for the reference यष्टीक—' staff bearer ', an attendant on a king Vide Rājat VI. 203. The word is derived from ' yasti ' acc. to Pān IV. 4 59 (meaning ' yastih praharanam-asya ').

युक्त—An officer, whose exact function is not known ; but in the inscriptions of Asoka it is said that yuktas are to receive orders from the parisad (council of ministers). Vide the 3rd Rock Edict at Girnar (Corpus I. I. vol I p 4). The word also occurs in Kautilya II. 5 and 9.

युक्तक—Same as above Occurs in the Cambay plates of Govinda IV in sake 852 (E. I VII pp. 26, 39) and the Karhad plates of Krsna III of sake 880 (E I. IV. pp. 278, 285).

युवराज—Crown Prince. Occurs in Kauṭ. I. 12 among the 18 tīrthas. The word occurs in the Mathurā Lion pillar capital (Corpus I. I. vol. II p. 40) and in the Candrāvatī plates of Candradeva of Kanoj (E. I. IX p. 302 at p. 304)

रज्जुक (or लज्जुक) or रज्जुक—An officer of land survey and revenue department The word occurs (as rajuka) in the 3rd Rock Edict of Aśoka at Girnar in Corpus I. I. vol I pp 4–5 and in E I. XXIV p. 52 (under Vākāṭaka Emperor Pravarasena II).

रहस्याधिकृत—Private Secretary. The word occurs in the Pallava Śivaskandavarman's grant (E. I. vol. I p. 2 at p. 7), in the Vilavatti grant of Pallava Simhavarman (E I. XXII p. 296 at p 298), in a Kadamba plate (E. I. VI p 13).

राजकुमार—A prince. Occurs in the grant of Śivaskandavarman (E I. vol. I p 2 at p 5)

राजकुल—(modern Rāval or Rāul). Vide E. I XX Appendix No 324 for the Ins of mahāmaṇḍaleśvara-rājakula-Ranasideva in Vikrama year 1223, E I. XXV at p. 156 Mayūrabhañja grant (where rājakula Heramba is said to be the lekhaka)

राजगुरु—Occurs frequently in the Inscriptions of the Rattas of Saundatti (Bombay Gazetteer, vol 21 p 354 for Belgaum) and in the plate of Yādava Seuṇacandra (I. A. vol, 12 p. 119 at p. 120).

राजन्—Either a mere title or 'a feudatory' This is often the first among the several persons addressed in several grants. The word occurs in Abhona plates of Śankaragana in 595 A. D. (E. IX p 297), in the Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva of samvat 1148 (E I. IX p 305), in Laksmanasena's grant (E I. XII at p 9) Vide Vogel p. 121

राजन्यक—a ksatriya chief. It occurs in Laksmanasena's grant (E I XII p. 6 at p 9).

राजपुत्र—lit. 'a prince', but in many inscriptions it has some technical meaning such as 'nobleman' or 'knight'. The word occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I. XVII at p. 321 where the order is 'rāja-rānaka-rājaputra-rājāmātya), in Gupta Ins. No 46 at pp 213, 216, Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I A vol 15 pp 304, 306), in Laksmanasena's grant (E. I. VII p 6 at p 9). Vide Vogel p 121 and Fleet's note 1 on p. 218 of Gupta Ins

राजश्रेष्ठिन्—King's banker or chief of bankers Occurs in Com. on Yaśastilaka I p. 91. Vide note 148 above

राजस्थानीय—Exact function uncertain. In Gupta Ins No 35 at p 157 he appears to be a high officer, but a low one in Gupta Ins. No. 38 at p. 170. In the Rājat VIII. 2618 he appears to be chief justice Bühler in I. A vol V p 207 takes the word to mean 'an officer who carries out the object of protecting the subjects'. In J R A. S 1895 p 382 rājasthānīya Bhaṭṭi is the dūtaka of the grant In the plates of Simhāditya in Gupta—Valabhi year 255 (574 A. D) the order is 'rājaputra-rājasthānīyāmātya'. Vide the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E. I. IV pp. 208, 211), Gupta Ins. No 46 pp. 213, 216, Vasantagadh Ins of Varmalāta in samvat 682 (E. I. IX p. 192), Palitana plate of Dharasena (E. I. XI p. 83), the Gujerat Rāstrakūta grant of śake 697 in J B B R A S vol. 16 pp. 105, 108, Vogel p 122 and explanation in E. I. XI p. 176

राजानक—A minister. The title occurs frequently in the Rājat. (vide VI. 117, 261). It was given for services to the king and survives in the form 'Rāzdān' as a family name among Kashmir brāhmanas. The word occurs in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. vol 15 pp. 304, 306), in the Parikud plate of Madhyama-rājadeva of Śailodbhava dynasty (E. I. XI pp. 281, 286). Vide Vogel p. 121 who remarks that the vassals of the Chamba king designated themselves in this way.

राजामात्य—King's minister. In the Nasik Ins. No. 19 (E. I. VIII p. 91) this word occurs in the Prākrit form 'rāyāmaca'. The word also occurs in Gupta Ins. No. 46 (pp. 213, 216), Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I. XVII at p. 321), Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyaṇapāla (I. A. vol. 15 pp. 304, 306)

राज्ञी—Queen. Vide Candrāvatī plate of Candradeva in saṁvat 1148 (E. I. IX at p 305), the grant of Lakṣmaṇasena in E. I. XII at p. 9 (the order being 'aśesa-rāja-rājanyaka-rājñī-rāṇaka-rājaputra-rājāmātya &c) and the plate of Vijayasena (E. I. XV at p. 283).

राणक—A nobleman. Occurs in Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E. I. XVII at p. 321), in Laksmanasena's grant (E. I. XII at p. 9), in the Ins of Kalacuri Narasiṁhadeva of Dāhala in Vikrama year 1216 (I. A. vol. 18 p. 214). Vīradhavala and Lavanaprasāda of the Vāghela line are styled mahāmaṇḍalesvara and rāṇaka in Abu Ins. No. 2 dated 1123 A. D. (E. I. VIII at p. 205). Vide J. B. O. R. S. vol. V p. 582 at p 588.

राष्ट्रकूट—Head of a district (on the analogy of grāmakūṭa). Vide J B B R A S vol. 16 at p. 117.

राष्ट्रपति—Ruler of a province. The word occurs in E. I. VII p. 39 in 852 A. D., in the Karhad plates of Kṛṣna III dated śake 880 (E. I. IV pp. 278, 285), in the Kauṭhem plate of Vikramāditya V in śake 930 (I. A. vol. 16 pp. 15, 24).

राष्ट्रपाल—Head of a province. The word occurs in Kaut V. I.

राष्ट्रिक—Ruler of a province. In the Prākrit form 'raṭṭhika' the word occurs in the grant of Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol. I p 2 at p 5).

राष्ट्रिय—Ruler of a district or province. Vide p 117 and note 155a above and Śāntiparva 85. 12.

रूपदर्शक—Examiner of coins. The word occurs in Kauṭ. II. 5, for which see note 184a. In E. I. XXII p 30 there is a statement that in the Jogimāra inscription rūpadakha (rūpadarśa or rūpadaksa ?) occurs. Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar takes it to mean 'banker'.

लिपिकर—Writer of an edict or order. The word occurs in the Brahmagiri Rock Ins. in Corpus I. I. vol. I at p. 176. Pāṇini IV. 2. 21 teaches the formation of 'lipikara'.

लेखक—Scribe or clerk in a public office The word occurs in Nasik Ins No. 16 and No 26 (Bombay Gazetteer vol 16 pp 582 and 605), in the Visnudharmottara II. 24 26-28, Śukra II 120.

लेखहारक—Letter-carrier. Occurs in Rājat VI. 319.

लेखाधिकारिन्—A Secretary. Occurs in Rājat III. 206

विद्याधिकारिन्—Director of education. In the Kondavīdu Ins one Śrīnātha is said to have been the Vidyādhikārin of Vema in E I. XI p. 313 at p. 314

विनियुक्त—An officer, whose functions are not clear The word occurs in the Bhavnagar plate of Dhruvasena I in 529 A D (E I. XV p. 256), in the Valabhi grant of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252 (I. A vol 15 p 187), in the Gupta ins No 38 p. 164 at p. 169 (the Maliya plate of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252), the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 pp. 304, 306).

विनियुक्तक—Same as above. The word occurs in the grant of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252 (E I XI pp 80, 83), in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla in E I. XVII at p. 321 (where the word is preceded by 'āyuktaka')

विषयपति—Ruler of a district The word occurs in the Kavi grant of Jayabhata (I. A. 5 p. 114, in the beginning of the 5th century A D.), in the Abhona plates of Śankaragana in E. I. IX p 297 (in 595 A D), in the Banskhera plate of Harsa (E I. IV pp 208, 211), in the Karhad plate of Krsna III dated śake 880 (E. I. IV pp. 278, 285), in the Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I. A. 15 pp 304, 306), in E I. VII p 39 (in 852 A. D.).

विषयेश—Same as above The word occurs in the grant of Śivaskandavarman (E I vol. I at p. 5).

वीथिमहत्तर—Probably elder of a vithi (a district). Occurs in a grant of Gupta year 120 (Indian Historical Quarterly vol. 19 p. 12 at pp. 16, 21)

वीरयात्रिक—'Person belonging to a military expedition'. The word occurs in Chamba Ins Nos. 15, 25, 26. Vide Vogel p. 129.

वेटकिल—Meaning uncertain, but it may mean 'bearer of a Vitikā' (betel) It occurs in Chamba Ins. No. 15 at p 166. Vide Vogel p. 128.

वेलावित्त—Meaning uncertain. The word occurs frequently in the Rājat. (V. 226, VI 73, 106, 127).

वैक्षेपिक—Function unknown. It occurs in E. I XXVI at p. 206 (six Saindhava grants from Ghumli) of about 9th century A D

व्यवहारिन्—Meaning uncertain It occurs in the plate of Jayanāga from Karna-suvarna (E I. XVIII pp 60, 63).

व्रजभूमिक—Superintendent of cowpens. It occurs in the 12th Rock Edict of Aśoka at Girnar in the form 'vacabhūmika' (Corpus I. I. vol. I p 20).

शय्यापाल or शय्याग्राहक—Guardian of the bed-chamber. Vide 'Inscriptions from Baroda' edited by Mr. A. S Gadre p. 72 (a village was donated to a Nāgara-brāhmana Prabhākara who was 'śayyāgrāhaka of Karpūradevī') शरभङ्ग—It occurs in the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E I XVII at 321) and in Chamba Ins. No. 15 at p 166 (where it is read as 'sarobhanga' Vide Vogel p 123 and 'Indian Culture' vol. VII p. 305 at p 309. Has the word anything to do with the words 'śarayantra' and 'śarayantrī'? The latter was a title bestowed in Mithilā upon a very learned man who faced the ordeal of answering satisfactorily all questions on any sāstra put to him by learned ācāryas and also the questions put by common people. Vide a paper 'Declaration of śarayantrī', contributed to the All India Oriental Conference at Benares (in 1943) by Pandit Ramānātha Jha of Darbhanga.

शुल्कग्राह—An official who recovered tolls or customs duties. Occurs in Śukra II 120.

शौल्किक—Superintendent of tolls or customs duties The word occurs in Yāj. II. 173 and in Gupta Ins. No. 12 pp 50, 52, in the grant of Dharasena II of Gupta year 252 (I. A. 15 p. 187), in Bhagalpur plate of Nārāyanapāla (I A. 15 pp 304, 306). Vide note on 'gaulmika' above श्रीकरण—A scribe. The minister Hemādri is styled 'sarvaśrīkarana-prabhu'. Vide H. of Dh. vol I p 356 n. 849.

श्रीकरणाधिप or श्रीकरणाग्रणी—Head of all scribes or head of all departments In E I. XIII at p 17 one Bīcana or Bīcirāja is said to have been the Śrīka- of mahāmandaleśvara Kārtavīrya IV of Hangal Hemādri is styled 'samastakaranādhiśvara' or 'samastakaranādhipati'. Vide H. of Dh. vol. I pp. 356-357 notes 850-851.

षष्ठाधिकृत—Officer who collected the royal share viz. 6th of the crops. If occurs in the Khalimpur plate of Dharmapāla in E I. IV p. 243 at p. 250.

सचिव—Minister. Vide p. 105 and note 150 above.

सञ्चरन्तक—A spy. It occurs in the grant of Śivaskandavarman (E. I. vol. I p. 2 at p. 5). In I. 12 Kautilya speaks of sañcāras (wandering spies like tīkṣna, rasada &c.).

संग्रहीतृ—Vide p. 111 above.

सन्धिविग्रहिक—Minister for peace and war. This form of the word occurs in Viṣnudharmottara II. 24. 17 and in Śantiparva 85 30.

संनिधातृ—The Superintendent of the construction of the royal treasury, store houses &c. The word occurs in Kaut II. 5, 1. 12 and in the plate of Mahābhavagupta (E. I. VIII pp 138, 141 and E I. XI pp. 93, 94). Vide p. 143 above.

समाहर्तृ—Collector-General The word occurs in Kaut. I. 12 and II. 6, Śabara on Jai. XII. 1. 28 and in the plate of Mahābhavagupta (E I. VIII at p. 141 and XI at p. 94). Vide p. 143 and note 184 above.

सर्वदण्डनायक—Commander-in-chief of all forces. The word occurs in I. A. vol 8 p. 19, vol. 9 at p. 167, vol. 10 p. 129.

सर्वाधिकारिन्—Prime Minister. Occurs in Rajat. VII. 568.

सर्वाधिकृत—Probably the same as above The word occurs in the Purle plate of Indravarman in the Gaṅga year 149 i e. 605 A. D. (E. I. XIV pp. 360, 362).

सांवत्सर—Astrologer. Occurs in Viṣnu Dh. S III. 75, Bṛhatsamhitā 2. 9. Vide p 126 above

सांवत्सरिक—Astrologer. Occurs in Paiṭhīnasi Vide note 193 above.

साध्यपाल—Bailiff who summoned parties and witnesses. Vide p. 278 above.

सान्धिविग्रहिक—Minister for peace and war. Occurs in Viṣnudharmottara II. 24. 17 and in the Mit on Yāj. I. 320 (which quotes a verse to the effect that the 'sandhivigrahakārin' is to issue a royal grant) and in Gupta Ins. No. 1 at p. 15 (the prasasti of Samudragupta).

सामन्त—feudatory chief. Under the Raṭṭas of Saundatti certain high officials are often so called (Bom. Gazetteer vol. 21 p. 354 for Belgaum). The word occurs in Abhona plates of Śaṅkaragāna in 595 A. D. (E. I. IX p 297), in Madhuban plate of Harsa (E. I. VII at p. 158), E. I. VI p. 298 (plate of Buddharāja in 609–10 A. D.).

साहसाधिपति—Occurs in Śukra I. 120.

सीमकर्मकर—Officer who looked to the work of boundaries. Occurs in Gupta Ins No. 46 pp 213, 216.

सुमन्त्र—Vide p. 114 and note 150.

सूत—One of the ratnins. Vide p. 111 above.

सूपकारपति—Head cook. The word occurs in Taleśvara plates (E. I. XIII pp. 109, 115)

सेनभोगिक—Meaning uncertain. It occurs in the plate of Dantivarman of Gujerat in śake 789 (E. I VI p 285).

सेनापति—Commander-in-chief. Vide p. 127 above and Br. quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj I. 307. Pusyamitra, the founder of of the Śuṅga dynasty and Bhatārka, the founder of the Valabhi dynasty, and his son Dharasena were styled senāpati; vide I. A. 15 p 187 (plate of Dharasena II in Gupta year 252), E. I. vol. I p 2 at p 5 (grant of Pallava Śivaskandavarman), JBBRAS vol. 16 pp. 105, 108, E. I. IX at p. 305.

सौवर्णिक—State goldsmith. Vide pp 144–145 above.

स्कन्दक—A petty officer, probably head of the village administration. Vide Rājat. V. 175.

स्त्यध्यक्षमहामात्र—Officer superintendent of the harem The word occurs in the 12th rock Edict of Aśoka in a prākrit form (Corpus I. I. vol. I at p 20).

स्थपति—Architect. Vide Visnudharmottara II. 24. 39.

स्थपतिसम्राट्—Chief architect. Occurs in Karitalai plates ot Mahārāja Jayanātha (Gupta Ins. No. 26 of the Gupta year 174 at p. 119).

स्थानपाल—Officer in charge of a police post. Vide p. 149 above

स्थानिक—An officer in charge of a ward of a city or a district. Vide pp. 143 and 149 above.

हस्त्यश्वोष्ट्रबलव्यापृतक—Officers in charge of the elephant arm, cavalry, camel corps of an army. This occurs in Chamba Ins No. 15 at p 166. In the Nālandā plate of Devapāla (E. I. XVII at p 321) we have 'hastyaśvostra-nau-bala-vyāpṛtaka'.

NOTE 342 a—अत एवाह पितामहः ।

छलानि चापराधाश्च पदानि नृपतेस्तथा । स्वयमेतानि गृह्णीयान्नृपस्त्वावेदकैर्विना ॥
पाथिभङ्गी कराक्षेपी प्राकारोपरिलङ्घकः । निपानस्य विनाशी च तथा चायतनस्य च ॥ परि-
खापूरकश्चैव राजच्छिद्रप्रकाशकः ॥ अन्तःपुरं वासगृहं भाण्डागारं महानसम् । प्रविशत्यनियुक्तो
यो भोजनं च निरीक्षते ॥ विण्मूत्रश्लेष्मवाताना क्षेप्तुकामो नृपाव्रतः । पर्यङ्कासनबन्धी चाप्य-
ग्रस्थाननिरोधकः ॥ राज्ञोऽतिरिक्तवेषश्च विधृतः प्र विशेत्तु य । यश्चापद्वारेण विशेद वेलाया
तथैव च ॥ शय्यासने पादुकयोः शयनासनरोहणम् (रोहणे ?) । राजन्यासन्नशयने यस्तिष्ठति
समीपतः ॥ राज्ञो विद्विष्टसेवी चाप्यदत्तविहितासन । वस्त्राभरणयोश्चैव सुवर्णपरिधायकः ॥
स्वयंग्राहेण ताम्बूलं गृहीत्वा भक्षयेत्तु यः । अनियुक्तप्रभाषी च नृपाकोशक एव च ॥ एक-
वासास्तथाभ्यक्तो मुक्तकेशोऽवगुण्ठितः । विचित्रिताङ्गः स्रग्वी च परिधानविधूनकः ॥ शिरः- प्रच्छादनश्चैव छिद्रान्वेषणतत्परः । आसङ्गी मुक्तकेशश्च यश्च कर्णाक्षिकर्शकः (दर्शकः ?) । दन्तो- ल्लेखनकश्चैव कर्णनासाविशोधकः । छलान्येतानि पञ्चाशद्भवन्ति नृपसन्निधौ ॥ quoted in स्मृतिच II pp 27–23, शुक्रनीति० IV. 5. 73–82 (except the name and the first verse) with variant readings.

NOTE 492—

नार्थसम्बन्धिनो नाप्ता न सहाया न वैरिणः । न दृष्टदोषाः प्रष्टव्याः साक्षिणः प्रतिदूषिताः ॥
दासनैकृतिकाश्राद्धवृद्धस्त्रीबालचाकिकाः । मत्तोन्मत्तप्रमत्तार्तकितवश्रमयाजकाः ॥
महापथिकसामुद्रवणिक्प्रव्रजितातुराः । व्यङ्गैकश्रोत्रियाचारहीनक्लीबकुशीलवाः ॥
नास्तिकव्रात्यदाराग्नित्यागिनोऽन्याज्ययाजकाः । एकस्थालीसहायारिचरज्ञातिसनाभयः ॥
प्रागृष्टदोषशैलूषविषजीव्यहिंस्रदण्डिकाः । गरदाग्निदकीनाशशूद्रापुत्रौपपातिकाः ॥
क्लान्तसाहसिकश्रान्तनिर्धनान्त्यावसायिनः । भिन्नवृत्तासमावृत्तजडतैलिकमूलिकाः ॥
भूताविष्टनृपद्विष्टवर्षनक्षत्रसूचकाः । अघशंस्यात्मविक्रेतृहीनाङ्गभगवृत्तयः ॥
कुनखी श्याम(व ?) दन्तश्च मित्रध्रुक् शठशौण्डिकाः । ऐन्द्रजालिकलुब्धोग्रश्रेणीगणविरोधिनः ॥
वधकश्चर्मकृत्पट्टयुः पतितः कूटकारकः । कुहकः प्रत्यवसितस्तस्करो राजपूरुषः ॥
मनुष्यपशुमासास्थिमधुक्षीराम्बुसर्पिषाम् । विक्रेता ब्राह्मणश्चैव द्विजो वार्धुषिकश्च यः ॥
च्युतः स्वधर्माल्लुलिकः स्तावको हीनसेवकः । पित्रा विवदमानश्च भेदकृच्चेत्यसाक्षिणः ॥
नारद (ऋणादान 177–187)

NOTE 509—

नग्नो मुण्डः कपालेन भिक्षार्थी क्षुत्पिपासितः । अन्ध शत्रुगृहं गच्छेद्यः साक्ष्यमनृतं वदेत् ॥ १
नग्नो मुण्डः कपालेन परद्वारे बुभुक्षितः । अमित्रान्भूयश(स ?) पश्येद्यः साक्ष्यमनृतं वदेत् ॥ २
या रात्रिमधिवित्रा स्त्री यां चैवाक्षपराजितः । या च भारामितप्राङ्गे दुर्विवक्ता स तां वसेत् ॥ ३
साक्षी साक्ष्ये समुद्दिशन्गोकर्णशिथिलं वचः । सहस्रं वारुणान्पाशान्भुङ्क्ते स बन्धनाद्ध्रुवम् ॥ ४
तस्य वर्षशते पूर्णे पाश एव प्रमुच्यते । तदा पाशाद्विनिर्मुक्तः स्त्री संभवति मानवः ॥ ५
एवं संबन्धनात्तस्मान्मुच्यते नियताच्च सः । पशुगोश्वपुरुषाणां हिरण्यं भूर्यथाक्रमम् ॥ ६
यावतो बान्धवांस्तस्मिन् हन्ति साक्ष्येनृतं वदन् । तावतः संप्रवक्ष्यामि शृणु सौम्यानुपूर्वशः ॥ ७
पञ्च पश्वनृते हन्ति दश हन्ति गवानृते । शतमश्वानृते हन्ति सहस्रं पुरुषानृते ॥ ८
हन्ति जातानजाताश्च हिरण्यार्थेऽनृतं वदन् । सर्वं भूम्यनृते हन्ति मास्म भूम्यनृतं वदीः ॥ ९

एकमेवाद्वितीयं तत्प्राहुः पावनमात्मनः । सत्यं स्वर्गस्य सोपानं पारावारस्य नौरिव ॥ १०
अश्वमेधसहस्रं च सत्यं च तुलया धृतम् । अश्वमेधसहस्रात्तु सत्यमेव विशिष्यते ॥ ११
वरं कूपशताद्वापी वरं वापीशतात्क्रतुः । वरं क्रतुशतात्पुत्रः सत्यं पुत्रशताद्वरम् ॥ १२
भूर्धारयति सत्येन सत्येनोदेति भास्करः । सत्येन वायुः स्रवते सत्येनापः स्रवन्ति च ॥ १३
सत्यमेव परं दानं सत्यमेव परं तपः । सत्यमेव परो धर्मः लोकानामिति नः श्रुतम् ॥ १४
सत्यं देवाः समासेन मनुष्यास्त्वनृतं स्मृतम् । इहैव तस्य देवत्वं यस्य सत्ये स्थिता मतिः ॥ १५
सत्यं ब्रह्मानृतं त्यक्त्वा सत्येन स्वर्गमेष्यसि । उक्त्वानृतं महाघोरं नरकं प्रतिपत्स्यसे ॥ १६
नरकेषु च ते शश्वज्जिह्वामुत्कृत्य दारुणाः । असिभिः शातयिष्यन्ति बलिनो यमकिङ्कराः ॥ १७
शूलैर्भेत्स्यन्ति चाक्रम्य क्रोशन्तमपरायणम् । अवस्थितं समुत्कृत्य क्षेप्स्यन्ति त्वां हुताशने ॥ १८
अनुभूय च तास्तीव्राश्चिरं नरकवेदनाः । इह यास्यसि पापासु गृध्रकाकादियोनिषु ॥ १९
ज्ञात्वैतानृते दोषाञ्ज्ञात्वा सत्ये च सद्गुणान् । सत्यं वदोद्धरात्मानं नात्मानं पातय स्वयम् ॥ २०
न बान्धवा न सुहृदो न धनानि महान्त्यपि । अलं धारयितुं शक्तास्तमस्युग्रे निमज्जतः ॥ २१
पितरस्त्ववलम्बन्ते त्वयि साक्षित्वमागते । तारयिष्यति किन्त्वस्मान् (किन्वस्मान् ?) किं चायं पातयिष्यति ॥ २२
सत्यमात्मा मनुष्यस्य सत्ये सर्वं प्रतिष्ठितम् । सत्यमुक्त्वात्मनात्मानं श्रेयसा संनियोजय ॥ २३
यस्यां रात्रावजनिष्ठा यस्यां रात्रौ मरिष्यसि । वृथा तदन्तरं तुभ्यं साक्ष्यं चेदन्यथा कृथाः ॥ २४
ब्रह्मघ्नस्य तु ये लोका ये च स्त्रीबालघातिनाम् । ये च लोकाः कृतघ्नस्य ते ते स्युर्वृषतो वृथा ॥ २५
नास्ति सत्यात्परो धर्मो नानृतात्पातकं परम् । साक्षिधर्मं विशेषेण सत्यमेव वदेत्ततः ॥ २६
पुराणोक्तौ द्वौ श्लोकौ भवतः । यः परार्थे प्रहिणुयात्त्वां वाचं पुरुषाधमः । आत्मार्थे किं न कुर्यात्स पापो नरकनिर्भयः ॥ २७
वाच्यर्था नियताः सर्वे वाङ्मूला वाग्विनिश्चिताः । यो हि तां स्तेनयेद्वाचं स सर्वस्तेयकृन्नरः ॥ २८
नारद (ऋणादान 201–228)

Seven verses out of these occur elsewhere also. Verse 1 is the same as Manu 8. 93 and Vas. 16. 33; verse 3 is the same as Udyoga 35. 31; verses 7–9 are the same as Manu 8. 97–99, while verses 8–9 are the same as Udyogaparva 35. 33–34 and verse 8 occurs also in Baud. Dh S. I. 10. 35 and Vas. 16, 34; verse 11 is the same as Ādiparva 74. 103, Śāntiparva 162. 26 and Anuśāsana 75. 29; verse 25 is almost the same as Manu 8. 89.

NOTE 1168 on घटस्फोट—

क्वचिज्जीवतोऽप्यन्यकर्म विहितं यथा प्रायश्चित्तानिच्छोः पतितस्य घटस्फोटे । तथाहि । महापातकेनोपपातकेन वा पतितो यदि प्रायश्चित्तं न करोति तदा तं गुरूणां बान्धवानां राज्ञश्च समक्षमाहूय तत्पापं प्रकटीकृत्य तं पुनः पुनरुपादिशेत् प्रायश्चित्तं कुरुष्वाचारं लभस्वेति । स यद्येवमपि नाङ्गीकरोति तदा रिक्तादिनिन्द्यतिथौ सायाह्ने सपिण्डा बान्धवाश्च सम्भूय दासीहस्तेनानीतममेध्यकुत्सितजलादिपूर्णघटं सर्वतो दास्यायन्वारम्भं कुर्वन्तो दास्या दासस्य वा वामपादेन न्युब्जं छिन्नाग्रदर्भेषु कारयित्वा दासीसहिता वदेयुरमुमनुदकं करोमीति नामग्रहणपूर्वकं प्राचीनावीतिनो मुक्तशिखाश्च सन्तः । ततोऽधिकारी कर्ता दाहवर्जं जीवन्तमेवोद्दिश्य पिण्डोदकदानादिप्रेतकार्याण्येकादशाहान्तानि नाम्नैव कुर्यात् । मिताक्षरायां प्रेतकार्योत्तरं घट-

निनयनमुक्तम् । एकाहमाशौचं सर्वेषाम् । यस्य घटस्फोटः कृतस्तेन सह सम्भाषणस्पर्शादिसंसर्गो न केनापि कार्यः । करणे पतिततुल्यता । धर्मसिन्धु, परिच्छेद III, उत्तरार्ध p 453. This is a summary of a longer passage on the same subject from the निर्णयसिन्धु, परिच्छेद III उत्तरार्ध p. 567.

As to taking back into the social fold a man who repents after ghatasphota is performed the following procedure is prescribed in the Dharmasindhu:

घृतघटस्फोटस्य पुंसोऽनुतापे तत्पापप्रायश्चित्तान्ते संग्रहविधिरुच्यते । तत्रादौ शुद्धिपरीक्षा । कृतप्रायश्चित्तो ज्ञातिसमक्षं गोभ्यस्तृणभारं दद्यात् । गोभिस्तृणे भक्षिते शुद्धिः । भक्षणाभावे पुनः प्रायश्चित्तं चरेत् । एवं निश्चितसशुद्धौ समानेयुर्नवं घटम् । हैमं वा मृन्मयं वापि पवित्रजलपूरितम् ॥ तत सपिण्डास्त घटं संस्पृश्याभिमन्त्र्य तज्जलैः पावमानीभिरापोहिष्टेत्यादिभिस्तरत्समन्दीभिश्च पापिनमभिषिच्य तेन सह सर्वे स्नात्वा तं जलघटमस्मै दद्युः । स च शान्ता द्यौः शान्ता पृथिवी शान्तं विश्वमन्तरिक्षं यो रोचनस्तमिह गृह्णामीति यजुर्भिस्तं घटं गृह्णीयात् । ततस्तदुदकं तेनैव साकं सर्वे पिबेयु । ततः स कूष्माण्डमन्त्रैराज्यहोमं कृत्वा सुवर्णं गां च दद्यात् । ततस्तस्य जातकर्मादिव्रतबन्धान्ता विवाहान्ता वा संस्काराः कार्याः । एवं कृते शुद्धेन तेन संस्पर्शसंभोजनादिव्यवहारं कुर्यात् । एवमुपपातके महापातके च कृतघटस्फोटस्य शुद्धिर्ज्ञेया । इति संक्षेपतः कृतघटस्फोटशुद्धि । धर्मसिन्धु III उत्तरार्ध p. 454 The निर्णयसिन्धु (III उत्तरार्ध p 568) has a similar but more elaborate note, quotes and relies on Gaut. 20. 10–17, Manu XI. 186, Yaj. III. 295, Vas. 15. 17–21, the Mit, Aparārka and Hemādri.

NOTE 1302—The कौ. गृ. शेषसूत्र (II. 6. 1–10) is as follows :—

अथात पुत्रप्रतिग्रहकल्पं व्याख्यास्यामः । शोणितशुक्रसम्भवौ मातृपितृनिमित्तकृतस्य प्रदानपरित्यागविक्रयेषु मातापितरौ कर्तारौ भवतो न त्वेक पुत्रं दद्यात्प्रतिगृह्णीयाद्वा स हि सन्तानाय पूर्वेषाम् । न तु स्त्री पुत्रं दद्यात्प्रतिगृह्णीयाद्वान्यत्रानुज्ञानाद्भर्तुः । पुत्रं प्रतिग्रहीष्यन्नुपकल्पयते—द्वे वाससी द्वे कुण्डले अङ्गुलीयकं चाचार्यं च वेदपारगं कुशमयं बर्हिः पर्णमयमिध्ममिति । अथ बन्धूनां मध्ये राजनि चावेद्य परिषदि वाग्गारमध्ये वा ब्राह्मणाननेन परिविष्य पुण्याहं स्वस्त्यृद्धमिति वाचयित्वाथ देवयजनोल्लेखनप्रभृत्याप्रणीताभ्यः कृत्वा दानु समीपं गत्वा पुत्रं मे देहीति भिक्षेत ददामीतीतर आह । तं पुत्र प्रतिगृह्णाति धर्माय त्वा गृह्णामि सन्तत्यै त्वा गृह्णामीति । अथैनं वस्त्रकुण्डलाभ्यामङ्गुलीयकेन चालङ्कृत्य परिधानप्रभृत्याग्निमुपसादयित्वा पक्वाज्जुहोति । 'यस्त्वा हृदा कीरिणा मन्यमानः' इति पुरोनुवाक्यामनूच्य 'यस्मै त्वं सुकृते जातवेदः' इति याज्यया जुहोति । अथ आज्याहुतीरुपजुहोति—व्याहृतिभिर्हुत्वा स्विष्टकृत्प्रभृति सिद्धमाधेनुवरप्रदानात् । अथ दक्षिणां ददात्येते एव वाससी एते एव कुण्डले एतच्चाङ्गुलीयकम् । यद्येवंकृते औरस पुत्र उत्पद्यते तुरीयभागेय भवतीति ह स्माह भगवान्बौधायनः ।. This is quoted in the दत्त मी. pp. 152–153, सं. कौ. p 177, धर्मसिन्धु III पूर्वार्ध p. 161 (partly) and Bühler published it with a translation in the Journal of the Bengal Asiatic Society vol. 35 pp 161–164

NOTE 1302—

शौनकोऽहं प्रवक्ष्यामि पुत्रसङ्ग्रहमुत्तमम् । अपुत्रो मृतपुत्रो वा पुत्रार्थं समुपोष्य च ॥ १
वाससी कुण्डले दत्त्वा उष्णीषं चाङ्गुलीयकम् । आचार्यं धर्मसंयुक्तं वैष्णवं वेदपारगम् ॥ २
मधुपर्केण संपूज्य राजानं च द्विजाञ्शुचीन् । बर्हिः कुशमयं चैव पालाशं चेध्ममेव च ३
एतानाहृत्य बन्धूंश्च ज्ञातीनाहूय यत्नत । बन्धूनन्नेन संभोज्य ब्राह्मणांश्च विशेषतः ॥ ४
अन्वाधानादि यत्तन्त्रं कृत्वाज्योत्पवनादिकम् । दातु. समक्षं गत्वा तु पुत्रं देहीति याचयेत् ॥ ५
दाने समर्थो दातास्मै ये यज्ञेनेति पञ्चभि. । देवस्य त्वेति मन्त्रेण हस्ताभ्यां प्रतिगृह्य च ॥ ६
अङ्गादङ्गेत्यृचं जप्त्वा चाघ्राय शिशुमूर्धनि । वस्त्रादिभिरलङ्कृत्य पुत्रच्छायावहं सुतम् ॥ ७
नृत्यगीतैश्च वाद्यैश्च स्वस्तिशब्दैश्च संयुतम् । गृहमध्ये तमादाय चरुं हुत्वा विधानतः ॥ ८
यस्त्वा हृदेत्यृचा चैव तुभ्यमग्र ऋचैकया । सोमो दददित्येताभिः प्रत्यृचं पञ्चभिस्तथा ॥ ९
स्विष्टकृदादिहोमं च कृत्वा शेषं समापयेत् । ब्राह्मणानां सपिण्डेषु कर्तव्यः पुत्रसंग्रहः ॥ १०
तदभावेऽसपिण्डो वा अन्यत्र तु न कारयेत् । क्षत्रियाणां स्वजातौ वा गुरुगोत्रसमोपि वा ॥११
वैश्यानां वैश्यजातेषु शूद्राणा शूद्रजातिषु । सर्वेषामेव वर्णानां जातिष्वेव न चान्यतः ॥ १२
दौहित्रो भागिनेयश्च शूद्रस्यापि च दीयते । ब्राह्मणादित्रये नास्ति भागिनेयः सुतः क्वचित् ॥१३
नैकपुत्रेण कर्तव्यं पुत्रदानं कदाचन । बहुपुत्रेण कर्तव्यं पुत्रदानं प्रयत्नतः ॥ १४
दक्षिणां गुरवे दद्याद्यथाशक्ति द्विजोत्तमः । नृपो राष्ट्रार्धमेवापि वैश्यो वित्तशतत्रयम् ॥ १५

शूद्रः सर्वस्वमेवापि अशक्तश्चेद्यथाबलम् । १६

The above text of Śaunaka is based on the व्यव. मयूख, नि. सि. (which does not quote all verses), दत्त. मी., दत्त. च., सं. कौ. and Dr. Bühler's text prepared from several mss. and published in the Journal of the Bengal Asiatic Society, vol 35 at pp. 158–159 The शौनकीय text printed at Trivandrum, 1935, has 14½ verses on पुत्रग्रहणविधि (I. 8) The principal various readings are noted below. Verse 1—स. कौ. reads 'वन्ध्या वा मृतपुत्रा वा'; शौ. reads वन्ध्यो वा. The half verse 3a मधुपर्केण &c. is omitted by Bühler, व्यव. मयूख, नि. सि., सं. कौ. In 5a दत्त. मी and दत्त. च. read अग्न्याधानादिकं तत्र, and शौ., सं. कौ. and Bühler अग्न्याधानादि; and शौ. reads °त्पवनान्तकम्. In 6a शौ. reads समक्षस्थो ददेत्तस्मै. The नि सि. omits 7b and 8a and सं. कौ. reads छत्र-छायागतं सुतम् in 7b and शौ. छत्रछायावहम्. In 8b सं. कौ. and शौ. read गृहमेत्येध्ममाधाय. In 9a सं कौ. and शौ. read यस्त्वा हृदेति द्वाभ्यां च and in 10a स्विष्टकृदादिशेषं च कृत्वा होमं. In 11b दत्त. मी., Bühler and दत्त. च. read गुरुगोत्रसमेपि. In 13a Bühler and सं. कौ. read दौहित्रं भागिनेयं वा शूद्राणा चापि दापयेत्; दत्त. मी. reads शूद्रैस्तु क्रियते सुतः and also recognizes the reading शूद्राणां विहितः सुतः. The स्मृतिसु (वर्णाश्रम) p. 102 and शौ. read दौहित्रं भागिनेयं वा शूद्राणां त्वापदो यदि and omits ब्राह्मणादि... क्वचित्. 13b (ब्राह्म ... क्वचित्) is omitted by the व्यव. मयूख., सं. कौ., and Bühler. In 15b सं. कौ and शौ. read रत्नशतत्रयम् The order of the verses also slightly varies in some of the works.

NOTE 1751—वनपर्व 188. 30–64

सहस्रान्ते नराः सर्वे प्रायशोनृतवादिनः । यज्ञप्रतिनिधिः पार्थ दानप्रतिनिधिस्तथा ॥ ३०
व्रतप्रतिनिधिश्चैव तस्मिन् काले प्रवर्तते । ब्राह्मणाः शूद्रकर्माणस्तथा शूद्रा धनार्जकाः ॥ ३१
क्षत्रधर्मेण वाप्यत्र वर्तयन्ति गते युगे । निवृत्तयज्ञस्वाध्याया दण्डाजिनविवर्जिताः ॥ ३२
ब्राह्मणाः सर्वभक्षाश्च भविष्यन्ति कलौ युगे । अजपा ब्राह्मणास्तात शूद्रा जपपरायणाः ॥३३
विपरीते तदा लोके पूर्वरूपं क्षयस्य यत् । बहवो म्लेच्छराजानः पृथिव्यां मनुजाधिप ॥ ३४
मृषानुशासिनः पापा मृषावादपरायणाः । आन्ध्राः शका. पुलिन्दाश्च यवनाश्च नराधिपाः ॥३५
काम्बोजा वाल्हिकाः शूरास्तथाभीरा नरोत्तम । न तदा ब्राह्मणः कश्चित्स्वधर्ममुपजीवति ॥३६
क्षत्रियाश्चापि वैश्याश्च विकर्मस्था नराधिप । अल्पायुष. स्वल्पबलाः स्वल्पवीर्यपराक्रमाः ॥३७
अल्पसारात्पदेहाश्च तथा सत्यात्पभाषिणः । बहुशून्या जनपदा मृगव्यालावृता दिश. ॥ ३८
युगान्ते समनुप्राप्ते वृथा च ब्रह्मवादिन । भोवादिनस्तथा शूद्रा ब्राह्मणाश्चार्यवादिनः ॥ ३९
युगान्ते मनुजव्याघ्र भवन्ति बहुजन्तवः । न तथा घ्राणयुक्ताश्च सर्वगन्धा विशांपते ॥ ४०
रसाश्च मनुजव्याघ्र न तथा स्वादुयोगिनः । बहुप्रजा ह्रस्वदेहाः शीलाचारविवर्जिताः ॥
मुखेभगाः स्त्रियो राजन् भविष्यन्ति युगक्षये ॥ ४१
अष्टशूला जनपदाः शिवशूलाश्चतुष्पथाः । केशशूलाः स्त्रियो राजन् भविष्यन्ति युगक्षये ॥४२
अल्पक्षीरास्तथा गावो भविष्यन्ति जनाधिप । अल्पपुष्पफलाश्चापि पादपा बहुवायसाः ॥ ४३
ब्रह्मवध्यानुलिप्तानां तथा मिथ्याभिशंसिनाम् । नृपाणां पृथिवीपाल प्रतिगृह्णन्ति वै द्विजाः ॥ ४४
लोभमोहपरीताश्च मिथ्याधर्मध्वजावृताः । भिक्षार्थं पृथिवीपाल चरन्तूर्यन्ते द्विजैर्दिशः ॥ ४५
करभारभयाद्भीता गृहस्थाः परिमोषकाः । मुनिच्छद्माकृतिच्छन्ना वाणिज्यमुपजीविनः ॥ ४६
मिथ्या च नखरोमाणि धारयन्ति तदा द्विजाः । अर्थलोभान्नरव्याघ्र तथा च ब्रह्मचारिणः ॥ ४७
आश्रमेषु वृथाचारा पानपा गुरुतल्पगाः । इहलौकिकमीहन्ते मांसशोणितवर्धनम् ॥ ४८
बहुपाषण्डसङ्कीर्णाः परान्नगुणवादिनः । आश्रमा मनुजव्याघ्र भविष्यन्ति युगक्षये ॥ ४९
यथर्तुवर्षी भगवान्न तथा पाकशासनः । न चापि सर्ववीजानि सम्यग्रोहन्ति भारत ॥ ५०
हिंसाभिरामश्च जनस्तथा संपद्यतेऽशुचिः । अधर्मफलमत्यर्थं तदा भवति चानघ ॥ ५१
तदा च पृथिवीपाल यो भवेद्धर्मसंयुतः । अल्पायुः स हि मन्तव्यो न हि धर्मोस्ति कश्चन ॥५२
भूयिष्ठं कूटमानैश्च पण्यं विक्रीडते (विक्रीणते ?) जनः (नाः ?) । वणिजश्च नरव्याघ्र
बहुमाया भवन्त्युत ॥ ५३
धर्मिष्ठाः परिहीयन्ते पापीयान्वर्धते जनः । धर्मस्य बलहानिः स्यादधर्मश्च बली तथा ॥ ५४
अल्पायुषो दरिद्राश्च धार्मिष्ठा मानवास्तथा । दीर्घायुषः समृद्धाश्च विधर्माणो युगक्षये ॥ ५५
नगराणां विहारेषु विधर्माणो युगक्षये । अधर्मिष्ठैस्तथायैश्च प्रजा व्यवहरन्त्युत ॥ ५६
सञ्चयेन तथाल्पेन भवन्त्याढ्यमदान्विताः । धनं विश्वासतो न्यस्तं मिथो भूयिष्ठशो नराः ॥५७
हर्तुं व्यवसिता राजन् पापाचारसमन्विताः । नैतदस्तीति मनुजा वर्तन्ते निरपत्रपाः ॥ ५८
पुरुषादानि सत्त्वानि पक्षिणोथ मृगास्तथा । नगराणां विहारेषु चैत्येष्वपि च शेरते ॥ ५९
सप्तवर्षाष्टवर्षाश्च स्त्रियो गर्भधरा नृप । दशद्वादशवर्षाणां पुंसा पुत्रः प्रजायते ॥ ६०
भवन्ति षोडशे वर्षे नराः पलितिनस्तथा । आयुरक्षयो मनुष्याणां क्षिप्रमेव प्रपद्यते ॥ ६१
क्षीणायुषो महाराज तरुणा वृद्धशीलिनः । तरुणानां च यच्छीलं तद् वृद्धेषु प्रजायते ॥ ६२

विपरीतास्तदा नार्यो वञ्चयित्वार्हतः पतीन्। व्युच्चरन्त्यपि दुःशीला दासैः पशुभिरेव च ॥ ६३
वीरपत्न्यस्तथा नार्यः संश्रयन्ति नरान्नृप। भर्तारमपि जीवन्तमन्यान् व्यभिचरन्त्युत ॥ ६४

NOTE 1783

विहितान्यपि कर्माणि धर्मलोपभयाद् बुधैः। १
समयेन निवृत्तानि साध्वभावात्कलौ युगे। २
विधवाया प्रजोत्पत्तौ देवरस्य नियोजनम्। ३
वालिकाक्षतयोन्योस्तु वरेणान्येन संस्कृतिः। ४
कन्यानामसवर्णानां विवाहश्च द्विजातिभिः। ५
आततायिद्विजाग्र्याणां धर्मयुद्धेन हिंसनम्। ६
द्विजस्याब्धौ तु नौयातुः शोधितस्यापि सङ्ग्रहः। ७
सत्रदीक्षा च सर्वेषां कमण्डलुविधारणम्। ८
महाप्रस्थानगमनं गोसङ्घप्तिश्च गोसवे। ९
सौत्रामण्यामपि सुराग्रहणस्य च संग्रहः। १०
अग्निहोत्रहवण्याश्च लेहो लीढापरिग्रहः। ११
वानप्रस्थाश्रमस्यापि प्रवेशो विधिचोदितः। १२
वृत्तस्वाध्यायसापेक्षमघसङ्कोचनं तथा। १३
प्रायश्चित्तविधानं तु विप्राणां मरणान्तिकम्। १४
संसर्गदोषः स्तेयान्यमहापातकनिष्कृतिः। १५
वरातिथिपितृभ्यश्च पशूपाकरणक्रिया। १६
दत्तोरसेतरेषां तु पुत्रत्वेन परिग्रहः। १७
सवर्णान्याङ्ग नादुष्टैः संसर्गः शोधितैरपि। १८
अयोनौ संग्रहे वृत्ते परित्यागो गुरुस्त्रियाः। १९
परोद्देशात्मसन्त्याग उच्छिष्टस्यापवर्जनम्। २०
प्रतिमाभ्यर्चनार्थाय सङ्कल्पश्च सधर्मकः। २१
अस्थिसञ्चयनादूर्ध्वमङ्गस्पर्शनमेव च। २२
शामित्रं चैव विप्राणां सोमविक्रयणं तथा। २३
षड्भक्तानशनेनान्नहरणं हीनकर्मणः। २४
शूद्रेषु दासगोपालकुलमित्रार्धसीरिणाम्। २५
भोज्यान्नता गृहस्थस्य तीर्थसेवातिदूरतः। २६
शिष्यस्य गुरुदारेषु गुरुवद् वृत्तिशीलता। २७
आपद्वृत्तिर्द्विजाग्र्याणामश्वस्तनिकता तथा। २८
प्रजार्थं तु द्विजाग्र्याणां जातारणिपरिग्रहः। २९
ब्राह्मणानां प्रवासित्वं मुखाग्निध्मनक्रिया। ३०
बलात्कारादिदुष्टस्त्रीसंग्रहो विधिचोदितः। ३१
यतेस्तु सर्ववर्णेषु भिक्षाचर्या विधानतः। ३२
नवोदके दशाहं च दक्षिणा गुरुचोदिता। ३३

ब्राह्मणादिषु शूद्रस्य पचनादिक्रियापि च । ३४
भृग्वग्निपतनाद्यैश्च वृद्धादिमरणं तथा । ३५
गोतृप्तिमात्रे पयसि शिष्टैराचमनक्रिया । ३६
पितापुत्रविरोधेषु साक्षिणा दण्डकल्पनम् । ३७
यतेः सायंगृहत्वं च सूरिभिस्तत्त्वदर्शिभिः । ३८
एतानि लोकगुप्त्यर्थं कलेरादौ महात्मभिः । ३९
निवर्तितानि कर्माणि व्यवस्थापूर्वकं बुधैः । ४०
समयश्चापि साधूनां प्रमाणं वेदवद्भवेत् । ४१
शपथाः शकुनाः स्वप्नाः सामुद्रिकमुपश्रुतिः । ४२
उपयाचितमादेशाः सम्भवन्ति कलौ क्वचित् । ४३
तस्मात्तन्मात्रलाभेन कलौ कार्यं न कारयेत् । ४४
तथाधर्मसमावेशादन्यान्यपि कलौ युगे । ४५

A few important readings have already been noted in the text and notes there. The most extensive lists of Kalivarjyas occur in Sm C, Hemādri (pariśesakhanda, vol. III. part 2 pp. 666–668), Par M. vol I part 1 pp. 134–137, Madanaratnapradīpa (Samayanirnaya) Ms. No 146 of Viś collection I (now in the Govt. Mss. Library at B O. R. Institute, Poona), Udvāhatattva (p 112–113) and Śuddhitattva pp 273–274 (Jiv.), Nirnayasindhu, Samayamayūkha, Bhattoji on Caturvimśatimata and Smrti-kaustubha. Detailed explanations are given in the last four of these and in Krsnabhatta's com. on the Nir. S.

2. Some works such as the कलिवर्ज्यवि. read समापने निवृत्तानि, which कलिवर्ज्यवि. explains as जनमेजययज्ञसमाप्तौ and कृष्णभट्ट on नि. सि. p 1292 explains similarly.

4. मदनरत्नप्रदीप (folio 209a) reads वालायाक्षतयोन्याश्च.

18. The समयप्रकाश reads 'सवर्णानां तथा दुष्टैः संसर्गः' &c.

20–21 These are omitted in स्मृतिच., परा. मा., उद्वाहतत्त्व and some other works, though found in हेमाद्रि, भट्टोजि, कलिवर्ज्यनि. and निर्णयसिन्धु.

26. स्मृतिमुक्ताफल (आह्निक p. 447) reads भोज्यान्नता कलौ नास्ति तीर्थसेवा च दूरतः।

33. भट्टोजि and कलिवर्ज्यवि. read विधिचोदिता for गुरु°.

38. परा. मा., समयमयूख p. 109, कलिवर्ज्यवि. and भट्टोजि read यत्रसायंगृहत्वं च.

42–45. These are omitted by many of our authorities, though they occur in हेमाद्रि, समयमयूख, स्मृतिकौ., समयप्रकाश.

GENERAL INDEX

[N. B —If a topic occurs in the text as well as in a footnote on the same page, a reference to the page alone is generally given]

Abettor, who is, in case of a crime 529.

Abhaya, a hymn 75.

Abhilasitārthacintāmani, (see under Mānasollāsa) 13

Abhimanyu, learnt Dhanurveda from his father Arjuna 49.

Ābhīras, usage that adultery not punishable among 261, 488.

Abhisecanīya, principal rite in Rājasūya 73

Abhyankar, Prof. K V 904.

Abuse, defined 511, three kinds of 511

Ācāra, import of, fluctuated from time to time 875–876

Ācāraratna 869n.

Ācāryas, views of, cited by Kautilya 2, 201, 223, 225n, 232, 392.

Accountant, an officer in a court of justice 278

Accounts, how kept 199; year of, ended on full moon of Āssdha and comprised 354 days in Kautilya's day 144

Activism, philosophy of 169.

Aeynta, commentator of Dāyabhāga 558n

Adam Smith 186n

Ādhivedanika, a class of strīdhana 774

Adhyagni, a class of strīdhana 774

Adhyāvahanika, a kind of strīdhana 774, 775

Ādiparva 10, 22n, 30, 37, 42n, 43, 49, 59, 68, 78, 118, 134, 168, 177, 204, 205, 214–15, 255, 353n, 359n, 369n, 371n, 416, 609n, 640n, 642, 644, 645n, 675n, 682n, 845–847, 872, 896n, 937, 966

Ādipurāna 629, 928n, 939.

Ādityapurāṇa 610n, 871, 885, 927, 928n, 939, 949.

Ādityas, as observers of ṛta 415; twelve, 368.

Adjournment of a suit, when allowed 296, 297.

Adoption, age of boy to be taken in 679–680, an only son now allowed by courts to he taken in 676, Bombay High Court allows any one to be taken in, except a daughter's son, sister's son or mother's sister's son 683, boy of same caste to be taken in 675, boy must be taken in, before upanayana or marriage except in Bombay 681; boy to be taken in a. must be reflection of an aurasa son 682, ceremonies of 687–689, confers same rights in adoptive family as those of an aurasa son 689–690, daughter may be taken in a acc to some writers 675, daughter's son or sister's son may be taken in a on ground of custom 684; eldest son may now be taken in 677; foundation of the doctrine of 666; giving and taking of the boy is a necessary requisite of 687, gotra of natural family persists for certain purposes even after 695–697, if aurasa son born after a, the adopted son takes a lesser share 698, in the dvyāmnsyāyana form 685–687, male alone can be taken in 674–675, mother alone can give away her son in a if father be dead 666, mother cannot give away in a if she has remarried 667, objects of adoption 665–666, one who has no son, son's son or son's son's son can alone take in 667, only a man's widow can take a boy in a after his death 668; primary right to give in a is that of the father 666, principal matters discussed under 665, results of 689–699, severance from natural family not complete for all purposes

691–697, śūdras cannot take in a acc to Rudradhara and Vācaspati 668, views about widow's power to take in 668–669, who can give a son in 666–667, who may be taken in 674–683, who may take in 667–674

Adoption of Children Act (in England) 699n

Adultery 531–535, fine as punishment for, when the adulteress is of same caste or of a lower caste 533; prāyaścitta for, varied at different times 946–47, punishment of cutting the ears or nose of a woman who is awarded for, 533, punishment of death for a paramour when awarded 533, punishment of light fine for a with a female ascetic, 534, some sages prescribe humane treatment of women for 533, 535, 615, 947, was only an upapātaka except when a woman had intercourse with a man of low caste, 615, 947

Agastya, story of, 53.

Agnicayana, a solemn Vedic rite, 180, 535

Agnihotra, how far forbidden in Kali, 961

Agnimitra, 103, 116

Agniparāna, 13, 17n, 21n, 22, 45, 46, 48, 49n, 50–51, 59n, 60, 71, 77n, 78, 84n, 107, 111, 118, 120, 127, 132, 141, 160, 172, 179, 200, 208, 215, 217, 219, 224–227, 230, 231, 924.

Agnistoma, 469

Agnivarna, queen of, sat on the throne after him 41.

Agriculture 51; great attention paid to 162, superintendent of 147

Agriculturists, exempted from arrest in execution of decrees in modern times, 384.

Ahalyā and Indra 845–846.

Ahicchatra, 848n

Aihole Inscription 896.

Aila exacted excessive taxes and perished, 52

Aindrī Śānti, in coronation 79–80.

Aitareya Āranyaka 227.

Aitareya Brāhmana, 20, 25, 41, 64–66, 73, 104, 117, 125n, 135, 190, 229, 414, 416, 543n, 544, 563–566, 588, 600n, 636, 641, 657n, 680, 710n, 845, 846, 877, 887, 933.

Aiyangar, Prof. K V. Rangaswami, 90, 15, 120, 629n.

Aiyer, Mr Velandi Gopal, 897n, 900–01.

Aja, son of Raghu, 101

Ajahindu, king of Sauvira 52

Ajigarta 660

Aksapatala, office of records and accounts 143.

Aksauhini, subdivisions of 204–205; total number of troops in 204–205.

Alberuni 166, 376n

Alchemy, as a means of filling royal treasury 189, 198.

Alexander the Great 24, 103.

Aliyasantāna Law 560.

Allies, see under mitra, four kinds of 216–217, may become enemies, if their interests so require 222, necessity of making 216; qualities of friendly 217

Alluvion and diluvion, rules about 506.

Amarakośa, 7, 47n, 66, 105n, 121n, 124n, 133n, 134n, 138, 140n, 147n, 159n, 190, 419n, 454, 486, 491n, 527n, 754n, 778, 910n

Amātyas, see under 'ministers', three kinds of 107.

Amharīsa, a king 53

Amhassadar, see under dūta.

Āmbhiyas, school of, on Arthaśāstra 2.

Amhamne mantras 75.

Amśumān, son of Asamañja, 43.

Anantadeva 13.

Anarchy, state of, in the dim past 244.

Ancestral property, see under 'property'; has a technical sense 576n, rules about, when lost to the family and recovered by a single member, 580–81

Angiras, 394, 573, 868, 941.

Anguttaranikāya 135.

Animals, fines for causing injury to or death to 516; owners of certain a.

not liable to fine or punishment for injury caused by them to crops or men, 501, 528
Animāndavya, 255n.
Anjaria, Mr 20.
Anu, mlecchas sprang from, 937
Anūbandhyā cow, sacrifice of, forbidden in Kali, 627–628, 941.
Anuśāsanaparva, 2, 6, 8, 26, 37, 49, 53n, 59–61, 168, 243, 255n, 359n, 416, 421, 534, 576n, 578n, 598, 645n, 650, 652n, 703n, 708, 776n, 794, 845, 857, 875, 913, 914.
Anuvāda, 705n, 712
Anvādheya, a class of strīdhana, 774.
Ānvīkṣikī, meaning of, 46–47.
Aparādhas, are ten, of which the king may take cognisance without any one's complaint, 264.
Aparājita, a hymn, 75
Aparājita, a Śilāra king, 196n
Aparānta had very great rainfall, 147.
Aparārka, 7, 10n, 17n, 38, 48, 96, 121n, 124n, 154, 156n, 159n, 247n, 248n, 255n, 259, 260, 270n, 272, 273, 275, 277n, 278n, 280, 286n, 287–88, 293, 294n, 297, 298n, 300n, 301, 304, 305, 310, 312, 313n, 314–15, 317–18, 321–22, 323n, 326, 327n, 331, 332n, 333–34, 337, 340–41, 344n, 347n, 348n, 349–351, 352n, 358n, 362n, 364n, 366, 380, 382n, 383, 387n, 403, 410n, 419n, 432n, 434n, 436n, 437n, 438n, 439n, 445n, 464n, 465–66, 467n, 468n, 473n, 479n, 483n, 485n, 499n, 500n, 501, 502n, 506, 507n, 508n, 509n, 511n, 514n, 517, 518n, 521n, 522n, 523n, 526n, 531n, 538n, 539–40, 554n, 556n, 557, 560n, 563n, 572, 573n, 575n, 576n, 580, 582n, 583n, 584n, 586n, 587, 589n, 590n, 593n, 599, 607n, 609, 610n, 614, 621n, 623n, 624, 625n, 631n, 634n, 635n, 636, 638n, 644, 652n, 653n, 655, 656, 659n, 664n, 702n, 703n, 712, 716, 725, 731, 734n, 735, 747n, 751n, 754n, 777n, 781, 784n, 786, 787n, 791n, 794, 803n, 807n, 817n, 840, 862n, 868n, 872n, 873, 882n, 905n, 926, 928-29, 932n, 939, 941–42, 943n, 950, 953, 958n, 959, 961n, 965.
Āpastamba, dharmasūtra of, 1, 3, 9, 19, 23, 40, 41n, 44, 58, 60, 61n, 104, 117, 119, 167, 190, 194, 209, 211, 245, 246, 250, 271, 342, 351, 355, 360, 362, 387, 397, 402, 405, 417, 428, 438, 451, 478, 482, 486, 499, 500, 513, 524, 527–29, 535, 541, 543n, 564, 566, 567, 603n, 608, 613, 615, 618, 622, 623, 628, 643, 655, 657n, 702, 710n, 712, 714, 726n, 733, 754n, 762, 771, 803, 825, 827, 832n, 837, 845, 856, 858, 865–66, 868, 871, 880, 889, 926, 930n, 940, 948, 953–54, 957, 958, 963, 965.
Āpastamba, gṛhyasūtra of 674n, 754n, 856, 879
Āpastamba - dharmasūtra specially studied by Taittirīyas 853.
Āpastamba-mantrapāṭha 641n, 828n,
Āpastamba, śrautasūtra of 28, 627n, 940, 952, 962.
Āpastamba, versified smṛti of 534.
Apavīddha son, definition of 647.
Appearance, of parties to suits through agents 288, persons excused from personal a. in court 286–287, persons excused from personal a. are not liable to āsedha 291
Apprentice, characteristics of 483.
Apte, Prof. V M 245.
Apūrva, due to performance of sacrifices 839
Arājaka, meaning of 30–31.
Aranyakāṇḍa (of Rāmāyana) 37n, 62n.
Āratta, country of five rivers 88n,
Arhat 871.
Aristotle, on end of State 237.
Arjuna, of the Haihaya dynasty 53.
Arjuna, (a Pāṇdava) digvijaya of 68; imparted Dhanurveda to his son Abhimanyu 49; married Subhadrā his maternal uncle's daughter 846; upbraided Bhīmasena for being enraged with Yudhiṣṭhira 42.

Ārjunāyanas, were conquered by Samudragupta 89.

Arms, superintendent of 145

Army, see under 'troops', consisted of four arms 202; doctors and surgeons of 208, formations of, in battle 208, eight elements of 206–208, organization of 203, regulations about the camp of an 207; results of the possession of a powerful 200, system of passes as to a camp of 207–208; troubles with a caused by thirty-three matters 233, vast, kept by Indian kings 203–204.

Arrian, a Greek writer on India 89, 183, 901.

Artha, meaning of 7; great emphasis laid on, by Kautilya, 9.

Arthāpatti, a mode of proof 847.

Arthaśāstra, a synonym for Dandanīti 6, is dṛstārthasmṛti 7, 840, meaning of 6; relation of, to dharmaśāstra 8, was treated as an upaveda 10, 843n, writers on, did not shrink from giving cruel or immoral advice 12-13.

Arthaśāstra of Kautilya, see under Kautilya; refers to several schools of and authors on rājadharma 2, sets the highest value on dharma 9, quoted on 2, 5n, 6–8, 10, 49n, 58n, 61, 95, 97, 105, 120, 121n, 207, 412, 434n, 477n, 503n, 617n, 621n, 644, 650n, 651n, 659n, 860n

Arthavāda 712.

Āryabhata, theory of, as to yugas 890, was born in 476 A D. 895–896.

Āryāvarta, limits of 137.

Asahāya, commentator of Nāradasmṛti, 288, 334n, 379n, 442n, 619.

Asamañja, eldest son of Sagara, was banished for his misdeeds 43.

Āśauca, period of impurity due to death, 492.

Ascetic, see under 'yati'

Āsedha, four kinds of 291; was restraint under king's order 291.

Aśoka, administrative system of 141; claimed to be a dharmavijayin emperor 69, constructed hospitals for men and animals 60, edicts of 383, 390, 406, 889, extent of the empire of 69, is said to have died destitute of power 102, irrigation works of 63, promulgated three days' respite for prisoners condemned to death 406, sent his son Kunāla to Takṣaśilā to pacify popular disturbances 116, subjects of the edicts of 100, was tolerant to all sects 881, very cruel in his youth acc. to Yuan Chwang 406, was sent to Takṣaśilā to pacify citizens 116.

Āśramavāsikaparva 8, 17, 37, 101, 168, 171, 180, 181, 201, 215, 217, 846, 847.

Assam Labour and Migration Act 484,

Assault, by men of lowest castes against respectable people to be punished with whipping then and there 514; causing injury to animals was included under 513; comprises touching, threatening to strike and actually striking 513; defined 513–514; three kinds of 513–514.

Astakā śrāddha 828, 829, 940.

Astras, science of 215

Astrologers, advice of, taken before starting on an invasion 228, were to urge on soldiers in a battle saying planets favoured their side 212.

Astrology, views of Kautilya and Yājñavalkya about reliance on 136.

Aśvaghoṣa, author of Buddhacarita 5.

Āśvalāyana, gṛhyasūtra of 118, 238, 641n, 689, 856, 879, 945n, 964

Āśvalāyana, śrautasūtra of 662n, 689n, 685n, 952.

Aśvamedha, those joining in the Lit of the king at end of, were purified of all sins 57, removed all sins, 962

Āśvamedhikaparva 53n, 112n, 135, [illegible] 906, 909

Aśvapati, king of Kekaya 166

Ātatāyin, define 1 517–518, [illegible] of views about killing in self defence a brāhmaṇa a, 517, may be killed is defeoce of person or property if not a brāhmaṇa 9, 517

Atbarva-Jyotisa 907n, 913.
Atharvaśiras, Upaniṣad 119n
Atharvaveda 28, 29, 32, 58n, 64, 75, 92, 119, 125n, 132, 135, 150n, 163, 213, 228, 361, 414, 415n, 519, 541, 544, 657n, 658, 660, 685n, 753n, 754n, 770n, 828n, 886, 887, 933.
Atirātra sacrifice, takiog of sodaśio cop in 863.
Atoms, theory of 839.
Ātreyī, meaniog of 527n.
Atri, gave to Aurva his only son in adoptioo 662–663.
Atri, smrti of 57, 59, 642o, 665, 668n, 948–49, 956, 958–59.
Audltor 199
Aupajanghani 643.
Aurasa, defined as the son of the wife of the same class as the husband's 600n, 647, 655–56.
Aurva, adopted Atri's ooly son 662-663
Auśaoasas, scbool of, oo Arthaśāstra 2, 48, 106
Auśanasa—smrtl 872, 934.
Austin 554.
Avakraya, meaolog of 494.
Avaotivarman, king of Kashmir 100, 162.
Avaruddhā (strī), meaoing of, discnss-ed 811–815; differeoce between bhujisyā and a 813.
Avesti, a sacrifice that was an isti in Rājasūya 38, as ao iodepeodent sacrifice may be performed by a brāhmana 38.
Āvid, formula recited in tbe Rājasūya 64.
Ayodhyā, descriptioo of aocieot 177.
Ayodhyākānda 21o, 29, 30, 42, 47n, 50, 70, 78, 101, 105, 107, 111, 112, 116, 127, 179, 206.
Āyusya, a hymn 75.

Babyloo, 389o.
Bacon, Lord, confessed to taking bribes 276.
Bādha, examples of 855.
Bāhndantaka, said to be an abridgment of Brabmā's work 4.
Bābudantipotra 2.
Bailments, care required in all kinds of 433.
Bala (strength), five kiods of 215; of intellect is the best of all 215.
Bālāditya, of Magadha, is said to have defeated Mihirakula, 924n Bālaka, a predecessor of Jīmūtavābaoa 637, 719.
Bālakānda (of tbe Rāmāyana) 106, 107, 164 675n
Bālambhattī, (a commentary) 43, 76, 553o, 569, 570o, 705o, 718, 726, 734n, 747, 755n, 757, 759, 762, 772n, 773n, 774n, 778o, 781, 790n, 791n, 793n, 814, 815.
Bālarūpa, 718n.
Ballālasena, kiog of Bengal 126
Balutedars, are village servants in the Deccan 156, 285.
Bāna 69, 85, 115, 182, 229, 362.
Banavāsi, a province of 12000 villages 139.
Baodhus, are, acc. to Mit, bhlonagotra sapindas 754; as heirs 753–762; eoumeration of, in texts, is not exhaustive 755; female b are allowed to inherit in Bombay and Madras Presidencies 762; rules of preference among 759–762; sapinda relationsbip of b. extends accordiog to P C. only up to five degrees 757-759; several meaoiogs of 753n; succeed after samāoodakas 754; test of religi-ous efficacy when applied to succes-sion of bandbus 756; three classes of 755, treatment of, under tbe Dāyabbāga 760
Banerjee, Dr Gooroodas, author of 'Marriage aod stridhan' 656n, 770, 772n, 798o.
Banishmeot, os punisbment for officers and jodges taking bribes 253, 404; as punisbment for brābmana offen-ders 404; as punishment for perju-red brābmana witnesses, for those guilty of embezzlement or of playiog witb false dice 404; as punishment for witchcraft 406, as punishment for gambling in secret 540, often associated with branding 404.

Bārhadratha dynasty 899.
Bārhaspatyas, school of, on Arthaśāstra 2, 48, 106
Bārhaspatyasūtra, 13, 48, 80, 172, 240, 630n, 869.
Barnes, Mr Harry E, on 'story of punishment' 255n, 388n.
Barnett, Dr L. D. 146n.
Barua, Dr. 94.
Basak, Dr. R G., author of 'History of North-east India' 925n
Battle, ancient procedure for making a king ready for 228–229, distribution of booty acquired in 212, persons that were not to be attacked in 209–210, rites to be performed by king before 212, victory in, doubtful 225
Baudhāyanadharmasūtra, specially studied by Taittirīyas 853
Baudhāyana, Dharmasūtra of 27, 36, 154, 166, 175, 189, 194, 209, 250, 276, 343–44, 403–4, 417, 420, 443, 517, 526, 551n, 567, 573, 598, 608, 613, 614, 617, 623–24, 641n, 642n, 643–44, 655, 656n, 659, 660, 663, 668, 690n, 698n, 700, 702, 707, 712, 719, 736, 741, 746, 747n, 763, 771, 805, 832n, 856, 858, 866, 875, 878, 933, 938, 943, 954, 957, 959, 960, 963.
Baudhāyana, grhyaśesasūtra of 76, 135, 664n, 688.
Baudhāyana-grhya-paribhāsā 642n
Baudhāyana-pitrmedha-sūtra 104.
Baudhāyana, smrti of 755, 793.
Baudhāyana, śrautasūtra of 28, 61n.
Bāverujātaka, 934.
Beal's 'Buddhist Records of the Western World' 30, 40, 143n, 164, 204, 376n, 924n
Benefit of doubt 360.
Beni Prasad, Dr. 16, 31, 49, 91, 94, 117n.
Berolzheimer on 'the World's Legal Philosophies' 15n, 245, 851n.
Best on 'Evidence' 331n, 338, 356n, 359n.
Bhaddiya, cousin of the Buddha was rājā of Kapilavastu at one time 90.
Bhadrabāhu, a great Jain sage connected with Candragupta by Jains 102.
Bhadrasena, a king killed in his queen's chamber 85
Bhagadatta, king of Prāgjyotisa 203, 937.
Bhagavadgītā 8, 22, 57, 169, 211, 881.
Bhāgavatapurāna 24, 26, 60, 183, 627, 872, 873, 892, 896n, 897n, 899, 923–25
Bhaisajya mantras 75
Bhāmatī, com. on Śankara's Vedāntasūtrabhāsya 781n Bhandarkar, Prof D. R 16, 20, 90, 92, 103.
Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Annals of 164, 245, 307, 316, 904
Bhandin, cousin of Harsa, proposed the latter's election as king 31.
Bhāradvāja, expounder of rājadharma 2, 3, 4, 11, 12, 83, 232, views of criticized by Kautilya 12
Bhāradvāja, grhyasūtra of 685n.
Bhāradvāja, or Bharadvāja, smrti of 429–31, 441, 493, 496
Bhāraśivas, dynasty of 70, 76
Bharata, son of Dusyanta, adopted Bharadvāja, a brāhmana 675.
Bhārata-itihāsa-samśodhaka-mandala 81, 817
Bhāratasāvitrī, astronomical data in 909, 915, 917
Bharatavarsa, aspirations to bring the whole of, under 'one umbrella' 137, dimensions of 67, is the first of the nine varsas of Jambudvīpa 134, 935, is karmabhūmi (land of action) 134, king conquering whole of, is styled samrāt 67; Purānas wax eloquent over 137, regard for, as a unity from a religious point of view 137.
Bhāruci 44, 393n, 451, 619.

Bhāsa 211n.
Bhāskarācārya 122o.
Bhāskaravarman, Nidhanpur plate of 898.
Bhat, Mr Bhaskar Vaman 378
Bhatārka, founder of Valabhi dynasty 202
Bhattacharya, Mr. Batuknath, 966
Bhattoji, author of a commentary on Caturvimśatimata 926o, 928n, 930, 940, 944, 949-50, 957, 961.
Bhavabhūti 243
Bhavanātha, author of Nayaviveka 550n
Bhāvaprakāśana 136
Bhavisyapurāna 7, 737n, 840, 844n, 873, 905n
Bheda (an upāya) 174.
Bhide, Prof H B 924n
Bhikkhus, some of whom were styled dhammāpanikas 290
Bhima 79, 172, 203, 210, 232, 937.
Bhisma, 79, advice of, to soldiers 58, had a goldeo tāla tree as flagstaff 208, performed Aśvamedha, though not married 845-46
Bhismaparva 58, 135, 203, 205, 208-9, 211, 903, 905, 906, 908n, 909, 912, 915, 918-920, 922.
Bhoja, author of Yuktikalpataru 13
Bhoja, see under Dāndakya 52
Bhojakas, held Veda unauthoritative 571.
Bhojas, kings of Sātvatas 10 the south were so called after coronatioo 73, mentioned 10 Aśoka's Rock Edicts 65.
Bhrgu 183, 282, 283.
Bhujisyā, meaniog of 813-814
Bibhisana 69
Bible 36
Bihar aod Orissa Research Society, Journal of 265, 892
Blasphemy Act (in England) 616o
Bluotschli 20, 237.
Bombay Agriculturists Debtors Relief Act 425
Bombay Gazetteer 102, 198, 225, 268, 366n
Bombay Pleaders' Act 290.
Bombay Regulations 290, 575n
Borradaile 728-29
Boundary dispute 502-505, five kinds of, acc to Nārada 502-503; king last resort in settling 505; procedure for witnesses who were to define boundary in 503-504, several kinds of witnesses as to 504; single person was not ordinarily to undertake to define boundary in 505
Brahmā, is deemed to have appointed Mano king 34, is said to have composed a work on the four purusārthas 4, 33
Brahmacārin, heirs of 764-765; of every varna forbidden to drink madya 965, sexual intercourse forbidden to 846, two classes of 764
Brahmacarya, for long periods, forbidden in Kali age 863-64
Brahmagupta 890, 896.
Brāhmana, can perform Avesti as an independant sacrifice, though not in Rājasūya 38; could be sentenced to death, acc. to Kautilya and Kātyāyana, in certain cases 398-99, could wield arms in danger 517; empires and kingdoms 39; gifts made to a b. are inexhaustible treasure for the king 228, guilty of murder, theft of gold, forcible seizure of land was to have his eyes covered over with cloth throughout life 397, guilty of perjury banished 352, killing an ātatāyin b not punishable by king 518, learned, was exempt from taxation 190, liable to pay under a decree was given easy instalments and not made to work 384, limited authority of king over 25, living in Brahmāvarta, Kuruksetra and a few other countries was to be looked up to by all as to actions and practices 137, may perform Vājapeya sacrifice for Svārājya 65, not to stay in a city, but in a village abounding in water, fuel, kusa 154, not to stay in the kingdom of a śūdra 39, offender not to receive corporal punishment, but may be banished 396, 522, 526; offender can be kept confined in a secret place 397, 398n; was forbidden from being a samsṛ or selling soma plant 952; was forbidden to engage śūdras as cooks in Kali or eat at their houses 952–53, 958; was not to be a slave 484; wealth of heirless b. was not to escheat to the king but was to be given to other brāhmanas 762.

Brāhmanahala, com. of Kāthakagṛhya 880.

Brāhmanas, alone entitled to drink soma 952; hating, opposing and calumniating b are indications of a man's approaching fall 228, not studying or expounding Veda or not keeping sacred fires become equal to śūdras 344n, punishment of death for b forbidden in Kali 942, separating from their fathers against the latter's will were unfit to be invited at a śrāddha 566–567.

Brahmanaspati in the Rgveda 415.

Brahmāndapurāna 10, 892, 895n, 896n, 899–900.

Brahmapurāna 67, 75n, 82, 134, 135, 228, 234, 642n, 857, 890, 892, 895n, 896n, 923–24, 955, 966.

Brāhmasphutasiddhānta 896 n

Brahmasūtrā, (see Vedāntasūtra), 725n.

Brahmayāmala, a Tantra 215.

Brāhmī alphabet, origin of 306–307; why so called 308.

Branding, as a punishment 403, 540; on the forehead with certain marks in the case of certain offences, if offender did not perform prāyaścitta 397, 403; practised in Rome and Britain against offenders 397, 403.

Brew, Dr. J M. 391.

Brhadāranyaka Upanisad 97, 135, 162, 176, 613n, 641n, 643, 841, 957.

Brhad-devatā, a work 42, 359n, 609.

Brhadratha, last Maurya king killed by his senāpati 86.

Brhad-Visnu 721n.

Bṛhad-Yama 534.

Brhan-Mann 738, 752.

Brhannāradiya-purāna (see under Nāradiyapurāna), 869, 928n

Brhaspati, writer on Rājadharma 2–4, 6, 167, 178, 208, 255n, derives the word rājan 28; held that fighting should be avowed as far as possible 173, is alleged to have abridged the work of Brahmā 4; on land tax 191

Brhaspati, smrti of (on vyavahāra not yet recovered) 121n, 156, 158, 206, 244, 258–61, 272, 273, 275, 277–78, 281n, 282, 284, 286, 291, 294, 297–299, 303–4, 306, 308–310, 312–13, 317, 318n, 322, 326, 327, 331–32, 334, 340–343, 345n, 346–348n, 352, 355, 357–359, 363, 364, 370, 375, 380, 385n, 387, 391, 393n, 396, 409–10, 417–20, 423–25, 428–29, 431–39, 442–45, 451–52, 456–58, 462–63, 465–469, 471, 472, 474, 476–78, 480–81, 483, 488–89, 491–493n, 494, 496, 498, 501, 503–08, 511n, 513–16, 520, 522, 525–26, 529, 531–32, 537–38, 540, 554, 568, 572, 574–76n, 580, 584, 586, 587, 589, 590, 593n, 596, 598, 501, 607, 609, 619, 621, 623–26, 632, 634, 637, 639, 642, 644, 646, 651n, 652–53, 655, 702, 709, 714, 717, 720, 721, 733, 736, 748, 752n, 754n, 760, 763, 766, 769, 772n, 790, 799n, 800, 809, 861, 867, 868, 882, 885, 926, 942, 948.

Brhaspati, smrti of, holds Manu in high esteem but rarely criticizes it also 590n.

Brhaspati, work of (in prose) 452n, 602n.

Brhat-Parāśara 13, 98, 170, 173, 197, 209, 211, 391, 860, 869.

Brhat-samhitā of Varāhamihira 82, 85, 89, 122, 126, 136, 146n, 180, 230, 407, 897–98, 906n, 907, 916, 917, 919n, 922.

Brhatī, com. of Prabhākara on Jaimini 836n.

Bribe, defined 473, person taking b. or the intermediary was fined but not the man who offered it 473.
Bricks, baked, required in Agnicayana 180.
Brothers, are heirs after parents 725; of full blood preferred to those of half 725
Brother's son's son, position of, as heir 731–32
Brown C. J. 122n.
Buddha, knew 64 scripts 308, Śuddhodana, father of, was rāja of the Śākyas 90, wheel of dharma of 66.
Buddhacarita of Aśvaghosa 5.
Buddhist countries took their law of succession from the Manusmrti 560, 640.
Buddhist doctrines about monasteries, ahiṁsā, charity are not to be deemed to be authoritative 842–843.
Buddhist influence, on the Mitākṣarā, examined 640–641, on the Dāyabhāga 559–560
Buddhist philosophy, some tenets of, may be useful in their own way 839–40.
Budhabhūsana 13, 107, 110n, 117, 163n, 184, 203n, 215, 400n.
Bühler, Dr. 195n, 307, 486n, 605n, 733n.
Burden of proof, of an affirmative proposition is on him who asserts it 304; rules about 304, sabhyas to consider the question of 304.
Burma, indebted to Manusmṛti for its laws of inheritance 640–641.

Caesar, Julius 24.
Cakravarti, Dr. P. C. 213.
Cakravartin 24, 66, territory of 66–67
Cakravartins, names of six 67; said to be seven in Harṣacarita 67.
Calamities, among divine c floods are more devastating than fire 233; divine and human 118, 120; natural, are six 163; removal of divine c. how effected 228.
Cambodia 756.
Cānakya, 5, 7, 86, 120; killed one of the Nandas 86
Caṇḍeśvara, author of Rājanītiratnākara 13
Candragupta, a Gupta emperor 44
Candragupta, a Maurya Emperor 192; abdicated in favour of his son, acc. to Jain tradition 102.
Capital, (see nāgaraka, palace) 178ff; administration of 149, 182, census of the inhabitants of 150; ditch constructed round 181, gates of, should face south 1; how and where to be built 181, loss of, more serious than the loss of some territory 178, may be inside a fort or outside 181, officer called nāgaraka to look to affairs of 149; position of palace and offices in 181; rendered gay by players and dancers 180; storing of necessary commodities in 181, temples and shrines of certain deities in 181.
Caritra, meaning of 260–261.
Caritrabandhaka 435.
Carrier, liability of, for loss or deterioration of goods 479.
Cārvāka 871.
Caste Disabilities Removal Act 547n, 667, abrogates the rule of ancient Hindu law about patita 616.
Cattle, even princes went to enumerate and supervise 161, straying into fields 500–501, superintendent of 148–149.
Catūrātra, a sacrifice 662n
Cāturmāsyas, seasonal sacrifices 676n, 704n
Caturvargacintāmani, of Hemādri 929.
Caturvimśatimata 122n, 871.
Caula, usages about 883.
Canroddharanika, an officer 168, 464.
Ceylon, sea voyage to, frequently mentioned in literature 937.
Chalas, were fifty, for which the king could punish without a private complaint 265
Champā, a work by Dr. R. C. Majumdar 641n.

Champerty, not encouraged by ancient Hindu Lawyers 288.
Chāndogya Upaniṣad 49n, 92, 135, 163, 167, 226, 362, 387, 613, 888
Chau-toon, on 'Principles of Buddhist Law' 641
Chariots, of great warriors were drawn by four horses and had two wheels 205
Charities called pūrta 451.
Chatterji, Dr Bijan Raj 756, 934n
Child, no gift nor sale of, allowed, acc. to Āp 643.
Chowries, symbols of royalty 82
Chullavagga 91, 246.
Cīna, country of 53.
Cities, ancient Indian 183, frequently mentioned in the Rgveda 179-180, gates of, were named after cities which faced them 180, of asuras constructed with ayas, silver and gold 180.
Civil Procedure Code (of India) 301 n, 303n, 306, 345n, 380n, 384, 404n
Clergy, benefit of 398n
Clothes, declared impartible by Manu 589-90.
Codification of Hindu Law, objections to, considered 820-823.
Coins, examiner of 144, fines in relation to 253; weights of Indian, varied at different times and in different countries 121n
Colebrooke 447n, 575n, 688, 878.
Comet, appearance of, portends impending calamity 916-17.
Commander-in-chief 127, must be a kṣatriya or a brāhmaṇa 127, qualifications of 127.
Commentators generally embody pre-existing customs of their countries 729n Commerce, duties of superintendent of 145.
Compact series of heirs 731.
Concubine, right of, to maintenance 763, 811-815.
Confiscation, of all property as punishment 404; for perjury and for judges taking bribes 532; for rape 535, tools of trade or craft not to be seized when ordered 404,
Conflict, in case of c between two śruti texts, there is an option 869, in case of c between smṛtis and authoritative digests or commentaries courts have to follow latter 599n, 753n, in case of c between smṛti and śiṣṭācāra the latter is weaker acc. to Pūrvamīmāṃsā 629, 874, in case of c between laws or usages governing the two parties, śāstra prevails 862.
Conqueror, duties of 71; duty of, to place on the throne of the conquered country a brother, son or daughter of the late king 40, 231, three kinds of 69, should sow dissensions among chiefs and the people, corporations and their leaders 174, to respect the customs of the conquered country 71, 231, 859, 860.
Contracts, (see under 'transactions'); analysis of the conception of c in general by Sanskrit writers 411, made by incompetent persons are invalid 412; not to be entered into with soldiers and king's servants 207, persons incompetent to enter into, such as minors, dependents etc 412.
Contract Act (Indian) 312n, 412n, 427n, 433n, 457n, 458n, 460n, 481n
Coparcenary, characteristics of c. property acc. to Dāyabhāga 561-562, characteristics of c property acc to Mitākṣarā 591-92, interest of members in c property is fluctuating 561, is smaller than a joint family under the Mitākṣarā 591, not existing between father and son under the Dāyabhāga 594, ownership of c. property is joint and in whole body of co-owners 561, starts on the birth of a son under the Mit., while starts on father's death under Dāyabhāga 562, 591.
Copperplate, grants on, were sometimes forged 314-315; Sohagpur inscrip-tioo on, is earliest oo c, yet discovered 307.

Corarajjnka, an officer 168.

Corooation, materials for 73, 76, maotras to he recited at 73, 74, of a king acc to different works 72–82, of Iodra described io Aitareya Brāhmana 73, of crown prince, commander in chief etc 79, of Samhhaji 81, of Shivaji 81, part of principal virtuous ladies io 81, Porāmc rites of 79, to he performed ooe year after the death of the previous king 77–80.

Corporations, administration and work of, 157, as trihooals 280–281, of porohitas at temples and sacred places 488, were powerful and had a measure of self-government 97

Corpus Inscriptiooum Iodicarum, vol. I (on Aśokan inscriptions) 60, 69, 94, 100, 112n, 139, 190, 246, 390, 406, 890

Corpos Ioscriptionum Indicarum, vol. III (vide also uoder 'Gupta Inscriptioos) 213.

Council of ministers, consultation with, to he in secret 108, king or chief mioister presided over 91, meothooed io Aśoka's edicts 107.

Couotries, long lists of, io the Mahābhārata 135, oames of c are same as those of people residing io them 134, mentioned io the Ṛgveda and the Atharvaveda 135, m io the Brāhmanas 135, m hy Pāoini 135n, m hy Mahābhāsya 135o, m io the Kāvyamīmāmsā 136.

Couotry, land of Koruksetra, Matsyas, Sūrasenas is chosen as one's 134, qualities of the soil of a good 133, same c has sometimes two oames 135, Sanskrit words for 138, wealth of, coosits in food crops aod ahundance of cattle 161.

Coort, hoose was to he decorated with flowers, paintiogs 277, king as original as well as appellate c, 268, 270, presided over hy king or chief jnstice was highest 280, some merchants were associated with c in the task of decidiog cases 275, time for holding c 277, was to call io the aid of outsiders io deciding certaio cases 284, was constituted hy the prādvivāka and the sabhyas 274.

Courts, civil and criminal matters tried in ancieot Iodia by same c 259, classes of State c 281, could be attended hy learned men, who though oot appointed as judges could state their opioions 274, dharmasthīya aod kantakaśodhaoa c. 252, four kiods of 277, grades of 280–281, holidays for 277, inferior c recogoized in the smrtis, 280, law and equity admioistered by same 259, jodges of, to give unanimous decision 274, matters within the purview of kaotakaśodhana c. 252; opinion of majority of judges of c. to prevail 275, people present (except learned hrāhmaoas) were oot to ioterfere by speech in work of, 274; punishment for clerks of c for wroogly takiog down depositions 276, should be established for gronps of 10, 400, 800 villages 273, to consider hurden of proof after defendant's reply 304.

Court fees, fines taken from defeated litigants io civil disputes virtually were 294–295, 382, whether payahle io ancient and medieval Iodia 294–95

Cow; called Aoübandhyā was sacrificed at end of Agnistoma io ancient days 627, 865, occasioos on which c. was sacrificed io ancieot India 939–40; sacrifice of, condemned in Kali age 627, 865.

Cows, owners of, oot to be fioed for loss caused hy c at times of festivals aod śrāddhas 501.

Creditor, (see 'dehts' and 'recovery of dehts'), a brāhmana c had priority over ooe of aoother caste 441, duty of, to pass a receipt for part of debt paid 442, if creditor refused to pass a receipt on request, he lost balance of debt 442, should tear off bond when whole debt paid or should pass a document of release 442

Criminal Procedure Code (Indian) 398n, 402n.

Crime, ancient law of, was drastic 390, child under five was not deemed to be guilty of crime 395, definition of 386; fines came to be ordinary punishment for many a c 390, five titles out of 18 are connected with 511, law relating to, not found in one place in ancient works 412, list of capital crimes was much smaller in ancient India than in the mediaeval West 390, was also a sin in many cases and entailed religious sanctions 387.

Criminals, comparatively humane treatment of 388n.

Criminology, divergent views on 393.

Crops 162, harm to, by animals straying into 501, two, grown in the year ordinarily 500, various ways of raising 163

Cūḍā (tonsure), ceremony of 679n

Cunningham, General 121n, 122n

Customs (see under 'usages'), and Dharmaśāstra works 856ff, burden of proof of, 970, cannot be extended on grounds of analogy 876-877, difference between usages and c 826, differing c of the North and South 858, enforceability of 859, essentials of valid c 970-71, instances of local 862, meaning of c of country or family 862, 863, must have characteristics of antiquity, uniformity and notoriety 826n, of countries, castes and families are binding if not opposed to Veda 857, once in vogue may be abandoned by people 876, of several countries differed 878, of castes, 881, strength of, in conflict with smṛti 849-850, requisites of, according to Pūrvamīmāṃsā writers 853-854, 876, c, acc to smṛtis and commentaries, that were opposed to Veda or were immoral or harmful to others were not to be enforced 859.

Dagger marriages 972

Daftari, Dr. K L. 903-4, 906, 912.

Daiva, relation between human effort and 168-169, success depends on both, effort and d 169

Dakṣa, smṛti of 403, 471n, 846, 872, 941, 960, 963.

Dakṣināpatha, is a fourth of Bharatavarsa 136.

Dambhodbhava 52, 202

Damdupat, rule of, 422-424, rule of, acted upon in modern India 425.

Dāna (an upāya) described 174.

Dānakhanda (of Hemādri) 154.

Dancing girl, refered to in the Rgveda 534

Danda (a king) 53n.

Danda (an upāya) 175, 238, absence of, leads to chaos and anarchy 238, if foolishly wielded recoils on the king's head 26, if properly handled advances three puruṣārthas 26, importance of 21-22, 51, raised to the position of a divinity 22.

Dāṇḍakya Bhoja, a king who perished through lust 32, 53n, 55.

Dandanīti, a work of Keśava 13, 264, 265n, 403

Dandanīti 5, four objects of 6, identified with Arthaśāstra 843n, identified with rājadharma by Śāntiparva 5; meaning of 5, said to be the support of the world 6, said to have been produced by Sarasvatī 6, was special concern of ksatriyas 5.

Dandapārusya (assault) 513ff.

Dandaviveka, a work 124n, 176n, 191, 243n, 391n, 392, 393n, 394-5, 400, 403

Dandī Mahādevī, a queen 40.

Daśakumāracarita, 7, 45, 48, 55, 144, 171, 203, 222, 276, 277, 390, 400, 440n, 541, 936, 937.

Daśāparādhika, an officer 264.

Daśaratha, desired to make Rāma Crown Prince with people's approval 29, 42, had eight ministers 106.

Dāsī, who is 602n, 707.

Dāsīputra 600–603.

Date, Mr G T. 213.

Dattaka son 662–699, definition of 647; even Rgveda is against having d. s 662; instances of, in Vedic Literature 662–663; of a widow held entitled by P C to open up a partition made several years before 671; placed very low in the list of secondary sons by several smṛti writers 650, smṛti texts and digests on 664; sūtras except that of Vasiṣtha and smṛtis contain very little about 663.

Dattakacandrikā 644, 648n, 664–65, 667n, 669, 675, 679–80, 682, 683n, 685n, 686, 691, 696–98n, 699, branded as a forgery by certain writers 664, regarded by Privy Council as of highest authority on adoption 664–665

Dattakamīmāmsā 644, 646n, 648n, 654, 655n, 663n, 664, 666n, 667–68, 675, 676n, 678n, 679–80, 682–84, 686, 687n, 688, 691, 696–98n, 926, regarded as of highest authority on adoption 664–665

Dattānapākarma or Dattāpradānika 471–475 (see under 'gift').

Dattasiddhāntamañjarī of Bālakṛsna 649n, 667.

Daughter, as heir, 712–719, illegitimate d does not inherit even to a śūdra father 717, indigent married d. preferred to well-to-do married d. 715; takes a limited estate like a widow except in Bombay Presidency 716–717; unchastity no bar to succession of daughters (except under Dāyabhāga) 717–718; unmarried d preferred to married d. as an heir 715.

Daughter-in-law, not an heir in the whole of India except in Bombay 717.

Daughter's son, as heir 719–720

Davids, Mr. Rhys, author of 'Buddhist India' 90, 91, 123, 135, 156, 159, 183, 307, 484.

Day, was divided into eight parts, in the 2nd of which justice was administered by king 242.

Dāya, meaning of 543–44, two varieties of 546.

Dāyabhāga, a work, 475, 519n, 545, 546n, 547n, 550n, 553n, 554n, 556–58, 560–61, 563, 567n, 569, 572n, 573, 578, 579n, 580, 581n, 582, 583n, 584, 585n, 586n, 587, 589, 592, 593n, 594, 595n, 598, 601, 602n, 606, 607n, 610n, 617n, 618n, 619n, 620, 623n, 625n, 634–37, 639, 649n, 650n, 651n, 698, 700n, 702, 703n, 705n, 706n, 707n, 708, 710n, 712, 715–718n, 719, 720n, 721, 725, 726, 732, 734, 736–38, 740n, 741–43, 745–47, 749, 753, 760, 762, 764, 766, 768, 771n, 772, 772n, 773, 774n, 775, 777n, 778, 781, 784n, 785, 787n, 790n, 791n, 792n, 793, 798, 799, 809n.

Dāyabhāga (see under 'doctrine of spiritual benefit', 'sapinda'); difference between the Mitāksarā and D. 558–559; holds that ownership arises on the death of the previous owner 547, obliterates distinction between gotrajas and bandhus made by Yājñavalkya 742–43, origin of peculiar doctrines of 559–560, outstanding works under D. School 544, school named after D. is predominant in Bengal 544, school, not affected by the Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act 749.

Dāyabhāga (partition of wealth) 543ff, partition and inheritance are main topics under 544.

Dāyakramasaṅgraha 544, 798,

Dāyatattva 544, 546n, 553n, 556, 558, 561, 567n, 568n, 572n, 575n, 581n, 592n, 609n, 610n, 620n, 634n, 637n, 700n, 701n, 733, 738n, 739, 745n, 747n, 760, 777, 779n, 781.

Death, all persons except brāhmanas could be condemned to sentence of, for certain grave offences 400, arguments against sentence of 399, as expiation for grave sins forbidden to brāhmanas in Kali age 942, day of collection of bones after 951, general rule that one (except a brāhmana) who causes death by violence should be sentenced to 526, in fighting for the protection of cows and brāhmanas is specially commended 58, in protecting property of brāhmanas led to heaven 1, in various modes as punishment 256, 400, no punishment for accidental d. 58, no sentence of d for crimes due to negligence 526, punishment of, not inflicted on women and brāhmanas in early British rule 397, punishment of, for murdering a man, for abducting human beings, women or for theft of jewels or for rape, sexual intercourse with a woman of higher caste 256, 401, 522, 526, 532, sentence of, to be avoided even in great offences 399–400, sentence of, for a woman guilty of poisoning, incendiarism, attempt to kill her husband, elders or child 401.

Debts, (see under 'damdupat', 'recovery of debts'), distinction between antecedent debts and other debts of father drawn by P C. has no basis in the texts 450, father, husband and wife are not bound to pay respectively son's, wife's or husband's personal d. 451, five classes of, acc to Anuśāsanaparva 416, four d owed by all men, acc to Ādiparva 416, grandson's and great-grandson's liability to pay ancestor's d 443–444, grounds on which liability to pay another's d. arose 442, idea of three d, owed to gods, pitrs and sages 414–416, idea of liability to pay off one's d. was developed even in very ancient times 414, incurred for the purposes of the family by anyone such as a son, brother, wife, slave were payable by the head of the family 451, modern law about liability of sons, grandsons and great-grandsons to pay d 444–446, must be paid by him who takes the wealth or widow of the deceased 443, 448, 449; 453, no basis for distinction between secured and unsecured debts of father in smrtis 449–450' non-payment of, was believed to lead to being born as a slave or a beast in the creditor's house 416–417, order in which persons were liable to pay another's d 452–454, owed to the Crown or learned brāhmana have precedence over all other 441–442, propositions about son's liability to pay father's 444–445, sale of debtor's property for recovery of 441; sanctity of monetary d. arose from the obligatory nature of d, owed to gods, manes and sages 416, son's liability to pay father's suretyship debts 447 son not liable to pay illegal, immoral or avyāvahārika debts of father 446–448, son's liability to pay father's d during latter's lifetime 445–446, son's pious duty to pay off father's debts even if he received no property 417, 442–443, 445, time when d. must be returned 425.

Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act; adopts the rule of damdupat for all agriculturists, whether Hindus or not 425.

Decision (see 'judge', 'law-suit'), by caritra 260–261, by dharma illustrated 260, by oaths and ordeals when no witnesses available 358; by royal command 261, by vyavahāra, explained 260, four modes of arriving at 260–262, is not a pāda of a law-suit. acc to some 379, parties were asked to leave court when chief justice and sabhyas were considering the d to be given 379, precedents employed in arriving at 380, presumptions as means of 355–356, should not be arrived at by mere reliance on śāstra or texts but should also be based on reason and equity 259, 357, usages as means of 260–261, was based on eight sources 379, when unjust d. given, one quarter of the sin falls on each out of the litigant, witnesses, judge and king 276

Decree (see 'brāhmana', 'judgment'), different ways of executing a 383–384, for satisfaction of a d, a poor debtor (except a brāhmana) was made to work for creditor 384, when debtor was sent to jail in execution of a 384.

Defamation, truth of implication in, did not afford protection 512.

Defendant, cannot raise a counter claim in some cases 302; cases in which d. must make a reply at once 296, characteristics of a good reply of d 300, fines against d. for not being ready with his defence 296, not giving a reply even after time is allowed may be declared to be defeated 302, rules about adjournment granted to 296, rules about putting under restraint the d 290–291, rules about summoning a d. 286–287, was to reply in writing to the plaint 300

Delay, in the disposal of law suits 296

Democracies, of Oxydrakoi, Malloi, Siboi and others referred to by Greek writers 90

Democracy, true, did not exist even in Greece or other countries of the West, 15, 20, 93

Dependents, what persons are 412.

Deposit (see under 'fine', 'interest') 454–458, care required as to a d is same as that in a pledge 456, differs from pledge or mortgage 455, duty of person holding a d 456, if d not returned on demand, loss of it falls on holder who is also liable to be fined 457, must be returned in same condition and to the depositor himself and not to his co-owner 456, person accepting a d. is estopped from recognizing the title of any one except the depositor 457, return of, to whom to be made 456–57, rules about, extended to other bailments 458–459, smrtis extol the undertaking to accept a deposit 455

Deśa, extent of a d varied 138, governor of, was called rāstrapati or rāstrīya 138

Deshmukhi vatan 631

Deshpande vatan 631

Deuteronomy 389n

Devabhūti, a Śuṅga king, was killed by his minister 86.

Devadāsīs, that bad stopped temple service, were given work by superintendent of weaving 146.

Devala, smrti of 553, 556, 610n, 614, 617, 620, 626, 632n, 644, 649, 650n, 651n, 702, 763, 777, 787, 791, 860, 873, 943, 948–49, 951, 956, 960

Devapāla, com on Kāthakagrhya 880

Devāpi, story of 41–42, 608–609

Devarāta 715.

Devasvāmin 679, 715, 779.

Devīpurāṇa 181, 234, 910n, 911.

Dhammapada 185n.

Dhammathats, Burmese Law books 641n

Dhanurveda 49, 179, 215.

Dhanus, as measure of length 500n

Dharana, a silver coin 122.

Dhāreśvara, an author on dharmaśāstra 549, 557, 704n, 705 715, 733, held the view that ownership is known from śāstra alone 549, held the view that the allotment of a special share to the eldest son was given up by people 628

Dharma, meaning of, in partition 572

Dharma, aids to the understanding of 827, d and truth are identical 97, 260, flourished in perfection in Kṛta age and declined progressively in the succeeding yugas 244, 890–91, idea of, took the place of the conception of ṛta 244; instances of the transgression of d. by ancient heroes and sages 845–849, is more powerful than the mightiest 97, observance of, was the great social and political ideal in India 97, parisad, final authority in matters of 101, sources of 825–827, 863, usages as source of 825–827, 863, was the supreme power in the State and was above the king 241.

Dharmādhikaraṇika or —dhikaraṇa, qualifications of 126.

Dharmādhyakṣa, exercised the same functions as Purohita did in ancient India 126.

Dharmadvaitanirnaya 122n, 878, 944n

Dharmas, differ in different yugas 627 628, 869, should not be practised even though sanctioned by śāstra, if condemned by people 628–629, 869.

Dharmaśāstra, and customs 856ff, illustrations of conflict between Arthaśāstra and D. 9, in case of conflict of D. with practices or secular matters, king to decide acc. to D. 9, relation of, to Arthaśāstra 8–9, 868, was called smṛti 10; writers on, had a low estimate of human nature 238, writers on, insisted that Dharma was king of kings 176.

Dharmasindhu, a work 615, 669, 675, 679, 688–89, 692, 695–97, 739, 759, 877, 930, 940, 945, 947, 954.

Dharmastha (judge) 273; should possess the qualifications and status of an amātya 273.

Dharmasūtras, authority of 853.

Dhṛtarāṣtra 10, did not succeed to the kingdom because of blindness 43, 609, performed sacrifices though blind 846, recovered sight for a time through the favour of Vyāsa 847.

Dice, made of vibhīdaka wood 541, playing with, in Rājasūya sacrifice 541.

Dickeos 60

Diddā, a notorious Kashmir queen 40.

Digests, grouped into classes by provinces 878.

Dīghanikāya 135.

Digvijaya 69; description of 68, of Harsa 229–230, of Raghu 230.

Dikshit, Mr. Sh. B. 896n, 902, 915.

Dikshitar, Prof. V R 120, 213, 254n, 407

Dīksita, a predecessor of Jīmūtavāhana 715.

Dīnāra, of gold, silver and copper 120, 122n, value of 122n, was a synonym of niṣka 121n; was also called suvarna 121n.

Diodorus 103.

Dīpakalikā 247n, 344n, 370, 383n, 540n, 553n, 554n, 575n, 580, 597n, 614n, 764n, 774n, 793, 856n, 882n,

Dīrghacārāyana 2

Dīrghatamas, story of 361.

Discipline (vinaya) 51–52; based upon danda 51, is of two kinds 51, to be attempted by giving up six evil tendencies 52

District, officer over, was helped by a board of advisers 141.

Divodāsa, given as a son to Vadhryaśva 415

Divorce 537.

Divya (see under 'ordeals'); definition of 363.

Divyatattva of Raghunandana 362–63, 367n, 370n, 378n

Divyāvadāna 102, 116

Doctrine, of spiritual benefit, acc. to the Dāyabhāga 737–741, of spiritual benefit illustrated by diagrams 744–745; propositions as to d. of spiritual benefit 740–741, unjust to the claims of women as heirs 746.

Document 308–316, can be superseded only by another d. 312, classification of 309, conflict of documents of various grades 313; custody of, to be explained 313; executed by ordinary people need not be in correct Sanskrit 309, fabricators of d deceive women, children and ignorant people 314, genuineness of, how established 314, held invalid when executed by certain persons 312, is an indubitable and superior means of proof 308, 312; latent defects of, must be pointed out by disputant when produced 315, loses validity in certain circumstances 315, marked with royal seal, presumed to be genuine 314, minimum number of witnesses required on 312; oral evidence to contradict a d not allowed 312, requirements of a valid 311–312, sentence of death for fabricating a private or public d. 315; secondary evidence of the contents of, when allowed 313, when even a voidable d. ceased to be so 315.

Dramma 122n,

Draupadī, strange explanation of the story of D being the wife of five brothers 847.

Dravida, works of authority in D. school of Hindu law 545.

Dreams, portending good or evil 226.

Drinking, is worse than sexual vice in the case of a king 233.

Drona, commander of the Kauravas 79, 204

Drona (a measure of corn) differed for various purposes 1460

Dronaparva 6, 8, 79, 127, 131, 134–35, 168, 205–6, 208–9, 211, 214, 232, 643n, 845, 898, 904, 914.

Durga (a fort or capital) 178ff.

Durgā 368

Duryodhana 203, 210, perished through conceit 52

Dustaritu, a king, was expelled from his kingdom 26.

Dūta (ambassador or messenger) 127–129; duties of 128; person of, not to be harmed 127, 129, 209, qualities of 127–128, three kinds of 128; to be distinguished from a spy 129; to be sent after a line of policy is settled 128

Dvādaśāha, sacrifice, gave seniority to Indra 41.

Dvaipāyana 53

Dvaitanirnaya (same as Dharmadvaitanirnaya) 683, 878.

Dvārakā 208, 214.

Dvīpas, seven 134; said to be thirteen and 18 also 134

Dvyāmusyāyana, adoption of a boy as 685–687, Kshatraja son was so called by Mit and some others 659, succession to, by both mothers 723–724.

Dyūta (gambling) defined 538.

Earnest, what becomes of, if sale goes off through the fault of the vendor or purchaser 491.

Easements, as to doors, windows &c. 507

Easements Act, Indian 507n.

Edgerton, Prof 7.

Education, expense on 164–165.

Egypt, usury condemned in ancient 425n.

Ekavrsa, a hymn 76.

Ekoddista, a śrāddha 737.

Eldest, rights of e. son or daughter jealously guarded in Vedic age 41, son sometimes got all wealth of his father 41, son was passed over if he suffered from mental or physical defect 43; to pass over the e. son or daughter in marriage or succession was held to be a grave sin 42.

Elephants, do not figure much in the fighting described in the Mahābhārata 203, if not well trained cause loss of life to their own side 203n, lights to be waved before, at certain times 230, monopoly of kings in 197; superintendent of 149, training and medical treatment of 149, victory depended upon e. in ancient India 203.

Elphinstone, author of 'History of India' 203n, 397.

Emperor, distinction between e and king made in the Śatapatha Brāhmana 65, idea of, in the Vedic Literature 64–65, supreme e did not generally hanker after territory so much as after admission of superior prowess 68

Emperors, long lists of, in the Brāhmanas, Mahābhārata and other works 66–67, titles of 69–70

Enmity, of five kinds 225

Epigraphia Carnatica 377

Epigraphia Indica 17, 24, 30, 39–40, 44–5, 49, 66, 69–71, 76n, 105, 113n, 115, 116n, 117, 122n, 124n, 125–26, 135, 138–39, 142–43, 150, 153n, 154–56, 159n, 162, 164, 168, 172, 182, 194–197, 201, 246, 260, 264, 280–81, 283, 308, 315, 366n, 376n, 377n, 393n, 406, 422, 439, 496, 500n, 506, 575n, 724, 848n, 881, 890n, 896n, 898, 905n, 932, 934, 962

Evidence (see 'means of proof'), circumstantial 356–57, exceptions to the exclusion of hearsay 331, rules about late production of 349–50, taken on commission 331, what is hearsay 330

Evidence Act (Indian) 313n, 314, 331n, 340n, 341n, 349n, 355n, 457, 656n

Exceptions, are to be limited to the matters expressly stated and are not to be extended by analogy 672, 796n

Exchange, if inequitable may be rescinded 493, rules about sales apply to 494.

Exclusion, both males and females may be liable to e from inheritance 62, grounds of e from inheritance and partition 608–616, Hindu Inheritance Disabilities Removal Act abrogates most grounds of 611, persons liable to e cannot adopt, but may marry 617, persons liable to e. must be maintained 611, 617, sons of persons liable to e take a share if they are free from defects 611, 617, wives and daughters of persons liable to e are entitled to maintenance 617

Expense on education in the first decades of British rule 165

Experts, opinions of, to be taken 284.

Expiation, secret, for grave sins, forbidden in Kali 944–45.

Ezekiel 425n

Fa—Hien 50, 91, 183, 390

Falsehood, penance for telling an allowed f. in a judicial trial 353, when allowed 353–354

Family, customs of 883.

Famines, measures to be taken against 163, references to ancient and medieval 163–164

Fate, cannot accomplish anything without human effort 170

Father, could once make unequal distribution of estate among sons 623, has the power to separate his sons from himself and from among themselves 592, 622, partition made by f, if unequal could be set aside acc. to medieval works 623, position of, as heir to his deceased son 721–22, some smrtis allowed two shares to f. at partition with sons 625.

Fausböll 50, 91, 934

Fees, distribution of, among sacrificial priests 469–470

Ferries, charges at 193, persons that were given free passes to use 193.

Fick, 36, 158, 190, 268, 399.

Fields, duty of owners of, to construct a high paling or hedge 500, meaning of texts that forbid division of 586–587, rules about f taken for cultivation on rent but not cultivated 510

Figgis, Mr. J N, author of 'Divine right of kings' 35

Finder, of lost articles, rules applicable to 462

Fines (see under 'brāhmana', 'punishment'), against artisans, carpenters, tailors causing unreasonable delay 252, against goldsmiths purchasiog gold from memals nr slaves 253, against washermen for negligeot washing or dispnsal nf clnthes 252, against traders usiog false weights aod measures nr adulterating grains, mls etc nr raising prices beyond those fixed by nfficers 352, discrimioation io matters of f based on caste ceased tn be eofnrced from about 12th century 512, divergent views about the metal io which they were to be paid 393n, either fixed or variable 393, fnr giving false evidence 352, for manufactnring counterfeit coios or passiog them off 253, for oon-appearance in court thongh summoned and nble tn enme 287, for nnt returning a depnsit wheo demanded or demaoding a deposit wheo ont made 458, fnr theft 522, had to be paid by parties defeated in suits 382, half of the prescribed f awarded if accused promised not to commit offence again 513, higher f for thieves of higher castes 522, nnt impnsed upon brāhmanas, if they were first offenders and learoed and of good family 398n, nnt to be taken by king frnm men of lnwest castes snch as Cāndālas 514, oldest reference to f for assanlt 515, raoged from a kākini to confiscatioo of all wealth 393, rates nf f paid by litigants 382, recovered from thnse gnilty nf mahāpātakas were oot to be taken by king bot were to be nffered to Varuna nr distnbuted amnng learoed brāhmanas 407; three kinds of fixed f 393-94, were deemed to be lesser than corporal pnnishment 394, were to be paid in copper panas, wheo no metal mentinned 394

Fire-arms, whether knnwo io ancient India 213-214

Fleet, Dr 102, 139, 140n, 315, 925n

Flesh-eating, condemoed io Kali 944-45

Fnod, taking of, in the same plate with wife, forbiddeo 858n

Forests, superioteodeot of the produce nf 145.

Forts, are meant for safety of the king, the people and the treasury 178; kinds of 178-179

Fraud, vitiates all traosactions 3120.

Freedom individnal and oatiooal, happiness lies io 102, 237

Gadre, Mr A S 1960

Gadyānaka, of gold and silver 122n

Gāgābhatta, officiated at Shivaji's enronation 35

Gains of learoiog 581n, Āp aod Baud say nothing about 581, definition of, ace to Kātyāyaoa 583, Gautama oo 581, law about, now settled by Hindu Gaios nf Learning Act 585, meaniog of the words io Yāj 'acquired withnnt detriment tn pateroal estate' 582, propositions established by case law as to 584, Vasistha gave two shares to the aequirer 581, were partible if learoing was acquired at family expense or frnm the father or elder brother 582

Gains of Learning Act (Hiodu) 674.

Gambling, 538-542, condemned b Brahmapurāoa 542, in dispnt about, the keeper nf g bnuse is t final authority or gamblers appoiot by king 540, is nne nf the m ancient vices 541, Manu's ooe promising attitude tn 538, spe eanse nf dissensions among san 233, thnse who engaged in s gambling were liable to pnoish 540, worst of vices io a king 5: Yājñavalkya, Kautilya and allowed g under restrictinns a source of revenue 538-539.

Gana, meaning of 281

Ganapatideva, a Kākatiya kin a charter of security for sail

Ganarājya (repnblic) 87, iote seosinos are the root of th 87

Gandhāra, country of 135

Gandharvaveda 49.

Ganges, throwing bones of cremated body into 951
Ganikā, devolution of wealth of 148, duties of 148, qualifications of 148, salary of 148, was a veśyā who was honoured for her accomplishments 148n.
Gargasaṃhitā 892, 896, 919n
Garudapurāna 13, 160–161, 892, 962.
Gāthāsaptaśatī 154
Gattulāl, Pandit 825n.
Gautaśāstras, expounder of rājadharma 2, 4.
Gautama 17n, 553, 557.
Gautama, dharmasūtra of 3, 19, 21, 23, 25, 36n, 37, 45–6, 49, 56, 59, 66, 97–8, 100, 117, 119, 165, 167, 175, 185, 187, 189, 191, 192, 194, 209, 211, 212, 244–46, 250–51, 270, 272, 275, 284, 296, 307, 317, 320, 327, 330–33, 336, 343–44, 348n, 353, 389, 391–92, 395–97, 401–4, 409, 418–20, 422–23, 425, 428–29, 433, 435, 443, 446, 460, 474n, 482, 484, 494n, 501, 515, 517, 522–23, 527–28, 535, 548, 551, 566–68, 571, 573–74, 578, 581, 585, 588, 589n, 595, 598, 601, 607–10n, 612n, 613, 614–15, 617–18, 625, 627, 644, 646, 648, 649n, 650, 658, 690n, 702–704n, 706, 712, 715, 754n, 762, 765–66, 772, 776n, 781, 789, 793, 808, 815, 819n, 825, 827, 845, 848, 857, 863, 871, 874, 875, 880, 881, 883–84, 889, 932, 940–44, 946–47, 952–55, 958, 965
Gautamadharmasūtra, specially studied by Sāmavedins 853.
Gayā, tax on performance of śrāddha at 198.
Gāyatrī, a mantra 76
Geography, Purāṇic 134–135, 935
Gharpure, Mr J R 197n, 509n, 778, 804n.
Ghatasphota, for patita women 807, for those guilty of high treason 610n, for those guilty of grave sins 615.
Ghatotkaca 205, 214
Ghoshal, Dr U. N 16, 32
Ghoṭakamukha, an author 2.
Gift, by stinting one's family or servants condemned 472, certain objects cannot be the subject of, because of want of ownership or because of prohibition 471, eight things that cannot be the subject of 471, how acceptance of g may be made 474, ingredients of a 474–475, not delivering what is promised as a g or resuming a g led to other worldly consequences 473, of land looked upon with disfavour in ancient India 496, of only house forbidden 472n, promised to a brāhmana or for a religious purpose should be enforced by king and fine awarded 474, promised to an irreligious man need not be carried out 474, resiling from promise of gift of all property when allowed 473, seven kinds of g, that cannot be resumed 472, sixteen kinds of invalid g 472, that may be set aside by donor himself on account of incapacity due to minority, lunacy &c 472–73, what may be subject of 472.
Gobhila, smṛti of 870, 953, 956.
Gobhilagṛhyasūtra, 940, specially studied by Sāmavedins 853.
Gocarma, a certain extent of land 432
Gode, Mr P K 849.
Golaka, a kind of illegitimate son 646n.
Gold, superintendent of 144–145, value of, in relation to silver 121n.
Goldstücker, on 'Pāṇini' 306
Gopa, an officer who looked after five or ten villages and kept a register of the number of cultivators, traders, animals &c 143
Gopagiri (Gwalior) 159.
Gopāla, founder of Pāla dynasty in Bengal was elected a king 30, was a śūdra 39
Gopalan, author of 'History of Pallavas' 155
Gopatha Brāhmana 135, 565, 888, on coronation 74–75
Gorer, G on 'Bali and Angkor' 934n.
Gosava or gomedha 940

Gat 285
Gotrajas, as heirs 732–752, are either sapiodas or samāoodakas 752, meaniog of, acc to the Mit 748, peculiar meaning ascribed to the word g by Dāyabhāga 741–742, three views as to prefereocc among 750–751, widows of male g as heirs 751–52.
Governmcnt, (see under 'kiog', 'province', 'rnler'), fonction of, did nnt end with the keepiog of peace and nrder 59,
Govindarāja, cnmmentator of Maoo 730, 875, commentator nf Rāmāyaoa 112, 719
Grāma, meaning of 140n, 153, 182o.
Grāmanī aod Grāmakūta, see uoder 'Headman nf village'
Grandmother, paternal, as heir 727–728, 731, when entitled tn a share at a partition 607–8
Graot Doffs' 'Histnry of the Marathas' 106, 156, 164.
Grants, meotioo the exemption from taxatioo that went with them 195, of land called 'yogaksema' 588n; of land coold be made only by the kiog and not hy a district officer 139
Great Bear, coostellatioo of, was snpposed to stay in ooe naksatra fnr a hundred years 897
Gṛhastharatoākara 354, 420o, 525o, 614n
Grhyasūtras, aothority of 853
Groops, committee of twn nr mnre were tn lonk after busioess of 488, cooveotioos of snch g as guilds, naigamas, heretics were enforced by kiog 487, member of g who goes against heads nf g was liable to pooishmeot 489, rights and liabilities nf members of 488–489; whatever is gained hy ooe or by heads of g oo the busioess of g belongs to 489
Guardiao, deities of qoarters 368
Guardian and Wards Act (Iodiao) 461.
Gṛdhaja son, defined 647, 660.
Gnilds (see noder 'groops'), admioistration and compacts made by 157; eighteen, 10 Bnddhist times 159; had power to condemn those who broke their cnnventions aod to excommnnicate them 157, nf ksatriyas in Kāmbhoja and Surāstra and of workmen 158; rules about partnership apply to 481, nsages and conventions of, were opheld by king in certain circnmstances 158, 487.
Gunas, definitioos of, 223, proper emplnyment of, leads to peace and exertion 217, six 217, 223, snbdivisioos of the several 224–225; theory of mandala brooght in relation to the doctrioe of 222–223.
Gupta dynasty 902.
Gopta Empire, admioistrative system of 141–142, provincial admioistration uoder 150.
Gopta Inscriptioos 44, 45, 49, 68, 70, 72, 108, 115, 117, 122o, 124n, 159, 202, 213n, 264, 281, 506, 890, 924n, 925o.
Guru, paymeot of fees to 958.
Hālāhala, poisoo drunk by Śiva 372n.
Halāyodha 568o, 588n, 589n, 636, 784n.
Hamlet 296.
Hammurabi, code of 389n
Happiness, individoal and national, lies in freedom 102.
Haradatta, cnmmeotator of Gaot. Db. S, Āp Dh S, and Āśv. gr. 48, 60, 98, 121n, 192, 344, 387n, 395n, 419n, 428n, 433o, 460, 527n, 572n, 573–74, 578, 581n, 585n, 595n, 644, 646, 649n, 650o, 702–3, 712, 754n, 790n, 793. 825, 856o, 864n, 879, 880, 942, 953, 955, 957.
Harappa, excavations at 307.
Harbours, charges oo ships calling at 193, coofiscatioo when foreign boats are driven tn 193, to be guarded by king 193
Harihara 508o.
Hariścandra, pnrohascd Sunhśepa 660,
Hārīta, (versified) smrti of 150o, 247o. 259o, 263, 276–78, 285, 304, 312, 420n, 436, 473, 494, 524, 536, 569, 581n, 651, 652n, 764n, 856, 885, 947.

Hārīta (prose) 616, 625, 644, 646, 825n.
Harivaṃśa 39, 40, 214, 892, 895n
Harsa, king of Kashmir, plundered many temples 188n.
Harsa, king of Kanoj 67, 69, consoled by his dying father 63, elected as a king by the people 31; gave all in charity once every five years 164, preparations on digvijaya of 229, vast armies of 204.
Harsacarita 63, 67, 69, 85, 108, 115, 182, 206, 229, 390
Hart, Dr 295, 407
Hasta (cubit) measure of various lengths for various purposes 146n
Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela 49, 60, 66, 69, 94, 135, 162, 172, 195, 246.
Headman of village, (see under 'village'), came to be appointed by king alone and office of, 'hereditary 154, could inflict fines 155, food of, forbidden to brāhmaṇas 154; great influence of 154, had many appellations 154, love adventures of the son of 154.
Heaven, as the reward for all soldiers killed in battle 57, 58, as the reward for ascetic endowed with yoga 58, as the reward of kings who die fighting 57.
Hebrew, ancient code 389n
Heirs (see under inheritance).
Heirship, principles of spiritual benefit and blood relationship in determining 734–736
Hemādri 122n, 146n, 154, 610n, 928n, 929, 931n
Heracles 901–902.
Herdsman, duty of 497–498, liabilities of 498–500; not liable in certain cases when cattle stray into a field 500, wages of 498.
Heretical, sects 834, treatment of, in ancient India 883, works of, not authoritative, even though they agree in some matters with the Veda 834–835, 870–71; usages of, were tolerated by the king up to a certain extent 871, 881–82
Heretics, are those like the Bauddhas who do not regard the Veda as authoritative 487, conventions of, were to be enforced by king in certain cases 487.
Hetuvan-nigadādhikaraṇa 676.
Himālaya, regions of, had immense rainfall 147
Hindu family, is presumed to be joint in food, worship and estate 638.
Hindu Gains of Learning Act 585.
Hindu Heirs Relief Act (Bombay) 445, 453.
Hindu Inheritance (Disabilities Removal Act) 611
Hindu Law, codification of 820–824.
Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment Act) 749.
Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act 707, 724.
Hindu Women's Rights to property Act (XVIII of 1937) 604, 700, 752, 806.
Hiouen Chwang or Thsang 30, 40, 143n, 268, 924n.
Hiranyakeśin 214, gṛhyasūtra of 685n.
Hiring entered into three titles of law 476
History of Dharmaśāstra, vol. I. 305n, 871
History of Dharmaśāstra, vol II, 3, 7, 9, 25–26, 28–29, 39, 41, 47n, 49–50, 59, 61, 68, 70–71, 73–75n, 97, 101, 104, 112, 117, 124n, 134, 137, 145n, 146n, 148, 159, 164, 175, 189n, 194, 196, 202, 234, 240, 310, 333n, 334n, 367n, 398n, 401, 402n, 408n, 411, 416, 425n, 453, 471n, 472, 474–75, 481, 483–84, 487, 495–96, 500n, 508n, 517, 534–37, 541, 546, 550n, 564, 588, 599, 603n, 609n, 613, 615, 618n, 624n, 626n, 627n, 641, 643, 653, 659, 661, 675n, 679n, 682n, 687–89n, 703n, 701n, 713, 734, 757, 765, 776n, 806, 807, 824, 828n, 830n, 832, 836n, 842n, 844n, 846–48n, 856n, 857n, 858n, 865, 874, 876n, 877, 883, 885, 926n, 931–32, 937–41, 945, 948–50, 952, 958–59, 961–62, 966, 971.

Hulākādhikarana 851–52
Holdsworth, author of 'History of English Law' 296.
Holikā festival 844n, 851.
Hopkins 126, 173, 180, 190, 213, 229n.
Horses, countries from which good breeds of h came 149, 206, 232, lights to be waved before 230, sale of, forbidden 848, superintendent of 149.
House, partition of, not allowed by some writers 586–87.
Human sacrifice, symbolical 961–62
Hunting, benefits of 54, defects of 54–55
Husband (see 'wife'), and wife enjoy together the rewards of religious acts 603n, 738, duties of h and wife 536–537, first duty of h, to keep wife dependent and under control 536, not liable to pay wife's debts except in some cases 451–52, must try to deserve wife's regard and love and must honour her 537.
Huviska 24, 70
Hypothecation, without possession 419n, 431.

Ideal, the great social and political i was the observance of dharma 97, belief in i. perfection in the dim past and the distant future 885–86.
Illegitimate daughter, of even a śūdra, is not entitled to inherit or to maintenance 602, 810
Illegitimate son (see under 'maintenance') 601–603; from a dāsī or concubine born to a dvija is not entitled to a share on partition or to inherit, but got only maintenance 601, 809, of adulterous intercourse is entitled to maintenance 602n, 809, of śūdra from a brāhmana woman is not entitled to inherit to his father 603, of śūdra from a dāsī may take a share in father's property if the father so chooses 601, rights of a śūdra's i s. after his father's death 601–602, 809.
Images, weeping and dancing of, as bad omens 227
Impalement as punishment for theft of horses and elephants 522.
Impartible property (vide under 'property') 631, house and land said by some to be impartible 586–587, illustrations of 585–590
Impotent person, could marry and have a ksetraja son 617n, fourteen kinds of 617n, signs of 617n.
Incest, sexual intercourse with certain relatives was held to be 533.
Income-tax levied on interest 192
Independent, three persons are i. viz the king, the vedic teacher and the head of the house in his house 413
India, a certain unity of religious and philosophical doctrines, literary forms and ideals existed in ancient and medieval 136; divided into five parts in Aitareya Brāhmana 135, divided into two parts 135; no sentiment of nationhood in ancient and medieval 136–137.
Indian Antiquary 102, 138, 140n, 154, 168, 283, 315, 366n, 405n, 890n, 924n
Indications, eight, of a man's approaching fall 228
Indra, coronation of, described in Ait. Br 73; festival in honour of 844n, gods are said to have agreed to treat him as the eldest 41, killed dasyus and destroyed their cities of ayās 180; paramour of Ahalyā 845–846; raising banner of 231, 234, 367n, regarded Maruts as his sacivas 104, secured his position by energetic action 169, took an oath 359n Inheritance (see 'brother, bandhu, daughter, daughter's son, gotraja, parents, widow'), close connection between i and offering of rice balls to the deceased 734, 739, goes to the nearest sapinda, according to Manu 733, 748, order of, is to be arranged in such a way that the deceased's wealth may conduce to his spiritual benefit acc to Dāyabhāga 738, order of, under Dāyabhāga 739, order of, under Mitākṣarā 749, order of, to a sonless man 791ff, sister's son preferred as heir to the man's own son in Vāhika country 88n, strangers as taking it, 762–763, to forest hermit and ascetic 764–765; whoever takes it has to pay debts of deceased and offer pinda to him 443.

Interest, at 5 percent allowed after demand on deposit, purchase price &c 458, circumstances under which interest stops running, such as when king dies 425, debtors of all castes may pay it acc to rate stipulated 419, four, five or six kinds of 418–419, maximum recoverable at one time from a debtor 422, may be either stipulated at time of loan or not so stipulated 419, may be stipulated with reference to article pledged or to whether a surety is given 419–420; none allowed in certain cases 406, rate of, differed acc. to mercantile usage in different countries 421; rate of, varied also according to the nature of the article lent 422–423, rate of, first laid down by Vasiṣṭha at $\frac{1}{50}$th part of principal every month if something be pledged 420, rate of, very high in ancient and medieval India 421-422, rate of allowable it laid down by smṛtis 420–422, rates of, were two, three, four or five percent per month acc to the varṇa of the debtor 421; starts in certain cases even on articles loaned through friendship 426–27; taking even agreed interest beyond the rates prescribed by smṛtis or taking compound interest condemned 420, those taking exhorbitant interest condemned to Hell 421, very heavy interest charged to debtors that carried on trade through forests or across seas 422

Interest Act (Indian) 427n

Interpretation, rules for it of vedic texts 863–64, rules for it of vedic texts have been applied to smṛti texts also 864

Invasion, (see 'nīrājanā'); ambassador to be sent before starting on 226, auspicious and inauspicious sights before 227; proper time for 207, religious ceremonies to be performed before starting on 226

Irrigation 162–163, Megasthenes on Indian 162.

Ishavari Prasad, Prof 684n

Itihāsa, includes both Dharmaśāstra and Arthaśāstra 10, 51.

Itihāsaveda, 48

Intoxicants, were altogether forbidden to brāhmaṇas though not to kṣatriyas 848.

Jābāla Upaniṣad 841.

Jābāli, smṛti of 863–64.

Jagannātha, compiler of Sanskrit digest of Hindu Law 688

Jagannath Rao, Mr. N. 903.

Jail, construction of, acc. to Manu and Kauṭilya 406, 407, duty of āgāraka to release on the birth-day of the king or on full moon day prisoners that were young, old or diseased 406, separate accommodation for men and women prisoners in 406, special occasions on which prisoners were discharged from 406, 407

Jaimini (see under Pūrvamīmāṃsā), 20, 38, 72, 121n, 143n, 275, 443n, 470n, 471, 515, 527n, 550, 556n, 579n, 608–9, 622, 637, 654, 676, 677n, 694n, 695n, 704–05n, 719, 722, 725, 731n, 770, 777, 827n, 828, 830n, 832n, 835–837n, 841, 843, 848n, 849–51, 855, 864, 870, 905n, 938, 952, 963.

Jaiminīya-nyāya-mālāvistāra 835.

Jains 698.

Jāmadagdya 53.

Janamejaya, perished because he attacked brāhmanas through hot temper 52, 53n.
Janamejaya, king of the Nipas 53
Jardine, Mr John author of 'Notes on Buddhist Law' 641n.
Jarūtha, king of Ayodhyā, was killed by stratagem 85.
Jātakas 36, 50, 91, 140n, 159, 399.
Jayābhiṣeka description of 227.
Jayamati, queen of Uccala 80
Jayapatra (document embodying the judgment of the court) 380, ancient j from Java 381, distinguished from hīnapatraka 381, distinguished from paścātkāra 380.
Jayaswal, Mr. K P., 6, 14n, 20, 28, 29, 30, 32, 65, 66n, 73, 80, 90, 93–95, 103, 268, 381, 892, 896, 924n, 925n.
Jayatsena, king of Kāśi 86
Jenks, Dr. E, author of 'New Jurisprudence' 266.
Jews, usury was condemned amongst 425n.
Jha, Sir Ganganath 850n, 854n
Jīmūtavāhana 246, 475, 544, 549n, 568, 715, 781.
Jitendriya, a predecessor of Jīmūtavāhana 636, 769n.
Jivanmuktiviveka 882,
Jñāneśvarī 122n,
Joint family (see 'property', 'self-acquisition' and 'separate property'), characteristics of, under Dāyabhāga 594–595, inroads on the Mitāksarā system of 674, is larger than a coparcenary 591, manager of, is called kartā in modern times 592; member of, may have separate property of his own 577, Mitāksarā doctrine of survivorship rights of males in j. f abrogated by Hindu Women's Rights of Property Act 604–605; modern Courts have allowed individual members of j f to alienate for value their interest in the property 593–594; no individual member could sell or give property of j f. for his own purpose under mediæval Hindu Law 593; persons that constitute a Hindu j f 590; powers of manager 592, powers of father over property of 593; worship of gods, manes and brāhmanas is single for all members of, when they live together 572
Jolly, Dr 122n, 303n, 340n, 379n, 381, 417n, 426n, 443–44, 557, 565, 567, 646n, 648, 665, 688, 717, 727, 772n.
Jones, Sir William 819, 875, 930n.
Judge (see under 'courts'); country that has śūdra as j. meets ruin 273, duty of British Indian j. 599, fines and punishments of j. for doing certain things 275, five causes of the charge of partiality in 269, impartiality in, insisted upon in smrtis 273, not to hold conversation in private with any litigant 275, punishment for a j., who threatens, unjustly silences or abuses litigants 255, qualifications of 271, should look into causes of idols, minors, women, brāhmanas even if they did not complain 298; śūdra not to be appointed as 273; was styled prādvivāka or dharmādhyakṣa 272, was to hear a suit again if decision brought about by perjured evidence 353, was to be preferably a brāhmaṇa 272.
Judgment (see 'law suit'), contents of 380, document embodying j. was called jayapatra 380, exceptions to the finality of the j. of the king's court 385, obtained by fraud or force was to be set aside 385, review of, when allowed 382, 385; should provide for the recovery of interest on the claim decreed and the accretions 383.
Judicial procedure, appreciation of ancient Indian, by Western jurists 817, smrtis lay down a high level of 268
Junagadh, inscription of Rudradāman at 30, 89, 105, 117, 185, 890.
Jurists, ancient Indian j. were considerate as compared with Western ones 547n.

Jury, trial by 284.
Justice (see 'king', 'law suit'); administration of, as depicted in Mṛcchakaṭika 279–280, administration of, personified as Dharma 242, administration of, the personal concern of the king 242; court of, had ten aṅgas 277–278, court of, was called dharmāsana, dharmādhikaraṇa or dharmasthāna 243, 277, court of, was to be to the east of the palace 277, delay in administration of j is denial of justice 297, dharmaśāstra rules preferred to arthaśāstra rules in administration of 283, distinction between civil and criminal 258, impartial administration of, yields same rewards as Vedic sacrifices 242, king dispensed j. not by himself alone but with aid of judges, brāhmaṇas &c. 268–269, primarily dispensed by the king 268, purpose of administration of j is very high viz. the quest of truth 247, qualifications of scribes in a court of 278, seating arrangements for king and others in a court of 278; secular and spiritual consequences of doing, 386, two principles in administration of, are 'fulfil your promise' and 'cause injury to no one' 258, was to be dispensed openly in the court 269
Justinian 326
Jyotiṣṭoma 469, 470n, 833.

Kādambarī 24n, 277, 362,
Kadambas 39, 70
Kākavarṇa, a king 86
Kākiṇī, was medium for purchasing goods 126n.
Kalaśa, king of Kashmir 184
Kali, meaning of 886–887
Kali age, actions forbidden in 885–968, acceptance of secondary sons (except dattaka) forbidden in 599, 653, 659, cups of wine in Sautrāmaṇī iṣṭi forbidden in 865, date of the beginning of 896ff, decline of dharma in 891; description of what will happen in 892–894, marriage with women of a different varṇa forbidden in 599, niyoga not allowed in 627, 656, sacrifice of Anūbandhyā cow forbidden in 627, 865, special share to eldest son condemned in 627
Kālidāsa, 28, 37, 49n, 52, 54, 56, 63, 82, 101–2, 112, 223n, 229n, 230, 243, 269, 407, 702, 896
Kālikāpurāṇa 13, 42, 230, 372n, 679, 681n.
Kalivarjya 885ff, chapter of, refutes theory of unchanging East 967.
Kalivarjyavivṛtinirṇaya 928n, 929n, 930, 931n, 939, 940n, 942n, 945, 949–50, 953, 963, 966, 968n.
Kalki or Kalkī, avatāra of, 923–925, identified with Yaśodharman, 924n.
Kalkipurāṇa, 923, 925.
Kalmāṣapāda, story of 359n.
Kalpa, extent of, 891
Kalpataru, a work 156, 575n, 581n, 610n, 651n, 770n, 928o.
Kalyāṇabhaṭṭa 288
Kāma, ten vicious tendencies due to 53.
Kāmadhenu, a work 39, 581n
Kamalākara, author of Nirṇayasindhu and Vivādatāṇḍava 246, 692
Kāmandaka, author of Nītisāra, 8, 13n, 17n, 18, 19, 21–22, 25–26, 37, 44–46, 48, 49n, 52–55, 58, 83, 84o, 85, 97, 105–107, 109–111, 116–18, 126–29, 131–33, 142, 160, 163n, 170–74, 179, 181, 184, 186–87, 200–202, 208, 212, 216–219, 221, 224–25, 230, 232n, 238–40, 399, 400n.
Kāmasūtra, narrates that Prajāpati composed a work in 100000 chapters that was abridged by Manu, Bṛhaspati and Nāradi 4, states that dharma is the highest of the three puruṣārthas and kāma the lowest 9, 4, 7, 9, 47n, 53n, 86, 148, 150, 154
Kaṇika, mantrin of Dhṛtarāṣṭra 10.
Kānina, son, definition of 647, 660, son, was assigned to the husband of the girl, 652, 660
Kaṇiṣka Bhāradvāja 2.

Kaniska 24, 905n.
Kantakas, meaning of 162, supported generally by the queen, the Prince, king's favourites 162.
Kantakaśodhana—see under 'court'.
Kānva 524
Kanva, smrti of 943n.
Kānvāyanas, successors of the Śungas 39
Kāpālikaśāstra 48.
Kapur, Mr, author of a work on 'adoption' 662.
Karahāta, a 10000 province 139.
Karāla, king of Videha 52
Karandikar, Mr J S 903, 911, 912, 917-918, 920-21.
Kārirī, sacrifice for bringing down rain 838
Karmavipāka, doctrine of 392
Karna 204, a kānina son 660.
Karnadeva, a Cedi king 126.
Karnaparva 88n, 127, 205, 208, 209, 214, 216, 917, 918
Kārsāpana, of silver was in vogue in the South 123, ordinarily means a copper piece used as a coin 121
Karūsa, king of, was killed by his own son 85
Kāśi, king of, was killed by his queen 85
Kāśikā, com on Pāṇini's sūtras 126n, 145n, 156, 359n, 669, 723, 734, 775n
Kāthakagrhya 879
Kāthaka Samhitā 64, 564, 868n, 964
Kātyāyana, sūtra of 692.
Kātyāyana, author of Arthaśāstra 2.
Kātyāyana, smrti of 22, 88, 96, 105, 118, 119, 167-68, 189, 196, 199, 243, 246-47, 251, 258n, 260-263n, 264, 268, 271-76, 277, 281, 283, 286, 288, 291-94, 297-98, 301-06, 308, 310-15, 317, 321-22, 326-28, 330-34, 336-37, 339-44, 346-349, 351-52, 354, 356, 362-67, 380, 382n, 383-85, 387, 394-95, 398n, 403n, 410, 413, 417, 419, 421-23, 426, 427n, 428, 431-445, 447, 448n, 449, 451-53, 455-60, 462-66, 468, 471-74, 479-80, 482-85, 487-89, 491-95, 500-502, 504, 506-511, 513-15, 517-19, 522-25, 529, 532-33, 538-40, 554, 566, 573-75n, 578, 580, 582-85, 589, 592, 609, 617n, 637-38, 640, 643-44, 651n, 670n, 698, 706n, 707, 708, 710, 715, 721, 754n, 763, 772, 774-78, 786, 788, 791, 805, 810n, 817, 862, 868, 881, 882n.
Kātyāyana, author of Vārtikas on Pāṇini 415, 685n
Kātyāyana, śrautasūtra of, 470n, 500n, 627n, 662n, 836n, 940, 952.
Kaunapadanta 83.
Kaundinya 409.
Kauravas, army of 204.
Kauśāmbī, merchant from, went to Ceylon 937.
Kauśikasūtra 74n, 75n, 77, 361n, 435,
Kausītaki Āranyaka 641n
Kausītaki-brāhmana-upanisad 565.
Kautilīya (see under Arthaśāstra) 5, 6, 27
Kautilya, advises employment of poison, herbs and incantations 12, advises king in difficulties to deprive even temples of their wealth 13, does not advise people to eschew pleasures altogether 240-241, 1, 9, 10, 12, 17-18, 20, 21, 24, 28, 31, 42, 44-48, 50-52, 54-56, 58-61, 66, 69, 83-85, 87-89, 95, 98, 99, 102, 104-109, 111, 112, 114n, 116-121, 123, 124, 127-131, 134, 140, 142, 151-52, 154-55, 160-61, 163, 166-67, 169-71, 174-76, 178, 179, 181, 184-85, 188-89, 191, 193, 195, 203n, 208, 211n, 212, 216-18, 220n, 221-23, 228, 230, 232-33, 239-43, 248, 250, 252, 255, 257-58, 273, 275-77, 282, 284, 293-296, 298, 302, 303, 307, 310, 330, 332-34, 336, 342, 343, 345, 347, 349, 356-57, 380, 391-92, 394, 396, 399, 400, 405-06, 409n, 412, 418-422, 426, 428, 430, 433-34, 440-42, 447, 450-51, 454, 459, 464, 469, 471-72, 476, 478, 481, 489-90, 492, 501, 504, 508, 512-13, 515-17, 519, 525, 527-29, 533-34, 538-39, 566, 573, 589, 598, 608, 616-17, 619, 621, 623, 624, 631, 635, 655, 657, 659, 708, 763,

766, 772, 779, 786-87, 791, 804, 811, 860, 881
Kantsa 524.
Kavadidvīpa, 1½ lakh country 139.
Kavasa Ailūsa, story of 600n.
Kāvya, exponnder of rājadharma 2, is said to have ahridged the work of Brahmā 4
Kāvyamīmāṁsā 47n, 66n, 67, 134n, 136.
Keith, Prof A. B 122n, 388.
Kerala, conntry of, 261
Keśavapandita 13, 403.
Khādira-grhya-sūtra 692, 940
Khandadeva 848, 854.
Khāravela, king of Kalinga 962, accomplishments of 49, followed policy of daṇḍa, sāma and sandhi 172, Hāthigumphā Inscription of, 17, 49, 60, 65, 69, 94, 162, 172, 195, 246, performed Rājasūya sacrifice 70, was crowned king in his 25th year 80, was styled Kalinga-cakravartin 66, was yuvarāja for 9 years 116
Khaśa, trihe 861n
Kicaka, was met by Bhīma dressed as Draupadī 172
Killing, of animals forbidden for ten years in Kashmir 100
King (see nnder 'battle', 'brāhmana', 'coronation', 'ksatriya', 'land', 'rājadharma', 'ruler', 'taxes'), adhvaryu priest deputized for k when latter engaged in Aśvamedha and got three times his ordinary pay 28, administering justice and punishing the guilty were two among the prime fnnctions of 242, all sons of a k do not succeed to the throne bnt only the eldest 42, 87, appointed a hierarchy of officers over one village, ten, twenty, 100, villages and so on 141, appointed as many superintendents as were required for several departments of State 142, aspiring to he a samrāt (emperor) performed Aśvamedha and Rājasūya 70, anthority of, over brāhmanas was limited 25, business of, to see that proper weights and measures are nsed 166; calamities in a, are six 46; characteristics of an ambitious (vijigīsu) 218, compared to tne performer of a sacrifice 61, consultation hy, with ministers shonld he in a secret place 108, coosultation hy, with three or four mantrins 107, coronation of 72ff, could not be cited as a witoess 176, 336, daily routine of 60-61, depeodence of, on sāmvatsara (astrologer) 126, deposing a had k, allowed by Mann, Yāj and others 26, described hy some works as servant of the people 27-28, 36-37, disputes hetween parties shoold not be started by k or his officers 251, duties and responsihilities of, 56-60, doties of are either dṛstārtha or adṛstārtha 8, dnty of, to donate fields and money to brāhmanas acc to their worth 1, dnty of, to guard property of minors, women and helpless people 574, duty of, to prevent danger from thieves in villages and forests 1, 167, duty of, to protect arises from the taking of taxes 39, dnty of, to puoish those who swerve from the nsages of their family, caste, goild or group 881-882, duty of, to save subjects from internal calamities such as famines and floods aod epidemics 163, duty of, to see that people act acc. to rules of dharmaśāstra 3, 57, duty of, to support students, learoed brāhmanas and sacrificers 59, 164, duty of, to tolerate and enforce varying practices of people 861, edicts of, how promulgated 99, education of 46-53, election of 29, eldest son of, generally sncceeded 87, enjoioed to inflict heavy fines on himself for illegal exactions 97, entitled to take a sixth part not only of laod produce, hot of many other things 192, eulogy of the office of 25, faults and vices of, are due to ignorance and lack of training 233, faults to be avoided by 46, five chief duties of 57, foremost duty of, is protection 56, 57, 242, fountain of justice 242, fruits of the policy of 216, functions of, were religious and secular 101, gambling the worst of vices in a 54 generally a man alone became a k. 40, grand policy for a k. is aviśvāsa 12, grounds of obligation to obey the 37, had monopoly as to elephants, saffron &c 197; had to provide for śrāddhas and concubines of the deceased when he took by escheat 763, harmony between k. and brāhmanas 25, has parts of gods in him 23, has no friend 216, high ideal placed before 61–63, 96; hot-tempered k. fell victim to popular fury 98, how k. should deal with his officers 114, how k. should spend first and latter part of day 51, incurred sin, if he did not punish the guilty 2, is the maker of his age 3, 892, is the State, acc to Kautilya 18, is to look into lawsuits in the 2nd part of the day 95, 242; killing of, when sanctioned by ancient works 26, legislative action of, very limited in ancient times 98, levying an unjust fine was to offer thirty times thereof to Varuna 176, may prohibit export of foodstuffs in a famine 100, may inflict bodily punishment on cāndālas and other low people but should not take fines from them 408, may take cognizance of matters called chalas, aparādhas of his own motion without anyone's complaint 263–264, measures to be taken by, for safety against his own sons 83, measures to be taken by, for safety against fire and poisons 84, most important of the seven elements of the State 18, neccessity to a k. for curbing his senses and not falling a prey to kāma and krodha 53, necessity of moral discipline in the case of 52, necessity of the office of, emphasized 20–22, not showing himself to litigants suffers like king Nrga 243, not to run away from battle 57, oppressing subjects is made of parts of rākṣasas 25; oppressing subjects may be destroyed by brāhmanas 27, orders that could be issued by 98–99, orders on certain matters could not be issued by k. in ancient India 98–99, patta (tiara) for the k. 82, person abusing the k. had tongue cut off 513, policy of, settled in consultation with ministers may be divulged by birds and dogs 108–109, policy of, should not be known to an outsider 109, 111, procedure followed in issuing orders of 115, public durbar of, how arranged 114, punishing those that do not deserve to be punished and not punishing the guilty goes to Hell 242, purposes for which office of k. was created by God 21; qualities of a good k. 44–45, qualities of a k. are 36 acc to Śāntiparva 45, qualities of a k. are 96 acc to Paraśurāmapratāpa 46, reasons for raising the k. to the position of a divinity 27, responsibilities of 161–168, right of, to mines and minerals 196, shared in the spiritual merit and demerit of his subjects 37, 195, should consult purohita after consulting ministers 110, should honour and protect chaste women 59, should listen to the recital of Itihāsa 10, should maintain ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras that cannot maintain themselves 59, should not make litigants wait long 243, should perform two laksa-homas every year 228, should possess characteristics of certain gods 23, should save a portion of his yearly revenue 228, sometimes selected a younger son to succeed him 44, sources from which law was to be found by 100, stages in the education of 51, three greatest qualities in a k. are liberality, truthfulness and valour 46, throne of 82, that takes taxes without giving protection goes to Hell 191, to avoid gambling and hunting 55, to celebrate festivals in honour of certain deities 234, to decide acc to dharma in case of conflict between dharmaśāstra and practices 9, to found a district of villages on old sites or on new only 134, to guard his finances with great effort 184, to help agriculturists in various ways 191, to learn every night from his spies the intentions and actions of his enemies, officers and subjects 129, undergoes a ceremonial bath before invasion 227; views on the vidyās essential for the education of 48, vyasanas of 232-233; was to appoint chief justice and sabhyas 271, was to be like a father to his people 62; was to decide acc. to rules of dharmaśāstra and usages 270; was to look personally into income and expenditure 184; was to punish castes and guilds that swerve from their dharma 238, was to punish even the highest functionaries if they go wrong 120; was to protect and guard all minors, helpless men and women 665-666; was to show himself to all people every day 61, was to support the aged, the blind, the cripple, widows, orphans and pregnant women 59; was to uphold the dharmas of families, castes, guilds and even heretical sects that were not opposed to the Veda 158, 238; who should be 37-38.

Kingdom (see under State); description of a flourishing 177.

Kings, abdicated in favour of their sons and became hermits 101-102, assumed other names after coronation 82, checks that regulated and mitigated the absolute power of 96-97, 176, examples of k. killed by their subjects 52, examples of k. that suffered from some failing or other 53; historic examples of the election of k. 30-31, ideal of vijigīsu placed before 218, many k are mentioned in the Rgveda 63; most harmful vices of 53-54, of three grades 70, persons of all varnas became 38, privileges of 175, relative harmfulness of different vices of 53-54, rise and fall of, depends on planets 126, seven principal vices of 54, should take care against treachery from ministers and officials 85, six evil tendencies of 52-53; stories of k killed for their tyranny 26; stories of k. that perished through lack of vinaya 52, 53n, that met death in their queen's chambers 85; that met death or misfortunes through their carelessness or the stratagems of those around them 86, vices of kings 53-54, warned against being poisoned 83, will be mostly śūdras in the Kali age acc. to the Purāṇas 40.

Kingship (see under 'monarchy'), germs of several theories about 28ff, germs of the theory of divine right of, go back to the Rgveda 32, germs of the theory of divine right found in the Bible 36, glorification of 24, glorification of k did not result in the view that every king, however bad, was a divinity 25, ideal of k was to be a rājarsi 52, propositions involved in the full-fledged theory of the divine right of 35, symbols of 82; theory of divine origin of 23, 26, 32-33, 35-36, theory of divine origin of, supported on the ground of the doctrine of karma 27, theory of divine origin of, applies only to the supreme ruler (mahārāja) 25

Kiñjalka 2.

Kirātas, dwelt to the east of Bharatavarsa 67

Kirātārjunīya 8.

Kollam era, in Malabar 901.

Komatis 252n.

Kookana, province of 900 villages 139.

Korkunov's 'General theory of law' 20o, 93.
Kośa (see treasnry), is the root of the tree of State 184.
Kośa, ordeal of 373, 637, prescribed io charges of concealmeot of joint property by one cosharer 637.
Kothoma 228.
Kottapāla, an officer 168.
Kottarāja, au Āhhira kıng 86.
Krato, a smrti writer, 928
Kratvartha rules 609.
Krīta, soo, defined 648, 660–61.
Krodha, vicious tendencies due to 53.
Krsna, death of, started Kahyuga 896, drank wiue 846, had spies in the army of Duryodhaoa 131, married his owo materoal nocle's daughter 846, presided over the sangha of the Vrsnis 88, tried the several upāyas in the case of Kaoravas 173, went as eovoy of the Pāndavas to the Kaurava court 226.
Krsnahhatta, 938, 948, 960, 966.
Krsna-Dvaipāyana, author of 18 Purāoas 872
Krsnala 121, 125n.
Krta or Krtrima (see uoder 'son') 647, 660, distiuguished from dattaka soo 660, soo, now prevalent only in Mithilā and among Namhudri brāhmanas 660
Krta age, helief in, was probahly depict ed to ioduce men to rise morally higher 244; dharma flourished io full perfection io 244, had no kıng aod oo punishmeut 4, 33, 244, ideal description of, is sometimes asso-ciated with the picture of anarchy 244.
Krtyakalpataru (see Kalpataru), a work 13, 301n.
Krtyaratoākara 873n
Kṣapaoakas, held Veda unanthoritative 871
Ksatravarmao, a Maukhari king killed by hards 86.
Ksatriya, corporations of, lo Kāmbhoja and Surāstra practised hoth husbandry and profession of arms 89; dnty of, to fight without regard for gaın or loss 57, exısteoce of k ın Kali age denied hy some works 873; highest ideal of, is to die on the battlefield 57, most proper persoo to be kıng 37, not to drink wine prepared from flour 848.
Ksetraja soo, definition of 647, 659; commoo amoog ksatriyas 659, was called Dvyāmuṣyāyana by the Mit. 659.
Ksīrasvāmin, com. of Amarakośa 48, 66, 117o, 134, 140o, 147o, 163o, 454, 491o, 754n Kula, of laod, meaoiog of 142, 150o.
Kullūka, commentator of Manusmrti 39, 132o, 142, 150n, 178, 191–92, 220, 247–48, 251n, 272o, 280, 322, 383, 406, 421o, 429, 439n, 465, 470n, 523, 572, 582o, 587, 590, 653n, 675, 703o, 706o, 714, 720, 730, 733, 759, 774n, 788, 789n, 825n, 833n, 837, 840o, 868o, 874, 945n, 951n.
Kumārāmātya, meaoiog of 117
Kumārasambhava 229o, 907o, 916.
Kumārila (see under 'Tantravārtika'); 38, 705o, 829–31, 833–34, 838–39, 841n, 846, 848, 850, 855.
Kunda, a kiod of illegitimate son 646o
Knodamālā, a play 277n.
Kūrmapurāna 857, 875, 892.
Kuruksetra, brāhmaoas resıdıng io, glorified hy Maou, Vasıstha aod others 137, land of K., Matsyas, Pañcālas was called 'chosen conotry' 134
Kūsmāoda, mantras called 353

Laghu-Āśvalāyana, smrti of 646n, 927.
Laghu-Hārīta 701o
Laghu-Vısnu 764o.
Laghu-Vyāsa 872n.
Laksahoma 228.
Lalitāditya, political will of 817
Lalitavistara 308
Land (see under 'graot'); gift of, may be made to higher officers, hut without power to sell or mortgage 152, gift of, should oot be made by kıog as emolument to any servant 152;

lessee building on another's l. has to remove building when he vacates 480; of brāhmaṇa not allowed to be taken by cāṇḍāla, patita &c. 496, portion of l., set apart for pastures 499–500, sales of, revenue officers were consulted in 142, 497, share of king in produce of 191, six causes of disputes about 502, theory of king's ownership of all l. 189, 196, 495–496, trespasser building on l. of another without paying rent had to leave materials to owner when vacating 480–481.

Land grants, were written on cloth or engraved on copperplates 307–308.

Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) 196, 441.

Laṅkā, description of 180, 214.

Lanman, Dr. 770.

Laski, Prof. H., author of 'Grammar of Politics' 137.

Laṅgāksi 588n, 692, 864, *961*n.

Lavaṇa, a demon 203.

Lavaṇaprasāda, a Vāghela king abdicated in favour of his son Vīradhavala 102, made a treaty with Yādava king Siṅghaṇa 225.

Law, Dr N. N. 14n, 67, 222.

Law, equality of all people before 819, differential treatment before l. allowed only in exceptional cases and had gone out of vogue at least from 12th century 398n, favours minors 328, rule of, was the ideal of smṛtis 398n, 819, helps the vigilant 465o, sources from which the king was to find the l. 100, taking the l. into one's own hands punishable 388, 408, two schools of Hindu 544.

Law Quarterly Review 559, 560

Laws, classification of, in modern works 266–267, affecting Hindu ideas and practices 821, conflict between śāstric l. and usages 283.

Law-suits, adjournment of 296, are either sapaṇa or apaṇa 263, between husband and wife, father and son, teacher and pupil, master and servant, discouraged 299, compromise of 303–304, death of parties to 302, delay in disposal of, not allowed in ancient India 296, may be decided by courts of several grades 280, of two kinds, according as they originate in wealth or injury 258, place of inference and presumption in the decision of 355, retrial of 385, stages in 297–298, third stage in, is adducing evidence 304, transfer of, from one judge to another 386

Lawyers, existence of, in ancient India 288–290

Lea, author of 'Superstition and Force' 405n.

Lead, was supposed to destroy sorcerers 213.

Legal Procedure, four stages of 297–298, purpose of, is very high, viz. quest of truth 247.

Legge 183, 390.

Lekhapaddhati 225.

Levi, M. Sylvain 934n.

Leviticus 389n, 425o.

Lex Talionis 388–389.

Licchavis, Vaiśāli was capital of 90.

Līlāvatī, a work 122n, 145n, 370n, 898

Limitation, for claiming share when coheirs absent 635, law of, in ancient smṛtis 408–410, law of, plays very small part in ancient smṛtis 408, none applicable to pledges, deposits and property of minors, idiots, the State, women and learned brāhmaṇas 409, periods of, laid down by smṛtis only in a few cases 409–410, very short periods of, prescribed by Marīci in some cases 409.

Limitation Act (Indian) 325, 326, 328n, 635n.

Liṅgapurāṇa 40, 227, 892.

Liquor, superintendent of 147.

Litigant, grounds on which l. became a losing party 303.

Livelihood, means of 560n.

Loan should oot be given to mioors, slaves, women 413, time when l has tn he retnrned 425.
Local administratıon 153–159.
Lohābhihāra, meaning nf 910–911.
Lokāyata, meaning nf 46–47; views ascribed to 47n.
Lost property, owner of, has to prove title, possessioo and that he had not abandoned, mortgaged or sold it 464; rights of owner of 465; rules about 175–76, 464.
Low castes, eighteen, that were beyond the pale of the fonr varnas 285.
Lummini, village was exempted by Aśoka from the payment of bali tax 190.

MacCrindle 89, 103, 115, 162–63, 183, 204, 308, 901.
Machiavelli 10, holds that all men are natnrally wicked 238n.
Madanapāla, patron of the writer of Madaoapārijāta 793.
Madanapārijāta 569, 571, 581n, 587, 607n, 616o, 621o, 623, 656n, 659, 660n, 715n, 719, 721, 729n, 730–31, 750n, 755n, 781, 790n, 793, 870, 884, 928o, 929, 948, 960, 966, differs frnm Subodhini 793.
Madanaratna (on vyavahāra) 247o, 286, 299n, 330n, 333n, 334n, 344, 350n, 354n, 355n, 372o, 379o, 382n, 383n, 417o, 427, 464, 501, 505n, 507n, 512, 517n, 518n, 532, 536n, 545–46, 548n, 549n, 550o, 552, 553n, 555, 568n, 569, 571n, 572n, 599, 603, 605, 610n, 620, 623, 625o, 628n, 629n, 651n, 656n, 709o, 721, 729n, 733n, 764, 777n, 779, 793n, 797n, 861, 928n, 929n, 930.
Mādhava 120, 713.
Madhucchandas, soo of Viśvāmitra 663
Madhnparka, to whnm nffered 940, 945.
Madras (see Dravida), School nf Hindn Law 545.
Madras Debt Conciliatino Act 425.
Madya, meaning of 965; rules about drinking of 965–66; ten kinds of 965, touch of, forbiddeo to brāhmanas 965
Māgha, authnr of Śiśupālavadha 313n.
Mahābhārata 2–4, 10, 18, 21, 28. 33, 53, 61, 68, 78, 87, 101, 103, 127, 134, 152, 161, 168, 170–71, 180, 203, 206, 208, 213–16, 226, 243, 353, 542, 609, 644, 708, 819n, 853, 860, 885, 888, 904–921, astronnmical data in 904–921, Machiavellian advice in 10–11, purpose of the compositinn of 872, Śāntiparva of, deals with rājadharma at leogth 2.
Mahābhārata war, date nf 902ff.
Mahābhāsya 38n, 46n, 88, 104, 135, 140n, 141n, 144n, 161, 183, 190, 487, 499o, 541n, 550n.
Mahāksatrapa 49.
Mahāmātras, are officers mentiooed in Aśoka's edicts 112
Mahānandin, a king of the Śaiśunāga dynasty 899.
Mahāpadma (Nanda), 899.
Mahāparinibbānasntta 90, 91.
Mahāoirvānatantra 559, 560
Mahāprasthāna, meaning nf, 939
Mahārāstra, works of M. school of Hindn Law 545.
Mahāsthāna (ancient Pundraoagara) 164,
Mahāvagga 66, 90, 246.
Mahāvastu 91.
Mahendra, as fnuoder of rājaśāstra 2, Indra became M. after slaying Vrtra 65.
Maiden, became putrikā, accordiog to some, merely by father's onexpressed intentiun 658; brotherless m. came hack to her father's hnnse after marriage acc. to the Rgveda 658; marriage of brotherless m. was difficult in Vedic age 658
Maine, Sir Henry, oo 'Early Histnry nf Institutinns' 15; oo 'Ancient Law' 387.
Maintenance, debts of a man take precedence over his wife's or widow's right of 816; effect of uochastity oo right to 806–808; hability of maoager of joint family as to 804–805, patita and his son not entitled to 805, persons excluded from inheritance or partition are entitled to 611, 805, persons that are entitled to m. even when a man has no property 803–804, right of concubine to 810–815; son of a dvija from a śūdra concubine entitled to 808–809, sons of pratiloma unions were entitled to 618, 808; two grounds on which liability to provide m arises 803.

Maitrāyaṇīyapariśiṣṭa 653.

Maitri Upaniṣad 66.

Majority Act (Indian) 574, 667, 674, 699n.

Majority, age of, was sixteen, acc. to Nārada 395n

Majumdar, Dr. R. C. 82, 158, 159, 641, 934n.

Malamāsatattva 870n.

Mālavas, oligarchy of 68, were defeated by Samudragupta 89.

Mālavikāgnimitra 70, 102, 109, 116, 269, 407.

Mallināth a 49n, 229n, 252n.

Mamalāhāra, modern Māval in Poona District 139

Māmsatattvaviveka of Viśvanātha 928n, 946.

Mānasollāsa (same as Abhilaṣitārthacintāmaṇi) 13, 19, 21, 44, 46, 54, 106, 107, 109, 111, 118, 127, 133, 141, 174, 179, 188, 191, 192, 197–98, 200–201, 203n, 206, 208, 212, 224, 227, 242, 250, 251, 271–72, 400, 541, 881

Mānavagṛhyasūtra 641n, 856

Mānavas, school of, on Arthaśāstra 2, 48, 106

Mandala (meaning 'country'), extent of 138–139

Mandala (interstate relations) 217, different views concerning the number of elements that go to make up 221, four categories that are the basis of the theory of 220, theory of 217–222, theory of, is related the theory of śaktis and the six gunas 222, theory of, is set out in relation to an ambitious king 218, the element of truth in theory of 222, to keep balance of power among several States was the central idea of the theory of 222.

Māṇḍavya, story of 255n, though not a thief said through fear of torture that he was a thief 255, 357, 521

Mandlik 197n, 677n

Maṇimekhalai, a work 164

Mantra, has five elements 111, is the root of victory 111.

Mantraśakti 171.

Mantrin (see under minister).

Manu, compared science of Artha 6, Prācetasa, an expounder of rāja-śāstra, 2, 4.

Manu, Vaivasvata was made king by Brahmā 34, Vaivasvata was made king by the people 21, 31, 52.

Manu, divided his wealth among his sons 543, 622.

Manusmṛti is authoritative for all people 853, pre-eminent position of 868.

Manusmṛti 6–9, 17–23, 25–27, 32, 36, 38, 49, 42–44, 48, 51–54, 56–61, 71, 80, 83, 85, 95–98, 100, 102, 104–109, 115, 118–121, 123, 127–129n, 132–34, 137, 141–42, 146n, 150, 154, 158, 161, 165–67, 170–72, 175–76, 178, 179, 181, 184–86, 190–92, 194–96, 199, 205, 208–12, 216, 217, 221–22, 224, 228, 237, 242–45, 247–48, 251, 257, 261, 268, 270–74, 276–77, 280, 284–85, 295–96, 298–299, 303, 307, 312n, 315, 317, 320, 326–27, 330–34, 336–37, 342–44, 347, 351, 353, 355, 358–61, 363, 369n, 382, 384–87, 389–393n, 394–398n, 400–409, 412, 418, 420–23, 428–29, 437–439n, 440, 443, 447, 449n, 451–458, 460, 462–64, 469, 471n, 472, 478, 484, 486, 489, 491–92, 498–509, 511n, 512, 514–528, 532n–38, 548, 550n, 551–53, 555–56, 558, 563, 566, 570–72, 574, 576–580, 582, 584, 586n, 589n, 595–599, 601, 602n, 605n, 606, 610–11,

613, 615, 617–19, 621, 623–24, 626–28, 630, 634–36, 640–642, 644–46, 648n–655, 657–58, 660, 663–64, 666, 672, 675, 677–78, 686, 690, 691n–92, 694–95, 699n, 700, 702, 703n, 706, 710n, 712, 714, 718–21, 725, 727, 731, 733, 734, 736, 741, 743, 746–49, 752, 753n, 754n, 759, 762–764n, 766, 769–71, 773, 776n, 777–79, 787–90, 792n, 794, 797, 803–808, 814–15, 825n–27, 833n, 837, 839, 841, 848, 851n, 852, 854, 856, 857, 858n, 859–862, 863–64, 865–66, 868–871, 873–877, 879, 881, 883, 885, 887n, 890–92, 927, 931–34, 937–39, 941–43, 945n, 947, 952–5, 958–60, 963–965.

Manvaotaras, extent of 891.

Marīci, smṛti of 306, 326, 409, 465.

Mārkandeya-purāna 3, 13, 24, 53, 62, 134–35, 137, 170, 237, 239, 255n, 534, 747, 857, 890.

Marriage, customs as to 879–880 ; son of anuloma m held to be aurasa by the Mitāksarā 656, with brotherless maiden disapproved of in the Rgveda and in some smrtis 658, with girl who is a sapinda, sagotra or sapravara is void, acc to Mit. 837–38, with materoal uncle's danghter 876–77, 932, with paternal aunt's daughter 932.

Marshall, Sir John, anthor of 'Mohenjodaro' 180.

Marumakkatayam Law 560.

Maruts, scven 358.

Māsa, eqnal to 16th or 20th part of pana 121n, 420n, of silver was equal to 2 raktikās 121n, 420n

Maskarin, a commentator of Gautama Dh S. 121n.

Master ond servant (see uoder 'herdsman') 476-484, carc rcquired of scrvaot as to otcosils of m. 477, liabihty of m for improper acts of servant 481, 484, liable to finc if he does not pay servant's wages 478, liable to finc if he abandons a scrvant that is tired or ill on a jouroey 480, provisions for servaot's falling ill after undertaking some work for m. 478; servant not doing work after receiving wages was liable to fioe and to compensate m 477–478, time when wages may bc paid 476, what was to be paid to s when no wages settled beforehand 476–77.

Mātṛdatta 685n

Matsyapurāna 3, 9, 13, 17n, 18n, 22–24, 30, 40, 51–53, 59–60, 67, 83, 84, 86, 104, 105, 108, 112n, 117, 126n, 127, 133, 135, 160–61, 170, 172, 174, 175, 179, 181, 190, 226–27, 315, 355, 385, 389n, 401, 403, 406, 474n, 478, 481, 500, 508–509, 512, 521, 524, 528, 533–34, 642, 741, 890, 892, 895n, 896n, 897n, 899–900, 902, 905n, 923–24, 932, 956.

Mattavilāsa-prahasana 276.

Mauryas, conferred a boon on traders that for certain offences they were not to be sentenced to death 390, founded images for public worship for the sake of wealth 124n, 188n.

Mausalaparva 897.

Mavjee and Parasnis 377.

Maxim, obout the respective scopes of rule and exception 796n; caveat emptor 492; circumstances cannot lie 357, conventional sense to be preferred to etymological sense 780n; de minimis non curat lex 300, omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem 305, 348n; of bhūtabhavyasamuccārana 695, of brāhmana and śramana 38; of crow's eye 841n, of ekavākyatā 443, of 'dvayoḥ pranayanti' 704–705; of gobalīvarda 147n, 355, 526, 732; of mātsyanyāya 21, 238; of reconciliation of apparently conflicting texts 322, of same word not to be nsed in a literal and a secondary sense in the samc senteoce or context 725n, of sarvoṡākhāpratyaya 870, of nninvited persons being placed at the eod of a row 718–719, 731; what is not dissentcd from may be taken as approved 669.

MaxMüller 16, 306, 933n.
Maya, on the constitnents of Mandala 221.
Māyā (an upāya), illustrations of 172.
Mayamata, a work on Vāstuśāstra 182n
Mayne, on 'Hindu Law' 660, 757n.
Mayūkhamālikā, com on Śāstradīpikā 828n, 833n, 836n, 844n
Measnres, differed in different conntries and at different times 146n, 500n
Medhātithi, com. of Mannsmrti, 7–8, 20, 25n, 37–40, 58n, 59, 85, 95, 98, 100, 107, 129n, 150, 162, 165–66, 170, 176, 178, 192, 196, 210, 222, 242, 248, 280, 295, 322, 325, 330, 337n, 338, 344, 363, 383, 390, 392n, 398n, 406, 429, 443n, 464n, 469, 471n, 486, 488, 518, 550n, 557, 586n, 598, 605n, 619, 627, 653, 654n, 658n, 675, 706, 714, 718, 720, 734n, 764n, 771, 777, 779, 788n, 803, 828, 830n, 831, 851n, 852, 854, 857n, 859, 860n, 863, 865, 868n, 870–72, 874, 875, 892, 927, 937, 942n, 958n
Megasthenes (on India in MacCrindle's work) 115, 162–63, 180, 183, 192, 197, 203–04, 206, 210, 243, 308, 390, 403, 418, 901.
Mehta, Mr. R. N. 31.
Mihirakula, a ruthless Hūna invader, 924n, conquered by Yaśodharman 925n.
Milinda, questions of 289–90,
Mīmāmsā, (see under Jaimini and Pūrvamīmāmsā) 550, 694, 704, 725, is concerned with the investigation of dharma 838.
Mimāṁsākanstubha, a work 842n, 851n, 854n.
Minakshi, Dr 31, 82.
Mines, everything dug up from, belongs to king 144, 196; king was to guard all 196–197, superintendent of 196.
Ministers, change of portfolios among 114, council of 107, duty of, to prevent king from following evil course 109; eight, appointed by Shivaji 106; faults that disqualify persons from being 107; matters in which m should be consulted 110; necessity of 104; number of, varied 106; of two classes, advisory and executive 105; often rose from low birth 116, opinions of absent m. to be secured in writing 109, qualifications of 107–108; second nut of seven elements of rājya 104, to be chosen from the three higher varnas 108, to be hereditary, if ability exists 108, view of the majority of, to prevail 109.
Minor, age up to which a person was deemed to be 573–74; person undertaking to be guardian of, has to take as much care of property of m as of his own 460, property of, to be guarded by king 165
Minority, age of, determined by old Hindu Law even now in marriage, dower, divorce, and adoption 574; terminated after 15 or 16, acc. to different authorities 164, 573–74.
Mint, superintendent of 144.
Misarumiśra, author of Vivādacandra 246.
Mischief, to property punished with fines 516
Mitāksarā, is predominant in the whole of India except in Bengal 544, school of, divided into four sub-schools 544–545; theory of Buddhist influence on, examined 640–641, variance between the doctrines of the Dāyabhāga and the Mit 558–559; view of, that ownership arises in the son and grandson by birth 546–557.
Mitāksarā, com on Yājñavalkyasmrti, 7–8, 10, 44, 48, 119, 120n, 121, 123, 124n, 128, 129n, 132n, 139, 160, 167, 173, 175–76, 195, 209, 219–220, 223, 242, 247, 248n, 251n, 260n, 261, 263n, 268, 271n, 272n, 273n, 274, 280, 286, 287n, 291–93, 299, 300n, 301–02, 304–06, 309–11, 314–15, 318–19, 321, 323, 325, 328, 334n, 338n, 339–41n, 342, 344n, 346–50, 352, 358, 360n, 363n, 364n, 365, 366n, 368, 372n,

373, 380–81, 383, 385, 394–95, 397, 402o, 408, 410n, 424, 426–429n, 430, 432, 435–437o, 438n, 439n, 442n, 443n, 444, 447o, 448o, 459o, 462n, 463n, 464, 470o, 471o, 482o, 487–89, 491n, 494n, 495, 497, 499n, 500o, 501n, 502n, 504, 506, 513–15, 517-18, 521, 523n, 524, 525n, 531, 545–46, 548–50n, 551, 553, 554o, 556–57, 560–63, 567, 569–70, 573, 575n, 576-77, 579, 581n, 583n, 585–88, 592n, 593, 595n, 596, 601, 603, 605, 609, 610n, 612, 613o, 614, 616n, 617, 619, 622–23, 627, 629–30, 634n, 635n, 637, 639–41, 647n, 650n, 651n, 653, 654n, 656, 659–60, 664, 677–78, 685n, 690o, 701–703o, 704n, 706, 707n, 708, 711, 714n, 715, 718–19, 721, 725, 727, 731–32, 734, 737n, 748, 742, 743, 747–48, 750–53, 755, 760, 762–68, 771n, 773, 774n, 775, 776n, 780, 785n, 787, 790n, 792–94, 798o, 801, 803, 807, 809, 811, 813–15, 823, 827o, 828, 857n, 863–64, 866, 868-870, 874, 878, 882, 931, 933, 941–43, 947–48, 951, 955, 958n, 959, 961, 965, 970

Mitramiśra, com. of Yājñavalkya 864n, 867n, 873, 881.

Mlecchas, came to see Yoddhisthira's Rājasūya 937; dwelt on all borders of Bharatavarsa 67, paid tribute to Bhīma 232; sprang from Anu, son of Yayāti 937.

Moheojo-daro, excavations at 180, 307; walls found at, were built with burnt bricks 180

Monarchy, did not descend to eldest son, if he suffered from defects 43, hereditary m. was the norm of government in ancient and medieval India 87, 235, order of succession to 42–43, was generally hereditary and descended by the rule of primogeniture 41–42.

Money-lending (see 'interest'); called kusīda and vārdhuṣa 417; was not condemned when interest was charged at 5th of the principal per month 418.

Monopoly, of kings as to elephants, saffron &c 197

Month, whether it ended with Full Moon or Amāvāsyā 906.

Mootrion, W A. on 'The Hindu will in Bengal' 818n.

Morals, theory of progressive deterioration in 886.

Mortgage (see under 'pledge', 'transaction'), creditor fined as a thief if he did not allow redemption, when debtor has the right and is ready to redeem 433; particulars such as boundaries must be given in deed of 431; redemption of, on the death or in the absence of mortgagee 435; submortgage, not allowed by some 429; when executant of m. may lose his ownership 433–34; when holder of m can sell property for recovery of dues either privately or through court 434; when redemption of, can be secured 433–34.

Mother, cannot be legally abandoned by son, though she be patita 613n, 804, 948; divergent views about the right of m. to a share on partition 605–606; does not include step-mother in the matter of inheritance 724; entitled to a share when her sons or stepsons come to a partition but she cannot compel partition 605; inheriting to her son takes a limited estate 723; Madras High Court does not allow a share to a m on partition 606; preferred to the father as an heir to her deceased son by the Mit. and some other works 721–22

Mṛcchakaṭika 121n, 255o, 271, 275, 277, 279, 290, 293n, 344-45, 357, 362, 389, 391, 399, 407, 456

Mṛttikāvatī 108.

Muhūrtas, fifteen of the day and 15 of the night 907n.

Mūla, śānti for birth on 966.

Mulla, Sir D. F. on 'Hindu Law' 660.

Muṇḍakopaniṣad 888.

Musicians, and actors were not to take excessive gifts or indulge in extravagant praise of patrons 253.
Nābhānedistha, story of 543, 545.
Nāgaraka, duties of 149, 406
Nāgasena 108.
Nahusa 52-53, 55, 845.
Naigama, meaning of 487.
Naikṛns, adoption of girls by 972.
Nala 53, 55.
Nambudri brāhmanas 657.
Nanabhai Haridas, Mr. Justice 591n.
Nana Phadnis 386.
Nanaghat Inscription 66.
Nānaka, 121n,
Nandana, com of Manusmrti 587, 774n, 875.
Nanda Pandita 192, 403, 684, 717, 727, 735.
Nandas, Mahāpadma, the first of 900; one of, was killed by Cānakya 86.
Nārada, author of work on politics 70.
Nārada, is a thoroughgoing advocate of the theory of divine right of kings 35-36.
Nāradā, smṛti of, 3, 9, 17, 23, 27, 32, 35, 57, 95, 98, 121n, 123, 146n, 158, 159n, 166-67, 187, 189, 195, 206, 242-46, 248, 250, 257, 259, 260n, 262-64, 269-76, 278, 279n, 280, 286-288n, 289n, 291-94, 296, 299-305n, 306, 308, 309-15, 317-18, 320, 322, 327, 330-334, 337-39, 342n, 343, 346-350n, 351, 354, 356-59, 362-68, 370, 372n, 373-74, 376n, 379-80, 382-83, 385-86, 388-89, 394-96, 402-404, 408-409, 413, 416-18, 420-22, 425-28, 431, 433, 434n, 435-36, 438, 440, 442-43, 445, 446n, 447, 449n-52, 454-58, 460, 462-63, 466-67, 469, 471-72, 474, 476-92, 497-502, 504-505, 507, 509-16, 519-26, 528, 533-36, 538-40, 545, 552, 555-56, 567-69, 572-73, 577n, 580, 582, 584, 590, 592, 595, 598, 605, 610-11, 617n, 621, 623-25, 634n, 638, 640, 643-44, 650-652n, 660, 663, 665n, 703n, 706, 709, 714, 747, 749, 762, 773, 790, 803n, 804, 810, 816, 867, 868, 882-83, 885, 932, 934, 936, 952.
Nāradīya-purāna 656n, 892, 895n, 928, 939.
Narasimha, avatāra of Visnu 214.
Nārāyana commentator of Āśv śr. 685n, 856n, commentator of Manusmrti 714, commentator of Āśv gr. 879.
Nationality, merits and defects of sentiment of 137-138.
Nationhood, sentiment of, how far prevalent in ancient India 136-138.
Nayaviveka of Bhavanātha 550n, 555n,
Nibandha, meaning of 575n.
Nibandhanakāra, a writer 258.
Nietzsche 215n.
Nilakantha, commentator of Mahābhārata 161n, 202, 221n, 650, 893n, 908n, 911n, 912n, 913, 914n, 917.
Nilakantha, author of Nitimayūkha and Vyavahāramayūkha 13, 610n, 668, 722, 878
Nilakantha Sāstri, Prof, K A., author of 'Studies in Cola history' and 'Pāndyan kingdom' 156, 196, 400n, Nimi 52.
Nirājanā, the rite of waving lights before armies, horses, elephants, weapons &c. 230-231, 910n, 911.
Nirnayasindhu 236, 545, 615, 626n, 627, 657n, 668n, 669, 679n, 680, 688n, 692, 696, 697, 739, 759, 873, 878, 910n, 911, 926, 928n, 929n, 930, 931n, 938, 940, 944-45, 950, 960-61, 963-964.
Nirukta 28, 41, 104, 164, 276, 415, 519n, 541, 543n, 544, 612, 641, 657n, 658, 714, 754n, 845, 863, 886n, 889.
Nisāda, (same as Pārasava) 599.
Niścalapuri, an adept in Tāntric rites 81.
Nitimayūkha of Nilakantha, 13, 38, 48, 72, 74, 75n, 79-81n, 82, 170, 217, 227.
Nitiprakāśikā 4, 13, 60, 62, 112n, 205, 208, 214.
Nitisāra (see under 'Kāmandakiya-nitisāra also), 5, 6, 8.

Nītiśāstra, meaning nf 8
Nītivākyāmrta, 19, 43, 47n, 50–51, 69, 85–86, 105, 107–08, 110–113n, 119n, 128n, 133, 166, 171, 172n, 174, 179, 203n, 217–18, 220n, 221, 232, 240.
Nivartana, extent of 141n; why so called 145n
Niyoga, practice nf, condemned by Āpastamba 644, practice nf, prohibited in Kali age 627, 814.
Non-conformists, harsh laws against, in England 547n.
Nrga, story of king 243, 296.
Nrsimhapurāna 892, 923–24.
Nuisances, rules for preventing, on public roads and near private houses 508.
Nyāsa (deposit) 454–455.
Nyāyasudhā, com. on Tantravārtika 828n, 837n, 843n, 847, 851n, 852n.
Nyāyasūtra 46n, 589n.
Oaths, special, how taken 360, special, taken by Vasiṣṭha and others 359; were taken not only in judicial proceedings but also in ordinary dealings 358.
Oaths Act (Indian) 344n.
Offenders, had to pay fine to king and bear expenses of medical help and food of the injured 516.
Officers, emoluments of, in charge of a village, ten villages &c. 150–151; forty ways of embezzlement of Govt. money by 144; grades of 113, high, different at different times 111–112, king not to side with o but with the people 114; liability of, to catch thieves and make good loss 1, 167; pay of 113, 120; pensions and gratuities to, provided by Kautilya 152; qualifications of o of several departments 142; rules about casual leave, sick leave and pension after 40 years' service for 152; special functions of certain high 114, taking bribes were deprived of wealth and banished 161, ten principal o. of the king 113; transfer of 152; very high salaries paid to high 152–153.
Oldenberg 229n.
Oligarchies in ancient India 87; became rare after the 5th or 6th century A.D. 89.
Oliver Twist, by Dickens 60.
Oppert, Dr. 213.
Ordeals (see under 'divya'); all allowed in all castes, except poison which was not for brāhmanas 365; all, to be administered by Chief Justice in the presence of king, sabhyas and brāhmanas 367, are to be resorted to only when none of the human means of proof are possible or available 304–05, 363, brief history of 361–362, by whom not to be undergone 365, Candalādevī, a Ratta queen, underwent the ordeal of striking a snake in a jar 366n; Dharma, the principal deity in the procedure of 368, earliest reference to, in Pañcavimśa Brāhmana and Chāndogya Upanisad 362; generally end in immediate decision 358; generally to be administered to defendant 364, 365, may be administered to any litigant by mutual agreement 364; mentioned in epigraphic records 376–77, of balance, description of 369–70, 376n; of balance to be administered to minors, women, very old men, the blind, the cripple, the diseased and brāhmanas 365, of balance, fire, poison and water to be administered in claims of over 1000 panas and in charges of treason and of a grave sin 365; of dharma described 375; of fire, described 370–71, 376n; of kośa, allowed in all claims of whatever value 365, of kośa, described 373–74, of phāla 375, of poison, described 372–73; of snake in the jar 367; of tandula 374, of taptamāsa 374–75, of water, described 371–72, 376; of water and poison bad gone out of vogue in the age of the Smṛticandrikā, 371, persons of bigher castes to be treated as Śūdras in o if they follow professinn of cowherds, traders, artisans, domestic servants 365; persons wbo could undergo o throngb depnties 366, prevalence of, in judicial systems of most countries in ancient times 375–76, procedure common to all 368–69, proper place for o. 367–68, proper times and seasons for several 367, to be administered to mleccbas, untouchables, slaves, offspring of sankara are those customary among them 366, undergone by Mahomedan litigants under Maratha rule 378, were in vogue during Maratha rule 377–78; when not to be administered to certain persons 365–366; when optional with human means of proof 305.

Ornaments, ordinarily worn by members of a joint family and their wives were not to be divided at a partition 587, 596; property of women in 771, 777.

Ortolan, author of 'History of Roman Law' 389n, 441n.

Othello 533.

Outcast (see under 'patita'); excluded from inheritance or partition 610–611; son of, excluded from share or inheritance 611

Ownership, arises, acc. to Gautama, in five ways in the case of all castes 317, 548, arises by birth in the case of sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons 552–554, eight modes of acquiring, acc. to Vasiṣṭha 317; exact definition of, is difficult 554, how partition is a source of 549n, is of various kinds 554, long possession is not expressly mentioned as source of o. in ancient works 317; mode of transferring o. is by transfer of possession 319, of coparcenary proprety under Mitākṣarā 561; reasons for the view that o. arises from partition 552–553, special sources of o. among brāhmanas and the other castes 317, in be distinguished from mere possession 554, whether understood from śāstra alone 448–451

Oxen, how many were to be yoked in a plough 150n.

Padas, 32, of which the king could take cognisance without a person's complaint 265.

Padmāvati 108

Pala, was equal to 320 raktikās 121.

Pāla, dynasty of Bengal, founded by Gopāla 30.

Palace, gate of, should face south 1; had dancing halls 180, had seven or eight storeys 180, measurements of, acc. to Bṛhatsamhitā 180, position and extent of king's 181, should be in the centre of the capital 1.

Pālaka, a king 399,

Palibothra (vide Pāṭaliputra) 204.

Pallava, dynasty in South India 31, 69, 162, 890.

Paṇa, is ordinarily of copper 121, of 80 or 100 raktikās 121n; weight and value of 120ff.

Pañcasiddhāntikā 889, 895, 898

Pañcatantra 5, 8, 25, 78, 111, 160n, 161, 171n, 178, 949n.

Pañcavimśa Brāhmana 361.

Panchayats 280–281.

Pāndavas, army of 204, started on the Great Journey in the Himālaya 939

Pandita, supplanted purohita in course of time 126.

Pāṇḍu (see under Dhṛtarāstra) 55, 68, 609.

Pānini 19, 38n, 46n, 47n, 66, 88, 117n, 124n, 125n, 134, 140n, 141n, 144n, 145n, 156, 183, 190, 330, 415, 434n, 435, 464n, 487, 491n, 494n, 541, 544, 550n, 551, 555n, 581n, 660, 685n, 707, 722n, 726, 734, 754n, 762n, 774n, 775n, 852n, 936.

Pannālal, on 'Kumann local customs' 675, 684.

Parāśara, author of a work on astrology and astronomy 906n, 916, 917, 919n.

Parāśara, authnr nn Arthaśāstra 2
Parāśara, authnr nf a work in prose 715n, 718.
Pārāśaras, schnnl nf 2, 83, 233.
Parāśara, smrti nf, 58, 124n, 185o, 211, 432n, 646n, 668, 703n, 791, 869, 892, 935, 942-44, 946-47, 949, 952, 956.
Parāśara-Mādhavīya, 38, 124n, 185n, 247, 258n, 259n, 260-61, 263-265n, 270n, 275n, 277-78, 281, 282o, 283, 284n, 285n, 286n, 287n, 292, 297-99, 302, 303n, 305n, 311, 314-15, 317, 326n, 328, 331n, 336o, 337n, 341n, 342n, 345n, 346n, 347n, 348n, 354n, 355n, 357n, 358n, 366n, 367, 379n, 380n, 383n, 385n, 386n, 387n, 410n, 412o, 419n, 421, 424n, 426n, 429, 431, 432n, 434n, 438n, 439n, 441n, 442n, 445n, 449n, 451n, 455n, 456n, 457n, 458n, 460n, 462n, 463o, 464n, 465n, 466n, 468n, 472n, 473n, 477n, 478n, 479o, 480n, 483n, 491n, 499o, 501, 505n, 506n, 510o, 514n, 516n, 521, 527n, 529n, 531n, 532n, 533n, 539n, 540n, 545-46, 549, 551, 553n, 556n, 580n, 581n, 582n, 585n, 586n, 593o, 599, 607n, 609n, 620n, 621o, 623o, 628n, 636n, 642, 709, 712, 713n, 715n, 721n, 733n, 755n, 763n, 769n, 772n, 777n, 779o, 780n, 782, 783n, 790o, 791, 793, 800o, 810n, 856n, 862n, 867n, 870, 877, 884-85, 927, 928o, 929, 939n, 943n, 944.
Pāraśava soo (same as śaodra) 599.
Pārasīkas, custnm of marryiog one's own mother among 859o.
Pāraskara 791.
Pāraskara-gṛihyasūtra 828n, 856, 866, 880.
Parasurāma, enjnyed earth fnr a lnng time hy conquest nf six evil tendeocies 53.
Paraśurāmapratāpa, a wnrk, 46, 179, 189n, 196, 215
Pargiter, author of 'Dynasties nf the Kali age' 900, 925n
Paribhāṣāprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya) 840n, 865n, 872n, 873n, 881.
Pārijāta, a work, 581n, 589n, 625o, 656, 660, 686, 784o, different from Madanapārijāta 581o.
Parikṣit, grandson nf Arjuna 900.
Pārṇplava 415.
Parnālaparvata—grahanākhyāoa of Jayarāma 925
Partitinn (see 'father', 'grandmnther', 'mnther', 'soo'), chief matters tn be discnssed under, are fnur 563; Dāyabhāga admits nnly twn times fnr 567-568, definitinn nf 560-561; definitinn nf p by Dāyabhāga criticized by Dāyatattva 561, divergeoce nf views abnot giving a share to uomarried sisters at a partitinn 619-20; evidence nf 638, fnur times for, acc. tn Madanapārijāta 569, general rule that p. nnce made is final 634; grandmnther's right tn a share at 607-608, grnunds of exclnsioo from 608-616; in certain cases allowed acc. to patoibhāga 607, io the sense of mere severaoce of interest may take place by mere onilateral declaratinn nf ooe member 562, minnrity nf a coparcener was no bar to 573; mnther's right to a share at 605-606, no share allnwed tn nnmarried sisters in modern times, hnt ooly marriage expenses 620, nf concealed prnperty 635-637; per stirpes, explained 569-70, 632-634; prnvisinn for marriage expenses of uomarried sisters 619, provision for saṁskāras nf brothers 619, prnpositinns nbnut 631; re-opening nf, when allowed 634-636, 617, 618, right of absent cnparcener tn claim 634-635, rule that all snns divide equally irrespective nf whether they are sons nf different mothers 607, rule of eqnal division hetween father and snn nr brnthers favoured by most smrtis 623; safeguarding minnr's share at a p. 573, soo's right tn demand partitinn frnm father took ages tn evolve 563-564; son's right tn partition encnnraged from reli-glous sentiments 571–72, son's right to p. in father's lifetime existed even in Vedic age 564–565, three main times for, according to Mitāksarā 568–569, time for 563ff, two senses viz. division by metes and bounds and severance of interest only 562, under Dāyabhāga no p. can be claimed as long as father is alive 569.

Partition Act (Indian) 586n,
Partnership 466–470, ancient dharmasūtras are silent about 469, duties of partners in 466–67, liabilities of partners in a 466, Manu extends the rules about distribution of fees among sacrificial priests to partners in 469, qualifications of partners in 467–468, rights of partners in 467–468, shares of artisans in profits of p 468.
Partnership Act (Indian) 467n.
Parvan days 737n
Pārvana śrāddha 737,
Passage (see 'way') 737
Passports, superintendent of 149
Past, diametrically opposite views about 244.
Pastures, superintendent of 149, provided round villages and towns 161, 499–500
Pātaliputra, administration of, as described by Megasthenes 183, had a wall of wooden palisades 180, Patañjali's references to 183.
Patañjali, author of Mahābhāsya 46n, 88, 124n, 125n, 144n, 183.
Pathak, Prof K B 924n
Patita (see under partition), being p entailed loss of estate or inheritance only if no prāyaścitta was performed 547n, 615, daughter of p was not treated as p. 616, ghatasphota for outcasting a p 610n, 615, son of p was excluded from partition or inheritance and even maintenance 611, 616–17, who was p. 612ff, women, even if they performed no prāyaścitta, were not to be cast on the streets, but were to be given maintenance 615.
Patnī, meaning of 707.
Patriarchal family, father's powers in 563.
Pannarbhava, a subsidiary son 661, definition of 648.
Paura-jānapada 93–95.
Penal Code (Indian), 300, 395, 473n, 479n, 512n, 513, 518n, 523n, 529n, 531n, 532n.
People (see under 'subjects'), also spoken of collectively as Visnu 25, calamities of, have graver consequences than those of the capital 233, protection of, consists in preventing external and internal aggression 56, protection of, highest duty of ruler 56
Perjury, entailed secular and also otherworldly consequences 351.
Peshwa's Diaries 377.
Philosophy, purpose of all branches of Indian is the quest of truth 247.
Physicians, punished with fines for being careless or for not informing officers in serious cases 149
Pigeons, employed to carry official letters 149.
Pilgrimages to distant places, forbidden in Kali for brāhmanas 953
Pindas (see under śrāddha)
Piprahva vase, writing on 307.
Piśuna, author of a work on rājaśāstra 2, 83, 233.
Piśunaputra, a writer 2.
Pitāmaha, smrti of 262–63, 265–66, 269, 281–82, 285, 288, 291, 296, 318, 327, 362–65, 367, 369n, 372n, 373, 379, 862,
Pitāmahasiddhānta 889
Pitrgāthās, from Matsyapurāna 642
Plaint (see under 'pleadings'); contents of 293–294, faults in 299, reasons which make a p unacceptable 299, rules about amendment of 293, rules about preference, when several persons present p at same time 298, ten details of a p about immovable property 293–94, various sanskrit words for 292, was written down with all details when defendant appeared 292

Plato, approved of slavery unreservedly 15n; author of 'Republic' 50, author of 'Laws' 114n, 244n; end of State was good life, acc. to 237.
Plea, of former judgment how proved 301.
Pledge (ādhi), classification of, acc to Nārada and Bṛhaspati 428; duty of person who accepts a p to take proper care 432-33, debtor is responsible for the loss of 432-433, general rule that a p to be enjoyed carried no interest 430, if p lost or deteriorates without any fault of the creditor, debtor to bear the loss 432-33, person making a p of the same thing to two different people was punished 432 subject of p is lost if not redeemed within the period of grace 429, three rules of Yājñavalkya about 428-29, what is sapratyaya p 430
Pliny 901
Poison, effects of, on various birds 84
Poisoned food and fire 84.
Poisoning of kings, measures against 83
Pollard, author of 'Conscience and liberty' 547n
Pollock 554, 555
Portents, in the heavens, sky and on the earth before an invasion 227.
Possession (see under 'title'), adverse p against minors and others 328, divergence of views about the relation of title to 317, exception to the rule of loss of ownership, by long 327, for three generations without break prevails over bare title 319, long p not mentioned in ancient works as a source of ownership 317 meaning of trip uruṣa p 318, meaning of long p 320-321, must have five characteristics in order to be valid 318, of agnates and cognates is not necessarily adverse 326 of one co-owner is ordinarily for all co-owners 327, one who pleaded mere possession and no title was deemed a thief 318, periods of adverse p that gave rise to ownership acc to different writers 323, principal mode of transfer was delivery of 319 some texts prescribe for loss of ownership short periods of 325-326 was nine points of law in ancient India 431.
Power, corrupts a man 114
Prabandhacintāmaṇi 198, 283.
Prabhākara, a writer on Mīmāṃsā, 550, was called Guru 536n
Prabhākaravardhana 63
Pradestr, an officer 252
Pradhan, Dr, author of 'Chronology of Ancient India,' 925n
Prādvivāka 272
Prajāpati, smṛti of 369n, 420 495, 571n, 586, 712, 738, 926.
Prajāpati, story of 845.
Prajñāpanopānga, a Jain work 140n
Prakāśa, a work 568n, 588n, 605n
Prakīrnaka, meaning of, 251, meaning of, acc. to Kautilya 258
Pramati Bhārgava, an avatāra of Viṣnu, will uproot mlecchas and heretics at end of Kali, 925
Prāna, a hymn 75
Pran Nath, Dr 134n, 140n
Pratibhū, see under 'surety'
Pratijñā-yaugandharāyana, a play 211n
Pratimā, a nāṭaka 78, 277n.
Pratinidhi (substitute), rules as to, in the Mīmāmsā 654-655
Pratyākalita 260.
Pravāhana, Jaivali, a king, asked Śvetaketu five questions 92
Pravarādhyāya 686
Pravaramañjarī 692
Pravaraseoa, a Vākāṭaka emperor who performed four Aśvamedhas 70
Prāyaścitta, for murder depended on caste of murderer and of the murdered 528; for woman raped 532, for adultery 946-47
Prāyaścittatattva, 925
Prāyaścittaviveka 948n

Pre-emption, right of, allowed in favour of brothers, sapindas, sagotras, neighbours &c 496

Price, inadequacy of, how determined 493

Priests, distribution of fees among 16 sacrificial 470n, three kinds of sacrificial 469

Primogeniture, in succession to zamindari or raj 631

Princes, went to famous seats of learning for study 50.

Prisoners, set free on coronation 80.

Prisons Act (Indian) 403.

Private defence (see under 'ātatāyin'), right of, as to person and property 517–18, right of, should not be exercised if there is time to report to king's officers 517

Prize-fighting (see under 'samāhvaya')

Proof, circumstantial evidence as 356–357, comparative strength of the several means of 306; divine means of, are ordeals 304, divine means of, when employed 363–364, human means of, are documents, witnesses and possession 304, means of, are either human or divine 304, means of, appropriate to several kinds of disputes 305–306, of part of claim may in some cases be held p of whole claim 348n, rules about variation between pleadings and p. 347–349.

Property, (see under 'self acquired property', 'separate property'), ancestral p, explained 576, divergence of views as to concealment of joint p by one co-owner being theft 636–637, impartible by its very nature 585–590, is of two kinds, movable and immovable 490, 574, is of three kinds, land, nibandha and movable 574–575, joint family p,, what is 576, may be joint family or separate, 576, no distinction between ancestral and separate under Dāyabhāga as to alienation 576, persons that acquire by birth an interest in ancestral p. 576, rules about partition of joint p concealed by cosharer 636–637, separate p. includes self-acquisitions 576.

Prostitutes, a fifth caste acc. to Mitākṣarā 801, do not sever the blood, acc. to modern decisions 801, rules about persons visiting p. 481–482

Province, administration of, in a State 141–142, each p kept a record of good and bad events 143n, Governor of p was called Uparika 141.

Prthā, adopted by Kuntibhoja 675

Prthu, levelled the earth 183, oath administered to 33, secured kingdom through vinaya 52, Viṣnu entered P 281

Prthvīrāja, Chohan hero 684n

Prthvīrāja Rāsau, a work 684n

Psalms 425n.

Public roads, nuisances on 508–509.

Pūga, meaning of 281

Pulakeśin, a Cālukya king 70.

Punishment (see 'banishment', 'brāhmana', 'death', 'impalement'), alternative p of fines in lieu of the cutting off of a limb for theft &c. 256, award of, depended on motive, sex, nature of offence, time and place &c 391–92, banishment as 404, branding of several marks on forehead as p for several offences 397, 403, by cutting off fingers, hands and feet was common in case of thieves and pickpockets 256, 402, by cutting off the limb wherewith a low man offended against a brāhmana 389, by cutting off the tongue in the case of a śūdra who abuses a brāhmana or ksatriya or loudly repeats the Veda 402, confiscation of all property as p 404, corporal p. assumes various forms 395–396, enhanced for repeating offence 404–5, 522, exemption from p. on certain grounds such as intoxication, lunacy, mistake 417, fear of p keeps all beings under control 292, fine and corporal punishment was to be pronounced by the king on recommendation of chief justice 391, fines were the ordinary p for many offences in ancient India 390, for accidental death none 528, for abetting a crime 529, for abuse and defamation was less for offenders of higher castes 395, for adultery 256–257, for adultery and rape depended on caste of the woman and of the offender 395, for adultery very severe in ancient texts 401, 533, 535, for a person charging an innocent man with theft 255, for committing nuisance on the public road 508, for defiling water of holy tanks, rivers etc 509, for incest 533–34, for judges taking bribes and for ministers disposing of a matter wrongly 366, for making breaches in a boundary 509, for misappropriation of the property of guilds and other groups 489, for moneylenders charging interest exceeding rates prescribed in smṛtis 422, for rash driving 528, for theft more severe in the case of offenders of higher castes 395, for unnatural offences 534, for witchcraft 405–406, four methods of 391, fourteen places of, acc to Bṛhaspati 396, imprisonment for life as p 403, may be inflicted on offenders of lowest castes by the persons offended 408, mild p prescribed on account of the doctrine of karmavipāka 392, most important purpose of, is deterrent 389, no corporal punishment for a brāhmaṇa offender except shaving of head, branding 396, of death not inflicted on brāhmaṇas and women under Bombay Regulation 14 of 1827, 397, of death prescribed even for brāhmaṇas by Kātyāyana and Kauṭilya 398–99, of death prescribed for certain offences 400–401; one purpose of, was reform and redemption of offender 390, proper p. for a brāhmaṇa offender 397, purposes secured by p. for crimes 388–90, rigour of p. lessened by Yājñavalkya and later smṛtis 390, severity of, depended on caste also 395, shaving of the head as p 403, ten places where p may be inflicted 396, that could be awarded by inferior tribunals 391, whipping as p 403–404, women were awarded lesser p than men 394, 533, women were to undergo excission of a limb where death sentence could be inflicted on males 394, 533.

Pupil, rules as to his behaviour towards his guru's wife in Kali age 953–54.

Purāṇa, a silver coin 122, 420n

Puraṇa 10.

Purāṇas, are rich in Dharmaśāstra material 871, are authoritative for all people 853, conflict between smṛtis and Purāṇas 871–873, procedure of coronation in 72; state that in Kali age kings will mostly be śūdras 10, wax eloquent over the importance of Bharatavarsa 137, dharma which is declared in, is miśra 873, several p mnst have been known 871

Purāṇas, passages of historical importance in 899ff

Purchaser, buying from one not the owner in open market is not liable to punishment 463, duty of, to closely examine the thing to be purchased 492, from one not the owner is liable to be punished if he purchases in secret 460, gets indefeasible title only after three generations if price wholly or partly not paid 494, has, in order to escape punishment, to produce vendor or prove purchase in open market 463, liability of, if he does not take delivery after purchase 490, 492, may resile from purchase within a certain time 490–491; period allowed to p for examination of thing bought 492.

Purohita, called saviour of kingdom 117–18, included among mantrins by some writers 119, had full jurisdiction over penances 119, made the king ready for battle 118, most eminent of the high functionaries of the king 113; must know ritual of five kinds 119, qualifications of 117-18, sāṃvatsara took over some of the functions of 126, to be consulted by king after ministers were consulted 110, 119, to be distinguished from ṛtvij 118, waning of the importance of 126, was expected to remove calamities, divine and human 119; was often hereditary 119

Puru, though youngest son, was made king by Yayāti 42, 14

Purūravas 53, 845

Purusa (bailiff), duties and qualifications of 278.

Purusakāra (human effort), and daiva (fate) 168-169, is superior, acc to Matsyapurāna 170,

Puruṣārtha rules are recommendatory and violation of them does not vitiate the sacrifice 550n, 609

Puruṣārthas; artha is the chief among three p acc. to Kautilya 241, dharma is the highest among three and kāma the lowest 9, three p are secured for people by righteous king 239

Pūrvamīmāṃsā (see under 'Jaimini') 38, 605, 637, 695, 864.

Puskarasādi 524.

Puṣyagupta, a vaiśya, was governor of Surāṣṭra under Candragupta Maurya 117.

Puṣyamitra 32, 116, founder of Sunga empire 39 killed his master Brhadratha, last Maurya king 36, performed Aśvamedhas 70.

Puṣyasnāna 407

Putresti, sacrifice, 680n

Putrikā, (see under 'Maiden', 'putrikāputra') 647, 657.

Putrikāputra 657-659, definition of 647, 657, divided property with subsequently born aurasa son 651. offers piṇḍa to his maternal grandfather and takes latter's wealth 642, 659, recognized in modern times only among Nambudris in Malabar 657, 659; said to be equal to the aurasa son 657, traces of, found even in Rgveda 657-58.

Queen, qualities of principal 80.

Queens, of vanquished kings had to perform the duties of maids at the time of emperor's coronation 69

Raghavan, Dr V. 252n.

Raghu, Kings of the family of, became munis in old age 101.

Raghunandana, 246, 322, 378n, 544, 668, 701, 718, 735, 799, 910n, 911

Raghuvaṃśa, 8, 17, 28, 41, 44, 49n, 52, 56, 63, 78, 82, 101, 112, 135, 187, 223n, 230, 269, 407, 896.

Rainfall, amounts of, in the several provinces of India, acc to Kautilya 147

Rājadharma 1-241, discussed in works from ancient times 1, energetic undertaking said by Brhaspati to be the root of 169, literature on, is extensive 13, proximate ends of 238-239, purpose of the study of 236-237, said to be the root of all dharmas 3, ultimate goal of 238, Rājadharmakāṇḍa 13, 23n, 28, 42, 61n, 75n, 125n, 160, 178n, 179, 181, 191n, 228, 234, 277n, 949.

Rājadharmakaustubha 13, 38, 43, 72, 74, 76n, 77n, 79-81n, 82, 107, 118, 119n, 179, 182n, 183.

Rājan, meaning of 37-39, 63

Rājanītiprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya) 13, 18n, 25, 38-39, 43-44, 48, 59-60, 66, 71-74, 76n, 79-81n, 82-83, 99, 105, 107, 118, 120, 125n, 132n, 160, 163n, 170, 178, 181, 191-92, 211, 217, 224, 227, 228, 230, 234, 243, 873n.

Rājanītiratnākara 13, 25, 39, 70, 96, 107, 118, 160, 187n, 189n, 201, 271n-274n, 277n, 278.

Raja Rao, Mr M. 879n

Rājaśāstra, expounders of, acc. to Anuśāsana-parva and Śāntiparva 2.

56, expoonders of, aec to Kautilya 3, expouoders of, aec Nītiprakāśikā 4

Rājaśekhara, author of Kāvyamīmāmsā 47n, 67, 136

Rājasūya 64, 111, 962, Abhisecanīya is the principal rite in 73; isti called Avesti thereio can be performed ooly by Kastriyas 38, performed by emperors 70

Rājataraṅgiṇī 31, 40, 80, 100, 113, 115, 120, 163-64, 184, 1880, 198, 270, 374, 393, 3960, 397, 403, 457, 484, 488, 494, 817, 897, 924n, 934

Rajya, compared to the body with its various organs 18, elemeots of, generally said to be seveo 17, meaning of 19-20, preservatioo of the elemeots of 17-18, relative importance of the elements of 17, several elements of, are complemeotary of eaeb other 18

Rājyavardhana, murdered by Saśāṅka 31.

Rākā (full mooo) 388.

Raktikā, weight of 121n

Rāma, 42, edoeatioo of 49, ideal Kiog 96; performed Aśvamedha io the company of a goldeo image of Sītā 845-846, virtues of 62, was to be made Crown Prince with people's approval 29.

Rāmaśāstrin, famous judge at Peshwa's court 386, 402o, 684n, 713

Rāmāyana 2, 6, 21, 24, 29, 37, 42, 46, 47n, 49, 53n, 62, 71, 77, 95-96, 105-6, 108, 129, 171, 177, 180 190, 195, 203, 209n, 214, 243, 846

Ranade, author of 'Rise of the Maratha power' 106

Rape, punishment for, differed acc. to caste of offeoder 532.

Rapson, on 'Iodian coins' 89, 121n, 122n, 308

Rāṣṭra (territory of a State) 132ff, composition of the populatioo of 133; is most important of the seven elements of a State 132, what constitutes 136.

Ratoāvali, a drama 937

Ratnios, give the kingdom to the king 29, 112, headman of village was ooe of 154, twelve r. enumerated 111-112

Rattarāja, a Śilāra king 194.

Rāvana 52, 55.

Reasoning, to be followed rather than strict letter of the text 7, 867.

Receiver, appointment of 291.

Recovery of debts, agriculturists and king's servaots were not to be arrested for, at certaio times 440-41, creditor employiog modes for r other thao a suit, wheo debtor deoied the debt would lose his claim aod was liable to be fined 439, creditor could hold debtor in restraiot opeoly, if eustom of country allowed 440, from debtor uoable to pay was made by making him work io the house of the creditor if of same or higher easte 440, from debtor of brāhmana caste to be made by easy iostalments 440, harsh legislatioo io aoeient societies for 441; imprisonment in civil jail of a debtor in modern times 440; modes of 438-441, modes of, differed accordiog as debtor admitted liability or not 441; priority amoog creditors as to, depended on time aod easte of creditor 441; seveo principal topics of 418, sittiog at the door of the debtor for 438-39, when debtor admitted debt aod yet complaioed against creditor who employed proper mode of, he was liable to be fined 439-440.

Registration Act (Indian) 314, 431n, 432n

Religious efficacy (see under 'doctrine of spiritual benefit').

Religious rites, incompetency to perform, owiog to bodily or mental defects 608-609.

Reply of defendant, faults of 302, four kinds of 300.

Representatives, of parties to suits, when allowed 288; rules for payment of wages to r. 289; who is to appoint r of parties and whom 289.

Republics, eleven, mentioned in Buddhist works 90, in ancient India 87, procedure of, was the same as for the deliberations of Buddhist Saṅgha 90.

Restraint of senses, is the whole purpose of all śāstras 52, necessity of, for kings 53; why man must practise 55

Res Judicata, (see 'plea of former judgment') 300; how proved 332, rule of constructive 306.

Re-union 763–769; devolution of estate after 767–769, who can enter into 766

Revenue, levied on crops varies acc. to the way in which water was employed 163.

Reversioner, on the death of a widow 711.

Rgveda, 28–29, 32, 41, 58, 63–65, 75n, 77n, 92–93, 104, 118, 124n, 125n, 127, 132, 135, 153, 162, 179, 190 200, 205, 212–13, 228–29, 244–45, 276, 353, 359, 361, 388, 414–15, 519, 534, 543, 541, 564–65, 588, 612n, 656, 657n, 658, 660, 679n, 689, 714, 753n, 754n, 770, 776n, 863, 886, 887, 933; morals in 534.

Riktha, meaning of 543, 551n.

Road, cess recovered by king's officer 197, width of 181.

Romaka, an astronomical Siddhānta 896

Roman Catholics, harsh laws against 547n.

Roman Law 326.

Romapāda, king of Aṅga 164.

Rome 389n.

Roth 16.

Rousseau 31

Routes, land r. superior to water r. 225, to the Deccan and south more profitable 225.

Royalty (see under 'kingship').

Rta, conception of 244–245.

Rudradāman, accomplishments of 49; a Ksatrapa, was elected ruler by the people of Surāstra 30, 44, inscription of 94, 105, 117, 162, 185, 890, repaired Sudarśana lake at great cost 60, 162, restored kings to their thrones 71, treasury of, overflowed with gold, silver and jewels 197, uprooted the Yaudheyas 89.

Rudradhara 668

Rudraskanda, commentator of Khādira Gr 692.

Rule, acting contrary to a r, having an unseen or spiritual purpose renders the principal act itself null and void 837–838.

Rulers, grades of 63, mentality of foreign 102, women as 40

Russell on 'crimes' 432n

Śabara, commentator on Jaimini's sūtras 20, 38, 72, 121n, 143n, 471, 515n, 527n, 550n, 556, 637n, 655, 676n, 677n, 680, 695n, 704n, 705, 719, 725n, 731n, 770n, 828, 832n, 835–37, 841, 849, 851n, 864, 870, 905n, 938, 963–64.

Sabhā (see 'court of justice'), 276–277, three kinds of 278n

Sabhāparva 2, 42, 46, 50, 53n, 54, 56n, 59, 61, 67–68, 78, 106, 108, 111–12, 127, 135, 152, 154, 162, 168, 172, 179, 200, 206, 332, 330, 542n, 889, 937, 955n.

Sabhyas (puisne judges) 273, at least three to be appointed to associate with the chief justice 273, duty of, to bring round the king to the path of right 274; must be preferably brāhmanas 273, qualifications of 273, were to be distinguished from learned brāhmanas who attended court and tendered advice 274; were fined if they decided through partiality, greed or fear 385, who were not to be appointed as 273–274

Sachan, Dr (translated Alberuni's work) 166, 376n
Sacred Books of the East 66, 282, 289–90, 605n, 733n, 886n, 887, 922, 934.
Sacrifice, performer of, was supposed to be endowed with a celestial body 32, of animal forbidden in Kali 945–46, 964.
Sadācāra (see under 'custom') 825ff, meaning of, acc to Mann 827, 856.
Sādhyapāla (see under Purusa).
Saffron, monopoly of king in 197
Sages, difference in spiritual merit between ancient and later 889, seven, suspected each other of theft 359n, transgression of dharma among ancient 889.
Sahadeva 69.
Sāhasa (crimes of violence), 525–530, definition of, 525, distinguished from theft 525, four kinds of 525, heavier punishments for 525, king not to tolerate one guilty of crimes of violence 525, principal crimes included under 526
Sāhasa (meaning 'fine'), three varieties of, lowest, middling and highest 526
Sahodha, son, definition of 648, becomes the son of his mother's husband 660
Sahyādrikhanda 138, 929
Saiśunāga dynasty, see Śiśunāka.
Saka king killed by Candragupta (a Gupta king) 86
Śākala, smṛti of 664, 679, 683
Śākta works prescribed wine as offering in worship 966, Saktis, doctrine of three 171, relative strength of 171; theory of, in relation to theory of mandalas 222
Sakulya, meaning of 746–47.
Śākuntala 37, 52, 54, 63, 243
Śākyas (see under Bauddhas), business of State how carried among 90, capital of, was Kapilavastu 90, openly declared Veda to be unauthoritative and taught doctrines opposed to it 871.
Salaries, divergence of views about s. mentioned by Kautilya 120, 125; of officers over 10, 100 or more villages 142, of officers and servants stated by Kautilya 151
Sale of Goods Act (Indian) 465n, 492n, 495n.
Sale, (see under 'pre-emption', 'purchaser'), by one who is not the owner 462–465, by one who is not the owner, should be rescinded 462, conditional s. defined 493, deed of s. should mention the wells, trees, houses on land sold 494, definition of 495, for arrears of land tax 493, 495, liability of vendor if he does not deliver property after 490, periods for rescission allowed in s of various things 491, procedure as to s. of land 496–497, rescission of 489–491, was clothed with formalities of gifts 497, 567, what becomes of earnest if s. goes off through default of vendor or vendee 491, when inoperative 492–493.
Salic Law 40
Salmond, author of a work on 'Jurisprudence' 238, 319n, 320n, 547, 554.
Salt, State manufactured s and levied a duty on salt imported or manufactured privately 196
Śālva, besieged Dvārakā 208, 214
Śalya 204
Śalyaparva 58, 79, 112n, 210, 214, 896n, 904, 908n, 909, 911–12, 915, 918.
Sāma (an upāya), is of five kinds 174.
Samāhartr, duties of 131, 143, 253, 276
Samāhvaya 540–41, rules of dyūta to be applied to 540
Samānodakas 752–753, limits of, as heirs 753
Samatata, a country 68
Sāmaveda 76, 77n,

Sāmavidhāna Brāhmana 66, 76
Samayaprakāśa, part of Viramitrodaya, 928n, 930.
Samayamayūkha 930, 941n 949, 964.
Sambandhatattva 878
Sambandhaviveka, a work 878
Śambara, as a writer on kājasāstra in Sāntiparva 2
Sambhaji-raje-caritra, a work 81n
Śambhala, village, where Kalkin will be born, 923
Sambhūya-samutthāna (partnership) 466-470.
Samrāj, meaning of 63
Saṁsarga (association), with sinner was of nine kinds 614, 944
Saṁsiktiya, mantras 75.
Samskārakaustubha 669, 675, 678-80, 683n, 688-89, 695, 697, 877, 955
Saṁskāraprakāśa 771.
Samskārasāra 873n.
Saṁsrāvya, mantras 75.
Samudragupta 44, 68-69, 71, 89, 108, 115, 213, accomplishments of 49.
Saṁvarta, smṛti of 264, 277, 312, 313n 947, 951, 965.
Sāṁvatsara (astrologer) 126, king depended on, in all matters 126.
Samvid-vyatikrama 486-489.
Sandar 326n
Sandhi (treaty), different kinds of 224, with whom should be made 225, with whom should not be made 225.
Sandrakottos 204
Sangha, four qualities of the wise leader of 88, gambling causes dissensions among members of 233, included in the Vāhika country brāhmanas, ksatriyas and others 88, king was allowed to take away wealth of heretical 188, of Licchivikas, Vrjikas and others 89, of Vrkas, Trigartas, Yaudheyas, Parśus 88, two kinds of, known to Pānini 88
Saṅgraha, a work, 309, 311, 379n, 435, 548n, 563, 572, 628n, 629n, 872, 928
Sangrahana 531-535, of three kinds 531; punishment for, varied acc. to caste and other circumstances 535.
Saṅkara (see 'samsarga').
Śaṅkara, author of Bhāsya on Vedāntasūtra and several Upanisads 46n, 227, 669n, 719, 833n, 888, 964n, 968n, Śaṅkarabhatta, author of Dvaitanirnaya 878.
Śaṅkaravarman, king of Kashmir, plundered 64 temples under pretext of supervision 188n
Saṅkha 101, 160, 209-10, 277, 316, 320, 338n, 395, 398n, 401, 524, 568-69, 581, 592, 598, 620n. 702, 725, 771, 776n, 960
Śaṅkha-Likhita 44, 45, 59, 125, 137, 165n, 175, 242-43, 246, 332, 346, 354, 355n, 358, 366, 371n, 372, 389, 393, 398n, 403-4, 469, 504, 509, 536, 568n, 569, 572, 586, 598, 610n, 625, 640, 641, 642n, 644, 651, 759n, 763 790, 803n, 932n
Saṅkha-Likhita-dharmasūtra, specially studied by Vājasaneyins 853.
Śāṅkhāyana Brāhmana 600n, 905
Śāṅkhāyana-grhya-sūtra 922.
Śāṅkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra 887n.
Śaṅkhya 169.
Sannidhātr, duties of 143.
Sannyāsa, whether forbidden in Kali 960-61
Sannyāsin, see under Yati
Śāntā, adopted by Lomapāda 675
Śantanu, younger brother of Devāpi became king 41, 164, 609.
Śantātiya, mantras 75.
Śāntiparva, 2-6, 8, 10, 12, 13n, 17n, 18n, 21-28, 30-31, 33-34, 37, 40, 44-45, 48, 50n, 51, 53n, 56-59, 61n, 62, 67-68, 70-71, 78-79, 87, 101, 105-107, 118, 127, 131. 138, 141-42, 150-51, 167-68, 173, 175, 179-81, 185-86, 189-90, 199, 202, 203, 207, 209, 211, 215-16, 221n, 222, 229n, 239, 244-45, 273n, 353, 389, 392n, 399, 400n, 404n, 521, 524, 609n, 614, 861n, 875, 885, 890-92, 913, 937, 942, 952, 955

Sapathas (special oaths) : employed in disputes of small value 358, take time for decision 358

Sapinda, acc to Dāyabhāga 741–43, 747 ; two meanings of 733–736.

Sapindas, are of two kinds, gotraja and bhinnagotra acc to Mitāksarā 732

Sapindīkarana, a śrāddha 737

Saradacharan Mitra, Mr Justice 559, 560

Saramā, bitch of the gods, was sent by Indra to find out treasures of Panis 127

Sarasvativilāsa, a work, 17, 118n, 119, 171–72, 184, 200, 219n, 220n, 221, 223, 243n, 258, 263, 264n, 265n, 272n, 273, 276n–278, 281n, 282n, 283, 285n, 286n, 297n, 300n, 302n, 303n, 310, 312, 318n, 321, 326, 332, 342n, 352n, 358, 367n, 382n, 393n, 413n, 419n, 423n, 429n–32n, 434n, 441n, 451, 455n, 464n, 472n–74n, 476n, 477n, 479n, 485n, 489n, 492n, 493, 494n, 512n, 525n, 540n, 545, 549n, 551, 553n, 554n, 562, 563n, 610n, 612, 636n, 638n, 678n, 692, 698, 721, 761n, 774n, 778n

Sardesai Mr G S, editor of 'Selections from Peshwa's Daftar' 400.

Śārīraka-bhāsya of Śankara 725, 731n

Sarkar, Mr Golap Chandra, author of 'Hindu Law' and of a work on 'Adoption' 441n, 662, 664n, 690n

Sarkar, Mr Himansu Bhushan 641n, 934n

Sarkar, Mr Kishori Lal on 'Mimāmsā-rules' 640, 677n, 841–42

Sarkar, Prof. B K 20, 94

Sarvadhikari, Tagore Law Lectures of, on inheritance 744n, 757n, 758n, 760–61.

Sarvajña-Nārāyana, commentator of Manusmrti 150n, 788n, 789.

Sasānka 31

Śāstra, in case of conflict of s with rational or equitable rule, the latter prevails 9.

Śāstradīpikā, a work of Pārthasārathi 677n, 828n, 831n, 836n, 844n, 850n, 852n, 853.

Śataghni 213.

Śatapatha Brāhmana 21, 26, 32, 41, 65–66, 111–12, 153, 180, 415–16, 527n, 565, 613, 641, 845, 877, 886n, 887–88, 907n, 964.

Śātātapa 145n

Śat-trimśan-mata 487n, 882n.

Sattra, sacrifice extending over long periods to be performed by brāhmanas 938.

Satru (enemical king), kinds of 219.

Śatrughna 203

Satyankāra 435

Satyāsādha, śrautasūtra of 28, 278n, 653n, 655, 686, 941n.

Saudāyika, a class of strīdhana 775, a comprehensive term for several kinds of strīdhana 778, definition of 778.

Saudra (son of a brāhmana from a śūdra wife), is a secondary son and technically not an aurasa son 599, 646, 648, 656, styled Pārasava also 648, 656.

Saunaka, smrti of 183, 599, 614, 655, 656n, 664, 668, 675–676, 682–83, 687, 689, 926

Saunakiya 230.

Sauparna, a hymn 229

Sauptikaparva 168, 206, 209, 232.

Sautrāmani, an isti, prescribed as a rite for regaining a kingdom 26, offering of wine cups in 865, 940, 964.

Sauvira, king of, was killed by his queen 85

Sāyana 65, 66n, 229, 361, 770, 886n.

Schools, of Hindu Law 878, 887n.

Schrader, Otto 924n.

Scripts 308

Sea, whether known to Vedic Aryans 933, made undrinkable by brāhmanas 937.

Sea voyage, forbidden in Kali 610n, 933–38, propositions about 937.

Selections from Peshwa's Daftar, (see under 'Sardesai') 402n, 405n, 713
Self-acquired property 639–640, different kinds of 579–581, of a man is inherited per stirpes by his son, grandsons, and great-grandsons 700, son acquires by birth an interest in father's s. p, acc. to strict theory of Mitākṣarā 639, son has no power to prevent father from dealing with latter's s p 639, Viṣnudharmasūtra declared father's absolute right over 639
Sen, Dr. Priya Nath 387, 441n, 427n, 497n.
Senart, 91
Sen-Gupta, Prof. P. C 903–4
Separate property, (see under 'gains of learning', 'self-acquired property'), is not liable to partition 585; kinds of 577, recognition of vidyādhana as s p was the first inroad on the conception that all property belonged to the family 578, slow growth of the concept of 578
Servants, ancient dharmasūtras mention only two kinds of 482, difference between slaves and s 484, four kinds of, besides slaves 482, loyalty inculcated on 160, qualifications of State servants 159–160.
Sexual intercourse, forbidden after performing Agnicayana 535, with a maiden of same caste with her consent was not punishable as a crime but the male had to marry her 535, with certain women was held to be incest 533, with a concubine kept by another was punishable 535.
Shakespeare 296, 533
Sham Sastri, Dr. 85n, 102, 140n, 343n, 811n
Ships, duties of superintendent of 148
Shiva-chatrapati-mahārāja-caritra, a work 81n
Shivaji, coronation of 81, had a council of eight ministers 106, ruling of, in a dispute 285, supposed to be harbinger of Kalkin, 926,
Shivarāja-rājyābhiṣeka-kalpataru, a work 81
Siddhānta-kaumudī 494n, 762n.
Siddhāntaśiromaṇi of Bhāskarācārya 122n.
Siddharāja, king of Anhilvāda, levied tax on pilgrims visiting Somanātha and then remitted it 198
Śīlāditya, a king 70
Śilappadikāram, a Tamil work 407
Śilparatna, a work 182n
Śilpinyāsa, meaning of 458, rules about 459–460.
Silver, value of, in relation to copper 121n
Sin, (see under 'samsarga'), divergence of views as to what was grave s. 612–614, is not committed through fear of punishment or of Yama or of public opinion 389, murder of brāhmana, gravest s 613, various grades of 612
Singhana, a Yādava king of Devagiri 225
Sinner, association with a s for a certain period made associator guilty of same sin 614, 943–44, became fit to be associated with when he performed prāyaścitta 615, mode of taking back into society a grave 615.
Sirkar, Dr D C 378
Śiromaṇibhaṭṭācārya 547
Sistas, all practices of, are not authoritative in matters of dharma 827, 844, practices of, furnish criterion as to what dharma is 826, who are 825, 843.
Sister, is brought in as a gotraja heir by Vyavahāramayūkha 748–749, position of, as heir 728, position of, under modern legislation 749, unmarried s. entitled to a share on partition among brothers 619–620, 749
Śiśunāka dynasty 899.
Śiśupālavadha 313n
Śisya, defined 482, duties of a Vedic 483,

Sitā, ordeal of fire, undergone by 364
Siva swallowed Hālāhala poison 372n
Sivaskandavarman, a Pallava king 69.
Skanda and Viśākha, story of 905n
Skandagupta, commander of elephant section under Emperor Harsa 86, 115
Skandapurāna 234, 801,
Skandasasthī 911
Slaves, condition of, in Buddhist India, not so miserable as in Greece 484, master entitled to claim back s. leaving him and going to another 485, master liable to be punished for selling a female slave unwilling to leave him 485, population of, in ancient Greek cities 15n, who could not be made 485
Smārtakāla, meaning of 321, 970
Smrticandrikā 7, 119, 120n, 121n, 156n, 243, 244n, 247n, 251n, 258n, 259n, 260–264, 265n, 270n, 274n, 275, 276n, 277, 278n, 280–82, 285n, 286n, 287–88, 291, 295–299n, 300n, 301, 302n, 303–06, 310–14, 317, 318n, 321, 323n, 326n, 327, 331, 332n, 334, 336–338n, 341n, 342n, 345n, 346n, 347, 348n, 349n, 350, 351n, 352, 354n, 357n, 358, 363n, 364n, 367n, 371n, 375, 379n, 380, 382n, 383n, 384, 386n, 387n, 391n, 393n, 394, 395n, 396, 398n, 409n, 411, 413n, 417n, 419n, 421n, 424n, 426n, 429n, 430–434n, 436–37, 439n, 440, 442n, 444–447n, 451n, 452n, 455n, 460n, 462–465, 468n, 469, 471n–474n, 476–485n, 487–489n, 491n, 492n, 498n—501n, 503, 505n–515n, 517n–18, 520n, 521n, 524, 525n, 526n, 529, 531, 532n, 533n, 536n, 538n, 545, 548n, 549n, 550n, 553n, 554n, 556n, 563n, 570n, 572n, 575n, 580n–582n, 585n, 586, 589, 590n, 593, 595n, 597, 599, 605–607n, 609n, 610n, 619n–621n, 623n–626n, 628, 629, 631n, 632n, 634n, 635, 637n-639n, 659, 664n, 678n, 691, 703, 706, 707, 709n, 710n, 712, 714–15, 721–22, 726–27, 731, 733, 750n, 766, 768, 772, 775, 777n–79, 781, 783n, 786n–788, 790n, 792n, 793, 800n, 804n, 805, 815, 858n, 859n, 860n, 861n, 862, 863n, 864n, 867n, 868n, 869n, 870, 871n, 872n, 874, 876, 884–85, 928, 929, 956n, 970n
Smrtikaustubha, 930, 938, 941n, 949, 951, 953, 954, 957, 958n, 960n, 964, 966
Smrtimahārnava 581n
Smrtis, all s. were deemed to form one śāstra 870, authors of, believed in a golden age in the dim past 243; authors of, disagreed among themselves 866, authoritativeness of 828–830, 839–40, authoritativeness of depends on purpose they serve viz whether they are concerned with dharma or moksa 839–841, certain s specially authoritative in certain yugas 868, conflict among 283, 863–66, conflict of smrtis and Purānas 871–873, conflict of s and Vedic texts 832–834, conflict of s. and customs 849–850, 874–75, conflicting s to be assigned their appropriate scope 443, contents of, divided into five categories 840, direct conflict among, is to be assumed only if no other recourse is open 443 embody practices current in their days 874–75, 878–879 endeavoured to reach the ideal of the rule of law 398 on same subject must be harmonized as far as possible 443, reasoning should be taken into consideration in interpreting 867, 870, rules of interpretation of s. when in apparent conflict with Veda 834, 870, three views about s being based on Veda 829–30, when visible purpose can be found for s. Vedic basis or spiritual purpose not to be inferred 835–837, Smrtimuktāphala 858n, 859n, 861n, 868n, 871n, 872n, 875n, 876, 929n, 930, 957, 960n.

Smṛtisangraha, (see under 'Sangraha') 545, 549, 555, 628n, 629n, 705, 726, 928.
Smṛtiratna 858n.
Smṛtisāra 767
Smṛtiviveka, a work of Medhātithi 828, 830n, 831, 840n.
Smṛtyarthasāra 928, 945n.
Soātaka, was always, to carry a jar of water 938
Social contract, theory of 31, 34.
Socrates 50, 52
Soldiers, (see under 'troops'), characteristics of s of various countries and tribes 202, duty of, to fight and die in battle rather than run away 211; fighting without treachery go to Heaven if they fall in battle 58, 211, rewards promised to s. by the commander-in-chief 212, running away from battle were deemed to go to Hell 211; slain in battle are waited upon by divine damsels in heaven 58; tribunals for deciding disputes of 283.
Soma, distinguished from surā 964
Somadeva, author of Nitivākyāmṛta 240.
Someśvara 230
Son, (see under 'aurasa', 'illegitimate'), abandoned by parents belongs to caste of him who brings him up 645n; belief that those who had no s did not go to heavenly worlds 710n, by the birth of the eldest s a man becomes free from debt owed to pitṛs 42, 624, 736
Son, can perform pārvaṇa and ekoddiṣṭa śrāddhas of father 737, different ways of giving a special share to eldest 624–625, eldest s., special rights of, recognized even in modern times in certain cases 624, 631, eldest s was given all wealth in Vedic times in some cases 565–566, 622, extravagant praise of son, grandson, great-grandson 642, giving major part of ancestral estate to eldest s. was forbidden by śāstras acc. to Āp. 566, 622; giving special share to eldest son was practised in certain countries 623; has an absolute right to partition under Mitākṣarā during father's lifetime even against father's wish 569–570, 626, has no right to partition in father's lifetime acc to Dāyabhāga 569, history of the practice to give a larger share to eldest s. 566–67, kṛtrima s. recognized in modern times in Mithilā 657, kṣetraja s condemned by Āpastamba 649, importance of 641–643; male descendants of s and himself confer greatest spiritual benefit 443, not liable for misappropriation by father or loss of deposit made to father 460, of a brāhmaṇa from a śūdra wife got a share of his father's property 598, of a brāhmaṇa from a vaiśya or kṣatriya wife not allowed to share in land donated to a brāhmaṇa 586–87, 598; paunarbhava s not fit to be invited at śrāddha 649; purposes served by a 641, rights of a posthumous s after a partition takes place before his birth 595–597, rise of popular sentiment against giving special share to eldest s 626–627
Son, secular benefits derived from 643, seniority among sons 626–627, seniority among twins 626; some works like the Smṛticandrikā say that anuloma marriages are not in vogue and so it is unnecessary to speak about s of such a marriage 599; was supposed to save the father from the Hell called put 642.
Sons, classification into four groups of several kinds of 649, confusion among smṛtis about the position and rights of secondary 644–648, 650–652, definitions of the 12 or 13 kinds of 647–648, kinds of, recognized in ancient works 643–644; long lists of secondary s due to partiality for divisions and sub-divisions 649, many s were desired 642; only two kinds of, recognized now throughout

India 657, other than aurasa and dattaka forbidden in Kali 655, rights of secondary sons 653; secondary s not recognized by Āpastamba 643, secondary s. except dattaka now obsolete 657, smṛtis do not consider all secondary s equally important for spiritual purposes nor did they allow such s to be taken at same time 648, spiritual benefit derived from secondary s. 653–655, table of several kinds of 645, twelve kinds of 645–646, twenty kinds of, in Aousā-sanaparva 645n.

Sovereign, (see under 'king'), threefold activities of 98.

Spies, 128–131, disguises of 129, employed by invading king to encourage his enemy's subjects to become disaffected 199, employed by samāhartr to protect subjects against officers taking bribes 253, five saṁsthās (groups) of 129–130, for detecting young men inclined to robbery and adultery 254, for reporting on the private character of ministers and high officers 130–131, several s. to be sent on same mission without their knowing each other 130, to report about rumours and discontent among people 130, were said to be king's eyes 131.

Śrīng festival 844n

Śrāddha, (see under 'ekoddista,' 'pārvana' and 'sapiṇḍana'), clothes and ornaments worn by father, his bed and vehicle were to be donated to brāhmana invited at father's 587, offering of flesh at 945–46, order of those who are to perform s. 739, piṇḍas are offered by three male descendants of a man in 443, tax levied on Kashmirians performing s. at Gayā 198.

Śrāddhatattva 737n, 864n.

Śrāddhaviveka 739.

Śrāvasti 109.

Srenī, (see under 'corporations' and 'guilds').

Śrī, hymn to 77.

Śridhara, commentator of the Bhāgavata Purāna 182n, 183, 626n, 873, 899.

Śrikara 324, 582, 583n, 703, 721, 768.

Śrikṛsna, author of Dāyakramasangraha 544, 557, 568n, 586n, 781n, 799.

Śruti, rules of, were sometimes set aside, contradicted or abandoned by smṛti texts or popular sentiment 865.

Stare decisis, principle of 730.

State, (see under 'rājadharma' and 'rājya'), comprised deśas and subdivisions of deśas 138–139, departments of 113, depends on mantra 110, divided by samāhartr into four divisions 143, elements of, depend on rāstra 132, functions of, in modern times 60, helped helpless women and cottage industries 146, how constituted 19; local administration in 153–159, made great efforts for rearing and protection of cattle 161; most desirable thing for s, is to crown a king 34, organic theory of 20, ownership of, over all lands 495–496, policy of ancient Indian, to protect all religions and to interfere with none 883, popular elected assemblies in 92, revenue and army, the two pillars of the ancient Indian 184, seven elements of 17; superintendents of the departments of, to be appointed by the king 142, twenty-eight departments of, mentioned by Kautilya 142ff, was not an end in itself but only a means 241

States; ends that ancient s placed before themselves 237–241, internal and external troubles of 207; manufactured salt and imposed duty on imported salt 196, modern nation s have two moralities 138, principal sources of income of 190–191, proximate and ultimate ends of 238–239.

Step-brother, includes, acc to Vaijayantī, son of the same mother but of a different father 730
Step-mother, held not entitled to a share when she has only step sons who come to partition 606, not recognized as an heir in the whole of India (except in Bombay) 724, succeeds in Bombay as widow of gotraja sapiṇḍa 724
Stephens, author of 'History of English Criminal Law' 255n, 345, 375, 390, 405n.
Steya (theft) 519–524.
Sthānika, an officer 143
Sthānviśvara (modern Thanesar), description of 182.
Stobhaka, a private informant 264.
Stokes, compiler of translations of Hindu Law books 682, 728 Strabo 308.
Strange, Sir Thomas, author of 'Hindu Law' 818, 819, 930n
Strīdhana, (see 'ornaments', 'sandāyika', 'yautaka') 770–802, definitions of various kinds of, in smṛtis 772–777, definitions of, in commentaries 780–782, devolution of, acc to Kātyāyana 792, dominion over 783–788, germs of the topic of, in Vedic literature 770, husband's power over wife's 785-787, Kātyāyana contains the most elaborate treatment of, among smṛtis 774–775, modern case law on definition of 782–783, rules about saudāyika 784–785, succession to 788–801; smṛti texts on succession to 789–792; succession to, acc. to Dāyabhāga 798–800; succession to all kinds of, acc. to Mitākṣarā, except śulka and maiden's property 794, succession to maiden's s 793, succession to, acc to Smṛticandrikā 795; succession to, acc to Vivādacintāmaṇi 795, succession to, acc. to Vyavahāramayūkha 798, succession to śulka 792–793, succession to, varies acc as woman is unmarried or married or married in an approved form and acc to species of s 789; succession to s. and unchastity 801.
Strīparva 204, 872
Student, (see under 'śiṣya') either upakurvāṇa or naiṣṭhika 962
Subandhu, author of Vāsavadattā 53.
Subdivisions, of State with the number of villages they contained 139.
Subhadrā, was not a daughter of Vasudeva, acc to Kumārila 847.
Subhākara, a king whose queen and daughter succeeded to the throne 40.
Subjects, causes of impoverishment of 198, harassment of, may lead to ruin of king 199, require protection against king's officers, thieves, royal favourites and king's greed 58–59; what is pleasing to, constitutes the good of the king 61.
Sub-mortgage (anvādhi), allowed by Kullūka and others 429, 431
Subodhinī, com. on the Mitākṣarā 553n, 705n, 731, 733n, 750n, 757, 764n, 774n, 793, 815
Subrahmanyā texts 626–627
Sūcaka, an officer who brings aparādhas to the king's notice 264.
Sudarśana lake was repaired by Rudradāman in 2nd century A D. 60, 105, 162.
Sudarśanacarya, commentator of Āpastamba-gṛhya 674n, 879
Sudās, son of Pijavana 52, 359
Sudhanvā, upādhyāya of Rāma 6
Śoddhitattva 740n, 959.
Śūdra, and sea voyage 937, cannot adopt a son according to a few writers 668, engaging śūdra as a cook in a brāhmana household 958, expiation for perjury by a śūdra to save a person from death sentence 353; had his tongue cut off, if he abused a virtuous person of the three higher castes 513, kings in Kali age will be 40; provision for guests of śūdra caste 60, to be punished with the cutting of that limb with which he strikes a person of the three higher castes 515.

Śūdrakamalākara, a work 893n
Sodyumoa 53
Sogandhā, a notorious queen of Kashmir 40
Sugarcaoe, crops raised even in Vedic times 163
Suicide, when allowed and did not lead to sin 939, 958–59.
Suits, (see under 'appearance', 'court', 'justice')
Śukrācārya, prohibited intoxicants to brāhmaṇas 966
Śukraoītisāra 3–5, 7, 17–18, 21, 23, 25–27, 37, 43, 44, 47n, 48, 49o, 52-3, 55–57, 60, 67, 72, 84, 99, 104, 106, 108, 109, 113, 115–118, 121o, 128, 142, 147, 152, 154–55, 160, 163–64, 170–71, 174, 179, 181, 184–90, 192, 194, 197, 199, 202, 205, 206, 209, 212–13, 216, 238–40, 242–43, 245, 247, 251, 266, 269–73, 276, 278, 281n, 282n, 286, 288n, 289, 297 300n, 301, 303, 308, 311, 345, 354, 379, 399, 403–04, 420n, 441n, 662, 861n, 869, 881
Śūlapāṇi 878
Śulka (tolls), tax levied on goods carried by land or water 192
Śulka, a kind of stridhana 774–775
Sumaotu 17, 200, 494n, 875.
Sumitra, a king, fond of dancing 86.
Summoning (see under 'appearance'), rules about s a defendant or accused 286–287
Śonaḥśepa, story of 544, 563–64, 660, 663; was adopted by Viśvāmitra 544, 563, 657o, 661, 680
Suodarakāṇḍa 172o, 214.
Superintendents, functions of s of State departments 143–150
Surā (see under 'wine'), drinking of, was one of the five mahāpātakas 965, was said to be of three kinds 965, was primarily applied to liquor from flour 965
Surāṣtra, had a republic at one time 30
Surety, 435–438, all kinds of, are personally liable 437 liability of s for appearance 437, liability of s one in case of Act of God or the King 437, liability of several sureties 437–438, of two kinds acc to Manu 436, of three kinds 436, of four kinds, acc to Bṛhaspati 436, sons of s, for appearance or honesty not liable on death of s 437, taken for five purposes acc to Hārita 436–37, to be reimbursed by debtor for what s has to pay 438, when taken, acc to Kātyāyana 436, who could not be accepted as 291–97
Sutherland 682
Suyya, a great Kashmirian engineer 167
Svapurusa, (see 'purusa')
Svargārohaṇikaparva 872
Svastyayana, hymns 75, rites of 328
Svayamdatta son, definition of 645, 661
Śvetaketu 92
Śvetāśvataropaniṣad 330.

Tables, (see under 'measures'), of coins 121n, of measures of capacity 124, 146o, of measures of distance or length 124, 145n, of measures of time 146o, of the number of troops in an akṣauhiṇī 204–205, of weights 121–22, 145n.
Taittirīya Āraṇyaka 353, 842
Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, 29, 74, 75n, 77n, 92, 112, 132, 135, 153, 190, 272, 414, 603n, 676, 685n, 829, 877, 887, 907n, 921–22, 933, 961–62, 964
Taittirīya Saṃhitā 26, 41, 64, 77, 112, 125n, 132, 150n, 153, 162, 180, 213, 387–88, 414n–416, 500n, 515, 519, 535, 543, 565, 567, 588, 605n, 606, 613, 622, 624, 655n, 662, 689, 701, 703n, 713, 770, 830n, 842, 868n, 887, 905, 920–22, 962, 964
Taittirīya Upaniṣad 22, 826n, 875.
Taksaśilā 116; University of, where evco princes studied 50
Tālajaṅgha 52.
Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa 361, 512n, 543, 600n.

Tanks, construction of, by the State 162–63.
Tantra, works on 215
Tantraratna 555n.
Tantravārtika of Kumārila, 38n, 47n, 676n, 694n, 695n, 829n, 830, 834, 835n, 838, 839n, 841n, 842, 843n, 844, 846, 847n, 849n, 852, 853, 855, 857n, 858, 870n, 871, 964n, 965, 968n.
Tawney 195, 283.
Taxation; higher t. could be imposed in calamities after appealing to or requesting the people 185; how to impose in case of famines or other dangers 188; principles of, in ancient Indian works 184–185; principles of, laid down by Adam Smith 186n; should be felt as being light 185
Taxes, are the king's wages for the protection he gives 27, 187, 189; exemption from, applied only to very learned brāhmaṇas and not to all brāhmaṇas 195; exemptions from t. mentioned in land grants were eighteen 195; levied on marriages and upanayana 198, levied on merchandise 192–193; levied on persons performing śrāddha at Gayā 198; not to be collected from learned brāhmaṇas, women, minors, students, ascetics and śūdras doing menial work for others 1, 194; not to be levied on improved land till cost of improvement was recovered by cultivator 191; ordinarily king was to take one-sixth of grain as t., but even one-fourth or even one-third in calamities 185; persons exempt from payment of 1; principal payers of t. were agriculturists, artisans, traders &c. 191, rates of, were fixed by the smṛtis and could be varied only in emergencies 184–185, reasons why people must pay t. to king 189–90, rise in, to be gradual 186; what prevented kings from exacting excessive t. 198.
Taxila copperplate of Moa 308.
Taylor, Jeremy 288
Taylor, on 'Evidence' 336n, 338.
Teacher, to be fined for failing to teach a lore or craft after receiving fees 481.
Telang, Mr. Justice 570n, 698n, 751n.
Temples, duty of village elders to increase property of 165; king could in calamities requisition wealth of 188, 197; property of, not lost by long possession of another 327.
Thakur, Dr. Amareshwar, on 'Hindu Law of evidence' 306.
Theft, definition of 519; distinguished from crimes of violence 525; duty of officers to catch thieves and make good loss caused by 167–168; enhancement of sentence for repeatedly committing 405; liability of village headman for t. 167–68; liability of whole village in certain cases of 168; no liability to make good loss if man robbed by his own servant 167; no t. if a man took without permission certain articles 523–524; of three kinds, acc. to the value of the subject of 519.
Thieves, cutting of fingers and hands of 520; frequently mentioned in the Ṛgveda 519, goldsmith is the worst of all t. 521; how detected and caught 520, nine kinds of secret t. 520; not to be convicted on mere suspicion 521; punishment for harbouring or giving food or help to t. and receiving stolen property from 523; special officers appointed for catching 168; to be made to restore property stolen or its price 167; two kinds of, patent and secret 520; various punishments for 521–22, were punished with death in Upaniṣadic times 387.
Throne, how made 82
Time, brings about all results, acc to some 170.
Tīrthas (high officers of State) were 18, 113.

Tithitattva, a work of Raghunandana 910n
Title, and possession lend support to one another 318, rules respecting possession and t 319–320, t without some slight possession has no strength 318
Toleration, religious, in ancient India 881
Tolls, commodities exempt from payment of 193–194, levied on exports and imports 193–194, superintendent of 146.
Torture, allowed in witchcraft cases in England 405n, by police not unknown even now in the West and in India 255n; employment of, to elicit admission from accused whose guilt is prima facie established 254, four kinds of 254, punishment of those causing death by 254, was part of Roman Criminal Procedure 255n, when not to be employed 254
Touching a person after a relative of the latter is dead 951
Traitana, a dāsa 353.
Transactions, (see under 'contract', 'possession'), age of competency to enter into, for males and females 394, brought about by force or fraud are unenforceable 412, circumstances which make t unenforceable 412, committed to writing prevail over those made before witnesses only 431–32, in conflict of, one with possession first is superior 431, in t of sale, gift or mortgage the first in time prevails 432, last of several t is decisive except in sale, gift or mortgage 413.
Transfer of Property Act (Indian) 306, 413n, 425, 429n, 434, 493n, 494n, 674
Transfer, of property by acceptance 319
Trasadasyu, a Vedic king, claimed to be identical with Varuna and other gods 32
Treasure trove, rules about 175
Treasury, all undertakings of king depend on 164, duties of the superintendent of 144, eight principal sources of filling 187–188, everyone, however poor, must contribute something to the t 187, importance of gold and silver reserve in 187, means recommended for replenishing depleted 188–189.
Trees, destruction of is sāhasa of lowest kind 426, fines for injuring or felling 516, 528, rules about the ownership of the fruits and other products of t. growing on the boundary of a field 509–510
Trial, ordeals not to resorted to in if human means available 261.
Tribes, mentioned in the Rgveda such as those of Anu, Druhyu &c 64, 135
Tribunals (see under 'courts'), grades of five kinds of 280; inferior, could dispose of all litigation except what fell under sāhasa 281; inferior, could not carry out orders as to fines and punishments, but only recommended these to king 281, offenders of all castes were brought before same 398n, ten classes of, spoken by Bhrgu 282, usage varied as to the number and gradation of inferior 285
Trivedi, Dr D S 897n
Troops, are of six kinds 200, fighting spirit inculcated and encouraged in, by holding forth several kinds of rewards 211, ksatriyas constituted hereditary 202, number of, killed in the Mahābhārata war 204, of all castes existed even in the epic age 202, rules about 206, superiority or inferiority of several grades of 201–202.
Troubles, internal, are more serious for the State than external ones 233
Tup-tikā of Kumārila on Jaimini 695n.
Turvasu, son of Yayāti 937
Tusāspa, a Yavana was Governor of Surāstra under Aśoka 117.
Twelve Tables, in Rome 389n, 441n.
Twins, seniority among 627, 873.

Uccala, king of Kashmir 80.

Udayana, king of Vatsa, was imprisoned by Mahāsena 86.
Udayanīyā, ao iṣṭi in Agnistoma 939.
Udvāhatattva, 930, 944, 945n
Udyogaparva, 30, 37, 43, 53, 58n, 62, 79, 101, 127, 131, 163n, 168, 173, 185, 202, 204–7, 213, 226, 228, 232, 245, 278, 334, 452, 538, 542n, 555n, 609n, 845, 848, 905, 907–8, 910, 911, 916, 918, 922, 965.
Udvota, an author q by Dāyabhaga 556, 736
Ugra 64
Uktalābha, defined 493.
Upanidhi, 454–455, means every kind of bailment acc to Kātyāyana 455
Upapātaka (minor sin) 511n, 610n, adultery was generally regarded as 615, Cāndrāyaṇa or Govrata was the ordinary penance for 615, govadha as an 865
Upaveda 49, Arthaśāstra is ao 10, 843; four Upavedas mentioned as affiliated to the four Vedas 10, 843n
Upāyas (expedients of royal policy) 171–175, are four, acc to many writers 171, are seven, acc to Kāmandaka and a few others 172, are to be employed not only in state craft, but also in ordinary life 173. danda out of the upāyas is to be employed as a last resort 173, theory of, elaborated long before Christian era 172.
Upekṣā (an upaya) 172
Usages, about ritual varied even in Vedic times 877, authoritativeness of, laid down in smṛtis, in relation to Vedic rites 841–42, each country has u that are dharmācāras 849, established in a country and not plainly immoral and not in direct conflict with Veda and smṛtis were to be recorded in writing under royal seal 270, 488, 862, family u preferred to śāstra 875; general rule about authoritativeness of 865–866, governed disputes of inhabitants of same village, city or country 283, 862, illustrations of varying usages in different parts 861, immemorial u. said to be transcendental law 875, immoral u condemned by Kumārila 848–849, of countries, castes, villages and groups, varying general rules were to be enforced by king 566, 860–866, 882, of guilds traders, heretics, and associations may be enforced by king 860, of śiṣṭas as to gains of learning or gifts acquired at expense of family estate 580, of Vedic śākhās about religious rites 883–84, recognized by Vedic texts gradually went out of vogue and came to be condemned by common people 630, that are not opposed to Vedic texts, that have no visible purpose and are practised by Vedic śiṣṭas as dharma are authoritative 843
Uśanas, author of work on Rājaśāstra 2–4, 121n, 208, 221, smṛti of 336–37, 447, 485, 501, 514, 586.
Usasti Cākrāyana 164.
Usury, (see under 'money-lending'), even witnesses to u transactions were liable to be punished 422, condemned as worse than brāhmana-murder 418, 420n, 425n, not known to Indians, acc to Megasthenes 118.
Utpala, commentator of Bṛhatsaṃhitā 82, 230n, 407n, 897, 906n, 916, 917, 919n
Uttara (defendant's reply) 300
Uttarakāṇḍa (of Rāmāyaṇa) 343.
Uttaramallūra, inscriptions on the qualifications of candidates for election to village committees 91, 156.
Uttarāpatha 135

Vācaspati 668.
Vāhika, country of 88, Sākala, chief city of 88n
Vaidya, Mr. C V 898, 901n, 912
Vaijayantī, a lexicon 136, 145n, 381,
Vaijayantī, com of Nandapandita on Viṣnudharmasūtra, 39, 122n, 142, 195, 205, 403, 452o, 453, 626n, 646, 717, 727, 730–31, 777, 877n

Vaikhānasa-smārtasūtra 764n.
Vainya, the first king, who made a contract with people 31
Vairantya, a king killed by stratagem 85.
Vaisarjana-homa 836n
Vaiśya-vaṁśa-sudhākara 252n
Vājapeya, a sacrifice, may be performed by brāhmanas 65, 836n sacrificial post in 75n, 92
Vājasaneya saṁhitā, 64, 132, 162, 272, 353, 519, 534, 541, 660, 744n, 887, 962, 964
Vajjians, eight clans of 90
Vajrāditya, a Kashmir king who sold many people as slaves to mlecchas 484
Vākāṭakas 39, 70, were allied by marriage to Bhāraśivas 76n.
Vākpāruṣya (abuse and defamation) 511–513
Vākyabheda, fault of 695
Vāmāgama, (see under śākta)
Vanaparva 5, 46, 49, 51, 53n, 101, 134, 161, 168, 172, 180, 207–8, 214, 634n, 776n, 860, 889n, 890–92, 896n, 923–24, 960n
Vānaprastha, stage of, forbidden in Kali 941
Varadarāja, author of Garvānapadamañjarī 849
Varadarāja, author of Vyavahāranirnaya, a work of authority on Hindu Law in Madras 246, 545, 731.
Vārāhagṛhya 754n
Varāhamihira, author of Bṛhatsaṁhitā, 231, 889, 897, and of Pañcasiddhāntikā 898, 907 Vardhamāna, author of Daṇḍaviveka 191, 391n.
Varsas, nine, of Jambudvīpa 134.
Vārsyāyani 524.
Vārtā, benefits from 50, constituents of 50; importance of 51, works on 14n.
Vārtika, on Pāṇini 38n, 126n, 140n, 141n, 144n, 190, 499n.
Varuṇa, as chastiser of kings 176, praised as the lord of rāstras 132.
Varuṇapraghāsa, a Vedic rite, one of the Cāturmāsyas 534, 676o Vāsavadattā, of Subandhu 53.
Vasiṣṭha, special oath taken by 359, threw himself into the Vipāśā river 845
Vasiṣṭha, smṛti of 302n, 310, 342n, 430.
Vasiṣṭha, dharmasūtra of 3, 37, 56, 59, 61, 97, 119, 137, 160n, 166, 190, 194, 242, 245–6, 250, 273, 307, 317, 327, 332, 333, 343, 344n, 353, 355, 380, 390, 391, 401–2, 409, 417–18, 423, 443, 447, 454, 472, 504, 527, 535, 564, 574, 595, 598–99, 608, 612n, 614–15, 617, 625, 642n, 644, 646, 647n, 650–51, 655, 657, 660, 663, 668, 676, 677n, 678n, 690n, 698, 700, 703n 706, 753, 771, 775n, 803, 805–7, 825, 857, 863, 866, 870n, 872n, 874, 875, 881, 931, 938, 941, 944, 946–48, 950, 952, 954, 957, 959, 963, 965
Vasiṣṭhadharmasūtra, specially studied by Ṛgvedins 853
Vasordhārā, a religious rite 234
Vāstuśāstra 180.
Vāsudeva, minister of Devabhūti, killed his master 86
Vāsudeva, (see under Kṛṣṇa), is said to have drunk liquor prepared from honey 965
Vasus, eight 368
Vātāpi, perished when attacking Agastya through over-joy 53.
Vatsa, was abused by his step-brother as the son of a Śūdra woman 361
Vātsyāyana, author of bhāṣya on Nyāyasūtra 46n
Vāyupurāna, 10, 21, 42n, 53n, 65n, 101, 146n, 170, 179, 642n, 675, 872n, 892, 895n, 896n, 897n, 899–900, 902
Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa—885, 922, 923–25, 934.
Vedāṅgas 49, 839.
Vedānta, philosophy propounds Puruṣa as the cause of the world 839.
Vedāntasūtra 46, 47n, 227, 443n, 669o, 719, 731n, 870, 964n, 968n, Vedas, acc to Kautilya 48, angas of 48–49.

Veda-Vyāsa, smṛti of 272n, 872, 963
Vena, a king, was killed by brāhmaṇas for his irreligious conduct 26, 33; perished through lack of vinaya 52.
Vendor, (see under 'purchaser', 'sale'), fine for selling an article after concealing defects or for selling to a third man what is already sold 491.
Vesālī, capital of Licchavis 90, 91; administrations of justice in, was complicated 268
Veśyās, (see under 'ganikā'), were almost slaves 148
Vibhāga (partition), definition of 560–561.
Victoria, proclamation of Queen 61n 820
Victory, joyous or confident state of mind is the highest sign of 227
Vidhivairūpya, meaning of 605
Vidhivaiṣamya, explained 704.
Vidūratha, a king, killed by his queen 85
Vidyādhana, (see under 'gains of learning') 581ff.
Vidyās, control of senses is the cause of proficiency in 52; for a king 48–49, fourteen or eighteen in ancient times 843, produce discipline (vinaya) 51.
Vigraha (hostility), sixteen ways in which v. springs 226.
Vijigīṣu, meaning of 218
Vijñāneśvara, (see under Mitākṣarā) 119, 393, 869, 927, 942.
Vikramorvaśīya, a drama of Kālidāsa 305n.
Village, assemblies carrying on local administration in 155–156; craftsmen were hereditarily attached to 156, communities were miniature States 157, duty of elders of, to protect and increase property of minors and temples 166, extent and revenue of 134, 154, headman of 153–154, headman of, had certain summary powers of punishment 282; officers of a 154–155, officers of, supervised by a minister of State 141, should contain not less than 100 families and not more than 500, 134
Village Police Act (in Bombay Presidency) 282
Villages, administration of, by means of a hierarchy of officers 141–42, groups of ten, 200, 400 v had separate appellations 140, in a kingdom were divided into three grades by the samāhartṛ 143, were named after trees 141n.
Vināyaka, propitiatory rite to 966.
Vipāśā, river in which Vasiṣṭha threw himself 845
Vīramitrodaya, (see Vyavahāraprakāśa and Rājanītiprakāśa), 10, 445, 571, 576, 671, 731, 735, 759, 782, 800, 879, is of paramount authority in the Benares School of Hindu Law 544
Virāṭaparva 59, 135, 160, 180, 203, 888
Viśālākṣa, expounder of Rājaśāstra 2, 83, 232, summarised the work of Brahmā 4
Viṣṇu, smṛti of (not found in printed text) 735.
Viṣṇudharmasūtra, 3, 9, 17n, 22, 37, 56, 58–59, 61, 71, 118–121n, 126, 133, 141–42, 146n, 166–67, 173, 176, 179, 185, 187, 190–92, 195–96, 242, 245, 273, 275, 294, 305, 307, 311-12 314–15, 321, 330–32, 334, 336, 340n, 343, 346–47, 352–53, 358, 360, 364–66, 370–372n, 373–74, 389, 392, 394, 396–97, 400, 402–05, 409, 419, 421–23, 427–29, 431–433, 436–38, 440, 442–45, 449n, 450, 452–53, 463, 472, 479, 490, 498, 509, 511n, 512, 516, 522, 526–28, 534–35, 551, 554, 574, 578, 580, 587, 589n, 595, 598, 605, 608, 610n, 613n, 614n, 616–18, 620, 623, 625, 630, 639, 642, 644, 646, 655, 663, 678n, 690n, 700–702, 710n, 714, 719, 721, 725, 734, 747, 749, 763–64, 767, 773, 775n, 777n, 787, 790, 804, 807n, 816, 857, 866, 869, 877n, 890, 922, 932, 943–44, 949, 951–52, 953–54, 959, 963, 965
Viṣnudharmottara-purāṇa, 13, 24, 44, 54, 57, 59–60, 69, 72, 77n, 79, 80,

82, 105, 108, 118, 119n, 126–27, 130–31, 133, 141–42, 160–61, 167, 170, 172–73, 177, 184, 191, 192, 195, 215–17, 219, 220n, 223–24, 226–27, 230, 263, 924
Viṣnugupta, composed work on Daṇḍanīti in 6000 ślokas 7, 8
Viṣnuporāṇa, 10, 77n, 134, 137, 737n, 766, 856o, 857, 869, 892, 895o, 896, 897n, 924–25
Viṣnuyaśas, father of Kalkin, 924–25
Viṣṭi, duties of 208
Viśvāmitra, adopted Śunaḥśepa, though he had already many sons 544, 661–63, officiated as priest for Triśanku who had become a Cāṇḍāla 845.
Viśvanātha, a logician, author of Māmsatattvavivēka 946
Viśvarūpa, commentator of Yājñavalkyasmṛti 9, 32, 47o, 48, 137, 159o, 160, 167, 263n, 299, 312, 322–23, 340, 387o, 395n, 398n, 421n, 452n, 454, 505, 527n, 557, 579–80, 582o, 597, 601n, 602n, 604o, 606n, 616n, 621n, 629, 636, 860o, 865, 867n, 869, 874, 927, 932, 938, 942o, 956, 965
Vitastā, river was dammed by Soyya 162
Vivāda, meaning of 246
Vivādacandra of Miśarumiśra 246, 288n, 291n, 325, 327n, 344, 349, 356n, 358, 380, 417n, 423o, 424n, 434n, 455n, 460, 473n, 474n, 490o, 545, 573n, 605, 698n, 703n, 708n, 736n, 766–67, 771n, 774n, 779, 785n, 790n
Vivādacintāmaṇi, 417n, 419n, 420n, 426n, 447n, 460, 474n, 476n, 492n, 510o, 513n, 522n, 523, 526n, 545, 618n, 626n, 634n, 651n, 698, 701, 708n, 712, 718n, 721, 763, 766, 770n, 773n–79, 782, 784n, 785n, 786n, 787–88, 791n, 793, 817n, leading authority in Mithilā 545, 795
Vivādaratnākara, 121n, 165n, 177, 246, 281, 316, 320, 393o, 401n, 404, 413n, 419n, 420n, 421n, 423n, 426n, 432n, 438n, 440, 442n, 445n, 446, 447n, 451n, 457n–460n, 462n–465o, 467n–470o, 472o, 473n, 476n, 480n, 484o, 485n, 489n, 492n, 498n–504n, 506o, 508n, 513o, 514n, 516n, 521n, 522n 523, 525n, 529n, 531n–533n, 536n, 538o, 540n, 545, 553n, 554n, 566n, 568n, 572n, 574, 575n–577n, 580n, 581n, 583n, 586n, 587–590n, 592n, 597, 598, 607n, 610o, 618n, 619n, 621n, 623n–626n, 631n, 632n, 634n, 635–36, 637n, 642n, 644, 646, 649n, 651n, 652o, 656n, 660n, 664n, 702, 707n, 714n, 716, 721n, 734n, 736n, 738o, 747n, 763, 770, 771n, 786n–788o, 791n, 948n
Vivādatāṇḍava, 246, 547n, 550n, 556n, 593n, 643n, 659 664n 692o, 729n, 770n
Vogel, Dr. 153
Vratakhaṇḍa of Hemādri 122n
Vṛddhātri 872n.
Vṛddha-Bṛhaspati 614, 653o, 943
Vṛddha-Gautama 432n, 676n, 683n, 684n, 863o
Vṛddha-Hārīta, 209, 242, 391, 396–97, 400–402, 420, 442, 951.
Vṛddha-Kātyāyana 300o, 493n.
Vṛddha-Manu 408, 477–79, 707
Vṛddha-Śātātapa 754.
Vṛddha-Vasiṣṭha 380
Vṛddha-Viṣṇu 721n
Vṛddha-Yājñavalkya 675
Vṛṣṇis, oligarchy of, perished by attacking Dvaipāyana 53, saṅgha of, was presided over by Kṛṣṇa 88, suffered through gambling 55
Vṛtra 65
Vyāhṛtis 76
Vyāsa, expounder of Rājaśāstra 4,
Vyāsa, a kāṇīna son 660, gave sight for a time to blind Dhṛtarāṣṭra 847, produced by niyoga two sons on the wives of Vicitravirya 845–846
Vyāsa, smṛti of 260, 272n, 273, 278, 284, 304, 310–13, 318, 322, 332, 341, 355, 358, 379–80, 395, 409, 421, 430, 437, 462, 467n, 491n, 492, 496, 499, 510, 521–22, 524, 526, 531, 554, 572, 580o, 582, 584, 586n, 606–07, 703, 737, 772, 778, 926, 961, 970.

Vyasanas, of king, arising from kāma and krodha 232–233, of the elements of rājya 232.

Vyavahāra, eight limbs of 262, four feet of 259–60, four stages of, are plaint, reply, proof and decision 260, meanings of 245–247; several matters predicated about 259–263, springs from three motives, kāma, krodha and lobha 262.

Vyavahāra-kalpataru 882n.

Vyavahāramātṛkā of Jīmūtavāhana, 246, 251n, 258n, 268, 271n–273n, 281, 284n, 285n, 297n, 300n–302n, 305n, 312, 321n, 323–24, 330–32, 347, 351n, 358n, 363n, 380n, 381, 409, 410n, 413n, 867n, 882n

Vyavahāramayūkha of Nīlakaṇṭha 247, 287n, 294n, 309n, 310, 323, 340n, 341n, 346n, 358, 363, 368, 370, 373, 389n, 393n, 394n, 417n, 419n, 423n, 424, 426n, 428n, 429n, 431n, 433n, 434n, 445n, 462n, 463n, 467n, 468n, 473n, 513n, 526, 532n, 545–46, 549n, 550n, 551, 553n, 554n, 560, 562, 568n, 569, 575n, 582n–584n, 586n, 593n, 595n, 597, 599n, 601, 607n, 609n–10n, 618n, 621n, 623, 626–27, 632n, 636, 647n, 664, 668n–670n, 674–75, 678–680, 687–692n, 695–96, 706n, 709–10, 715n, 719n, 721–22, 725–26, 728–29, 731–32, 734, 738, 747n, 748, 761, 763, 764n, 766, 768–69, 772, 774n, 777n, 779, 782–784n, 787–791n, 795, 797–98n, 800n, 804n, 805, 809–11, 817n, 861n, 867n, 873, 878, 879, 936, a work of paramount authority on Hindu Law in Gujerat, Bombay Island and Northern Konkan 545, 878

Vyavahāranirṇaya of Varadarāja 121n, 246, 260, 277n 287n, 300n, 301n, 308n, 310, 313n, 318n, 321n, 326n, 327n, 336n, 338n, 341n, 342n, 348n, 355n, 358n, 368, 369n, 379n, 382, 391n, 394n, 403n, 419n, 423, 428n, 430n, 431, 441n, 445n, 468n, 469, 474, 487n, 492n–494n, 495–96, 545, 553, 554n, 556n, 569, 571n, 572n, 576n, 577n, 582n–85n, 592n, 593n, 601, 606n, 620n, 621n, 623n, 625n, 628n, 631n, 639n, 644, 651n, 653n, 678n, 683, 685n, 686, 703n, 707n, 713n, 731, 733n, 736n 752n, 755n, 774n, 776n, 779n, 791n, 800n, 861n, 862n, 882n

Vyavahārapadas, meaning of 248; misjoinder of 299, number and nomenclature of, differed 248, said to be 18 from ancient times 248, 250; subdivided into those arising from wealth and those arising from injury 258; subdivisions of 262

Vyavahāraprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya of Mitramiśra) 156n, 243n–44n, 247n, 259n, 261–65n, 275, 278, 280, 282n, 284, 288n, 291, 299n, 301n–303n, 304, 306, 308–10, 313n, 315, 317, 318n, 322–23, 327n, 330–334, 337, 338n, 340n, 344n, 346n, 348n, 350n, 351, 352n, 354n–357n, 358, 363n. 364n, 366n, 367n, 368, 371n, 372n, 375, 379, 380n, 383, 385n, 396, 417n, 419n, 432, 436n, 437, 438n–440n, 443n, 444–45n, 447n, 451, 452n, 455, 456n—58n, 462, 463n, 464, 465n–468n, 470n, 471n, 473n, 474n, 475, 477n–479n, 482n–485n, 487, 488n, 489n–90, 492n, 498n, 499n, 502n, 505n, 506n, 507, 509n, 513, 520n, 521, 522n, 525n–26n, 529n, 531n, 532, 536n–37n, 539, 546, 548n, 549, 550n, 552, 555n, 558n, 563n, 569–70n, 572–75n, 578, 598, 602n, 603n, 604, 620, 621n, 623n, 625n, 628n, 629n, 631n, 632n, 636—37, 639n, 652n, 701n, 706–708n, 712, 713n, 715n, 716, 720n–22, 725–27, 729n, 733n, 734n, 737n, 747n, 755, 766, 768, 769n, 774n, 775, 777–79n, 785n, 788, 793, 800n, 804n, 809n, 858n, 861, 862n, 863, 866n, 867n, 869, 879n, 882n.

Vyavahāraratnākara 246

Vyavahārasāra, 274, 278, 281n, 311, 354n, 379n, 383, 441n, 459n, 483n, 560n, 605, 625n, 628n, 721n, 733n, Vyavahāratattva, 246, 271n, 276, 288n, 293, 306, 317n, 323n, 325, 338, 340o, 366n, 367, 375, 867o.

Wad, Rao Bahadur 106, 405
War, (see under 'battle'), country of an enemy may be harassed in 210, fighting ceased at sunset in 211, high ideal of, in the Mahābhārata 209; non-combatants were not to be molested in 210, rules of, agreed upon between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas 209, use of poisoned or barbed arrows forbidden in 210, weapons used in ancient India in 212–215, wounded soldiers of enemy in w should be given medicine 210
Water, rules about allowing w. to run on another's land or house 507–508; rules about defiling reservoir of w. or river 509.
Watercourse, rules about 508, 510, 590.
Watters (on Yuan Chwang's travels) 376o, 407.
Ways, rights of, belonging to a joint family cannot be divided at a partition 588n.
Wealth, activity is the root of 169, all w is not meant for sacrifices 609; is acquired for two purposes, viz. worldly enjoyment and spiritual benefit 736, men of, to be honoured by king 189, rules about the acquisition of w are purusārtha 550n, seven śāstric sources of 550n
Weapons, divided into four classes by ancient writers 264–265, five kinds of 215, worship of, before battle 910–911
Weaving, duties of superintendent of 146.
Weber 16
Weights and measures, duties of superintendent of 145–146, punishment for false 166, were first introduced by the Nandas 145n, were made from iron or stones found in Magadha country or Mekala mountain 146
Wells, should not be partitioned but enjoyed in common 586, 588n, 596.
Whipping, allowed in England even now for certain offences 403n., as punishment for certain offences 403–4; prescribed as punishment in some cases for women, minors, slaves, lunatics, old men 404.
Whipping Act (Indian) 403n.
Widow, can perform only the Ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha for her husband 737, different views about the power of adoption of a son by a 668–669, effect of unchastity on right to maintenance 806–808; fluctuations in cases about widow's power of adoption in a joint Hindu family in the Bombay Presidency 670–674, forfeits property taken as heir of her husband if she remarries 707, of predeceased son or predeceased grandson was allowed by Viśvarūpa to take the share of her deceased husband 604, of gotraja as heir 751–52, remarriage of, condemned by most smṛtis but allowed by custom in certain castes 453, right of w. of a person or of his predeceased son or grandson in modern times 604, right of w. to succeed to separated sonless husband, if chaste 706–707, right of w. is of a limited nature 708–710, succeeding to husband does not forfeit estate by subsequent unchastity 707, succeeds as heir under Dāyabhāga, whether husband was joint or separate 708, taker of, had to pay her first husband's debts 453, was to be chaste, perform śrāddha of deceased husband and take all his wealth 738, whether unchaste w can adopt 674
Wife, acc. to Vyāsa, was entitled at most to 2000 panas in the husband's wealth 606, cannot herself demand partition but was entitled to a share when husband separated his sons or her sons claim partition during father's life 605, could earn or own property, but had no independent power of disposal during husband's life 452; debts of, to be paid by husband in the case of cowherds, hunters and the like 452, husband must try to deserve regard and love of 537, husband had ownership over, acc to Nārada 453, maintenance of 803–4, may be divided as to estate from husband 450–51, meaning of dictum 'there is no partition between husband and w' 603–604, not liable to pay husband's debts 440–441, 452, of cowherd and of him who takes a lease of land for half produce liable for debts of husband 441, of sacrificer had to confess in Varunapraghāsa if she had a paramour 534–35, right of w.' to succeed to her deceased husband's wealth was recognized after a long struggle 701, punishment for abandoning blameless w 804, treatment of w guilty of adultery 806, was said to be half of the husband 453

Wilkinson, author of 'Manners and customs of ancient Egyptians' 425n,

Will, Brhaspati is against passing of property by 474, 817, germs of the idea of 474, 816–817, of Umichand 818, political w. of Lalitāditya 817, unknown to ancient Hindu Law 816;

Wills, on 'circumstantial evidence 356n, 357n

Window, opening of w so as to command view of the interior of another's house not allowed 507

Wine, none to be allowed to drink during day time acc to Śukra 148, how far forbidden in Kali 964–965

Winternitz, Dr 122n, 405n

Witchcraft, 405–406, punished in England up to beginning of 18th century 405, punishment for acc to Manu and Brhaspati 406.

Witness, even one may be sufficient in certain cases 331–332, evidence of, must be direct and not hearsay, 330, king cannot be cited as 336, litigants were not to approach secretly a w. 349, Mann prefers a single male w. to women of good character 337, who is a 330.

Witnesses, (see under 'perjury'), at least three generally required 331 brāhmana w following avocation of tending cattle or engaged in trade or as menials were to be treated as śūdras in matters of oath 344 compulsory attendance of 345, cross examination of w how far allowed 245, divided by Nārada into krta and akrta 339, duty of party opposed to the party calling w to point out latent defects rendering them incompetent as w. 341, even persons generally held to be incompetent as w may have to be examined in certain cases 337, evidence of w tends to be false owing to friendship, fear, greed, anger, ignorance 334, examination of, not to be delayed by king or judge 331, exceptions to rule that w. were to be examined in open court 346, exhortations addressed by the judge to 342–344, faults in w. cannot be pointed out at a late stage 341, fined for not coming to depose 345, five classes of incompetent 338–339, five kinds of krta 339, how much has to be proved by party calling w. 347–348, if serious calamity befell w. after deposing in a cause they were fined and made to pay debt claimed 352, indicatory acts and appearances of w. deposing falsely 346, in disputes among groups, guilds &c. 333; minimum required to attest documents 312, number of w, necessary in a dispute 331–332, Oaths administered to 343–44; parties as 345, patent defects in, to be considered by court at time of giving decision 341, persons incompetent to be w. 334–336, qualifications of 332–333, quality preferred to number of 347, rules in case of conflict among 347, should be produced for examination by parties or summoned by court 345; should ordinarily be of the same caste as the parties 333, should take off their shoes and touch cow-dung, gold or darbha grass before deposing 342; six kinds of akrta 340, strict examination of character of w should be entered upon only in civil disputes 336-37, subsistence allowance for w 345, swearing and exhortation of w differed acc to caste 343-44, taking down the depositions of 344, to be examined in presence of parties 342-343, twelve kinds of, mentioned by Bṛhaspati 340, were allowed to depose falsely by Dharmaśāstra works if speaking the truth would lead to death sentence for accused 353, were to depose in the presence of fire, water jar and brāhmaṇas 342, women as 333-34, 337, women not wholly disqualified as w. 338

Woman, abandonment of, as punishment when she conceived from intercourse with a man of lower caste 402, person buying or selling a brāhmaṇa woman as a slave was punished by king and the transaction was set aside 485, pregnant, not to be sentenced to death 402, sight of, in a dream, an auspicious sign 226, when abandoned for unchastity 806-807, who was not a slave became a slave by marrying a slave 485

Women, assimilated to śūdras in respect of study of Veda, homa &c. 687, cannot be completely guarded by being merely secluded 537; even patita w that had not performed prāyaścitta were to be given bare maintenance 615, have authority to perform pūrta dharma, i. e works of charity such as building of wells, temples, parks 610, lesser punishment for 533, must be guarded against improper attachments 536, not held entitled to a share, but only to maintenance acc to certain writers that rely on Baudhāyana 606, 712, not to be arrested and jailed in certain cases 384-85, not entitled to inherit in the whole of India except five w. specially mentioned and except in Bombay and Madras 713, 746, 748, not entitled to dispose of property independently of their husbands 771, of even good family come to ruin by independence 536, only four kinds of adulterous w to be abandoned 948, rules about personal appearance of w. in courts 287; saṁskāras of, except marriage, not to be performed with Vedic mantras 712, treatment of women raped or kidnapped 956-57, work provided at home by superintendent of weaving for w. that did get out or were crippled or unmarried 146

Work, two kinds of, śubha and aśubha 482, what is impure w 482,

Writing, referred to even in the most ancient dharmasūtras 307, when introduced in ancient India 306-308, wooden boards used for writing ephemeral matters 308.

Yācitaka, rules of Kātyāyana about interest beginning to run on 426, rules of Kauṭilya about 459.

Yādavaprakāśa, author of lexicon called Vaijayantī 136.

Yadu, disobeyed his father Yayāti and lost the kingdom 42.

Yājñavalkya, smṛti of, 6-7, 9-10, 17n, 22, 26, 32, 37-8, 43-4, 48, 56-7, 59-60, 62, 71, 95-97, 101, 107-110, 118-121n, 123, 124n, 126, 128-29, 132, 140n, 142, 146n, 158, 160-61, 166-171, 173n, 175-76, 178, 184, 193, 195, 199, 209, 211, 216-17, 228, 238, 242, 245-48, 250-51, 257, 259, 260n, 263n, 268, 270-71, 273, 275, 277, 280, 284, 291-92, 294-97, 300, 302-310, 312-313, 314-15, 317, 319-21, 324-25, 327-28, 331-34, 336, 338n, 340n, 342-348n, 350-53, 356, 358, 360, 362-65, 367-68, 370-74, 376n, 380-83, 385, 387-89, 391-92, 394-398n, 400-405, 408, 412-13, 419-422, 425, 427-29, 431, 433-438, 440-443n, 445, 448n-452, 454, 457-58, 463-64, 466-67, 470-72, 476-479, 481-84,

486, 488–92, 494n, 496–501, 504–05, 507, 509–516, 520–22, 524, 525n, 527–29, 531, 533–35, 538–540, 545, 549n, 551n, 553, 554n–557, 563, 566–567, 569, 573–577, 579, 582, 584, 586–87, 590, 592, 593n, 595–99, 601, 603, 605, 609–617, 619, 621–23, 628, 630, 632, 635, 637, 640–41, 644–46, 649, 651–54, 657–58, 660, 663, 666, 670n, 675, 677–78, 686, 690n, 700–702, 708, 714–15, 719, 722, 725–26, 732, 735, 737n, 742–43, 749, 754n, 759–60, 764–65, 767, 773, 775n, 779–81, 785–87, 792–94, 801, 803–807, 809, 810n, 812, 814, 823, 825n–27, 831, 837, 857n, 858n, 860, 863, 865, 866, 867n, 868, 869, 871, 874, 878, 881–83, 931–34, 938–39, 941, 943, 946–48, 950–52, 954, 958–59, 963, 965, 970

Yama, smṛti of, 527n, 533–34, 644, 652n, 707n, 792.

Yaśaskara, a king, personally heard causes of people 270–71, punished a brāhmaṇa criminal with mark of dog's foot on the forehead 403, was elected king of Kashmir 31

Yaśastilaka 27, 84, 86, 111n, 113, 128n, 202, 203n, 859n.

Yāska (see under 'Nirukta'), 104, 658, 776n.

Yaśodharman Viṣnuyaśas 925n

Yati, śūdra as 765, who could be a 765; whether he could beg for food from all varnas 957, rule about his abode for the night 959–60

Yatidharmasaṅgraha 929n, 960n.

Yaudheyas, republic of 89; were uprooted by Rudradāman 89

Yautaka, a kind of strīdhana 778–779

Yavana, king ruled for a long time because he observed dictates of dharma 97.

Yavanas, dwelt in the east of Bharatavarsa 67; said to have sprung from Turvasu, son of Yayāti 937.

Yayāti, passed over his eldest son Yadu and made his youngest son Pūru his successor 42, 44

Yogakṣema, meaning of 588–589

Yogīnka, a writer 348n

Yojana, measure of distance varied in different countries 145n

Yuddhakāṇḍa 77, 116, 200, 209, 214

Yudhiṣthira, prevaricated to bring about death of his teacher Drona 845, vow of, not to refuse dice play when challenged 542.

Yugapurāna, part of Gargasaṃhitā 892, 897.

Yugas, description of the nature and dharmas of four 891–92, dharma declined progressively in the 244, 885–886, dharmas of different y. differ 869, 891, four well-known y. not found in Rgveda 886, meaning of 886–889, smṛtis predominant in several y 869, 885, theory of 885–891.

Yuktikalpataru 13, 229n, 230

Yuvarāja, bad y. to be kept confined 117; eldest son or youngest brother of a reigning king became 116, emoluments of 117, entrusting powers to 117, not generally enumerated in the lists of mantrins 116; often sent as a Governor of a province of the realm 116.

INDEX OF TECHNICAL OR DIFFICULT SANSKRIT WORDS

(Transliterated and arranged according to the English alphabet)
(The figures refer to pages)

Ābadhya 772
Ābhigāmika 45
Abhiyoktr 292
Abhiyukta 292
Ācarita 439
Adāyādabāndhava 650
Ādeśa 697n, 698n
Adevamātrka 133n
Ādhaka 124n
Ādhamana 428
Ādhānapatra 311
Ādharya 300n
Ādhi 419n, 427–28
Ādhibhoga 419
Adhikarana 142
Adhikarmakrt 482
Ādhipāla 434n
Ādhipatya 64
Adhisthāna 142
Adhyagni 774n
Adhyaksa 142
Adhyāvahanika 774n
Agha 942
Āgama 317
Āhāra 139
Āhnikapaddhati 851n
Ājñādhi 493n
Ajñākraya 493n
Ājñāpatra 310
Akramodhā 618n
Akranda 220
Ākrandāsāra 220
Āksadyūtika 541
Aksapatala 143
Aksanbhinī 204–205
Aksāvāpa 112
Aksika 541
Amātya 104
Amātya 451n
Āmiksā 465
Anga 17
Antapāla 112n, 197
Āntarvamśika 112n
Antevāsin 482
Anūbandhyā 865
Anumāna 828n, 851n
Anusāmanta 142
Anuśista 383
Anuttara 263
Anuvakra 919n
Anvādheya 774n
Anvādhi 429
Anvādhipatra 311
Anvāhita 458, 459n
Anvīksikī 46–48
Apana 263
Apanaya 217
Apapātrita 610n
Aparādha 264
Apayātrita 610n
Apratibandha-dāya 546
Apratisthita 277, 716
Apratyayabhogyādhi 430
Āpta 334n
Arājaka 21, 30
Ardhādhāna 961
Arghya 368
Ari 218
Arisadvarga 53
Arthadūsana 54
Arthaśāstra 6–7
Arthin 292
Āsana 223
Āsedha 291
Āśraya 219
Asuravijayin 69
Ātavika 112n, 200–201
Ātreyī 527n
Atta 893n
Anupapātika 610n
Anrasa 655–656
Avakraya 494n, 495
Avapātika 610n
Avarnddhā 811–815
Avyāvahārika 447
Baddhakrama 731
Bala 438, 439
Bāla 395n

Bali
Bandha 147n, 190
Bandhu 419n
Bandbudāyāda 753n
Bhāga 650
Bhāgadugha 190
Bhāsā 112
Bhātaka 292
Bhayavarjitā 480
Bheda 503
Bhoga (possession) 172
Bhoga (district) 317
Bhogalābha 139
Bhogapati 419
Bhrtaka 139
Bhrūna 482
Bhujisyā 612n
Bhukti (possession) 813
Bhukti (district) 317
Bijin 139
Brāhmanabruva 646n

Cakravartin 272
Cakravrddhi 66
Cākrika 418
Cara 334n
Caritrabandhaka 129
Catuspatha 435
Chala 508
Chala 279
Citraka or Cīraka 438–439
Codanā 309, 311

Danda 354
Danda 21–22, 172
Danda (army) 960
Dandanīti 200
Dandapāla 5
Dandopanata 112n
Dandopanāyin 224
Dāsī 226
Dattānapākarma 602n
Dattapradānika 471n
Dauvārika 471n
Dāya 112n
Dāyabhāga 543–544
Dāyāda 545
Devalaka 543–544, 711
Devamātrka 950-51
Devapasn 133n
Dhānaka 501n
Dhānvana 121n, 122
Dhāranaka 178
434n

Dharma 434n
Dharma 260, 572
Dharmādhikarana 438–39
Dharmādhikaranin 243
Dharmāsana 126n
Dharmastha 243
Dharmasthana 252
Dharmavijayin 243
Dhata 69
Dhvajāhrta 369
Dhvajinī 583–584
Dīnāra 502
Divya 121n, 122
Dravya 363
Drona 575
Dronamukha 124n
Dūta 140
Dūtaka 127–129
Dvadhibhāva 332n, 340
Dvaigūnya 223
Dvairājya 422
Dvipravācana 102
Dvyāmusyāyana 685n
Dyūta 685

Ekacchāyāśrita 538
Ekaśesa 438n
Ekavākyatā 722n
Ekoddista 443

Gadyānaka 737n
Gana 122n
Ganani 88 281, 487–88
Ganikā 49
Gartā 148n
Gāvunda 276
Glaha 154
Gocarma 539
Golaka 432n
Gopa 646n
Gopya 143, 149
Gotrabhājah 428
Gotraja 650
Govikartana 732
Grāmakūta 112
Grāmika 154, 282
Grhapatika 282
Grhyamānakārana 129
Gulma 827n
141

Hīna 303
Hiranya 124n
Holākā 851n

Indrajāla 172
Indrasthāna 367n
Indriya 713
Iti 163

Jānapada 93–95, 134n
Jānapada (document) 309
Jānarājya 64
Jāngala 132n
Jāra 846
Jayapatra 310, 380
Jñāti 754n

Kākinī 121n, 126n
Kali 886–887
Kālikā 418
Kalkin 924n
Kāndaprstha 652n
Kānina 647, 660
Kantaka . 162, 251, 252
Kanyā 713
Kāpatika 129
Kara 190, 191
Karana 300, 307
Kārita 418
Karma (torture) 254
Karmabhūmi 137
Kārmana 531n
Kārmāntika 112n
Karmānuyoga 254
Karmasthāna 113
Karmavipāka 392
Kārsāpana 120, 121n
Kārya 95, 304
Kāyavrata 439
Kāyikā 418, 419
Kesarin 850n
Khanda 138
Khārī 121n
Kharvata 182n
Khārvatika 140
Khuta 182n
Kośa 184
Kriyā 260, 301
Krta (throw of dice) 886–887
Krta 339
Krta (interest) 419
Ksaya 490n
Ksayādhi 430
Kula 142, 150n
Kula (tribunal) 280
Kulika 283, 334n

Kumārāmātya 117
Kumārisāhasa 196n
Kumbha 124n
Kumbha 154
Kunda 646n
Kupyādhyaksa 145
Kusida 415, 417
Kusīdin 417

Lābha 777n
Lagna 229
Lagnaka 419, 435
Laksanādhyaksa 144
Lekha 49
Likhita 340
Lingin 610n
Lohavijayin 69
Lohābhihāra (or-sāra) 910n
Lokāyata 46–47

Madhyama 230
Madhyamasāhasa 393–94
Mahādandanāyaka 115n
Mahārāja 68
Malimlu 519
Mandala 138–139
Māndalika 67
Mantraśakti 171
Mantrin 105
Manyu 200
Māsa 121n
Mātsyanyāya 21, 30n
Matsyinī 502
Maula 200, 634n
Māyā 172
Mithyā 300
Mitra 218
Mrtāntara 338n, 339
Mudrādhyaksa 119
Mudrita 277
Mūla 163

Nādikā 140n
Nadimātrka 133n
Nāgaraka 112n, 140
Nagaravīrcthin 111, 182
Naidhāni 502
Naigama 159n, 487n, 882n
Naisthika 761 962 63
Nāstika 164
Naya 217
Nāyaka 112n, 142
Nibandha 575n

Nigada 676n
Nikṣepa 454–455
Nirarthaka 300
Nirhāra 788n
Niruikta 350n
Nirvyūha 507n
Niṣāda 599
Niśa 125n
Niśṛṣṭārtha 128
Niśṛstilekha 310
Niyata 813
Nyāsa 454–455

Pākhandin 882n
Pakṣāhināsa 299
Pala 370n
Palli 154
Pana 539
Paficabandha 295
Paficakula 283
Paficamahāśabda 113
Paficārūdha 312
Panya 490, 495
Pāraśava 599, 648, 656
Paribhūsana 224
Paridāna 310
Parihāra 191, 195, 310
Parihāra 500
Parikraya 224
Parimitārtha 126
Pārinahya 770
Pārinayya 770n
Parivartanā 495
Parivrati 112
Parivrtti 495
Parokta 296, 303
Pārsnigrāha 220
Pārsnigrāhāsāra 220
Parvan 737n
Pārvana 737n
Paryagnikarana 938
Paścātkāra 380–81
Patnī 707
Pattakila 154
Pattana 182n
Patra 587n
Panra 93–95
Paura-vyāvahārika 112n
Pogauda 395n, 460n
Prabhuśakti 171
Pracāra 587
Prādvivāka 272
Prajñāpanāpatra 310
Prakīrnaka 251
Prākrta 219
Prakrti 17
Pranaya 60, 185
Pranayana 704n
Prānnyāya 458
Prasādapatra 310
Praśnavivāka 272
Prathamakāyastha 141
Prathamakulika 141
Prathamasāhasa 393–94
Pratibhoga 191
Pratibhū 435
Pratijñā 292
Pratilekha 310
Pratinyāsa 458
Pratipaksa 300
Pratisara 879
Pratisthitā 277
Pratyabhiyoga 302
Pratyākalita 260, 298
Pratyartbin 292
Pratyavaskandana 300
Pratyupavista 438
Praveśapatra 442
Pravrajyāvasita 129n
Prāvrttika 310
Pūga 281, 487
Purāna 121n
Pūrta 451
Purusārtha 550n
Pūrvanyāya 300
Pūrvapākṣa 38, 292
Pusyasnāna 407

Rājakartr 30
Rājamārga 508
Rājan 28, 37–38, 67–68, 89, 91
Rājaśabdopajīvin 388
Rākā 138
Rāstra 117n, 138
Rāstriya 29
Ratnu 543, 551n
Rikths 650
Rikthabhājah 416
Rna 245
Rta 49
Rūpa 144
Rūpadarśaka 144n
Rūpatarka

Sabhā 92–93
Sabhika 539
Sabhya 273
Sabrahmacārin 762 & n
Saciva 101
Sādhyapāla 278
Sāhasa 525
Sajīta 754n
Śākin 330
Śakyasāmanta 45
Śalākin 499n
Śami 217
Samādhartr 112n, 143
Samādhyaya 538
Samānodaka 752–753
Sāmanta 67, 142
Sīmanta 504n
Samaya 157, 826
Sāmayācārika 825n
Sambhūya samutthāna 466
Samiti 92–93
Sampratipatti 300
Samrāt 67, 72
Samsaktaka 504
Samsarana 508
Samśraya 223
Samsrsta 766n, 768
Samsrstin 766n
Samudra 933
Sāmvatsara 126
Samvid 486
Samvitpatra 311
Śamyā 500n
Sanābhi 334n, 754n
Sīcara 130
Sandhi 223
Sandhipatra 311
Sangha 88
Sangrahi 141
Sangrahana 140, 531
Sankara (misjoinder of causes of action) 302
Sannidhātr 112n, 143
Santāna 750–751
Śānti 231
Sapana 263
Śapathi 354, 358
Śapratibandhi dāya 546
Śapratyayabhogyādhi 430
Śārāgi 373
Śārthavāhi 141
Sarvabhauma 66, 68
Sarvādhāna 961
Sarvatraga 310
Śāsana 310
Śāsanahara 128
Śāsitā 277
Śaladāya 388
Śataghni 213
Śatamāna 122, 125n
Śatrin 129–130
Śatru 218
Satya 300
Satyankāra 435, 491n
Śaudāyika 778
Śaudra 599, 646, 656
Śauryadhana 583–584
Śaurirāmani 940
Śesa 579n
Setu 510
Śikhāvrddhi 419
Śila 825n
Śilpinyāsa 458
Simbidhānya 191
Śiras 119n
Śirastha 364
Śirakastha 364
Śiśu 395n
Śisya 482
Sītā 147n
Śiva 893n
Smārita 339
Smārtakāla 321
Sottara 263
Śreni 281, 287
Śrenibala 201
Sthānakrta 309n
Sthānapāla 149
Sthāniki 143, 149
Sthāniya 140
Sthitipatra 311
Sthūlalaksa 44
Stobhaka 264
Stoma 480
Sūcaka 264
Sūci 339
Śuddhavadha 400n
Śūkadhānya 191
Śūli 693n
Sulka 116, 190, 191

Sulka
Sūnā
Suvarna
Svāmin
Sva
Svapurusa
Svārājya
Svarāt
Svayamukti

Tāpasa
Tāyu
Tīksna
Tinita
Tirtha
Traipurusika
Trayi
Tretā

Udāsina
Udāsthita
Uddhāra
Uddhārapatra
Udvrsabhayajña
Ugra
Uktalābhi
Upadhā
Upagata
Upagraha
Upahāra
Upākarana
Upakurvāna
Upanidhi
Uparika
Upaśruti
Upayācita
Upeksā
Utkoca
Utsāhaśakti
Uttamarna
Uttamasāhasa
Uttara (reply)
Uttara (a kind of witness)
Uttara (future)
Utthāna
Vadha

775-776
148
121n, 125n
547
547
278
65
68, 73
339

129
519
130
383
112-113
737
48 888

220
129
625
311
851n
64
493
105
311, 442
221
224
945n
764, 962-63
454
141
967n, 968n
967n
172
473
171
415
393-94
300
340
886n
169
526n

Vaidya
Vairājya
Vākyānuyoga
Vārdhusa
Vārdhusika
Vargin
Vārtā
Vatsanābha
Veda (bunch of kuśa grass)
Velāpura
Vibhāga
Vigraha
Vijigisu
Vinādī
Vinaya
Vinimaya
Virāt
Visaya
Visayapati
Visuddhipatra
Visti
Vivāda
Vitāsana
Vrāta
Vrddhi
Vyāhrti
Vyasana
Vyavahāra
Vyavahārapada
Vyāyāma

Yācitala
Yadrcchābhijña
Yādrcchika
Yājya
Yāna
Yātavya
Yātudhāna
Yautala
Yogaksema
Yonisambandha
Yuga
Yukti
Yuktidīpa
Yūpahastin

581n
102
254
417
417-418, 428n
283
50-51
373
842
193
560
223
218
370n
51-52
495
68, 73
138
141
311
208
246
352n
487
418
689n
232
245-46, 260, 435
248, 250-51
217

426, 454
339
339
586n
223, 225
218
359
779
588-89
754n
886
354-355
354
836n

9405

Government Oriental Series—Class B. No. 6

HISTORY OF DHARMAŚĀSTRA

(ANCIENT AND MEDIEVAL RELIGIOUS AND CIVIL LAW IN INDIA)

Vol IV

(PĀTAKA, PRĀYAŚCITTA, KARMAVIPĀKA, ANTYESTI, ĀŚAUCA, ŚUDDHI, ŚRĀDDHA AND TĪRTHAYĀTRĀ)

Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona

1953

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Preface	i—iv
List of Abbreviations	v–viii
Chronological Table	ix–xii
Brief Synopsis of the contents	xiii–xvi
List of works consulted ..	xvii–xxiv
Index of Law cases	xxv
Additions and Corrections	xxvi–xxvii
History of Dharmaśāstra, vol. IV	1–827
Appendix containing long passages in Sanskrit ..	828–833
General Index	835–922
Index of technical or important Sanskrit words ...	923–926

PREFACE

The third volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra was published in October 1946. In the brief preface to that volume I intimated that the remaining topics of Dharmaśāstra would be dealt with in one volume. But as I proceeded with the task I found that that was a miscalculation. To present in one volume all the topics that remained in the manner and on the scale that I had adopted in the first three volumes was found to be impossible. Besides, as my age advanced, I could not maintain the same speed and finish the whole history in a few years as I intimated I would do in the preface to the third volume. Therefore, I had to decide, however reluctantly, to spread the remaining work over two volumes. Owing to the scarcity of paper and paucity of skilled workers, this volume has been in the press for more than three years This volume deals with eight topics, viz Pātaka, Prāyaścitta, Karmavipāka, Antyesti, Āśauca, Śuddhi, Śrāddha and Tīrthayātrā. These subjects are of great interest to anthropologists. There was great temptation for me, when dealing with these topics, to indulge in dwelling upon similar beliefs, usages and rites described in such works as Frazer's 'Golden Bough.' For two reasons, however, I have rarely succumbed to this temptation. In the first place, there was the fear of increasing the bulk of the work which has already assumed enormous proportions. In the second place, dwelling on comparisons of ancient and medieval Indian usages and rites with similar usages and rites found elsewhere is liable to serious misunderstanding. Frazer's volumes are largely made up of materials concerning the beliefs, usages and rites of very primitive people. It appeared to me that readers of such comparisons might be led to think that people in ancient and medieval India were at a primitive stage of culture, while as a matter of fact they had a very high culture in most matters, although they retained certain beliefs and usages derived from remote antiquity. Many cultured societies retain some usages that belong to periods of antiquity. The queen in France was not to leave for a whole year the room in which the death of her consort was announced to her. Wretched old women deemed to be witches were prosecuted and sentenced to death in England up to the beginning of the eighteenth century, while Manu (IX. 290) more than two thousand years ago prescribed the mild punishment of a fine of two hundred panas for all incantations intended to destroy life, for magic rites and for raising ghosts and goblins. My main aim has throughout been to discover, collect, classify and interpret the facts of the various departments of Dharmaśāstra and my endeavour has been, as far as in me lies, to present the truth with detachment and intellectual integrity and without bias (except what might have been unconsciously engendered in my mind owing to my being born and brought up in a brāhmana family) to show the continuity, the developments and transformations in Indian beliefs, rites and usages throughout the ages and, while bringing the past in its causal relations with the present, to indicate and suggest future trends and changes in these matters. †

The fifth and last volume will mainly deal with the following subjects vratas and utsavas, śānti rites, kāla and muhūrta; paurāna-dharma, the influence of the Pūrvamīmāmsā and other śāstras on dharmaśāstra; the cosmological, religious and philosophical background of dharmaśāstra; the fundamental aspects of our culture through the ages; the impact of modern social and other ideas and trends on the dogmas and ideals of dharmaśāstra and the future of the latter This by itself is rather an ambitious programme. Now that I am over seventy-three years of age and suffering from several ailments I have misgivings whether I would be able to write this last volume and publish it while all mental and physical faculties are sound I am myself extremely anxious to write this last volume as early as possible and bring to a conclusion an undertaking to which I have devoted all my leisure for over thirty years regardless of monetary losses and bodily ailments. With that object in view I have given up either entirely or very largely most of my other activities and engagements and have thereby offended many of my friends.

This volume also is full of quotations, references to inscriptions and judicial decisions. The reasons for this have been stated at length in the preface to the second volume and therefore they need not be repeated here. The list of additions to this volume is much larger than in the preceding volumes. I may be pardoned for frankly stating the reason. The first and second volumes of the History of Dharmaśāstra were published so far back as 1930 and 1941 respectively. No second edition of these has yet been called. It seems to me quite possible that during my life-time no second edition of the volumes of the History, or at least of this volume, might appear. Therefore, I tried to incorporate by way of additions such information as had escaped me while the work was being written in order to make it as complete as possible.

† Prof. J. B Bury, a distinguished Professor of History in the Cambridge University, thought that freedom from bias was not possible and was not also desirable, since a man writing history completely free from bias would produce a colourless and dull work Vide 'Selected Essays' (edited by Harold Temperley, 1930) p. 70

I now discharge the pleasant duty of acknowledging my obligations to others Bloomfield's Vedic Concordance, the Vedic Index of Professors Macdonell and Keith, and the volumes of the Sacred Books of the East have been very useful in preparing this volume as in the case of its predecessors. Paramahamsa Swāmī Kevalānanda Sarasvatī of Wai has been a tower of strength in all matters of doubt and difficulty and has helped me by offering prompt guidance in solving some intricate problems. I am highly obliged to Mr. S. N. Savadi of the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, Poona, for help in the correction of proofs and to Mr. P. M. Purandare, Advocate (O. S.), Bombay High Court, and Tarkatīrtha Raghunath Shāstri Kokje of Lonavla for reading the printed sheets as they came and making valuable suggestions.

It is difficult to name all those who in various ways, during the progress of this volume for over six years, kindly rendered assistance, but I should like to make special mention of Prof. K V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Mr. A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, Dr. A. S. Altekar, Dr. S K Belvalkar, Prof. G. H. Bhatt, Mr. Bhabatosh Bhattacharya, Mr. N. G. Chapekar, Dr. R. N. Dandekar, Mr. D. B Diskalkar, Dr. G. S Gai, Prof. P. K. Gode, Tarka-tīrtha Laksmanashāstri Joshi, Mr. G. H. Khare, Pandit Balacharya Khuperkar, Dr. Umesha Mishra, Dr. V. Raghavan, Prof. L. Renou, Prof. H. D. Velankar. Thanks are due to these scholars and many others for help and interest in this volume. I am conscious that in spite of so much help and generous encouragement from friends there are in this volume several mistakes, the sole responsibility for which rests on my shoulders. In a work replete with thousands of quotations and references it is quite likely that many slips have escaped my attention. § For these and for the elision of a few diacritical marks and the displacement of parts of Sanskrit letters in the process of printing the indulgence and forgiveness of all readers are sought. I sincerely thank the Manager of the Aryabhushan Press Poona, for carrying out the work of printing this volume with care in spite of difficulties caused by paper and labour shortage.

BOMBAY,
10-10-1953

P V KANE

§ I take this opportunity of correcting two mistakes that I regret I committed in the third volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra. In note 1886 on p 968 (of vol III) I refer to a work of Mr Batuknath Bhattacharya that contains a full treatment of Kaṭivarjya. I suggested in that note that Mr. Bhattacharya probably retouched his thesis after 1937 though it was written in 1933, in view of the fact that he referred to the Smṛtimuktāphala (which was published in 1937 by Mr Gharpure) Through oversight I forgot that Mr. Bhattacharya had expressly stated that he used the transcript of a ms of the Smṛtimuktāphala specially made for him. Therefore, I was wrong in my surmise that he probably retouched his thesis and I must say that the thesis as published in 1943 is the same as that written in 1933 for the Jogendrachandra Ghose Research Prize The second mistake refers to Dr. U. N Ghosal on p 32 (of vol III) I stated 'it is not possible to hold as Jayaswal, U Ghosal and others do that the theory of social contract was the earlier one and the theory of divine right of kings was later on propounded by the Manusmṛti to support the brāhmaṇa empire of Puṣyamitra' In writing this sentence my memory was at fault I find that Dr. Ghosal does not hold the view that I attributed to him. In the 'Indian Historical Quarterly' (vol 23, pp 68-70) Dr Ghosal justly protests against my bracketing him with Jayaswal, but I cannot help observing that the last sentence in the paper shows unexpected acerbity In his whole career as a writer Dr Ghosal was not probably guilty of a single slip and could not therefore bring himself to believe that my mistake might have been bona fide.

ABBREVIATIONS

(Most of the abbreviations on pp. 728–29 are not included in this list)

A. G. = Ancient Geography of India
Ain. A. = Ain-i-Akbari of Abul Fazal
Ait. Br. = Aitareya Brāhmana
A. I. R = All India Reporter
A K. D = Antyakarmadīpika
All. = Indian Law Reports, Allahabad series
Anu. = Anuśāsanaparva
Āp = Āpastamba
Āp. Dh. or Āp. Dh.S. = Āpastamba-dharma-sūtra
Āp. Gr. = Āpastamba-grhya-sūtra
Āp. M. P. = Āpastamba-mantra-pātha
Āp. Śr. or Āp. Śr. S or Āp.Ś.S. = Āpastamba-śrauta-sūtra
A. S. R. = Archaeological Survey Reports
Āśv. gr. or Āśv. gr S. = Āśvalāyana-grhyasūtra
Āśv. Sr.S. or Āśv.Sr. = Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra
A V. = Atharvaveda
Baud. = Baudhāyana
Baud. Dh. S. = Baudhāyana-dharma sūtra
Baud. Gr. = Baudhāyana-grhya-sūtra
Baud. P. S. = Baudhāyana-pitr-medha-sūtra
Baud. Śr = Baudhāyana-śrauta-sūtra
Beng. L. R. = Bengal Law Reports
Bom G = Bombay Gazetteer Volumes
B. I. = Bibliotheca Indica series
Bom. = Indian Law Reports, Bombay series
Bom. L. R. = Bombay Law Reporter
Bi. Up. = Brhadāranyakopanisad
B. R. W. W. = Buddhist Records of the Western World by Beal
Cal. = Indian Law Reports, Calcutta series
C. I I. = Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum
Chān. Up. = Chāndogyopanisad
C. L. J. = Calcutta Law Journal
C. W. N. = Calcutta Weekly Notes
Dh. or Dh. S. = Dharma-sūtra
ed. = edited
E I = Epigraphia Indica
Gaut. or Gaut. Dh. S. = Gautama-dharma-sūtra
Gobhila Gr. = Gobhila-grhya-sūtra
G. O. S. = Gaikwad Oriental series
G. P. S. = Gautama-pitrmedha-sūtra
Gr. R. = Grhastharatnākara
H. of D or H. of Dh. = History of Dharmaśāstra
Hir. Gr. or Hir. gr = Hiranyakeśi-grhya-sūtra
Hir. P S = Hiranyakeśi-pitr-medha-sūtra
I. A. = Indian Antiquary or Law Reports, Indian Appeals (according to context)
I L. R. = Indian Law Reports series

I. H Q.=Indian Historical Quarterly
J. A S. B.=Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal
Jai = Jaimini's Pūrvamīmāmsā-sūtra
Jaimini Gr.=Jaimini-grhya-sūtra
JBBRAS=Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society
Jiv. = Jivananda Vidyāsagara's edition
J. O. R.=Journal of Oriental Research (Madras)
J. R. A. S=Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain
Kāt =Kātyāyana
Kāt Śr. or Kāt. Śr. S.=Kātyāyanaśrautasūtra
Kāthaka Gr=Kāthaka-grhya-sūtra
Kātyāyana= Kātyāyana-smrtisāroddhāra (ed. by me)
Kauś or Kauśika=Kauśikasūtra
Kaus Up=Kausītaki Upanisad
Khādira Gr=Khādira-grhya-sūtra m =mentioned
Mārk =Mārkandeyapurāna
Mit =Mitāksarā, commentary on Yājñavalkya
M. S.=Maitrāyanī-samhitā
Nir=Nirukta
Nirn.=Nirnayasāgara Press ed
Pān=Pānini's Astādhyāyī
Pār. gr=Pāraskara-grhya-sūtra
Par M.=Parāśara-Mādhavīya
Pr M.=Prāyaścitta-mayūkha
Pr. Pr. or Pr Prakāśa=Prāyaścitta-prakāśa
Pr. Prakarana = Prāyaścitta-prakarana
Pr S or Pr. sāra=Prāyaścittasāra
Pr T or Pr Tattva=Prāyaścittatattva Pr. V. or Pr. Vi.=Prāyaścittaviveka q=quoted
Q. B D =Queen's Bench Division
Rg.=Rgveda
Sāma. Br.=Sāmavidhāna Brāhmana
Śān. Br.=Śānkhāyana Brāhmana
Śān. gr=Śānkhāyana-grhya-sūtra
Śān Sr or Śān. Śr. S.=Śānkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra
Śat. Br =Śatapatha Brāhmana
Sat Śr =Satyāsādhaśrauta-sūtra
S. B. E. = Sacred Books of the East (ed. by Maxmuller)
S K. = Śuddhikaumudī
S. K L. = Śrāddhakalpalatā
Sm. C. or Smr. C.=Smrticandrikā
Smr M =Smrtimuktāphala
Śr. P. or Śr Pr = Śrāddhaprakāśa
Śr. K. K.=Śrāddhakriyākaumudī
S. V = Sāmaveda
Tai Ā. or Tai. Ār = Taittirīya Āranyaka
Tai Br = Taittirīya Brāhmana
Tai. S. = Taittirīya Samhitā
Tai Up = Taittirīya-upanisad
Tāndya Br. = Tāndyamahābrāhmana
Tir. C. = Tīrthacintāmani
Tir. K =Tīrthakalpataru
Tīrthapr. or Tīr Pr. = Tīrthaprakāśa
Tri. S. = Tristhalīsetu
T S = Tīrthasāra
Up. = Upanisad
Vaik Smārta or Vaik Sm. S = Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra
Vaik Śr or Vaik Śr. S = Vaikhānasa-śrauta-sūtra
Vāj S. = Vājasaneya-samhitā
Vas = Vasistha-dharma-sūtra

Vishnu Dh. or Vishnu Dh. S. = Vishnudharmasūtra
Vy. M. = Vyavahāramayūkha
Yāj. = Yājñavalkya-smṛti
अ. क. दी. = अन्त्यकर्मदीपक
अग्नि. or अग्निपु. = अग्निपुराण
अथर्व. = अथर्ववेद
अनु. = अनुशासनपर्व
अन्त्येष्टिप. = अन्त्येष्टिपद्धति of नारायण
आ. गृ. परि. = आपस्तम्बगृह्यपरिशिष्ट
आप. = आपस्तम्बधर्मसूत्र
आप. गृ. = आपस्तम्बगृह्यसूत्र
आप ध. or आप. ध. सू. = आपस्तम्बधर्मसूत्र
आप म. पा = आपस्तम्बमन्त्रपाठ
आप. श्रौ. or आ. श्रौ. = आपस्तम्बश्रौतसूत्र
आश्व गृ. परि. = आश्वलायनगृह्यपरिशिष्ट
आश्व. गृ or आश्व गृ सू = आश्वलायनगृह्य-सूत्र
आश्व. श्रौ. or आश्व श्रौ. सू. = आश्वलायन-श्रौतसूत्र
ऋ. = ऋग्वेद
ऐ आ. = ऐतरेय-आरण्यक
ऐ. ब्रा. = ऐतरेयब्राह्मण
क. उप. or कठ. or कठोप. = कठोपनिषद्
कल्प॰ = कृत्यकल्पतरु or कल्पतरु of लक्ष्मीधर
कात्या. = कात्यायनस्मृतिसारोद्धार
का. श्रौ. सू. or कात्या. श्रौ. or कात्या. श्रौ. सू. = कात्यायनश्रौतसूत्र
कौ. ब्रा. उप. or कौषीतकि-ब्रा. उप. = कौषीतकिब्राह्मणोपनिषद्
गङ्गाभक्ति. or गङ्गाभ. = गङ्गाभक्तितरङ्गिणी
गङ्गावाक्या or गङ्गावा. = गङ्गावाक्यावलि
गरुड or गरुडपु. = गरुडपुराण
गृह र. = गृहस्थरत्नाकर
गौ. or गौ. ध. सू = गौतमधर्मसूत्र
गौ. पि. सू. = गौतमपितृमेधसूत्र
चतुर्विंशति. or चतुर्विंश. or चतु सं. = चतुर्विंशतिमतसंग्रह
चतुर्वर्ग. = चतुर्वर्गचिन्तामणि of हेमाद्रि
छा. उप. or छां. उप. or छान्दोग्योप. = छान्दोग्योपनिषद्
ताण्ड्य. = ताण्ड्यमहाब्राह्मण
तीर्थकल्प. = कल्पतरु on तीर्थ (G. O. S.)
ती. प्र. or तीर्थप्र. = तीर्थप्रकाश
ती. चि. or तीर्थचि. = तीर्थचिन्तामणि of वाचस्पति
तै आ. = तैत्तिरीयारण्यक
तै. उप. = तैत्तिरीयोपनिषद्
तै. ब्रा. = तैत्तिरीयब्राह्मण
तै. सं. = तैत्तिरीयसंहिता
त्रि. से. सा. स. = त्रिस्थलीसेतुसारसङ्ग्रह of भट्टोजि
त्रिस्थली = त्रिस्थलीसेतु of नारायणभट्ट
निर्णय॰ or नि. सि = निर्णयसिन्धु
पद्म. or पद्मपु. = पद्मपुराण
परा. मा. = पराशरमाधवीय
पा = पाणिनि's अष्टाध्यायी
पार. गृ. = पारस्करगृह्यसूत्र
पृथ्वी॰ or पृथ्वीच॰ or पृथ्वीचन्द्र. = पृथ्वीचन्द्रोदय
प्राय. तत्त्व = प्रायश्चित्ततत्त्व
प्राय. प्रकरण or प्राय प्रक. = प्रायश्चित्तप्रकरण
प्रा प्रकाश = प्रायश्चित्तप्रकाश
प्राय. वि or प्रा. वि. or प्राय. वि. = प्रायश्चित्तविवेक
प्राय. म. = प्रायश्चित्तमयूख
प्राय. सा. or प्राय. सार = प्रायश्चित्तसार
बृह उ. = बृहदारण्यकोपनिषद्
बृ. सं = बृहत्संहिता of वराहमिहिर
बौ. गृ. = बौधायनगृह्यसूत्र
बौ. ध. सू. = बौधायनधर्मसूत्र
बौ. श्रौ. = बौधायनश्रौतसूत्र
ब्रह्मपु. = ब्रह्मपुराण
भवि पु or भविष्यपु. = भविष्यपुराण
मत्स्य = मत्स्यपुराण
मद. पा. = मदनपारिजात
मनु = मनुस्मृति
महार्णव = महार्णवकर्मविपाक (ms.)
मानवगृ. = मानवगृह्यसूत्र
मिता. = मिताक्षरा
मेधा. = मेधातिथि, commentator of मनु
मै. सं = मैत्रायणीसंहिता
या. or याज्ञ. = याज्ञवल्क्यस्मृति
राजत. = राजतरङ्गिणी of कल्हण

वाज सं.=वाजसनेयसंहिता
वायु or वायुपु.=वायुपुराण
विष्णुपु =विष्णुपुराण
वि र.=विवादरत्नाकर
विष्णु or विष्णुध. सू =विष्णुधर्मसूत्र
वृद्धया.=वृद्धयाज्ञवल्क्य
वे. सू =वेदान्तसूत्र
व्यव नि =व्यवहारनिर्णय
व्य म.=व्यवहारमयूख
शत ब्रा or शतपथ or शतपथब्रा.=शतपथ-ब्राह्मण
शातातप=शातातपस्मृति
शाङ्खायनब्रा or शा ब्रा =शाङ्खायनब्राह्मण
शां. श्रौ. or शां श्रौ. सू.=शाङ्खायनश्रौतसूत्र
शान्ति =शान्तिपर्व
शु कौ. or शुद्धिकौ.=शुद्धिकौमुदी
शुद्धिकल्प.=कल्पतरु on शुद्धि
शुद्धिप्र or शु प्र.=शुद्धिप्रकाश
श्रा. क ल =श्राद्धकल्पलता
श्रा. क्रि कौ =श्राद्धक्रियाकौमुदी
श्राद्धप्र. or श्रा. प्र =श्राद्धप्रकाश
सत्या श्रौ.=सत्याषाढश्रौतसूत्र
साम ब्रा =सामविधानब्राह्मण
स्कन्द or स्कन्दपु =स्कन्दपुराण
स्मृतिच =स्मृतिचन्द्रिका
स्मृतिमु or स्मृ मु.=स्मृतिमुक्ताफल
श्रा. वि =श्राद्धविवेक of रुद्रधर
हिर गृ. or हिरण्य गृ.=हिरण्यकेशिगृह्यसूत्र

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE

OF

some important Sanskrit works and authors referred to in volume IV

N. B.—Some dates, particularly of ancient works, are conjectural and disputed by several scholars. Most of the dates about authors from the 8th or 9th century refer to the probable periods of their literary activity except in the case of a few authors such as Śaṅkarācārya and Vidyāpati.

4000 B. C.–1000 B. C.—The period of the Vedic Saṃhitās, Brāhmaṇas and Upaniṣads. Some hymns of the Ṛgveda, of the Atharvaveda, and in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā and Brāhmaṇa may possibly go back to a period earlier than 4000 B. C. and some of the Upaniṣads (even from among those that are regarded by most scholars as the earliest ones) may be later than 1000 B. C. Some scholars have criticized me for ascribing the vedic saṃhitās to such an early date as 4000 B. C. Time and health permitting, I may have to deal with this question in a separate work after I finish the 5th and last volume on which I am now engaged.

800 B. C.–500 B. C.—The Nirukta of Yāska

800 B. C.–400 B. C.—The principal śrautasūtras (of Āpastamba, Āśvalāyana, Baudhāyana, Kātyāyana, Satyāṣāḍha and others) and some of the gṛhyasūtras (such as those of Āpastamba and Āśvalāyana) 600–300 B. C.—The Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba, Baudhāyana, Vasiṣṭha and the Gṛhyasūtras of Pāraskara and a few others.

600 B. C.–300 B. C.—Pāṇini

500 B. C.–200 B. C.—Jaimini's Pūrva-mīmāṃsā-sūtra

500 B. C.–200 B. C.—The Bhagavadgītā

300 B. C.—Vararuci Kātyāyana, author of Vārtikas on Pāṇini's sūtras

300 B. C.–100 A. D.—Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya (rather nearer the former date than the latter)

150 B. C.—100 A. D. The Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali (probably nearer the former date than the latter)

200 B. C.–100 A. D.—Manusmṛti

100 A. D.–300 A. D.—Yājñavalkyasmṛti
100 A. D.–300 A. D.—Viṣnudharmasūtra
100 A. D.–400 A. D.—Nāradasmṛti
200 A. D.–400 A.D.—Śabara's bhāṣya on Jaimini's Pūrva-mīmāmsā-sūtra (rather nearer the former date)
300 A. D.–500 A. D.—Bṛhaspati-smṛti on Vyavahāra and other topics (not yet found) Extracts on Vyavahāra were translated in S. B. E. vol. 33 and extracts on many topics of Dharma were collected by Prof. Rangasvami Aiyangar and published in Gaikwad Oriental series
300 A. D.–600 A. D.—Some of the extant Purānas such as Vāyu, Viṣnu, Mārkandeya, Matsya, Kūrma
500 A. D.–550 A. D.—Varāhamihira, author of Pañca-siddhāntikā, Bṛhatsamhitā, Bṛhat-Jātaka and other works
600 A. D.–650 A. D.—Bāna, author of the Kādambarī and Harsa-carita
650–665 A. D.—Kāśikā, commentary by Vāmana and Jayāditya on Pāṇini's Astādhyāyī 650–700 A. D.—Kumārilabhatta, author of Tantravārtika and other works.
600 A. D.–900 A. D.—Most of the smṛtis such as those of Parāśara, Śankha, Devala and some of the Purānas such as Agni, Garuda.
788 A. D.–820 A. D.—Śankarācārya, the great Advaita philosopher
800 A. D.–850 A. D.—Viśvarūpa, the commentator of Yājñavalkya-smṛti
825 A. D.–900 A. D.—Medhātithi, a commentator of Manusmṛti
966 A. D.—Utpala composed his commentary on the Bṛhajjātaka of Varāhamihira 1000 A. D.–1050 A. D.—Dhāreśvara Bhoja, author of numerous works
1080 A. D.–1100 A. D.—Vijñāneśvara, the author of the Mitāksarā commentary on Yājñavalkya-smṛti
1080 A. D.–1110 A. D. Govindarāja, a commentator of Manusmṛti
1100–1130 A. D.—Laksmīdhara, the author of a vast digest on Dharmaśāstra called Kalpataru or Kṛtyakalpataru 1100–1150 A. D.—Jīmūtavāhana, author of the Dāyabhāga, Kāla-viveka and Vyavahāramātṛkā.
1100–1150 A. D. Bhavadevabhatta, author of Prāyaścitta-prakarana and other works 1110 A. D.–1130—A. D. Aparārka, Śilāhāra king, composed a commentary on Yājñavalkyasmṛti
1127 A. D.–1138 A. D.—Mānasollāsa or Abhilasitārtha-cintāmani of Someśvaradeva

1150 A.D.–1160 A.D.—Rājatarangiṇī of Kalhana

1150 A.D.–1180 A.D.—Aniruddhabhaṭṭa, author of Hāralatā and Pitrdayitā

1150 A D.–1200 A.D.—Smrtyarthasāra of Śrīdhara

1150 A.D.–1300 A.D.—Haradatta, commentator of the Dharmasūtras of Gautama and Āpastamba and some grhyasūtras

1200 A.D.–1225 A.D.—Smrticandrikā of Devannabhatta

1150 A.D.–1300 A.D.—Kullūka, a commentator on Manusmrti

1175 A.D.–1200 A.D.—Halāyudha, son of Dhanañjaya and author of Brāhmanasarvasva

1260 A D.–1270 A.D—Caturvargacintāmani of Hemādri

1275 A.D.–1310 A.D.—Śrīdatta, author of Pitrbhakti, Samayapradipa and other works

1300 A.D.–1370 A.D—Candeśvara, author of Grhastharatnākara, Vivādaratnākara, Krtyaratnākara and other works

1300 A.D.–1380 A.D.—Sāyana, compiler of bhāsyas on Vedic Samhitās and Brāhmanas

1300 A.D.–1380 A.D.—Mādhavācārya, commentator of Parāśarasmrti and other works and brother of Sāyana

1360 A. D.–1390 A. D.—Madanapārijāta and Mahārnavaprakāśa compiled under king Madanapāla and his son

1360 A.D.–1448 A.D.—These are the dates of the birth and death of Vidyāpati, author of Gangāvākyāvalī and other works. Vide Indian Antiquary vol. 14 pp 190–191 for an inscription which records in four eras the grant of the village Bisapī to Vidyāpati by king Śivasimha, son of Devasimha (śake 1321, samvat 1455, La. Sam. 283 and san 807)

1375 A.D.–1440 A.D.—Śūlapāni, author of Dīpakalikā, commentary on Yājñavalkya, Prāyaścitta-viveka, Durgotsavaviveka and other works.

1375–1500 A.D.—Prthvīcandra, son of Nāgamalla, author of a vast digest called Dharmatattvakalānidhi, divided into Prakāśas on śrāddha, vyavahāra and other topics.

1425–1450 A.D.—Madanaratna, an extensive digest compiled by king Madanasimhadeva

1425 A.D.–1460 A.D.—Rudradhara, author of Śuddhiviveka, Śrāddhaviveka and other works

1425–1490 A. D.—Vācaspati, author of Śuddhicintāmani, Tīrthacintāmani and numerous other works.

1450–1500 A. D.—Vardhamāna, author of Dandaviveka, Gangākrtyaviveka and other works 1490 A.D.–1515 A.D.—Nrsimhaprasāda of Dalapati, of which Śrāddhasāra, Tīrthasāra, Prāyaścittasāra and several more are parts.

1500 A.D.–1540 A. D —Govindānanda, author of Śuddhikaumudī, Śrāddhakriyākaumudī and other works

1513–1580—Nārāyanabhatta, author of Prayogaratna, Antyestipaddhati, Tristhalīsetu

1520-1575—Raghunandana, author of numerous works called Tattvas on Śrāddha, Tīrtha, Śuddhi, Prāyaścitta and other topics

1520–1589—Ṭodarānanda compiled under the patronage of Todarmal and divided into Saukhyas on Śuddhi, Śrāddha, Tīrtha, Prāyaścitta, Karmavipāka and about 15 more topics

1590–1630 A D —Nandapandita, author of several works such as Vaijayantī (com. on Visnudharmasūtra), Śrāddha-kalpalatā, Śuddhicandrikā, Dattakamīmāmsā

1610–1640—Kamalākarabhatta, author of Nirnayasindhu and over 20 works besides

1610–1640—Viramitrodaya of Mitramiśra, of which Tīrthaprakāśa, Prāyaścittaprakāśa, Śrāddhaprakāśa are parts

1610–1645—Nīlakantha, author of Bhagavantabhāskara in 12 Mayūkhas on Prāyaścitta, Śuddhi, Śrāddha and other topics

1700–1740—Smrtimuktāphala of Vaidyanātha

1700–1750 A. D.—Nāgeśa or Nāgojibhatta, author of about 30 works among which Tīrthenduśekhara, Prāyaścittenduśekhara, Śrāddhenduśekhara were used in this volume

1790—Kāśīnātha Upādhyāya, author of Dharmasindhu, composed it in śake 1712

1730–1820—Bālambhatta, author of a commentary on the Mitāksarā, called Bālambhattī

BRIEF SYNOPSIS

OF THE

CONTENTS OF VOLUME IV

PAGES

Section I :—Pātaka, Prāyaścitta, Karmavipāka

Chapter I Sin in Rgveda, conception of ṛta, enumeration and classification of sins, grave sins and lesser lapses, doctrine of karma ... 1—40

Chapter II Means of reducing the consequences of sins, viz. confession, repentance, prāṇāyāma, tapas, homa, japa (muttering sacred texts), gifts, fasting, pilgrimages. ... 41—56

Chapter III Prāyaścitta (expiation), derivation of the word, origin and meaning; expiations and secular punishments; circumstances to be considered in prescribing expiations; parisad (assembly of learned men) and its duties. ... 57—86

Chapter IV Expiations for grave sins such as brāhmana murder and for lesser sins, procedure followed; tonsure; substitutes for expiations ... 87–129

Chapter V Names and descriptions of all individual expiations. ... 130–152

Chapter VI Consequences of not undergoing expiations, historical account of the ideas of Heaven, Hells and torments; doctrine of karmavipāka. ... 153–178

Section II :—Antyesti (rites after death), āśauca (impurity on birth and death), Śuddhi (purification).

Chapter VII Eschatology; Rgveda X. 14–18 translated; rites on death of āhitāgni in Śat. Br. and śrauta and grhya sūtras, cremation; burial; offering of water to deceased, collecting charred bones and casting them into sacred waters, śānti rites: graves; persons competent to perform rites after death. ... 179–266

PAGES

Chapter VIII Śuddhi includes purification after āśauca (impurity on birth and death), purification of the body, of substances (pots, wells, food), of images and temples; derivation of the word āśauca, its meaning and two varieties (on birth and on death); circumstances on which periods of āśauca depended: exception to rules about observance of āśauca; Nārāyanabali for those who commit suicide; emphasis on mental purity. ... 267–333

Section III.—Śrāddha

Chapter IX Derivation and definition of 'śrāddha', śrāddha and the doctrines of karma and punarjanma, pitrs; panegyrics of śrāddha; only three rites for the departed in ancient times viz. pindapitryajña, mahāpitryajña and astakās, the adhikārin (person entitled to perform) for śrāddha, meaning of the word 'putra', proper times and places for śrāddha, classification of śrāddhas, qualifications of brāhmanas to be invited, persons unfit to be invited, food recommended and condemned in śrāddha, pindapitryajña as described in Taittirīya Sambitā and Brāhmana, pārvanaśrāddha as described in Āśvalāyanagrhya, in Yājñavalkya, and in Padmapurāna; Viśve-devas, agnau-karana; number of āhutis, number of ancestors to whom pindas are offered (3, 6, 9 or 12), description of modern pārvanaśrāddha; meaning of sapinda, āmaśrāddha. .. 334–515

Chapter X Ekoddista and other śrāddhas, hemaśrāddha, procedure of sapindīkarana or sapindana, occasions for and description of ābhyudayikaśrāddha, pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha and mahālayaśrāddha, mātāmahaśrāddha; letting loose of a bull; gift of cow ... 516–551

PAGES

Section IV :—Tīrthayātrā (pilgrimages to holy places)

Chapter XI Holy places (mountains, rivers, forests) play important part in the culture and unity of India; meaning of tīrtha in Rgveda and later texts; grounds on which places become tīrthas; number of tīrthas very large; four classes of tīrthas, viz. daiva, āsura, ārsa and mānusa, who should go on a pilgrimage, rites on starting; tonsure and fast.... 552–584

Chapter XII Ganges eulogised in Rgveda, Mahābhārata and purānas; Tristhalī i. e. Prayāga, Kāsī and Gayā, eulogy of Prayāga, tonsure at Prayāga; suicide at Prayāga; sub-tīrthas of Prayāga such as Aksayavata. ... 585–617

Chapter XIII Kāśī; ancient history and eulogy of Kāśī; Banaras known under five different names; derivation of the words Kāśī and Vārānasī; Viśveśvara and Manikarnikā; five essential tīrthas at Banaras; Pañcakrośī pilgrimage; sub-tīrthas, such as Jñānavāpī, numerous lingas at Banaras ... 618–642

Chapter XIV Gayā; Gayāmāhātmya in Vāyupurāna (chapt. 105–112); views about its date; Visnupada and Gayaśiras in Nirukta; brief summary of Gayāmāhātmya; most important spots in Gayā are the Phalgu river, Visnupada and Aksayavata; the five tīrthas of Gayā; offering of śrāddha and pindas at Gayā; the seven holy cities, twelve Jyotir-lingas, and four Dhāmas ... 643–679

Chapter XV Kuruksetra and some other famous tīrthas. History of Kuruksetra and its other names viz. northern Vedi of Prajāpati and Samantapañcaka; tīrthas of Kuruksetra such as Sarasvatī,

PAGES

Prthūdaka, seven forests; Mathurā, its history, twelve forests, Vrndāvana, Govardhana, Gokula or Vraja, Purusottama tīrtha or Jagannātha; peculiar features of Jagannātha, viz. car festival, army of attendants, five important tīrthas, obscene sculptures on walls of Jagannātha temple. Narmadā, eulogy of and sub-tīrthas on Narmadā, Godāvarī and 100 tīrthas thereon described in Brahmapurāna such as Tryambaka, Janasthāna, Nāsik, Govardhana, Pañcavatī, Kāñcī, Pandharpur, its chief temple of Vithobā, large staff of priests, temple of devotee Pundalika, Vārkarīs . 680–722

Chapter XVI Comprehensive list of tīrthas and concluding remarks on tīrthas ... 723–827

IMPORTANT WORKS CONSULTED

(N. B.—Works referred to only once or twice have generally been omitted)

Ānan. stands for Ānandāśrama Press edition; B I. for Bibliotheca Indica series, Calcutta; Ghar. for Mr. J. R. Gharpure's Publications; G. O. S. for Gaikwad Oriental series; Nirn. for Nirnaya-sāgara Press editions, Jiv. for Jīvānanda Vidyāsagar's Publications and Venk. for Venkateśvara Press Publications.

Aitareya Āranyaka (ed. by Prof. Keith in Anecdota Oxoniensia)

Aitareya Brāhmana with Sāyana's bhāsya (Ānan.)

Atharvaveda-samhitā (ed. by S P. Pandit and sometimes the edition of Pandit Sātavalekar)

Brhadāranyakopanisad

Chāndogyopanisad

Gopatha Brāhmana (B. I. series)

Jābālopanisad

Jaiminīya Samhitā, ed. by Dr. Raghu Vīra.

Kāthaka Samhitā (Pandit Sātavalekar's ed.)

Kathopanisad

Kausītaki Brāhmana (ed. by Lindner, Jena, 1887)

Kausītaki-brāhmanopanisad

Maitrāyanī Samhitā (Pandit Sātavalekar's ed.)

Rgveda Samhitā with Sāyana's bhāsya (ed. by the Poona Vaidika-samśodhana-mandala)

Sāmavidhāna Brāhmana (ed. by A. C. Burnell, 1873)

Śānkhāyana-brāhmana (Ānan.)

Śatapatha-brāhmana (ed. by A. Weber)

Taittirīya-āranyaka (Ānan.)

Taittirīya-brāhmana (Ānan.)

Taittirīya-samhitā (Ānan.; sometimes Pandit Sātavalekar's edition has been used)

Tāndya-brāhmana (also called Pañcavimśa-brāhmana)–B. I. series

Vājasaneya Samhitā (ed. by Pandit Sātavalekar).

Śrauta, grhya and dharma sūtras, Vedāngas

Āpastamba-dharmasūtra with the commentary of Haradatta published at Kumbhakonam by Halasyanatha Sastri

Āpastamba-grhya-sūtra with the com. of Sudarśanācārya (Mysore Govt Oriental Library series)

Āpastamba-mantra-pātha (ed. by Dr. Winternitz, 1897)

Āśvalāyana-grhya-sūtra with Nārāyana's commentary (Nirn.)

Āśvalāyanaśrautasūtra with the com. of Nārāyana (B. I. series).

Baudhāyana-dharmasūtra (Ānan.)

Baudhāyana-grhyasūtra with grhya-śesa-sūtra, grhyaparibhāsā and Baudhāyana-pitrmedhasūtra (ed by Dr Sham Sastri in Mysore University Oriental Library Publications, 1920).

Baudhāyana-śrautasūtra (ed. by Dr. Caland in B I series)

Bhāradvāja-grhya-sūtra (ed. by Dr. Salomons, Leyden, 1913)

Brahmasūtra—see Vedāntasūtra

Brhad-devatā (ed by Prof. A. A Macdonell)

Gautamadharmasūtra (Ānan.)

Gobhila-grhya-sūtra (B I. series)

Gobhilasmrti or Karmapradīpa (Ānan.)

Hiranyakeśi-grhyasūtra (ed by Dr. J. Kirste, 1889)

Jaimini's Pūrvamīmāmsāsūtra with the bhāsya of Sabara and the Tantravārtika of Kumārila (Ānan.)

Kāthaka-grhya with the commentaries of Ādityadarśana, Devapāla and Brāhmanabala (ed by Dr Caland, 1925)

Kātyāyana-śrauta-sūtra (ed. by A. Weber)

Kausikasūtra (ed. by Prof Bloomfield)

Kausītaki-grhya-sūtra (Benares Sanskrit series) or Madras University Sanskrit series

Khādiragrhyasūtra with the com. of Rudraskanda (Mysore Govt. Oriental Library series)

Mānavagrhyasūtra with the com. of Astāvakra (G O. S.)

Nirukta of Yāska, ed by Roth sometimes the edition of Prof. V. K. Rajwade with a translation and notes in Marathi has been relied upon Pāraskara-grhyasūtra—edited by M M. Shridharshastri Pathak with a Marathi translation

Rgvidhāna of Śaunaka (ed by Prof. Jagadish Shastri), 1940

Sānkhāyana-grhya-sūtra (same as Kausitaki-grhya-sūtra)—published in the Benares Sanskrit series

Sānkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra (ed by Dr Hillebrandt)—B. I Series

Satyāsādha-śrauta-sūtra (Ānan.)

Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra (edited with English translation by Dr. Caland)

Vaikhānasa-śrauta-sūtra ed. by Dr. Caland (B. I. series, 1941)

Vārāhagrhyasūtra (G. O. S.)

Vasistha-dharmasutra (Bombay S. series)

Vedāntasūtra with the bhāsya of Śankara (Nirn.)

Visnudharmasūtra (ed. by Dr. Jolly)

Smrtis

Āpastambasmrti in verse (Ānan.)

Atri-smrti (Ānan.)

Auśanasa-smrti (Jiv.)

Bhagavad-gītā

Brhat-Parāśara-smrti (Jiv)

Caturvimśati-mata-sangraha (Benares Sanskrit Series)

Daksasmrti (Ānan.)

Devalasmrti (Ānan)

Harivamśa (Chitraśālā Press ed. Poona)

Kātyāyanasmrti on Vyavahāra (reconstructed by P. V. Kane under the title 'Kātyāyanasmrtisāroddhāra' with English Translation and notes)

Laghu-Hārīta (Ānan.)

Laghu-Visnu (Ānan)

Laghu-Āśvalāyana (Ānan.)

Mahābhārata with the com. of Nīlakantha (oblong Bombay edition)

Manusmrti with the commentary of Kullūka (Nirn.), where other commentaries on Manu are referred to, it is Mandlik's edition with several commentaries that is cited

Nāradasmrti (ed by Dr. Jolly)

Parāśarasmrti (Bombay S. series)

Prajāpatismrti (Ānan.)

Samvartasmrti (Ānan.)

Śankhasmrti in verse (Ānan.)

Vedavyāsa-smiti (Ānan)

Vrddha-Gautama-smrti (Jiv.)

Vrddha-Hārīta-smrti (Ānan.)

Yājñavalkya-smrti with the com. Mitāksarā (Nirn.)

PURĀNAS

The Ānandāśrama editions of the Agni, Brahma, Brahmavaivarta, Matsya, Padma and Vāyu have been used, the Nirn edition of the Bhāgavatapurāna (text only) and the edition of the Narasimhapurāna published by Messrs Gopal Narayan and Co. have been relied upon, the Venkateśvara Press editions of the Bhavisya, Brahmānda, Brhan-Nāradīya (or simply Nāradīya), Garuda, Kālikā. Kūrma, Linga, Mārkandeya, Visnupurāna and Visnudharmottara have been used, the Nīlamatapurāna, ed. by Pandits Ramlal Kanjilal and Jagaddhar Zadoo (1924)

COMMENTARIES, DIGESTS, MISCELLANEOUS SANSKRIT, PĀLI AND PRĀKRIT WORKS AND AUTHORS.

Abhilasitārthacintāmani (= Mānasollāsa), published by Mysore Oriental Library and in G. O. S.

Antyakarmadīpaka of Nityānanda (Kashi Sanskrit series)

Antyestipaddhati of Nārāyanabhatta (Nirn.) except on pp. 212, 303 where a ms. of it was used.

Aparārka's commentary on the Yājñavalkyasmrti (Ānan.)

Arthaśāstra of Kautilya (ed. by Dr. Sham Shastri, second ed.)

Āśaucadaśaka of Vijñāneśvara (printed in Appendix pp 832–833)

Āśaucāstaka of Vararuci (published in Trivandrum S. series)

Bālambhattī, commentary on the Mitāksarā on Yājñavalkya, ed. by Mr Gharpure

Bārhaspatya-sūtra (ed. by Dr F. W. Thomas, Lahore 1921)

Brāhmanasarvasva—D C. ms No. 9 of A 1883–84

Brhatsamhitā of Varāhamihira with the com of Utpala (ed. by M. M. Sudhakara Dvivedi)

Dandaviveka of Vardhamāna (G O. S.)

Dāyabhāga of Jīmutavāhana (Jiv)

Dharmadvaitanirnaya of Śankarabhatta (Ghar.)

Dharmasindhu of Kāśinātha with Marathi translation (Nirn, 6th ed. of 1936)

Dīpakalikā, com. of Śūlapani on Yājñavalkyasmrti (Ghar)

Gangābhakti-tarangini of Ganapati, published at Darbhangā (oblong size) 1500–1550 A D.

Gangāvākyāvalī of Vidyāpati under patronage of Viśvāsadevī, ed. by Dr. J. B. Chaudhuri, 1940

Govindarāja's commentary on Manusmrti (Mandlik's edition)

Gṛhastharatnākara of Candeśvara (B. I. Series)

Gṛhyāgnisāgara of Nārāyana Ārde (ms. in the Bombay Asiatic Society)

Halāyudha's com. on Kātyāyana's Srāddhasūtra (ms. No 518 p. 170 of B B. R. A. S. cat.)

Haracarita-cintāmani of Jayadratha (Nirn. Kāvyamālā series)

Haradatta's com. on Gautamadharmasūtra (Ānan)

Hāralatā of Aniruddha (B. I. series)

Hemādri's Caturvarga cintāmani, section on śrāddha (B. I. Series)

Jātakas (ed. by Fausbōll)

Kalpataru or Krtyakalpataru, sections on āśauca, prāyaścitta, śrāddha and tīrtha (G. O. S)

Kāśikā, commentary on Pāninī's sūtras

Kāvyamīmāmsā of Rājaśekhara (G. O. S.)

Krtyaratnākara of Candeśvara (B. I. series)

Ksīrasvāmin's com. on Amarakośa (ed. by K. G. Oak, Poona)

Kullūka's com. on Manusmrti (Nirn.)

Kumārila's Tantravārtika and Tuptīkā on Jaimini's sūtras (Ānan.)

Madanapārijāta (B. I. series)

Madanaratna (section on vyavahāra ed. by P. V. Kane for the Anup Library series, Bikaner)

Mahābhāsya of Patañjali (ed. by Kielhorn in Bombay S. series)

Mahārnavakarmavipāka of Māndhātr—D.C. ms.No. 239 of A 1881-82

Medhātithi's com. on Manusmrti (Mandlik's edition)

Mitāksarā of Vijñāneśvara, com. on Yājñavalkyasmrti (Nirn.)

Nandapandita, author of Vaijayantī, com. on Visnudharmasūtra

Nirnayasindhu with Marathi translation (Nirn. 2nd ed. of 1935)

Pāninī's Astādhyāyī with Siddhānta-kaumudī of Bhattoji (Nirn)

Parāśara-Mādhavīya (Bombay S. series)

Pitrbhakti of Śrīdatta—D. C. ms. No. 152 of 1892-95

Pitrdayitā of Aniruddhabhatta (published by Sanskrit Sāhitya-parisad, Calcutta, 1930)

Prāyaścittamayūkha of Nīlakantha (Ghar.)

Prāyaścittamuktāvalī of Divākara, son of Mahādeva (D. C. ms. No. 249 of 1886-92)

Prāyaścitta-prakarana of Bhavadeva, published by Varendra Research Society, Rajshahi

Prāyaścittaprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya)—ms. in the Anup Sanskrit Library No. 2610 at Bikaner

Prāyaścittasāra (part of Nrsimhaprasāda) ed in Sarasvatībhavana series

Prāyaścitta-tattva of Raghunandana (Jiv.)

Prāyaścittaviveka of Sūlapāni with the com Tattvārthakaumudī of Govindānanda (Jiv)

Prāyaścittendusekhara of Nāgoji supplemented by Kāśinātha-upādhyāya, son of Ananta (Ānan.)

Prayogaratna of Nārāyanabhatta (Nirn. pothi size, 1915)

Prthvīcandrodaya (section on śrāddha) ms. in the Ichcharam Suryaram Desai collection in the Bombay University Vide No 251 of the catalogue by Prof. Velankar

Purusottamatattva of Raghunandana (Jiv)

Raghuvamśa of Kālidāsa (Nirn.)

Rājatarangini of Kalhana (text and English translation by Dr Aurel Stein)

Rāmāyana of Vālmīki (ed by R. Narayanswami Aiyer at the Madras Law Journal Office)

Śabara, author of bhāsya on Jaimini's Pūrvamīmāmsāsūtra (Ānan.)

Sadaśīti of Kauśikāditya with the com Śuddhicandrikā of Nandapandita (Chowkhamba S. series)

Śankarācārya's bhāsya on Vedāntasūtra (Nirn)

Sāyana's bhāsyas on the Rgveda and other Samhitās, Brāhmanas and Āranyakas

Sannavatiśrāddha of Śivabhatta (Bhadkamkar collection, Bombay University ms No. 1176 p 421 in catalogue, prepared by Prof. Devasthali)

Smrticandrikā of Devannabhatta (Ghar)

Smrticandrikā on āśauca (published by Mysore University)

Smrtimuktāphala on āśauca, prāyaścitta, śrāddha (Ghar)

Smrtyarthasāra of Śrīdhara (Ānan)

Śrāddhakalikā D. C ms. No. 421 1891–95

Śrāddhakalpalatā of Nandapandita (Chowkhamba S. series)

Śrāddha-kriyākaumudī of Govindānanda (Chowkhamba S. series)

Śrāddhaprakāśa of Mitramiśra (part of Viramitrodaya) Chowkhamba S. series

Śrāddhamayūkha of Nīlakantha (Ghar.)

Śrāddharatna of Laksmīpati (printed at Darbhangā)

Śrāddhasaukhya (part of Todarānanda) D C ms No 257 of 1881–1887

Śrāddhasāra (part of Nrsimhaprasāda) printed in the Sarasvatībhavana series, Benares

Śrāddhatattva of Raghunandana (Jiv.)

Śrāddhatattva of Raghunandana (a different work from the above), ms. in the Iccharam Desai collection of the Bombay University dated śake 1539

Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara, Kashi S. series

Suddhikaumudī of Govindānanda (B. I. series)

Śuddhimayūkha of Nīlakantha (Ghar.)

Śuddhiprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya) Chowkhamba Sanskrit series

Śuddhitattva of Raghunandana (Jiv.)

Śuddhiviveka of Rudradhara (D. C. ms. No. 309 of 1887-1891)

Tantravārtika of Kumārila (Ānan.)

Tīrthacintāmani of Vāçaspati (B. I. series)

Tīrthaprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya of Mitramiśra, Chowkhamba S. series)

Tīrthasāra (part of Nrsimhaprasāda) in Sarasvatibhavana series, Benares

Tīrthayātra-tattva of Raghunandana

Tristhalīsetu of Nārāyanabhatta (Ānan.)

Tīrthendusekhara of Nāgeśa or Nāgoji, Sarasvatī-bhavana series

Tristhalīsetusāra-sangraha of Bhattoji (Sarasvatībhavana series)

Trimśat-ślokī with com. of Raghunātha (Ānan.)

Trikānda-mandana

Viśvarūpa, commentator on Yājñavalkyasmrti (work published in Trivandrum S. series)

Vivādaratnākara of Candeśvara (B. I. series)

Vrsotsargatattva of Raghunandana (Jiv.)

Yajurvedi-śrāddhatattva of Raghunandana (Jiv.)

Yogasūtra with bhāsya and commentary of Vācaspati, edited by Rajaramshastri Bodas, 1892

Yogayātrā of Varāhamihira. ed. by Prof. Jagadish Lal Shastri, Lahore, 1944

AUTHORS AND WORKS IN ENGLISH

(Some works such as those mentioned on pp. 618, 693, 716 are not included here)

Ain-i-Akbari (translated by Blochman and Jarret, three volumes)

Alberuni's India (tr. by Sachau in two volumes, London, 1888)

R. G. Bhandarkar's 'Vaisnavism, Śaivism &c.'

Barbour's 'Sin and the New Psychology.'

B. M. Barua's 'Gayā and Buddha-Gayā' (1934, in two volumes)

Beal's Buddhist Records of the Western World

Bloomfield's 'Religion of the Veda'

E. A. W Budge's 'Egyptian Heaven and Hell'

Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, vol I (ed by Dr. Hultzsch)

Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, vol III (ed by Dr. Fleet, also cited as 'Gupta Inscriptions)'

G. G. Coulton's 'Five centuries of Religion' (1936)

Cunningham's 'Mahābodhi' (1892)

" 'Ancient Geography of India'

Dr. S K De's 'Vaisnava faith and movement in Bengal'

Nundo Lal Dey's 'the Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India' (1927)

Prof V. R Ramchandra Dikshitar's translation of Śilappadikāram

Elliot and Dowson's 'History of India as told by its own historians' 7 volumes

Epigraphia Indica, volumes 1–28

Fa Hien's 'Records of Buddhist kingdoms' translated by James Legge (1886)

Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire' (Smith's ed. of 1862)

K. P. Jayaswal's 'History of India, 150–350' (1933)

S. N. Kanga's 'Heaven and Hell and their location in Zoroastrianism and in the Vedas'

Prof Keith's 'Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanisads'

Dr B. C Law Presentation vol I and II

Dr. B C. Law's 'Heaven and Hell in Buddhist perspective'

Dr. A Lefever's 'The Vedic idea of sin'

MacCrindle's 'Ancient India as recorded by Megasthenes,' 'Invasion of India by Alexander' and 'Ancient India as described by Ptolemy.'

A. A Macdonell's 'Vedic Mythology'

Sir John Marshall's 'Mohenjo-daro' (in three volumes)

Rajendralal Mitra's 'Buddha-Gayā' (1878)

B. S Puckle's 'Funeral customs'

Reginald Reynolds on 'cleanliness and godliness'

Sacred Books of the East, edited by F. Max-Muller

Tawney's translation of 'Prabandha-cintāmani'

C. E. Vullhamy's 'Immortal man'

INDEX OF CASES CITED

Akshayacandra v Haridas 511
Chandrachoora Das v Bibhuti Bhushan 218, 220
Darbarilal v Govindlal 569
Digambar v Motilal 510
Dinanath v Hrishikesh 569, 573n
Dwarkanath Misser v Rampertab 581
Ganpat v Tulsiram 569
Gangaram Babaji Badve v Baji Shankar 713n
Gangaram Babaji v Narayan Annaji 714n
Gooroo Gobinda Saha v Anandlal 510
Gopala Muppanar v Dharmakarta Subramania 318
Hari v Bajrand 569n
Lachman Lal v Baldeo Lal 581
Lachman Lal v Kanhaya Lal 581
Maharani Hemanta Kumari v Ganishankar 633n
Mutteram v Gopal 569
Nalinaksha v Rajanikanto 510
Narayan Lal v Chulhan Lal 581
Narhari v Bhimrao 323
Reg. v Price 233
Sardar Singh v Kunj Behari
S. K. Wodeyar v Ganapati 318
Sakharam Bhimaji Benare v Gangaram Babaji 713n
Saklat v Bella 320
54 All. 698 27n
6 Cal. 27n
22 Cal. 609 581n
13 C. L. J. 449, 581n
15 C. L. J. 376, 581n
22 I. A. 51, 581n
41 I. A. 27n
2 Patna L. J. 581n
A. I. R. (1945) Patna 211, 220
2 Patna Law Journal 581n

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS

N. B.—Some cases where the correction can be easily made [as in the elision of an anusvāra or mātrā or a diacritical mark] have not been noted]

Page	Line or Note
8	note 17	Read न स स्वो दक्षो वरुण ध्रुति
9	note 19	Add at end 'Vide also विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 33 1'
15	last line	Put a full stop after the word 'Visnu'
17	note 36	Read 'व्यापारे रूढ '.
18	line 25	Read 'selling of flesh'
19	note 43 l 8	Read 'अग्निपुराण 173.5'
24	note 58	Read न तु गुरोरङ्गना गुर्वङ्गना
28	note 68 line 7	Read दोषो न संसर्ग०
36	line 34	Read 'they pray'.
37	note 88	Read यत्किंचेदं वरुण दैव्ये
42	line 24	Read 'to be spread over from one'
43	line 23	Read 'yadadīvyan' (Tai. Ā II 4.1, and Baud. Dh. S. III 7. 10)'
44	line 29	Read 'by offering either'
46	note 107 line 4	Read अथर्वाशिरस्.
47	line 7	Read 'four pākayajñas or mahāyajñas'
47	note 109	Read 'the five mahāyajñas or pākayajñas as they are called in Manu II 86'
54	note 133a	Add—The verse 'उपावृत्तस्य वर्जित ' is अग्निपु 175 5-6 and is cited as from भविष्यपुराण by कल्पतरु on व्रत p 3. Hemādri on vrata, vol I. p 1009 quotes विष्णुधर्मोत्तर on the meaning of गुणs as 'तज्जाप्यजापी तद्ध्यान-तत्कथाश्रवणादिकम्। तदर्चनं च तन्नामकीर्तनश्रवणादय ॥ उपवासकृतो ह्येते गुणा' प्रोक्ता मनीषिभि ।' The verse उपावृत्तस्य० is ascribed to Vasistha by Hemādri on vrata vol. I. p. 1004
58	note 139 line 6	Read प्रायश्चित्तं विध्यपराधे
94	lines 19	Add at end 'It may be noted that the digests on Dharma forbid bathing in the sea at any time one pleases and allow it only on Full Moon, on Amāvasyā and on parvan days and prescribe that at Setubandha one may bathe in the sea on any day. Compare. अश्वत्थसागरौ सेव्यौ न स्प्रष्टव्यौ कदाचन। अश्वत्थं मन्दवारे च सागरं पर्वणि स्पृशेत्। न कालनियमः सेतौ समुद्रस्नानकर्मणि॥ धर्मसिन्धु I. 1 p. 36

Page	Line or Note
106	note 242 line 3	Read प्राय. वि.
108	note 247	Add at end 'Verses from गाव सुरभयो नित्यं to हविरन्यत्र तिष्ठति are अग्निपुराण 292. 14–20'
113	note 257	At the end add 'The Mit. on Yāj. III. 280 remarks: यदा गार्हस्थ्यपरिग्रहेण संन्यासात्प्रच्युतो भवति तदा संवर्तोक्तं द्रष्टव्यम्—संन्यस्य दुर्मतिः कश्चित्प्रत्यापत्तिं व्रजेद्यदि। स कुर्यात्कृच्छ्रमश्रान्तः षण्मासात्प्रत्यनन्तरम्॥' This is संवर्त 171–72
114	line 2	Add 'Vide the bhāsya of Śankara on Vedāntasūtra III. 4. 43 (bahis tūbhayathāpi)'.
116	line 23	Add after the words 'for a month'—'It appears that simply officiating as a priest or accepting a gift entailed a prāyaścitta; vide Tai. Ā. II. 16. 17 'याजयित्वा प्रतिगृह्य वानश्नन् त्रिः स्वाध्यायं वेदमधीयीत'. Manu X. 109–111 appear to endorse this view.
140	line 7	Read 'and as marking'
149	line 23	Add at end 'Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III 248 states that in the Āngirasa-smrti an expiation called Vajra is described and it is provided therein that those who are guilty of a mahāpātaka are purified after three years. The Mit. on Yāj. III 254 quotes the same half-verse as of Angiras'.
164	n 395 line 2	Read अष्टाविंशतिकोट्य·
169	n 406	Add 'This verse is quoted by नीलकण्ठ in his commentary on उद्योगपर्व 33. 72 and in the साख्यतत्त्वकौमुदी of वाचस्पति Chowkhamba S series p. 45.'
185	line 11	Add after 'namo Vāsudevāya.'—Vide भगवद्गीता 8. 5–6 and पद्मपुराण V. 47. 262 'मरणे या मतिः पुसा गतिर्भवति तादृशी', for the belief about the thoughts of a dying man.'

Page	Line or Note
185	n 432	Read 'शान्तिपर्व, 285. 74 ff for शिवसहस्रनाम '
192	n 443 last line	Read ' Fargard '
200	n 476	Read in 2nd line ' recital ' and ' bones ' in line 3.
212	line 12	Add a new paragraph after this line viz ' A peculiar rite called Sampratti (transmission) is described in Br Up. I 5 17 and Kauṣītaki-brāhmanopanisad II 15, wherein a father when about to die calls his son and transmits to him his own finished and unfinished work such as yajñas.
212		Add footnote 500a ' Though in modern times Nārāyanabhatta's Antyestipaddhati is generally followed, it must be stated here in order to avoid misunderstanding that now no one spreads kuśas and antelope skin on the funeral pile nor is the wife made to sit down near the deceased nor is she then raised up by anybody'.
216	n503 l 1	Read 'मिता on या. III. 2, मद. पा p. 395'
239	line 29	Read ' text of Samvarta that a '
244	line 6	Put the figure 555 above Rg VIII. 95. 7-9
265	n 594a	Read in last line but one तद्रूपं देहमन्यं
269	n 603 l. 2	Read तन्तुं तन्वन्रजसो भानुमन्विह्याक्षानहो
271	1 35	Add after the word ' death.' ' It should be noted that in almost all parts of India except in Bengal members of all varnas including śūdras observe by usage only ten days' impurity on death '
277	l 13	Read ' preferably '
300	n 677, l 3	Read ' पतितानां च '
308	1 17	Omit the words ' with Sanskrit explanation '
310	note 695	Read ' संमार्ष्टव्या उत '
312	n 700	Add at end "Though Manu V 130 says generally 'नित्यमास्यं शुचि स्त्रीणाम्' the words must be narrowed down to the occasions of dalliance in view of what Baud Dh S I. 4 57 (स्त्रियश्च रतिसंसर्गे), Vas 28 8, S'ankha 16 16, Atri V. 14 and most of the commentators of Manu say."

Page	Line or Note
321	lines 11–15	I should have mentioned here the four verses beginning with 'Hiranyavarnāh' of the Tai S V. 6 1.1
345	top	Read 'Pañcajanāh'
,,	n. 776 l 4	Read 'षड् ऋतवस्तान् पितॄन् परिचक्षते'
355	n. 807 l. 1	Read 'मेषमजं चालभते'
368	n. 838 l 2	Read शकुना इव
377	n. 851 l. 2	Read तीर्थेषु स्वभूमौ च प्रयत्नत·
382–383	note 861	Add at end "In several works the 96 śrāddhas are enumerated somewhat differently. For example the धर्मसिन्धु II. 2 p. 39 says 'अमा १२ युग ४ मनु १४ क्रान्ति १२ धृति १२ पात १२ महालया: १५ ॥ अष्टका ५ अन्वष्टका ५ पूर्वेद्यु: ५ श्राद्धैर्नवतिश्च षट् ॥ इति ज्ञेयानि ॥' For 12 Astakās there is very ancient authority; vide note 861 quoting शतपथब्राह्मण. It is very rare to find 15 Astakās mentioned; vide p 361 and note 828 above."
388	note 870	In last line but one read प्रदास्यति
389	note 873	Read अनर्हान् हव्यकव्येषु
410	note 921	Read स याति नरकं घोरं
427	n959l.5 from end	Read यमायाङ्गिरस्वते
441	note 985	Read अर्हणीयानां पुरत·
442	l. 17	Read 'then turn it'
457	note 1018	Add at end of note 'The विष्णुधर्मोत्तरपुराण (III. 176' 1–5) reads the names of the ten विश्वेदेवा: somewhat differently'.
532	note 1195	Read 'विस्तृतपार्वणविधिनाऽसम्भवे (separate as विधिना and असम्भवे)'
534	note 1200	Add at end—"Vide 'अन्नं ह प्राण:' ऐ. ब्रा. 33 1"
546	l. 17	Add after 'in an intercalary month' the following – According to the Nirnayasindhu (p 12) the first year anniversary śrāddha has to be performed in the intercalary month and subsequent anniversary śrāddhas are to be performed in the pure month and not in the intercalary month, if the deceased died in an ordinary month, while at the time of the first anniversary or subsequent anniversary śrāddha

Page	Line or Note
		the year has the same month as an intercalary as well as an ordinary month. The Dharmasindhu also (p. 5) holds the same view 'शुद्धमासे मृतानां तु प्रथमाब्दिकं मलमास एव कार्यं न शुद्धे द्वितीयाब्दिकं तु शुद्ध एव।.'
560	note 1260	After line 13 in note add 'The विष्णुधर्मोत्तरपुराण III. chap 171 mentions nine mountains 'हिमवान्हेमकूटश्च निषधो नील एव च। श्वेतश्च शृङ्गवान् मेरुर्मौल्यवान्गन्धमादन। नवैतान् शैलपतीनेवम्यां पजयेन्नरः॥' (in पर्वताटनीव्रत)'
561	l. 7	Read 'a work like that of Dr. Alexis Carrel.'
577	n. 1308 l 5	Read 'लक्ष्मेत्तु स. and attributes it to गरुडपुराण.'
588	note 1333	Read 'दिवि मुव्यन्तरिक्षे च'
592	n. 1340 l 21	Read ' Another rule is that one makes '
595	n. 1347 l. 2	Read ' जलं स ने प्रीत इति '.
599	note 1360	Read ' पादलोक्तः'
605	n 1372 l. 6	Read ' the Aphsad stone Inscription '.
609–613		The figures of the notes and the notes themselves have been wrongly arranged in these pages On p 609 l. 5 put the figure 1385 above the word ' Gangāvākyāvalī ' and note (as printed) 1387 should be 1385 and brought under p 609 On the same page (both in the text and notes) the figures 1384a, 1385 should be changed to 1386 and 1387. On the same page the note 1386 should really be 1393a, which figure should be placed on p 613 in line 24 on the word ' mokṣa ' and the footnote so numbered should be placed after footnote 1393
615	note 1397	last line but one—Read ' occur in नारदीय '
633	note 1448	line 4 Read ' तावतैव '.
648	n. 1473 l 3	Read ' तर्पयेत् '
654	note 1500	Read ' गङ्गा पादोदकं '
657	line 36	After 'difficult to say.' add 'Recently the Bihar State Legislature passed 'The Bodh Gaya Temple Act' (Act XVII of 1949) for the better management of the Bodh Gaya Temple and the properties appertaining thereto It is provided by this Act that the Government of Bihar Province shall constitute a committee for the management and control of the temple and its properties, consisting of a chairman and

Page	Line or Note
		eight members, of whom four shall be Buddhists and four shall be Hindus including the Mahanth i. e. the presiding priest for the time being of the Saivite monastery of Bodh Gaya, that the District Magistrate of Gayā shall be the ex-officio chairman, but that, if the District Magistrate happens to be a non-Hindu, the Provincial Government may nominate a Hindu as chairman and that Hindus and Buddhists of every sect shall have access to the temple and temple land for the purpose of worship and pinda dāna '
670	l 6	Read ' śrāddhas at Gayā '
673	note 1524 l 4	Read ' तीर्थचि.'
689	n. 1565 l. 2	Add: It may be noted that in the विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I chapters 201–202 it is stated that Gandharvas, sons of Sailūsa, devastated the country on both banks of the Sindhu and Rāma sent his brother भरत to chastise them, 'जहि शैलूषतनयान् गन्धर्वान् पापनिश्चयान्' विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 202. 10"
691	n. 1568 l 2	Read ' सुषुम्ना '
695	line 9	Add at end: 'Vide, for example, the statement that Purusottama is situated on Nīlaparvata (chap 1), that a dialogue between Śabara (a bhilla) and Vidyāpati the brother of Indradyumna's purohita took place (chap 7), that three rathas were manufactured for the three images (chap. 27) for being worshipped '
696	n 1577 l. 3	Read ' चक्रं दृष्ट्वा '
699	l 13	Add after this line ' Millions of devotees visit Jagannātha every year and the endowments of the principal temple and the shrines and sacred places within its premises are worth millions of rupees Great dissatisfaction is felt about the management of the funds and about the due performance of religious rites at Purī. The State of Orissa passed the Puri Shri Jagannath Temple Administration Act (No. XIV of 1952) providing for the consolidation of the rights and duties of the Sevaks Pujaris and such other persons as are connected with the Seva, Puja and management of the devasthan But this Act does not, in the opinion of many devotees, go far enough. It only provides for some supervision.'

Page	Line or Note
699	n 1582	Add at the end 'The mantra occurs in the मैत्रायणी-संहिता II, 9 10 and तै आ X 45.1'.
709	l. 20	Read 'in Pañcavatī and on the left bank' &c.
721	l. 14	Add at end "Vide a paper on 'Identification of the idol of Vitthala in the Vitthala temple at Hampī' by Dr. C Narayanrao in the Proceedings of the All India Oriental Conference held at Mysore pp 715–728 and a very informative and exhaustive thesis for Ph. D Degree on 'the cult of Vithobā' by Rev G. A. Deleury accepted by the Poona University in 1952."
732		Add under Āmardaka 'Vide E I vol. I pp 354 ff. for Āmardakatīrtha in Rānod in Gwalior State'
758		Under 'Irāvatī' add—'Vide Visnudharmottara I. 149 (twenty-five verses) for a fine poetic description of this river and I 162. 61–65 for the confluence of Irāvatī with Sindhu and of ten more confluences of several rivers of northern India.'
769		Column 2 under Konārka add "Vide Proceedings of the 8th Indian Historical Congress pp 153 ff. for an article 'Sungod of Konārak—where is he', which criticizes the article in the Modern Review."
796		Add under Rohītaka—'In the Madanpur plate of S'rīcandra in E. I. vol 28 at p 53 the place of origin of the Chandra dynasty is said to be Rohitagiri (acc to some Rohtasgadh in Bihar and Lalmai Hill, West of Comilla, acc to others)'
806		Column one under Śona add—'The Nirnayasindhu p 110 quotes a verse of Devala enumerating seven nadas शोणसिन्धुहिरण्याख्या कोकलोहितघर्घरा। शतद्रूश्च नदा. सप्त पावना परिकीर्तिता॥ It is difficult to say what rivers are meant by हिरण्य and कोक Lohita is Brahmaputrā
832	line 5	Read 'अंशुरवश्च'
832	lines 8 and 10	Read मृत्यो and मृतै
832	line 18	Read वर्य
832	n. 693a l 3	Read स्नानं

SECTION I

PĀTAKA, PRĀYAŚCITTA AND KARMAVIPĀKA

(Sins, expiations and the residual consequences of sins).

CHAPTER I

The Article on sin in Hasting's Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics (vol 11) will clearly show how the idea of sin varies from religion to religion, from age to age and from country to country. We are concerned here with the growth and development of the doctrine of sin in India from Vedic times to the medieval digests and commentaries on Dharmaśāstra Sin (pātaka) is a word that belongs to the terminology of religion rather than to that of Ethics [1] It is very difficult to define sin. In a general way it may be said that it is an act which is regarded as a wilful rebellion against or disobedience of some law supposed to be laid down by God or Revelation; it is opposition to the will of God manifested in an authoritative work or at least failure to abide by the regulations contained therein.

---

1 In these days many people, both in the East and the West, question the very existence of sin As Barbour puts it in his 'Sin and the new Psychology' (p 19) "The feeling is gaining wide acceptance that there is no such thing as sin in the Christian sense. Evil may encompass a man's life and bring disaster to his personality, but it is not sin It is psychic evil that can be explained by psychic causes and perhaps cured by psychological therapy .. Many say 'nothing is right and nothing is wrong Every thing is the result of complexes' It has resulted in an easy tolerance of sin" Sir Oliver Lodge in his article on 'Christian Doctrine' in the Hibbert Journal for 1903–4 at p 466 says 'The highest man of to-day is not worrying about his sins at all, still less about their punishments His mission, if he is good for anything, is to be up and doing and in so far as he acts wrongly or unwisely he expects to suffer' The followers of Cārvāka who was the prince of Atheists in ancient India used to say 'man should live among pleasures as long as life lasts, he should feed himself sumptuously (lit. should drink ghee) even by borrowing money from others There is no coming again into the world after the body is reduced to ashes by cremation'.

The Rgveda is full of fervent and heart-felt expressions of the sense of sin and betrays intense desire on the part of the sages of old to be free from it The idea of sin in the Rgveda is bound up with the conception of rta. The conception of rta cannot be discussed here in detail But a brief statement is absolutely necessary in order to be able to convey what the Vedic doctrine of sin was [2]

Rta had a threefold aspect It means 'the course of nature' or 'the regular and general order in the cosmos'; with reference to sacrifice it means 'the correct and ordered way of the cult of the Gods', and thirdly, it also means the 'moral conduct of man'. A few passages to illustrate these three aspects of rta may be cited here Rg. IV 23 8–10 are[3] three verses in which the word rta occurs no less than twelve times and which breathe the all-pervading influence of rta throughout the universe 'Plentiful waters (or riches or gifts) belong to rta, the thought (or laudation) of rta destroys crooked acts (sins), the brilliant and rousing hymn of praise to rta pierces the benumbed ears of man The props of rta are firm, its (physical) manifestations are many and lovely for the sake of the body (i e man) Through rta they (people) desire food The cows (sun's rays) entered rta by rta He who wins over rta acquires it For the sake of rta (heaven) and earth are wide and deep, the two highest cows (i e Heaven and Earth) yield milk (desires or rewards) for the sake of rta ' Some other passages are. 'The Sindhus (rivers) follow the rta of Varuna' (rtam sindhavo Varunasya yanti, Rg. II 28 4), similarly Rg I. 105 12 (rtamarsanti sindhavah), The wheel of rta (i e the year) revolves round the sky with twelve spokes (dvādaśāram . .. varvarti cakram pari dyām-rtasya, Rg. I 164 11), 'the dawn, the daughter of heaven, correctly follows the path of rta ... ...' ('rtasya panthānam-anveti sādhu', Rg I 124 3); the young woman (Usas) does not destroy (or come in the way of) the light of ṛta (Rg I 123 9); the sun is the bright and lovely face of rta (Rg VI. 51. 1. 'rtasya śuci darśatam–anīkam); 'the path of rta became united with the rays' (Rg. I 136 2); 'when exhilarated by drinking this (Soma) Indra released for the sake of rta the concealed host of cows' (Rg. I. 121 4, probably a reference to drought and subsequent rainfall).

---

2. For the conception of rta and the idea of sin in the Rgveda the following works may be consulted 'The religion of the Veda' by M. Bloomfield (pp 12, 125 ff), 'Religion and philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads' by Prof A. B Keith (pp. 35, 83–85 &c.), 'The Vedic idea of sin' by Dr. Henry Lefever (1935) One regrets to observe that Bloomfield's work is marred here and there by a certain levity of thought and expression out of keeping with the seriousness of the subject

3 ऋतस्य हि शुरुध सन्ति पूर्वीऋतस्य धीतिर्बृजिनानि हन्ति। ऋतस्य श्लोको बधिरा ततर्द कर्णा बुधान शुचमान आयोः॥ ऋतस्य दृळ्हा धरुणानि सन्ति पुरूणि चन्द्रा वपुषे वपूंषि। ऋतेन दीर्घमपणन्त पृक्ष ऋतेन गाव ऋतमाविवेशुः॥ ऋतं येमान ऋतमिद्वनोत्यृतस्य शुष्मस्तुरया उ गव्युः। ऋताय पृथ्वी बहुले गभीरे ऋताय धेनू परमे दुहाते॥ ऋ IV 23 8–10 These are rather obscure verses The Nirukta X 41 understands rta to mean 'water' and explains X 23·8 as 'ऋतस्य मज्ञा वर्जनीयानि हन्ति ऋतस्य श्लोको बधिरस्यापि कर्णौ आतृणत्ति। बधिर बद्धश्रोत्र। कर्णौ बोधयन् दीप्यमानश्च आयो अयनस्य मनुष्यस्य ज्योतिर्वा वा उदकस्य वा।'

Many of the principal gods of the Vedic pantheon are described as the guardians, promoters or charioteers of ṛta. Mitra and Varuna rule over all the world by ṛta (Rg V. 63 7, rtena viśvam bhuvanam vi rājathah); Mitra and Varuna, the protectors of rta, occupy a chariot (Rg V. 63 1), Mitra, Varuna, and Aryaman are said to be charioteers of rta (yūyamrtasya rathyah, VII 66 12); they and Aditi and Bhaga are protectors of rta (Rg. VI 51 3) Agni is called 'the charioteer of ṛta' (rathī rtasya, Rg. III. 2 8), the protector of ṛta, in Rg. I. 1 8, III 10.2, X. 8.5, X 118.7 and rtāvān (in Rg IV. 2.1). Soma is styled the protector of rta (in Rg. IX. 48 4, IX 73 8) and is said to support ṛta (IX. 97.24 ṛtam bharat subhrtam cārvinduh) In Rg. VII. 66.13 the Ādityas[4] are said to be ṛtāsan (acting according to the fixed order of nature), rtajāta (sprung from rta) and rtāvrdh (augmenting or rejoicing in rta) and further they are said to be fierce haters of anṛta (what is opposed to rta).'

Rta is distinguished from sacrifice (yajña). It is not any particular sacrificial rite itself nor the institution of sacrifice. It stands for the ordered course of sacrifice in general In Rg. IV. 3.4. Agni is styled rtacit (conversant with or observing ṛta) and is invoked to know the rta (of the sacrifice); in several verses we meet with the words 'rtena ṛtam' (e. g. in Rg IV. 3.9 rtena rtam niyatam-ila ā goḥ', V. 15.2 'rtena ṛtam dharunam dhārayanta yajñasya sāke, V. 68.4 rtam-ṛtena sapantā 'conforming to or joining rta with rta', where 'ṛtena' appears to mean the correct course of sacrificial rites and 'rtam' the settled order in the universe. Soma is said to be the thread of ṛta spread on the dasāpavitra (Rg. IX. 73.9 'rtasya tantur-vitatah pavitra ā). In

4. ऋतावानो ऋतजाता ऋतावृधो घोरासो अनृतद्विषः । तेषां वः सुम्ने सच्छर्दिष्टमे नरः स्याम ये च सूरयः ॥ ऋ. VII. 66.13

Rg. I 84.4 it is said 'O Indra, drink this (soma) that is extracted ..the streams of the bright (soma) flow towards thee in the seat of rta' (i e. in the soma sacrifice) Vide also Rg IV 1 13—(asmākam-atra pitaro manusyā abhi pra sedur-rtam-ā susānāh) 'in this world former men, our ancestors, approached rta etc', Rg I 71 3 (dadhannrtam dhanayannasya dhītim-ādidaryo)' Rg. X 67 2 (rtam śamsanta rju dīdhyānā yajñasya dhāma prathamam mananta) 'the Angirasas,, declaring the rta and reflecting straightforwardly first thought of the abode of Yajña', Rg. X 37 1 (maho devāya tad-itam saparyata, 'offer this rta to the great God')

The conception of rta as a moral imperative occurs in several passages Rg I. 90 6 (madhu vātā rtāyate madhu ksaranti sindhavah) 'the winds carry sweets, the rivers do the same to him who keeps rta', Rg V 12 2 'O Agni, that knowest rta, know rta alone (in me) .I shall not resort to magic either by force or by duplicity, I shall conform to rta of the reddish bull (i e of Agni)[5]; Rg. X 87 11 'O Agni! may the evil spirit who injures rta by anrta be thrice bound in thy fetters' Yama in rejecting Yami's advances says (Rg X. 10 4) 'What indeed we never did before (shall we do it now?); shall we who have spoken rta (so far) now speak anrta?' (rtā vadanto anrtam rapema)

In two or three instances rta appears to be almost personified and invoked as a divinity. 'O Agni! for us offer sacrifice to Mitra and Varuna, to the gods and to the great (brhat) rta' (Rg I 75 5). Similarly, in Rg X. 66 4 the great (mahat) rta is mentioned alongside of Aditi, Heaven and Earth, Indra, Visnu, the Maruts &c.

Rta and satya were distinguished in several passages of the Rgveda For example, Rg. V. 51 2 speaks of the Viśve Devas as 'rtadhītayah' (whose thoughts were fixed on rta) and 'satyadharmānah' (whose characteristic is truth or whose dharmas are true). In Rg. IX 113.4 rta and satya both occur and appear to mean almost the same thing In Rg X. 190 1 rta and satya are distinguished as having sprung from 'tapas'. Rta involves a wider conception and satya had originally a restricted meaning (viz truth and static order). The word anrta, however, is the opposite of both rta and satya as may be seen from Ṛg X. 10.4, Ṛg VII. 49.3 (Varuna who marks the satya and anṛta of people), Ṛg. X. 124.5 (Varuna who separates anṛta by means of ṛta). Gradually, however, the word ṛta receded into the back-ground and satya took its place even in Vedic literature, though here and there (as in Tai. Up. II 1 and I.9.1) both ṛta and satya are found in juxtaposition.

5. ऋत चिकित्व ऋतमित्चिकिद्धृतस्य धारा अनु तृन्धि पूर्वी । नाहं यातु सहसा न द्वयेन ऋत सपाम्यरुषस्य वृष्ण. । ऋ V 12.2.

The sages of the Ṛgveda were acutely conscious of sin or guilt and pray to the gods, particularly to Varuna and the Adityas, for forgiveness and for being freed from the consequences of sin In this connection they employ numerous words such as āgas, enas, agha, duṛita, dushṛita, drugdha, aṁhas. A few examples of the employment of these words may be cited here. The most frequent words are āgas and enas, both of which appear to import sin in its deepest and most ethical sense. Ṛg. VII 86 is a hymn to Varuna in which there are several verses that breathe a deep and heart-felt consciousness of guilt. The sage begins in verse 3 by saying that all wise men of whom he inquired told him the same thing viz. 'Varuna is angry with you'. Then the sage proceeds 'O Varuna! what is that great guilt (āgas) (of mine) whereby you desire to injure your worshipper and a friend? Declare that to me, then I shall quickly approach thee with an obeisance and be free from sin (enas). Cast away from us the transgressions (drugdha) of our father and those that we committed in our own person;...free Vasistha (from guilt) like a calf from the rope (that binds it)'. In Ṛg. VII. 89.5 (almost equal to Atharva-veda VI. 51.3) the sage says 'whatever transgressions (abhidroha) we who are mere men have practised as against the divine hosts and whatever dhaṛmas laid down by you we may have confounded through our ignorance (or heedlessness) do not destroy us on account of that guilt (enas).' It will be noticed that in these verses the words āgas, abhidroha and enas are employed in the same verses and therefore practically mean the same thing. In Ṛg. II. 27.14 the sage prays 'O Aditi! O Mitra! O Varuna! take pity on us though we may have committed some sin against you'. In Ṛg. II. 28 5 Varuna is implored to loosen sin (āgas) from the devotee just like a girdle. Ṛg. VIII. 45.34 states: 'O Indra! do not kill us for one sin, for two sins or three sins or for many (āgas).' In Ṛg II. 29.1 the Adityas are implored[6] 'cast away from me sin (āgas) as a woman who gives birth to a child in secret'. For some other passages in which āgas or its opposite anāgas occurs, vide Rg I. 162.22, I. 185 8, II.29.5, IV. 12.4, IV 54 3, VII. 51 1, VII. 57 4, V. 85.7, VII. 87 7, VII. 93 7, X 36 12, X. 37 7 and 9. Āgas and enas are employed in the same verse, Rg. IV.12.4 'O Agni! Whatever sin (āgas) we may have committed through heedlessness make us free from it before Aditi and loosen from us our sins (enas) from all sides'.

6. भूतव्रता आदित्या इषिरा आरे मत्कर्त रहसूरिवागः । ऋ II. 29.1.

Some more passages about enas are Rg VI 51 7 'May we not have to enjoy (i e suffer for) the enas committed by another and Rg VI. 51 8 'Whatever sin be committed by me I shall remove it by obeisance', Rg VI. 74 3 'O Soma and Rudra! Loosen from us and cast away from us whatever sin attaches to our person'; Rg VII 20 1 'Indra is our saviour even from a great sin'; vide also Rg I 189 1, II. 28 7, VII. 52 2 The word 'agha', also seems to mean sin 'Apa nah śośucad-agham' (may our sins perish) is the refrain of Rg. 1 97. 1–8. 'O gods! May your fetters and may sins (aghāni) be far away from us' (II 29 5, in which verse in the first half 'āgah' occurs), X 117 6 (kevalāgho bhavati kevalādī) 'one who simply eats food alone (without offering to others) reaps only sin'.

Another word is amhas. The following passages may be cited. In Rg II. 28 6 Varuna is implored 'remove amhas (sin) as one removes the rope from the (neck) of the calf; one has not the power even to wink without you (your favour)'[7] It should be noted that in the preceding verse (II 28 5) already quoted the simile of the girdle is employed with regard to āgas. 'May Indra take us away from amhas as persons on both sides (of a river) call one who is going in a boat' (Rg III. 32 14), 'No evil caused by the gods or by men reaches him from any side who worships Agni with fuel, oblation or sacrifice[8]' Rg VIII. 19. 6, 'May Aditi, the mother of the affluent Mitra and Varuna, save us from all sin' (Rg. X. 36. 3).[9] Rg. X. 36. 2 also prays Heaven and Earth, the upholders of rta, to protect the sage from 'amhas'. Vide also Rg X. 126. 2.

Another important word is vṛjina which is often placed in opposition to sādhu or ṛju. The Ādityas are said to 'see inside

---

7 दासेव वत्साद्विसुमुग्ध्यंहो नहि त्वदारे निमिषश्चनेशे। ऋ॰ II. 28 6, compare II 28 5 'वि मच्छ्राय रशनामिवाग ऋध्याम ते वरुण खामृतस्य॥'

8 न तमंहो देवकृत कुतश्चन न मर्त्यकृत नशत्। ऋ. VIII. 19 6

9 विश्वस्माको अदितिः पात्वंहसो माता मित्रस्य वरुणस्य रेवत.। ऋ. X. 36 3

(the hearts of men) sins as well as good (thoughts and actions)'[10] and it is added that everything though far-off is near to them who are kings. In Rg. II. 27. 2 the Ādityas are called 'avṛjināh' (free from vṛjina). The Sun is said to mark among men their right and sinful deeds (Rg. IV 1 17). The same words (ṛju martesu vṛjinā ca paśyan) occur in Rg VI. 51. 2 and VII. 60.2 about the Sun.

The word 'anṛta' is often used in the Ṛgveda. It has already been shown how Varuna is said to mark the satya and anṛta of men In Rg. VII 60 5 it is said 'these gods, Mitra, Aryaman and Varuna mark (or know) many sins; they flourish in the abode of ṛta' Rg. VII 66 13 calling Mitra, Varuna and Aryaman haters of anṛta has already been quoted (in n. 4).

The word 'durita' is sometimes used in the sense of sin In Rg I 23 22 the waters are invoked as follows:[11] 'O waters! carry away from me whatever sin may exist in me, whatever transgressions I may have been guilty of as regards my sensual appetite or whatever falsehood I may have uttered'. Here all three words 'durita, droha and anṛta' are brought together and convey almost the same idea, viz. sin or guilt against the law of the Gods. In Rg I. 185 10 Heaven and Earth are called father and mother and are invoked to save the worshipper from durita (sin) which involves blame (pātām-avadyād-duritād) 'Avadya' means 'garhya' acc. to Pān. III. 1. 101. Rg. VII. 82. 7 states 'Him neither aṁhas (sin) nor durita nor worry reaches from anywhere to whose sacrifice you go, O Mitra and Varuna!'. In Rg. X. 126. 1 'amhas'- and 'durita' are brought together (na tam-amho na duritam devāso asta martyam) In Rg VIII 67 21 the words amhati and rapas[12] seem to be employed in the sense of sin. 'Duskṛta' (evil deed) is used in the sense of sin in Rg. VIII. 47. 13 and in Rg X 164. 3 Agni is implored to keep far away from the worshipper all sins[13]. The word 'pāpa' generally[14]

10 अन्तः पश्यन्ति वृजिनोत साधु सर्वं राजभ्यः परमा चिदन्ति। ऋ II 27 3; आ सूर्यो बृहतस्तिष्ठदज्राँ ऋजु मर्तेषु वृजिना च पश्यन्॥ ऋ IV. 1 17.

11 इदमापः प्रवहत यत्किं च दुरितं मयि। यद्वाहमभिदुद्रोह यद्वा शेप उतानृतम्॥ ऋ I 23.22 शेप (or-फ) means मेढ्र

12 वि षु द्वेषो व्यंहतिमादित्यासो वि संहतिम्। विष्वग्वि बृहता रपः॥ ऋ. VIII 67 21, 'रप' रिमिति पापनामनी भवतः' निरुक्त IV. 21

13. यदाग्नियेदपीच्यं देवासो अस्ति दुष्कृतम्। त्रिते तद्विश्वमाप्त्य आरे अस्मद्धातन॥ ऋ VIII 47 13, अग्निर्विश्वान्यप दुष्कृतान्यजुष्टान्यारे अस्मद्धातु॥ ऋ. X. 164.3

14 पापमाहुर्यः स्वसारं निगच्छात्। ऋ X. 10 12, पापासः सन्तो अनृता असत्य इदं पदमजनता गभीरम्॥ ऋ. IV 5.5, occurs in the Ṛg. in the sense of 'sinner' (Ṛg. VIII. 61. 11, X. 10 12, IV. 5. 5) or 'sinful' or 'evil' (Ṛg X 108 6, X. 164 5, I. 129. 11) In Ṛg VII. 32. 18, VII. 94 3, VIII. 19 26 'pāpatva' occurs and appears to mean 'sinfulness' In the Brāhmanas 'pāpam' (neuter) occurs in the sense of 'sin' as in Śat Br. XI. 2 7. 19; vide also[15] Ait Br 33. 5 In the Upanisads 'pāpam' means 'sin' (e g in Tai Up II 9, Chāndogya IV 14. 3). Certain important modifications of the doctrine about sin and Karma were introduced in the Upanisads and the Bhagavadgītā, which will be discussed later on.

In spite of the voluminous references to the consciousness of guilt and sin in the Ṛgveda and to the transgression of divine laws briefly indicated above, European scholars were not wanting who boldly affirmed that the idea of sin was altogether unknown to the Ṛgvedic sages. Vide S B E vol I p XXII where Max-Müller replies 'the gradual growth of the concept of guilt is one of the most interesting lessons which certain passages of these ancient hymns can teach us'

How sin arises in the individual mind has been a difficult problem at all times[16]. Men are conscious of the sins they commit, though they may have no definite conclusions or theories about the origin of sin In the Ṛg VII. 86 6 a sage[17] pleads with Varuna that sin is not due to a man's own power, but it is rather due to fate, to surā (intoxicants), to anger, dice or heedlessness and even dream state leads one to commit what is not right In the Kausītaki-brāhmanopanisad (III 9) it is stated· 'the Lord of all makes that man perform good works whom He desires to raise to higher worlds

---

15 सहोवाचाजीगर्तः सौयवसिस्त्वै मा तात तपति पापं कर्म मया कृतम्। ऐ ब्रा 33 5 (=VII 17.)

16. Christianity seems to have solved it by stating that the source of actual sin is the Devil (Matthew 13 39) and by the legend of Adam's Fall (vide Romans 5. 12 'as by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin') it affirmed that there was a dose of original sin in all men In modern times many people don't accept the idea of 'original sin', for example, Sir Oliver Lodge says (in his article on 'Christian Doctrine') in Hibbert Journal for 1903–4 at p. 466 "As for 'original sin' or 'birth sin' or other notion of that kind that sits absolutely lightly on him (the man of to-day) As a matter of fact it is non-existent, and none but a monk could have invented it'

17. न स्वो दक्षो वरुण धाति· सा सुरा मन्युर्विभीदको अचित्तिः। अस्ति ज्यायान्कनीयस उपारे स्वप्नश्चनेदनृतस्य प्रयोता॥ ऋ. VII 86 6 than these and He makes that man commit bad deeds whom He wishes to drag down'.[18] Here it appears to be suggested that some men are chosen by God for being saved and some are chosen for being damned. This sounds like the Calvinistic doctrine of pre-destination. In the Bhagavadgītā (III. 36) Arjuna questions Śrīkṛṣṇa as follows: 'impelled by whom does a man commit sin as if constrained thereto by force, even though he does not desire to do so'? The answer given is (III. 37) 'it is lust and anger springing from the element (guna) of rajas (passion) that are the enemies of man in this world. In another place the Bhagavadgītā (XVI. 21) says 'this[19] is the three-fold door or entrance to Hell that is ruinous to the self viz. lust, anger and greed; therefore a man must shun these three.' But it must be said that this does not go to the real root of the matter. The question is why should carnal lust, anger or greed themselves arise in the mind of man. The only answer that is indicated is in accordance with the tenets of the Sāṁkhya philosophy viz. that there are three gunas, sattva, rajas and tamas which combine in various proportions in different men and that it is rajo-guna that is the cause of man's sinfulness In the Śānti-parva, chap. 163, it is stated that there are thirteen very powerful enemies of men beginning with anger (krodha) and kāma (lust) and it is said that krodha springs from lobha (covetousness), which latter arises from ignorance (verses 7 and 11). But there is no satisfactory discussion of the origin of ignorance in that chapter. Gautama 19.2 observes[20] that 'man in this world is polluted by a vile action such as sacrificing for a man unworthy to offer a sacrifice, eating forbidden food, speaking what ought not to be spoken, neglecting what is prescribed and practising what is forbidden'. Yājñavalkya III. 219 prescribes: 'by

---

18. एष ह्येव साधु कर्म कारयति त यमेभ्यो लोकेभ्यो उन्निनीषते एष उ एवासाधु कर्म कारयति त्ं यमधो निनीषते। कौषीतकिब्रा उप. III. 9. This is the basis of Brahmasūtra II. 1.34 and II. 3.41.

19. त्रिविधं नरकस्येदं द्वारं नाशनमात्मन॰। कामः क्रोधस्तथा लोभस्तस्मादेतत्त्रयं त्यजेत्॥ भगवद्गीता XVI. 21 = विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 33.6.

20. विहितस्याननुष्ठानान्निन्दितस्य च सेवनात्। अनिग्रहाच्चेन्द्रियाणां नरः पतनमृच्छति॥ या III 219, अकुर्वन् विहितं कर्म प्रतिषिद्धानि चाचरन्॥ प्रायश्चित्तीयते ह्येवं नरो मिथ्या तु वर्तयन्॥ शान्तिपर्व 34 2 गौतम appears to mention the two causes of the rise of sin stated by Yāj in the first half of III 219 'अथ खल्वयं पुरुषो याज्येन कर्मणा लिप्यते यथैतदयाज्ययाजनमभक्ष्यभक्षणमवद्यवदनं शिष्टस्याक्रिया प्रतिषिद्धसेवनमिति। गौ. 19 2 शबर on जै. XII. 3 16 echoes the very words of गौ. viz शिष्टस्याक्रिया प्रतिषिद्धसेवनमिति'.

omitting to do what is ordained, by resorting to what is condemned (prohibited) and by not controlling the senses, man incurs fall (i e sin)' Manu XI. 44 and Śāntiparva 34 2 are similar verses The Mitāksarā explains that matters ordained are such as performing Sandhyā (morning and evening adorations) and Agnihotra and what are condemned are such actions as drinking liquor Viśvarūpa explains that patana (fall or sinfulness) in Yāj III. 219 is not used in the technical sense attached to that word by Gautama 21 4 viz 'to be a patita means to be deprived of the right to follow the lawful occupations of twice-born men,' but it is used only in the sense that the man so acting (as mentioned in Yāj III. 219) becomes liable to undergo prāyascitta and that the words of Gautama (21.4) are restricted only to what are called mahāpātakas The word pātaka is derived from the causal of the root 'pat' Vide Medhātithi on Manu XI 54 'pātakaśabdah pātayatīti vyutpattyā sarva-vyatikramesu vartate' and Madanapārijāta p 786 In ancient works the word patanīya (meaning the cause of patana) has been employed as in Āp Dh S. I. 7 21 7 The Pr V (p 35) paraphrases patanīyāni by 'pātakāni' and derives it from the root 'pat' (patatyanena iti patanīyam) with the addition of the termination 'anīya' according to Pān III 3 113 The word occurs also in Yāj II. 210, III. 297, Śankha quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 237 (in prose) and other smrtis

The enumeration of sinful acts and the classifications of sins into several degrees or grades has gone on from very ancient times In the Rg X 5 6 it is said[21] 'the wise made (lit chiselled) seven limits, the man who goes against even one of them becomes sinful' The Nirukta (VI. 27) explains that the seven sins indicated in this verse are 'theft, violating the bed (of the guru), murder of a brāhmana, murder of a bhrūna, drinking of liquor, continual performance of the same sinful act, telling a lie as to a sinful matter'. Rg VII. 86 6 quoted above (in n 17) makes it clear that drinking surā and playing with dice were regarded as sinful. From the Tai. S. II. 5 1. 2, V 3 12 1–2, Śat Br XIII. 3 1 1 and other Brāhmana texts it appears that the murder of a brāhmana was generally regarded in early vedic times as the gravest of all sins, though in the Kāthaka samhitā (31. 7) it is stated that there is no sin as heinous as killing a bhrūna which is even worse than brāhmana murder)[22]. The Tai. Br. in detailing the story of Ekata, Dvita and Trita who was made a scapegoat for keeping off sins, enumerates the following sinners, viz. sūryābhyudita (one who sleeps on when the sun rises), sūryābhinimrukta (one who slept when the sun set), one who has black nails or teeth, agradidhisu (one who married a younger sister while the elder sister was yet unmarried), the elder brother remaining unmarried even though a younger brother has married, one who allows his sacred sacrificial fires to be extinguished, the killer of a brāhmana.[23]. It may be noticed that most of these occur almost in the same order in Āp. Dh. S. II. 5. 12. 22 where it is[24] said that though

21. सप्त मर्यादा कवयस्ततक्षुस्तासामेकामिदभ्यंहुरो गात्। ऋ X 5 6; सप्त एव मर्यादा कवयश्चक्रु.। तासामेकामपि अधिगच्छन्नंहस्वान् भवति। स्तेय तल्पारोहणं ब्रह्महत्या भ्रूणहत्या सुरापानं दुष्कृतस्य कर्मण पुन पुन सेवा पातके अनृतोद्यमिति। निरुक्त VI 27.

---

22. Bhrūnahan is either a killer of a learned brāhmana or the killer of a foetus when its sex is not known. Vide H of Dh vol II, p. 148n and vol. III p 612n for quotations and explanations. It may be noted that the four main prohibitions contained in the Decalogue (Exodus, chap 20 13–16 and Deut. 5. 17–20) against killing human beings, theft, adultery and bearing false witness are to be found in all well-known religious or moral codes.

23. ते देवा आप्येष्वमुजत। आप्या अमुजत ;सूर्याभ्युदिते। सूर्याभ्युदित. सूर्याभिनिमुक्ते। सूर्याभिनिमुक्तः कुनाखिनि। कुनखी श्यावदति। श्यावदन्नग्रदिधिषौ। अग्रदिधिषुः परिविन्ते। परिविन्तो वीरहाणि। वीरहा ब्रह्महाणि। तद् ब्रह्महणं नात्यच्यवत्। तै. ब्रा III 2. 8.11, In the corresponding story in the काठकसंहिता (31.7) we read श्यावदन्परिविन्ते परिविन्तः परिविविदाने परिविविदानोऽग्रेदिधिषा अग्रेदिधिषुर्दिधिषूपतौ दिधिषूपतिर्वीरहाणि...ब्रह्महाणि ब्रह्महा भ्रूणहानि भ्रूणहनमेनो नात्येति। The story of Trita is briefly referred to in the Atharvaveda (VI. 113). The germ of it is found in Rg VIII 47.13 quoted above in n. 13.

24. अभिनिम्रक्ताभ्युदित—कुनाखिश्यावदाग्रेदिधिषू—दिधिषूपतिपर्याहितपरीक्षु-परिविन्त-परिविन्न-परिविविदानेषु चोत्तरोत्तरस्मिन्नज्येष्ठाचिकरानिर्वेशो गरीयान् गरीयान्। आप II 5. 12 22. It may be noted that both brothers (elder and younger) and sisters (elder and younger) were held guilty of sin in case of supercession in marriage. परिविन्त and परिविन्न often mean the same thing (viz. an elder brother before whom a younger brother marries or consecrates sacrificial fires) Vide Manu III. 171-172. Acc. to Manu III. 173 a didhiṣūpati is one who feels love for his brother's widow and has intercourse with her under the system of niyoga. परिविविदान is the same as परिवेत्ता अग्रेदिधिषु or-षू is explained by Devala and by Aparārka p. 451, by Haradatta on Gaut. 15.15 and Mit. on Yāj. III. 26 as 'a younger sister who marries before her elder sister' and दिधिषु or दिधिषू is the elder sister who is thus superceded by a younger one In Āp the word पति is to be connected with both अग्रेदिधिषू and दिधिषू. The Amarakośa explains दिधिषू differently. शङ्खस्मृति (17. 43–44) makes even the father or other guardian for marriage getting a younger son or daughter married before an elder one and the priest officiating at such a marriage equally guilty 'परिवित्तिः परिवेत्ता यया च परिविद्यते। व्रतं संवत्सरं कुर्युर्दातृयाजकपञ्चमाः॥'.

these actions are not to be styled patanīyas according to Āp. yet they cause impurity which being greater and greater in each succeeding one requires higher and higher penances. Āp adds a few more sinners to those in the Tai. Br viz didhiṣupati (husband of an elder sister whose younger sister was married before her), paryāhita (an elder brother before whom a younger brother kindled fires), parivividāna (a younger brother who takes his share of the ancestral property before his elder brother), parivinna (an elder brother before whom a younger brother takes away his share of the ancestral property). The Chāndogya Upanisad[25] (V. 10. 9.) quotes a verse that declares that the five great sinners are the thief of gold, the drinker of surā, the violator of the guru's bed, the murderer of a brāhmana, and one who associates with any of the preceding four. The Br. Up. (IV. 3. 22) mentions as great sinners the thief and the murderer of a bhrūna.

Coming to the sūtras there is great divergence as to the classification of sins and the enumeration of sins in each class. The Āp. Dh. S. divides sins into two classes viz. patanīya (those that cause loss of caste), asucikara (those that cause impurity, though no loss of caste is caused). Āp. Dh. S (I. 7.21.7–11) states that patanīya sins are theft (of gold), crimes whereby one becomes an abhiśasta, complete loss (by neglect) of the Vedic learning that one secured by study, destruction of a foetus, incestuous connection with relations born of the same womb as one's father or mother and with the children of such persons, drinking of surā, intercourse with persons with whom intercourse is forbidden, intercourse with the female friend of one's female guru (mother &c) or with the female friend of one's guru (father &c.) and with the wife of any stranger, constant commission of immoral acts (adharma) other than those already mentioned. Āp. Dh S. I. 7.21.10 notes that, according to some, intercourse with a woman who is not the wife of a guru is not a patanīya sin. Among acts which render a man impure are (Āp. Dh. S. I. 7. 21. 12–18) the cohabitation of an Ārya woman with śūdras, eating the flesh of forbidden animals such as that of a dog or a human being or village cock or pig or other carnivorous animals, eating the excrement of human beings, partaking of food left by a śūdra, and cohabitation by Ārya men with apapātra women.[26] According to some, those acts that are declared to be aśucikara are also patanīyas. Āp. Dh. S. (I. 7.21.19) states that acts other than those enumerated are also aśucikara. Āp. Dh. S. (I. 9. 24.6–9) enumerates those who are abhiśasta, viz. one who slays a person belonging to the first two varṇas (viz. brāhmaṇa and kṣatriya) who had studied the Veda or who had been initiated for the performance of a soma sacrifice, one who kills a mere brāhmaṇa (though he may not have studied the Veda or be not initiated for a soma sacrifice), also one who destroys the embryo of a brāhmaṇa even though its sex be undistinguishable, or slays a woman who is an ātreyī (in her monthly course). The Vasiṣṭhadharmasūtra divides[27] sinners into three classes, viz. those who are enasvins, those guilty of mahāpātakas and those guilty of upapātakas (I. 19–23). Among those who are styled enasvinaḥ are those mentioned in Āp. Dh. S. II. 5.12.22, with this difference that the 'brahmojjha', who is included among 'patanīyas' by Āp. Dh. S. I. 7. 21. 9 is put among 'enasvins' by Vasiṣṭha. In Vas. 20. 4–12 special prāyaścittas for each of these 'enasvinaḥ' (ordinary sinners) are prescribed. The Mahāpātakas (mortal sins) according to Vasistha are five, viz (violating) a guru's bed, drinking of spirituous liquor, murder of a bhrūṇa (a learned brāhmaṇa), stealing gold from a brāhmaṇa and associating with a patita. Those guilty of upapātakas (minor sins) are: He who forsakes sacred Vedic fires, he who offends a guru, an atheist, he who earns his livelihood from atheists, and he who sells the soma plant. The Baudhāyana Dharmasūtra[28] (II. 1) divides sins into patanīya, upapātaka and aśucikara. Among the first it cites making voyages by sea, stealing the property of a brāhmaṇa or misappropriating a deposit, giving false evidence

25. तदेष श्लोकः । स्तेनो हिरण्यस्य सुरां पिबंश्च गुरोस्तल्पमावसन् ब्रह्महा चैते पतन्ति चत्वार. पञ्चमश्चाचरंस्तैः ॥ इति । छा उप. V. 10.9.

---

26. For the meaning of apapātra vide H of Dh. vol. II pp. 309n and 785n. For the meaning of ātreyī, vide H. of Dh. vol. III p. 527 note 970.

27. सूर्याभ्युदितः सूर्याभिनिम्रुक्तः कुनखी श्यावदन्तः परिवित्तिः परिवेत्तान्नेदिधिषूदीधिषूपतिर्वीरहा ब्रह्मोज्झ इत्येनस्विनः। पञ्च महापातकान्याचक्षते। गुरुतल्पं सुरापानं भ्रूणहत्या ब्राह्मणसुवर्णापहरणं पतितसंयोगश्चब्रह्मेण वा यौनेन वा। ... योनीनपविध्येद्वृत्तं च यः प्रतिदध्नुपाक्नास्तिको नास्तिकवृत्तिः सोमं च विक्रीणीयादित्युपपातकानि। वसिष्ठ I. 19–23.

28. अथ पतनीयानि। समुद्रसंयानम्। ब्रह्मस्वन्यासापहरणम्। भूम्यनृतम्। सर्वपण्यैर्व्यवहरणम्। शूद्रसेवनम्। शूद्राभिजननम्। तदपत्यत्वं च। ... अथोपपातकानि। अगम्यागमनं गुर्वीसखीं गुरुसखीमपपात्रां पतितां गत्वा भेषजकरणं ग्रामयाजनं रङ्गोपजीवनं नाट्याचार्यता गोमहिषीरक्षणं यच्चान्यदप्येवं युक्तं कन्यादूषणमिति। ... अथाशुचिकराणि। व्रतमभिचारोऽनाहिताग्नेरुच्छवृत्तिः ते समावृत्तस्य भैक्षचर्या तस्य चैव गुरुकुले वास ऊर्ध्वं चतुर्थ्यो मासेभ्यस्तस्य चाध्यापनं नक्षत्रनिर्देशश्चेति। गौ. ध. सू. II. 1.50–56, 60–61, 63–64.

regarding land (dispute), trading with merchandise of all descriptions, serving śūdras, begetting a son on a female of the śūdra caste and begetting a child (either male or female) from her[29]. The upapātakas, acc. to Baud. Dh. S. (II. 1. 60–61), are: intercourse with females who must not be approached, cohabitation with the female friend of a female guru or with the female friend of a male guru or with an apapātra woman or with a female outcast, following the profession of medicine, officiating as a priest for a village, living by dramatic performances, following the profession of a teacher of dancing or singing or acting, tending cows and buffaloes[30] and similar (low occupations) and fornication. Among asucikara (causing impurity), Baud. Dh. S mentions gambling, black magic, subsisting by gleaning corn fallen in the field by one who has not consecrated sacred fires, subsisting by begging on the part of one who has returned to his home after finishing Vedic study, staying for more than four months at his teacher's seminary on the part of him who has finished his studies, teaching one who has finished his studies, gaining livelihood by astrology. Gautama (21. 1–7) appears to include among patanīyas the usual five mortal sins and also some of those that are mentioned by Āp. Dh. S. (I. 7. 21. 9–11) and Vasiṣṭha I. 23 (such as nāstika) and adds a few more (such as not casting off persons guilty of patanīyas, forsaking blameless relatives and instigating others to commit acts causing loss[31] of caste.

---

29 That this is the correct translation of Baud and not the one in S. B. E vol. XIV p. 215 'becoming thereby her son' is clear from Manu III. 16 'शौनकस्य सुतोत्पत्त्या तदपत्यतया भृगो' Saunaka condemned the begetting of a son from a śūdra female (and not the begetting of a daughter), while Bhrgu condemned the begetting of a child (whether male or female did not matter).

30. It must be supposed that these lists relate to brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas alone Trading with merchandise or tending cows could not have been regarded as patanīya for Vaiśyas since trade and tending cows have been always prescribed as their special avocations. Vide Āp. Dh. S II. 5. 10. 7, Gaut. X 50, Manu X 79, Yāj. I. 119 Following the profession of medicine or living by teaching dancing or by going on the stage made brāhmaṇas unfit to be invited at a śrāddha Vide Gaut. 15 15–16 for long lists of those brāhmaṇas who were not to be invited at Śrāddha dinners &c.

31. ब्रह्महसुरापसुवर्णतल्पगमातृपितृयोनिसम्बन्धागस्तेननास्तिकानिन्दितकर्माभ्यासि-पतिता-ऽत्याज्यपतितत्यागिन. पतिताः । पातकसंयोजकाश्च । तैश्चाब्द समाचरन् ।...कौदसाक्षय राजगामि पैशुन गुरोरनृतताभिशसन महापातकसमानि । अपकृत्याना प्रायदुर्बलाद् गोहन्तृब्रह्महन्तृब्रह्मन्त्रकुदवकीर्णिपतितसावित्रीकेऽपपातकम । गौतम 21.1–3, 10–11.

The above statement about the classification of sins and their inclusion among the several classes or grades of sins will show that among the early sūtra works there was no general agreement about the nature and number of mahāpātakas, upapātakas and other classes of sins, even though as early as the Chāndogya Upanisad the mortal sins had been declared to be five. It must be supposed that that Upanisad[1] represented only one school of thought in the times of Āp., Baud. and Gaut, who did not entirely accept the tradition of that Upanisad, but followed other divergent ideas. It is impossible to suppose that the verse quoted in that Upanisad is later than the Dharmasūtras of Āp., Gaut, Baud, and Vas

It appears that Kātyāyana[32] divided sinful acts into five classes viz. mahāpāpa (mortal sins), atipāpa (the highest sins than which there is nothing worse), pātaka (sins similar to mahāpātakas), prāsaṅgika (due to association or contact) and upapātaka (minor sins). The Bhavisya-purāna also says that those sins that are declared to be equal to mahāpātakas (by Manu and others) are called pātakas Vrddha-Hārīta also (IX. 215–216) speaks of five kinds viz. mahāpāpa, pātaka, anupātaka, upapāpa and prakīrnaka (miscellaneous) and states (IX. 216–218) that those sins which are said to be like mahāpātaka are pātakas, that anupātakas are sins lesser than pātakas, that upapātakas are lesser than pātakas and prakīrnaka sins are the least sinful of all. The Visnudharmasūtra (33 3–5) speaks of nine kinds of lapses viz. atipātaka, mahāpātaka, anupātaka, upapātaka, jātibhramśakara (effecting loss of caste), saṅkarīkarana, (rendering one as degraded as a man of a mixed caste), apātrīkarana (rendering the perpetrator unworthy of receiving a gift), malāvaha (causing defilement) and prakīrnaka (miscellaneous). Atipātakas, acc. to Visnu Dh. S 34.1, are sexual intercourse with one's mother, daughter or daughter-in-law and the only expiation for them is entering fire. Manu omits the separate mention of atipātaka and anupātaka and includes most of them under those that he designates as equal to one of the four well-known mahāpātakas. Kātyāyana quoted in the Prāyaścittamuktāvali of Divākara (folio 3 a) adds sexual intercourse with one's sister as atipātaka to the three mentioned by Visnu

32. कात्यायनेन तु महापातकसमानां विष्णुनाह्नपातकेत्वेनोक्तानां पातकसंज्ञा दर्शिता। मिता. on या. III. 242 ; महापातकतुल्यानि पापान्युक्तानि यानि तु। तानि पातकसंज्ञानि क्रमादे चोपपातकम्। भविष्यपुराण (ब्राह्मपर्व 190 9)

Hārīta Dh. S (it appears) quoted by the Mit knew[33] of a variety of pātakas called anupātaka, but from the way in which the several pātakas are arranged it looks as if atipātaka in Hārīta was a lesser sin than mahāpātaka Manu (in chap XI) refers to all the kinds of pātakas found in the Visnu-dharmasūtra except atipātakas Usually five mahāpātakas have been enumerated from the days of the Chāndogya Up (quoted on p. 12) viz brāhmana murder, drinking spirituous liquor, theft (generally understood as theft of brāhmana's gold), sexual intercourse with the wife of a guru and association with the perpetrators of any of these four (for a year[34]) Vide Vas I 19–20, Manu XI 55, 180, Yāj III. 227, 261), Visnudharmsūtra 35 1–5, Vrddha–Hārīta IX 174. Manu mentions certain sins as equal to Mahāpātakas which are styled anupātakas by the Visnudharmasūtra chap. 36 The most elaborate treatment of all kinds of sins in the smrtis is found in Manu, Yāj and Visnu There is difference of opinion even among these three on certain points For example, Manu[35] XI. 56 says that forgetting the Veda, reviling the Vedas, giving false evidence, slaying a friend, eating forbidden food and food that is unfit for eating or should not be eaten, are lapses similar to drinking surā; while Yāj. III. 228 states that three out of these (viz reviling the Vedas, slaying a friend and forgetting the Veda studied by a person) along with the reviling of a guru by attributing false faults are similar to the murder of a brāhmana. The result is that there is an option as to the expiation to be prescribed for these sins.

---

33. यत्तु हारीतेनोक्त—महापातकातिपातकानुपातकोपपातकानामेकतममेव सन्निपाते चाऽधर्मर्षणमेव त्रिर्जपेत्—इति तन्निमित्तकर्तृविषयम् । मिता on या III 301, in प्र प्रकाश (folio 69a) हारीत is quoted as follows 'पञ्चविधमशुभ भवति प्रासङ्गिकोपपातकपातकमहापातकात्यन्तपातकानि' and it is remarked (folio 69 b) 'प्रासङ्गिकपदेन जातिभ्रंशकराणि परिशेषाद् गृह्यन्ते'

34 In the Mahābhāsya Patañjali mentions at least three of these five: 'यो हि अज्ञानन्वै ब्राह्मणं हन्यात्सुरा वा पिबेत्सोऽपि मन्ये पतितः स्यात् । महाभाष्य vol. I p 2, ध्वसते शुक्रतल्पगः । महाभाष्य vol. II p 103, वृषलरूपोयम् । अव्यय पलाण्डुना सुरा पिबेत् । महाभाष्य vol II p 419 on वार्तिक 4 on पा V 3 66. In the Khoh copperplate of the Gupta year 214 (533–34 A. D.) it was stated that whoever interfered with the gift would incur the five mahāpātakas and the upapātakas (Gupta Inscriptions p 135).

35 ब्रह्मोज्झता वेदानिन्दा कौटसाक्ष्य सुहृद्वधः । गर्हितानाद्ययोर्जग्धिः सुरापानसमानि षट् ॥ मनु XI 56, गुरूणामध्यधिक्षेपो वेदनिन्दा सुहृद्वधः । ब्रह्महत्यासमं ज्ञेयमधीतस्य च नाशनम् ॥ या III 228 मेधातिथि explains 'गर्हितं शास्त्रप्रतिषिद्धं लशुनादि । अनाद्यमनस्तुष्टिकरं न भोक्ष्य इति कल्प्य (सङ्कल्प्य?) यद्भुज्यते', compare गौतम 21 10 कौटसाक्ष्य राजगामि पैशुन गुरोरनृताभिशंसनामिति महापातकसमानि ।

It would be desirable to give some details as regards each of the mahāpātakas and then to describe the other varieties of sins and then to set out the expiations prescribed for all of them. It should be noted that both the secular law of penalties and the ecclesiastical rules about expiations made a difference between a sinful act intentionally committed (kāmatah) and one committed through ignorance or heedlessness and between an act done only once (sakrt) or done repeatedly (asakrt)

Brahmahatyā Hatyā or vadha (killing) is applied to an act which immediately or after some time results in causing loss of life directly without the intervention of any other cause.[36]. The Agnipurāna (173 1), the Mit, the Prāyaścittaviveka (p 47) and other works define what is meant by vadha A man may be the cause of the death of a brāhmana in five ways, viz. he may himself kill (i e. he becomes the kartā), he may incite another to kill (prayojaka) by ordering that other to do so (as a king or noble by ordering his servant) or by imploring another to kill and giving advice about the killing, he may encourage another to kill by his own approval (anumantā), or by helping the killer when he wavers or by offering protection to the killer against others (anugrāhaka) and by becoming a mumūṣu.[37]

The Mit on Yāj. III. 227 and 243 (quoting verses from Paithīnasi) explains all these at length. For the definition of anugrāhaka it relies on a verse of Manu 'Where many persons are armed and have a common purpose in view, if even one of them kills a person, all of them are guilty of murder', which is very much like sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. This distinction into several degrees of killers is an ancient one and is based on Āp Dh. S. II. 11. 29. 1–2 'He who[38] instigates, he who approves, and he who commits an act—these share its results in heaven and hell; but he amongst these who contributes most to 36. हन्तिरयं प्राणवियोगकरणे व्यापारे रूढ। यद्व्यापारसमनन्तरं कालान्तरे वा कारणान्तरनिरपेक्ष. प्राणवियोगो भवति स ब्राह्मणं हतवानिति ब्रह्महा। मिता on या III. 227; स्वात्प्राणवियोगफलो व्यापारो हनन स्मृतम्। अग्निपु. 173 1, quoted by प्राय०तत्त्व p. 519.

---

37. वधित्वं पञ्चविध कर्ता प्रयोजकोऽनुमन्तानुग्राहको निमित्ती चेति। प्राय०वि. p. 47, अनुग्राहकश्च य. पलायमानममित्रमुपरुन्धन् परेभ्यश्च हन्तार परिरक्ष्य हन्तुर्दृढिमानमुपजनयन्नुपकरोति स उच्यते। अत एव मनुना ग्राहकस्य हिंसाफलसम्बन्धो दर्शित। बहूनामेककार्याणां सर्वेषा शस्त्रधारिणाम्। यद्येको घातयेत्तत्र सर्वे ते घातका स्मृता॥ इति। मिता on या III. 227. The verse बहूनामेक० occurs in अग्निपु 173 3.

38. प्रयोजयिता मन्ता कर्तेति स्वर्गनरकफलेषु कर्मसु भागिन। यो भूय आरभते तस्मिन् फलविशेष॥ आप. ध. सू. II. 11.29. 1–2.

the accomplishment of the act obtains a greater share of the results'. A murdhā[39] is defined by Mit as one that angers another (who is a brāhmaṇa) by rebuking or beating or depriving him of wealth and the like and in whose presence and on account of whom the brāhmaṇa that is angered kills himself. The Mit. quotes a verse of Viṣṇu and also another verse (without name) on this point. If a person kills a brāhmaṇa boy whose upanayana had not been performed he was yet regarded as guilty of brāhmaṇa murder.[40] The Samavidhāna Br. I. 7. 5, Āp. Dh. S. (I. 9. 24. 6–9), Vas. 20. 34, Manu XI. 87, Yāj. III. 251 held that killing even a kṣatriya or vaiśya who had studied the Veda or had been initiated for a soma sacrifice rendered the killer guilty of brahmahatyā, as also the killing of the foetus (of brāhmaṇa parents) whose sex was unknown and of a woman who was an śrotriyā.[41] Killing a brāhmaṇa woman other than an śrotriyā or other than the wife of a sacrificer engaged in a soma sacrifice was only an upapātaka, as Manu (XI. 66) and Yāj. (III. 236) lay down. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 264 says that no prāyaścitta can expiate the sin of killing a woman intentionally. In the case of the three varṇas other than that of brāhmaṇa some smṛtis like that of Cyavana[42] laid down other mahāpātakas in addition to the five, viz. punishing one who should not be punished and fleeing from the battle-field are additional mahāpātakas for kṣatriyas, employing false balances and weights for vaiśyas, the selling of flesh, injuring a brāhmaṇa, sexual intercourse with a brāhmaṇa woman, the drinking of the

---

39. तथा चोदि भर्त्सनस्ताडनधनादिहरणादिना परात्मोद्वेजनं मोहादि मरणहेतुकृत्वमुत्पादयद्व्यापारः हिंसाहेतुर्मर्मवेधः। अत्र एव विष्णुनोक्तम्। आक्रुष्टस्ताडितो वापि धर्षणं विप्रयोजितः। यस्मिन्द्विषन्त्यजेत् प्राणान्मारयुर्ब्रह्मघातकम्। तथा। क्षतिमिच्छन्परार्थे मुह्यन्नेवाधमेन च। यस्मिन्द्विषन्त्यजेत् प्राणांस्तन्मारयुर्ब्रह्मघातकम्। इति। The मान चि. p. 5 ascribes the first verse to यज्ञविज्ञान and the 2nd to हारीत and cites two more verses of similar import from Bṛhaspati. The स्मृतिमु (आह्नि.) p. 562 ascribes both verses to विष्णु and quotes सप्त आर्षेयाः from कूर्मपु. The verse आक्रुष्टः is almost the same as अत्रिसं 173.

40. अत्र ब्राह्मणबधे संस्कृतसंस्कृतिद्विजबधस्य केनाप्यनुल्लेखात् अदीक्षितनिर्ब्राह्मणबधस्यैव मयोक्तत्वस्य च जातिविशेषत्वात् अदृष्टनीतब्राह्मणबधेऽपि महापातकम्। मान चि. p. 55.

41. पूर्वमेवार्जयेद्वेदांश्चरेत् इत्या सावित्र्या चाभिरूपः। ब्राह्मणमात्रे च। सर्वे च श्रुतयो विज्ञानम्। आत्रेयी च स्त्रियम्। आप. ध. सू. I. 9. 25–6–9; राजन्यवैश्यौ सवनस्थौ इत्या ब्राह्मणव्यतिरेकेण दुष्टाहुतीष्टवतः। सामविधान्ना I. 7. 5.

42. क्षत्रियादीनामपरमपि महापातकमाह च्यवनः। अकृत्या युद्धपलायनं दुष्टस्य ब्राह्मणस्यवर्णस्य द्विजानां महापातकानि। अदण्ड्यदण्डनं तुलिपरिवर्तनं क्षत्रियस्य। मान्तुलाहरणं वैश्यस्य। मांसविक्रयणं ब्रह्महत्या ब्राह्मणीगमनं क्षत्रियाद्युत्पन्नानां शूद्रस्य। वीरमित्रो०प० पृ. III. 227.

milk of a kapilā (dark-brown) cow in the case of śūdras. If a brāhmana or any other human being or a cow died while a competent doctor was administering treatment to them by means of drugs, oils or food, or cauterization by cutting or by opening a vein the medical man incurred no sin [43] But if a quack pretending to know medicine administered such treatment and death followed, Yāj. II. 242 prescribed various punishments. If a brāhmana administers moderate corporal punishment to his son, pupil or wife for some fault and the son or pupil or wife suddenly dies he incurs no sin, according to the Bhavisyapurāna and the Agnipurāna.[44] Gautama (II 48–50), Āp. Dh S I 2 8. 29–30, Manu VIII. 299–300 (=Matsyapurāna 227. 152–154), Visnu Dh. S 71 81–82, Nārada (abhyupetyāśuśrūṣā 13–14) lay down that the punishment should be administered with a rope or bamboo slip on the back (but never on the head or chest) and Manu (VIII 300) provides that if these restrictions were violated the punisher would incur the same guilt or punishment as a thief. Vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp 362–363 for this topic

One important question that very much exercised the minds of ancient and medieval Dharmaśāstra writers is whether a man can kill a brāhmana ātatāyin in self-defence without incurring any sin or punishment by the king. There is great divergence of views on this point, which has been dealt with at some length in H of Dh vol II pp. 148–151 and vol. III pp. 517–518. The conclusion of the Mitāksarā appears to voice the views of most writers that, if a brāhmana comes as an ātatāyin (as an incendiary, as a poisoner, as a kidnapper of women or with the intention of killing or wresting a field), then in self-defence one may oppose him without incurring any sin, but that if the brāhmana offender meets death though the defender did not desire to kill him (but only to stop him by causing injury short of death), the

---

43 क्रियमाणोपकारे तु मृते विप्रे न पातकम् । या III 284, औषधं स्नेहमाहारं ददद्नो-ब्राह्मणादिषु । दीयमाने विपत्तिः स्याच्न स पापेन लिप्यते ॥ संवर्त 138 (The Ānan ed. reads last pāda as पुण्यमेव न पातकम्) q by विश्वरूप on या III. 262, by the मिता on या. III 227 (with two more verses), by प्राय वि. p 56 (reads second half as प्राणिनां प्राणवृत्त्यर्थं प्रायश्चित्तं न विद्यते) The same verse occurs in यम 50, लघुशङ्ख 61, लघु हारीत 28. The मिता and प्राय वि. quote another verse as संवर्त's which is 'दाहच्छेद्-शिराभेदप्रयत्नैरुपकुर्वताम्। प्राणसंत्राणसिद्ध्यर्थं प्रायश्चित्तं न विद्यते' ॥ The अग्निपुराण 173 5 has 'औषधाद्युपकारे तु न पापं स्यात् कृते मृते। पुत्रं शिष्यं तथा भार्यां शासतो न मृते त्वघम् ॥ '

44. पुत्रं शिष्यस्तथा भार्यां शासितश्चेद्विनश्यति। न शास्ता तत्र दोषेण लिप्यते देव-सत्तम ॥ भविष्यपु. q. by प्राय. वि. p. 58; आग्नपु. 173.5 is similar.

defender is not liable to be punished by the king and he has to undergo a light expiation (i. e. he is not guilty of brāhmana's murder).[45]

Surāpāna (drinking of surā) has been held to be a mahāpātaka The word surā occurs several times in the Ṛgveda (e g. Ṛg I. 116 7, I. 191.10, VII. 86 6, VIII. 2 12, X 107 9) Ṛg. VII. 86 6 quoted above (in note 17) clearly indicates that surā was looked upon by the Ṛgvedic singers as a cause of sin just as much as gambling Ṛg. I 116 7 (satam kumbhān asiñcatam surāyāh) read with Ṛg I 117.6 (śatam madhūnām) implies that madhu (honey or some sweet substance) might have been used in preparing surā Soma was a beverage to be offered to the gods and to be drunk by the brāhmana priests and was sharply distinguished from surā (e g in Tai S II 5 1 1, Vāj S. 19 7, Śat Br. V. 1 5 28). The last furnishes the striking antithesis 'soma is truth, prosperity, light, and surā is untruth, misery, darkness'. It appears that long before the Kāthaka Samhitā brāhmanas had come to regard the drinking of surā as very sinful [XII 12 'therefore the brāhmana does not drink surā (with the idea) that (by drinking it) he may become affected by sin'][46] The Chāndogya Up. (V. 10.9) speaks of the drinker of surā as a patita, while in V. 11 5 king[47] Aśvapati Kaikeya makes the boast before the five learned brāhmanas that had come to him for the knowledge of Ātman Vaiśvānara that in his kingdom there was no thief and no drinker of madya. Though Manu XI 54 enumerates the drinking of surā among the five mahāpātakas, Yāj. III. 227 speaks of the madyapa (drinker of madya) as one of the five great sinners. Therefore we must explain what is meant by surā and when surāpāna becomes a mahāpātaka. By Manu XI. 93 suiā is said to be the refuse of food and Manu XI. 94 states that surā is of three kinds, viz that prepared from molasses, that from flour and that from madhūka flowers (or from honey). There is a great deal of discussion about surā in many of the digests and the propositions

---

45 अतश्च ब्राह्मणादय आततायिनश्च आत्मादित्राणार्थं हिंसानभिसन्धिना निवार्यमाणा प्रमादाद्यदि विपद्येरंस्तत्र लघुप्रायश्चित्त राजदण्डाभावश्चेति निश्चय । मिता on II. 21.

46 तस्माद् ब्राह्मण सुरा न पिबति पाप्मना नेत्सयुज्या इति । काठक XII 12 q by the तन्त्रवार्तिक on जै I 3 7 p 210 and by शङ्कराचार्य on वेदान्तसूत्र III 4 31.

47 स ह प्रात समिहान उवाच न मे स्तेनो जनपदे न कदर्यो न मद्यपो नानाहिताग्निर्नाविद्वान्न स्वैरी स्वैरिणी कुत ... । छा. उ. V. 11.5.

established by most of them are[48]: (1) that all the three higher varnas are forbidden to drink the surā prepared from flour and drinking it is a grave sin (mahāpātaka) in the case of anyone belonging to the three first varnas, (2) All intoxicants (madya) are forbidden to brāhmanas at all stages of life (Gaut. II. 25 'madyam nityam brāhmanah' and Āp. Dh. S. I 5. 17–21); but a brāhmana drinking surā of the gaudī or mādhvī kind would not be guilty of mahāpātaka but of anupātaka (acc to Visnu); (3) that intoxicants other than surā prepared from flour are not condemned for ksatriyas and vaiśyas; (4) the śūdra was not forbidden to drink any kind of intoxicant (including surā made from flour); (5) brahmacārins of all varnas studying the Veda had to abstain from intoxicants of all kinds. The Visnu Dh. S. (22 83–84) specifies ten kinds of madya (intoxicants) prepared from dates, jack fruit, cocoanuts, sugarcane &c and Pulastya quoted by the Mit on Yāj. III. 253, by the Prāyaścittaprakarana of Bhavadeva (p 40), the Prāyaścittaviveka of Śūlapāni (p. 90), Pr. Prakāsa (folio 69 b) refers to eleven kinds of madyas apart from surā (dvādaśam to surāmadyam sarvesām adhamam smrtam). Vide H of Dh. vol. III pp 964–966 for further discussion on intoxicating drinks.

The Mit points out (on Yāj III. 253) that the prohibition against drinking surā applies to boys who have not yet been invested with the sacred thread and also to unmarried girls, since Manu XI 93 makes no distinction of sex but only forbids to the three first castes the drinking of surā and since the Bhavisyapurāna[49] expressly forbids to a brāhmana female the drinking of surā The Kalpataru appears to have held otherwise. But a woman and a minor had to undergo lesser prāyaścitta as will be shown below. Vas 21 11 and Yāj III 256 state that the wife of a brāhmana, ksatriya or vaiśya who drinks surā (made from flour) would not reach the worlds of her husband and she

---

48 अयमत्राथ । त्रैवर्णिकानामुत्पत्तिप्रभृति पैष्टीप्रतिषेधः । ब्राह्मणस्य तु मद्यमात्रनिषेधोप्युत्पत्तिप्रभृत्येव । राजन्यवैश्ययोस्तु न कदाचिदपि गौड्यादिमद्यप्रतिषेध । शूद्रस्य न सुराप्रतिषेधो नापि मद्यप्रतिषेध ॥ मिता. on या III. 253; पैष्टीशब्दाभिधेयब्रीह्यादिविकारो मुख्यसुराशब्दार्थः । तत्पानमेव त्रैवर्णिकस्य महापातकम् । गौडीमाध्वीसुरापाने तु ब्राह्मणस्य पैष्टीपानवदेव प्रायश्चित्तम् । क्षत्रियवैश्ययो स्तु तत्पाने न दोष इति । प्राय. प्रक p 42

49. तथा भविष्ये । तस्माच्च पेयं विप्रेण सुरामद्यं कथञ्चन । एतेनाद्युपेतविप्रस्य कुमारिकायाश्च दोषाभावो द्विजग्रहणादिति वदन् कल्पतरुः परास्त । प्रा प्रकाश folio 70 b The word द्विज occurs in मनु XI 90. ब्राह्मण्यापि न पेया वै सुरा पापभयावहा ॥ प्राय वि. p. 92.

would become in this world a bitch or a sow[50] The Mit. remarks[51] on this verse that though a śūdra is not forbidden to drink surā even the śūdra wife of a brāhmana should not drink surā

Drinking surā means taking it down the throat Therefore if a man's lips only touch surā or if surā enters his mouth but he spits it out, then there is no drinking of surā (i. e no mahāpātaka) and he would have had to undergo in such a case a light expiation for the touch of surā[52].

Steya (theft). In order to constitute theft as a grave sin according to the commentaries the theft must be of a brāhmana's gold of a certain quantity Steya is defined by Āp Dh S I. 10 28 1 as[53] 'a man becomes a thief by coveting another's property (and taking it) in whatever situation he may be (without the owner's consent)' Kātyāyana (810) defines[54] it as 'depriving a man of his property, whether clandestinely or openly and, whether by night or by day, is known to be theft'. Vyāsa defines it similarly. Vācaspati in his bhāsya on Yogasūtra II. 30 defines steya as taking property from another in a manner that is not allowed by the śāstras (steyam-asāstra-pūrvakam dravyānām paratah svīkaranam). Though Manu (XI. 54) and Yāj (III. 227) simply employ the word 'steya' (theft) or 'stena' (thief) yet in speaking of the prāyaścitta

50 या ब्राह्मणी च सुरापी न ता देवा पतिलोकं नयन्तीहैव सा चरति क्षीणपुण्याप्सु लुप्तभवति शुक्तिका वा। वसिष्ठ 21 11. This is cited as श्रुति in प्राय वि. p 92 and these very words occur in the महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 1–2 on पाणिनि III 2 8 'या ब्राह्मणी सुरापी भवति नैनां देवा पतिलोकं नयन्ति' vol II p 99 (the वार्तिकs are सुरा-मीत्योः पिबते । बहुलं तणि।)

51. ब्राह्मणीग्रहण चात्र 'तिस्रो वर्णानुपूर्व्येण' इति न्यायेन यस्य द्विजातेर्यावत्यो भार्यास्तासामुपलक्षणम्। अत एव मनु । पतत्यर्धं शरीरस्य यस्य भार्या सुरा पिबेत्। पतितार्ध-शरीरस्य निष्कृतिर्न विधीयते ॥ इति। द्विजातिभार्याया. शूद्राया अपि सुरामतिषेधप्राप्त्यर्थम्। मिता on या III 256 The verse पतत्यर्धं is not found in मनु, but is वसिष्ठ 21 15 and पराशर X 27.

52 पानं च द्रवीभूतस्याभ्यवहार. स च कण्ठदेशादधोनयनं न तु वक्त्रमात्रप्रवेश । निष्ठीवनाद्यर्थं कपोलधारणे पानशब्दाप्रयोगात्। . अत एवौष्ठमात्रे लेपे न पाननिष्पत्ति ॥ अतस्त-त्रोक्तमाङ्गल्पर्शायश्चित्तम्॥ प्राय वि p 93.

53 यथा कथा च परपरिग्रहमभिमन्यते स्तेनो ह भवतीति कौत्सहारीतौ तथा काण्व-पुष्करसादी॥ . सर्वत्राल्पमतिपूर्वमिति हारीत ॥ आप. ध सू I. 10 28 1 and 5

54 प्रच्छन्न वा प्रकाशं वा निशायामथवा दिवा। यत्परद्रव्यहरण स्तेय तत्परिकीर्तितम्॥ कात्या० 810, q by दायभाग p 224 and प्राय. वि p 112, समक्षं वा परोक्ष वा बलाच्चौर्येण वा पुन ॥ परस्वानामुपादानं स्तेयमित्युच्यते बुधै ॥ व्यास q by स्मृतिमु० (प्रा) p 883, स्तेनो विस्रस्वामिकपोऽङ्गमापपरिमितस्य हेम्नश्छलबलचौर्याऽन्यतरेरपहर्ता ॥ प्रा प्रकाश folio 70 b for steya Manu (XI. 99 'suvarnasteyakrt') and Yāj. III. 257 (brāhmanasvarnahārī) add the qualification that he should be a thief guilty of stealing gold (from a brāhmana, acc. to Yāj). Vas. 20. 41 and Cyavana (q by Pr V. p. 117) mention 'brāhmana-suvarna-harana' as a mahāpātaka and the Sāmavidhāna Br. (I. 6. 1) also employs the words 'brāhmanasvam hrtvā'. Vide Samvarta 122 and Viśvāmitra (q. by Pr. V. p. 108). A further qualification was added by Viśvarūpa (on Yāj III. 252 'anākhyāya &c), the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 257), the Madana-pārijāta (pp 827–28), Prāyaścittaprakarana (p. 72), the Prāyaścittaviveka (p 111) and other commentators that the gold stolen must be at least sixteen māsas in weight, otherwise there is no mahāpātaka[55]. So, if a man steals gold belonging to a brāhmana which is less than 16 māsas or steals gold of any weight (even more than 16 māsas) from a non-brāhmana (i. e. from a ksatriya or the like) he would be guilty only of a minor sin (upapātaka). The Mit relies on the verses of Yāj. I 362–363 for the technical meaning of suvarna (as 16 māsas) There was no guilt of theft acc. to Vārsyāyani if (Āp. Dh. S. I 10. 28.2) a person took only a small quantity of cereals ripening in pods (such as mudga, māṣa and gram) or took grass for his oxen while he was going (in a cart.[56]) According to Gautama 12.25 a man may take (without permission and without incurring the guilt of theft) for the sake of cows and for the sake of śrauta or smārta fires grass, fuel and flowers of trees and plants as if they were his own property and the fruits (of trees and plants) that are not fenced around. Manu VIII. 339 (=Matsya 227. 112–113) is almost like Gaut 12.25 and Manu VIII. 341 adds that a traveller of the three higher castes may, if his provisions have run short, take (without fear of punishment) from another's field two sugarcane stalks and two mūlakas (esculent roots).

Gurvaṅganāgamah (sexual intercourse with the wife of the guru). Manu (XI.54) employs this word, while Yāj. III. 227 and Vas. 20.13 speak of the offender as gurutalpaga (who violates the bed of the guru) and Vas. I. 20 mentions the sin as 'gurutalpam'

---

55. अत्र च सुवर्णशब्दः परिमाणविशिष्टहेमद्रव्यवचनो न जातिमात्रवचन. ॥ 'जालसूर्य .. कृष्णल. पञ्च ते मापस्ते सुवर्णस्तु षोडश ॥' (या. 1 362–363) इति षोडशमाषपरिमिते हेमनि सुवर्णशब्दस्य परिभाषितत्वात् । ...अतः षोडशमाषात्मकसुवर्णपरिमितहेमहरण एव महापातकित्वं तज्जिमित्तं मरणान्तिकादिप्रायश्चित्तविधान च ॥ द्विजादिमाषात्मकहेमहरणं तु क्षत्रियादिहेमहरण-वदुपपातकमेवेति युक्तम् ॥ मिता. on III. 257

56. सम्त्यपवादाः परपरिग्रहेष्विति वार्ष्यायणि. । शम्योपा युग्यघासो न स्वामिनः मतिषेधयन्ति । अतिव्यवहारो व्युप्तो भवति । आप. ध सू. I. 10. 28 2-4

(the bed i. e. wife of the guru) Guru primarily means acc to Manu II.142 and Yāj. I 34 (=Śankha III 2) the father. Acc to Gautama II.56 'the teacher (of the Veda) is the foremost amongst gurus while some say that the mother is so'. Samvarta[57] 160 and Parāśara X. 13 (employing the words 'pitrdārān samāruhya') convey that the primary meaning of guru here is 'father' as stated by the Mit. on Yāj III. 259. Acc to many digests such as the Mit and the Madanapārijāta p 835 gurvanganā means one's own mother Bhavadeva in his Pr. Prakarana (p. 80) takes gurvanganā[58] as a karmadhārayā compound, following what is called the nisādasthapati-nyāya (Jai. VI. 1 51) After quoting Devala's dictum[59] that there are eleven persons among males who are to be looked upon as gurus, and adverting to the way in which the word 'gurvanganā' is explained by the Pr Prakarana, the Prāyaścitta-viveka expresses its dissent from the views of the Pr. Prakarana and holds that 'gurvanganā' or 'gurupatnī' means not only one's mother but also one's step-mother of the same varna as the father The Madanapārijāta (p. 835) holds the same view as the Pr V The Pr. M. p. 73 finds fault with Bhavadeva (author of Prāyascitta-prakarana) and also with the Pr V. that held the view that sexual intercourse with one's Vedic teacher's wife was also a

---

57. पितृभार्यां समारुह्य मातृवर्जं नराधम । भगिनीं मातुरात्मा च स्वसारं चान्यमातृजाम्॥ एतास्तिस्रः स्त्रियो गत्वा तप्तकृच्छ्रं समाचरेत् । संवर्त 159-160; 'गुरुशब्दश्चात्र मुख्यया वृत्त्या पितरि वर्तते । ..अत पितृपत्नीगमनमेव महापातकम् । गमन च चरमधातुविसर्गपर्यन्त कथ्यते । अतस्ततोऽर्वाक् निवृत्तौ न महापातकित्वम् । मिता on या III 259

58. तेन गुर्वी (गुरु ?) चासौ अङ्गना चेति कर्मधारयसमासात् स्वमातृवचन एवार्थ गुर्वङ्गनाशब्द । न तु गुरोरङ्गन गुर्वङ्गना इति षष्ठीसमासात सपत्नीमातृवचनोऽपि । तेन निषाद-स्थपतिं याजयेत्-इतिवत् कर्मधारयसमासे स्वमातृवचन एवाय गुर्वङ्गनाशब्द· । प्राय प्रकरण p.80. शबर on जै VI. 1 51 says 'समानाधिकरणसमासस्तु बलीयान् । . तस्मात् निषाद एव स्थपति· स्यात् । (and not निषादानां स्थपति). Vide H. of Dh vol II p 46 for निषादस्थपतिन्याय.

59. तथा देवलः । आचार्यश्च पिता ज्येष्ठो भ्राता चैव महीपति. । मातुलः श्वशुरश्चाता मातामहपितामहौ ॥ वर्णज्येष्ठ पितृव्यश्च गुरवेते गुरवो मताः । भ्राता प्राणरक्षक· । वर्णज्येष्ठ. क्षत्रियादीनां ब्राह्मण । प्राय वि p 129, यद्यपि देवलवचनेनैव एकादश गुरवो दर्शिता-स्तथाप्यत्र पितैव गुरुर्गाह्यो नाचार्यादि । . मातृगमनस्यातिपातकत्वात् सपत्नीमातृगमनस्य गुर्वङ्गनागमनत्वेन महापातकत्वात् अर्थादल्पपातके लघुनि हीनवर्णाया पितृपत्न्या ग्रहणम् । प्राय वि pp 134-135 ... तस्माद् मातृव्यतिरिक्तैकादशगुर्वङ्गनागमनमेव महापातकमिति युज्यते देवलवचनादिति । अत्र भवदेवेनोक्त नात्र गुरोरङ्गना गुर्वङ्गनेति षष्ठीसमास तत्पुरुष-समासाश्रयणे निषादस्थपतिवत्षष्ठ्यर्थलक्षणापत्तेः । अतो गुरुश्चासावङ्गना चेति कर्मधारयः । गुरुत्वं च मातुरेव न मातु सपत्न्या । ... तद्दसमतं मातृगमन दुहितृगमन स्नुषागमनमि-त्यतिपातकानीति विष्णुहारीताभ्या मातृगमनस्यातिपातकत्वाभिधानात् । यद्यपि देवलवचनेनैव एकादशगुरवो दर्शितास्तथाप्यत्र पितैव गुरुर्गाह्यो नाचार्यादिस्तत्पत्नीगमनस्य गुरुतल्पगमनस्य स्वाद्युपपत्तेरतिपातकत्वगतेश्च । प्राय. वि. pp 129-134.

mahāpātaka. The Pr. M. relies on Yāj. (III. 233) where there is an express extension of the sin of gurutalpagamana to intercourse with one's teacher's wife, or one's daughter and other nearly related women. This would have been unnecessary if gurutalpa was primarily meant to include the teacher's wife; while the Pr. V. relies upon Gaut. II. 56 ('the ācārya is the most eminent among gurus, some say that the mother is so'), Visnu Dh. S. 31.1-2 'three persons are atigurus (exceed even guru in their greatness) viz. the mother, the father and the ācārya and Devala who mentions eleven persons as gurus. The Pr. M. does not seem to be quite correct since the Pr. V. ultimately (pp. 134-135) states its final view that guru here means only the father and not the ācārya and others and that Visnu Dh. S. 36. 4-8 holds that sexual intercourse with the wife of the teacher and several other women relatives is an anupātaka.

Mahāpātakasamsarga—Association with those who are guilty of the four mahāpātakas has already been described in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 614, 944. Gaut. 21.3, Vas. I. 21-22, Manu XI. 180 (=Śāntiparva 165. 37), Yāj. III. 261, Visnu Dh. S 35.3, Agnipurāna 170. 1-2 prescribe briefly that one who closely associates or dwells with any one of the four grave sinners for one year himself incurs mahāpātaka [60] and they add that this applies when a man occupies the same conveyance or same seat (as the sinner) or dines in the same row (with the sinner), but that if a person enters into spiritual relationship (such as that of teaching the Veda to the sinner or learning it from him or of officiating as a priest for him or allowing him to officiate as a priest for himself) or into a sexual or matrimonial alliance with him (i. e. a man who cohabits with a woman that is a grave sinner or if a woman cohabits with a male that is a great sinner or if a man marries the daughter of a patita or if a woman marries a bridegroom that is patita) that person becomes guilty of mahāpātaka at once. Bṛhaspati speaks [61]

60. तैश्चाङ्गं समाचरन्॥ गौ. 21.3; संवत्सरेण पतति पतितेन सहाचरन्। याजनाध्यापनाद्योनात्र तु यानासनाशनात्॥ मनु XI. 180, वसिष्ठ I 22, बौ. ध. सू. II. 1.88, विष्णु 35.3 (only the first half of Manu), अग्निपु. 170. 1-2.

61. एकशय्यासन पङ्क्तिर्भाण्डपक्वान्नमिश्रणम्॥ याजनाध्यापने योनिस्तथा च सहभोजनम्॥ नवधा सङ्करः प्रोक्तो न कर्तव्योऽधमैः सह॥ बृहस्पति q by अपरार्क p. 1086, बृह २ 587, प्राय. प्रकरण p 101, प्राय. वि p 143, the मिता० on III 261 ascribes it to वृद्धबृहस्पति The प्राय म p. 91 explains the divergence of views as to योनिः, 'योनिः पातकिने कन्यादानं तत्कन्यापरिणयनं वेति-विज्ञानेश्वरकल्पतरुकारादयः। पातकिस्त्रीगमननित्यपरार्कशूलपाणी। योगापरित्यागात्त्विदमेव युक्तम्।' The प्रा प्रकाश folio 74a also says the same.

of nine kinds of saṁsarga (contact or association) out of which the first five were treated as light sins, but the other four were serious viz. occupying the same bed or seat, taking food in the same row with the sinner, cooking food in the sinner's cooking pots or partaking of food prepared by him, being his sacrificial priest or employing him as one's sacrificial priest, being the sinner's teacher of the Veda or employing him as one's teacher of the Veda, sexual intercourse, taking food with him in the same pot. The Pr Prakāśa (folio 74a) holds that samsarga is of three kinds, the highest, middling and lowest. The first includes four viz. yonisambandha (marriage), srauva (i e that due to sacrificing for a sinner or making him a priest), maukha (about learning or teaching Veda) and eating of food from the same vessel (ekāmatrabhojana), the middling is of five kinds viz. using the same vehicle, seat, bed or coverlet, eating in the same row and learning the Veda together (sahādhyayana) The lowest is of various other kinds such as intimate talks, touching, cooking food in the same vessel, eating food at his house, receiving a gift from him &c Adhyāpana in order to be a great sin must relate to the Veda, and so also yājana must relate to such Vedic sacrifices as Darśapūrnamāsa, Cāturmāsya, Agnistoma Helping a mahāpātakin to perform the five daily yajñas or teaching him the aṅgas (metrics, grammar etc.) and the śāstras is only a minor sin. Parāśara[62] (XII. 79) states that sins are transferred (or spread) from man to man like a drop of oil on water by sitting or sleeping together or by using the same conveyance or by speaking with or dining in the same row. Devala and Chāgaleya q. by the Mit. on Yāj. III 261, the Pr. Prakarana (p. 101), the Pr. V. (p. 145), the Par M. (II. part 1. p 28) and others contain similar verses. Acc. to Pr. Prakāśa (folio 75a), in order to become patita one must simultaneously practise these four together, if practised separately, there is no pātitya but only doṣa. Parāśara (I. 25–26) states that in the Krta age a man became patita by speaking with a patita, in Tretā by touching him, in Dvāpara by partaking of food prepared in his house and in Kali by actually committing a sinful act and that in the Krta age a district was abandoned (if any one therein became patita), in Tretā the village, in Dvāpara the family (of the patita was abandoned) and in Kali only the actual perpetrator himself (is abandoned as patita). It is clear from this that such contacts with a patita as speaking with him,[63] touching him or eating food (in the house of a patita) were not regarded as involving a man in the same sin as that of the actual perpetrator. Speaking, touching and eating are also actions (karman) and Parāśara did not include them in the word 'karmanā' which refers only to the actual perpetration of a murder, surāpāna etc. Therefore when some writers include such contacts as eating or touching under 'karmanā' they put two meanings on the word karman in Parāśara viz. perpetration of a murder or the like and also doing some of the acts (touching, eating) which are forbidden to be done in reference to a perpetrator by some smṛtis. This is a procedure which is against the maxim of the Mīmāmsā that the same word conveys only[64] one sense in the same context The reasonable inference from the words of Parāśara is that merely touching a mahāpātakin or eating food in his house did not involve the toucher and eater in pātitya. In spite of this medieval writers gradually extended the scope of saṁsarga in a spirit of exclusiveness and of over-emphasis on ideas of ceremonial purity For example, the Smṛtyarthasāra[65] (p. 112) remarks that he who associates with the person that associates with a mahāpātakin has to undergo half the expiation that the first associator has to undergo. But that work does not go beyond this. The Mit. (on Yāj III. 261) appears to hold that the associator even though he does not become patita is liable to undergo expiation and that even the 4th and 5th associators in a series are liable to undergo expiation 63. संवत्सरेण पतति पतितेन सहाचरन्। एकयानभोजनासनशयनैः॥ यौनस्रौवमौखसम्बन्धात् सद्य एव॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 35. 3–5 यौन (derived from योनि) refers to marital connection, स्रौव (derived from स्रुव a sacrificial ladle) means 'employing as a sacrificial priest or becoming such a priest for another), मौख (from मुख) means 'teaching the Veda or learning it by word of mouth). So Viṣnu prescribes that pātitya results at once from the first kind of saṁsarga referred to above तत्र पञ्चमहायज्ञादिविषय याजनं लघु। अङ्गज्ञात्राध्ययनं लघु। दुहितृभगिनीव्यतिरिक्तो परिणयो लघु॥ पतितेन सहैकपात्रे अश्नन्यातिरिक्तसक्त्वादिभक्षणं लघु॥ प्रा. प्रकाश folio 75a.

62 आसनाच्छयनाद्यानात्सम्भाषात् सहभोजनात्। संक्रामन्ति हि पापानि तैलबिन्दु-रिवाम्भसि॥ पराशर XII 79, which is the same as a verse of कण्व q by परा. मा. II. 1 p 28.

---

64 सकृच्छ्रुत. शब्दस्तमेवार्थं गमयति।, which maxim is relied upon in 6 Cal. 119, 126, (FB), that is quoted with approval in L. R. 41 I A 290, pp 303–4, 54 All 698, 722 (FB) अन्यायश्चानेकार्थत्वम्॥ शाबर on जै VI. 1 22, मद. पा. p. 369.

65. महापातकिसंसर्गिसंसर्गे तु तत्संसर्गिव्रतस्यार्धं कुर्यात्॥ स्मृत्यर्थसार p. 112.

though it is lesser and lesser[65]. The Pr. Prakarana (p 109), Pr V. (pp 169–170) and the Pr T. (p 547) quote certain verses of Āpastamba and Vyāsa which very much widen the circle of samsarga. Āpastamba-smṛti[67] (III. 1–3) states. 'If a cāndāla stays in the house of any one of the four castes without being known, the latter on coming to know of the fact should undergo expiation, which is Cāndrāyana or Parāka for a member of the first three varnas and Prājāpatya for a śūdra. Those who partook of cooked food in that man's house should undergo Kṛcchra; one should prescribe one half of Kṛcchra for those who took cooked food in the house of the 2nd associator and for those who partook of cooked food in the house of these last one-fourth of Kṛcchra is prescribed'. So besides the original associator three more in succession were held to be liable for prāyaścitta. Mercifully they stopped at the 4th from the original associator A few writers took a more reasonable view. The Par M (II part 2, p 90) remarks[68] that Parāśara did not prescribe any expiation for samsarga (with those guilty of grave sins) with the idea that in the Kali age

---

66 अतः संसर्गिसंसर्गिणा द्विजातिकर्मण्यो हानिर्न भवति प्रायश्चित्तं तु भवत्येव ॥ . तच्च पादहीनम् ॥ ..एवं चतुर्थपञ्चमयोरपि कामत ससर्गिणोरर्धहीनं त्रिपादोन च द्रष्टव्यम् ॥ मिता on या III 261 प्रा प्रकाश (folio 110a) finds fault with this and holds on the strength of a verse of Vyāsa 'यो येन संसृज्यते स तदीयमेव प्रायश्चित्तं कुर्यात् तेन द्वितीयससर्गी नवाङ्गानि कुर्यात् तृतीयस्तु पादोनं सप्ताङ्गानि कुर्यात् । एव चतुर्थपञ्चमादय. पूर्वपादोन व्यासवाक्यविशेषात् ।'.

67. अन्त्यजातिरविज्ञातो निवसेद्यस्य वेश्मनि ॥ स वै ज्ञात्वा तु कालेन कुर्यात्तत्र विशोधनम् ॥ चान्द्रायणं पराको वा द्विजातीना विशोधनम् ॥ प्राजापत्यं तु शूद्राणा तथा ससर्गदूषणे ॥ यैस्तत्र भुक्तं पक्वान्नं कृच्छ्रं तेषा विनिर्दिशेत् ॥ तेषामपि च यैर्भुक्तं कृच्छ्रपादो विधीयते ॥ आपस्तम्ब quoted by प्राय. वि pp 170 and 492, प्राय तत्त्व p. 547 The verses occur with slight variations in the versified आपस्तम्बस्मृति (Anan. edition) III 1–3. The प्राय वि p 169 remarks 'व्यासादिवचने तृतीयसंसर्गिपर्यन्त प्रायश्चित्तदर्शनात् । तथा चाण्डालादिसङ्करे व्यास ॥ ये तदन्नाशिनो विप्राः कृच्छ्र तेषा विधीयते ॥ तन्नोजिनोऽर्धकृच्छ्रेण तदन्नादाश्च पादत· ॥'.

68. आचार्यस्तु कालेयुगे संसर्गदोषाभावमभिप्रेत्य ससर्गप्रायश्चित्तं नाभ्यधात् । अत एव स्मृत्यन्तरे कलौ वर्ज्यानामलङ्क्रमणे-संसर्गदोष पापेषु-इत्युक्तम् । परा. मा II part 2 p 90 For a severe onslaught against Mādhava, vide धर्मद्वैतनिर्णय (p 132) The प्रा प्रकाश (folio 77a) explains away Mādhava's emphatic remarks as follows; 'कृते सम्भाषणमात्रात्पतति कलौ तु कृत्स्नेन निषिद्धकर्मणा याजनादिभिरित्यर्थ । अन्यथा पूर्ववाक्ये कर्तार तु कलौ न्यसोदित्यनेन साक्षात् कर्त्रादे. ससर्गो निषिद्ध. । द्वितीयवाक्ये तु कलौ पतति कर्मणेत्यनेन साक्षात्कर्तुरेव दोषोऽन संसर्गकर्तुरिति परस्परविरोध स्यात् । एवं च माधवस्य कलौ ससर्गदोषाभावोक्तेरत्रैव तात्पर्यम् । तथा च कलिनिषिद्धेषु ससर्गदोष इत्युक्तिः पातकिना सह पूर्वोक्तयाजनाद्यनेकविधससर्गाभावेपि यो देशादिमात्रससर्ग कृतयुगादौ दोषजनकत्वेनोक्तः पाराशरपूर्वश्लोके यश्चोत्तरश्लोके कृतयुगादौ सम्भाषणमात्राद्दोष उक्तस्तद्विषया ।'.

there is no blemish of saṁsarga and that it is on account of this that in the enumeration of things to be avoided or not allowed in the Kali age (Kali-varjya) another smṛti includes 'pollution through contact with a sinner' (as a Kalivarjya). The Smṛtimuktāphala (Prāyaścitta pp. 897–98) echoes the very words of Mādhava and quotes further authorities on the point[69]. The Nirṇayasindhu[70] holds that though there is blame in association with a patita the associator does not himself become patita. As Yāj III. 261 employs the word 'vatsaram' and as the accusative of time is, acc. to Pāṇini, to be used only when there is 'atyantasaṁyoga' of time and space (distance) it follows that the associator who is to undergo penance for contact must have been day and night in contact for a year. Devala employs the word 'sārvakālikam' in this connection.

Though many crimes do not in so many words come within the words of the definitions of the mahāpātakas the smṛtis extend by analogy the same condemnation as the mahāpātakas in three ways. For example, Yāj. III. 251 expressly states that one who kills a kṣatriya or vaiśya engaged in (soma) sacrifice or a foetus or an ātreyī woman has to undergo the same expiation as for brāhmaṇa murder (therefore this is vācaṁkātideśa). Yāj. III. 232–233 extends the sin of guru-talpa-gamana to intercourse with several near female relatives (such as mother's or father's sister). This is extension by tādrūpya. The smṛtis declare many actions as equal to (sama) mahāpātakas in general or as equal to one of the mahāpātakas. This is atideśa by sāmya. A few words must be said on this topic. The general rule is that the expiation for those lapses that are declared to be equal to a mahāpātaka is less than (i. e. half of) what would be prescribed for the mahāpātaka itself[71]. And the penance for those that come under atideśa of the vācanika or tādrūpya kind is three fourths of that for the mahāpātaka itself. But it has to be noted that there is divergence of views about these in the sūtras and the smṛtis Acc. to Gaut 21. 10 giving[72] false evidence, backbiting about another's guilt that will reach the king, falsely accusing one's guru with a grave sin or crime are equal to mahāpātaka. In Manu XI 55 (=Agnipurāna 168. 25) the last two of these three and false statement about one's caste or learning or family (i e. saying that one is a brāhmana when one is not) for securing prosperity or eminence are stated to be equal to brāhmana's murder. Acc to Yāj. III 228 falsely charging one's guru is equal to brahmahatyā and false statement about one's caste or learning is equal to drinking surā (Yāj. III 229), while acc. to Visnu Dh. S 37. 1–3 the three sins mentioned in Manu XI. 55 are to be included among minor sins (upapātakas), while giving false evidence is declared by Visnu to be equal to drinking surā (36. 2). No useful purpose would be served by dilating at great length on the divergences of smṛtis on what lapses are equal to one of the Mahāpātakas. The digests explain that where the same lapse is described as equal to surāpāna by one smṛti and as equal to brāhmana-murder by another the idea is that there is an option as to the penance prescribed for that lapse. Therefore only the remarks of Manu and Yāj. will be set out here. Manu XI. 56 (=Agnipurāna 168. 26) prescribes that forgetting the Veda (already studied), reviling the Vedas, giving false evidence, killing a friend, eating forbidden food or food that should not be eaten, these six are equal to surāpāna. Vide Yāj III 228 already referred to above. Manu XI. 57 holds that stealing a deposit or a man or horse or silver or land or diamonds and other gems is equal to the theft of brāhmana's gold. Yāj. III. 230, Visnu Dh S. 5 383, Agnipurāna 168. 27 are to the same effect. Acc to Manu XI. 58 (=Agnipurāna 168 28) carnal intercourse with a sister by the same mother, with maidens, with females of the lowest castes (like Cāndālas), with the wife of a friend or son is declared to be equal to the violation of a guru's bed. Yāj. III. 231 is practically the same (but he adds intercourse with a sagotra woman to the list). Gaut. 23. 12 and Manu XI. 170 are very similar. Yāj. III. 232–233 declare that a man who has sexual intercourse with a sister of his father or mother, with his maternal uncle's wife, with his daughter-in-law, with a co-wife of his mother, with his sister, with the daughter or wife of his Vedic teacher or his own daughter, is guilty of being a violator of the guru's bed and should have his penis cut off and be killed (by the king) and the woman concerned, if she was a willing party, should also be killed. Nārada (strīpumsayoga, verses 73–75)[73] states: "If a man has sexual intercourse with any of these women viz. mother, mother's sister, mother-in-law, maternal uncle's wife, father's sister, a wife of the paternal uncle or of a friend or of a pupil, a sister, sister's friend, daughter-in-law, daughter, the wife of one's Vedic teacher, a woman of the same gotra, one who has come for protection, a queen, an ascetic woman, one's wet-nurse, a woman performing a vrata and a brāhmana woman, he becomes guilty of the sin of the violator of the guru's bed (i. e. incest). For that crime no other punishment is laid down except that of the cutting of the penis." These two, Yāj. and Nārada, show that excision of the organ and death are both the expiation and the punishment for this crime. The Mit. (on Yāj III. 233) adds that this punishment applies only to the offenders other than a brāhmana, since Manu (VIII. 380) prescribes that a brāhmana offender should not be punished with death whatever sin or crime he may have committed and that he is to be banished from the country unhurt and is to retain all his wealth. The Visnudharma-sūtra (36.4–7) adds a few more women to the list of Yāj and Nārada (such as a woman in her monthly illness, the wife of a learned brāhmana or of one's sacrificial priest or of one's Upādhyāya).

---

69. अत एव कलियुगधर्माभिधाने प्रवृत्तः पराशरः ब्रह्महत्यादिमहापातकचतुष्टयस्य प्रायश्चित्तमुक्त्वान् कलियुगे संसर्गदोषाभावमभिप्रेत्य संसर्गप्रायश्चित्तं नाभ्यधात्। कर्मण एव पातित्यहेतुत्वम्। तथा कर्मणा पातित्यं कण्ठरवेणाह पराशरः (1 25) 'कृते संभाषणादेव ... कलौ पतति कर्मणा॥'. इति। .. स्मृतिकामधेनौ। संसर्गदोषो नैव स्यान्महापातकादिभिः कलौ। संसर्गदोष स्तेनाद्यैर्न महापापनिष्कृतिः। तथा स्मृत्यन्तरे। संसर्गदोषः...पापेष्विति पठितम्॥ कलौ संसर्गस्य पापमात्रहेतुत्वम्। संसर्गदोषस्य पातित्यापादकत्वाभावेपि पापमात्रापादकत्व-मस्तीत्याह पराशरः। स्मृतिषु (मा) pp 897–898.

70 कलौ कर्तैव लिप्यते इति व्यासोक्तेः पतितसंसर्गे दोषसत्त्वेपि पातित्यं नेत्यर्थः। निर्णयसिन्धु III. p 368, तत्रापि (याज्ञवल्क्यीये) वत्सरमिति द्वितीया श्रूयते सा च कालाध्वनो-रत्यन्तसयोग इत्यत्यन्तसयोगे स्मृता। अत्यन्तसंयोगश्च यावदहोरात्रसम्बन्धः। .. संवत्सरेण पतति पतितेन सहाचरन्। भोजनासनशय्यादि कुर्वाण. सार्वकालिकमिति देवलवाक्ये सार्व-कालिकशब्देन द्वितीयार्थ एवोक्त। मा, प्रकाश (folio 76 b).

71. अत्र साम्यातिदेशेऽर्धं तादृप्यवाचनिकयोस्तु पादोनम्॥ प्राय म p. 8, vide प्राय प्रकरण pp. 85–87. एतेनातिदेशे पूर्णमायश्चित्तं वदन्तौ शूलपाणिभवदेवावपास्तौ। प्राय म p 9. अत्र समत्वाभिधानात् शिष्टाचारबलेन पादोन कल्प्यम्॥ ऋषिसमो ब्राह्मणो राजसमो मन्त्रीत्यादिषु समशब्दस्य किंचिन्न्यूने प्रयोगदर्शनात्॥ मद. पा p. 808, vide मिता. on या. III, 231 for similar words

72 कौटसाक्ष्यं राजगामि पैशुन्यं गुरोरनृतामिशंसनं महापातकसमानि॥ गौ. 21.10

These lapses described above from false accusation against the guru[74] (Yāj. III. 228 or Manu XI 55 to Yāj. III 233 or Manu

73. सखीसयोनिसगोत्राशिष्यभार्यासु स्नुषायां गवि च गुरुतल्पसमः॥ गौ 23 12; माता मातृष्वसा श्वश्रूर्मातुलानी पितृष्वसा। पितृव्यसखिशिष्यस्त्री भगिनी तत्सखी स्नुषा॥ दुहितार्चार्य-भार्या च सगोत्रा शरणागता॥ राज्ञी प्रव्रजिता धात्री साध्वी वर्णोत्तमा च या॥ आसामन्यतमां गत्वा गुरुतल्पग उच्यते॥ शिश्नस्योत्कर्तनं तस्य नान्यो दण्डो विधीयते॥ नारद (स्त्रीपुंसयोग 73–75), compare आप. ध. सू. I 9 25 (गुरुतल्पगामी सवृषणं शिश्नं परिवास्याञ्जलावाधाय दक्षिणां दिशमनावृत्तिं व्रजेत्) and गौ. 23.10

74. एतानि गुर्वधिक्षेपाद्वेतनयागमनपर्यन्तानि महापातकातिदेशविषयाणि सद्यःपतन-हेतूत्पातकान्युच्यन्ते॥ मिता.-on या. III. 233.

XI 58) and said to be equal to some mahāpātaka or other are designated as pātakas by Vrddha-Hārīta (IX. 216–17) and by the Mit. (on Yāj. III 233) and as anupātakas by the Visnudharmasūtra (36.8). Gautama[75] (21.1–2) adds a few more to the list of pātakas or *patita*s viz. he who has connection with the female relatives of his mother or father or with sisters and their offspring, a thief of gold, an atheist, one who constantly repeats censured acts, one who does not cast away a patita or who abandons blameless relatives or those who instigate others to commit pātakas. These pātakas are less than mahāpātakas in their culpability and greater than upapātakas.

*Upapātaka*s (minor sins). The number of these has greatly varied from time to time and from smrti to smrti. Vas I 23 speaks[76] of only five upapātakas viz. forsaking the sacred fires (after beginning Agnihotra), offending the guru, being an atheist, taking one's livelihood from an atheist, selling the soma plant. Śātātapa as quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 229–236 mentions only eight. Baud. Dh. S. (II 1 60–61) mentions a small number as upapātakas. Gaut. 21.11 states[77] that the guilt of upapātaka attaches to those who have been declared to defile the company at a Śrāddha dinner and have been named above before the bald man (in Gaut. XV. 18), killers of kine, those who forget the Veda, those who pronounce Vedic texts for these last, Vedic students who break the vow of chastity and those who allow the time for upanayana to pass without performing it. Śankha quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj III 229–236 mentions only 18 upapātakas and styles them upapatanīyas The longest lists are contained in Manu XI 59-66, Yāj III 234-242, Vrddha-Hārita IX. 208-210, Visnudharmasūtra 37 and Agnipurāna (168 29–37). According to the Pr. V. (p 195)[78] the upapātakas mentioned by Manu

---

75. ब्रह्मदेवसुरापगुरुतल्पगमातृपितृयोनिसम्बन्धागस्तेननास्तिकनिन्दितकर्मार्म्यासेपतिता-त्याज्यपतितत्यागिनः पतिता.॥ पातकसयोजकाश्च॥ गौतम 21 1-2 गौतम 20.1 mentions the persons whom one should abandon 'त्यजेत्पितरं राजघातकं शूद्रयाजकं शूद्रार्थयाजकं वेदविक्रायकं भ्रूणहन यश्चान्त्यावसायिभिः सह सवसेदन्त्यावसायिन्यां वा।'

76 चोऽन्नीनपविध्येद् गुरु च य प्रतिदध्युरान् नास्तिको नास्तिकवृत्तिः सोम च विक्री-णीयादित्युपपातकानि॥ वसिष्ठ I 23.

77. अपंक्त्याना प्राग्दुर्बालाद्रोहेऽन्तर्ब्रह्मञ्जतन्मन्त्रकुदवकीर्णिपतितसावित्रीकोपपातकम्। गौ. 21.11. The word दुर्बाल occurs in गौ 15 18.

78. एवं च गोवधादिनास्तिक्यान्तानि ऊनपञ्चाशदुपपातकानि। प्राय. वि. p. 195.

come to 49. Those enumerated by Yāj. are set out below[79] (they are 51 according to Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 229–236, who omits one verse commented on by the Mit. viz 'śūdrapreṣyam' &c. which contains five): slaying kine, being a vrātya (i. e. one whose upanayana was not performed at the prescribed age), theft (other than that of brāhmana's gold or other than what is described as equal to theft of the mahāpātaka type), non-payment of debts borrowed (and not satisfying the three debts due to gods, sages and pitṛs), not establishing the śrauta fires (even though one has the capacity to do so); selling what ought not to be sold (such as salt); parivedana (a younger brother's marrying before an elder brother or establishing sacred fires before him); learning (the Veda) from a paid teacher; teaching the Veda for payment; adultery (with women other than those referred to in guru-talpagamana or those lapses equal to it); an elder brother's remaining unmarried when a younger brother has married; usury (i. e taking more interest than is allowed by the smṛtis); manufacture of salt; killing a woman (of any caste, except an ātreyī); killing a śūdra; killing a ksatriya or vaiśya (who is not initiated for a śrauta sacrifice); maintaining oneself on wealth which is condemned; atheism (denial of the soul and a world after death); giving up the observances peculiar to one's status (e. g. a vedic student having sexual intercourse or one guilty of brāhmana murder or the like giving up the performance of the expiation already begun); sale of one's children; theft [80] of corn, inferior metals (like lead and copper) or cattle; officiating as a priest at a sacrifice for those who are not entitled to sacrifice (such as śūdras or vrātyas &c); driving out of the house one's father, mother or son (without a proper cause such as that

79. गोवधो व्रात्यता स्तेयमृणानां चानपाक्रिया। अनाहिताग्निता पण्यविक्रयः पारिवेदनम्। भृतादध्ययनादानं भृतकाध्यापनं तथा॥ पारदार्यं पारिविद्यं वार्धुष्यं लवणक्रिया॥ स्त्रीशूद्रविक्षत्रवधो निन्दितार्थोपजीवनम्॥ नास्तिक्यं व्रतलोपश्च सुतानां चैव विक्रयः॥ धान्यकुप्यपशुस्तेयमयाज्यानां च याजनम्॥ पितृमातृसुतत्यागस्तदागारामविक्रयः॥ कन्यासन्दूषणं चैव परिविन्दकयाजनम्॥ कन्याप्रदानं तस्यैव कौटिल्यं व्रतलोपनम्॥ आत्मनोऽर्थे क्रियारम्भो मद्यस्त्रीनिषेवणम्॥ स्वाध्यायाग्निसुतत्यागो बान्धवत्याग एव च॥ इन्धनार्थं द्रुमच्छेदः स्त्रीहिंसौषधिजीवनम्। हिंस्रयन्त्रविधानं च व्यसनान्यात्मविक्रयः॥ क्षुद्रप्रेष्यं हीनसख्यं हीनयोनिनिषेवणम्। तथैवानाश्रमे वास. पराक्षपरिपुष्टता॥ असच्छास्त्राधिगमनमाकरेष्वधिकारिता॥ भार्याया विक्रयश्चैपानैकाशुपपातकम्॥ या III. 234–242.

80 'Steya' has already been mentioned as the third upapātaka The mention of the theft of corn &c here either serves the purpose of showing that the theft of corn &c will always be expiated as an upapātaka while other kinds of thefts may be dealt with more leniently. The same remark applies to पितृमातृसुतत्याग and बान्धवत्याग separately mentioned below.

mentioned by Gautama 20.1); the sale of a tank or of a park intended for a charitable object (though not actually dedicated to the public), ascribing demerits to an unmarried girl (or interfering with her private parts by means of a finger or the like); officiating as a priest (at the marriage) of one who though a younger brother marries before an elder brother, giving one's daughter in marriage to one who marries before his elder brother; cheating or following crooked ways (except against one's guru, which is equal to surāpāna), giving up an observance voluntarily undertaken[81], cooking for the sake of oneself only (and not for deities, guests &c, which attitude is condemned by Rg X 117 6 and Manu III 118), sexual intercourse with a woman (even one's own wife) who is given to drinking wine, giving up the Veda already learnt so as to forget it by the study of other subjects); not tending one's śrauta or smārta fire, abandoning one's son[82], not maintaining one's relatives (such as the maternal or paternal uncle, when one has the means), cutting down a big tree for fuel (to be used only in cooking one's food[83]), maintaining one's self on one's wife (i e on her immoral earnings or by means of her strīdhana) or by killing animals or by herbs (used as charms), setting up of machines that cause death or injury to beings (such as for pressing oil from sesame or for crushing sugarcane stalks); addiction to the vices (declared to be eighteen by Manu VII. 45–48); selling one's self (as a slave for money), being the servant of a śūdra, friendship with low persons, intercourse with a woman of a lower caste (either as a wife or as a concubine); living outside of the four āśramas[84], fattening oneself on food charitably supplied by others, studying the works of false sāstras (such as those of atheists like Cārvāka); holding the office of the superintendent of mines (of gold and the like); sale of one's wife

---

81. Vratalopa has already been mentioned above in verse 236 as an upapātaka Therefore the repetition of 'vratalopana' (in verse 238) must be differently explained as done by the मिताक्षरा.

82 In या III 237 we have पितृमातृसुतत्याग. and then in 239 again स्वाध्यायाग्निसुतत्याग· Therefore अपरार्क p 1051 explains: 'सुतस्यारक्षणमत्र त्याग स्वाध्यायाग्नित्यागसाहचर्यात्। पितृमातृसुतत्याग इत्यत्र तु जातकर्मादिसंस्काराकरण सुतस्य त्याग।'

83 पाकादिप्रयोजनाग्निसमिन्धनार्थमशुष्कवृक्षभञ्जन द्रुमच्छेदः। अपरार्क p 1051

84 अनाश्रमी न तिष्ठेच्च क्षणमेकमपि द्विज.। आश्रमेण विना तिष्ठन् प्रायश्चित्तीयते हि स॰॥ दक्ष I 10, one must belong to one of the four आश्रम, ब्रह्मचर्य, गार्हस्थ्य, वानप्रस्थ and संन्यास and act as would befit that āśrama.

The above list, though long, is not thoroughly exhaustive Vas I 18 quoted above mentions several persons as enasvinah (who acc. to Viśvarūpa on Yāj III. 229–236 are upapātakinah), some of whom (such as one who is asleep when the sun rises or sets) are not included by Yāj. in his list of upapātakas. Though almost all of the upapātakas listed by Yāj occur in Manu (XI 59–66), yet some of them such as 'abhicāra' (performing a sacrifice like Śyenayāga for the destruction of an enemy), 'mūlakarma' (employment of herbs for bringing under one's control a person) are not noted by Yāj The Mit on Yāj. III. 242 observes that some upapātakas if repeatedly indulged in make a man patita (as provided by Gaut 21. 1) Viśvarūpa, therefore, derives upapātaka as one 'that may become a pātaka by constant addition (upacaya) or by constant practice' (upetya[85]).

Manu XI. 67 (=Agnipurāna 168[86]. 37–38) and Visnu Dh. S. 38 1–6 mention certain lapses as 'jātibhramśakara' (that cause the loss of caste) viz giving pain to a brāhmana (by means of a stick or by the hand), smelling things which ought not to be smelt at (such as garlic, ordure &c.) and smelling spirituous liquor, cheating (saying one thing and doing another), an unnatural offence with a man (or beast also, acc to Visnu) According to Manu XI 68 (=Agnipurāna 168 38–39), killing a donkey, a horse, a camel, a deer, an elephant, a goat, sheep, fish, a snake or a buffalo must be known to be sankarīkarana (reducing one to a mixed caste). Visnu 29. 1 says that sankarikarana is the killing of village or forest animals. Manu XI. 69 holds that accepting presents from condemned men (such as those mentioned in Manu IV. 84), trading, serving śūdras and speaking a falsehood make a man unworthy to receive gifts (apatrīkarana). The Visnu. Dh. S. 40. 1 adds 'maintaining one's self by usury' to these. Manu XI. 70 prescribes that killing insects, small or large, or birds, eating any thing kept close to spirituous liquors, stealing fruits, fuel and flowers and unsteadiness of mind are malāvaha (which make a man impure). Visnu Dh. S. 41. 1–4 are similar. Visnu Dh. S. 42. 1 says all other lapses not specifically mentioned in 85. उपपातकसंज्ञाप्येवमर्थेव। उपचयेन उपेत्य वा सेव्यमानं पातकमेव स्यादिति। अत्रैव गौतमेन पातकमध्ये निन्दितकर्माभ्यासो दर्शितः। विश्वरूप on या. III 229–236. The reference is to गौतम 21.1, quoted above in note 75.

---

86. The printed अग्निपुराण reads भेदयं for जैह्मं in मनु XI.67 and अग्नि० 168,39 reads नकुल for महिष.

the several kinds are styled miscellaneous (prakīrnaka) Vrddha-Hārīta (IX. 210-215) specifies several lapses as prakīrnaka viz. cutting big trees for fuel (used for cooking one's food), killing insects, big and small, eating of food that has become uneatable owing to bhāva [87] (i e its resemblance in colour or flavour to some forbidden food or because it is offered with disrespect) or kāla (food on ekādasī or in an eclipse, or in a mourner's house &c or that is stale) or kriyā (action, such as food served with the bare hand or seen by a patita, cāndāla or a dog &c); theft of clay, skin, grass, wood, over-eating, falsehood, restlessness about pleasures, sleep by day, spreading false rumours; making others hear false rumours, eating at another's house, sexual intercourse by day, seeing women in their monthly illness or just after delivery, looking at others' wives; sexual intercourse on a fast, on a śrāddha day, on a parvan day; service of a śūdra; friendship with the low, touching the leavings of food; broad laughs with women, talking at random (or love prattle), looking at women that have untied their hair It will be noticed that some of these like the cutting of big trees for fuel, service of a sūdra, friendship with low persons have been already included by Yāj under upapātakas

Having dealt at length with several classes or grades of sins, we have now to address ourselves to the question of the consequences of sins and the means recommended or adopted for removing sin and its consequences.

It has already been shown above how the sages of the Rgveda prayed to the gods, particularly to Aditi, Mitra, Varuna, the Ādityas and Agni to free them from āgas or enas etc. They often say that they violated the dharmas or the vratas (ordinances) of the gods and implore forgiveness They were afraid of the consequences of their guilt, viz. the god's anger. They thought that when God was angered by their transgressions he smote them with adversity, destruction, disease and death. For example, they pray 'whatever ordinance (vrata) of yours we may violate every day like subjects (in the case of a king's ordinances) do not subject us to your death-dealing blow' (Rg I. 25 2), 'O Varuna! whatever transgression we men have committed towards the divine host and whatever rules of yours we may have confounded through heedlessness, do not, on account of that sin (enas),' strike us down' (Rg. VII. 89,5)[88]. In Rg X. 89.8-9 it is said that Indra hurls his sharp and deadly weapon at those who break the settled order (dharman) of Mitra, Varuna and Aryaman. The gods are implored to save the worshipper from the deadly attacks of the wolf and from sinking into a pit (in adversity) in Rg. II. 29.6. In Rg. IX. 73.8 it is said that the wise God has his eye on all worlds and he pierces in pits those who do not observe his ordinances and who are therefore not liked by him[89]. On the other hand, when God is pleased with the worshipper, he is implored to lead the latter by the path of virtue (Rg. I. 189.1), to confer happiness on the worshipper's offspring (Rg I. 189 2,IV. 12.5) and to bestow wealth on him (Rg VIII. 45 40).

87. For भावदुष्ट, कालदुष्ट and क्रियादुष्ट food mentioned in बृहद्हारीत IX 211 vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 771-772.

In the Rgveda the first means of removing the consequences of sin appear to be prayers for mercy and for the remission of sin as in Rg. VII. 86. 4-5, VII. 88. 6-7, VII. 89. 1-4 (where 'mṛḷā suksatra mrlaya' is the refrain of all four verses). Even in the Rgveda water was supposed to remove sin, e g. I. 23. 22 says 'O water! carry away whatever sin (durita) may exist in me'. This shows that sin was supposed to have physical effects like a disease, which were removed by water. Sacrifices were offered to the gods in order to win their favour and in order that the sacrificer may be freed[90] from the consequences of even grave sins. The Tai S. V. 3. 12 1-2 and the Śat. Br. XIII. 3. 1. 1 (S. B. E. vol. 44 p. 328) state that the gods redeemed themselves from all sin by means of this (Aśvamedha sacrifice), they even redeemed themselves from the sin of brāhmana murder. That a confession of sin was deemed to remove sin is illustrated in a striking way by what happened in the Varunapraghāsa (one of the cāturmāsya sacrifices). In that[91] sacrifice the wife of the sacrificer had to confess whether she had any lovers and if she felt ashamed to 90 सर्वं वा एतेन पाप्मानमतरत्कापि वा एतेन ब्रह्महत्यामतरन्सर्वं पाप्मानं तरति तरति ब्रह्महत्या योऽश्वमेधेन यजते । तै सं. V. 3 12.1-2.

---

88 यत्किंचेद दैव्ये जनेऽभिद्रोहं मनुष्याश्चरामसि ॥ अचित्ती यत्तव धर्मा युयोपिम मा नस्तस्मादेनसो देव रीरिषः ॥ ऋ. VII 89,5

89. विद्वान्स्त विश्वा भुवनाभिपश्यत्यावृताम् विध्यति कर्ते अव्रतान् । ऋ. IX. 73.8.

91 यज्जारं सन्तं न प्रब्रूयात्स्त्रियं ज्ञाति वन्ध्यात् । असौ मे जार इति निर्दिशेत् । निर्दिष्टैवैनं वरुणपाशेन ग्राहयति । तै ब्रा. I.6.5. Vide Kātyāyana śr. V,5. 6-10 'संमार्जनाय प्रेषितऽसंसृष्टे प्रतिमस्थाता पत्नीमानेष्यन्नाह केन चरसीति । संस्तुताना चष्टे । तृणानि वोदूहतीति यथासंस्तुतम् । अनाख्यातमहितं ज्ञातिभ्य इति श्रुतेः । आख्याते प्रवासिन इत्येना वाचयति नयन् । ', 'प्रवासिनो हवामहे' is वाज. सं III. 44 reply in so many words she had only to raise up in her hand small pieces of grass blades to indicate the number of lovers, if any. If she confessed she had to recite the verse, Vāj. S III 44 and was allowed to take further part in the sacrifice If she concealed the truth, it was stated in the Tai. Br that evil would befall her near and dear relatives (her son or husband). It is said by many European scholars who have written on the religion of the Veda that sacrifice became a sort of magic rite to wrest from gods or independently of them what the worshipper desired (e g. see Keith's Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads pp. 260–268) [92] But this is an over-statement When initiated for a sacrifice the sacrificer and his wife had to observe a fast or live on a low diet, both were called upon to observe many strict rules such as telling the truth, they had to make large preparations and spend wealth on the materials and the fees to the priests. These things were deemed to cleanse the mind and soul of the taint of sin. There is no reason to suppose that it was only the ritual that was thought to bring about the desired result (and not all the other matters referred to above).

We shall now discuss the prescriptions of the sūtras and smṛtis about the consequences of sins.

In this connection the doctrines of Karma and Punarjanma must be well remembered The details of the origin and development of those doctrines will be discussed in a later section. Here it is enough to state the few main propositions of the doctrine of Karma The fundamental proposition is that cause and effect are as inseparably linked in the moral sphere as assumed in the physical sphere by science. A good action has its reward and a bad act leads to retribution. If the bad actions do not yield their consequences at once or in this life, the soul begins another existence and in the new environment undergoes suffering for its past bad deeds The theory of karma and the theory of transmigration of souls (of pre-existence and post-existence) are inextricably mixed up in Indian thought from at least the ancient times of the Upanisads. The general rule is that Karma, whether good or evil, cannot be got rid of, except by enjoying or undergoing its consequences. This is said by Gaut. 19. 5, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāna and many other works. 'Because the deed does not perish' Gaut.[93]; 'whatever human action it may be, whether good or evil, it cannot be got rid of except by enjoying its consequences; know from me that a man gets rid of good and evil deeds by enjoying (their consequences)'. This doctrine is based on the Śat. Br. V. 2 2.27, Br. Up IV. 4 and VI. 2, Chān. Up. III. 14, and V. 3–10, Kaṭha 5. 6–7 and other Upanisad texts.

92. Christ gave a model prayer to his disciples in Luke 11 2–4 and Matthew 6. 9–13, where after invoking the heavenly Father the first thing asked for is the daily bread, then the forgiveness of sin and deliverance from evil Pious Christians have an easy and complacent self-assurance of getting the things prayed for, since Christ himself has said that they have only to ask and it shall be given to them (Luke 11 9) This also is a sort of magic but it is simple as compared with elaborate Indian sacrifices It seems rather perverse for a Christian who believes in Luke 11 9 to say that if an Indian believes that a sacrifice will yield some reward it is all magic and nothing more.

Therefore they say, 'a man is born again in that world for which he has worked.' 'According as a man acts and according as he believes so will he be; a man of meritorious acts will be meritorious, a man of evil deeds sinful He becomes pure by pure deeds and evil by evil deeds. And here they say that a person consists of desires And as is his desire, so is his will; and as is his will, so is his deed; and whatever deeds he does that he will reap' (Br. Up. IV. 4. 5); 'a man is made up of will; whatever he wills in this world the same he becomes after departing from this world' (Chān. Up. III. 14. 1); 'some human beings enter the womb in order to have an embodied existence; others go into inorganic matter (the stump of a tree and the like) according to their deeds and according to their knowledge' (Katha Up. 5. 7).[94]

'Actions done by a man do not perish unless they (i e. their consequences) are enjoyed even after crores of years, (the fruits of) actions whether good or evil must of necessity be enjoyed[95].'

---

93. न हि कर्म क्षीयते। गौ ध सू 19 5 q. by शङ्कराचार्य in his भाष्य on वेदान्त-सूत्र IV 1 13, न तु भोगादृते पुण्यं पापं वा कर्म मानवम्। परित्यजति भोगाच्च पुण्यापुण्ये निबोध मे॥ मार्कण्डेयपुराण 14 17, तस्माल्कृतस्य पापस्य प्रायश्चित्तं समाचरेत्॥ नाभुक्तस्या-न्यथा नाशः कल्पकोटिशतैरपि॥ भविष्यपुराण I 19.27

94. यथाकारी यथाचारी तथा भवति साधुकारी साधुर्भवति पापकारी पापो भवति पुण्यः पुण्येन कर्मणा भवति पापः पापेन। अथो खल्वाहुः काममय एवायं पुरुष इति स यथाकामो भवति तत्क्रतुर्भवति यत्क्रतुर्भवति तत्कर्म कुरुते यत्कर्म तदभिसंपद्यते॥ बृह उ. IV, 4 5, अथ खलु क्रतुमयः पुरुषो यथाक्रतुरस्मिँल्लोके पुरुषो भवति तथेत. मेत्य भवति॥ छा III 14 1, योनिमन्ये प्रपद्यन्ते शरीरत्वाय देहिनः। स्थाणुमन्येऽनुसंयन्ति यथाकर्म यथाश्रुतम्॥ क उप. 5 7.

95 नाभुक्तं क्षीयते कर्म कल्पकोटिशतैरपि॥ अवश्यमेव भोक्तव्यं कृतं कर्म शुभाशुभम्॥ स्मृति quoted by गोविन्दानन्द on प्राय वि p. 17 and by सायण in his भाष्य on तै. आ 8 2 In परा. मा II part 1 p 11 the verse is read as अवश्यमनुभोक्तव्यम्.

Vide also Āp. Dh. S. II. 1. 2. 2–7 and Visnu Dh. S. XX. 47 'just as a calf finds out its own mother from among thousands of cows, so actions done in a former life unerringly reach the perpetrator thereof.'

But this general principle was modified in various ways by the smrtis and later writings. Gautama 19.11[96] (=Vasistha 22.8) states: 'Reciting the Veda inaudibly (japa), austerities, a sacrifice, fasting and giving gifts are the means of expiating that (i. e. a blamable act)' Vas. 20. 47 and 25. 3 lay down 'A sinner is freed from sin by tormenting his body, by austerities, by reciting the Veda and also by making gifts' and 'those who are constantly engaged in prānāyāmas (suppression and regulation of breath), reciting purificatory texts, giving gifts, offering sacrifices, muttering sacred texts will undoubtedly be freed from sins'. Manu III. 227 observes. 'by confession, by repentance, by austerity, by reciting Vedic texts (sacred Gāyatrī or other texts), a sinner is freed from guilt and in case of difficulty (i. e. if he is unable to perform austerities or to recite Vedic texts) by liberality'. Similar provisions occur in Parāśara X. 40, Śātātapa I. 4, Samvarta 203, Hārita (q. in Pr. T. p 467), Yama, (q. in Pr. V. pp 30, 31), Bhavisyapurāna (q. by Pr. V. p. 31)

Before proceeding with the subject of prāyaścittas we shall speak briefly about the other means of reducing the consequences of sin And first comes confession With reference to the confession of paramours by the wife in the Varunapraghāsa, the Tai. Br. (I. 6. 5. 2)[97] says 'He makes the wife confess, thereby he renders her pure and then he leads her to penance'. The Śat. Br. (II. 5. 2. 20) puts it in this form 'for when confessed the sin becomes less, since it becomes truth'. This was a confession before God (Fire) and men (the priests) to restore one to divine forgiveness and favour As regards several lapses, confession was part of the procedure prescribed for atoning for the sin.

---

96. तस्य निष्क्रयणानि जपस्तपो होम उपवासो दानम्। गौ 19.11=वसिष्ठ 22 8= बौ ध. सू III. 10 9 The word निष्क्रय occurs in Jai VI. 4 33 (niskraya-vādācca) which refers to a vedic passage about विश्वजित् 'सर्वाभ्य एव देवताभ्य आत्मानं निष्क्रीणीते' quoted by Śabara on जै. VI. 4.32.

97 पत्नी वाचयति मेध्यामेवैनां करोति। अथो तप एवैनामुपनयति। यज्जार ...आहयति। यथास्थान एवामहे इति पत्नीमुदानयति। तै ब्रा I 6,5, vide note 91 above for the passage यज्जार...आहयति.

CHAPTER II

MEANS OF REDUCING CONSEQUENCES OF SINS

Confession—In Āp. Dh S. I. 9. 24. 15, I. 10. 28. 19, I. 10. 29. 1 it is prescribed that the person undergoing a penance for being an abhiśasta or for unjustly forsaking his wife or for the murder of a learned brāhmana has to declare his misdeed while begging for alms to support himself. The Vedic student who was guilty of sexual intercourse had also to proclaim his lapse while begging at seven houses (Gaut, 23.18, Manu XI 122) [98]

Repentance (anutāpa)—Manu[99] XI. 229–230 (=Visnudharmottara II. 73 231–32) provide: "The more a man's mind loathes his own evil deed the more does his body become freed from the unrighteousness (committed by him). If after committing a sin a man feels repentance for having done it he becomes free from that sin. He becomes purified only by the resolution of ceasing to sin and thinking 'I shall not do so again".[100] The Visnupurāna II. 6.40 lays emphasis on repentance and humble devotion to Krsna. Pr. V. (p. 30) quotes a verse of Angiras 'A man after committing sins, if he is consumed by repentance and is sorry day and night (for his misdeed), is purified by prānāyāma'. The view of digests like the Pr. Prakāśa is that 98 Confession of sins has played a prominent part in early and mediæval Christianity. For example, (First epistle of) John I. 9 says 'If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness'.

99. Manu XI. 229 also occurs in ब्रह्मपुराण 218. 5.

100. Compare Christ's call to repentance in Matthew 4. 17 and Mark I 15 and his last words (in Luke 24 47) that 'repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations'. शोचेत मनसा नित्यं दुष्कृतान्यनुचिन्तयन् । तपस्वी चाप्रमत्तश्च पापेभ्य. स प्रमुच्यते ॥ इति कल्पतरूद्धृतवाक्येन तपस्त्रिपदोपादानात् ।...पुनरकरिण: । विकर्मणा तप्यमान पापाद्धि परिमुच्यते । इति । अत्रानुतापमात्रस्य पापनाशकत्वानुपपत्ते. पापनाशकप्रायश्चित्ते अधिकारिविशेषणत्वेन पापनाशप्रयोजकत्वमुक्तम् । विष्णुरपि । मन संतापनात्तीव्रमुद्वहेच्छोकमन्तत. । ...अत्र सर्वत्राद्धतापस्य विहितत्वेन नखानि निकृन्तति इत्यादिवद् दीक्षितत्ववैराग्यवत्त्वाधिकारिविशेषणत्वमेव । प्रा. प्रकाश folio 11, यम । पश्चात्तापो निवृत्तिश्च स्नानं चाद्धृतयोदितम् । नैमित्तिकानां स्वातन्त्र्ये तद्विधि. स्यादनर्थक ॥ महाक्लेशसाध्यं हि प्रायश्चित्तम् । अल्पक्लेशा हि पश्चात्तापादय । तै. प्रायश्चित्तफले कृते प्रायश्चित्तविधिरफल इति स्पष्टम् । अपरार्क p 1231.

repentance by itself is not enough to destroy sins, but that repentance renders the sinners fit to receive penance, just as paring the nails and the like make the person intending to perform a Vedic sacrifice fit to be a dīkṣita Yama quoted by Aparārka (p 1231) states that repentance and stopping from repeating the sin are merely the aṅgas (subsidiary elements) of prāyaścittas and cannot independently take the place of penances.

Prāṇāyāma (restraint of the breath) Vide H of Dh. vol II p 317 for a description of this Manu XI. 248 (which is the same as Baud. Dh S IV 1 31, Vas. 26 4, Atri II. 5, Sankhasmṛti XII 18–19) lays down 'sixteen prāṇāyāmas attended by the Vyāhṛtis and the Pranava (omkāra), if performed every day, would purify after a month even the murderer of a bhrūna (a learned brāhmana)'. Visnu Dh S. 55.2 (in prose) is to the same effect. Vas 26 1–3 provide that on the proper performance of three prāṇāyāmas all the sins committed by day or in the night are at once destroyed Yāj. III 305 states that for the removal of all sins, of upapātakas and of sins for which no special expiation is provided by the texts one hundred prāṇāyāmas should be performed. This refers to sins not known to others for which expiation is to be performed secretly. Baud Dh. S (IV 1 5–11) provides for varying numbers (3, 7, 12) of prāṇāyāmas to be spread over one day to a year for different kinds of sins ranging from the eating of the food of a śūdra to brāhmana murder This whole passage is quoted by the Mit on Yāj III.305 which points out the kinds of sins it deals with The Agnipurāna 173.21 has the same half verse as Yāj. III 305 (first half)

Tapas (austerity) Even Rg X 154 2 speaks of tapas as leading to heaven and as unassailable. The Chān. Up V 10 1–2, Mundaka Up I 2 10–11 place tapas over yajña Gaut 19 15 says that celibacy,[101] truthfulness, bathing thrice daily (in the morning, at noon and in the evening), wearing wet clothes (till they are dried on the body), sleeping on the ground (on a raised part or altar) and fasting constitute austerities Baud Dh S III 10 13 adds to these 'ahimsā' (non-injury to any being), asteya (not depriving any one of his property) and guru-suśrūsā (attendance upon a teacher) Gaut. 19 17 states that the periods for which tapas is to be observed are a year, six months, four months, three months, two months, one (month), 24 days, 12 days, 6 days, 3 days, a day and a night (according to the nature of the sin). Manu XI. 239–241 declare that those guilty of mahāpātakas and others guilty of evil deeds are freed from sins by well-practised tapas and that whatever sins are committed by people in thought, word and bodily actions are all quickly burnt by tapas This doctrine is shared by the Jainas as stated in the Uttarādhyayana XXIX 27 'by austerities he cuts off karman' (S B. E. vol 45 p. 166).

101. ब्रह्मचर्यं सत्यवचन सर्वेषूदकोपस्पर्शनमार्द्रवस्त्रताध.शायिताऽनाशक इति तपांसि । गौ. 19.15.

Homa (sacrifice into fire). The Tai. Ā. (II 7–8) describes[102] the kūsmānda homa and dīksā and II. 8 prescribes that the man who regards himself as impure should offer a sacrifice with the kūsmānda mantras (mentioned in Tai Ā. II. 3–6, viz 'yaddevā deva-hedanam' (Vāj. S 20 14–16 = Tai. Ā. II. 3.1) The Mahārnava-karmavipāka (folio 8 a) prescribes the procedure of Kūsmānda homa taken from Jamadagni which is brief. It is as follows.— After shaving the hair on the head and the moustache and taking a bath in holy water one should offer the ājyabhāgas and then offer oblations of clarified butter with the three Anuvākas beginning with 'yad devā devahedanam,' and then he worships fire with the verses beginning with 'Vaiśvānārāya pratipā-dayāmi' He then offers samidh with the mantra 'yadadiva-yam' and then he repeats the Jayā mantras. He has to observe the rules for a dīksita viz not eating flesh, avoiding sexual intercourse, not telling a falsehood and not sleeping on a cot. He has to subsist on milk (if he is a brāhmana), on barley gruel if a ksatriya and on āmiksā if he is a vaiśya. The Kūsmānda-homa as prescribed by Baudhāyana is a longer one The Baud. Dh. S. III. 7 1 prescribes that he who considers himself impure should offer burnt oblations reciting the kūsmānda mantras, that he who has had forbidden intercourse becomes even like a thief or even like a slayer of a learned brāhmana 102 अथ कूष्माण्डैर्जुहुयाद्योऽपूत इव मन्येत यथा स्तेनो यथा भ्रूणहैवमेव भवति योऽयोनौ रेतः सिञ्चति । यद्वर्षीयानमेनो भ्रूणहत्यायास्तस्मान्मुच्यत इति । ते आ II 8, which is re-peated in बौ ध सू. III. 7 1, that is q. by the मिता. on या. III 303. 'यत्र कर्मणि यद्देवा देवहेडनमित्याद्यो मन्त्रास्तैत्तिरीयारण्यके समाम्नाताः स कूष्माण्डहोमः । परिस्रुश्च अग्ने नय सुपथेति च तथा अग्ने मत्वे प्रथमस्य प्रचेतस इत्याद्या ऋचस्तैत्तिरीयशाखायां समाम्नाता स गणहोम' । महार्णवकर्मविपाक folio 7 b For अग्ने नय vide Rg I 189 1, Tai S I. 1, 14 3, Tai. Ā I. 8 8.

---

and that (by performing homa with kūsmāndas) he becomes free from any sin that is less than the murder of a learned brāhmana Yāj III. 309 provides that whenever a twice-born man feels himself mixed up in heavy sins he should perform a homa with sesame with the sacred Gāyatrī mantra. The Mit following a verse of Yama says that one lakh of offerings of sesame must be made. Both Manu XI. 34 and Vas 26 16 say that a brāhmana becomes free from all distresses by Vedic recitations (japa) and sacrifices (homa). When the wife confessed to the existence of a paramour, the Śat. Br. II. 5 2. 20 states that she made an offering into the Dakṣināgni with the mantra (Vaj S. III 45) 'whatever[103] sin we have committed, whether in the village, in the forest, in society or by the organs of sense, we cast that away by this sacrifice, svāhā.' Both Manu (VIII. 105) and Yāj (II, 83) prescribe that when a witness tells a falsehood in order to prevent an accused person from being sentenced to death, he should offer for expiating his perjury an oblation of boiled rice to Sarasvatī There are other homas also prescribed such as the Ganahoma, in which such verses as 'agne naya supathā' from the Taittirīya sākhā are recited (Mahārnava).

The old idea of sacrifice seems to have been that it was propitiatory in character Sacrifice was not demanded or required by God. Sacrifice was probably regarded as a gift which pleased God, induced Him to forgive a man for his transgressions and enabled erring man to regain God's favour which had been lost by some shortcoming or some sinful act Sacrifices therefore had an expiatory or cleansing function or character. Sacrifices may be performd by offerings either an animal (meant as substitute for the sinner himself who had forfeited his life for his sins and transgressions) or a burnt offering or any other thing offered to God and then distributed to others.

Japa (muttering of Vedic passages as prayers) Japa is of three kinds, vācika (audibly uttered), upāmśu (inaudibly uttered) and mānasa (mentally revolved), each succeeding one being ten times superior, acc to Laghu Hārīta IV. p 186,

---

103 यद् ग्रामे यदरण्ये यत्सभायां यदिन्द्रिये। यदेनश्चकृमा वयमिदं तदवयजामहे स्वाहा॥ वाज सं III. 45, vide also तै. सं. I. 8 3 for a similar passage.

(Jivananda I.).[104] Śabara (on Jai. XII. 4. 1) distinguishes japa from stuti, the former being simply an utterance or recitation of a mantra or mantras[105]. Inaudible japa is praised[106] in Śānkhāyana Br. 14. 1. The Āśv. Śr I. 1 20 provides that japa, anumantrana, āpyāyana and upasthāna are uttered upāṁśu. The Āp. Śr (24 1. 8–10) provides that mantras from the Rgveda and the Sāmaveda are uttered in sacrifices loudly and that passages of the Yajurveda are muttered upāṁśu and the Tai. Prātiśākhya 23. 6 states that upāṁśu recitation is made by means of the effort of speech organs but without sound (i. e. in a very low voice) and without the mind being directed (to utterance with udātta and other accents) i e. 'Karanavad-aśabdam-amanah-prayogam-upāṁśu'. Gaut. 19. 12 (= Baud. Dh. S. III. 10 10 = Vas 22 9) prescribes the following Vedic texts as purifiers: Upanisads, Vedānta texts, the Samhitā texts of all the Vedas (and not the padapāṭha or kramapāṭha), the Yajus texts in which the word 'madhu' occurs, the Aghamarsana hymn (Rg. X. 190 1–3), the Atharvaśiras, (the anuvākas called) Rudras, the Purusa hymn (Rg. X. 90), the two sāmans called Rājata and Rauhineya, the Brhat-sāma and the Rathantara, the Purusagati sāman, the Mahānāmni verses, the Mahāvairāja (sāman), the Mahādivākīrtya (sāman), any of the Jyestha sāmans, the Bahispavamāna (sāman), the Kūsmāndas, the Pāvamānis (Rg. IX) and the Sāvitrī (Rg. III. 62 10).[107] The

---

104. अत्र जपयज्ञं प्रकृत्य नरसिंहपुराणम्। त्रिविधो जपयज्ञः स्यात्तस्य भेदं निबोधत। वाचिकाख्य उपांशुश्च मानसस्त्रिविधः स्मृतः। त्रयाणां जपयज्ञानां श्रेयान् स्यादुत्तरोत्तरम्। इति। अत्र हारीत। उच्चस्त्वेकगुणः प्रोक्तो ध्यानाद्दशगुणः स्मृतः। उपांशुः स्याच्छतगुणः सहस्रो मानसः स्मृतः। स्मृतिश्च I p. 149. The verses त्रिविधो · उत्तरोत्तरम् occur in नृसिंहपुराण 58. 78-79 and also in लघुहारीत IV. p. 186 (Jiv I). Both these also define वाचिक and उपांशुजप as follows. 'मन्त्रमुच्चारयन् वाचा जपयज्ञस्तु वाचिकः। शनैरुच्चारयन्मन्त्रं किंचिदोष्ठौ प्रचालयेत्। किंचिच्छ्रवणयोग्य स्यात्स उपांशुजप स्मृत॥'

105 वचनं जपनमिति समानार्थं, यस्मात् जप व्यक्तायां वाचीति स्मर्यते। तेन यत्र वचनमात्रं मन्त्रस्य क्रियते न स्तूयते नाशास्यते स जप। शाबर on जै. XII. 4.1.

106. अथातं आज्यमाज्येन वै देवा. सर्वान्कामानाजयन्त सर्वमयृतत्वं ..तद्वा इदं षड्विधमाज्यं तूष्णीं जपस्तूष्णीं शंस. पुरोरुक्सूक्तमुक्थवीर्यं याज्येति। ... अथ यत्पुरस्तात् तूष्णीं जपं जपति स्वर्गो वै लोको यज्ञस्तद्यत्पुरस्तात्तूष्णीं जपं जपति स्वस्त्ययनमेव तत्कुरुते स्वर्गस्य लोकस्य समष्ट्यै। शांखायनब्रा. 14.1.

107. 'Madhūni' are explained by Haradatta as 'मधुशब्दयुक्तानि यजूंषि ब्रह्मणेतु मामित्यादीनि' These occur in तै. आ X 38. It is better to hold as done by the मद. पा p 761, by Maskarin in his bhāsya on Gaut and by Pr Prakāśa (folio 86a) that the word मधूनि refers to the three verses beginning with the words 'Madhu vātā' that are Rg. I. 90. 6–8 and occur in Tai. S. IV 2.9 and original idea of japa was highly spiritual. Deep knowledge of the Upanisads and other texts would have made the soul pure and enabled it to realize the supreme reality and induced in the mind love of all human beings as sparks of the one Divine Essence. Japa at the highest level was contemplation of God and endeavour to attain unity with God The habit of repeating the sacred texts should lead to maintaining the soul in the presence and thought of God Japa demands three things, purity of heart, detachment and placing oneself in the hands of God

(Continued on the next page)

Manu XI. 46 provides that a sin unintentionally committed is expiated by the recitation of Vedic texts as prayers, but that which men in their folly commit intentionally is expiated by prāyaścitta

---

(Continued from the last page)

Vāj s XIII. 27-29 also, since they are styled मधुमती by आश्व गृ, पार गृ I 3, मानवगृ I. 9 14. Atharvaśāras is an उपनिषद् which begins with देवा ह वै स्वर्गं लोकमायंस्ते रुद्रमपृच्छन् को भवानिति Vide the Nir. edition of 108 Upanisads (printed in 1925) for the अथर्वशिरस्. The अघमर्षण is highly eulogized as a destroyer of sins like Aśvamedha in Manu XI 259-60, Visnu Dh S 55.7, Vas 26 8, Baud. Dh S. IV 2 20. Rudras are the eleven anuvākas of Tai S IV 5. 1-11 beginning with नमस्ते रुद्र मन्यवे Acc. to Haradatta the two Sāmans Rājata and Rauhina are sung on the Rk verse 'Indram naro nemadhitā havante' (Rg. VII 27 1, Sāmaveda, Pūrvārcika 318). The बृहत्साम is sung on the verse त्वामिद्धि हवामहे (ऋ VI 46 1, Sāmaveda Pūrvārcika No. 234), the Rathantara on the verse अभि त्वा शूर (ऋ VII 32 22, Sāmaveda Pūrvārcika 233) In the भगवद्गीता X 35 Śrīkrsna puts the Brhatsāma as the foremost among Sāmans (बृहत्साम तथा साम्नां) Purusagati Sāman is sung on the verse 'Ahamasmi prathamajā rtasya,' (Sāmaveda, Aranyakānda VI 1 594) महानाम्नी verses are those beginning with विदा मघवन् विदा which occur in the ऐ आ IV, in the जैमिनीयसंहिता of the सामवेद (ed by Dr Raghuvira) and in other संहिताs The महावैराज (सामन्) is sung on the verse पिबा सोममिन्द्र मन्दतु त्वा (ऋ. VII 22 1, सामवेद पूर्वार्चिक 398, उत्तरार्चिक 927), the महादेवाकीर्त्य is sung on विभ्राड्बृहत्पिबतु सोम्य (ऋ. X 170 1, सामवेद अरण्यकाण्ड 628, उत्तरार्चिक 1453). about the ज्येष्ठसामानि हरदत्त mentions two interpretations (of the तलवकार शाखा and छन्दोग), one holding that they are sung on उद्वु त्य (Rg I 50 1, सामवेद पूर्वार्चिक 31) and चित्रं देवानां (Rg I 115 1), the other that they are three Sāmans sung on मूर्धानं दिवो (Rg VI 7.1, सामवेद पूर्वार्चिक 67, उत्तरार्चिक 1140) Maskarin holds that ज्येष्ठसामानि are those sung on the verses शं नो देवी- (Rg X. 9 4) and चित्रं देवानां (Rg I 115 1) The बहिष्पवमान is sung on तत्पात्रमे गायता नर. (Rg IX 11 1, सामवेद उत्तरार्चिक 651, 765) Vide H of Dh vol II pp 1169-1170 for further details of the बहिष्पवमान For the कूष्माण्डमन्त्र, vide तै आ II. 3-5 पावमान्य are the verses about soma in the 9th Mandala of the Rgveda Sāvitrī is the famous Gāyatrī mantra (Rg. III 62 10)

Manu II 85–87 (which are the same as Vás. 26 9–11 and Visnu Dh S 55. 10–21) lay[108] down: 'the performance of japa is ten times more efficacious than the sacrifices (like Darśapūrnamāsa) prescribed by the rules (of the Veda), japa when carried on inaudibly is a hundred times superior (to sacrifices) and mental revolution of mantras is a thousand times superior The four pākayajñas [109] (Vaiśvadeva, bali, daily śrāddha, and honouring guests) together with the Vedic sacrifices do not come up to even the 16th part of japa. A brāhmana attains perfection (the highest goal) by japa; he may or may not engage in other duties (such as Vedic sacrifices), a brāhmana befriends all creatures'. Great eulogy is bestowed on the inaudible japa of the Gāyatrī mantra (Rg III. 62 10) for which pp. 303–305 of H of Dh. vol. II may be consulted Where no particular number is specially mentioned the recitation of a mantra is to be performed a hundred times.[110]

Manu[110a] XI. 261–262, Vas 27 1–3, Angiras 101 and other works go so far as to assert that the fire of Veda study consumes guilt caused by evil deeds just as a fire burning strongly consumes even green trees or that a brāhmana who remembers Rgveda (studied by him) is not tainted by any guilt, though he may have destroyed the three worlds and have eaten the food of any person whatever But these are simply laudatory (arthavādas) and are not to be taken literally, as Vas. 27, 4 [111] (=Angiras 102) gives the warning 'one should not become addicted to (or take pleasure in committing) evil deeds relying on the power of the Veda (stated in some smrti passages). (The effects of) actions done through ignorance and negligence are alone consumed (by Veda study) and not those of other actions (intentionally done).'

Many smrtis such as Manu XI 249–257 (which are almost the same as Visnudharmottara II. 74. 4–13), Vas 26. 5–7 and 28 10–15 (the former of which are the same as Manu XI 249–251), Visnu

---

108. Manu II. 87 occurs in Śaṅkhasmrti also (XII. 28).

109. The five pākayajñas are enumerated in Manu III 70 and the four meant are all of them except brahmayajña (teaching and studying Veda).

110. 'जपस्तु शतसंख्याक, अनादेशे शतमिति सूत्रादिति शूलपाणि. । प्रा प्रकाश. folio 143a.

110a Manu XI. 262 and Vas. 27 3 are identical.

111. न वेदबलमाश्रित्य पापकर्मरतिर्भवेत् । अज्ञानाच्च प्रमादाच्च दह्यते कर्म नेतरत् ॥ वसिष्ठ 27.4, अङ्गिरस् 102

Dh. S 56 3–27, Atri VI. 1–5 (which are almost the same as Vas[112] 28 10–15), Śankha, chap. 11 (=Vas 28 10–15), Samvarta 227–228, Baud Dh. S IV 2 4–5, IV. 3 8, IV 4. 2–5, Yāj III. 302–305, prescribe several Vedic hymns or single Vedic verses or prose passages as specially efficacious for removing all sins. It is not possible nor necessary to set down all of them, but by way of sample the verses of Manu (XI 249–257) are translated here. 'Even a drinker of surā becomes pure if he mutters the hymn (seen) by Kutsa[113], the three verses beginning with 'prati' (Rg VII. 80 1–3) seen by Vasistha, the Māhitra hymn (Rg X 185), the verses called Śuddhavatīs (Rg VIII 95 7–9 where the word 'śuddha' occurs 13 times in different connections). Even he who has stolen gold (of a brāhmana) instantly becomes free from guilt if he once mutters (the hymn) beginning with 'asya vāmasya' i e. Rg I. 164 1–52), and the Śivasankalpa (Vāj S XXXIV. 1–6). The violater of a guru's bed is freed from sin if he repeatedly recites the hymn beginning with 'havispāntam' (Rg. X 88 1–19) and the hymn beginning with 'na tam-amho' (i e. Rg X 126 1–8), the hymn beginning with 'iti' (i e. Rg X 119) and the hymn addressed to Purusa (Rg X 90). He who desires to do away with sins, great and small, should mutter during a year the verse beginning with 'ava' (i e 'ava te helo varuna namobhih' Rg I. 24. 14, Tai S I. 5 11 3), or the verse 'yat kim ca' (Rg VII 89 5) or the verse 'iti vā' (Rg X 119 1). That man who, having accepted a gift that ought not to be accepted, or having eaten forbidden food, mutters the hymn beginning with 'tarat sa mandī' (Rg IX 58 1–4)[114] becomes pure after three days. He who has committed many sins becomes pure if he recites for a month the hymn beginning with 'Somā rudrā' (Rg VI. 74 1–4) and the three verses beginning with 'Aryamanam' (Rg. IV 2 4–6) while he bathes in a river (and not in a pond or other reservoir of water). One guilty of a grievous offence should mutter the seven verses beginning with 'Indram' (Rg I. 106 1–7). A twice-born man removes even very great guilt by offering clarified butter for a year (in fire) with the mantras for the Śākalahomas (Vāj S VIII 13) or by muttering the 112 Vas 28 10–15 are quoted in स्मृतिच I p 187 Atri VI. 1–5 are quoted as Atri's in Gr R p 245.

113 The Kautsa hymn is Rg. I. 97 1–8, all of which have as their refrain अप न. शोशुचदघम्, 'may he burn away our sin'

114 तरत्स मन्दी धावति is the refrain of all four verses of Rg IX 58. It means 'He who presses (soma) gets over (all sins), he runs (to higher worlds).' Vide Nir. XIII 6.

mantra 'nama id-ugram' (Rg. VI. 51. 8) One who is stained by mortal sin becomes pure if with a concentrated mind he attends cows for a year, reciting the Pāvamānī hymns (the whole of Rg. IX) and subsisting on alms [114a]

So much importance and such occult powers came to be attached to the words of the Rgveda that the Rgvidhāna of Śaunaka (which is later than Manu) concerns itself with prescribing numerous hymns of the Rgveda for the removal of various diseases, of sins, for the conquest of enemies

The Sāma Br I. 5 2 says [115] generally that when no particular hymns are prescribed for the removal of sins Vedic mantras are powerful and become purifiers if accompanied by tapas and the Sāmans may be repeated for the same purpose from ten times as the minimum to 100 times as prāyaścitta. Gautama 19. 13 prescribes the kind of food on which one should subsist when one is engaged in japa viz. one was to live on milk alone, to eat vegetables only, to eat fruits only, to live on barley gruel prepared from a handful of grain, to eat gold[116], to eat clarified butter, and to drink soma and so forth. Gautama 19. 14 further lays down that all mountains, all rivers, holy lakes, places of pilgrimage, the dwellings of sages (ṛṣis), cowpens and temples of the gods are places (which help to destroy sin).

As the Veda could be studied in and after the sūtra period only by the male members of the first three classes, the japa of Vedic texts for the removal of sins was not possible for śūdras; therefore, the Mit. (on Yāj III. 262) says that although the śūdra (and women and those born of pratiloma marriages also) has no adhikāra (power or capacity or authority) for the recitation of Gāyatrī and other Vedic mantras, still the sūdra and women after revolving in the mind the name of the deity put in the dative case can engage in japa with the word namaḥ (i e he can only utter the words 'namo namaḥ' and not om &c) 114a. In Rg. I. 106. 1–7 the first six verses have the refrain विश्वस्मान्नो अंहसो निष्पिपर्तन ('May you take us beyond all sin').

115. अनादेशे मन्त्रा बलवन्तस्तपोन्विताः पावना भवन्ति। आपन्न. प्रायश्चित्तं चरेत्। अभ्यास' सान्नां शतं दशावरम्। सामविधानब्रा I. 5 2–4.

116. 'To eat gold' is explained by हरदत्त as 'सर्पिरादौ हिरण्यं निवृत्य प्राशनं हिरण्यप्राशनम्'.

as stated by Gaut Dh S. X 66-67 and Yāj. I. 121[117]. When Manu IV. 80 says 'let him not explain to a śūdra the sacred law (dharma) nor impose upon him a vrata' all that is meant is, according to the Mit on Yāj III. 262, that it applies only to a śūdra who does not wait upon or serve higher varnas Similarly, when Gaut IV. 20 says that those born in the inverse order are outside the pale of the sacred law, the meaning is that saṃskāras like upanayana are not to be performed on them. The mystic syllable 'om' is said by Āp Dh S (I 4 13 6) to be the door to heaven and was to be employed before the recitation of any Vedic passage The Yogasūtra (I. 27) avers that om (called pranava) is expressive of the idea of God and that the repetition of om and revolving the meaning of it in the mind lead to concentration.[118]

Not only were certain Vedic hymns and passages recommended for recitation with the object of removing sins some works, particularly the Purānas, proposed an easy way for all viz. that the remembrance of God Nārāyana (or Hari or Krsna) removed all sins The Brahmapurāna (chap. 176) contains a stotra (hymn of praise) of Visnu, which when recited is said to free a man from all sins (mental, vocal or bodily). The Pr. V. p 31 quotes a verse from the Bhavisyapurāna[118a] and three verses from the Visnupurāna as follows.—'even a great sin is removed by (the resolve of) not doing it again, by gifts, by confessing it to others, and by meditation (on Visnu) and not only by prāyaścittas' (Bhavisya); 'of all the expiations (for sins declared by the sages) such as tapas (Cāndrāyana and others) and other actions (japa, homa, gifts) the meditation on

---

117 अज्ञातोऽस्य नमस्कारो मन्त्र । पाकयज्ञै स्वयं यजेतेत्येके। गौ X 66-67, on which हरदत्त comments 'अस्य शूद्रस्य वैश्वदेवादिषु तत्तद् देवतापदं चतुर्थ्यन्तं मनसा ध्यात्वा नमो नम इत्येवरूपो मन्त्रोऽनुज्ञातो धर्मज्ञै ; नमस्कारेण मन्त्रेण पञ्चयज्ञान् हापयेत्॥ या I 121 Vide H of Dh. vol II p 158 note 371 for further details मनु X 41 says that all pratilomas are like śūdras

118. ओङ्कार स्वर्गद्वार तस्माद् ब्रह्माध्येष्यमाण एतदादि प्रतिपद्येत । आप. ध. सू. I 4 13.6, 'तस्य वाचक प्रणव । तज्जपस्तदर्थभावनम् । योगसूत्र I. 27-28, वाचस्पति comments: प्रणवस्य जप प्रणवाभिधेयस्य चेश्वरस्य भावनम्। तदस्य योगिन प्रणवं जपत. प्रणवार्थं च भावयतश्चित्तमेकाग्र्य सम्पद्यते।.

118a भविष्यपुराणम् । अपुन करणाच्यागात्तरुयापनाद्दुश्चिन्तनात् । व्यपैति महदप्येन: प्रायश्चित्तैर्न केवलम् ॥ विष्णुपुराणम् । प्रायश्चित्तान्यशेषाणि तप कर्मात्मकानि वै । यानि तेषामशेषाणां कृष्णानुस्मरण परम्॥ प्रातर्नक्ति तथा सन्ध्यामध्याह्नादिषु संस्मरन् । नारायणमवाप्नोति सद्य पापक्षय नर ॥ प्राय वि p 31 The verse प्रायश्चि. .परम् is विष्णुपुराण II 6.39. The verse प्रातर्नक्ति is q by अपरार्क p 1232 and by प्राय तत्त्व also (p. 524) The two verses are also respectively ब्रह्मपुराण 22 37 and 39.

Krsna is the highest. If a man remembers Nārāyana in the morning, at night, at twilight, at midday and the like, he at once secures the removal of sin' (Visnupurāna). The Brahma-purāna[119] (216. 87–88) gives expression to a popular belief as follows:—"Men, even after committing sins many times through folly, do not go to Hell if they prostrate themselves before Hari who destroys all sins. Those men also who always remember Janārdana even by roguery go to the world of Visnu after death" The Visnupurāna affirms that those who contemplate upon the mantra of twelve letters (viz. 'om namo bhagavate Vāsudevāya') do not return to the cycle of births and deaths. The great power of mantras is mentioned in the Ādiparva (161. 14) by Kuntī. The Nrsimha-purāna in chap. 18 eulogises the mantra of eight letters (om namo Nārāyanāya) and chap. 63.6, states "what is the use of many mantras and the performance of many vratas, when the mantra 'om namo Nārāyanāya' is capable of securing all desired objects". The mantra of five letters 'namah Śivāya' is dealt with in Lingapurāna (pūrvārdha, chap. 85) and Saura-purāna 65. Brahma-purāna speaks of vaidika mantras and āgamokta mantras (41. 63). The Nityācāra-paddhati (p. 67) says that it is necessary to understand the meaning of vedic mantras in śrauta rites but in smārta rites it is not so.

Dāna (gifts). Gaut. XIX. 16 provides[120] that gold, a cow, a dress, a horse, land, sesamum, clarified butter and food are the gifts (that destroy sin) and may be optionally undergone as penance if no express mention is made thereof. Vas. quotes several verses on gifts one of which (29. 16) states: "whatever sin a man distressed for livelihood commits he is purified from that by giving land even if it be as small in extent as 'gocarma' "[121]. Visnu Dh S. 92.4 is to the same effect. Samvarta[122] (204) prescribes that the gifts of gold, cow and land

119. कृत्वापि बहुश पाप नरा मोहसमन्विता' ॥ न यान्ति नरकं नत्वा सर्वपापहर हरिम् ॥ शाठ्येनापि नरा नित्यं ये स्मरन्ति जनार्दनम् । तेपि यान्ति तद्धं त्यक्त्वा विष्णुलोकमनामयम् ॥ ब्रह्मपु 216.87–88: अद्यापि न निवर्तन्ते द्वादशाक्षरचिन्तका । विष्णुपुराण I. 6 39.

120. हिरण्यं गौर्वासोऽश्वो भूमिस्तिला घृतमन्नमिति देयानि । एतान्येवानादेशे विकल्पेन कियेरन् । गौ 19 16 and 18

121. अथाप्युदाहरन्ति । यात्किंचित्कुरुते पाप पुरुषो वृत्तिकर्शितः । अपि गोचर्ममात्रेण भूमिदानेन शुध्यति ॥ वसिष्ठ 29 16. For the meaning of गोचर्म, vide H. of Dh vol. III. p. 432, n. 718.

122. सुवर्णदानं गोदान भूमिदानं तथैव च । नाशयन्त्याशु पापानि अन्यजन्मकृतान्यपि ॥ संवर्त 204 q by प्राय. तत्त्व p. 483 (which reads 'महापातकजान्यपि at the end). हिंसायां दानमेव मुख्यमित्युक्त भविष्ये । हिंसात्मकानां सर्वेषां कीर्तितानां मनीषिभि । प्राय-श्चित्तकदम्बानां दानं प्रथममुच्यते ॥ प्रा. प्रकाश (fol.o 86a).

quickly destroy sins even if committed in former lives Medhātithi (on Manu XI. 139) remarks that the verse implies that as to sins arising from injury to living beings gifts are the principal expiations. The subject of dāna has been dealt with at length in H. of Dh vol II pp. 837–888 A few further remarks may be made here In many inscriptions and copperplate grants of lands or villages the donor usually states that the grant is made for the increase of the merit of himself and of his parents (e g. E. I vol. XI. p. 219 at p 221). Brhaspati[123] as quoted in the Madanaratna (vyavahāra p 66) expressly provides that in land-grants the king should state that he made the gift for securing merit to his parents and to himself[124]. The Rājatarangini (I. 143)[125] refers to the founding of vihāras (monasteries).

Upavāsa (fasting). Fasting strictly means total abstinence from food and drink, but generally it means light diet restricted in quantity and also as regards the nature of the articles taken. Even the Tai S. (I. 6. 7 3–4) refers[126] to three ways of observing vrata on the days of the Darśapūrṇamāsa-iṣṭi either by subsisting only on food available in the village or on forest food or partaking of no food at all. Gaut 19 11 includes upavāsa among the several means of removing sins Tapas is also one of such means acc. to him. But in Gaut. 19 15 as stated above, Gaut includes fasting (anāśaka) among 'tapāmsi'.

---

123. दत्त्वा भूम्यादिकं राजा ताम्रपट्टे ऽथवा। शासनं कारयेद्धर्म्यं स्थानवंश्यादिसंयुतम्। मात्रापित्रोरात्मनश्च पुण्यायानुकमूनवे। दत्त मयानुकायाथ दान सब्रह्मचारिणे॥ बृह. in मदनरत्न p. 66 on व्यवहार

124. In Europe the same practice prevailed in the middle ages. 'The founder (of monasteries) constantly tells us that this sacrifice is made for the atonement of his own sins and those of his progenitors and kinsfolk" C. G. Coulton in 'Five centuries of Religion' (1936) vol III p. 27. Redemption of sin by monetary payments or by leaving property to the churches and monasteries was a very firm belief in the Middle Ages in Christian countries, so much so that men who had earned properties made large gifts to the church when the prospect of death was near and vast estates accumulated in the hands of churchmen, which led to the passing of the Statute of Mortmain in England.

125 तस्मिन् कृते न जायेत विहारच्छेदवैशसम्। तस्य तत्प्रेरकाणां च प्रायश्चित्त कृत भवेत्॥ राजतरङ्गिणी I. 143.

126 यद्ग्राम्यान्नमुपवसति तेन ग्राम्यानवरुन्धे यदारण्यस्याश्नाति तेनारण्यान् यदुभयान्नाश्नात्युपवसेत् पितृदेवत्य स्यात्। तै. स. I, 6. 7. 3.

Haradatta explains upavāsa[127] as giving up the eating of boiled rice (bhaktatyāga) and adds that upavāsa is again included under tapāṁsi to show the great importance attached to it. Haradatta notes that a predecessor of his relying on a Purāna passage explained upavāsa in Gaut. 19.11 as 'restraint of senses'. In many of the Grhya sūtras upavāsa means only eating light food prepared from corn usable in sacrifices (such as rice) once in the day excluding vegetables, māsa (pulse), salt and flesh (compare Gobhila gr. I. 5 26, Khādira gr II 1.4 and 6, Kauśika-sūtra I. 31–32, Kāthakagrhya 46.2[128]). The Br. Up IV. 4. 22 closely associates 'anāśaka' (fasting) with tapas as a means to the mystic realisation of the Supreme Soul[129]. Jaimini (III. 8. 9–11) appears to regard fasting as tapas[130]. Manu XI 203 (=Visnu Dh. S. 54.29) provides that fasting (for a day) is the penance for omitting the rites ordained by the Veda (such as the Darśapūrnamāsa sacrifice and the performance of sandhyā adoration) and for neglecting the special duties of a snātaka (laid down in Manu IV. 34 ff). When a person was observing a fast he had to avoid doing certain other actions. Acc to Devala a fast becomes bereft of its good results by drinking water often, by chewing tāmbūla[s] by sleep in the day-time and by sexual intercourse[131]; but the Garudapurāna I. 128. 6 and Bhavisya-purāna (I. 184 27) allow even when one is fasting the use of flowers, ornaments, rich clothes, garlands, unguents, applying collyrium to the eye and the cleansing of teeth. Daksa quoted by the Par M states that if a man observes a fast for the day and night on the day on which the sun first turns towards the

---

127. उपवासो भक्तत्याग । स एव तप स्वपि पुन पठ्यते आदरख्यापनार्थम् । अपर आह । निष्क्रयणेषु पठित उपवास इन्द्रियनिग्रह । व्यावृत्तस्यैव दोषेभ्यो यस्तु वासो गुणै सह । उपवासं तमाहुस्तु न शरीरस्य शोषणात्॥ इति पुराणे दर्शनादिति । हरदत्त on गौ 19. 11. The स्मृतिच॰ II p 355 attributes the verse to व्यास and it and अपरार्क p. 199 read it as उपावृत्तस्य पापेभ्यो ..सर्वभोगविवर्जित . मा. प्रकाश. (folio 44a) reads as अपरार्क does and says it is taken from अग्निपुराण.

128 काठकगृह्य 46 2 is औपवस्त्रं भुक्त्वा and the com of देवपाल says उपवस्तु-रशनमौपवस्त्रं तत्पुनर्ग्रहणार्थं हविष्यान्न शाकमाषलवणमांसवर्जम्। व्रीहियवपयोघृतप्रभृतिभिर्भुक्त्वा ।

129. स वा एष महानज आत्मा...तमेतं वेदानुवचनेन ब्राह्मणा विविदिषन्ति यज्ञेन दानेन तपसाऽनाशकेन । बृह. उ. IV. 4. 22. Vide शाङ्करभाष्य on वेदान्तसूत्र III 4.26 and 33 for the explanation of this Up passage.

130 तपश्च फलसिद्धित्वाल्लोकवत्। जै. III. 8. 9. शबर 'तप: श्रूयते ह्यहं नाश्नामि ह्यह नाश्नाति इति। तत्र सन्देह किमार्त्विजं तप याजमानमिति। याजमानं तप इति।'

131 असकृज्जलपानाच्च ताम्बूलस्य च भक्षणात् । उपवास प्रदुष्येत्तु दिवा स्वापाच्च मैथुनात्॥ देवल q. by अपरार्क p. 199, स्मृतिच॰ II. p. 355. The गरुडपुराण (I. 128. 7–8) has almost the same verse.

north or south, or on the Visuva day (day of equinox), and on an eclipse of the sun or the moon and bathes he is freed from all sins[132]. Manu XI. 166 (=Agnipurāna 169.31) prescribes a fast for three days as a penance for theft of grass, firewood, tree, dry food (i e. grains of rice), jaggery, clothes, hide and flesh. The Anuśāsanaparva (106 1) remarks[133] that men of all varnas and even Mlecchas thought highly of fasts and that chapter contains an exaggerated eulogy of fasting Almost all religions (except Zoroastrianism) such as the Hebrew, Christian (in Lent) and Moslem (in Ramjan) emphasize the necessity of fasting as a discipline or as a preparation for penitence The Bhavisya-purāna (I., chap 16, 12–14) states that those who have not kindled sacred fires can please the gods by vratas, restraints, gifts and particularly by upavāsas and points out (verses 18–22) what substances (eatables) should be given up from the first to the 15th tithi in each fortnight In the Śatapatha Brāhmana and the śrauta and grhya sūtras the word upavasatha is used in the sense of 'upavāsa' and is derived from 'vas' (to dwell) with 'upa'. Vide H of Dh. vol II. p 1010 and n 2276 for the Śat Br. The Khādira gr II. 1 4, Gobhila gr I. 6 2, Kauśika-sūtra I. 31 employ the word upavasatha Āp Dh S. II 1 1 4–5 prescribe an upavāsa for husband and wife on parvan days and if they cannot totally abstain from food they should eat only once by day food proper for upavāsa Aparārka p. 199, Smr C (śrāddha p 355) and Krtya-ratnākara quote a verse from Vyāsa deriving the word upavāsa[133a]. The Āp Dh S. II. 5 9–13, Baud. Dh II. 7 32, Vas 6 21 and Śān gr. II 16 5 have the same verse viz. 'an āhitāgni, a draught ox and brahmacārin, these three fulfill (their work) by eating, they cannot fulfill their duties by non-eating'. This is explained as not applying to prāyaścittas (Baud. Dh Ś II. 7 34) and to fasts on Ekādaśī. The Śāntiparva 323 17 states 'Just as a dirty garment is afterwards cleansed by water, so to those who are heated in (the fire of) fasting inexhaustible happiness for a long time comes.' Sānti 79 18, however, says 'merely emaciating the body by fasting is not tapas, but ahimsā, truthfulness, freedom from cruelty, restraint and compassion are tapas'.

---

132. अयने विषुवे चैव चन्द्रसूर्यग्रहे तथा। अहोरात्रोषितः स्नात्वा सर्वपापैः प्रमुच्यते॥ वृक्ष q. by परा मा I 1 p 438.

133. सर्वेषामेव वर्णानां म्लेच्छानां च पितामह। उपवासे मतिरियं कारणं च न विग्रहे॥ अनुशासन 166 1.

133a 'उपावृत्तस्य पापेभ्यो यस्तु वासो गुणैः सह। उपवासः स विज्ञेयः सर्वभोगविवर्जितः अपरार्क p. 199. गुणैः means 'क्षमादिभिः' and वास. means 'जिघमेनावस्थानम्.'

Tirthayātrā:—Pilgrimage will be dealt with exhaustively in a later section. It was believed that going on a pilgrimage and bathing in such holy rivers as the Ganges freed a man from sins. Visnu Dh. S. (35.6) lays down that those guilty of mahāpātakas may become pure by Aśvamedha sacrifice or by visiting all the sacred places on the earth. Devala says that a man removes the consequences of such grave sins as the murder of a brāhmana that he may have committed unintentionally by the performance of great sacrifices or by going on a pilgrimage. Parāśara (XII. 58 ff) prescribes[134] pilgrimage to see Rāma's bridge to Lankā for a murderer of a brāhmana who has studied the four Vedas. Devala states: 'a man becomes freed from sin by approaching holy places and shrines, brāhmaṇas that practise austerities, that all rivers that fall into the ocean, all great mountains, all shrines and all forests are holy.' The Matsyapurāna (184 18) says that a heap of sins as big as the mountain Meru or Mandara becomes destroyed when man reaches Avimukta (Benares). The Kūrmapurāna[135] (pūrvārdha 29.3) says 'I do not see any other expiation for destroying all sins in the Kaliyuga for all beings except Benares'. Even in the times of the Peshwas of Poona pilgrimage was prescribed for brāhmana murder (vide 'Selections from Peshwa Records,' vol. 43 p. 107) and the brāhmanas were ordered that after the sinner performed the penance they were to dine with him and recognize that he had been purified In an order dated śake 1659 (1737 AD) the Peshwa Bajirao the first informs the Deshmukhas, Deshpandes and Mukadams that four brothers named Zende approached him with the story that their father was born when their paternal grandmother lived with one Pilaji Zende after she became a widow and that she intended to remarry that man but that had to be postponed owing to famine, that the caste meeting were prepared to take them into the 134 चातुर्विद्योपपन्ने तु विधने ब्रह्मघातके। समुद्रसेतुगमनं प्रायश्चित्तं विनिर्दिशेत्॥ पराशर XII 58 q. by अपरार्क p. 1061, प्राय. वि. p 45. The प्रा प्रकाश (folio 66 a and b) remarks. 'ब्रह्महत्याव्रतमुपक्रम्य भविष्यपुराणे। विन्ध्याद्दक्षिणतो यस्य निवासः परिकीर्तितः। पराशरमतं तस्य सेतुबन्धस्य दर्शनम्॥ इति।..अत्र च विन्ध्योत्तरवर्तिन षष्ठ्यधिकशतत्रययोजनगमनेन तावत्संख्याकप्राजापत्यापनोद्यब्रह्महत्यापनोदोक्तरतीर्थाद्युत्कृष्टैकैकयोजनगमनस्यैकैकप्राजापत्यतुल्यत्वसमर्थाद्युक्तं भवति।'.

---

135. नान्यत्पश्यामि जन्तूना मुक्त्वा वाराणसीं पुरीम्। सर्वपापप्रशमनं प्रायश्चित्तं कलौ युगे॥ कूर्मपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 29.3) q by परा. मा II. 2 p. 162; अभिसंगम्य तीर्थानि पुण्यान्यायतनानि च। नरः पापात्प्रमुच्येत ब्राह्मणांश्च तपस्विनः॥ सर्वाः समुद्गाः पुण्याः सर्वे पुण्या नगोत्तमा। सर्वमायतनं पुण्यं सर्वे पुण्या वनाश्रया॥ देवल q. by परा. मा II. 2 p. 201, प्रा. प्रकाश folio 66 b.

caste and hold them pure if a Government order was issued Then the Peshwa issued an order that they should go to Tulapur on the banks of the Bhīmā river and that they and their male progeny together with their wives should be restored back to the caste and complete association with them as to taking food and marriage be carried on with them from generation to generation.[136] The Pr. Prakāśa quotes a verse from the Bhavisya-purāna about the penance for brāhmana murder to the effect that for him who dwells to the north of the Vindhya mountain Parāśara prescribes the sight of Setubandha as a penance and then remarks that a man from the north of Vindhya has to travel 360 yojanas to reach Setubandha and that since 360 Prājāpatya penances are declared to be enough to remove the sin of brahmahatyā, it impliedly follows that each yojana towards a tīrtha is equal to one Prājāpatya. The Smrtyar-thasāra (pp. 149–150) quotes several verses from the Purānas stating that gods like Brahmā, Visnu and Śiva, great sages like Bhrgu, Vasistha and Viśvāmitra, great kings like Hariscandra, Nala, Sagara obtained greatness by means of tīrthas and that Pāndavas, Śrī Krsna, Nārada, Vyāsa and other sages engaged in pilgrimages for securing kingdoms and for removal of evil fortune. This subject of tīrthas will be dealt with at length in a separate section.

---

136. Vide राजवाडे खण्ड 6 letter 113 p 225

CHAPTER III

PRĀYAŚCITTA; ITS ORIGIN, DERIVATION AND MEANING

It is now necessary to turn to prāyaścittas as removers of sin. A number of subjects will fall to be treated here.

First, an attempt must be made to understand the etymology and meaning of the word 'prāyaścitta' in ancient times There are two forms of the word, prāyaścitti and prāyaścitta, which occur in Vedic works without distinction of meaning and both forms are fairly old, though prāyaścitti appears to be the older of the two The form prāyaścitti frequently occurs in the Tai. S (as in II. 1.2,4, II. 1 4.1, III. 1.3 2-3, V 1.9.3, V. 3 12.1)[136a]. In some of these passages no question of sin arises. The word means 'doing some thing which would get rid of some accidental happening or mishap such as the breaking of an ukhā (a pot or saucepan for boiling or cooking) or the sun's losing its brilliance.' In Tai S. V. 3.12.1 the word is used in the sense of an expiation for a sin. So even in very old books the word had two shades of meaning. The Kausītaki[137] Br. (vi. 12) states: "they say 'whatever mistake or excess occurs in the sacrifice that affects the priest brahmā, that he treats with the threefold learning (i. e. the three Vedas)". The word also occurs in the Atharvaveda XIV. 1 30, Vāj. S. 39.12 (in close proximity to niskrti), in the Ait. Br. V 27, in the Śat. Br. IV. 5. 7.1, VII. 1.4 9, XI. 5.3 8, XII. 4.1 6 and in other works also The form prāyaścitta occurs in Kausītaki Br. V. 9, VI. 12 and elsewhere. The Āśv. Śr. III 10.38 and Śānkhāyana Śr. III 19.1 respectively employ the words prāyaścitti and prāyaścitta[138]. In Pār gr I.

---

136 a असावादित्यो न व्यरोचत तस्मै देवाः प्रायश्चित्तिमैच्छन् । तै. सं. II. 1.2 4, II 1.4.1; यदि भिद्येत तैरेव कपालैः संसृजेत्सैव ततः प्रायश्चित्तिः । तै सं V. 1.9,3, एष वै प्रजापतिं सर्वं करोति योऽश्वमेधेन यजते सर्व एव भवति सर्वस्य वा एषा प्रायश्चित्तिः सर्वस्य भेषजम् । तै स V. 3.12 1

137 यद्वै यज्ञस्य स्खलितं वोल्बणं वा भवति ब्रह्मण एव तत्प्राहुस्तन्न त्रय्या विद्यया भिषज्यति । कौषीतकि ब्रा. VI. 12.

138. विध्यपराधे प्रायश्चित्तिः । आश्व श्रौ III. 10, विध्यपराधे प्रायश्चित्तम् । अथैलोपे प्रतिनिधि । शां श्रौ III 19 1; विध्यपराधे प्रायश्चित्तं दोषनिर्घातार्थं विधीयतेऽनाज्ञाते विशेषे ध्यान नारायणस्य तज्जपेज्जाहोमाश्च हननार्थेति। वैखानसश्रौतसूत्र 20 1 (ed by

(Continued on the next page)

10 the form 'prāyaścitti' is employed. Jai. in several places employs the word prāyaścitta (as in VI 3 7, VI 4.10, VI 5.45 and 49, XII. 3 16). Śabara[139] on the last sūtra (XII. 3.16) explains that the prāyaścittas (in the Śruti texts) are of two kinds, viz some are meant to make good the defect in the procedure and materials of sacrifice which arises or befalls through some neglect or heedlessness, while others are subsidiary parts of a rite when an occasion arises i e they are undertaken to atone for not doing what is ordained or doing something which is forbidden (e g non-performance of daily Agnihotra even though the sun rises) The Śat. Br[140] XII 4 and Ait Br. 32 2–11 provide some interesting and amusing examples of the mishaps for which prāyaścittas are provided e. g when a vicious boar, ram or dog runs between the sacrifical fires, or if Agnihotra milk gets spilled while the cow is being milked or if the milk pot is turned upside down or if it were to break or if the cow were to lie down while being milked, or if the fire were to go out after the first libation is offered etc Vide also Mānava-grhya I 3, Hir. gr I. 5 1–16, Bhāradvāja gr II 32, Kauśika-sūtra 46. 14–55, Āśv Śr III 10 and Āśv gr. III. 6–7 for similar occurrences and prāyaścittas The Mahābhāsya on Pān. VI 1.157 explains[141] both prāyaścitti and prāyaścitta on the analogy of the word Puraskara Prāyaścittas may be said to be, in the language of the Mīmāmsā, either kratvartha or puruṣārtha The former are prescribed in the Śrautasūtras. It is the latter kind of prāyaścittas that are generally dealt with in Smrti works on prāyaścitta In this work the prāyaścittas mentioned in Śrauta

---

(Continued from the last page)

Caland). The com. Nārāyana explains आप श्रौ III. 10 as follows विहितस्याकरणेऽन्यथाकरणे च प्रायश्चित्तिः कर्तव्या । प्रायो विनाश इति सन्धानम् । विनष्टसन्धानं प्रायश्चित्तिरित्युक्त भवति ।

139. 'प्रायश्चित्तानि द्विप्रकाराणि । कानिचिद्वैगुण्यस्य प्रमादादापतितस्य समाधानार्थानि कानिचिन्निमित्ते कर्माङ्गानि । तत्र समाधानार्थानि यथा यद्यूक्तो यज्ञ आर्तिमियात् भू स्वाहेति गार्हपत्ये जुहुयात् । शबर on जै XII. 3 16, 'यानि तु न दोषनिर्घातार्थानि तेषु समुच्चय । कानि पुनस्तानि यानि श्रुतस्याक्रियया प्रतिषिद्धसेवनानि तान्युच्यन्ते । यथा यस्याहतमग्निहोत्र सूर्योऽभ्युदियान्मैत्रं चरु निर्वपेत् सौर्यमेककपालम् । शबर on जै XII. 3 17 Compare आप श्रौ IX 1 1 श्रुतिलक्षण प्रायश्चित्त विध्यपराधे विधीयते । 'जपो होम इज्या च । दोषनिर्घातार्थानि भवन्ति ।

140 यस्याग्निहोत्र दोह्यमान स्कन्देत् कि तत्र कर्म का प्रायश्चित्तिरिति । शतपथ XII. 4 1.6

141 प्रायस्य चित्तिचित्तयो । महाभाष्य on 'पारस्करप्रभृतीनि च संज्ञायाम्' । पा. VI 1.157 (ed by Kielhorn, vol III p 96) works are passed over, as they have either been mentioned in vol. II. or were of rare occurrence even in olden days.

Most digests and commentaries derive the word prāyaścitta relying on a verse (attributed to Angiras[142] by some) from prāya (meaning 'tapas') and citta (meaning resolve or firm belief), the idea being that prāyaścittas are so called because of their association with or emergence from a resolve to undergo tapas or because of the firm belief that it will be a means of the removal of sin. Various other derivations are suggested by some writers. The Bālambhatti[143] on Yāj. III. 206 quotes a half verse to the effect that 'prāya' means 'sin' and 'citta' means 'purification', which had been quoted by Paksadharamiśra[144], Bhaktūpādhyāya and the Todarānanda, but the Pr. M. (p. 2) says that the source or authenticity of that verse is doubtful. Hemādri refers to an unnamed bhāsyakāra's explanation viz. 'prāya' means 'destruction' and 'citta' means 'joining together' and prāyaścitta means the making good what is lost and that the word denotes a naimittika action on sin.

The Par. M. quotes a smrti text[145] and says that that is prāyaścitta whereby the 'citta' (the mind) of a repentant sinner is made generally (prāyaśah) free (from emotion i. e brought to a normal state) by the parsad (assembly of learned brāhmanas). Here 'prāyah' seems to be taken as equal to 'prāyaśaḥ' and 'citta' has its usual sense. In Sāyana's[146] comment on the 142 प्रायो नाम तप प्रोक्तं चित्तं निश्चय उच्यते। तपोनिश्चयसंयोगात्प्रायश्चित्तमिति स्मृतम्॥ आङ्गिरस् acc to हरदत्त on गौ. 22.1., प्राय वि. p 2 (० निश्चयसंयुक्तं). मस्करि on गौ 19.20 quotes व्याघ्र as प्रायो ...चित्तं संयम उच्यते। तप संयमसंयुक्तं०, while प्राय प्रकरण p. 8 reads चित्तं नियम उच्यते.

---

143 तदुक्तम्। प्राय. पापं विनिर्दिष्टं चित्तं तस्य विशोधनम्। इति। चतुर्विंशतिमते ऽप्येवम्। तथा पापनिवर्तनक्षमधर्मविशेषे योगरूढोऽयं शब्द इति तत्त्वम्। बालम्भट्टी on या. III. 206.

144. यत्तु पक्षधरमिश्रभक्तूपाध्यायटोडरानन्दकृत —प्राय. पापं विजानीयाच्चित्तं तस्य विशोधनमिति च पेठुस्तन्नाकरश्चिन्त्य। प्राय. म. p. 2, भाष्यकारस्तु प्रायो विनाश. चित्तं सन्धान विनष्टस्य सन्धानमिति विभागयोगेन प्रायश्चित्तशब्द पापक्षयार्थे नैमित्तिके कर्मविशेषे वर्तते। हेमाद्रि (on प्राय०) p, 989.

145. प्रायश्चश्च समं चित्तं चारयित्वा प्रदीयते। पर्षदा कार्यते यत्तु प्रायश्चित्तमिति स्मृतम्॥ पापिनोऽनुतापिनश्च चित्तं व्याकुलं सत् विषमं भवति तच्च पर्षदा चेन व्रताद्युष्ठानेन प्रायशोऽवश्यं समं कार्यते तद्व्रतं प्रायश्चित्तम्। व्रतं चारयित्वा चित्तवैषम्यनिमित्तं पापं प्रदीयते खण्ड्यते विनाश्यते इत्यर्थ.। परा. मा. II part 1 p. 3.

146. अयं अयः प्राप्तिः प्रकर्षेणाय. प्रायः। विहितधर्माकरणस्य प्राप्तिरित्यर्थः। तत्प्रकार-विषयं चित्तं चित्तिर्ज्ञानम्। तत्पूर्वकाद्युष्ठानानि प्रायश्चित्तानि। com. on सामविधानब्रा. I, 5,1.

Sāmavidhāna Br I 5 1 another derivation is suggested viz that 'prāyah' is composed of two parts 'pra' and 'ayah' and means 'happening or finding' (of the non-performance of what is ordained) and 'citta' means 'knowledge'; and so religious observances after knowing a certain happening are called prāyaścittas. The Pr Vi p 3 and Pr. Tattva p 467 quote Hārīta and give[147] yet another derivation (from 'prayata' pure and 'cita' collected), in accordance with which 'prāyaścitta' means such actions as tapas, gifts and sacrifices whereby a man becomes purified (prayata) and destroys his accumulated sins ('cita' being equal to 'upacita'), just as clothes are made clean by the employment of salts, moist heat, putting in boiling water on a fire, and washing in water Hence, as the Mit says, the word prāyaścitta conventionally[148] denotes a certain act or rite of the naimittika type (since it takes place only when an occasion arises) intended for the destruction of sin (and therefore being desired for removal of sin it may also be called kāmya) The Par. M quotes verses from Brhaspati's[149] work of which the section on prāyaścitta holds at the beginning and at the conclusion thereof that prāyaścitta is naimittika[150] (to be performed when a cause

147 तत्र हारीत । प्रयतत्वाद्वौपचितमशुभं कर्म नाशयतीति प्रायश्चित्तमिति । यत्तपः-प्रभृतिकं कर्म उपचितं सञ्चितमशुभ पाप नाशयतीति । कृततत्कर्मभिः कर्तृ प्रयतत्वाद्वा । शुद्धत्वा-देव तत्प्रायश्चित्तम् । तथा च पुनर्हारीत । यथा क्षारोपस्वेदच्छण्डनिर्णोदनप्रक्षालनादि-भिर्वाससि शुध्यन्ति एवं तपोदानयज्ञै पापकृतः शुद्धिमुपयन्ति । प्राय तत्त्व p 467, vide also प्राय. वि. p. 3 for the first sūtra and p. 17 for the rest of the passage of हारीत The मद. पा. p 703 quotes the passage from यथा क्षारोप. मद पा p 704 explains च्छण्डनिर्णोदन as 'चुल्ल्यधिश्रयणादिना तत्क्लेदनम्' and मा प्रकाश (folio 9a) 'च्छण्ड अग्नि. निर्णोदन तस्मिन्नधिश्रयणं क्लेदनमिति'

148 प्रायश्चित्तशब्दश्चाय पापक्षयार्थे नैमित्तिके कर्मविशेषे रूढ । मिता on या. III 220, which is q by स्मृतिमु (प्राय) p 859, परा मा II part 1 p. 3

149 तथा च बृहस्पतिः प्रायश्चित्तप्रकरणस्योपक्रमोपसहारयो· नैमित्तिकत्वं दर्शयति । नैमित्तिकं धर्मजात गदतो मे निबोधत । विहितस्याननुष्ठानात् प्रतिषिद्धनिषेवणात् । प्रायश्चित्त यत्क्रियते तन्नैमित्तिकमुच्यते । इत्युपक्रम । नैमित्तिकं समाख्यात प्रायश्चित्तं क्षमासत. । इत्युपसंहारश्च । परा मा. II part 1 p. 7, also in जालम्भट्टी on या III 206 and प्राय प्रकाश folio 7 b तथा च जाबाल· । अत· काम्य नैमित्तिकं च प्रायश्चित्तमिति स्थिति. मा प्रकाश folio 8a,

150 Actions are divided into three kinds, nitya, naimittika and kāmya Nitya acts are those like sandhyā-vandana (which are obligatory and performed daily as a duty and which if not performed lead to sinfulness), naimittika are those acts which have to be done only on some occasion (as a bath on an eclipse) and kāmya rites are those which are performed out of a desire to secure some object (as the sacrifice called putresti for a son), Manu in XI 53 says 'therefore (because of the remnants of the guilt of or occasion arises). Jābāla q in the Pr. Prakāśa holds that prāyaścitta partakes of the nature of both naimittika and kāmya actions. The Pr. Prakāśa finds fault with the definitions of prāyaścitta proposed by the Kalpataru, Śūlapāni and others and ultimately arrives at the conclusion that those alone are prāyaścittas which are so spoken of by the learned, just as on Jaimini II. 1.32 (tac-codakesu mantrākhyā) Bhattācārya explains that mantras are those which the respectable yājñikas and those who studied the Vedas so designate[150a]

(Continued on the next page)

Sins as stated by Brhaspati[151] and others are of two kinds, viz. intentionally committed and unintentionally committed.

Great divergence of views has prevailed from very ancient times as to whether prāyaścittas can destroy sins intentionally committed Manu XI. 45 and Yāj. III. 226 are positive that sins committed unintentionally are destroyed by prāyaścittas or by the study of the Veda The difficulty arises about sins committed intentionally or with full knowledge. Gaut. (19. 3–6 = Vas. 22. 2–5) states two views,[151a] one holding that prāyaścitta should not be performed since deeds (here sinful deeds) are not destroyed (except by experiencing the consequences thereof), the other view holding that prāyaścitta should be per-crimes in former lives men are born blind or idiots &c.) penances must always be performed for the sake of purification, because those whose sins have not been expiated are born with disgraceful marks.' Though Manu employs the word 'nityam' here, what is meant is that when a sin is committed, a prāyaścitta must necessarily be performed and it is not left to the volition of the sinner whether to perform it or not Vide Mit on Yāj III. 220 But it does not follow from this that if prāyaścitta for removing a sin is not performed, another sin is thereby committed, for in that case there would be anavasthā (regressus ad infinitum)

---

(Continued from the last page)

150 a 'यथा भट्टाचार्यैस्तत्रोदकेषु मन्त्रास्त्येति ..यत्र वैदिकयाज्ञिकानामभियुक्तानां मन्त्र इति प्रसिद्धिः स मन्त्र इति सूत्रतात्पर्ये वर्णितमेवमिहापि यत्राभियुक्तानां प्रायश्चित्तप्रसिद्धिस्तत्प्रायश्चित्तमिति लक्षणे मद्वयाज्ञवल्क्यवाक्यानां तात्पर्यमुन्नेयम्। folio 76 of प्रा. प्रकाश Ms.

151. कामाकामकृतं स्वेवं महापापं द्विधा स्मृतम्। पुरुषापेक्षया चैव निष्कृतिर्द्विविधा स्मृता॥ बृहस्पति q. by प्राय वि p. 24, परा मा II part 1 p 13 (first half).

151 a तत्र प्रायश्चित्तं कुर्यान्न कुर्यादिति मीमांसन्ते । न कुर्यादित्याहु· । न हि कर्म क्षीयत इति। कुर्यादित्यपरम्। गौ 19 3 6 = वासिष्ठ 22 2–5 (the last being कुर्यादित्येव तस्माच्छ्रुतिनिबन्धनात्) न कुर्यादित्याहु This is the पूर्वपक्ष view The सिद्धान्त is 'कुर्यात्' which is supported by indications derived from vedic passages formed (for the removal of the effects of sin). The latter relies upon certain indications in Vedic passages. Gaut. relies upon four such passages. The first says "[152] 'after performing the punahstoma[153] one can come back to (become fit for) soma sacrifice (i. e. for Vedic rites in general). Another indication is 'after performing Vrātyastoma (one becomes fit for Vedic sacrifices).' A third is: 'He, who offers the Aśvamedha sacrifice, crosses beyond all sin, beyond brāhmana murder'. The fourth is one should make a person charged with grave sins perform the Agnistut Vasistha also (20 1–2) gives expression to the two views about the efficacy of penances.[154] Manu XI. 45 (latter half) states, that according to some, prāyaścittas may be prescribed for the removal of intentionally committed sins from indications contained in the Vedas. It cannot be said that these Śruti passages are mere arthavādas (i. e laudatory texts). They must really be taken, though expressed in the form of ordinary arthavādas, as laying down (a vidhi) that one desirous of destroying his sins should perform Aśvamedha and the other sacrifices mentioned In this case the maxim of rātrisattra[155] applies (vide Jai. IV. 3. 17–19). There are certain sattras (sacrifices extending over more than twelve days) called Trayo-

---

152. पुन स्तोमेनेष्ट्वा पुन सवनमायान्तीति विज्ञायते । व्रात्यस्तोमैश्चेष्ट्वा । तरति सर्वं पाप्मानं तरति ब्रह्महत्यां योऽश्वमेधेन यजते । अग्निष्टुताभिशस्यमानं याजयेदिति च । गौ 19.7–10. वसिष्ठ (22.6) is the same as गौ 19 9, while it (22 7) reads इति चाभिशस्तो गोसवेनाभिष्टुता यजेत तरति सर्वं is तै. सं V 3 12 2 quoted above and शतपथब्रा XIII 3 1 1. गोसव and अभिष्टुत् are different sacrifices The गोसव is a strange rite, for which vide H of Dh. vol II p 1213 n. 2644. It is described in तै ब्रा II. 7 6.

153 The Punahstoma is a śrauta sacrifice, of the class called ekāha (i e , performed in one day) acc to Haradatta. Vide Lātyāyana-śrauta IX 4 and 5 for its efficacy The Vrātyastoma is also an ekāha, which was prescribed for those whose upanayana was not performed at the proper time (and who had therefore become patita–sāvitrika). Yāj I, 38 provides vrātyastoma for patitasāvitrika. Vide H of Dh vol II p 377 and p 385 (for its description from the Tāndya Brāhmana) The Agnistut is an ekāha (vide Tai Br II 7 12 and Āśv Śr IX. 7 22–25) Manu XI 74 prescribes Aśvamedha, Gosava or Agnistut and several other sacrifices for the removal of the grave sin of brāhmana murder.

154 अनभिसन्धिकृते प्रायश्चित्तमपराधे । अभिसन्धिकृतेप्येके । वसिष्ठ 20 1–2.

155. रात्री. प्रकृत्य श्रूयते प्रतितिष्ठन्ति ह वा य एता रात्रीरुपयन्ति । ब्रह्मवर्चस्विनोऽन्नादा भवन्ति य एता उपयन्ति । इति । तत्र सन्देह । किं ते फलार्थवादा उत फलविधय इति । शबर on जैमिनि IV 3. 17. The second alternative is the सिद्धान्त view.. Vide ताण्ड्यब्राह्मण 23.2.4 for the passage प्रतितिष्ठन्ति.. उपयन्ति । daśarātra, Caturdaśarātra and so on. All these are called rātrisattras. With reference to these a Vedic passage says 'those who approach (i. e. perform) these rātrisattras attain stability (long life or super-eminence)'. In the text prescribing the rātrisattras there is no mention of any special reward for performance. Therefore 'stability' (pratiṣṭhā) contained in the passage must be held to be the reward of the performance of rātrisattras and not mere heaven (which is the reward of all sacrifices for which no special reward is mentioned, according to Jai. IV. 3. 15-16). The same maxim applies to passages like Yāj III. 226 which say that sin is removed by penances[156]. Medhātithi draws attention to the story in the Tai. S. VI. 2.7 5, Kāthaka S. VIII. 5, Ait Br 35.2 that Indra consigned yatis to Śālāvṛkas (dogs or wolves) and had to perform the rites called Upahavya to get rid of the sin. Manu states his own opinion in the next verse (XI. 46) that sins committed unintentionally are destroyed by the recitation of Vedic texts and sins committed intentionally through folly are destroyed by various prāyaścittas. Yāj. III. 226 (latter half) appears to hold that prāyaścittas do not destroy sins intentionally committed, but the sinner undergoing the prescribed penance becomes fit to be associated with other people on account of the texts (laying down the prāyaścittas); but Yāj. implies, it seems, that the results of sin intentionally committed (such as Hell and the like) are not got rid of. Manu XI. 189 prohibiting social intercourse with sinners who have not performed penance practically conveys the same idea as that of Yāj in III. 226 (latter half). Yāj. III. 220 observes that a man guilty of pātakas should perform prāyaścitta for his own purification (here and in the next world); in this way (i. e if he performs penance) his inner soul recovers its composure and the people also become satisfied. This verse puts in a nutshell the purposes of prāyaścittas as conceived by the smṛtis, viz. purging of sin (or purification), the satisfaction of the sinner's mind, admission to intercourse with

---

156 'पुन स्तोमेनेष्ट्वा ..यजते इति ।...न चेदमर्थवादमात्रम्। अधिकारिविशेषणाकाक्षया रात्रिसत्रन्यायेनार्थवादिकफलस्यैव कल्पनाया न्याय्यत्वात्। अतो युक्तं प्रायश्चित्तैरेत्येव इति। मिता on या III 226, vide प्राय वि p 9 and p 18 for similar views 'अतो रात्रिसत्रन्यायेनार्थवादिकपापक्षयकामिना प्रायश्चित्तं कर्तव्यमिति निर्णीतम्। प्राय. वि p. 18. The उपहव्य sacrifice is prescribed for one desirous of prosperity, ownership of a village or offspring. Vide कात्या. श्रौ सू 22.8.7 'भूतिकामो वा ग्रामकामो वा प्रजाकामो वोपहव्येन यजेत,' all people. Chāgaleya[157] holds that prāyaścittas free the sinner from the consequences of sins committed unintentionally, but no penance exists which frees a man from the consequences of sins knowingly committed except in the case of upapātakas and in suicides or attempts at suicide. The Par. M. (II. 1 pp 200-201) cites a verse of Jābāli and verses of Devala setting forth the two views about the efficacy of prāyaścittas, while it also cites the view of Baudhāyana-smṛti that there is no prāyaścitta for sins committed knowingly and the view of Angiras that the penance is double in the latter case[158]. Angiras further says that prāyaścittas do destroy the sin arising from committing acts that are forbidden and the like, just as the rising sun removes darkness. Manu XI. 47 provides: 'A twice-born man having become liable to perform a penance (for a sin), whether he committed it through fate or by some act committed in a former existence, must not have intercourse with virtuous men until he performs the proper penance.' Āp. Dh. S (I. 9. 24. 24-25) provides 'If a man slays a guru (father, Vedic teacher &c.) or a brāhmaṇa who has studied the Veda and finished the ceremonies of a soma sacrifice he shall live according to these very rules (contained in Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 10-32) until his last breath. He cannot be purified (of the sin of the murder of a guru or learned brāhmaṇa) in this life. But his sin is removed (at his death)'.[159] It appears to follow from Āpastamba's words that penance ending in death destroys the sin. The same was the view of Aṅgiras, Yama and others.

---

157. छागलेयेऽपि। प्रायश्चित्तकालानां कालवार्ता न विद्यते। उपपातक एव स्यात्तथा चान्योपघाते॥ अस्यार्थः। कालवार्ता ज्ञानपूर्वकपापे नरकभोगनिवारकं प्रायश्चित्तं न विद्यते। उपपातकात्मघातनयोस्तु ज्ञानपूर्वकालेऽपि स्यादेवेत्यत एवोक्तं। आत्मघातनार्थं विषभक्षणे कृते यदि जीवति तदा प्रायश्चित्तं विद्यते यदा मृतस्तदा तद्भक्षितमुखा कर्तव्यनिर्णयभयादपि प्रायश्चित्तं विद्यते इति न विरोधः। नद्. पा p. 705. The half verse प्रायश्चित्तं विद्यते occurs in परा मा II part 1 p 201.

158. अकामतः कृते पापे प्रायश्चित्तं न कामतः। स्वाध्यकामकृते त्वन्यद्विगुणं द्वादिपूर्वके॥ आदित्यपु q. by परा मा. II part 1 p 201; अस्ति निषिद्धकृतिजन्यं पापं तज्ज्ञानकृतं तु प्रायश्चित्तम्। तथा चाङ्गिराः। उद्यन्यदुद्यथादित्यस्तमः सर्वं व्यपोहति। तद्वत्कल्याणमानवनिहन्ति सर्वं पापं व्यपोहति। पापं चेत्कृत्वा कृत्वा कल्याणमभिपद्यते। मुच्यते पातकैः सर्वैरहाञ्चैरिव चन्द्रमाः॥ कल्याणं प्रायश्चित्तम्। प्रा. प्रकाश folio 6a.

159. गुरुं हत्वा श्रोत्रियं वा कर्ममनातनेतैनेव विधिनोत्तमादुच्छ्वासाञ्चरेत्। नास्यास्मिंल्लोके प्रत्यापत्तिर्विद्यते कालमर्यं तु निर्हरन्ति। आप. ध सू I. 9 24 24-25 Vide also आप ध सू. I. 10. 28 18 for the same words हरदत्त gives his own and another's interpretation of आप. ध सू. I 9 24 24-25 'अस्मिंल्लोके जीविते प्रत्यापत्तिः शुद्धिर्नास्तीत्यर्थः। कालमर्यं तु निर्हरन्ति। तस्य गुर्वादिभिः संस्कारादिः कर्तव्य इति भावः। अन्ये तु पूर्वं सूत्रं तावद्व्याख्यं मन्यन्ते। प्रत्यापत्तिः गुर्वादिभिः गुर्वादिभावेन सम्बन्ध इति।'.

In this conflict among the authors of smrtis the solution proposed by the Mit. on Yāj III. 226 has been accepted by most medieval writers and is as follows[160]. The potentialities and consequences of sins are twofold, viz those leading to Hell and the others preventing intercourse with members of the society to which the sinner belongs Therefore, even though a prāyaścitta may not be efficacious to prevent the first mentioned consequence (viz fall into Hell), there is nothing improper in prāyascitta being effective in removing the obstacle to association with other people. As to sinful acts that are not patanīya (do not cause loss of caste) prāyaścitta does destroy such sinfulness as expressly stated by Manu. XI. 46. Even as to sins that are patanīya and are committed intentionally, if a penance ending in death is undergone as laid down by Manu XI. 73, Yāj III 247–248 and Gaut 22. 2–3 for brāhmana murder; Manu XI. 90–91, Yāj III. 253, Gaut 23 1 for drinking surā; Gaut 23 8–11, Manu XI 103–104 and Yāj. III. 259 for sexual intercourse with the guru's wife; Manu XI. 99–100 and Yāj. III. 257 for theft of brāhmana's gold; then the sin is destroyed as stated by Āp. Dh S I 9 24 25 and I 10. 28.18 quoted above When Manu says (in XI. 89 latter half) that there is no penance for the sin of slaying a brāhmana intentionally, the proper interpretation of this read along with Manu XI. 46 quoted above is not that there is total absence of prāyaścitta in such a case, but that ordinary prāyascittas (such as those in Manu XI. 72) would not do in such a case, but only very heavy ones that would end in death. Medieval digests like the Prāyascitta-muktāvali (folio 32a) hold that according to the Kalivarjya section penance ending in death is forbidden in the case of brāhmana sinners and therefore a 160. यत्तु मनुवचनं 'इयं विशुद्धिरुदिता' इत्यादि (11 89) तदपीयमिति सर्वनामपरामृष्टद्वादशवार्षिकादिव्रतचर्याया एव 'कामतो ..विधीयते' इत्यनेन प्रतिषेधो न पुनः प्रायश्चित्तमात्रस्य। मरणान्तिकादेः प्रायश्चित्तस्य दर्शितत्वात्।.. द्वे हि पापस्य शक्ती नरकोत्पादिका व्यवहारनिरोधिका चेति। तत्रेतरशक्त्यविनाशेऽपि व्यवहारनिरोधिकाया शक्तेर्विनाशो नानुपपन्नस्तस्मात्पापानपगमेऽपि व्यवहार्यत्वं नानुपपन्नम्। यत्तु मनुवचनं (11 45) 'अकामतः...निदर्शनात्' इति तदपि कामकृते प्रायश्चित्तमाप्त्यर्थं न पुनः पापक्षयप्रतिपादनपरम्। अपतनीयेऽपि पुनः कामकृतेऽपि प्रायश्चित्तेन पापक्षयो भवत्येव 'अकामतः ..पृथग्विधैः॥' इति मनुस्मरणात् (11 46)। पतनीयेऽपि कर्मणि कामकृते मरणान्तिकप्रायश्चित्तेषु कृतेषु पापक्षयो भवत्येव फलान्तराभावात्। 'नास्यामुष्मिंल्लोके · निर्हरन्ते' इत्यापस्तम्बस्मरणात्। मिता on या III 226 वृद्धहारीत IX. 173 and Yama hold the view that intentional sins are destroyed by penances that end in death · प्रायश्चित्तैरपैत्येनो यदकार्यकृतं महत् (यदकामकृतं?)। कामतस्तु कृतं यत्तु मरणात्सिद्धिमृच्छति॥, महापातककर्तारश्चत्वारो मतिपूर्वकम्। अग्निं प्रविश्य शुध्यन्ति स्मात्वा महति वा क्रतौ॥ यम q by प्रा. प्रकाश, folio 16 (b), अपरार्क p. 1039 reads चत्वारोप्यविशेषत' The words of the मिता are quoted or paraphrased by subsequent works such as the Prāyaścittasāra (p 4).

brāhmana murderer can only be made to undergo the twelve years' penance.

The Par M. (II part 1 pp 201–203) sets out this view of the Mit and appears to hold it itself. It sets out another view also. Those who hold this latter view read Yaj. III. 226 as 'kāmatoऽvyavahāryastu' with an avagraha. The meaning then is that one who has performed the penance prescribed for a sin does not fall into Hell, but he cannot be allowed to associate with good men (śistas) if he is guilty of a wilful sin. There is a verse of Manu (XI 190 = Visnu Dh. S. 54,32) that one should not associate with those who slay children, who return evil for the good done to them, who slay those that come for protection and who kill women, even though they might have become purified by undergoing the appropriate penance. There is a similar verse of Yāj III 298 on which the comment of Vijñāneśvara is most interesting as indicative of the spirit of our medieval writers who were always oppressed by the might of words (Vedic or smrti) deemed as authoritative. The Mit remarks [161] 'the prohibition (contained in Yāj. III, 298) is based on the text alone (and not on logic or reasoning). What cannot a text do? There is nothing too heavy for a text. Therefore, even though a light penance is prescribed for slaying an adulterous woman, still there is a prohibition against associating with such slayers based on the words of the text'.

161. प्रायश्चित्तेन क्षीणदोषानपि न सव्यवहारेदिति वाचनिकोऽयं प्रतिषेध। 'किमिति वचनं न कुर्याज्ज हि वचनस्यातिभारोऽस्ति'। अतश्च यद्यपि व्यभिचारिणीना वधेऽप्येष एव प्रायश्चित्त तथापि वाचनिकोऽय संव्यवहारप्रतिषेध.। मिता on या III 298 The words किमिव हि वचन. भार. occur frequently in शाबरभाष्य, e g on जै II 2.27, III 2 3, III. 7 11, IV 3 38, V 4 17 etc On जै VI 1 44 (about the privilege of the rathakāra to consecrate Vedic fires) Sabara employs slightly different words 'न हि वचनस्यैवं किंचिदलभ्यं नाम.' Even Śankarācārya relies on these words of Sabara in his bhāsya on Vedāntasūtra III 4 32. When Yāj I 58 says that a son born of a brāhma form of marriage renders 21 generations holy (10 paternal ancestors, ten descendants and himself) Viśvarūpa says that this is all laudatory of the brāhma form and not to be taken seriously as it would be contrary to the doctrine of Karma, but then he turns round and says that it may be taken literally as stated by those who know Mīmāmsā 'स्मृतिमात्रमेतद्भूताना भाविना पावनाद्युपपत्तेः। उपपत्तौ वा कृतनाशाकृताभ्यागमप्रसङ्गात्। यद्वास्तु फलविधि। विवाहविशेषस्य फलविशेषापेक्षत्वात्। न त्वागमाद्युसारिण्यर्थेऽद्युपपत्तिरिति शक्यं वक्तुम्। तथा च नैयायिका —न हि वचनस्यातिभारोऽस्तीत्याहु'।' विश्वरूप on या I, 58. Vide Aparārka on Yāj II. 73–75 (p. 673) who says that one man's merit (punya) cannot be transferred to another and that Yāj. II. 73–75 are simply intended to frighten away witnesses from perjury as Nārada (ṛnādāna 200) clearly states.

This maxim is taken from the bhāsya of Śabara and is a favourite device with all Dharmaśāstra writers from Viśvarūpa downwards to justify any statement of the smrtis however illogical or exaggerated it might appear to be. The Pr. T. (pp. 544–545) quotes [162] the Mit. about the two śaktis of sin and its remarks on Yāj III. 298 and does not approve of them, relying on the words of Brhaspati that no decision should be arrived at on the bare words of the śāstra, but it should also be supported by reasoning and that the words 'slayers of women' do not refer to adulterous women but to innocent women (such as the wives of one's enemies). Nārada (sāhasa, verse 11) holds that those who are punished by the king with a fine of the first or second (madhyama) kind can be allowed to associate with other members of society but those who are awarded the highest fine should not be spoken to by others [162a]. Those who take the view of the sinner's inability to associate with other men even after undergoing penance rely also upon Vedānta-sūtra III. 4. 43 (bahis-tūbhayathāpi smrterācārācca). The Par. M. very rightly points [163] out that the sūtra refers to those who after going in for life-long celibacy abandon the duties of that stage of life (āśrama) and that it does not refer to householders and quotes a verse of Kauśika in support. The Smrti-muktāphala (Pr., pp. 867–868) refers to this discussion contained in the Par. M. The Pr. M. (p. 7) appears [164] to hold that the great Śankarācārya explained

---

162. एतेन यद्यपि व्यभिचारिस्त्री प्रतिषेध इति मिताक्षरोक्तं न युक्तिसहम्। केवलं शास्त्रमाश्रित्य न कर्तव्यो विनिर्णयः। युक्तिहीनविचारे तु धर्महानिः प्रजायते। पापे गुरुणि गुरूणि स्वल्पान्यल्पे च तद्विद। प्रायश्चित्तानि मैत्रेय जगुः स्वायम्भुवादयः। इति बृहस्पतिवचनात्। माध. त p 545.

162 a. स्यातां संव्यवहार्यौ तु धृतदण्डौ तु पूर्वयोः। धृतदण्डोऽप्यसम्भाष्यो ज्ञेय उत्तमसाहसे॥ नारद (साहस, 11).

163. अयं हि बहिष्कार ऊर्ध्वरेतोविषयः न तु गृहस्थविषयः। ऊर्ध्वरेतोविचाराणामेव तत्र प्रस्तुतत्वात्। इदं च कौशिकेन स्पष्टीकृतम्। नैष्ठिकानां वनस्थानां यतीना चावकीर्णिनाम्। शुद्धानामपि लोकेऽस्मिन् प्रत्यापत्तिर्न विद्यते॥ इति। परा मा. II part 1 p. 205. प्रा. प्रकाश (folio 17 b) quotes कौशिक's verse.

164. श्रीशङ्कराचार्यास्तु 'कामतोऽव्यवहार्यस्तु' इति अकारप्रश्लेषेणेदं याज्ञवल्क्यवचो 'बहिस्तूभयथापि स्मृतेराचाराच्च' इति सूत्रे कृतप्रायश्चित्तनैष्ठिकब्रह्मचार्यादिपरम्। आरूढो नैष्ठिके धर्मे यस्तु भ्रष्यवते पुन·। प्रायश्चित्तं न पश्यामि येन शुध्येत्स आत्महा॥ इति। माध. म p.7. The verse आरूढो० is अत्रि VIII 16 and is quoted by शङ्कर without citing the name. The प्रा प्रकाश (folio 17 a) also refers to Sankara's comment on Vedāntasūtra III. 4.43 and the two verses quoted by him. It observes, एवं तावत्सकलनिबन्धसमतं व्यवहार्य इतिपदच्छेदेन याज्ञवल्क्यवाक्यस्य व्याख्यानमुक्तम्। शारीरकमीमांसाया तु० .

Vedāntasūtra III 4. 43 after reading Yāj III 226 as 'kāmatas vyavahāryastu' and that those who fell from the vow of life-long celibacy (either as naisthika brahmacārins or as sannyāsins) were to be excommunicated (and not to be associated with) The printed editions of the bhāsya contain no express quotation of Yājñavalkya's verse, but from the fact of his quoting Atri's verse it is possible to hold that Śankarācārya understood Yājñavalkya as the Pr. M. says he did.

A question may naturally be asked: why should it be accepted that penances destroy sin (as stated in Yāj III 226). The answer is: what [165] actions are grave sins or minor sins or not sins at all is laid down by the śāstra (śruti and smrtis) For example, it is not clear to ordinary people why being an officer over mines or making friends of low people or being a servant of a śūdra should be a sin at all But the smrtis say so. If the smrtis are to be relied upon for determining what acts are sinful, then it follows as a matter of course that the same smrtis which speak of penances as removers of sins must also be accepted and that no other means for determining the efficacy of penances can be appealed to So also the Bhagavadgītā (IV 37) states that the fire of spiritual knowledge consumes all (accumulated, sañcita) actions (and their consequences).

Many of the sins (though not all) for which penances are provided in the smrtis are also offences punishable by the king or State For example, murder, theft, incest, perjury are acts punishable by the State in almost all countries even now and were so in ancient and medieval India Persons guilty of these were also liable to undergo prāyaścittas. It is probably due to this double liability that punishments for crimes in ancient and medieval India were light as compared with the heavy punishments for even trifling crimes inflicted in western countries only a century or two ago But there are other acts which are not punishable by the State now and were not probably punished even in ancient or medieval India by the king. For example, forgetting Veda studied by a person, not tending Vedic fires consecrated by a person himself, sleeping till after sun-rise and sleeping at sunset are pātakas, acc to Vas I 19 and some of those are upapātakas acc to Yāj III. 239. It does not seem likely that an Indian king ever punished any person for these. On the other hand, obstructing the road, prying when the king is taking his meals, sitting before the king are among the fifty chalas of which the king could take cognisance suo motu and award suitable punishment (vide H. of Dh vol III p. 266). But there is nothing to show that such actions ever fell within the purview of the rules about prāyaścittas. The important questions are: What was the relation of the rules about prāyaścittas which were to be prescribed by a parisad (a meeting of learned brāhmanas) to punishments by the king as regards actions which were both pātakas inviting penances and crimes entailing punishments by the King? Which of these two sets of rules was earlier? Were penance and punishment cumulative or alternative? It is difficult to give definite opinions on these questions. We know that prāyaścittas like Aśvamedha are spoken of even in the Tai S. We also know that the praśnavivāka (which is quite close to prādvivāka in derivation and meaning) occurs in the Vāj. S. XXX. 10 and Tai Br. III. 5. 6. Therefore it follows that judicial functions were very early separated from the executive functions of the king. The reference to the ordeal of fire in the Tāndya Br 14. 6. 6 (vide H. of Dh. vol. III p. 361) and the grasping of a red-hot hatchet in the hand by a person accused of theft and his being killed show that ordeals were administered and the punishment for theft was death. Bṛhaspati, quoted in the Vivādaratnākara, says 'When a man of good character and a diligent reader of the Veda has committed theft he shall be kept in prison for a long time and shall be caused to perform penance after having been compelled to restore the goods' (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 362 [166]).

165 नन्वेतत् प्रायश्चित्तैरपैत्येन इति न युक्तम्। फलविनाइयत्वात्कर्मणः। मैवम्। यथा पापोत्पत्ति. शास्त्रगम्या तथा तत्परिक्षयोपीति। नात्र प्रमाणान्तरं क्रमते। अत एव गौतमेन पूर्वोत्तरपक्षभङ्ग्यायमर्थो दर्शितः। मिता on या. III. 226.

The parisad made its own rules about prāyaścittas and the king awarded punishments. Which set of rules was earlier it is difficult to say. The king did not very probably interfere with the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the parisad and the brāhmanas helped the king in the administration of justice by being judges and by advising him as to the punishments to be imposed (vide

166. वृत्तस्वाध्यायवान् स्तेयी बन्धनात् क्लिश्यते चिरम् । स्वामिने तद्धनं दाप्यः प्रायश्चित्तं तु कारयेत् ॥ बृहस्पति q by विवादरत्नाकर p 331. It is possible that this verse means that a learned brāhmana who has been well conducted but fell a victim to the temptation of theft should not be jailed for a long time because jail life torments his mind and therefore he should be made to restore stolen property and given penance.

Visnu Dh. S. V. 194). Gautama VIII.1, echoing the words of the Śat. Br. V. 4. 4 5, observes:[167] 'the king and the brāhmana with profound learning uphold the moral order in the world (or are upholders of the sacred law). The Āp. Dh. S. (II 5.10.12-16) contains very important information: 'The ācārya shall order those who, while participating according to the śāstras (in the privileges and responsibilities of their castes), have gone astray through the weakness of their senses to perform penances according to the dictates (of the smrtis) commensurate with their (sinful) acts. If they transgress their ācārya's order he shall take them to the king. The king shall send them to his purohita proficient in dharmaśāstra and the science of government. He (purohita) shall order them to perform (proper penances) if they are brāhmanas. He shall reduce them by forcible means except corporal punishment and slavery.' So this passage shows that the king helped in carrying out prāyaścittas. Nārada includes 'neglect of penances' among matters solely dependent on the king (prakīrnaka, verse 3) and not on complaints by private individuals. Devala[168] probably conveys the real position when he says: 'The king is the giver of krcchras (i. e his consent is required for actually undergoing the prescribed penances), the learned man who has studied Dharmaśāstras prescribes the prāyaścitta, the sinner carries out the penance and the king's officer sees to the safe performance of the prescribed penance' Parāśara VIII. 28 says 'an assembly should point out the proper penance after getting the permission of the king, it should not be done without reference to him, but slight penance may be done without informing him'. The Par. M. II. part 1. p. 232 explains that this applies to prāyaścittas for sins like govadha or those that are greater than it. Devala[169] also has similar verses.

167 द्वौ लोके धृतव्रतौ राजा ब्राह्मणश्च बहुश्रुत । गौ VIII. 1. śatapa V. 4.4 5 has 'निषसाद धृतव्रत इति धृतव्रतो वै राजा । एष च श्रोत्रियश्चैतौ ह वै द्वौ मनुष्येषु धृतव्रतौ.'

168. कृच्छ्राणा दापको (दायको v l) राजा निर्देष्टा धर्मपाठकः । अपराधी प्रयोक्ता च रक्षिता कृच्छ्रपालकः॥ देवल q. by मद. पा p 777, प्राय सा p 8. राज्ञश्चानुमते स्थित्वा प्रायश्चित्त विनिर्दिशेत् । स्वयमेव न कर्तव्य कर्तव्या स्वल्पनिष्कृति ॥ पराशर VIII. 28, on which परा मा II. 1 p 232 says: अत्र गोवधस्य प्रकृतत्वात्तमारभ्याधिकेषु राजानुज्ञयैव व्रतं निर्दिशेत् ।

169 याचितास्तेन ते चापि ब्राह्मणा. पापभीरुणा । निष्कृतिं व्यवहारार्थं कुर्यात्तस्मै कृपाङ्गया ॥ स्वयं वा ब्राह्मणै कृच्छ्रमल्पदोषे विधीयते । राज्ञा च ब्राह्मणैश्चैव महत्सु सुपरीक्ष्य च ॥ देवल q. by परा. मा II part 1 p 232-233 and by प्राय सा p 21. प्रा. प्रकाश (folio 25 a) reads देवल's verse as स्वयं तु ब्राह्मणा क्रूयुरल्पदोषेषु निष्कृतिम् । राजा... महत्सु परिचक्षते ॥.

Parāśara VIII. 29 states that the king also should not ignore the parisad and should not by himself prescribe penance. Paithīnasi quoted by the Dandaviveka (p. 76) provides[170] for both prāyaścitta and punishment and from the tenor of the verse it appears that both were to be enforced by the king. The position is tolerably clear as to medievel times One feels great hesitation in stating definitely the relation of punishment to penances and the king's position as to both in ancient times. Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 1–4 provide[171] that one who kills a ksatriya or a vaiśya or a śūdra shall respectively give one thousand cows, a hundred cows and ten cows for the purpose of removing the enmity and that in each of these cases one bull was to be given in addition for the purpose of expiation. Āpastamba does not expressly state to whom the cows were to be given. The commentator Haradatta explains that they were to be given to brāhmanas. Manu XI. 127, 129, 130, and Yāj III. 266–267 have similar provisions but in the chapter on penances. On the other hand, Baud. Dh. S. I. 10 23. expressly states that the cows are to be given to the king. As both the words 'vairaniryātanārtham' and 'prāyaścittārthah' are employed by Āp. it may be said that the cows were to be made over to the king even according to Āpastamba. The cows were to be made over to the king for bestowal on the family of the murdered person to mollify them and if they refused to receive them the king was ot to retain them for himself but was to distribute them among brāhmanas. We know that Manu (IX. 243–245) provides that the fine recovered from a man guilty of mortal sins was not to be taken for himself by the king but was to be offered to Varuna and thrown into water or was to be distributed among learned brāhmanas. Manu IX. 236 provides that for those who were guilty of the four grave sins (brāhmana murder &c.) and did not undergo penance for the same the king should inflict corporal punishment (branding on the forehead) together with fine in accordance with the śāstra. Manu IX. 237

170. अकार्यकारिणामेषां प्रायश्चित्तं तु कल्पयेत् । यथाशक्त्यपराधं च दण्डं चैषां प्रकल्पयेत् ॥ पैठीनसि q. by दण्डविवेक p 76.

171. क्षत्रियं हत्वा गवां सहस्रं वैरनिर्यातनार्थं दद्यात् । शतं वैश्ये । दश शूद्रे । ऋषभश्चाधिकः सर्वत्र प्रायश्चित्तार्थः । आप ध. सू I. 9. 24 1–4, क्षत्रियवधे गोसहस्रमृषभैकाधिक राज्ञ उत्सृजेद्वैरनिर्यातनार्थम् । शतं वैश्ये दश शूद्रे ऋषभश्चाधिकः । बौ. ध. सू. I. 10. 23–24.

(= Matsya 227 164) and Visnu V. 4–7 say that on the forehead a mark of female private parts with red-hot iron should be branded in the case of incest, the mark of a tavern flag in the case of drinking surā, the mark of dog's foot in the case of theft (of brāhmaṇa's gold) and the mark of a headless trunk in the case of a brāhmaṇa-murder. Manu IX. 240 further prescribes that men of all castes guilty of the four mahāpātakas committed unintentionally that perform the proper penance should not be branded on the forehead by the king but should be awarded the highest fine Manu IX. 241 and 242 provide that a brāhmaṇa guilty of these grave sins unintentionally may be punished with the middle amercement (if he himself be possessed of good qualities) but if he was guilty of the grave sins committed intentionally he should be banished from the kingdom being allowed to take with him his wealth and paraphernalia; while persons other than brāhmaṇas when guilty of grave sins unintentionally committed were to be deprived of all their wealth and if guilty intentionally they were to be sentenced to death. These verses show that though prāyaścitta be performed persons guilty of grave sins were liable to undergo punishment and if no penance was performed then they were liable to branding and also fines etc Manu XI. 56 provides that bearing false witness is similar to the drinking of surā and Manu XI. 57 and Yāj. III. 230 hold that misappropriation of a deposit is like the theft of gold Visnu Dh. S (V 169) provides that the misappropriator of a deposit was to be made to return the deposit or its price with interest and was to be punished like a thief by the king and V 179 that a false witness had all his property confiscated. These instances establish that both fines by the king (i. e rāja-danda) and penances prescribed by the assembly of learned men (i. e parisaddanda or daiva danda) had to be undergone by those guilty of some grave sins that were also looked upon as crimes In some cases the penance and the punishment were the same For example, Gaut 23 10–11, Vas. 20. 13, Manu XI 104, Yāj. III 259 and several other smṛtikāras prescribe for incest the penance of the excision of the testicles and penis and proceeding toward the south or south-west till the body falls Nārada as quoted above prescribes for incest the punishment (daṇḍa) of the excision of the testicles The Mit. on Yāj. III. 233 quotes Nārada and remarks that the punishment of excision and death prescribed by Yāj III 233 applies only to non-brāhmaṇas and that in such cases the punishment of death itself is the prāyaścitta There were works like the Madanapārijāta[172] (p. 827) and the Mitākṣarā that held that the prohibition against corporal harm to brāhmanas (Manu VIII. 380) applies only to matters other than prāyaścittas and that since the Manusmṛti itself (XI. 100) states that a brāhmana guilty of theft of brāhmana's gold may go to the king with an iron club and have his head smashed by the king, the death of a brāhmana as a penance for theft by being struck with a club presented by himself was not ruled out. In some cases punishment by the king was deemed to have purged a man of sin and no penance seems to have been thought necessary, as Manu VIII. 318 (=Vas 19.45) says 'men that commit sins and are punished by the king become purified and reach heaven like good men who perform meritorious deeds.' The Mit on Yāj. III. 259 explains that this holds good only where the punishment is death, as in the case of incest noted above. Āp. Dh. S. II. 10 27. 15–16 provide [173] that a person guilty of slaying a man, of theft and of forcible seizure of land was to be deprived of his wealth by the king and was to be sentenced to death and that if the offender was a brāhmana he was to have a piece of cloth tied over his eyes for the whole of his life (i. e. he was not to be sentenced to death). It appears that in very ancient times as provided by Āp. Dh. S. I 9.25.4 the thief approached the king [174] with a club (of iron or khadira wood) on his shoulder and announced his guilt, when the king struck him with the club; on his being killed he became free from guilt. This was a penance as well as a legal punishment. Manu has a similar rule in his chapter on punishments (VIII. 314–316) providing that the thief should carry a weapon (called musala) or a club of khadira wood or a double-edged śakti or an iron staff and that if the king strikes him once with the club and he is killed 172. अथ च लिङ्गच्छेदवधात्मको दण्डो ब्राह्मणव्यतिरिक्तस्य। न जातु ब्राह्मणं हन्यात्सर्वपापेष्ववस्थितम्—इति तस्य वधनिषेधात् (मनु. ८.३८०)। वधस्यैव प्रायश्चित्तरूपत्वात्। मिता. on या III 233, but on या III 257 the मिता० says 'मनुना सुवर्णस्तेयकृद्भिन्न इत्यभिधाय गृहीत्वा मुसलं राजा सकृद्धन्यात्तु तं स्वयमिति सर्वनाम्ना प्रकृतब्राह्मणव्यतिरेकेणैव हननविधानात्। न जातु ब्राह्मण हन्यादित्यस्य प्रायश्चित्तव्यतिरिक्तदण्डरूपहननविषयत्वेनाप्युपपत्तेः॥'; vide also मद या p. 827 for the same view.

173. पुरुषवधे स्तेये भूम्यादान इति स्वाम्यादाय वक्ष्यः। चक्षुर्निरोधस्त्वेतेषु ब्राह्मणस्य। आप. ध सू II. 10. 27. 15–16.

174. स्तेन. प्रकीर्णकेशोंसे मुसलमाधाय राजानं गत्वा कर्मात्मकथयेत तेनैनं हन्याद्यदि मोक्षः। आप ध सू I. 9 25 4., ब्राह्मणसुवर्णहरणे प्रकीर्य केशान् राजानमभिधावेत्स्तेनोस्मि भो शास्तु मा भवानिति तस्मै राजौदुम्बरं शस्त्रं दद्यात्सेनात्मानं प्रमापयेन्मरणान्मूतो भवतीति विज्ञायते। वसिष्ठ 20 41. औदुम्बर means 'made of udumbara wood' or may also mean 'red in colour' (i e made of copper).

or if he is not killed but is allowed to go half dead and lives, the thief is freed from the guilt. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 257 quotes a prose passage from Śankha and a verse from Samvarta (122) to the same effect Manu in the chapter on penances (XI. 100–101 = Agnipurāna 169. 20–21) provides the same procedure for theft as a penance. Vas 20. 41, Yāj. III. 259, Viṣnu 52. 1–2 and Parāśara XII. 69–70 provide a somewhat similar penance for the thief of brāhmana's gold. Vasistha introduces an important change viz, that the king hands over to the thief a weapon made of udumbara wood (or probably of copper) with which the thief is to kill himself. It appears that gradually the king gave up this unpleasant method of awarding punishment personally Nārada[175] (pariśista, verses 46–47) provides that after the thief comes running to the king and announces his guilt, the king was to touch him (with the club, as a symbolic gesture) and then let him off and the thief became freed from sin by his confession of guilt. It has to be remembered, however, that the thief had to restore, even when he underwent penance, stolen property, as stated by Manu VIII. 40, Yāj. II. 36 and 270, Brhaspati and by digests[176] like the Pr. Prakarana If it were impossible to make the thief restore the stolen property the king had to make it good from his own treasury[177] (Gaut X. 47, Śāntiparva 75. 10, Kautilya III. 16) or he had to make his officers[178] entrusted with the duty of preventing thefts pay the price of the stolen property (Āp Dh. S. II. 10. 26. 8). Vide for further details H. of Dh vol. III. pp. 166–168. It appears that the actual carrying out of the sentence of death was later on assigned to Cāndālas as stated by Manu X. 56 and Viṣnu Dh. S. 16. 11 (vadhya-ghātitvam cāṇḍālānām).

175. राजा स्तेनेन गन्तव्यो मुक्तकेशेन धावता। आचक्षाणेन तत्स्तेयमेवंकर्मास्मि शाधि माम्॥ अनेना भवति तेन स्वकर्मप्रतिपादनात्। राजा ततः स्पृशेदेनमुत्सृजेत्तु शास्तित्विषम्॥ नारद, परिशिष्ट 46–47.

176 दत्त्वैवापहृतं द्रव्यं धनिकस्याप्युपायत। प्रायश्चित्तं ततः कुर्यात्कलमषस्यापनुत्तये॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 52 14. सर्वमेव सुवर्णहरणादिस्तेयप्रायश्चित्तं विद्यमानस्यापहृतद्रव्यस्य त्यागपुरःसरमेव कर्तव्यम्। इतरथा कृतप्रायश्चित्तस्यापि पुनस्तद्द्रव्यस्वीकारे तथैव स्तेयप्रसङ्गात्। विनष्टे तु द्रव्ये पुनःस्वीकाराभावात्प्रायश्चित्तमेवेति। प्राय प्रक on p 77

177. चौरहृतमपजित्य यथास्थान गमयेत्। कोशाद्वा दद्यात्। गौ X 46–47: प्रत्याहर्तुमशक्य स्याद्धन चोरैर्हृतं यदि। तत् स्वकोशाद्यदेयं स्याद्दशकेनोपजीवत॥ शान्ति 75 10 q by the मिता on या II 36, चौरहृतमविद्यमानं स्वद्रव्येभ्य प्रयच्छेत्। कौटिल्य III 16 p. 190.

178. तत्र यन्मुष्यते तैस्तत्प्रतिदाप्यम्। आप ध सू II. 10. 26. 8.

Another point to be noted is that as regards the awarding of punishments and prescribing of penances, the matters to be considered were the same viz. whether the lapse was intentional[179] (kāmataḥ) or unintentional (akāmataḥ) or whether it was the first offence or whether it was repeated and what the circumstances as to the time, the place, the caste, the age, the capacity, learning, wealth were. Compare Kauṭilya IV. 10, Gaut. XII. 48, Manu VII. 16 and VIII. 126, Yāj I. 368, Viṣnu V. 194, Vas. 19. 9 about punishments with Baud.[180] Dh. S. I. 1. 16, Yāj. III. 293 (= Atri verse 248 and Agnipurāna 173. 6), Aṅgiras 143, Viśvāmitra, Vṛddha-Hārīta IX. 297, and Vyāghra as regards penances It is on account of this close connection between punishments and penances that the Prāyaścittatattva, after quoting Devala to the effect that if a man makes no move for taking prāyaścitta for one year, he has to undergo double penance thereafter and to pay a double fine to the king, remarks that the maxim is that prāyaścittas are to be moulded on the lines of punishments[181]. The Pr. M. (pp. 124–125) quotes Kāśyapa who provides a penance for one that causes mischief to a well, public park, bridge, rampart wall or a temple or idol, then quotes Viṣnu V. 169 which prescribes the highest fine for a breaker of idols, Manu IX 285 which provides a fine of 500

---

179. ज्ञात्वापराधं देशं च कालं बलमथापि वा। वयः कर्म च वित्तं च दण्डं दण्डेषु पातयेत्॥ या. I. 368; अनुबन्धं परिज्ञाय देशकालौ च तत्त्वतः। सारापराधौ चालोक्य दण्डं दण्डेषु पातयेत्॥ मनु VIII. 126, on which मेधातिथि remarks that this is the fundamental or basic verse on the question of punishment 'उक्तानुक्तदण्डेष्वपराधेषु मानुकाश्लोकोयम्। एतदर्थानुसारेण सर्वदण्डकल्पिः कर्तव्या'.

180 शरीरबलमायुश्च वयः कालं च कर्म च। समीक्ष्य धर्मवित् बुद्ध्या प्रायश्चित्तानि निर्दिशेत्॥ बौ ध. I. 1.16; देशं कालं वयः शक्तिं पापं चावेक्ष्य यत्नतः। प्रायश्चित्तं प्रकल्प्यं स्याद्यत्र चोक्ता न निष्कृतिः॥ या III. 293; सर्वत्र चैव प्रायश्चित्तप्रकरणे ज्ञातिशक्तिगुणापेक्षं सकृद्द्विरुद्धिकृत्तं तथा। अनुबन्धं परिज्ञाय प्रायश्चित्तं प्रकल्पयेत्॥ इत्येतदेव संक्षेपसूत्रम्। विश्वरूप on या. III. 262 The verse is quoted as विश्वामित्र's in प्राय. प्रकरण. p 8, प्राय. नि p 29, परा. मा II. part 1 p 235 and as देवल's by the मिता on या III. 243. Vide also व्यास q by परा. मा. II part 1, p 24.

181. यथा स्मृतिसागरे देवलः। कालातिरेके द्विगुणं प्रायश्चित्तं समाचरेत्। द्विगुणं राजदण्डं च दत्त्वा शुद्धिमवाप्नुयात्॥ कालातिरेके संवत्सरातिरेके। संवत्सराभिशस्तस्य दुष्टस्य द्विगुणो दम—इति मनुवचने (8 373) संवत्सरात्परतो द्विगुणदण्डदर्शनेन दण्डवत्प्रायश्चित्तानि भवन्तीति न्यायेन एकत्र निर्णीतः शास्त्रार्थो बाधकमन्तरेणान्यत्रापि तथेति न्यायाच्च। प्राय. तत्त्व p 474; vide p 530 of the same work for the same न्याय. 'अथ मण्डपोद्यानादि—देवतागारादि—भेदने काश्यपः। वापीकूपारामसेतुलतातडागदेवतायतनभेदने प्रायश्चित्तम्।...ब्राह्मणान्भोजयेत्। इति। एतच्चाल्पोपघाते। महतोपघातेऽभ्यासे प्राजापत्यादि कल्पनीयम्। देवता चात्र तन्मयी पूजोज्झिता च ग्राह्या। प्रायश्चित्तस्याल्पत्वादन्यत्र दण्डगौरवदर्शनेन प्रायश्चित्तगौरवं कल्प्यं दण्डवत्प्रायश्चित्तानि भवन्तीति वचनात्। तथात्र दण्डगौरवमाह कात्यायनः।..विष्णुरपि ..मनु.. इति। paṇas for a breaker of idols and re-instatement of the idol by him and then remarks 'dandavat prāyaścittāni bhavanti'. Nārada divided sāhasa into three kinds viz prathama, madhyama and uttama, the last of which consisted in killing a person with poison or weapon, adultery and rape and injury to life He then provides that when offenders guilty of the first two kinds were punished by the king, they became fit for association with the people, but that one guilty of the uttama-sāhasa, though punished by the king, was not fit even to be talked to (Nārada, sāhasa, verse 11).

The king had jurisdiction[182] to punish sinners if they did not agree to undergo the prāyascitta prescribed by the pariṣad but it is extremely doubtful whether he exercised that jurisdiction in all cases Society or the caste also had a weapon in its hand viz that of excommunication by ghatasphota if one guilty of a grave sin refused to perform the prāyaścitta prescribed (i e. it was jātidanda). Vide Gaut 20 2-9, Manu XI 182-185 and Yāj III. 294 and II. of Dh vol II p 388 and vol. III p. 1009-1010 for the rite of ghatasphota and re-admission to caste after ghatasphota Many of the prāyascittas prescribed for the grave sins were terrible (such as throwing oneself into fire, drinking boiling surā or water or cow's urine or milk or ghee for drinking surā, Manu XI 73, 90-91, 103 &c) and were to be self-inflicted and were not to be prescribed by the parisad as the words of Manu in XI. 73 'icchayātmanah' and 'prāsyed-ātmānam-agnau vā' clearly convey and as some of the digests expressly provide[183] In order to enable a man to become fit for intercourse with his caste men he had to give a dinner to them or distribute sweetmeats even after undergoing prāyascitta So it follows that a man guilty of a crime was liable to three burdens, punishment by the king, penance prescribed by learned brāhmanas and giving dinner or sweetmeats to castemen Vide H. of Dh vol. II. p. 971.

---

182 दण्ड कुर्यान्नृपो नृणा प्रायश्चित्तमकुर्वताम् । कामतोऽकामतो वापि प्रायश्चित्त कृतं चरेत ॥ अग्निपुराण 168 1 प्रायश्चित्ते शमं याति पापं कृतमसशयम् । राजदण्डाच्छम याति प्रायश्चित्तमकुर्वताम् । प्रायश्चित्तविहीना ये राजाभिश्चाप्यदण्डिताः । नरक प्रतिपद्यन्ते तिर्यग्योनिं तथैव च ॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तरपुराण II 73 3-4 q. by परा मा II part 2 p 210, प्र प्रकाश folio 102 a.

183 प्राणान्तिकप्रायश्चित्त तु पर्षदा न देयम् । तत्स्वयमेव ज्ञात्वा कुर्यात् । प्राय सा. p. 41, एतच्च मरणान्तिक प्रायश्चित्त पर्षदा नादेष्टव्यमपि तु श्रुत्पन्नश्चेत्स्वयमेव ज्ञात्वा कुर्यात् । अश्रुत्पन्नश्चेत् प्रायश्चित्तस्वरूप शिष्टेभ्यो ज्ञात्वा तदनुज्ञामन्तरेण स्वयमेव कुर्यात् । मद पा p. 817.

The literature on prāyaścittas is vast in extent, since in ancient times they loomed very large in the popular mind. Out of the 28 chapters of the Gautamadharma-sūtra, ten (i. e. more than one-third of the whole) are devoted to penances. Out of the 30 chapters of the printed Vasistha-dharmasūtra, prāyaścittas cover nine (20–28) Manu devotes verses 44 to 265 (in all 222) of chapter eleven to penances and the Yājñavalkyasmṛti containing 1009 verses deals with prāyaścittas in 122 verses (III. 205–327). Several printed smrtis such as those of Angiras (168 verses), Atri (chapters 1–8), Devala (90 verses), Brhad-Yama (182 verses), Śātātapasmrti (in 274 verses) from the Ānandāśrama collection of smrtis alone deal only with prāyaścittas. Many other smrtis and several purānas, such as the Agni (chap 168–174), Garuda 52, Kūrma (Uttarārdha 30–34), Varāha 131–136, Brahmānda (Upasamhārapāda chap. 9), Visnudharmottara (II 73, III 234–237) contain hundreds of verses on prāyaścittas. Besides commentaries like the Mitāksarā, Aparārka, Par. M. and others and digests like Madanapārijāta (pp. 691–994), there are special digests dealing with prāyaścittas alone such as Hemādri on Prāyaścitta (which is of doubtful authenticity), the Prāyaścittaprakarana of Bhavadeva, Prāyaścittaviveka, Prāyaścittatattva, Smrtimuktāphala (prāyaścitta section), Prāyaścittasāra (part of Nrsimhaprasāda), Prāyaścittamayūkha, Prāyaścittaprakāśa (ms. in the Anūp Sanskrit library, Bikaner, No. 2610), Prāyaścittenduśekhara of Nāgojibhatta, which have been utilised in this work. The most elaborate treatment is found in Prāyaścittaviveka, Par. M. II parts 1 and 2, and Prāyaścittaprakāśa.

The commentators discuss the question about the persons who have adhikāra (capacity) for having penances prescribed for them Since Manu XI. 44 (prāyaścittīyate narah) and Yāj III. 219 (narah patanam-rcchati) both employ the word 'man' without [184] any qualification, the commentators and digests say that penances are meant for men of all varnas, for all persons born of unions in the reverse order (pratilomajas) and for even cāndālas. Yāj. III. 262 states that a śūdra sinner 184 नरग्रहणं सर्ववर्णिकप्रदर्शनार्थम्। विश्वरूप on या. III. 210, नरग्रहणं प्रतिलोमजातानामपि प्रायश्चित्ताधिकारप्राप्त्यर्थम्। तेषामप्यहिंसादिसाधारणधर्मव्यतिक्रमसम्भवात्। मिता on या III 219, नर इत्यनेन ब्राह्मणादिचाण्डालान्तानां सर्वेषां पाप दर्शयति। अस्ति च चाण्डालादीनामपि विधिनिषेधश्च। यथा देवलः। स्वजातिशौचनं सर्वजनप्रणामस्तितिक्षा व्यवहारशुद्धिरपरापमान स्वभृत्यपोषणं प्रधानकर्मपरिवर्जनमिति चाण्डालधर्मः। मनु.। गवार्थे..ब्राह्मानां शुद्धिकारणम् ॥ (10.62) अतो वेदार्थव्यवहारिणामेव प्रायश्चित्तीयता न चाण्डालादीनामिति प्रत्युक्तम्। प्राय वि. p 12.

though he has no adhikāra (for recitation of Vedic mantras and homa), yet becomes purified by undergoing the observances (except japa and homa) for the periods prescribed. Angiras [185] provides that penance may be administered to a śūdra devoid of japa and homa. Even as to japa and homa there were works like the Madanapārijāta p. 749 and Vy. M (p. 112) that relying on a verse of Parāśara VI. 63–64 held that a homa could be performed for women and śūdras in the ordinary fire through a brāhmana[186]. The Pr. V. relies on Manu X. 62 and a prose passage of Devala for the proposition that even Cāndālas have to perform penances, if they act contrary to the rules and prohibitions laid down for them Since the non-performance of what is prescribed and doing what is forbidden lead to sin, the person guilty of these or the person who has a desire to destroy his sins is a person entitled to perform prāyaścitta, as also one who repents of his guilt.

Before going into the subject of the several prāyaścittas prescribed for each grave or minor sin, some questions of a general character have to be disposed of.

Some smrtis like Brhad-yāma III. 1–2 and Śankha state that a boy over five years of age and less than eleven years old, if guilty of some pātakas such as drinking surā, has not to undergo penance personally, but his brother, father or other 185. तस्माच्छूद्रं समासाद्य सदा धर्मपथे स्थितम्। प्रायश्चित्तं प्रदातव्य जपहोमविवर्जितम्॥ अङ्गिरस् q. by the मिता. on या III. 262, प्राय म p. 12, प्रा. सार p. 173.

186. स्त्रीशूद्रयोरपि ब्राह्मणद्वारा लौकिकाग्नौ होमो भवत्येव। अत एव धर्मविवृतौ 'उपवासो व्रतं होमस्तीर्थस्नान जपादिकम्। विप्रैः सम्पादित यस्य सम्पूर्ण तस्य तत्फलम्॥ इति।' मद. पा p. 749. This is पराशर VI. 63–64 (the printed edition in B. S. Series reads व्रतं चैव स्नान तीर्थ जपस्तप). It is rather inexplicable how while Nīlakantha in his Vyavahāramayūkha holds, relying on Parāśara, that the dattahoma may be performed by a śūdra or a woman through a brāhmana, the Prāyaścittamayūkha of the same author propounds a different view in the words 'एतेन यन्महार्णवमदनरत्नयो. स्त्रीशूद्रादेर्विप्रद्वारा समन्त्रकौ जपहोमौ भवत इति तत्परास्तम्' (p 13) Did the author change his views or is the text of one of the two Mayūkhas tampered with by his successors? The प्र प्रकाश (folio 30 b) explains Parāśara VI. 63–64 in a different way It says that the verse does not lay down generally that a woman or any one else can in every case have a homa performed for her through a brāhmana, but that where in a rite japa and homa are obligatory and the person concerned is unable to perform japa and homa in person there alone he can appoint a brāhmana as pratinidhi अस्य प्रातेषु जपहोमादिषु अशक्तौ विप्ररूपप्रतिनिधिनियमार्थत्वात्। प्रायश्चित्ताङ्गजपहोमयोस्तु निषेधादेवाप्रवृत्तेस्तत्र तस्यामवृत्तिः। ..एतेन यन्महार्णवमदनरत्नयो. स्त्रीशूद्रादेर्विप्रद्वारा समन्त्रकौ जपहोमौ भवत इति तत्परास्तम्। प्र प्रकाश folio 30 b relative or friend has to undergo it for him and that if a child is less than five then whatever act it may do it is not deemed a crime, nor is it a sin and it is not liable to any legal penalty nor to any[187] prāyaścitta. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 243) comments that these verses are not meant to prescribe a total absence of prāyaścitta in the case of children of five or less but are meant to convey that they are not liable for the full prāyaścitta prescribed for a sin. Its argument is that the texts lay down generally without any reference to the stage of life that a brāhmana should not be killed or that a person belonging to the three higher castes should not drink surā.[188] Hence any one of whatever age who is guilty of having done such prohibited acts is liable and the words of Gaut. II 1 and of Kumāra are to be interpreted as not excusing altogether the drinking of surā by a child but as referring to minor lapses. Brhaspati expressly states that the dictum about a child being allowed to eat what it likes is confined to such matters as will not fall under grave sins.

It has already been stated above (n 180) that the prāyaścitta to be undergone depended upon many circumstances such as the time, the place, the age &c. And first as to age, several smrtis[189] provide that a man 80 years old or a boy less than 187 ऊनैकादशवर्षस्य पञ्चवर्षात्परस्य च। प्रायश्चित्तं चरेद् भ्राता पिता वान्य सुहृज्जनः॥ अतो बालतरस्यास्य नापराधो न पातकम्। राजदण्डो न तस्यास्ति प्रायश्चित्तं न विद्यते॥ शङ्ख, quoted by the मिता on या III 243, बृहद्यम III 1-2 (reads वान्योपि बान्धव.). These are quoted by हरदत्त on गौ II 6 (without name) and the first occurs in आपस्तम्बस्मृति III 7 as चरेद्गुरुः सुहृद्वापि प्रायश्चित्तं विशोधनम्. The first verse is देवल 31 Both are ascribed to अङ्गिरस् by प्राय. वि p. 29.

188. भाषणनयनात् कामचार कामवाद कामभक्ष.। गौ. II. 1, मद्यमूत्रपुरीषाणां भक्षणे नास्ति कश्चन। दोषस्त्वा पञ्चमाद्वर्षादूर्ध्व पित्रो सुहृद्वरो॥ कुमार q by मिता. on या. III. 253, by प्राय. प्रक. p. 50, स्यात्कामचारभक्षोक्तिर्नहत पातकादते। बृहस्पति q by प्रा. तत्त्व p. 551.

189. अशीतिर्यस्य वर्षाणि बालो वाप्यूनषोडश। प्रायश्चित्तार्धमर्हन्ति स्त्रियो रोगिण एव च॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 54 33, लघुहारीत 33, देवल 30, आपस्तम्बस्मृति III 3, बृहद्यम III. 3 (reads अशीत्यधिकवर्षाणि). This verse is ascribed to अङ्गिरस् by the मिता. on या III 243 and to भार्गव by हरदत्त on आप. ध सू I. 9 26.5 The मद् पा. p. 796 ascribes it to विष्णु, पराशर, बृहस्पति and अङ्गिरस् तथा बालवृद्धादीनां साक्षात्कर्तुरेऽप्यर्धमेव। अशीति रोगिण एव चेत्यङ्गिर स्मरणात्। तथा। अर्वाक्तु द्वादशाद्वर्षादशीतेरूर्ध्वमेव वा। अर्धमेव भवेत्पुसां तुरीयं तत्र योषिताम्॥ इति। तथानुपनीतस्यापि बालकस्य पादमात्रमेव प्रायश्चित्तम्। स्त्रीणामर्धं प्रदातव्यं वृद्धानां रोगिणां तथा। पादो बालेषु दातव्य. सर्वापेक्ष्वयं विधिरिति विष्णुस्मरणात्। मिता on या. III 243. The verses अर्वाक्तु and स्त्रीणामर्ध are ascribed to विष्णु, पराशर, बृहस्पति and अङ्गिरस् by मद पा p 796 and the latter is ascribed to लघुविष्णु by प्राय. वि. p. 28 and to बृहद्विष्णु by प्राय प्रकरण p. 17.

16 years of age, women and diseased persons should be liable only to half the prāyaścitta (prescribed for able-bodied men) The Mit on Yāj III 243 quotes a verse of Sumantu that for a male below twelve and above eighty years of age the penance is half (of that for ordinary men) and one fourth for women within the same limits and a verse of Viṣnu that for women, old men and diseased persons half the penance should be prescribed and for boys (before upanayana) only one-fourth. Some say that for boys less than five the penance is one-fourth Cyavana (prose) prescribes half prāyascitta for boys, old men and women and declares that a person is a bāla up to 16 years and a man is to be regarded as similar to a bāla after 70. Kātyāyana provided generally that the fines to be levied from females were to be half of those leviable from male offenders as regards all offences and when the punishment for a male would be death, a woman criminal was to be punished with the cutting of a limb (nose, ears &c)[190]

The difference between a sin committed unintentionally (akāmatah) and the same sin committed with full knowledge (kāmatah) is this that for the latter the prāyascitta is double of what is prescribed for the former as provided by Angiras,[191] Vyāsa and the Agnipurāna. As Yāj. III. 226 employs the word 'ajñāna' in the first half and the word 'kāmatah' as its opposite in the second half instead of the word 'jñānatah' it follows that Yāj. makes no difference between the consequences of jñāna (knowledge) and kāmanā (desire).

The caste of the offender as well as of the victim made a difference in the prāyaścitta as well as in the legal punishment. Vide H. of Dh vol. III pp. 395–399 as to punishments for crimes dependent on caste. Viṣnu[192] provides that the prāyascitta for

---

190 बालवृद्धस्त्रीणामर्धं प्रायश्चित्तम् । आ षोडशाद्बाल । सप्ततेरूर्ध्वगता वृद्धा । व्यास q by परा मा II part 1 p 122 and प्राय. वि p 28 सर्वेषु चापराधेषु पुंसो योर्धदण्ड स्मृत ॥ तदर्धं योषितो दद्युर्वधे पुंसोङ्गकर्तनम् ॥ कात्या 487

191 स्याच्चकामकृते यत्तु द्विगुणं शुद्धिपूर्वके । अङ्गिरस् q by प्राय वि pp 22 and 24; विहितं यदकामाना कामात्तु द्विगुणं स्मृतम् । अग्निपुराण 173 9, q by the मिता on या. III 226 (without name), and as that of अङ्गिरस् by प्राय प्रकरण p 12 and as of मध्यमाङ्गिरस् by मा प्रकाश (folio 16b) गर्ह्यतेदेव कुर्वीत सुकृतल्पमकामत कामतो द्विगुणं प्रोक्त पूर्वेषु च यदुच्यते ॥ व्यास q by प्राय. वि p 21

192. विप्रे तु सकलं देयं पादोनं क्षत्रिये मतम् । वैश्येर्धं पादशेषस्तु शूद्रजातिषु शस्यते ॥ विष्णु q by प्राय वि p 102 where it is stated that जिकन noted that this verse was not found in the विष्णुसंहिता It is ascribed to बृहद्विष्णु by प्राय प्रकरण p. 16 and to वृद्धविष्णु by मिता on या III, 267.

a ksatriya, vaiśya and śūdra sinner should be respectively $\frac{3}{4}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{1}{4}$ of what is prescribed for a brāhmana sinner. The Agnipurāna says[193] the same thing. The Par. M II. 1. p. 231 quotes the Caturvimśatimata[194] to the same effect. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 250 explains that the verse of Caturvimśatimata applies to all cases except where any one of the four sāhasas is committed by a man of a lower caste as against one of a higher caste. Brhad-Yama (IV. 13-14) in prescribing penance for the killing of a cow provides the same scale of 4, 3, 2, 1 for the four varnas Angiras (verse 3) prescribes the penances of Krcchra and Cāndrāyana for a brāhmana partaking of the food of an antyaja, half of these for a ksatriya or vaiśya guilty of the same. Yāj II. 206-207 provide that the punishments for defamation depend upon the higher or lower varna or caste of the offender as well as of the person defamed and that if a ksatriya or vaiśya defames a brāhmana the fines are respectively twice or thrice as high as the fine for a brāhmana defaming a brāhmana and conversely if a brāhmana defames a ksatriya or a vaiśya the fine is reduced by half in each successive caste. The Mit quoting Angiras says that the rules about punishments apply to prāyaścittas for slaying a person i e. if a brāhmana slays anybody and a certain penance is prescribed for him, then a ksatriya killing the person would have to perform double the penance prescribed for the brāhmana and a vaiśya offender three times as much[195] It may be pointed out here that though the smrtis provided for different punishments according to the castes of the offender and of the person wronged and though some commentaries and digests went into all those details for the sake of presenting a

---

193 सर्वत्र शूद्रे पादः स्याद् द्वित्रयं वैश्यभूपयोः । अग्निपुराण 168 13

194. प्रायश्चित्तं यदाम्नातं ब्राह्मणस्य महर्षिभिः । पादोनं क्षत्रियः कुर्यादर्धं वैश्यः समाचरेत् । शूद्र समाचरेत्पादमशेषेष्वपि पाप्मसु ॥ चतुर्विंशतिमत q by the मिता on या. III 250. देवल 28 is a verse of similar import यत्तु चतुर्विंशतिमतवच्चनं प्रायश्चित्तं ..पाप्मसु-इति प्रतिलोमाद्युद्दिश्यचतुर्विधसाहसव्यतिरिक्तविषयम्। तथा मूर्धावसिक्तादीनामप्यसृग्लोमोत्पत्त्याना दण्डवत्प्रायश्चित्तमूहनीयम् ॥ मिता. The four साहसs are 'मद्यस्यमारणं स्तेयं परदाराभिमर्शनम्। पारुष्यमुभयं चेति साहसं स्याच्चतुर्विधम् ॥ '

195. यथाहाङ्गिरा.। पर्यया ब्राह्मणाना तु सा राज्ञां द्विगुणा मता। वैश्याना त्रिगुणा मोक्षा पर्यद्वच्च व्रतं स्मृतम्॥ इति। ..अनयैव दिशा क्षत्रियवैश्यादावपि हीनेनोत्कृष्टवधे दोषगौरवात्प्रायश्चित्तस्यापि द्वैगुण्यादि कल्पनीयम्। दोषगौरवं च दण्डगौरवादवगम्यते। मिता० on या III 250 Vide मिता on या III 267 also This verse is q by परा मा II part 2 p 67 while the प्राय वि p 102 ascribes it to देवल; 'परिषद्या ..स्मृता—इति देवलवचनं ब्रह्मवध एव द्वैगुण्यादिकं बोधयति' The प्राय . प्रक p 16 reads the verse of अङ्गिरस् as 'वैश्यानां . मोक्षा शूद्राणा तु चतुर्गुणा॥ परिषद्वद् व्रतं मोक्षं शुद्धये पापकर्मणाम्। '

complete statement or digest of the smrti material, such discriminatory punishments had mostly ceased to be enforced by the rulers from about the 12th century A. D. at least, as stated by the Smṛticandrikā, the Madanaratna (vyavahāra) and the Sarasvatīvilāsa. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III p 512 note 924 for the relevant quotations from the three works. Since, as stated above (n. 181), prāyaścittas were to be moulded on the lines of legal penalties, it appears that the discriminatory treatment about prāyaścittas depending upon the varna of the sinner must also have gradually fallen into disuetude with the disappearance of the more severe prāyaścittas and the substitution of cows and monetary equivalents in later digests. And some digests expressly state this to have been the case in relation to prāyaścittas. For example, the Pr Prakarana, after quoting Gaut. 22. 14–16 about the prāyaścitta for killing a ksatriya or vaiśya or śūdra under certain circumstances, remarks that in its day those prāyaścittas were no longer part of the practices of the people.[196]

Whether an act made a man liable to undergo prāyaścitta depended in some cases on the country also. For example, marrying a maternal uncle's daughter was and is allowed in certain countries and among certain castes in the Deccan and Southern India on the ground of custom, but such a practice was severely condemned by Manu XI. 171–172 and Baud Dh S. I 1 17–24 and other smrtis. Brhaspati refers to this custom as prevalent among southerners and states that in these countries persons following it are not liable to undergo prāyaścitta or penalty (at the hand of the king). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 462 for Brhaspati's verses.

Severity and extent of prāyaścitta depended also on the question whether a sinner had repeated the lapse or was a first offender. The Āp Dh S (II. 10. 27. 11–13) prescribes that a brāhmana who has once committed adultery with a married woman of equal class shall perform one-fourth of the penance prescribed for a śūdra having intercourse with a woman of the three upper castes, that for every repetition (of the crime) one fourth of the penance must be added and if (he commits adultery) for the fourth time, the whole penance (of 12 years must be performed [197]). The Mit on Yāj. III. 293 remarks that for a sin that is committed knowingly the prāyaścitta is double of what is prescribed for the same sin if committed unintentionally and that if a sin is committed intentionally and is repeated then for the repeated lapse prāyaścitta is four times as much as that for the same deed done unintentionally. Similarly, the āśrama to which the sinner belonged made a difference in the prāyaścitta as stated by Angiras 'when persons in other āśramas are guilty of sins for which penance is prescribed if committed by householders, then the prāyaścitta is increased in the same proportion that is laid down for śauca (bodily purity[198]). Manu V. 137, Vas. VI. 19, Visnu Dh. S 60 26, Śankha 16. 23–24 provide that Vedic students, forest hermits and sannyāsins have respectively to perform twice, thrice and four times as much śauca as is prescribed for householders (e. g. by Manu V. 136 =Visnu 60. 25).

196 यच्च गौतमेनोक्तं राजन्यवधे ·गा दद्यात् (२२ १४–१६)–एवमादीनि नानाद्युनिवचनानि नानाविधप्रायश्चित्तोत्कर्षप्रतिपादकानि तानि ब्राह्मणजातद्युत्तस्थ-यागस्थ-षडङ्गवेदाध्ययनादिगुणयुक्त-कामाकामादिकृतक्षत्रियादिवधविषयाणि यथायोग्यं व्याख्येयानि । इदानीं तु तथाविधक्षत्रियाद्यभावेन व्यवहारानङ्गत्वात् न प्रत्येकं विषयव्यवस्थया व्याख्यातानीति सर्वं चेदं ब्राह्मणस्य क्षत्रियादिवधप्रायश्चित्तमुक्तम् । प्राय प्रक. p. 22.

One convenient and merciful rule laid down by the smrtis was that if a man died in the midst of the period for which penance had to be performed (sometimes it extended to twelve years or more) he became free from the sin here and in the next world as stated by Hārīta, Vyāsa and Yama[199].

Though the smrtis have entered into very great details about the prāyaścittas for different individual lapses, still they cannot be supposed to have dealt with every lapse. Therefore,

---

197. सवर्णायामन्यपूर्वायां सकृत्संनिपाते पादः पततीत्युपदिशन्ति। एवमभ्यासे पादः पादः। चतुर्थे सर्वम्। आप ध सू. II 10 27.11–13.

198 तथाश्रमिणामपि अङ्गित्वेन विशेषो दर्शितः। गृहस्थोक्तानि पापानि कुर्वन्त्याश्रमिणो यदि। शौचवच्छोधनं कुर्युर्वाग्ब्रह्मनिदर्शनादिति। शौचवदिति –एतच्छौचं गृहस्थानां द्विगुणं ब्रह्मचारिणाम्। त्रिगुणं तु वनस्थानां यतीनां तु चतुर्गुणम्॥ इति (मनु ५ १३७) वचनाद्यथा ब्रह्मचार्यादीना शौचं द्वैगुण्यादिक्रमेण वर्धते तथा शोधनं प्रायश्चित्तमपि भवतीत्यर्थः। ब्रह्मचारिणस्तु प्रायश्चित्तद्वैगुण्यं षोडशवर्षादूर्ध्वमेव॥ मिता on या. III 250 On ब्रह्मनिदर्शनात् the prāy. m p 3 says 'ब्रह्मनिदर्शने तत्त्वज्ञानम्। ज्ञानोत्पत्त्यनन्तरं तूत्पन्नपापं ज्ञानेनैव नाश्यते। ज्ञानाग्नि सर्वकर्माणि भस्मसात्कुरुतेऽर्जुनेति भगवद्गीतोक्तेः।' (गीता ४ ३७).

199. न च द्वादशवार्षिके चतुर्गुणे क्रियमाणे मध्ये विपत्तिशङ्कया समाप्त्यनुपपत्तेः प्रवृत्तिरेव नोत्पद्यत इति शङ्कनीयम्। यत प्रक्रान्तप्रायश्चित्तस्य मध्ये विपत्तावपि पापक्षयो भवत्येव। तथा हारीत । प्रायश्चित्ते व्यवसिते कर्ता यदि विपद्यते। पूतस्तदहरेवासाविह लोके परत्र च॥ इति। व्यासोऽप्याह। धर्मार्थं यतमानस्तु न चेच्छक्नोति मानवः। प्राप्तो भवति तत्पुण्यमत्र वै नास्ति संशय॥ इति॥ मिता. on या III 250 बृहद्यम II 7 is almost the same as हारीत प्राय वि p. 86 ascribes the verse प्रायश्चित्ते व्यवसिते to बृहन्मनु; अपरार्क p. 1058 ascribes it to यम

Gaut. (19. 18–20) provides that these acts (viz Vedic recitation, tapas, fasting, gifts &c) may be optionally performed, when no (particular penance) has been prescribed, that for grave sins difficult penances and for trivial faults easy ones may be prescribed and that Kṛcchra, Atikṛcchra and Cāndrāyaṇa are penances for all sins [200] Manu XI 209 (=Viṣṇu 54 34) provides that for the expiation of offences for which no particular atonement has been prescribed, let (the pariṣad) prescribe a penance after considering the (offender's) strength and the nature of the offence. Parāśara (XI. 55–56) provides that the recitation of the Gāyatrī ten thousand times is the best penance for all sins and that Cāndrāyaṇa, Yāvaka, Tulāpuruṣa and serving cows destroy all sins Yāj. III. 265 provides that a man is purified from all sins by undergoing the penance for cow-killing or by Cāndrāyaṇa, observance for a month of the milk vrata or by Parāka. Manu XI. 117 provides for all upapātakas except the sin of sexual intercourse by one who is in the stage of Vedic student the penance prescribed for govadha or cāndrāyaṇa.

One guilty of a sin, even though he may himself be a learned man, should approach an assembly of learned brāhmaṇas and after making some present (a cow or the like) announcing the nature of his lapse seek their decision about the proper penance for his lapse (Yāj. [201] III 300 and Parāśara VIII. 2) The Mit, Par. M., Pr. S and other digests quote long passages in verse from Aṅgiras [202] who provides that the sinner should

---

200 एतान्येवानादेशे विकल्पेन क्रियेरन् ॥ एतेषु गुरुषु गुरुणि लघुषु लघूनि ॥ कृच्छ्रातिकृच्छ्रौ चान्द्रायणमिति सर्वपापश्चित्तम् ॥ गौ 19 18–20. Vide ब्रह्मपुराण 22 36 and विष्णुपुराण II 6 38 for very similar words 'पापे गुरूणि गुरूणि स्वल्पान्यल्पे च तद्विद । प्रायश्चित्तानि विमेन्द्रा जगु स्वायंभुवादय ॥ Instead of विमेन्द्रा the विष्णुपुराण has मैत्रेय This very verse is quoted as बृहस्पति's in प्राय तत्त्व p 545 (with मैत्रेय for विमेन्द्राः)

201. विख्यातदोषः कुर्वीत पर्षदोऽनुमतं व्रतम् । या III 300. This is ascribed to both बृहस्पति and या. by परा मा II part 2 p 153. Vide शङ्ख 17 62 also not conceal his lapse and lose time; he should bathe with his garment on, and with the garment still wet approach the assembly and should prostrate himself on the ground Thus the elders of the assembly ask the man prostrating himself before them 'what is your business, what is the trouble and what do you seek from us'. The assembly then asks him to go aside a little and debate among themselves what the penance should be, considering all the circumstances of time, place, nature of the lapse, age &c Then one of them at the desire of the assembly should declare the assembly's decision as to the proper penance after citing the smrti passages and reducing the penance in view of the weakness and other circumstances of the offender. It has already been stated that the parisad acted under the direction of the king in matters of prāyaścitta and that the king was not to interfere with the decision of the assembly. The principal stages in a penance were four viz. approaching the parisad, the declaration of the appropriate penance by the parisad, the actual performance of the penance declared and the announcing of the sinner's freedom from taint (Angiras q. by Pr. Prakāśa folio 27a 'upasthānam vratādeśaścaryā śuddhiprakāśanam । prāyaścittam catuspādam vihitam dharmakartrbhih ॥ ").

202 A few of the verses of अङ्गिरस् are cited here. कृत्वा पापं न गूहेत गूहमानस्य वर्धते ॥ सचैलं वाप्यत स्नात्वा क्लिन्नवासा समाहितः । क्षत्रियो वाथ वैश्यो वा परिषद्युपतिष्ठति । उपस्थाय तत शीघ्रमार्तिमान्धरणीं व्रजेत् । गां च शिरसा चैव न च किंचिदुदाहरेत् । ततस्ते प्रणिपातेन दृष्ट्वा तं समुपस्थितम् । बृहा. पृच्छन्ति किं कार्यमुपविश्याग्रत स्थितम् । किं कार्यं का च ते पीडा किं वा शृणुयसे द्विज । एव ते समनुज्ञातः सर्वे ब्रूयादशेषत । तस्मिन्निवेदिते कार्ये निष्कास्यो यस्तु कार्यवान् । सर्वेषां निश्चितं पश्चात् यच्च प्राणान् न घातयेत् । आहूय श्रावयेदेकः पर्षदा यो नियोजित । शृणुध्व भो इदं विप्र यत्ते आदिश्यते व्रतम् । यच्च पूर्वमुदाहार्यं यथोक्त धर्मकर्तृभिः । पश्चात्कार्यानुसारेण शक्त्या कुर्युरनुग्रहम् ॥ अङ्गिरस् q by परा मा II 1 p 206–207 and 235–236 प्राय सा pp 7. 17–20, प्राय म pp 11–12, प्रा. प्रकाश (folio 27b and 28a).

It is not necessary here to set out the details of the constitution of the parisad, of the qualifications of the śistas who were to be the members of the parisad and their privileges and duties These points have already been discussed at length in H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 966–974. A few matters not stated there are mentioned here Caste exclusiveness and pride had gone so far that Parāśara (VIII. 25) and the Caturvimśatimata quoted by Par M. state that a dvija though he may be of bad character is to be honoured and not a śūdra who may have controlled his senses, that the advice of a śūdra even though learned and devoted to the knowledge of the śāstras should not be accepted like sacrificial food when licked by a dog[203]. Instead of the word 'parisad' the word parsad (which is an irregular abbreviation) is employed in several smṛti passages[203a]. Parāśara (VI. 55–57) provides that the assembly should take compassion on the weak, on boys and old men and should reduce the penance, but not otherwise and that if learned men through affection, greed, fear or ignorance reduce the penance that should be prescribed they themselves incur the sin[203b] Devala says the same and adds[204] that the reduction in the penance should not be directed by one man alone or by a person ignorant of Dharmaśāstra and that it is only a number of brāhmanas who are proficient in Dharmasāstra that are entitled to reduce the penance through compassion for the sinner. The decision of the assembly should be unanimous[205] as far as possible

---

203 दु.शीलोपि द्विज पूज्यो न तु शूद्रो जितेन्द्रिय· । कः परित्यज्य गां दुष्टां दुहेच्छीलवतीं खरीम् । पराशर VIII. 25 on which परा मा II 1. p 228 observes जातिशीलयोर्मध्ये जात्युत्कर्ष एव माधान्येनोपादेयः । शीलं तु यथासम्भवम् । अत एव चतुर्विंशतिमते शूद्रोपदेशस्याप्युपादेयत्वं प्रपञ्चयति । श्वचर्मणि यथा क्षीरमपेयं ब्राह्मणादिभिः । तद्वच्छूद्रमुखाद्वाक्यं न श्रोतव्यं कथञ्चन ॥ पण्डितस्यापि शूद्रस्य शास्त्रज्ञानरतस्य च ॥ वचनं तस्य न ग्राह्यं शुनोच्छिष्टं हविर्यथा ॥

If the learned brāhmanas of the assembly knowing the proper prāyaścitta do not declare it in the case of those who are distressed by their own sin and seek direction, they incur sin similar to that of the seeker after proper penance[206].

203a पर्यच्छन्दोऽत्र पृषोदरादित्वात्साधु । प्राय. वि. p 26, on which गोविन्दानन्द says 'परिपीदन्त्यस्यामिति पर्षत् पृषोदरादित्वादिकारलोपो विकल्पित.' पाणिनि provides पृषोदरादीनि यथोपदिष्टम्। VI 3 109.

203 b दुर्बलेऽनुग्रहः प्रोक्तस्तथा बै बालवृद्धयो· । अतोन्यथा भवेद्दोषस्तस्माज्जानुग्रह. स्मृतः ॥ स्नेहाद्वा यदि वा लोभाद्भयादज्ञानतोपि वा । कुर्वन्त्यनुग्रह ये तु तत्पाप तेषु गच्छति ॥ पराशर VI. 55–57.

204 प्रायश्चित्तं यथोद्दिष्टमशक्य दुर्बलादिभिः । इष्यतेनुग्रहस्तेषा लोकसंग्रहकारणात् ॥ एको नार्हति तत्कर्तुमज्ञो वा नाप्यनुग्रहम्। धर्मज्ञा बहवो विप्रा. कर्तुमर्हन्त्यनुग्रहम् ॥ देवल q by परा मा II 1. pp. 130–131, प्राय. म p 12.

205 विचारस्तादृशः कार्यो यथा सर्वे सभासद । एकवाक्यतया ब्रूयुस्तथा श्रेयोधि· गच्छति ॥ q by प्राय सा p 18

206. आर्तानां मार्गमाणानां प्रायश्चित्तानि ये द्विजा । जानन्तो न प्रयच्छन्ति ते यान्ति समतां तु तै. ॥ आङ्गिरस् q. by मिता on या III 300, प्राय. तत्त्व. p. 512, परा. मा II part I p 234.

CHAPTER IV

PENANCES FOR PARTICULAR SINS

It is now proper to turn to the penances prescribed for individual sins of different types (grave sins, minor sins and the like). It may be noted that the smṛtis contain numerous prāyaścittas for the same sin and that it is often difficult to reconcile all the dicta The commentaries and digests such as the Mit and the Prāyaścitta-viveka therefore try to assign to each penance an appropriate provision, looking to all the circumstances noted above (i.e they are bent on 'visayavyavasthā').[206a] In this work, it is not necessary to set out in detail the numerous penances for numberless lapses that are prescribed in the several smrtis and digests. In the Śabdakalpadruma (part III) there is an analysis from the Prāyaścitta-viveka alone of the several lapses, the penances for them, the number of cows to be donated as substitutes, the monetary equivalents when even cows cannot be donated and the dakṣinā in each case, which occupy pages 321 to 364. Setting out all these lapses together with the penances for them would only be a matter of academic interest and of no practical value, as almost all the prāyaścittas have become antiquated and are hardly ever performed now except in the form of gifts of cows or money to brāhmanas, pilgrimages and recitation of Vedic mantras or japa of the names of some favourite deity such as Visnu or Śiva. Therefore only a few typical sins alone will be taken for treatment here and later on a list of all penances with brief descriptions will be furnished.

First come the Mahāpātakas. Śankha [207] (17. 1-3) prescribes the following penance for the four mahāpātakas: the sinner should bathe thrice every day, should erect in a forest a cottage thatched with leaves, should sleep on the ground, should subsist

---

206 a. एवमादीन्यन्यानि उत्कर्षापकर्षप्रतिपादकवचनानि ब्राह्मणादिजातत्व—वृत्तस्थावृत्तस्थत्व—वेदाग्न्यादियुक्तत्वायुक्तत्व—कामाकामकृतत्व—व्यवस्थया व्याख्येयानि। प्राय. वि. p 220, vide also प्राय वि pp 338-39 for a similar passage

207 नित्य त्रिषवणस्नायी कृत्वा पर्णकुटीं वने । अध शायी जटाधारी पर्णमूलफलाशन ॥ ग्रामं विशेच्च भिक्षार्थं स्वकर्म परिकीर्तयन्। एककालं समश्नीयाद्वर्षे तु द्वादशे गते॥ हेमस्तेयी सुरापश्च ब्रह्महा गुरुतल्पग । व्रतेनैतेन शुध्यन्ते महापातकिनस्त्विमे ॥ शङ्ख 17 1-3 q. by अपरार्क pp 1053-54, परा मा II. part 1 p. 320-321, मा. प्रकाश folio 87b.

on leaves, roots and fruits, should enter a village for alms all the time declaring his misdeed, should eat only once a day. When the 12th year passes in this way, the thief of gold, the drinker of surā, the murderer of a brāhmana and one who is guilty of incest become free from sin. Visnu Dh S. 34.1 speaks of sexual intercourse with one's mother, daughter or daughter-in-law as atipātaka and (34.2) provides that there is no penance except entering fire for this grave sin. The Bhavisyapurāna, Hārīta and Samvarta (q. by the Pr. V p 43) say the same But other smrtis like Manu XI. 54 and Yāj III. 227 treat mātr-gamana as a mahāpātaka (gurutalpa-gamana) and intercourse with the daughter or daughter-in-law as equal to violating guru's bed (Manu XI. 58, Yāj. III. 233-234). Therefore we begin with the mahāpātakas the first of which is the murder of a brāhmana Gaut. 22 2-10, Āp Dh. S I. 9. 24 10-25 and I. 9 25 12-13, Vas 20. 25-28, Visnu Dharmasūtra 35. 6 and 50. 1-6 and 15, Manu. XI. 72-82, Yāj III 243-250, Agnipurāna 169. 1-4 and 173 7-8, Samvarta 110-115 and many others prescribe various penances for brāhmana-murder. As the treatment of Manu is tolerably long, an analysis of it alone will be given here. Manu as stated by the Bhavisyapurāna (quoted by Kullūka on Manu XI. 72-82, Aparārka p 1055 and Pr V. p 63) speaks of 13 separate penances for brahmahatyā [208]. The general rule was that for a man of any class who is directly guilty of intentional murder of a brāhmana the penance was to end in death[209]. The thirteen penances as set out by Govindānanda in his commentary (called Tattvārthakaumudī) on Prāyascittaviveka (p 63) are as follows :—

(1) The murderer of a brāhmana should construct a hut in a forest and dwell therein for twelve years, should subsist on alms and should carry a piece of the head-bones of the murdered man on a staff. This is a very ancient penance and other smrtis add some details. For example, Gaut 22 4 provides that the sinner should submit to observances meant for a Vedic student (such as not partaking of flesh, honey etc. stated in

208 तथापि ब्राह्मणवधे प्रायश्चित्तानि सुव्रत। मनुना कीर्तितानीह त्रयोदश यथाक्रमम्। भविष्यपुराण q. by अपरार्क p 1055, प्राय वि p 63

209. तत्र कामत साक्षाद् ब्रह्मवध विशेषाश्रवणात् सर्वेषामेव वर्णाना मरणान्तिक प्रायश्चित्तम्। यदाह याज्ञवल्क्य (3 247.) 'लोमभ्य स्वाहेत्येवं । तथा च मध्यमाङ्गिरा. । प्राणान्तिकं तु यत्प्रोक्त प्रायश्चित्तं मनीषिभि । तत्तु कामकृत प्राप्य विज्ञेयं नात्र सशय। प्राय. प्रक pp 8-9 , परा मा II. part 2. p 72 and प्रा प्रकाश 94 a, quote the verse of मध्यमाङ्गिरस्

Gaut. 2. 19), should announce his sin and enter a village only for begging alms. Yāj. III. 243 prescribes that the sinner should have a piece of the head-bone in the hand (left) and another placed on a staff (in the right hand) and that he should eat a moderate quantity (i e. only once a day). The carrying of the piece of the head-bone in one hand is not meant for begging alms therein but only as a symbol. There was some divergence of views on this point[209a]. Āp Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 14 further provides that he should beg for alms at seven houses in only a broken reddish vessel (of clay or copper) and wear a piece of hempen cloth round his waist that will reach a little above his knees and that if he got no food at the seven houses he had to go without food that day and that he should protect cows and may for that purpose (for taking them out for grazing or bringing them back) enter the village again. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 243) adds that the staff with head-bone on and the head-bone carried in the left hand are merely symbolic (in order to remind him and others of his being guilty of brāhmaṇa murder), that he should on seeing an ārya avoid his path (Gaut. 22. 5), that he should keep standing by day and only sit down at night (Gaut. 22. 6) and bathe thrice in the day (Gaut. 22. 6). It is added by the Mit. that, if the murdered brāhmaṇa's head-bone cannot be had, that of any other brāhmaṇa would do. The Mit. adds that this vrata[210] for twelve years propounded by Gautama, Manu, Yājñavalkya and others is one and not different for each smṛti and therefore all the details that are not opposed to each other should be included. Aparārka p. 1053 (on Yāj. III. 243) relies on the 'sarvaśākhāpratyayanyāya'[211] and states 209 a. स्वप्यापादितविप्रस्यैव शिरो द्वेधा कृत्वार्धं ध्वजदण्डाग्रे स्थापयेदर्धं च हस्ते. अर्धीयादिति ..केचित्। अपरे तु द्वेधाकरणे प्रमाणाभावात् कृत्वा शवशिरोध्वजमिति मद्यवाक्ये. अखण्डितशिरःप्रतीतेश्चान्यशिरःकपालं हस्ते ग्राह्यं स्वप्यापादितविप्रशिरस्तु दण्डाग्रे स्थाप्यमित्याहुः। इत्थमेव विज्ञानेश्वरशूलपाण्यादयः। वयं तु स्वप्यापादितशिरःकपालं हस्ते ग्राह्यं अन्यदीयशिरसा तु ध्वजः कार्यः। मा. मकाश folio 88a.

210. इयं च मनुयाज्ञवल्क्यगौतमादिमतिपादिता द्वादशवार्षिकव्रतचर्या एकैव न पुनर्भिन्ना। परस्परसापेक्षत्वादविरोधाच्च। तथाहि—भिक्षाशी कर्म वेदयत्—(या. 3. 243) इत्युक्ते किं भिक्षापात्रं केषां वा गृहेषु कतिषु वेत्याकाङ्क्षा जायेतैव। तत्र-लोहितकेन खण्डलक्षणेन (आप. ध. सू 1. 9 24. 14.)—इत्यापस्तम्बवचनैः परिपूरणमविरुद्धम्। अतः सर्वैरेकः कल्पोपदेशात्कैश्चिदुक्तं मनुगौतमाद्युक्तेतिकर्तव्यतायाः परस्परसापेक्षत्वेऽपि विकल्प इति तन्निरूप्यैवोक्तमिति। मिता. on या III. 243.

211. अत्र च सर्वशाखाप्रत्ययमेकं कर्मेति न्यायेन स्मृत्यन्तरोक्ता अविरुद्धा धर्माः समुच्चयेन कर्तव्याः। विरुद्धास्तु विकल्पेन। अपरार्क p. 1053. Vide H of Dh. vol. III. p 870 for explanation of this Nyāya (maxim) which is based on जै II. 4. 9 and Śabara's bhāṣya thereon.

that there would be an option where the details of several smṛtis are in conflict. It was Viśvarūpa[212] on Yāj. III. 237 who held that the procedure prescribed by each smṛti was separate and that all details taken from different smṛtis were not to be mixed up. According to the Mit. and Kullūka (on Manu XI. 72) this vrata for 12 years is appropriate in the case where a brāhmana is murdered unintentionally and Kullūka quoting Angiras provides that for intentional brāhmana murder the penance will be double (i. e. 24 years). The Mit (on Yāj. III. 243) states that this observance for twelve years applies only to one who was himself directly the murderer of a brāhmana and that the anugrāhaka has to undergo only 9 years' vrata, the prayojaka only six years, the anumantā only 4½ years and the muttin only three years. It is further provided by the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 243) following a verse ascribed to Manu (not found in the printed text) and Devala[213] that if a man commits several murders of brāhmanas one after another, and performs penance at one time for them, for two murders he has to undergo the penance for 24 years and for three murders 36 years and when he commits the 4th murder there is no penance (but only death is the penance). The Pr. T. (p. 468) on the other hand,[214] following the Bhavisya-purāna holds that one performance of the 12 years' penance is enough penance for the murder of several brāhmanas, on the analogy of the Kṣāmavatī iṣṭi (Jai. VI. 4. 17–20) which is performed when both the purodāśas and the house are totally burnt up by accident before the oblations are offered. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 19 a) also says the same and adds that Devala's verse is to be interpreted as laying down that repetition of the same sinful act is more blamable. If the murderer of a brāhmana

212. न चैकमेवैतत् सर्वस्मृतिसिद्धं द्वादशवार्षिकं व्रतमित्याशङ्क्यनीयं मतिस्मृति प्रयोगभेदस्य-वकारो धर्मशास्त्राणामित्यत्र श्लोके (या. १.४) अभिहितत्वात्। विश्वरूप on या III. 237 (शिर कपालवान्)

213. यच्च मनुदेवलाभ्यामुक्तं विधेः माथनिकादस्माद् द्वितीये द्विगुणं भवेत्। तृतीये त्रिगुणं प्रोक्तं चतुर्थे नास्ति निष्कृति॥ तच्च मतिनिमित्तं नैमित्तिकशास्त्रमात्रस्थं इति न्यायेन। मिता. on या III 243. प्राय वि. pp 25 and 77, प्राय प्रकाश (19a) ascribes the verse to देवल alone, while परा मा. II part 2 p. 60 ascribes to both and स्मृतिमु. (प्राय) p. 872 attributes it to मनु and गालव (if the ms was properly read by the editor). हरदत्त on गौ. 22 6 ascribes it to मनु alone was a ksatriya or a vaiśya or a śūdra he had to perform the penance above described respectively for 24, 36 or 48 years. (Smrtyarthasāra p. 105). Instead of staying in a hut for twelve years he may stay at the end of a village or a cowpen and should tonsure his head and the hair on the lips or he may stay in an hermitage or at the foot of a tree and should devote himself to doing good to brāhmanas and cows and should observe celibacy (Manu XI. 78 and 81). At the end of 12 years he destroys the sin of brāhmana-murder.

214. तथा नानाब्रह्मवधसत्वे सर्वोद्देशेन सकृत्प्रायश्चित्ते कृते सर्वब्रह्मवधजन्यपापनाश। यथा वधाद्वृत्तौ भविष्ये। ब्राह्मणस्य ब्राह्मणयोर्ब्राह्मणानां च पुत्रक। प्रायश्चित्तस्य चैकत्व जातिमाश्रित्य लक्ष्यते। क्षामवत्यादिना यद्वत् कर्मणा प्रतनापते। वैवदोषादकरणे जाते. दोषकदम्बके। होमेनैकेन दोषाणां सर्वेषां क्षयमादिशेत्। प्रा. तत्त्व p 468.

(2) According to Ap Dh. S. I. 9.25.12, Gaut 22. 3, Manu XI. 72, Yāj. III. 248, if a ksatriya intentionally killed a brāhmana he may at his will enter a fight and if he were killed by his opponents who knew that he was a brāhmana murderer, or even if he was wounded and left unconscious on the field but subsequently recovered he should be free from the sin of brāhmana-murder.

(3) According to Āp. Dh. S. I. 9.25.13, Vas. 20. 25–26, Gaut. 22.2, Manu XI. 74, Yāj. III. 247, he may cut off with an axe his hair, skin, blood, flesh, muscles, fat, bones and marrow and offer them into an ordinary fire kindled by him for the purpose and offer these eight offerings into it for Death[215] (Mrtyu) as the deity and then throw himself into fire (thrice: with head downwards, according to Manu XI. 73). This penance is for intentional murder of a brāhmana by a ksatriya acc. to the Madanapārijāta and Bhavisyapurāna q. by Pr. Prakāśa folio 95 a.

(4)—(8) The murderer of a brāhmana may perform the Aśvamedha sacrifice or Gosava or Abhijit or Viśvajit or the threefold Agnistut (Manu XI. 74) The Aśvamedha could be performed only by a king or an emperor (samrāj). The others could be performed by any one belonging to the three higher classes This applies only where the murder was unintentional as stated by Kullūka following the Bhavisyapurāna.[216] Visnu

215. अग्नौ सक्तिर्ब्रह्मघ्नलिरवच्छातस्य। गौ 22 2; अपि वा लोमानि स्वचं मांसमिति हावयित्वाग्नि प्रविशेत्। आप. ध I. 9 25.13: भ्रूणहाग्निमुपसमाधाय जुहुयादेता। लोमानि मृत्योर्जुहोमि लोमभिर्मृत्यु वासय इति प्रथमाम्।.. मज्जानं मृत्योर्जुहोमि मज्जाभिर्मृत्युं वासय इत्यष्टमीम्। वसिष्ठ 20 25–26 When या III. 247 prescribes that he should utter लोमभ्यः स्वाहा, the देवता is मृत्यु and लोम, त्वक् and all others are the आहुतिs.

216. तदुक्तं भविष्यपुराणे–स्वर्जितादेश्च यद्वीर कर्मणा प्रतनापते। अश्वमेधं द्विजातीनां वधे ह्यमतिपूर्वके॥ कुल्लूक on मनु XI.74. For the Aśvamedha, vide H. of Dh.

(Continued on the next page)

dharmasūtra (chap. 35 last verse) states that all persons guilty of any of the mahāpātakas are purified by the performance of Aśvamedha or by going to all the tirthas on the earth.

(9) Manu XI. 75 provides that for the removal of the sin of brahmahatyā, the sinner may walk one hundred yojanas, subsisting on limited food, controlling his senses and reciting one of the four Vedas. Kullūka says that this applies only where the killing is unintentional and the victim is a mere brāhmana by caste (i. e. has not studied the Veda &c.). For yojana, vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 145 note 185.[217].

(10) Manu XI. 76 provides that the murderer of a brāhmana may make a gift of all his wealth to a brāhmana who has studied the Veda.

(11) Manu XI. 76 and Yāj III 250 provide that the murderer may donate to a worthy brāhmana (who has studied the Veda and whose character is good) as much wealth as would suffice to maintain the latter throughout his life and a house with all paraphernalia. This is the view of Govindānanda. But the Mit. on Yāj. III. 250 appears to hold that Nos 10 and 11 are not separate penances It combines the two into one, viz. that if the murderer has no offspring then he was to donate all his wealth or if he had offspring he was to donate a house with paraphernalia. This explanation is certainly preferable. The Smrtyarthasāra (p 105) states that if the murderer is devoid of qualities but is well-off he may give a house and lands sufficient for the maintenance of a worthy brāhmana or he may donate a house with appurtenances or if he be childless all his wealth.

(12) Manu XI. 77 [218] and Yāj. III. 249 provide that the murderer subsisting on sacrificial food (such as nivāra, milk or vol II 1228-1237. The Viśvajit and Abhijit are ekāhas and the first and last rites of the Astarātra and Abhijit follow the procedure of soma sacrifice. Vide Jai. VI 7. 14 and VIII. 1 16 and Āśv Śr. VIII. 5 13. In the Viśvajit one has to make a gift of all his wealth. vide H of Dh. vol. II, p. 1212 n 2644 For Gosava and Agnistut vide note 153 above.

---

(Continued from the last page)

217. तथा च भविष्यपुराणेऽयमेव श्लोकः पठित व्याख्यातश्च-जातिमात्रं यदा विप्रं हन्याद्मतिपूर्वकम् । वेदविज्ञाग्निहोत्रीं च तदा तस्य भवेदिदम्॥ कुलूक on मनु XI.75.

218. हविष्यमुन्वाहुसरेत्यतिस्रोत सरस्वतीम्। मनु XI.77, मेधातिथि comments हविष्यं हुन्यर्क नीवारादि श्याम्यमपि पयोघृतादि । अतिस्रोत स्रोत स्रोन. अति यावन्ति ghee) should follow the course of the (holy) river Sarasvatī in all its branches. This, acc. to the Bhavisyapurāna and Kullūka, applies where a mere brāhmaṇa by caste (without Vedic learning) is killed intentionally by a man who is himself rich but has no vedic learning. The words 'pratisrotah sarasvatīm' have been variously explained. Medhātithi explains as above. Aparārka, Sarvajñanārāyana and Rāghavānanda explain that the murderer should follow the course of the Sarasvatī in the opposite direction from the sea to its origin. This appears to be a better explanation, since it brings out the force of 'pratisrotah' more clearly.

(Continued on the next page)

(13) It is provided by Manu XI. 77 and Yāj. III. 249 that the murderer should recite in a forest thrice the saṃhitā text of the Veda, while subsisting on limited food. The express mention of saṃhitā text precludes the pada text or krama. The Bhavisyapurāna and Kullūka hold that this penance is proper where a mere brāhmaṇa by birth (without Vedic learning) is killed unintentionally.

Manu XI. 79, Yāj. III. 244 and 246, Vas. 20. 27–28 and Gaut. 22. 7–8 and 11 mention three more penances, but they are not independent ones (as is made clear by Śankha). If a murderer, while undergoing the 12 years' penance, fights him who attacks a brāhmaṇa and saves him (or fights for the king, acc. to Vas.) or dies in the attempt, he becomes at once free from the sin and if he lives after the fight he had not to continue the penance for the whole period. The same applies to the saving of 12 cows by the murderer by putting his own life in danger[219]. Similarly, if a murderer fights a marauder depriving a brāhmaṇa of all his wealth and restores the wealth to a brāhmaṇa or dies in the attempt or is severely wounded (thrice acc. to Yāj, Vas and Gaut.) and is unable to restore the wealth to the brāhmaṇa he becomes free from the grave sin of brāhmaṇa murder.

(Continued from the last page)

सरस्वत्या स्रोतांसि तावन्त्यनुसरेत्". अपरार्क p 1060 says 'सरस्वतीं प्रति स्रोतोऽन्तादारभ्योदगं यावदपि गत्वा शुध्यति'; सर्वज्ञनारायण explains प्रतिस्रोत प्रभासमारभ्य शुक्लप्रस्रवणान्त यत्र यत्र सरस्वती तत्र तत्र स्रोतो लक्षीकृत्य तीरेण गमनम्।" The मिता. on या. III 249 explains शुक्लात् प्रस्रवणादारभ्य पश्चिमोदधेः प्रतिस्रोत स्रोत' प्रति सरस्वतीं इत्वा गत्वा.' For the sacredness of the Sarasvatī, vide H. of Dh vol II. pp 13–15 and later on under tīrthas

219. अन्तराले वा ब्राह्मणं मोचयित्वा गवां वा द्वादशानां परित्राणात्। इति। शङ्ख. by हरदत्त on गौ 22 14 and मिता. on या. III 244.

Manu XI. 82, Yāj III. 244, Śaṅkha and Gaut 22.9 lay down that if the murderer of a brāhmana announces his sin when the king and priests have met together for the ceremonial bath after the Aśvamedha sacrifice and being permitted by them bathes along with them, he becomes free from the sin.[220] According to Haradatta this is an independent penance, while according to the Mit on Yāj III. 244, Aparārka p. 1057 and others it is not so but is to be performed while undergoing the 12 years' penance.

Yāj. III. 245 provides that if the murderer treats and cures a brāhmana or a cow (or cows) lying helpless on the public road suffering from a long-standing and serious ailment he becomes free from the sin.

Parāśara (XII. 65–67) prescribes for brahmahatyā the penance of going to the sea and Rāma's bridge, begging and declaring on the way one's sin, walking without an umbrella or shoes and residing in cowpens, forests, tīrthas and river streams; on seeing the setu he was to bathe in the ocean and on return to feed brāhmanas at a dinner and to donate 100 cows to learned brāhmanas.

There are other penances for brahmahatyā mentioned by Jamadagni, Atri, Kaśyapa and others quoted by Aparārka (pp. 1064–1065) and others which are passed over here for want of space.

If a brāhmana killed his own father, mother, full brother, his teacher of the Veda, a brāhmana who has studied the Veda or has consecrated sacred Vedic fires, he had to undergo penance till his last breath (acc. to Pr. Prakarana p. 13 quoting Bhaviṣya-purāna, Pr. V. pp. 70–71, Smṛtimuktāphala Pr. p 873 quoting Daksa III. 27–28 and Āp. Dh. S I.9 24). If a man killed a priest that was engaged at a soma sacrifice the penance was double (Yāj III. 252). The Pr. Prakarana (p 13) says that this means that the murderer should perform 12 years' penance and then donate cows[221] in proportion to the difference between his age at the time of finishing twelve years and 120 years (which is regarded as the highest limit of life). If a person strikes a brāhmana intending to kill him but only injures him he should perform the vrata for brahmahatyā (acc. to Yāj. III. 252, Gaut. 22.11*). The Mit. explains that this is an extension (atideśa) of the rules about brahmahatyā and so the penance is a little less than the full one (i. e. 9 years). Where certain sins are said to be equal (sama) to brahmahatyā or surāpāna, the penance for them is half of what is prescribed for the latter. If a person intending to commit suicide by entering water or fire or by hanging himself or by taking poison or by falling from a precipice or the dome of a temple or by cutting his belly with a weapon or by fasting, does not die, but luckily lives, he has to undergo a prāyaścitta for three years (acc. to Pr. Prakarana p. 15). Vas. 23. 18–19 and Parāśara XII.5–8 prescribe other prāyaścittas for such persons (who are styled 'pratyavasita'). Pr. Prakarana (p. 15) and Pr. V. (p. 75) quote two verses of Yama[221a] for nine kinds of pratyavasita and prescribe Cāndrāyana or two Taptakrcchras for them.

220. अश्वमेधावभृथं गत्वा तत्राज्ञात स्नात्वा सत्र पूतो भवति। शङ्ख q by मिता on या III 244. अपरार्क p 1057 (on या III 244) and प्राय. सा p. 33 combine the two sūtras of Śaṅkha into one.

221. तथा च भविष्यपुराणम्। मातरं पितरं हत्वा सोदर्यं भ्रातरं तथा। गुरुं हत्वा श्रोत्रियं च आहिताग्निमथापि वा॥ आ उत्तमाद्गुच्छासाद् व्रत चीर्णो विशुध्यति। अत्र पेत्तृसङ्कलनाया जीवनकालस्यानियतत्वाद् विंशत्युत्तरं शते परमायुरेव ग्राह्यम्। तेन द्वादशाब्दिकं कृत्वा वधकालादूर्ध्वं विंशत्यधिकशतस्य यावद्वशिष्टं तावत्परिमाणद्वादशाब्दिकव्रतावृत्त्या धेन्वो दातव्याः। प्राय. प्रक p 13.

If a ksatriya, vaiśya or śūdra intentionally and directly killed a brāhmana, the expiation was death, but otherwise each had respectively to undergo twice, thrice or four times as much prāyaścitta as a brāhmana sinner would have had to undergo for killing a brāhmana.[222] Conversely, if a brāhmana killed a ksatriya or vaiśya or a śūdra the sin was only an upapātaka (acc. to Yāj. III. 236 and Manu XI. 66), unless the ksatriya or vaiśya victim was engaged in performing a soma sacrifice (Śāmavidhāna Br. I. 7. 5, Yāj. III 251, Vas. 20. 34) when the penance was heavy. Yāj. III. 266–267, Manu XI. 126–130 and Āp. Dh. S. I.9.24. 1–4 prescribe other penances for killing a ksatriya, a vaiśya or a śūdra. The penance for a ksatriya

---

221. a जलाग्न्युद्बन्धनभ्रष्टाः प्रव्रज्यानाशकच्युताः । विषमपतनप्रायशस्त्रघातहताश्च ये ॥ नवैते प्रत्यवसिताः सर्वलोकबहिष्कृताः । चान्द्रायणेन शुध्यन्ति तप्तकृच्छ्रद्वयेन वा ॥ यम, verses 22–23, बृहद्यम 3–4, नारदपुराण. These include those who give up samnyāsa and those who sit down at the door of another for killing themselves (माध).

222 माध मक. p. 16 says: तत्र क्षत्रियादीनां साक्षाद्ब्रह्मवधे विशेषाश्रवणात् प्राणान्तिकमेव । इतरत्र तु यद् ब्राह्मणस्य ब्रह्मवधे प्रायश्चित्तं तद् क्षत्रियवैश्यशूद्राणां यथाक्रमं द्विगुणं त्रिगुणं चतुर्गुणमिति बोद्धव्यम् ।...तथा च ब्रह्मवधप्रकरणेऽङ्गिराः । परिषद्या 0 (vide note 195 for the quotation), vide the माध वि p. 75 (which quotes भविष्यपुराण that quotes the verses of अङ्गिरस्, स्मृत्यर्थसार p 105, स्मृतिमु. (मा.) p. 873. परा. मा. II part 2 p. 74 and मा. प्रकाश (folio 94 a) quote a verse of प्रजापति 'द्विगुणं त्रिगुणं चैव चतुर्गुणमथापि वा । क्षत्रविद्शूद्रजातीनां ब्राह्मणस्य वधे व्रतम् ॥.'

killing a kṣatriya is a little less (i. e. by ¼) than the penance for a brāhmana killing a ksatriya Vide the verse 'vipre tu sakalam deyam' quoted above (note 192).

Women victims were placed on the same footing as ksatriya, vaiśya and śūdra males (Yāj. III. 236 and Manu XI 66), except the cases where the woman was an Ātreyī or pregnant or in her monthly illness (Gaut 22 17, Āp Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 5 and 9, Baud. Dh. S. II. 1.10, 12–13, Vas 20 34, Visnu Dh. S. 50 7–9) or the wife of a twice-born performing a soma sacrifice, when the penance was heavy (like the one for brahmahatyā) The period of soma-yāga was reckoned from the Dīksanīyā isti to the Udavasānīyā (acc to the Mit) or up to the end of avabhrtha bath (acc. to Aparārka). For killing women guilty of adultery the penances were higher and varied according to the caste of the paramour and of the woman (vide Gaut 22.26–27, Manu XI. 138, Yāj III. 268–269).

Manu (XI. 208=Visnu Dh. S 54 30) and Yāj III. 293 prescribe that for threatening to beat or strike a brāhmana the penance is krcchra, for striking him it is Ati-krcchra, for shedding his blood a Krcchra and Atikrcchra. The Sāmavidhāna Br. I. 7. 4 prescribes other penances (i. e. recitation of certain sāman texts) for these.

Gaut. 23.1,[223] Āp Dh S. I 9 25.3, Baud. Dh. S. II. 1. 21., Vas. 20.22, Manu XI. 90–91, Yāj. III. 253 and Brhaspati prescribe that if a brāhmana drinks intentionally spirituous liquor prepared from flour even once he has to undergo a penance that ends in death, viz. he has to drink that liquor boiling hot or to drink boiling hot cow's urine, milk, ghee, water or liquid cow-dung, and when his body has been completely scalded thereby and he dies he becomes free from that sin. Some like Haradatta on Gaut. 23 1 hold that this horrible penance is meant for one who knowingly and repeatedly drinks surā (manufactured from rice flour). Manu XI. 92 and Yāj. III. 254 prescribe another penance in place of the one ending in death viz. that the sinner should eat during one year (during three years, acc. to Yāj.) once (a day) at night the (boiled) small grains of rice, or oilcake, should wear clothes made of cow's hair, should have matted hair on his head and carry a flagstaff (with a wine cup thereon). The same rules apply to a ksatriya or vaiśya drinking surā (manufactured from rice flour). Only they have as stated above (in note 192) to undergo three-fourths and one-half respectively of the penance for a brāhmana sinner. This penance was to be undertaken after vomiting the contents of the stomach. According to the Madanapārijāta (p. 818), Pr. V. p 104, Pr Prakarana p. 43, Mit. (on Yāj III. 24) and other works the twelve years' penance is meant for one who drinks surā (made from flour) through ignorance or force. According to Gaut 23. 2-3, Yāj. III 255, Manu. XI. 146, Atri 75, for drinking intoxicants or human semen, ordure or urine through ignorance a person of the three first classes had first to undergo the penance called Taptakrcchra and then his upanayana was again performed. Vasistha 20.19 prescribes for drinking any intoxicant unintentionally the penances of Kṛcchra and Atikrcchra, the drinking of ghee and the performing of upanayana again. There is great divergence of views about Manu XI. 146 and Yāj III. 255 which is passed over here. Brhaspati [224] quoted by the Mit, Aparārka and others prescribes that a brāhmana who drinks surā prepared from raw sugar, flour and honey (or madhūka flowers) should respectively undergo Taptakrcchra, Parāka and Cāndrāyana. This light penance is restricted acc. to the Mit. and others to cases where surā is drunk for curing a malady which no other medicine could cure. If a brāhmana drank surā (not manufactured from flour) or any other intoxicant, various easy penances were prescribed for him (such as undergoing Cāndrāyana on a river falling into the sea, feeding brāhmanas and donating a cow and a bull to the brāhmanas, Parāśara XII 75-76). Vide Yāj. III. 255 and the Mit thereon. Ksatriyas and vaiśyas incurred no sin by drinking intoxicants other than surā (made from flour) and the śūdra incurred no sin even by drinking surā of the

223. सुरापोऽग्निस्पर्शी सुरा पिबेत्। आप. ध. सू. 1 9 25 3; सुरापस्य ब्राह्मणस्योष्णामासिञ्चेयुः सुरामास्ये मृत. शुध्येत्। गौ 23.1, सुरापाने कामकृते ज्वलन्तीं तां विनिक्षिपेत्। मुखे तया विनिर्दग्धे मृत. शुद्धिमवाप्नुयात्॥ बृहस्पति q. by मिता. on या III 253, अपरार्क p. 1071, प्राय प्रक p 43, प्रायेण धर्मशास्त्रेषु सर्वेष्वेव नराधिप। मतिपूर्वं सुरापाने प्राणान्तिक सदाहृतम्॥ पैठीपाने तु ऋषिभिर्नेतरस्यां कदाचन। भविष्यपुराण q by दीपकलिका on या. III. 253.

224. गौडीं पैष्टीं तथा माध्वीं पीत्वा विप्रः समाचरेत्। तप्तकृच्छ्रं पराकं च चान्द्रायणमनुक्रमात्॥ बृहस्पति q. by मिता. on या III. 254, अपरार्क p. 1073, परा. मा II part 2 p. 84, मद. पा p. 821, प्राय. सा. p. 42 The मिता comments यत्तु वौधायनीयं त्रैमासिकमतया सुरापाने कृच्छ्रान्द्वादशं चरित्वा पुनरुपनयनमिति, यच्च चार्म्म 'सुरां पीत्वा द्विजो हत्वा कृमं हत्वा द्विजन्मनः। सयोगं पतितैर्गत्वा द्विजश्चान्द्रायणं चरेत्॥' इति, यदपि बाहस्पत्यं 'गौडीं...क्रमात्॥' इति तत्त्रितयमप्यनन्यौषधसाध्यव्याध्युपशमार्थं पाने वेदितव्यं प्रायश्चित्तस्यात्पत्वात्।

paiṣṭī variety. The Mit (on Yāj III. 243) holds that since Manu XI. 93 generally forbids the drinking of surā on the part of brāhmaṇas, kṣatriyas and vaiśyas the prohibition applies even to boys who have not undergone the rite of upanayana and girls who are not yet married and adds that for drinking surā the child has to undergo only one-fourth penance (for 3 years) if the offence was unintentional and double of that (6 years) if it was intentional (vide also Pr. prakaraṇa p 48). The Kalpataru, it appears, held, relying on Gaut II. 1 ('before upanayana a child may do as it pleases as regards behaviour, speech and eating'), that no sin (doṣa) was incurred by a child before upanayana and by a girl before marriage for drinking surā. The Pr. V (p. 104) and Pr. Prakāśa criticize the Kalpataru for this view.[225] As Bṛhaspati states (vide n. 188 above) the license allowed by Gautama is limited by the Mit and other digests to the partaking of sour or stale drinks and the like and is not extended to drinking surā which is a mahāpātaka Jātūkarnya[226] (q. by the Par. M.) provides that if a boy whose upanayana has not been performed drinks an intoxicant (madya) through foolishness, his father, mother or brother should perform three kṛcchras as an expiation for him. Aṅgiras (Jiv. p. 557), Āpastamba-smṛti III. 7, Laghu-Hārīta 34-35, Bṛhad-yama III. 1-2 also provide that a pratinidhi (brother, father, friend) may undergo an expiation for a boy who is himself unable to do so or is less than eleven and above five years of age.

The Āśv. gṛ. (I 22 22-26)[227] prescribes what is to be done and what is to be omitted in punar-upanayana. It provides that the rites of the cutting of the hair and the production of intelligence are optional, there are no express rules about giving the person in charge (of the deities) and as to the time, and the verse to be recited as the Sāvitrī is Ṛgveda V. 82.1 instead of the usual Gāyatrī (tatsavitur-varenyam, Ṛg. III. 62,10)

225. अत्रानुपनीतब्राह्मणकुमारानृद्दब्राह्मणकुमारिकयो. सुरापाने दोषाभाव सुरा पीत्वा द्विजो मोहादित्यादि प्रायश्चित्ते द्विजग्रहणादिति कल्पतरुस्तत्र तस्माद् ब्राह्मणराजन्यौ इति मद्यवचनात् सुरापाननिषेधोऽयं जात्याश्रय इति स्थिति. । न पिबेद् ब्राह्मणो मद्यं निषिद्धमपि चापरम् ॥ इति कुमारवचनाच्च द्विजग्रहणस्य जात्युपलक्षणार्थत्वात् । प्राय वि pp 104-105.

226. अनुपेतस्तु यो बालो मद्यं मोहात्पिबेद्यदि । तस्य कृच्छ्रत्रयं कुर्यान्माता भ्राता तथा-पिता ॥ जातूकर्ण्य q. by परा मा. II part 2 p 80.

227 अधोपेतपूर्वस्य । कृताकृतं केशवपनं मेधाजननं च । अनिरुक्तं परिदानम् । कालश्च । तत्सवितुर्वृणीमहे इति सावित्रीम् । आश्व. गृ I. 22 22-26, q by सद्. पा. p 821.

Vasistha 20.18 quotes Manu XI. 151 on this point[228] and Visnu (Dh. S. 51.4-5) in prose is to the same effect. Visnu (Dh S. 51. 2-3) provides Cāndrāyana for drinking any of the (twelve) unclean excretions of the body (Manu V. 134) or any of the several kinds of intoxicating drinks and for eating garlic or onion or red garlic or any plant having a similar flavour or the flesh of village pigs, of tame cocks, of apes and of cows and then adds (in sūtra 4) that they (the sinners) must undergo fresh upanayana also The smrtis provide different prāyaścittas for various lapses about drinking and eating such as drinking water from a pot which had already been used for holding surā, for drinking water from the water vessel of a cāndāla or of a washerman or from a śūdra's house or for drinking milk which should not be drunk (Gaut 17.22-26, Yāj I. 170, Manu V. 8-10), for eating forbidden food, which must be passed over here, because[229] they are too many and too various and depend on circumstances for their application as observed by the Pr. V and because they are now of academic interest alone. Some reference, however, may be made to show how some of these lapses were treated. Śankha states that there are many articles that are allowed or forbidden to men, particularly to brāhmanas and in cases of transgressions the decision rests with the śistas (the parisad of respectable people). Brhaspati[230] (quoted by Aparārka) prescribes that in the case of the partaking of things that should not be licked or drunk or eaten or in case of taking in human semen, urine or ordure, the penance of a cāndrāyana is the purification Some of the sages such as Samvarta, Śankha-likhita took a lenient view, prescribed Cāndrāyana even for eating cow's flesh and human flesh[231]

228. मानवं चात्र श्लोकमुदाहरन्ति। वपनं मेखला दण्डो भैक्षचर्या व्रतानि च । एतानि तु निवर्तन्ते पुन.संस्कारकर्मणि ॥ इति। वसिष्ठ 20. 18 The verse is मनु XI 151.

229. यानि चान्यानि सूत्रान्तरोक्तानि अभक्ष्यभक्षणे अपेयपाने शुरुलघुप्रायश्चित्तानि तानि कामाकामकृतसकृदभ्यासापेक्षया योज्यानि ब्रह्मणामानन्त्यात्प्रतिस्मृतिषु अभक्ष्यत्वमभिधातुमशक्यमिति तत्सूत्रान्तरादेवावगन्तव्यम्। शिष्टवाक्याच्च। यथा शङ्ख । भक्ष्याभक्ष्याण्यनेकानि ब्राह्मणस्य विशेषतः। तत्र शिष्टा यथा ब्रूयुस्तथा कार्यो विनिश्चय. ॥ q by माध. वि. p. 339. The verse is quoted by परा. मा II. part 1 p. 462.

230. अलेह्यानामपेयानामभक्ष्याणां च भक्षणे। रेतोमूत्रपुरीषाणां शुद्धिश्चान्द्रायणं स्मृतम्॥ बृह q by अपरार्क p. 1164, परा मा II part 1 p 367.

231. गोमांस मानुषं चैव सूनिर्दस्तात्समाहृतम्। अभक्ष्यं तद्भवेत्सर्वं श्रुत्वा चान्द्रायणं चरेत्॥ संवर्त 197 q by अपरार्क p. 1165, परा. मा II part 1 p 367; शृगालकुक्कुट-वर्ष्णि-कव्याद-वानर-खरोष्ट्र-गजवाजि-विड्वराह-गोमानुषमांसभक्षणे चान्द्रायणम् ॥ शङ्ख-लिखित q by अपरार्क p. 1166, परा मा II part 1 p 368, vide गौ 23. 4-5, वसिष्ठ 23 30, मनु XI. 156, विष्णु 51 3-4 for similar provisions

The general rule stated by the Sāma Br. I 5 13, Manu XI. 160 and others is that one desirous of inner purity should not eat forbidden food, that if he eats it through ignorance he should make efforts to vomit it and if that is impossible he should quickly take some prāyaścitta (which is slight in the case of ignorance). It may be mentioned that even from very ancient times exceptions were recognised to the prohibitions against the partaking of forbidden food The Chāndogya Upanisad (I. 10)[231] narrates the story of Usasti Cākrāyana, who when the country of the Kurus had been devastated by hailstones (or by locusts), begged (along with his very young wife) of a chief eating beans and took from the latter the beans that had been put away for the chief (and so were uchista), but when asked to take water for drinking meant for the chief replied that if he drank of it he would be drinking what was unclean, since he could get water whenever he liked. This Vedic passage indicates that even unclean things may be eaten when there is distress (āpad) or danger to life, but that when there is no distress or danger even one who has knowledge of brahmavidyā should not violate the injunctions of śāstra about eating. The Vedāntasūtra (III.4 28) has an aphorism on this incident Manu X.104 provides that he who, when in danger of losing his life, accepts food from any person whatsoever is not tainted by sin as the sky is not tainted by mud Manu then refers (X 105–108) to the stories of Ajīgarta who, when famished, approached for slaying his own son, of the sage Vāmadeva who when tormented by hunger desired to eat the flesh of a dog in order to save his life and did not sully himself, of Bharadvāja who when distressed by hunger along with his son in a lonely forest accepted many cows from the carpenter Vrdhu (Brbu?) or of Visvāmitra who, well knowing what was right or wrong, proceeded, when tormented by hunger, to eat the haunch of a dog, receiving it from the hands of a Cāndāla [232a]

---

232 स हेभ्यं कुल्मापान्खादन्त विभिक्षे त होवाच नेतोऽन्ये विद्यन्ते यत्र ये म इम उपनिहिता इति। एतेषा मे देहीति होवाच तानस्मै प्रदद्यौ तस्तानुपानमित्युच्छिष्ट वै मे पीत स्यादिति होवाच। न स्विदेतेष्युच्छिष्टा इति न वा अजीविष्यमिमान्न खादन्निति होवाच कामो म उदपानमिति। छा. उप 1. 10 2-4, सर्वान्नानुमतिश्च प्राणात्यये तद्दर्शनात्। वेदान्तसूत्र III 4 28, on this शाङ्करभाष्य observes तदेतदुच्छिष्टोच्छिष्टपर्युषितभक्षण दर्शयन्त्या. श्रुतेराशयातिशयो लक्ष्यते प्राणात्ययप्रसङ्गे प्राणसन्धारणायाभक्ष्यमपि भक्षयितव्यमिति। स्वस्था. वस्थाया तु तन्न कर्तव्यं विद्यावतापीत्युच्छिष्टपानमत्यारुणानाद्गम्यते।

232a For the legend of Ajīgarta, vide Aitareya Br. VII.13-16 (or 33 1 ff) and H. of Dh vol III pp 563–64, 660, 663 In Rg. VI 45 31–33 Brbu is described as the carpenter of the Panis and his liberality is highly praised. For Visvāmitra trying to steal from a hamlet of cāndālas a dog's leg, when famished, vide Śāntiparva 141.26–96

For eating the flesh of various birds Visnu Dh. S. 51. 29 and 31 and others prescribe fasting for three days or one day and also for eating several varieties of fish (Visnu 51.21).

We may now revert to the penances for the other Mahāpātakas. It has already been seen how the thief that had stolen a brāhmana's gold of a certain weight was to approach the king with a club (p. 73 above). Even Ap. Dh. S. I 9.25.4 refers to this and prescribes as an option (Āp Dh. S. I.9 25.6–7) entering into fire as an expiation for theft or starving oneself by reducing the intake of food. Therefore, the penance for the theft of brāhmana's gold of the weight of 80 raktikās or more (Manu VIII. 134 and Yāj I.363) was death for the offenders of all varnas, except a brāhmana offender, who clad in rags (or bark garment) was to undergo a penance in a forest for twelve years of the same kind as for brāhmana murder (Manu XI. 101) or for the drinking of surā prepared from flour (Yāj III. 258). The offender may also give as much gold (if he is rich) as his own weight or as much wealth as would be required for the maintenance of a brāhmana's family for the latter's lifetime (Yāj. III 258 and Mit. thereon) The Āp Dh. S. I. 9 25 8 provides the observance of the penance of Krcchra for one year (as defined in Āp Dh. S I 9 27 7–8) and quotes a verse "those who have committed a theft (of gold), drunk spirituous liquor, or had connection with a guru's wife, but not those who have slain a brāhmana, shall eat every fourth meal-time a little food, bathe thrice a day, pass the day standing and the night sitting; after the lapse of three years they cast off their sins."[232b] The digests contain numerous and varying expiations for theft depending upon the weight of gold stolen, upon the qualities of the man robbed and of the thief, upon the caste of both, upon whether it is a first offence or a repeated one, on the price and nature of the thing stolen and on the time and place and so on Vide Pr V. pp. 117–127, Pr. Sāra p 49, Madanapārijāta pp 828–834, Smrtyarthasāra pp. 108–109, Smrtimuktāphala pp 883–885. These have to be passed over here for reasons of space.

If the gold stolen (even from a brāhmana) was less than 80 raktikās or if gold of any weight was stolen from a ksatriya or any other non-brāhmaṇa, the expiation would be as one for an upapātaka. Manu (XI 162–168=Matsyapurāṇa 227. 41–47) and Viṣṇu 52. 5–13 prescribe various penances such as kṛcchra for a year for the theft of corn or cooked food or wealth; cāndrāyaṇa for abducting men and women (slaves) or for appropriating a field or house and the water of wells and cisterns; sāntapana for thefts of objects of small value; pañcagavya for stealing eatables of various kinds or a vehicle or a bed or a seat or flowers or roots and fruits; fasting for three days and nights in the case of theft of grass, wood, trees, dry food, molasses, clothes, leather (or armour) and flesh, subsisting for twelve days on small grains of rice for stealing gems, pearls, coral, copper, silver, iron, bell-metal or stones, subsisting on milk alone for the theft of cotton, silk, wool, animals with cloven hoofs (cows &c.) or uncloven hoofs (horses &c), birds, perfumes, medicinal herbs or a rope (used for drawing water). It must be remembered as stated above (p. 74) that the thief had to restore to the owner the thing stolen and then undergo a penance (Manu XI.164 and Viṣṇu Dh S 52.14) and Medhātithi (on Manu XI. 164) adds that if he is unable to restore the thing (or its price) the penance is to be double. Besides, in certain cases of theft if corporal punishment or death was not inflicted by the king, the thief was fined eleven times the price of the thing stolen (Manu VIII. 321, 323, Viṣṇu Dh S. 5.82)[233]

---

232 b क्षुच्छ्रसंवत्सरं वा चरेत्। अथाप्युदाहरन्ति। स्तेयं कृत्वा सुरां पीत्वा गुरुदारं च गत्वा ब्रह्महत्यामकृत्वा चतुर्थकाला मितभोजना स्युरपोह्यवेयुः सवनानुकल्पम्। स्थानासनाभ्या विहरन्त एते त्रिभिर्वर्षैरप पापं नुदन्ते। आप. ध. सू I 9. 25. 8–10.

Steya (theft) is of two kinds, by force (such as robbery and dacoity and called sāhasa) and by clandestine means. In the former case the penance goes on increasing (twice, thrice) according as the offender is a kṣatriya or vaiśya (parṣadyā brāhmaṇānām, quoted above, Par. M. II part 1 p.231) In the case of theft by clandestine means if the owner whose gold or wealth is stolen is a brāhmaṇa and the thief a kṣatriya or vaiśya, then also the penance must be higher than for a brāhmaṇa thief (since, as, Nārada says in his chapter on sāhasa verse 16, the wealth belonging to idols, brāhmaṇas and kings is the best) But conversely, if the owner of stolen property is of lower class than the thief then the verse of Bṛhad-Viṣṇu ('vipre tu sakalam deyam,' quoted above in note 192) will apply.

---

233. द्वित्रादिमात्मकदेमहरणं तु क्षत्रियादिदेमहरणवद्गुपपातकमेवेति युक्तम्। किं च सुवर्णाद्यूनपरिमाणहेमहरणे प्रायश्चित्तान्तरोपदेशात्तत्परिमाणस्यैव हेम्नो हरणे मरणान्तिकादि प्रायश्चित्तमिति युक्तम्। तथा चोक्तं बृहद्विष्णुधर्मोत्तरे। मिता on या III 257.

The penance for incest with the guru's wife was prescribed from very ancient times as follows: Gaut. [234] 23. 8–11, Āp. Dh. S. I. 9.25. 1–2, Baud. Dh. S. II. 1. 14–16 (almost in the same words as in Gaut), Vas. 20. 13–14, Manu XI. 103–104 prescribe that the offender shall confess his guilt and then extend himself on a red-hot iron bed or embrace the red-hot iron image of a woman or having himself cut off his organ and testicles and having taken them in his joined hands may walk straight towards the south or south-west until he falls down dead and that he becomes purified by death. According to the Mit. on Yāj. III. 259 the three are not distinct penances, but that two of them, viz. embracing the red-hot iron image of a woman and sleeping on a bed of red hot iron form one penance. The words of Yāj. no doubt convey that the two together are one penance (viz. sleeping on red hot bed and clinging to a red hot image). Others like the Madanapārijāta (p. 837), Medhātithi [235] on Manu XI. 103 do not accept this interpretation. The latter moreover relies on Gautama who employs the word 'vā' (or) in the two latter of his three sūtras on this point. The Pr. V. (p. 138) points out this difference between Gaut. and Yāj. Manu XI. 58 and 170–71, Yāj. III 231, Saṁvarta 159 regard sexual intercourse with a friend's wife or a maiden of a higher caste and the wives of one's son or of sagotras and women born of the same womb (sister &c.) or with an antyaja woman as equal to gurutalpagamana and the penance is only a little less than for the latter. Manu XI. 105 and Yāj. III. 260 prescribe a penance (other than one ending in death), viz. that the sinner should dwell in a tenantless forest, allow his beard to grow, should wear tattered garments and practise Prājāpatya Kṛcchra for one year (three years acc. to Yāj.). The commentators say that this was meant where the sin was committed by mistake. Manu XI. 106 and Yāj. III. 260 provide another penance viz. Cāndrāyaṇa for three months, Manu prescribing that the sinner should subsist on sacrificial food (fruits, roots or nīvāra grain) or on barley gruel and Yāj. adding that he should recite for the three months the Vedasaṁhitā The commentators say that this applies in cases where the guru's wife is of a lower varna or of the śūdra class.

---

234. तप्ते लोहशयने शुक्तल्पगः शयीत। सूर्मीं वा श्लिष्येज्ज्वलन्तीम्। लिङ्गं वा सवृषणमुत्कृत्याञ्जलावाधाय दक्षिणामतीचीं व्रजेदजिह्मगा शरीरपातात्। गौ 23 8–10.

235 आचार्याणीं गत्वैवं प्रायश्चित्तमपरा मातैव । समानजातीयागमने इमानि त्रीणि प्रायश्चित्तानि कल्पन्ते। मेधातिथि on मनु XI.103.

Parāśara (X 10-11) provides three different prāyaścittas, viz. excision of the organ, three kṛcchras or three cāndrāyaṇas if a man commits incest with his mother, sister, or daughter and in X. 12-14 prescribes other penances for adultery with other near female relatives The Mit on Yāj. III 259 quotes Śaṅkha for twelve years' penance for all four kinds of Mahāpātakas, which applies acc to it to intercourse with guru's wife of the same class. It is not necessary to quote further smṛti passages which vary greatly as to the extent of the penance Manu XI. 178 (= Viṣnu Dh S 53. 9 = Agnipurāna 169 41), Śānti 165 29 state that the sin which a twice-born man commits by sexual intercourse for one night with a vṛṣalī[236] (a cāndāla woman) is removed by him by the penance of subsisting on alms for three years and reciting mantras (like the Gāyatrī). Āp. Dh S. I 9 27. 11 has a somewhat similar verse about a brāhmaṇa's intercourse with a śūdra woman[237]. Yāj III. 233 prescribes for women death as a legal penalty and the same prāyaścitta as for a male if a man has sexual intercourse with his paternal or maternal aunt, or daughter-in-law, maternal uncle's wife and others (enumerated above) with their consent Manu XI. 175 (= Laghu-Śātātapa 155 = Agnipurāna 169 38) holds that a brāhmaṇa, who has sexual intercourse with a cāndāla woman or mleccha woman or dines with cāṇḍālas or mlecchas or accepts gifts from them, has to perform penance as if he were patita if he unknowingly did these things, and becomes like them by committing these sins knowingly Compare Vasiṣṭha 23 41, Viṣnu Dh. S 53 5-6.

If a woman be guilty of a Mahāpātaka the general rule stated by Manu XI 176 (latter half), Kātyāyana and Bṛhaspati[238] was that whatever penance was prescribed for a male in cases of adultery with other's wives the same was to be administered to women in case of adultery with males. In this parti-

---

236 वृषली in मनु XI 177 is explained as चण्डाली by कुल्लूक and मिता on या III 260, which quotes a smṛti verse 'चण्डाली बन्धकी वेश्या रजःस्था या च कन्यका। ऊढा या च सगोत्रा स्याद्वृषल्यः पञ्च कीर्तिता॥' शूलपाणि understands वृषली as शूद्री, vide Pr. Prakāśa folio 111 b for this difference.

237 यद्येकरात्रेण करोति पापं कृष्णं वर्ण ब्राह्मण. सेवमानश्चतुर्थकाल उद्वकाम्यवासी त्रिभिर्वर्षैस्तदपहन्ति पापम्॥ आप ध. सू. I. 9 27 11. शान्तिपर्व 165.29 reads 'निकृष्टवर्णं' and 'स्थानासनाभ्यां विहरन् व्रती स त्रिभिर्वर्षैः शमयेदात्मपापम्॥'

238. यदुसः परदारेषु समानेषु व्रतं चरेत्। व्यभिचारात्तु भर्तुः स्त्री तदशेष समाचरेत्। बृह q by अपरार्क p 1124, प्राय वि. p 371; एवं दोषश्च शुद्धिश्च पतितानामुदाहृता। स्त्रीणामपि प्रसक्तानामेष एव विधिः स्मृतः। कात्या. q by मिता. on या. III. 260.

cular case the rule about half penance being prescribed for women did not hold good when a woman with full knowledge committed adultery and half penance was to be prescribed only where the adultery was through mistake. A similar rule was laid down by Angiras[238a]. If a woman became patita and did not undergo prāyaścitta she could be excommunicated by the process called ghatasphoṭa (described in H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 615-616 and 1009). But there was a difference between a male and a woman in this respect. A woman, however, was not to be altogether abandoned on the street and left to fare for herself, though she be patita, but she was to be lodged in a cottage thatched with grass near the house and was to be guarded against further lapses and given bare maintenance (enough to keep body and soul together) and (dirty) clothes (Yāj. III. 296, Manu XI. 176). There were certain acts, however, which were specially condemned in women (Yāj. III. 297) viz. sexual intercourse with a man of a lower class, causing abortion and killing the husband. Vas. 21. 10 provides[239] that four classes of women may be altogether abandoned (and not given even starving maintenance &c) viz. a woman who has sexual intercourse with (her husband's) pupil or with his guru or one who kills her husband or one who sexually approaches a man of a lower degraded class. Women, however patita they may be, were to be dealt with as stated in Yāj. III 296 even if they did not perform any penance. Vas. 21.12 states that women of the brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya and vaiśya classes, if guilty of sexual intercourse with a śūdra, can be purified by penance if they do not give birth to a child, but not those others (who give birth to a child born of the condemned connection). Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 946-949 for penance and other matters in relation to adultery by men and women.

It is now necessary to turn to the penance for association with those that are guilty of grave sins (mahāpātakas). Manu XI. 181, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 54 1, Yāj. III 261 provide that whoever associates with (for a year, acc. to Yāj.) a person guilty of one 238a व्रतं चन्द्रोदितं पुंसां पतितस्त्रीनिषेवणात् । तच्चापि कारयेन्मूढां पतितासेवनात् स्त्रियम्॥ अङ्गिरस् q. by प्राय. वि. p. 372.

---

239. चतस्रस्तु परित्याज्याः शिष्यगा गुरुगा च या । पतिघ्नी च विशेषेण भ्रूणघ्नीपगता च या॥ वसिष्ठ 21 10 q by the मिता on या III. 297 and अपरार्क p. 1208 on या. I. 72. The मिता attributes the verse to व्यास and explains भ्रूणघ्नि as 'प्रतिलोमजश्वर्मकारादेः'. The दीपकलिका explains as 'कुत्सित- 'प्रतिलोमज ' The प्राय. वि p. 374 attributes it to अङ्गिरस् and explains 'भ्रूणघ्नः कुत्सितो हीनवर्णः'.

of the four mahāpātakas has to undergo the vrata (the observances) prescribed for that grave sinner in order to free himself from the sin of association Kullūka, the Pr sāra (p. 61) and others state that the penance here referred to is the one for twelve years and not death since it is the word vrata that is employed by Manu and vrata does not ordinarily convey the idea of death.[240] If the association was due to ignorance the penance was half. Vyāsa prescribed [241] for the knowing associator ¾ths of the penance provided for the sinner himself. According to the Pr. V (p 171) there was no difference in the extent of the penance for association with a sinner in the case of a brāhmana [242] and a śūdra, though in other cases penance was reduced by one quarter for each varna. If the association was for less than one year, then the penance was proportionately reduced. Not only was the patita condemned but even his son born after he became patita and he was excluded from inheritance. But the daughter of a patita was treated differently and she could be married without any stigma being attached to the husband. Vide Vas. 13 51–53, Yāj. III. 261, Baud. Dh. S II. 1. 73–74, Hārita q by Pr V. p 174 and Pr prakarana p 110 and H of Dh vol III. pp. 614–616.

Visnu Dh S (chap 36) speaks of certain sins as anupātakas which are declared by Manu (XI. 55–58) and Yāj (III. 228–233) to be equal to or like one or other of the mahāpātakas and provides that those guilty of them become pure by Aśvamedha sacrifice or by resorting to pilgrimages It has also been seen that such sins are removed by the penances that are slightly less (i. e. by ¼th) than those for the mahāpātakas themselves

The penances for upapātakas must now be briefly dealt with. The number of upapātakas is very large and it is of no practical importance to deal with each of them separately First of all, some general rules about them will be stated and a few of them that are of some importance will be dealt with individually. The Sāmavidhāna [243] Br. (I. 5.14) states that on committing several upapātakas a man becomes pure by reciting thrice the whole of the veda while fasting. Manu XI. 117, Yāj. III. 265, Visnu Dh. S. 37 35 prescribe that purification from all classes of upapātakas (except the sin of the avakīrṇin) is effected by the same penances that are prescribed for govadha or by cāndrāyana or by subsisting on milk alone for a month or by Parāka or Gosava. The digests prescribe that Parāka is meant for him who is strong enough to undertake it, Cāndrāyana for him who is weak, Gosava for him who repeatedly commits the same upapātaka or is guilty of several at the same time (vide Pr. Prakāśa, folio 122 a).

240 अत्र च ब्रह्महादिषु यद्यपि कामतो मरणान्तिकमुपदिष्टं तथापि ससर्गिणस्तत्प्राप्तिर्विधीयते। स तस्यैव व्रतं कुर्यादिति व्रतस्यैवातिदेशात्। मरणस्य च व्रतशब्दवाच्यत्वाभावात्। अतोऽत्र कामकृतेऽपि संसर्गे द्वादशवार्षिकमकामतस्तु तदर्धम्। मिता. on या III. 261, vide also मद. पा p. 853

241. यो येन संवसेद्यावत् सोऽपि तत्समतामियात्। पादहीनं चरेत्सोऽपि तस्य तस्य व्रतस्य हि ॥ व्यास q. by the मिता on या III 261, कुल्लूक on मनु XI 181

242 अत संसर्गिणि ब्राह्मणे शूद्रे च न प्रायश्चित्ते विशेष। तथा निरन्तरसंवत्सरसंसर्गे यत् प्रायश्चित्तमुक्तं तस्य च संवत्सरासम्पूर्तौ भागहार कार्य। तथा च बृहस्पति। पाप्मानमेव हि संयोगे याजनाध्यापनादिना। एकत्रासनशय्याभि प्रायश्चित्तार्धमाचरेत्। मद. pp. 171–172.

Govadha stands at the head of upapātakas in Manu, Yāj., the Agnipurāna (168 29-37). Several smrtis provide different penances for the sin of killing a cow. Gaut. 22. 18 prescribes[244] the same penance for govadha as for killing a vaiśya (Gaut. 22. 15) viz. staying for three years in a forest, subsisting on alms, observing celibacy and donating one hundred cows together with a bull. In Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 26. 1 for killing a milch cow or a full grown ox the penance is said to be the same as for killing a śūdra Vas. 21. 18 provides that if a man kills a cow he should cover himself with the raw hide of the cow (that is killed) and should observe Krcchra or Atikrcchra for six months. Manu[245] XI. 108-116, Visnu Dh. S. 50. 16-24, Samvarta 130-135, Parāśara VIII. 31-41 (q. in Smrtimuktāphala p. 875, prāyaścitta section) prescribe elaborate observances as penances for govadha Yāj. (III. 263-264) provides four separate prāyaścittas, viz (1) the killer of a cow should control his senses for a month, should subsist on pañcagavya (cow's urine, cow-dung, milk, curds and ghee), should sleep in a cowpen, should follow the cows so penned (by day) and at the end of a month donate a cow; (2) or he should perform Krcchra penance while sleeping in a cow-pen and following cows by day; (3) or should perform an atikrcchra in the same way; (4) or should fast for three days and donate ten cows together with 243 बहून्युपपत्तनीयानि कृत्वा त्रिभिरनइनन्पारायणै. पूतो भवति। सामविधानब्रा. I 5. 14.

---

244 गां च वैश्यवत्। गौ 22 18; धेन्वनड्वाहौश्वाकारणात्। आप. ध सू. I 9. 26 1

245. अग्निपुराण 169. 5-7 are the same as मनु XI. 108-110; संवर्त 130-134 are quoted (with slight variations) by विश्वरूप on या. III. 262.

one bull. Śankha provides[216] that the killer of a cow should fast for 25 days and nights subsisting on pañcagavya, should tonsure his head together with the top-knot, should wear as an upper garment cow-hide and should follow cows, lie down in a cow-pen and donate a cow. Some of the smrtis and digests declare that the penance differed according as the cow that was killed belonged to a learned brāhmana or to a mere brāhmana by caste, to a ksatriya or vaiśya or śūdra For example, Devala (q. by Pr. V. p 202) states that if a cow belonging to a brāhmana were killed, then the sinner should wear as upper garment that cow's hide for six months, should bring fodder for cows, should imitate cows, should subsist on barley gruel, should move among cows and then he becomes free from the sin. Śātātapa (q. by Pr V. p 203) states that one killing the cow of a vaiśya should subsist on pañcagavya for a month, should recite the Gomatī-vidyā[217] and stay in a cowpen for a month. Viśvāmitra (Pr. V. p 203) says about the killer of a cow belonging to a śūdra that he should undergo four krcchras if he kills intentionally and two if unintentionally. The Gomatī-vidyā as quoted by Aparārka (p. 1102), the Madana-pārijāta (p. 862) and Pr T. p 522 (which takes it from the Prāyaścitta section of the Kalpataru that takes it from Yama) is a laudation of cows: 'cows always emit fragrance, they have the smell of guggulu (bdellium), they are the support of beings, they are a great blessing, cows are (yield in their milk) the best food and the best offerings for gods; they are purifiers of all beings and offerings ooze from them; they please the gods in heaven by the offerings (of milk and ghee) that are rendered pure by the mantras recited over them; in the agnihotra (keeping up the sacred fire) of sages cows help 246 गोघ्नः पञ्चगव्याहार पञ्चविंशतिरात्रमुपवसेत् सशिखं वपनं कृत्वा गोचर्मणा मावृतो गाश्चानुगच्छन् गोष्ठेशयो गा च दद्यात्। शङ्ख q by विश्वरूप on या III. 262, मिता. on या III 264, हरदत्त on गौ 22 18, अपरार्क p. 1094. The मिता and हरदत्त ascribe the passage to both शङ्ख and अत्रेतत्.

247 गोमतीविद्यामाह अथश्चित्तकाण्डकल्पतरौ यम। गोमतीं कीर्तयिष्यामि सर्वपापप्रणाशिनीम्। तां तु मे गदतो विप्राः शृणुध्वं सुसमाहिताः॥ गावः सुरभयो नित्य गावो गुग्गुलुगन्धिका। गावः प्रतिष्ठा भूतानां गावः स्वस्त्ययनं महत्। अन्नमेव परं गावो देवानां हविरुत्तमम्। पावनं सर्वभूतानां क्षरन्ति च हवींषि च॥ हविषा मन्त्रपूतेन तर्पयन्त्यमरान्दिवि। ऋषीणामग्निहोत्रेषु गावो होमप्रयोजिका॥ पावन सर्वभूतानां गाव शरणमुत्तमम्। गाव पवित्र परम गावो मङ्गलमुत्तमम्। गावः स्वर्गस्य सोपानं गावो धन्याः सनातना। नमो गोभ्य श्रीमतीभ्य सौरभेयीभ्य एव च। नमो ब्रह्मसुताभ्यश्च पवित्राभ्यो नमो नमः। ब्राह्मणाश्चैव गावश्च कुलमेकं द्विधा कृतम्। एकत्र मन्त्रास्तिष्ठन्ति हविरन्यत्र तिष्ठति॥ प्राय तत्त्व pp. 522–523, अपरार्क and प्रा प्रकाश folio 1166 with some variations such as 'सर्वभूतानां रक्षन्ति च वहन्ति च'। अपरार्क p. 1102 quotes the verses from गाव सुरभयो to पवित्राभ्यो नमो नमः। to bring about homa; cows are the holy and eminent protection for all beings; cows are extremely holy and most auspicious; cows are blessed; salutation to cows that abound in wealth and are called saurabheyī! salutation to the cows that are holy and the daughters of Brahmā. Brāhmanas and cows are (really) one family divided into two parts, in one (brāhmanas) reside the (vedic) mantras and in the other reside offerings (to Gods of ghee &c)." The Pr. prakarana [218] (p 33) says that Kātyāyana, Gautama, Samvarta, Parāśara and other sages prescribe differing penances for govadha, which are to be explained away by reference to the killing being intentional or unintentional or to the fact of the cow being owned by a brāhmana engaged in a soma sacrifice or by a brāhmana who has studied the Veda with the six auxiliary śāstras, or by the fact that the cow was useful for the homa of a brāhmana possessed of good qualities or was a pregnant cow or of the kapilā (brown or tawny) variety. It adds the important statement that in its days such cows being not found in ordinary life it is not necessary to expressly assign to each of those texts its appropriate subject matter.

Yāj. III. 284, [219] Samvarta 137, Agnipurāna 169.14 provide that if a cow or bull dies while being treated with medicine or while an attempt is being made to help the cow in delivery, or being branded (as a treatment) there is no sin. This applies as an exception in all cases of injury or death of brāhmanas, cows or other animals Parāśara (IX. 4 ff) and Angiras (q by Pr. T. pp 526–527) prescribe $\frac{1}{4}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{3}{4}$ of the prāyaścitta for killing out-right a cow, if the death is due to putting an obstacle in the cow's or bull's free movement or to tying it up or to yoking it with thongs. Before undergoing a penance for govadha, the sinner had to make good the price of the animal to the owner, according to the Brahmapurāna and Parāśara. [220]

248. यत्पुन कात्यायनेन ..पराशरादिभिर्मुनिभिरपि न्यूनाधिकप्रायश्चित्तान्युक्तानि तानि कामाकामकृत–सवनस्थ–श्रोत्रिय–षडङ्गवेदाध्यायि–ब्राह्मणसम्बन्धिगुणवद्धोमधेनु–गर्भिणी–कपिलादिवधविषयाणि यथायोग्यं व्याख्येयानीति । इदानीं तु तथाविधगवाभावेन व्यवहारानङ्गत्वात् प्रत्येकं विषयव्यवस्थया व्याख्यातानीति । प्राय प्रक p. 33.

249. क्रियमाणोपकारे तु मृते विप्रे न पातकम् । विपाके गोवृषाणां तु भेषजाद्यैक्रियासु च ॥ या. III. 284, यन्त्रणे गोचिकित्सार्थं गूढगर्भविमोचने । यदि तत्र विपत्तिः स्यान्न स पापेन लिप्यते ॥ संवर्त 137 q. by the मिता on या. III. 284, प्राय प्रकरण p 33.

250. गोवधे तु स्वामिने गोमूल्यं दत्त्वा व्रतं करणीयम् । आदौ गोपतये दत्त्वा गोमूल्यं साधुकल्पितम् । इति ब्रह्मपुराणात् । न चैतद्ग्रहणे दोष । ...तथा च पराशर । प्रमापणे प्राणभृतां प्रदद्यात् प्रतिरूपकम् । तस्यालाभे मूल्यं वा दद्यादित्यब्रवीन्मनुः । प्राय तत्त्व p. 513. The verse प्रमापणे is quoted as कात्यायन's (792) by the परा मा III. p 425 and वि. र p 284.

The Sāmavidhāna Br (I 7.8) prescribes that on killing any animal (except a cow or bull) the guilty person should fast for one night and recite the sāmaveda verse 'Agnis-tigmena' (I. 1 3 2) Āp. Dh S (I 9.25.14) provides for killing a crow, a chameleon, a peacock, a chakravāka, hamsa, bhāsa, a frog, ichneumon, musk-rat, a dog the same penance as for killing a śūdra. Gaut 22 19–22, 24–25, Manu XI. 133–137, Yāj III. 269–274, Visnu Dh. S 50.25–32, Parāśara VI. 1–15 prescribe several penances for killing an elephant, a horse, a tiger, a monkey, a cat, a serpent and numerous other animals, which are passed over here Some smrtis such as Samvarta 10 and Paithīnasi make a difference between grāmya and āranya (forest) animals, in each class seven being specified by Paithīnasi [251] The great concern of the sages for anything possessed of the principle of life or growth went so far as to prescribe the penance of reciting one hundred rk verses if a man cut off big trees (like mango or jack-fruit tree) or shrubs and creepers, except for purposes of sacrifices or agriculture [252] (Manu XI. 142, Yāj III. 276, Vas 19. 11–12) These provisions tended against wanton destruction of trees, shrubs and forests that are so beneficent to humanity and lend a charm to the landscape.

It is remarkable that in case a man was bitten by a harlot or a monkey or an ass or by a dog or jackal or a camel or a crow he had to perform (in addition to the pain of the bite) prānāyāma while standing in water and to drink ghee for purification (Manu XI. 199, Yāj. III. 277, Vas. 23. 31) Parāśara V 1–9 prescribe elaborate rules of purification for bites by wolves, dogs and jackals (such as a bath and japa of Gāyatrī &c).

PARADARYA (adultery with another's wife)—is a minor sin (acc to Yāj III. 235, Manu XI. 59). This excludes intercourse with guru's wife and other intercourse declared to be like gurutalpagamana or with cāndāla women (Manu XI. 170–172, 175, 178, Yāj III. 231–233, Vas XX. 15–17 and XXIII. 41) Āp. Dh S. I. 10 28 19 is very severe on a male adulterer who transgresses his vow of loyalty to his wife; one who proves false to his wife shall put on the skin of an ass with the hair turned

251. ग्रामारण्यपशुविवेके पैठीनसि । ग्राम्यारण्यश्चतुर्दश । गौरविरजोऽश्वोऽश्वतरो गर्दभो मनुष्यश्चैते सप्त ग्राम्या पशवः । महिषवानरऋक्षसरीसृपपुरुषपूषतवृगाश्चेति सप्तारण्या पशवः । प्राय वि p 233. Even the तै स VII. 2 2. 1 says 'सप्त ग्राम्या पशव. सप्तारण्याः'.

252. पुष्पफलोपगान्यावृक्षान् हिंस्यात्। कर्षणकारणार्थं चोपदन्यात्। वसिष्ठ 19 11-12.

outside and beg at seven houses saying 'give alms to him who played false to his wife'. This should be his livelihood for six months". Conversely, Āp. (I. 10.28.20) provides that if a wife plays false to her husband she should perform for as many months (i. e. six months) the twelve night krcchra penance. In another place Āp. Dh. S. (II. 10. 27. 11) states that if a brāhmana commits adultery once with a married woman of equal class he shall perform one-fourth of the penance prescribed for an outcast. Gaut (22 29–30, 34) provides penances for two years generally and three years if the woman be the wife of a learned brāhmana. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 265 quotes numerous texts dealing with the penance for adultery that does not amount to a mahāpātaka and tries to evolve order by assigning to each its proper province. This is passed over here. A woman guilty of adultery with a male of the same or higher caste than herself had to undergo the same penance as a male adulterer (Manu XI 176 and Bṛhaspati), but if she committed adultery with a male of lower caste, then the penances differed as stated above (vide Vas. 21. 1–5 and Saṁvarta 167–172). Brhadyama IV. 48 states that adultery in the inverse order of classes is a grave sin, but adultery in the anuloma order of classes entails different penances for purification from it.[253]

Vrātyatā (failure to have upanayana performed at the right time)—A person whose upanayana is not performed at the proper time is called vrātya or patitasāvitrika. Vide Āśv. gr. I. 19. 5–7, Āp Dh. S I. 1. 1. 22–26, Baud. gr. III. 13. 5–6, Vas. XI. 71–75, Manu II. 38–39, Yāj I. 37–38. The penances also such as the performance of Vrātyastoma and Uddālakavrata (Vas. XI. 76–79, Gaut. 19 8) are prescribed by some of these works, while Manu XI. 191 (=Visnu Dh. S. 54. 26–27=Agnipurāna 170. 8–9) prescribes a milder penance of three krcchras and then Upanayana is to be performed again. Vas. XI. 77 describes Uddālakavrata as follows: 'for two months he should subsist on barley gruel, for a month on milk, for half a month on āmiksā, for eight days on ghee, for six days on food obtained without begging or asking for it, for three days on water and he should observe a complete fast for one day.' Āp. Dh. S (I. 1.1. 24–27) prescribes another penance for vrātyatā. For vrātya or patitasāvitrika, vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 96, 376–379. Haradatta as quoted in H. of Dh. vol. II. p 379 appears to hold that even if generations before the great-grand-father of a man had been without upanayana, still proper penance should be prescribed and the man taken in the fold of Hinduism But there were others who stuck literally to the words of Āp. and Parāśara and hold that if all the generations from the father of the great-grand-father of a man were without upanayana then nothing could be done for that man [253a]

253. संवर्त 167–168 are q. by माप. वि p 358 and परा मा. II part 1 p. 330; संवर्त 169 is q. by विश्वरूप on या. III. 254 p 132, बृहद्यम IV.48 is पातिलोम्ये महत्पाप प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः। प्रायश्चित्तं चानुलोम्येन भवत्येव चान्यथा ॥.

Vratalopa (non-observance of the vow of celibacy on the part of a brahmacārin). A Vedic student who has sexual intercourse with a woman is technically called avakīrnin The Tai. Ā. II. 18 contains the penance for avakīrnin first promulgated by Sudeva Kāśyapa [251]. Āp Dh S. (I 9. 26. 8-9) provides [255] that such a student shall offer to Nirrti (goddess of Hell or death) an ass according to the manner of Pākayajñas and that a śūdra shall eat the remainder of the offering. Jaimini (VI. 8 22) provides that the offering is to be made in the ordinary fire (laukikāgni) and not in the consecrated Vedic fire. [256] Vas. (23 1-3) prescribes 'if a Vedic student approaches a woman, then he should offer an ass to the goblins (rakṣas) in a forest where four roads meet, kindling an ordinary fire or he may offer an oblation of boiled rice to Nirrti and throw into the fire four oblations of that food saying 'To lust, svāhā; to him

---

253a. इदं व्याख्यात हरदत्तेन भाष्यकृता। . यस्य प्रपितामहस्य पितुरारभ्य नानुस्मर्यंत उपनयनं तस्य प्रायश्चित्तं नोक्तामिति। तथा च संस्कार्यस्य त्रिषुरुषेष्वसमपि ज्ञातत्वे कथमपि संस्कार्यस्य उपनयनं न भवतीति फलितम्। प्राय. मुक्तावली folio 80 a

254. यो ब्रह्मचार्यवकिरेदमावास्याया रात्र्यामग्निं प्रणीयोपसमाधाय द्विराज्यस्योपघातं जुहोति कामावकीर्णोऽस्म्यवकीर्णोऽस्मि कामकामाय स्वाहा कामाभिदुग्धोऽस्म्यभिदुग्धोऽस्मि कामकामाय स्वाहेत्यमृतं वा आज्यममृतमेवात्मन्धत्ते। तै आ II. 18.

255 गर्दभेनावकीर्णी निर्ऋतिं पाकयज्ञेन यजेत। तस्य शूद्र प्राश्नीयात्। आप ध सू I 9 26 8-9, ब्रह्मचारी चेत्स्त्रियमुपेयादरण्ये चतुष्पथे लौकिकेऽग्नौ रक्षोदेवतं गर्दभं पशुमालभेत्। नैर्ऋतं वा चरुं निर्वपेत्। तस्य जुहुयाल्कामाय स्वाहा कामकामाय स्वाहा नैर्ऋत्यै स्वाहा रक्षोदेवताभ्य स्वाहेति। वसिष्ठ 23.1-2 अवकीर्णिन् is explained by क्षीरस्वामी on अमरकोश as 'अव अन्तरे कीर्णे रतौऽस्यावकीर्णी'. The वैखानसस्मार्तसूत्र VI 8 employs the word in a wider sense 'सप्तरात्रौ हीने नित्यकर्मणि अवकीर्णी भवति'. For पाकयज्ञs which are ordinarily said to be seven, vide H. of Dh vol II p 194 The आश्व. gr I 1.2-3 speaks of three and quotes Rg VIII 19.5 in support The commentator explains 'पाकयज्ञाः अल्पयज्ञा प्रशस्तयज्ञा वा' and quotes Rg VII 104 8 in support for the latter meaning The खादिरगृह्य I. 1 20 defines 'पाकयज्ञ इत्याख्या य कश्चैकाग्नौ' वृद्धगौ. VIII p. 557 speaks of five पाकयज्ञs.

256. अवकीर्णिपशुश्च तद्वदाधानस्यामावास्याकालत्वात्। जै. VI 8.22, on which शबर says 'अस्त्यवकीर्णिपशुः, ब्रह्मचार्यवकीर्णी नैर्ऋतं पशुमालभेतेति। .तस्मादिदमपि कर्म लौकिकोऽग्निरिति।' who follows his lust, svāhā; to Nirrti svāhā; to the deities called Raksas, svāhā'. Gaut 23. 17–19, Manu XI. 118–123, Baud Dh. S II. 1. 35–43; Yāj. III. 280, Agnipurāna 169. 15–18, Pār gr. III. 12 contain similar provisions, Gautama adding that he shall beg for a year at seven houses with a red vessel (earthen) in his hand and proclaim his misdeed. The Baud. Dh S. and Pār gr furnish elaborate details. The former states that the Paśupurodāśa may be offered to Raksas or to Yama or he may offer on the Amāvāsyā at night two offerings of clarified butter in fire after performing the preparatory rites of a darvi-homa and that he may then invoke fire with the verse (Tai. Ā. II 18) 'Sam mā ciñcantu marutah &c.' (may the Maruts grant me long life and strength).

If an ascetic reverted to the life of a householder, Samvarta (171–172) prescribes the penance of krcchra for six months[257]. Such a man is called pratyavasita. The pratyavasitas are said to be of nine kinds[258] by Yama (22–23), Brhad-Yama (3–4) and others viz. those who turn back from water, fire, halter (by means of which they wanted to kill themselves), those who revert back from the stage of sannyāsa or from a fast (unto death), or from poison, precipice or sitting dharnā and those who (desiring to commit suicide) strike themselves with a weapon (but are not killed), these nine are called pratyavasita and are beyond commerce with people, become pure by the penance of Cāndrāyana or two Taptakrcchras. Vrddha-Parāśara quoted by Par. M. and Prāyaścitta-muktāvali provides that sannyāsins, who revert to the life of the householder, are to be treated as cāndālas even after undergoing penance and their children born after they fall from the ascetic stage are to be made to dwell among cāndālas. This explains the harsh treatment alleged to have been meted to the great saint Jñāneśvara and his brothers at Paithan in the 13th century. A person who after becoming a sannyāsin reverts to another āśrama or acts contrary to the

---

257 सन्यस्य दुर्मतिं कश्चिदपत्यार्थं स्त्रियं व्रजेत्। कुर्याच्छृच्छ्रं समानं तत्षण्मासांस्तदनन्तरम्॥ संवर्त 171–172, quoted in परा मा. II part 2 p 129 (reads प्रत्यापत्तिं व्रजेद्यदि। स कुर्याच्छृच्छ्रमश्रान्त षण्मासान्प्रत्यनन्तरम्) and प्राय सा p 123 (reads प्रत्यापत्तिं चिकीर्षति) 'सत्यपि प्रायश्चित्ते लुप्तधर्माः परिव्राजका गर्हिता इत्याह वृद्धपराशर। लुप्तधर्मांस्तु चाण्डाला. परिव्राजकतापसा। तेभ्यो जातान्यपत्यानि चाण्डालैः सह वासयेत्॥ इति। प्राय. मुक्तावली folio 73 b, परा मा II part 2 p 11

258 जलाग्न्युद्बन्धनभ्रष्टा प्रव्रज्यानाशकच्युताः। विषप्रपतनप्रायशस्त्रघातहताश्च ये॥ नवैते प्रत्यवसिता. सर्वलोकबहिष्कृता.। चान्द्रायणेन शुध्यन्ति तप्तकृच्छ्रद्वयेन वा॥ यम 22–23 q. by प्राय सा p 126 rules of his āśrama is called ārūḍhapatita also (vide Par M. II, part I p 373 quoting Hārīta).

Elaborate purifications are prescribed for removing the taint of touching certain men, unclean objects like bones (Manu V. 87), women in their monthly illness or within certain days after delivery and animals (like dogs, village pigs, cocks, crows). They have to be passed over here for reasons of space. But a few passages may be cited by way of sample. Gautama [259] (14, 28) provides that on touching patita, cāṇḍāla, a woman freshly delivered, a woman in her monthly illness, a corpse, or on touching any one who has touched any one of these or any one who is the third in contact, the purification is brought about by a bath with the clothes on. Manu V. 84 and Yāj III. 30 contain similar provisions The Pr. V. (pp. 495–499) discusses the question whether spar śa [260] (touch) means direct touch or includes even indirect touch and ultimately arrives at the conclusion that indirect touch also is included and cites Āpastamba-smṛti in support that if a brāhmana and a cāndāla or the like are both seated on the same branch (without actually touching each other) the brāhmana can become purified only by a bath. A verse quoted as Yājñavalkya's by Pr. Prakarana [261] p. 110 (not found in the printed text) states· 'on touching a cāndāla, pukkasa, mleccha, bhilla, a pārasīka (one coming from Persia) and the like and persons guilty of grave sins one should bathe with the clothes on.' The Sat-trimśan-mata[262] provides 'on touching 259 पतितचण्डालसूतिकोदक्याशवस्पृष्टितत्स्पृष्टुस्पर्शने सचैलोदकस्पर्शनाच्छुध्येत् । गौ 14 28 The मिता on या III. 30 reads it as सचेलसूदको॰ and रत्नाक observes that the latter is the better reading.

260 उपस्पर्शो यद्यपि न स्पर्शशब्दस्यार्थ तथाप्यत्र वचनादेकावयविद्वारा परम्परा-स्पर्शोऽपि ग्राह्य । तथा चापस्तम्ब । एकशाखां समारूढश्चाण्डालादिर्यदा भवेत् । ब्राह्मणस्तत्र निवसन् स्नानेन शुचितामियात् ॥ आदिशब्दादुदक्यादीना ग्रहणम् । शाखाग्रहणमेकावयवस्यु-पलक्षणार्थं तेनैकपाषागादेरपि ग्रहणम् । प्राय. वि. p 496. The verse is आपस्तम्बस्मृति VII 14 (reads somewhat differently) It is quoted in मा प्रक p 111 also

261. तत्र याज्ञवल्क्य । चाण्डालपुक्कसम्लेच्छभिल्लपारसिकादिकान् । महापातकिनश्चैव स्पृष्ट्वा स्नायात्सचेलक. ॥ मा प्रक p 110 This verse is quoted as बृहद्याज्ञवल्क्य by अपरार्क p 923

262 षट्त्रिंशन्मतम् । बौद्धान्पाशुपताश्चैव लौकायतिकनास्तिकान् । विकर्मस्थान् द्विजान् स्पृष्ट्वा सचेलो जलमाविशेत् ॥ चैत्यवृक्षश्चितिर्यूपश्चाण्डाल सोमविक्रयी । एतान् ब्राह्मण स्पृष्ट्वा सचेलो जलमाविशेत् ॥ मा प्रक p 110, and स्मृतिच I p. 118 (which reads पाशुपतान् जैनान् लोकायतिककापिलान्) The first verse is quoted as from the Brahmānda-purāna by the मिता. on या. III. 30 and by स्मृतिच I p 118 (reads शैवान् पाशुपतान् स्पृष्ट्वा and शूद्रान् for स्पृष्ट्वा) and the 2nd is ascribed to पराशर by अपरार्क p 923.

Bauddhas, Pāśupatas, Laukāyatikas, atheists and those who follow forbidden actions, one should plunge in water together with the clothes on. On touching a caitya tree (such as a fig tree round which a platform is built), a funeral pile (or brick altar prepared in the śrauta rite called Agnicayana), a sacrificial post, a cāṇḍāla, one who sells the soma plant, a brāhmana should enter water with the clothes on.' Samvarta [263] requires a dvija to sip water on touching a shoemaker, a washerman, a vena (Manu X 19, 49, one who beats drum &c.), a fisherman, a dancer (nata) and Śātātapa [264] provides that if any limb of a dvija (except the head) is touched by one who colours clothes, a shoemaker, a hunter, a fisherman, a washerman, a butcher, a ṭhaka (Thug), an actor, one who allows sexual intercourse in the mouth, a dog, a prostitute allowing men of all varnas to visit her, an oil-grinder, the keeper of a tavern, an executioner, a village pig or cock, he should wash the limb with water and perform ācamana. If the head is touched by any one of these, then he should bathe. In this connection it may be noted that Hemādri quotes (on p. 38) the Garuḍapurāna and (on p. 316) Parāśara for the 16 castes in a village that were treated as cāndālas in the matter of touch, speech or sight. Devala (q. by Hemādri on prāyaścitta p. 312) says that Cāndāla and Turuska (Turk) are equally low. The chapter on untouchables in the 2nd vol. of the H. of Dh pp. 165–179 may be consulted in this connection. On pp. 175–176 of the same work references are given to verses of Atri, Śātātapa, Brhaspati and others stating that no purification is required on the ground of untouchability in the case of religious festivals and marriage processions, in battle, in the case of fire or invasion and similar calamities. By no stretch of imagination can these verses be restricted to the untouchability arising from death or birth as some propose 263 चर्मारं रजकं वेणं धीवरं नटमेव च । एतान् दृष्ट्वा द्विजो मोहादाचामेत् प्रयतोऽपि सन् ॥ संवर्त q. by प्राय वि pp 472–473.

---

264. रजकश्चर्मकृच्चैव व्याधजालोपजीविनौ । निर्णेजकः शौनिकश्च ठक शैलूषकस्तथा ॥ सुरेभगस्तथा श्वा च वनिता सर्ववर्णगा । चक्री स्वजी वध्यघाती ग्राम्यशूकरकुक्कुटौ । एभिर्यदङ्गं संस्पृष्टं शिरोवर्जं द्विजातिषु । तोयेन क्षालनं कृत्वा आचान्त शुचितामियात् ॥ शातातप q. by प्राय वि p 473 and स्मृतिच I p 119. The word ठक explained by प्राय वि as धूर्त may be noted as the original word for the modern word 'Thug' The स्मृतिच reads नट for ठक and explains as जातिविशेष रजकश्चर्मकारश्च नटो डुरुड एव च । कैवर्तमेदभिल्लाश्च स्वर्णकारश्च सौचिक (सौविदः ?) ॥ कारुको लोहकारश्च शिलाभेदी तु नापित । तक्षकस्तिलयन्त्री च सूनश्चक्री तथा स्वजी । एते षोडशधा प्रोक्ताश्चाण्डाला ग्रामवासिन । गरुडपुराण q by हेमाद्रि (on प्रा p 38 and also पराशर on p 316) to do. The words are too sweeping for this explanation and there being no untouchability on birth for any one except the mother and persons in mourning not being likely to join religious festivals and marriage processions those verses cannot be so construed

The smṛtis were very keen on keeping a high ideal before brāhmaṇas as regards receiving gifts The Sāma Br. (I. 7. 1-2) prescribes that if a brāhmaṇa receives a gift from a kṣatriya when not in distress (or difficulty) he should eat only one meal by day for a month and recite the Sāma verse 'mahat tat somo mahiṣaścakāra' (Sāmaveda I 6. 1. 5. 10, No 542) for one month, while standing in water and if he accepts a gift from any one else from whom he should not accept it, he should undergo kṛcchra penance and recite the sāma verse 'trikadrukeṣu' (Sāmaveda I.5 2.3 1, No 457) Yāj I. 140 provides that a brāhmaṇa should not accept a gift from a king who is parsimonious (or greedy) and acts against the dictates of śāstra and Manu XI. 194 (=Viṣṇu Dh. S 54.24) provides that a brāhmaṇa becomes free from the sin of the acceptance of a thing which should not be accepted or of the acceptance of a gift from a condemned donor by reciting the Gāyatrī three thousand times (in a month) or subsisting on milk alone or staying in a cowpen for a month. It may be noted that Manu X. 102–103 and Yāj III. 41 allow a brāhmaṇa when in distress to accept a gift from anybody or to take food from anyone whatever or to maintain himself by teaching any one whatever and state that he is not tainted by sin in so doing, since he is like fire and water (like that of the Ganges) and since it is unreasonable (or impossible) to assert that what is pure can be sullied. Manu X. 109, however, regards acceptance of a gift from an unworthy (or low) person as worse than teaching an improper person or officiating for him A brāhmaṇa was not to sell things declared to be unfit to be sold by him such [264a] as sesame, oil of sesame, curds, bees' wax (ksaudra), salt, grapes, wine, cooked food, female or 264 a अथाविक्रेयविक्रयप्रायश्चित्तानि । शङ्खलिखितौ । न विक्रीयादविक्रेयाणि । तिलतैलदधिक्षौद्रलवणद्राक्षामद्यमांसकृतान्नलवणपुरुषदास्त्रस्त्रीरुषटस्त्र्यश्ववृषगन्धरसक्षौमकृष्णाजिनसोमोदक-नीलीविक्रयात् सद्य. पतति ब्राह्मणस्तत्र प्रायश्चित्तमकामावासौ कामकृतेष्वेकं पतितं ह्यात्मानमुद्धरेत् । सवत्सर तप्तकृच्छ्रमाचरेत् । कृतवापन शुचिरपोश्नुयात् त्रिरेकाह्नवासा काष्ठमौनी वीरासनमासीत रात्रौ दिवा तिष्ठेदुक्तोग्नि. कार्यपर (त्रिकार्यपर ?) सावित्रीं सवनाङ्गा जपेत्तस्य व्रतमभ्युपगम्य कुशचीरवासा मौञ्जी मेखली दण्डी पवित्रपाणिर्हविष्य वा श्रपयेच्चरु भैक्षमटुद्य वा याचित्रकमश्नीयात् द्वादशरात्र चोपवासो ब्राह्मणतर्पण गवाह्निकमित्येव व्यवहार्यो· व्यथा पतित· शिष्टैरसभाव्य· शूद्रधर्मेति । मा· प्रकाश folio 127b.

---

male slaves, elephants, horses, bulls, fragrant substances, liquids, silken cloth (kṣauma), black antelope hide, soma plant, water, indigo; by selling these he at once incurs sin. As penance he should practise Tapta-kṛcchra for a year after tonsuring his head, he should enter water thrice, wear only one wet piece of cloth, should observe silence, should practise the Vīrāsana, should sit up at night and stand by day, should recite the Gāyatrī.

One important matter dealt with by a few of the smṛtis and some of the digests is the re-admission into the Hindu fold of those who were converted by force by the invading mlecchas. About the meaning of the word mleccha, there is some divergence of views. From the Śat. Br. (III. 2 1 23–24) it appears that the mlecchas spoke a degraded and corrupt speech (such as saying 'helavah' for 'heṣrayaḥ'). Parāśara (IX. 36) refers to the mlecchas as the eaters of cow's flesh. The Pr. T. (p 549) quotes a smṛti[265] text to the effect that a mleccha is an eater of cow's flesh and talks much that is contradictory, and cites a passage from the Harivaṁśa for the manner of the dress and of the trimming of hair in the case of Śakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, Pahlavas &c. Vide for mleccha and for the return to the Hindu fold of those that were forcibly carried away as slaves by mlecchas and robbers or made to kill cows or to eat the flesh of asses, camels, village pigs, H. of Dh. vol. II p 92, 383–385, 389–392 (where verses of Devala ascribed by some like the Mit. to Āpastamba-smṛti are set out), 973–974 A few matters not dealt with there may be added here The Viṣnudharmottara[266] purāṇa (II. 73. 203–206) provides that when persons are kidnapped by mlecchas or raiders or persons passing through forests are so treated and return to their own country, the penances for purifying them from the sin of eating forbidden food are to be prescribed after considering their class (varna), viz that a

265. गोमांसखादको यश्च विरुद्धं बहु भाषते। सर्वाचारविहीनश्च म्लेच्छ इत्यभिधीयते॥ बोधायन q. by मा तत्त्व p 549, रायमुकुट as q by माय शुक्तावली (folio 104 b) reads गो ...भक्षको यस्तु अपशब्दं च भाषते। सदाचारविहीनश्च°; सगर. स्वां प्रतिज्ञा च गुरोर्वाक्यं निशम्य च। धर्मं जघान तेषां वै देवान्यस्तं चकार ह॥ अर्धं शकानां शिरसो मुण्डं कृत्वा व्यसर्जयत्। यवनानां शिरः सर्वं काम्बोजानां तथैव च॥ पारदा मुक्तकेशाश्च पह्लवाः श्मश्रुधारिणः। नि.स्वाध्यायवषट्काराः कृतास्तेन महात्मना॥ शका यवनकाम्बोजा. पारदाश्च विशांपते। कोलिसर्पा समाहिषा दार्वाश्चोला सकेरलाः॥ सर्वे ते क्षत्रियास्तात धर्मस्तेषां निराकृत। हरिवंश, हरिवंशपर्व 14 15–19 q by माय तत्त्व p 549.

266. म्लेच्छैर्हृतानां चोरैर्वा कान्तारे वा प्रवासिनाम्। भक्ष्याभक्ष्यविशुद्ध्यर्थं तेषां वक्ष्यामि निष्कृतिम्॥ पुन माप्य स्वदेशं च वर्णानामनुपूर्वश.। कृच्छ्रस्यार्धं ब्राह्मणस्तु पुनः संस्कारमर्हति॥ पादोनान्ते क्षत्रियस्तु अर्धार्धं वैश्य एव च। पादं कृत्वा तथा शूद्रो दानं दत्त्वा विशुध्यति॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर II. 73,203–206.

brāhmaṇa should undergo half kṛcchra penance and should have the Upanayana performed again, a kṣatriya should undergo three-fourths of Kṛcchra (and also upanayana), a vaiśya one-fourth Kṛcchra and a śūdra becomes pure by undergoing only ¼ of a kṛcchra and by making a gift In view of the fact that Manu VIII 169, Viṣṇu Dh. S. VII 6–7, Yāj II 89 declare that what is given by force, what is enjoyed by force and what is caused to be written by force and all transactions whatever that are brought about by force are void, and the burning desire of many people forcibly converted in times of disturbances to return to the Hindu fold and to the religion of their forefathers, the movement now called śuddhi should be encouraged by all interested in the well-being and stability of Hindu society It is better to call this return by the name of 'parāvartana'. A model but brief rite for the parāvartana of those who were forcibly converted or for those who voluntarily left the Hindu fold but want to return to it is given in the Appendix The same prayoga with suitable changes may be employed for taking into the Hindu fold any one who was not born a Hindu. In ancient times such people appear to have been taken into the Hindu fold by the performance of Vrātyastoma. For this latter, vide H. of Dh. vol II pp. 385–387 and for the spread of Hinduism in Java, Bali, Sumatra, Siam and other countries of South-East Asia, vide H of Dh vol. III. pp 934–935. Recently, through the kindness of Dr. J. M. Unvala, I had an opportunity of reading several inscriptions of the 18th and 19th centuries at the fire temple called Jvālāji at Suruhani near Baku, the capital of Russian Azerbaijan, situated on the northern shore of the Caspian sea, which were inscribed by Hindu pilgrims or visitors, that begin with obeisance to Gaṇeśa and in one of which occurs the verse quoted below.[267]

Manu XI 124 (= Viṣṇu Dh S. 38 7) prescribes the penance of Sāntapana for committing with full knowledge any of the deeds described above as jātibhraṃśakara and the penance of Prājāpatya for doing it unintentionally For doing any of the deeds called saṅkarīkaraṇa or apātrīkaraṇa described above, Manu XI 125 prescribes the penance of cāndrāyaṇa for a month and for doing any of the deeds called malāvaha prescribes that the perpetrator should scald himself with barley gruel for three days Those two verses of Manu occur in Agnipurāna (170. 23–25). Visnu Dh. S. (39.2, 40.2, 41 5) prescribes somewhat different penances for sankarīkarana, apātrīkarana or malinīkaranīya deeds Vide also the Mit on Yāj III. 290 for the penances prescribed for these deeds by Yama and Brhaspati. About miscellaneous pātakas the rule laid down by Manu XI. 209, Visnu Dh S 42 2, Yāj. III 294 and others is that the penance should be prescribed by the brāhmanas after taking into account the nature of the deed, the ability of the perpetrator and other circumstances of time and place &c.

267. श्लोक । देवयज्ञे व्रते तीर्थे सत्पात्रब्रह्मभोजने। पित्र्यश्राद्धे जडीहस्ते धन व्रजति धर्म्यताम्॥

Some of the digests prescribe certain times for the performance of penance. The first rule is laid down by Hārīta that having done something sinful or improper through trustfulness, affection, greed, fear or heedlessness one should resort to purification at once Daksa[268] II. 73 also states that all naimittika and kāmya matters must be performed as they fall due and no delay should be caused. If more than a year is allowed to pass after the sin is incurred the penance would have to be double of what it otherwise would have been, according to Devala and Manu.[268a] The Pr. T. (pp 474, 512) quotes a verse from the Vyavahāracintāmani [269] and an astrological work to the effect that a penance or ordeal should not be administered on the 8th or 14th tithi of a month, nor should an ordeal or marriage take place on a Saturday or Tuesday. The Prāyaścittenduśekhara (p 15) says that according to respectable people (śistas) the sankalpa (declaration of undergoing a penance) should be made on the 14th tithi and the actual rite should be performed on the amāvāsyā. If the guilty person is in mourning he may perform penance after the period of mourning is over.

The procedure for undergoing penances for sins and lapses prescribed by the assembly of learned men has varied in details from time to time. The Gaut. Dh S. 26 6–17 prescribes 268 नैमित्तिकानि काम्यानि निपतन्ति यथा यथा। तथा तथा हि कार्याणि न कालं तु विलम्बयेत्॥ दक्ष II 73 q by प्रा तत्त्व p 512.

---

268 a. यथा स्मृतिसागरे देवल·। कालातिरेके द्विगुणं प्रायश्चित्तं समाचरेत्। द्विगुणं राजदण्डं च दत्त्वा शुद्धिमवाप्नुयात्॥ कालातिरेके संवत्सरातिरेके। संवत्सराभिशस्तस्य दुष्टस्य द्विगुणो दम.। इति मनुवचने०। प्रा. तत्त्व p 474 This is मनु VIII 374.

269. 'तस्माद्विश्रम्भात् स्नेहात् लोभाद्भयात्मादाद्वा अशुभं कृत्वा सद्यः शौचमारभेत्' इति हारीतेन सद्यःकरणमुक्तम्। अत्रापि 'व्यवहारचिन्तामणौ विशेष'। नाष्टम्या न चतुर्दश्यां प्रायश्चित्तपरीक्षणे। न परीक्षा विवाहश्च शनिभौमदिने तथा॥ प्रा. तत्त्व p 474. The words 'तस्मात्·· चरेत्' (for आरभेत्) are quoted from हारीत by मद. पा. 703–704.

the method of performing Krcchra penance It is briefly as follows: The sinner desiring to be free of sin quickly should stand by day and sit up by night (i e. should take sleep in a sitting position and not lie down), he should speak the truth and should not hold conversation with anāryas (śūdras &c.), should bathe thrice in the day, should perform mārjana (splashing or sprinkling water on the head and other limbs by means of kuśas dipped in water after repeating sacred mantras) with the three verses 'āpo hi sthā' (Rg. X.9.1–3), with the verses called Pavitravatī and with the eight verses beginning with 'hiraṇyavarṇāh sucayaḥ pāvakāh' (Tai. S V. 6 1.1–8) Then he should perform the tarpaṇa [270] (satiating with water) with thirteen mantras beginning with namaḥ and ending with namah (each respectively containing 6, 4, 4, 13, 2, 2, 2, 6, 5, 2, 2, 6, 2 names of deities) This constitutes for him the worship of Āditya (the Sun) and he offers oblations of clarified butter with these thirteen mantras and, after he passes twelve days in this way, on the 13th he offers nine oblations of boiled rice to Agni, Soma, Agni and Soma, Indra and Agni, Indra, the Viśve Devas, Brahman, Prajāpati, Agni Svistakrt Then he serves dinner to brāhmaṇas The Āp. Dh. S II. 6 15.9 states [271] the general rule that in all religious observances one should give dinner to brāhmaṇas that are pure (in conduct) and that have studied the Veda. The Baud Dh S. (II. I. 95–99) prescribes that in a krcchra penance one has to bathe thrice in the day, to lie down on the ground (not on a cot &c), to wear only one piece of cloth, to shave one's hair on the head, the moustache and the body and to pare one's nails, and that the same mode is prescribed also for women (sinners) except the tonsure of the head Manu (XI. 222–225) prescribes that in all penances there is homa with the mahāvyāhṛtis every day, the sinner has to practise ahiṁsā (non-injury to all sentient beings), truthfulness, absence of anger and straight-forwardness, has to bathe thrice by day and thrice by night together with the clothes on, he should not talk with women, śūdras and patitas, he should stand by day and sit down at night or if unable to do so he should sleep on the ground (raised platform called sthaṇḍila), should observe celibacy and the rules of a student, such as wearing girdle of muñja grass and carrying a staff (of palāśa &c), should honour gods, brāhmaṇas and his elders, should always recite the Gāyatrī and sacred texts.

270 For the usual tarpaṇa, vide H. of Dh vol II. pp 689–695

271. शुचीन्मन्त्रवत सर्वकृत्येषु भोजयेत्। आप ध सू II 6. 15 9.

Vas. 24.5 (a long prose passage) contains similar provisions. Yāj III. 312–13 are very important. They prescribe the practice of certain virtues and rules of conduct called yamas (such as brahmacarya, kindliness, forbearance, truthfulness, ahiṁsā &c.) and niyamas (such as bath, silence, fasting, purity of body &c.) as necessary adjuncts in all penances. The Laugākṣigṛhya (V. 3–11) prescribes the procedure for all penances Yāj. III. 325 holds that one should, while performing the penance of kṛcchra or cāndrāyaṇa, bathe thrice daily, recite holy mantras (as stated in Vas 28.11–15) and should eat balls of rice over which the Gāyatrī has been recited. Śaṅkha[272] (18.12–14) also summarises the different items that have to be gone through in undergoing a penance The Madanapārijāta (pp 781–784), Pr. V. (pp 503–506), Pr. Sāra (pp 21,22 and 200–203), Pr. T. pp. 497–510, 523–524, Pr. Mayūkha pp. 18–21, Pr. Prakāśa (folios 38b to 43b), Prāyaścittenduśekhara (pp. 15 and 88) and other works provide elaborate rules about the procedure of undergoing prāyaścittas. It is not possible nor necessary to set out these in detail here. Briefly put, on the day previous to the actual day of commencing penance the sinner should pare his nails, shave his head, bathe with clay, cow-dung, holy water &c , drink clarified butter, make a declaration of performing the penance indicated by the assembly of learned men. On the next day he should bathe, perform śrāddha, drink pañcagavya, should perform homa, give dakṣiṇā (gold, cows &c.) to the brāhmaṇas and feed them. Parāśara (XI. 3) says that at the end of the rite of penance pañcagavya should be taken and one, two, three or four cows should be donated respectively by a brāhmaṇa, a kṣatriya, a vaiśya and a śūdra. Yama (verse 63) says that brāhmaṇas should be fed on the performance of a penance and a dakṣiṇā of one golden māṣa should be given to each brāhmaṇa. Jābāli says that at the beginning and close of all penances the sinner should offer in the smārta fire oblations of clarified butter to the accompaniment of the Vyāhṛtis, perform śrāddha and offer dakṣiṇā consisting of a cow or gold. Vide Aparārka (p. 1230) and Par. M II part 2 p. 195 for Jābāli's verses. The Pr Prakāśa (folio 30a) adds that according to the Mahārṇava the number of vyāhṛti-homas should be 28 or 108.

---

272. मुण्डश्मश्रुनखधारी अधःशायी जितेन्द्रियः। श्रीशूद्रपतितानां च वर्जयेत्परिभाषणम्॥ पवित्राणि जपेच्छक्त्या जुहुयाच्चैव शक्तितः। अयं विधिः स विज्ञेयः सर्वकृच्छ्रेषु सर्वदा। शङ्ख 18 12–14, which are almost the same as the last two verses of विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 46.

A few words may be said about the tonsure of the head (vapana or mundana). The Tai Br (I 5 6.1–2) states[273] 'The Asuras first shaved the hair on the head, then the moustache and then the armpits, therefore they went down (or with face downwards) and were defeated, while the gods first shaved the armpits, then the moustache and then the hair on the head' The Pr Prakāśa quotes this passage in a mutilated form and then states that vapana is of three kinds, daiva (of the gods), āsura (of the asuras) and mānusa (of men), that the āsura method is condemned, that in consecrating the Vedic fires, in the iṣṭis and soma sacrifices the daiva method is ordained, while in prāyaścittas, there being no special vidhi, there is an option. Tonsure of the head is enjoined on several occasions e. g. the Viṣnupurāna provides [274] 'Tonsure should be carried out at Prayāga when on a pilgrimage, and on the death of one's father or mother, one should not in vain (lightly) tonsure the head'. To these occasions may be added penances. The idea seems to have been entertained that whatever sin a man commits it becomes centered in the hair, as a verse quoted by the Madanapārijāta and Pr M. states [275] Gaut. (27 3), Vas.[276] (24 5), Baud. Dh. S. (II.1.98–99) and others provide for the tonsure of the hair on the head and lips (except those on the eye-brows, the hair on the trunk and the top knot). Exceptions were introduced to the rule about tonsure Dakṣa[277] forbade tonsure, the offering of piṇḍas and the carrying of a corpse and all funeral rites to 273 तेऽसुरा ऊर्ध्वं पूष्णेभ्यो नापश्यन्। ते केशानग्रेऽवपन्त अथ श्मश्रूणि अथोपपक्षौ। ततस्तेऽवाञ्च आयन् पराभवन्। यस्यैवं वपन्ति अवाङेति। अथ देवा ऊर्ध्वं पूष्णेभ्योऽपश्यन्। ते उपपक्षौ अग्रेऽवपन्त अथ श्मश्रूण्यथ केशान्। सुवर्गं लोकमायन्। तै ब्रा I. 5 6. 1–2 (about the vapana of a Cāturmāsya-yājin). वपन त्रिविध दैवमासुर मानुष चेति। आहुर निन्दितं मानुषदैवयोर्विकल्प। आधानेष्टिसोमेषु दैवस्य विहितत्वात्। प्रायश्चित्तेषु तु विशेषविध्यभावाद् विकल्प एव। मा प्रकाश folio 31 b.

---

274. प्रयागे तीर्थयात्राया पितृमातृवियोगत.। कक्षाना वपनं कार्यं न वृथा विकचो भवेत्॥ विष्णुपुराण q by प्राय तत्त्व p 489

275. यानि कानि च पापानि ब्रह्महत्यासमानि च। केशानाश्रित्य तिष्ठन्ति तस्मात्केशान्वापयाम्यहम्॥ इति मन्त्रमुक्त्वा कक्षोपस्थशिखावर्जं क्रमेण श्मश्रूपपक्षकेशान्तदक्सरथाद् वापयेत्। यतिविधवादीना सशिख वपनम्। ब्रह्महत्यादिष्वपि सशिख सर्वाङ्गलोम्ना च। प्राय. म p. 19.

276. कुन्द्राणा व्रतरूपाणि श्मश्रुकेशान्वापयेद्भ्रुवौक्षिलोमशिखावर्जं०। वसिष्ठ 24 4–5, कुक्षे त्रिपवणमुदकोपस्पर्शनम्। अधः शयनम्। एकवस्त्रता। केशश्मश्रुलोमनखवापनम्। एतदेव स्त्रिया. केशवपनवर्जम्। चौ ध सू II. 1. 95–99 The मिता on या III 325 reads वसिष्ठ as श्मश्रुकेशादि वापयेत् कुक्षिरोमशिखावर्जम्।, should it not be अक्षिरोम०?

277. मुण्डन पिण्डदानं च प्रेतकर्म च सर्वश। न जीवन्पितृकः कुर्याद् गयिणीपतिरेव चेति दक्षीयनिषेधस्य रागप्राप्तविषयत्वाद् विधिसृष्टे निषेधानवकाशात्। मा प्रकाश folio 32a.

one whose father was alive and to a man whose wife was pregnant. But this prohibition did not apply to penances. The Baud. Dh S already referred to prohibits the tonsure of women in penances Angiras 163, Āpastamba-smrti I. 33–34, Brhad-Yama IV.16, Vrddha-Hārīta IX 386, Parāśara IX. 54–55, Yama 54–55 provide [278] that in the case of married women whose husbands are alive and in the case of maidens all their hair should be held together and only two finger-breadths of hair should be cut off. In the case of widows and ascetics the entire head was to be shaved. It was further provided by Parāśara (IX 52–54), Śankha (q. by Par. M. II. part I, pp. 290–291) that in the case of a king or prince or a learned brāhmana tonsure of the head should not be insisted upon, but that they should have to undergo double the usual penance and the dakṣinā would have to be double. [279] The Mit. on Yāj. III. 325 quotes a verse of Manu [280] (not found in the printed text) 'tonsure of the head is not desired in the case of learned brāhmanas and kings except in the case of those guilty of mahāpātakas, of cow-killing or of being an avakīrnin'. The Mit. (on Yāj. III 264) further quotes Samvarta [281] to the effect that when the penance prescribed is only a quarter then only the hair on the body below the throat is to be shaved, when half is prescribed then in addition the hair on the lips is to be cut, when three-fourths then all the hair on the body except the knot is to be cut and in the case of the full penance all hair including the śikhā (the top-knot) also are to be cut off. The Par. M (II part 1. p 300) while describing cāndrāyana penance requires the cutting of the hair on all parts

---

278. सर्वान्केशान् सशुद्धृत्य छेदयेदङ्गुलिद्वयम्। एवं नारीकुमारीणां शिरसो मुण्डनं स्मृतम्। न स्त्रिया केशवपनं न दूरे शयनाशनम्॥ पराशर IX. 54–55.

279 केशाना रक्षणार्थाय द्विगुणं व्रतमाचरेत्। द्विगुणे व्रत आदिष्टे द्विगुणा दक्षिणा भवेत्। राजा वा राजपुत्रो वा ब्राह्मणो वा बहुश्रुत.। अकृत्वा वपन तस्य प्रायश्चित्तं विनिर्दिशेत्। पराशर IX 52-54, नारदपुराण, पूर्वार्ध 14 52–54, for the half केशाना°, vide बृद्धहारीत IX 387. The मिता on या III 325, प्राय वि. p. 503, प्राय सा p. 22, मद पा. p 782 quote these verses as हारीत's in a different order and प्राय तत्त्व p 519 ascribes almost similar verses to लघुहारीत

280. विद्वद्विप्रभृपत्नीनां नेष्यते केशवापनम्। ऋते महापातकिनो गोहन्तुश्चावकीर्णिन.॥ मनु q by मिता on या. III 325, प्राय. सा pp 22–23 (as महर्षि). The प्राय. तत्त्व p 516 expressly refers to this text as cited by the मिता

281 पादेऽङ्गरोमवपनं द्विपादे श्मश्रुणोऽपि च। त्रिपादे तु शिखावर्जं सशिखं तु निपातने॥ सवर्त q. by मिता. on या III 264, प्राय म p 14, प्रा प्रकाश folio 31a, which remarks 'शिखावर्जमिति शिखावतामेव तेन यतिविधवादीनां सर्ववपनमेव। यतिः शूद्रश्च त्रिधा सशिख वपनं चरेदिति वचनाच्च।' of the body (including private parts).[282] The tonsure is to be performed by a barber and yet the saṅkalpa is 'vapanam karisye' and not 'vapanam kārayisye' From Gaut 27.3 (vapanam vratam caret) prescribing tonsure in cāndrāyana Haradatta and others infer that vapana is unnecessary in krcchra penance

Baths that are subsidiary to prāyaścitta are performed with ashes, cowdung, clay, water, pañcagavya and water in which kuśa grass has been dipped Mantras that are to be recited at the time of bath are laid down in the Linga-purāna, the Bhavisyapurāna and elsewhere.

There are certain virtues to be cultivated as being common to all prāyaścittas whether secretly or openly undergone They are called yamas and niyamas and have been set out above (p 121) from Yāj III. 312–313 Atri (verses 48–49) sets them out somewhat differently. Manu IV. 204 (= Atri verse 47) refers to yamas and niyamas which Medhātithi explains as follows. viz yamas are in the nature of prohibitions (e. g. a brāhmana should not be killed), while niyamas consist of what is to be done (such as one should always recite the Veda, as in Manu IV. 147).

While undergoing prāyaścittas certain rules about food and other matters were to be observed. For example, Hārita[283] prescribes that the person undergoing penance should omit on all days māsa and masūra pulse, honey, taking food at the house of or belonging to others and sexual intercourse, should not speak at an improper time, should perform ācamana if he speaks with women or śūdras or those who are ucchista Yama ordains that one who is undergoing a penance should omit massaging the body or head with oil, the chewing of tāmbūla, applying unguents and every thing else that causes one to feel strength or sexual passion.

According to the Pr[284] Prakāśa when undertaking a penance one should begin with the mantra 'Agne vratapate

282. पौर्णमास्यामुपेतस्तु ब्राह्मणः सुसमाहितः। केशश्मश्रूणि लोमानि कक्षोपस्थ च वापयेत्॥ q by parā. mā II. part 1 p 300

283. माषमसूरमधुपरान्नमैथुनानि प्रत्यहं वर्जयेत्। व्रतोपेतो नाकाले वाचं विसृजेत्। स्त्रीशूद्रोच्छिष्टाभिभाषण आचामेत्। हारीत q. by अपरार्क p 1230, गात्राभ्यङ्ग शिरोभ्यङ्ग ताम्बूलमनुलेपनम्। व्रतस्थो वर्जयेत्सर्वं यच्चान्यद्बलरागकृत्॥ यम q by parā. mā II part 2 p. 196

284. व्रतनिवेदनविमोचनमन्त्रौ तैत्तिरीयशाखाया अग्ने व्रतपते व्रतं चरिष्यामि तच्छकेय तन्मे राध्यताम्, अग्ने व्रतपते व्रतमचारिषं तदशकं तन्मे राधि इति तु व्रतसमाप्तौ॥ mā prakāśa folio 37 b. अग्ने...राध्यताम् is तै सं I 5 10,3 = वाज सं I.5 and अग्ने व्रतपते व्रतमचारिषं is तै. सं I 6 6.3 = वाज. सं II 28.

vratam carisyāmi' (O! Fire, lord of vratas! I shall perform a vrata) and when finishing a penance one should repeat the mantra 'agne vratapate vratam-acārisam tad-aśakam tan-me rādhi' (O! Fire, lord of vratas; I have performed the vrata, I had the strength to do it, may it be propitious for me &c.').

Prāyaścittas are of two kinds, prakāśa (undergone openly) and rahasya (undergone secretly). A few words must be said about the latter. Gaut. (24 1-11), Vas. (25 1-3), Manu XI. 248-265, Yāj. III. 301-305, Visnu Dh. S. 55 and other smrtis lay down rules about secret prāyaścittas. Where a man's [285] sin is not known to anyone except himself he may perform secret expiation. In the case of adultery and in the case of association with one guilty of a grave sin, one may still perform a secret penance, even though the adultery is known to the adulteress and even though the man guilty of a mahāpātaka is aware of the association. Vas.[286] 25 2 states the general rule that secret penances are meant for those who have consecrated the Vedic fires, who are disciplined, old or learned and that the openly undergone penances are meant for others. If such a man is himself aware of the proper penance, he should perform it without going to an assembly (parṣad), but if he is not so aware he may consult some knowing person privately, asking him in a general way what the penance for a particular sin may be. Vas. 25.3 provides that those who are always intent on prānāyāmas, holy texts, gifts, homas and japa are released from sin. Manu XI.226 states that those whose sins have not become public may be purified by homas and mantras. Even women and sūdras can perform penance in secret, since, though they cannot perform homa and repeat Vedic mantras, they can, as the Mit on Yāj III.300 says, perform expiation by means of gifts and prānāyāmas. Gaut 26 2 and Manu XI. 253 prescribe that one who desires to receive a gift which he should not accept or who receives such a gift should recite in water (navel-deep according to some) the hymn of four verses beginning with 'tarat 285. हारीतोऽप्याह। अथ ब्राह्मणस्य श्रुतधर्मशास्त्रस्य रहस्यमनुकमिष्यामः। रहस्ये रहस्यं प्रकाशे प्रकाशमिति। प्राय सा. p 161, परा सा. II part 2 p 153, vide प्रा सार p. 161 and प्राय. चि. p. 500 for रहस्ये...प्रकाशमिति as from यम.

---

286. आहिताग्नेर्विनीतस्य वृद्धस्य विदुषोऽपि वा। रहस्योक्तं प्रायश्चित्तं पूर्वोक्तमितरे जनाः॥ प्राणायामैः पवित्रैश्च दानैर्होमैर्जपैस्तथा। नित्ययुक्ताः प्रमुच्यन्ते पातकेभ्यो न संशयः॥ वसिष्ठ 25. 2-3; the first verse is q by अपरार्क p. 1212 as from चतुर्विंशतिमत (reads इतरस्य तु).

sa mandi' (Rg X.58 1–4). For one who is guilty of brāhmana murder Gaut. (24 6) prescribes that for the first ten days he should subsist on milk alone, on clarified butter for a further ten days, on water for another period of ten days, that he should partake of the articles specified only once in the morning, should wear wet clothes and should offer every day eight symbolic homas with clarified butter, of his hair on the body, nails, skin, flesh, blood, muscles, bones and marrow with the words 'I offer in the mouth of Death' added at the end.[287] Yāj III.301 prescribes that the murderer of a brāhmana should fast for ten days, should recite the Aghamarsana hymn (Rg X.190) while submerged in water, donate a cow yielding milk, while Visnu prescribes that he should bathe for a month in a flowing stream or river, should perform every day 16 prānāyāmas, should eat only once a day sacrificial food and may then become purified. Visnu provides that the drinker of surā becomes pure by observing the vrata (as stated) for brāhmana murder and reciting Aghamarsana; while the thief of brāhmana's gold becomes pure by fasting for three days and reciting the sacred Gāyatrī ten thousand times and one guilty of incest by the repeated recital of the hymn beginning with 'sahasrasirsā' (Rg X. 90).

The sages observed that some of the penances mentioned in old smrtis were terrible and involved loss of life Therefore, gradually more humane and easier penances came to be prescribed For example, Hārita[288] states 'brāhmanas who have studied dharmaśāstra should prescribe a penance appropriate to the age, the time and the strength of the brāhmana (sinner), the penance being such that he may not lose his life and yet may be purified; one should not prescribe an observance that will cause great distress (to the sinner) Angiras also says that the parisad should indicate the penance resolved upon by all the members which would not cause loss of life Śankha declares:[289] 'a brāhmana should never practise the performance of a penance in a forest full of thieves, ferocious beasts, elephants and other animals through fear of injury to life. The body that is the all in all (i e. the only source) of (the observance of) dharma must be protected with efforts; just as water oozes down from the mountain, so dharma springs from the body'.

287. हरदत्त on गौ 24 6 explains that he will have to say लोमानि आत्मनो मुखे मृत्योरास्ये जुहोमि स्वाहा नखान्यात्मनो मुखे मृत्योरास्ये जुहोमि स्वाहेत्येवंप्रकारा होमा..

288 यथावयो यथाकालं यथाप्राणं च ब्राह्मणे। प्रायश्चित्तं प्रदातव्यं ब्राह्मणैर्धर्मपाठकैः॥ येन शुद्धिमवाप्नोति न च प्राणैर्वियुज्यते। आर्तिं वा महतीं याति न चैतद् व्रतमादिशेत्॥ हारीत q. by परा मा II. part 1 p 235, पर्यालोच्य तत्सर्वं प्रायश्चित्तं विनिर्दिशेत्॥ सर्वेषां निश्चितं यत्स्याद्यच्च प्राणान् न घातयेत्॥ अङ्गिरस् q. by परा मा II part 1 p 236, मद् पा. p. 779.

As times changed easier substitutes (called pratyāmnāyas) were found and prescribed The word pratyāmnāya was used in this sense in the Āp. Śr. S. V. 20,18 (yadyanādhyo-gnīnādadhīta kāmam-evaikām gām dadyāt sā gavām pratyāmnāyo bhavatīti vijñāyate), 6 30 9 and Śān. Śr. S. 14 51,6 and other sūtras Samvarta[290] states that if a sinner is unable to undergo the Prājāpatya penance, he may donate instead a cow yielding milk and if he cannot donate such a cow he may donate the full price of such a cow. Parāśara[291] (XII 63-64) provides four substitutes for a Prājāpatya penance viz the recital of the famous Gāyatrī mantra (Rg. III. 62 10) ten thousand times or 200 prānāyāmas, or bathing twelve times in a sacred watery place after drying the head on each bath, or taking to a journey of two yojanas towards a holy place. From the words of Gaut. 19 16 and 18 (quoted above in note 120) it follows that gold is a substitute for a cow by way of penance. The Brahmapurāna[292] provides that in the absence of a cow a niska or half niska 289 तस्करश्वापदाकीर्णे बहुव्यालमृगे वने। न व्रतं ब्राह्मण. कुर्यात्प्राणबाधाभयात्सदा। शरीरं धर्मसर्वस्वं रक्षणीयं प्रयत्नत। शरीरात्स्रवते धर्म पर्वतात्सलिल यथा। शङ्ख 17. 63 and 65 q. by मद. पा 728, अपरार्क p. 1231 (which inserts one more verse between the two (सर्वतो जीवितं रक्षेज्जीवन्पापं व्यपोहति। व्रतै. कृच्छ्रैस्तथा दानैरित्याह भगवान्यमः॥). This is शङ्ख. 17 64.

---

290. प्राजापत्यव्रताशक्तौ धेनुं दद्यात्पयस्विनीम्। धेनोरभावे दातव्यं तुल्यं मूल्यं न संशय॥ सर्वत्र q by परा मा. II. part 2 p. 197, मा सार p. 203, प्राय. तत्त्व pp. 517 and 541. The मिता on या. III. 326 quotes this verse as स्मृत्यन्तर and adds another half as 'मूल्यार्धमपि निष्कं वा तदर्धं शक्त्यपेक्षया' The verse is q from मार्कण्डेयपुराण by अपरार्क p 1248.

291 प्राजापत्यकृच्छ्रस्य चतुर्गव्यान्नायानाह कृच्छ्रं देव्यसुत चैव प्राणायामशतद्वयम्। पुण्यतीर्थेऽनार्द्रशिरःस्नान द्वादशसंख्यया॥ द्वियोजने तीर्थयात्रा कृच्छ्रमेकं प्रकल्पितम्॥ पराशर XII. 63-64 and परा मा II part 2 p. 47.

292. मूल्यं च यथाशक्ति देयम्। अत एव ब्रह्मपुराणे गवामभावे निष्कं स्यात्तदर्धं पादमेव वा। परा मा. II part 2 p 197, मा. सार p 203. The मिता. on या III 326 quotes it without name.

or a quarter niska may be given The Caturvimśatimata [293] provides several pratyāmnāyas for Prājāpatya viz recital of Gāyatrī ten thousand times, standing in water, gift of a cow to a brāhmana—these four (including Prājāpatya) are equal, as also a thousand homas with sesame, recitation of the whole samhitā of the veda, feeding twelve brāhmanas, Pāvakesti are equal. The Caturvimśatimata [294] stated that one should substitute the gift of one cow for Prājāpatya penance, of two cows for Sāntapana, of three cows for Parāka, Tapta-krcchra and Atikrcchra and eight for Cāndrāyana The result was that from medieval times at least even in the case of mahāpātakas there was a sliding scale of penances ultimately ending in feeding brāhmanas or making monetary or other presents to them. For example, the Mit (on Yaj. III. 326) says that in the case [295] of the twelve years' penance, optionally 360 prājāpatyas could be performed, each prājāpatya extending over twelve days, that if a man was unable to undergo this he should donate as many (i. e 360) milch cows, if that was impossible he may donate their price or 360 niskas or even half or quarter thereof &c. Yāj. III 309 provides (a lakh of) homas with sesame to the accompaniment of the Gāyatrī or making brāhmanas recite the Veda by the gift of sesame. Vas 28 18–19 (=Atri VI. 7–8) and Visnu Dh S 90 10 state that by feeding seven or five brāhmanas on the Full moon of Vaiśākha with sesame and honey a man becomes free of all sins. These provi-

---

293 कृच्छ्रोऽयुतं च गायत्र्या उपवासस्तथैव च। धेनुप्रदान विप्राय सममेतच्चतुष्टयम्। तिलहोमसहस्रं तु वेदस्याध्यायमेव च। विप्रा द्वादश वा भोज्या· पावकेष्टिस्तथैव च। अन्यानि वा पवित्राणि समान्याहुर्मनीषिण. । चतुर्विंशतिमत q. by परा मा II part 2 p 47 and also p 196 (with some variations), मा मयूख p 26 The मिता on या III. 326, मा सार p 204 ascribe the first verse to पराशर and the latter reads उपवास for उदवास . There are similar verses in the षट्त्रिंशन्मत also (vide मा सार p. 204).

294 प्राजापत्ये तु गामेकां दद्यात्सान्तपने द्वयम् । पराकतप्तातिकृच्छ्रे तिस्रस्तिस्रस्तु गास्तथा ॥ अष्टौ चान्द्रायणे देया अत्याम्नायविधौ सदा। यथा विभवसारेण दानं दद्याद्विशुद्धये। चतुर्विंशतिमत q. by परा मा' II part 2 p 200, अपरार्क p 1248, मा सार p 204 (first verse)

295. न च महापातकमद्युक्तनिष्कृतिक सम्भवति कस्माद्युक्तनिष्कृतिकेष्वपि प्राजापत्यादयो योजनीया· । तत्र द्वादशवार्षिकव्रते द्वादश द्वादश दिनान्येकैकं प्राजापत्य परिकल्प्य गण्यमाने प्राजापत्याना षष्टयधिकशतत्रय द्वादशवार्षिके वैकल्पिकमनुष्ठेयं भवति । तदशक्तौ तावत्यो वा धेनवो दातव्या. । तदसम्भवे निष्काणां षष्टयधिकशतत्रयं दातव्यम्' । तथा स्मृत्यन्तरम् । प्राजापत्य ...मूल्यार्धमपि निष्कं वा तदर्धं शक्त्यपेक्षया । गवामभावे निष्क स्यात्तदर्धं पाद एव वा इति स्मरणात् । मिता. on या III 326.' The मा प्रकाश says 'सुवर्णचतुष्टयसमतोलितं रूप्य निष्क इत्यर्थः ' (folio 62 b). This is the view of the Prāyaścitta-muktāvalī (folio 17 a) which remarks, 'तथा च धरण-पुराण-कार्षापणशब्दा अन्योन्यं पर्याया भासन्ते'.

sions are maintained in almost all medieval works such as the Smrtyarthasāra pp. 149, 155, Prāyaścittasāra p. 203, Pr. T. pp. 517, 541, Pr. Mayūkha p. 18 &c The same method is followed in penances for lesser periods. It is due to this provision in the smrtis that in modern times men, when on death-bed, perform prāyaścittas for all their sins by donating a cow or more or by monetary presents to priests.[295a]

Some interesting sidelights are thrown on the prices of milch cows, cows and bulls by the medieval writers The Pr. V. (p 199) states the price of a milch cow (payasvinī) was 3 purāṇas, that of an ordinary cow (go) one purāna and that of a bull was five purānas. The Pr. T. (pp. 517–18) quotes Kātyāyana to the effect that the price of a cow (go) is 32 paṇas and that of a male calf one purāna, that a pana is copper weighing 80 raktikās or equal to 80 varāṭakas (cowries), that 16 panas were equal to one purāna (following Bhavisya and Matsya purānas), that by niska is not meant the one indicated by Manu (VIII. 137) but a dīnāraniska i. e gold weighing 32 raktikās. The Prāyaścittenduśekhara p. 7 follows Yāj I 365 and holds that niska is silver equal (in weight) to four suvarnas or a pala. A raktikā weighs on an average 1·8 grains; so a copper pana of 80 raktikās would weigh about 144 grains. Therefore a dhenu was equal to 32 panas (or two purānas) i. e. about 26 tolas of copper (one tola being taken as equal to 180 grains). Vide H of Dh. vol. III pp.120–121 notes 161 and 162 for information about ancient coins and their weights. There appears to be owing to lapse of centuries some difference in the views of several writers According to Vijñāneśvara four suvarnas are equal to a silver niska According to the Līlāvatī 20 varāṭakas are equal to a kākinī, 4 kākinīs are equal to a pana and a niṣka is equal to 256 panas.

295a There was a parallel to this method of prayāmnāya in Europe as remarked by Gibbon 'A year of penance was appreciated at 26 solidi of silver, about four pounds sterling, for the rich, at 3 solidi or nine shillings for the indigent; and these alms were soon appropriated to the Church which derived from the redemption of sins an inexhaustible source of opulence and dominion' Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol VII. p. 187 (Smith's ed. of 1862).

CHAPTER V

NAMES OF ALL PRĀYAŚCITTAS

Now all the prāyaścittas mentioned in the smṛtis and digests will be arranged in alphabetical order (Sanskrit, transliterated into English), excepting mere hymns, fasts, &c. and brief explanations and references will be added to each.

AGHAMARṢAṆA—(The hymn Ṛg. X 190 1–3)

This is prescribed as a penance for all sins by even the most ancient Dharmaśāstra works such as Gaut 24.11, Baud. Dh S IV. 2 19–20, Vas 26 8, Manu XI.259–260, Yāj III 301, Viṣnu Dh S. 55 7, Śankha 18 1–2 and others. They prescribe that if a man recites (for three days, according to Haradatta) the Aghamarsana hymn thrice in the day while immersed in water for a bath, he is freed from all sins and that this penance is equal in sanctification to the bath at the end of the Aśvamedha sacrifice The Pr. Sāra p 199 speaks of the Aghamarsana-vrata He has to fast for three days and stand up by day and sit up by night and donate a milch cow at the end. Śankha 18 1–2 and Viṣnu Dh. S.46.1–9 prescribe the details.

ATIKṚCCHRA—Vide under Kṛcchra Manu XI. 213 prescribes that this penance is constituted by eating only one morsel of food for three days in the morning only, for three days in the evening only, for three days eating one morsel got without asking for it and observing a complete fast for the next three days Yāj III 319, on the other hand, prescribes the eating of just as much food as would fill the hand (and not merely one morsel) The Mit, Pr Sāra (p 176) and others state that the rule of Manu applies to those who are able to undergo it, while that of Yāj is meant for those who are unable (aśakta) The Sāmavidhāna Br. I.2 6–7, Gaut 26.18–19, Viṣnu Dh S 54 30, Laugāksigṛhya V.12–13, Parāśara XI.54–55, Vas 24 1–2, Baud Dh S IV 5 8 also speak of this Manu XI 208 (= Viṣnu 54 30) prescribes this penance for striking a brāhmana with a weapon or a cudgel Gaut 26 22 states that this penance purifies a man of all sins except the mahāpātakas

ATISĀNTAPANA—See under Mahā-sāntapana This is variously defined According to the Agnipurāna 171 10 and Viṣnu Dh S. 46 21 it lasts for 18 days (3 times of the Mahā-sāntapana in which for six days one has to subsist on cow's urine and five other things). The Mit on Yāj. III 315 quotes a verse of Yama according to which this penance lasts for 12 days. [296] The Pr. M. (p. 23) speaks of it as lasting for 15 days.

ARDHAKṚCCHRA—See under Kṛcchra. According to the Āpastamba-smṛti 9 43–44, this is constituted by taking food only once in the day for one day, only once in the evening for one day, taking food for two days without asking for it and completely fasting for two days [297] (in all six days). The Mit. quotes another variety of it, viz. subsisting for three days on food obtained without asking for it and thereafter observing a complete fast for three days.

AŚVAMEDHAVABHṚTHASNĀNA— the ceremonial bath in the sea or a holy river at the end of an Aśvamedha sacrifice. Viṣnu Dh. S. 36 (last verse) prescribes for those guilty of mahāpātakas and anupātakas the Aśvamedha sacrifice. It is only an emperor or a crowned king who is entitled to perform an Aśvamedha, at the end of which comes a ceremonial bath. Vide H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1228–1236 for a description of the Aśvamedha. According to Pr. V. p. 65 only a kṣatriya could perform Aśvamedha and so this bath was a penance for him alone. But according to Kullūka (on Manu XI. 92) and Pr. T. (both quoting a verse from Bhaviṣya-purāṇa) even a brāhmaṇa could participate in the bath at the end of the Aśvamedha and become free from the sin of brāhmaṇa murder if committed unintentionally. [298]

AGNEYA KṚCCHRA—According to the Agnipurāṇa and Viṣnudharmottara if a man subsists for twelve days on sesame alone that is āgneya Kṛcchra. [299] Vide also Pr Pr. (folio 48 b.)

---

296 यदा तु षण्णां सान्तपनद्वयाणामेकैकस्य द्वयहमुपयोगस्तदाऽतिसान्तपनम्। यथाह यमः। एतान्येव तथा पैयान्यैकैकं तु द्वयहं द्वयहम्। अतिसान्तपनं नाम श्वपाकमपि शोधयेत्॥ इति। मिता on या III 315, प्राय. सा p. 191, अपरार्क p 1234 (reads द्वयहं त्र्यहम्)

297. सायंप्रातस्तथैवैकं दिनद्वयमयाचितम्। दिनद्वयं च नाश्नीयात्कृच्छ्रार्धं तद्विधीयते॥ आपस्तम्बस्मृति 9 43–44 q. by मिता. on या III. 318, प्रा. वि p 509, परा मा II part 2 p 173, प्राय. सा. p 172.

298. अश्वमेधप्रायश्चित्तं तु राज्ञ एव तत्र तस्यैवाधिकारात्। ...अश्वमेधावभृथस्नाने विप्रस्याप्यधिकारः। तथा च कल्पतरुधृतं भविष्यपुराणम्। यदा तु गुणवान् विप्रो हन्याद्विप्रं तु निर्गुणम्। अकामतस्तदा गच्छेत्स्नानं चैवाश्वमेधिकम्। ततश्चावभृथस्नानं क्षत्रियविषयमिति प्रायश्चित्तविवेकोक्तं हेयम्। प्राय. तत्त्व p 544. Vide प्राय वि. p 65 for the opinion referred to.

299. तिलैर्द्वादशरात्रेण कृच्छ्रमाग्नेयमार्तिहृत्। अग्निपुराण 171. 14, विष्णुधर्मोत्तर q. in प्रा. प्रकाश folio 48b (reads ० ग्नेयमुच्यते)

ṚSICANDRĀYANA—According to Brhad-Visnu quoted by Pr. Prakarana p. 132 this penance requires that one should take only three mouthfuls of sacrificial food every day for a month [300]

EKABHAKTA—According to Pr Pr. (folio 48a) if one takes for a month only one meal a day it is ekabhaktaka.[301]

KRCCHRA—This is the general word for several penances The Sāma. Br (I 2 1) starts [302] by saying 'we shall now expound three krcchras' and adds that one should eat sacrificial food for three days only by day and eat nothing at night, then for three days more one should eat at night only, then for three more days one should not beg or ask for food from others and should then observe a complete fast for three days If he is in a hurry to purify himself he should pass the day standing and the night in a sitting posture. Gaut. (26.2–16) describes the procedure of the first Krcchra (called Prājāpatya by later writers), then Atikrcchra (26 18–19), and then Krcchrātikrcchra (26 20). Baud. Dh. S (II.1.91) speaks of Parāka as Krcchra. Āp. Dh S (I.9.27.7) describes the Krcchra penance of twelve days. The Krcchra penance described by Gaut. 26 2–16 is one for twelve days and is called Prājāpatya by Manu (XI 211), Śankha (18 3), Yāj III 319 and others. Laugāksi Gr. (5 3–11) describes Krcchra According to the Par [303] M. (II part 1 p. 30) and Pr. Pr, (folio 64a) the word Krcchra without any qualifying epithet (upapada) means Prājāpatya. The Pr. T. (p 461) states that the Krcchra described by Gaut. (26 1–5) is given the name of Prājāpatya by Manu (XI. 211). Besides the rules about the intake of food, Gaut. prescribes certain other observances viz speaking the truth, not holding conversation with

---

300. तथा बृहद्विष्णु । त्रींस्त्रीन् पिण्डान् समश्नीयाज्जितात्मा दृढव्रत । इत्येवमासस्य वै मासमृषिचान्द्रायणं चरन् । प्राय. प्रक p 132. This verse is quoted as Yama's by Pr V. p 520, Pr. T p 544, प्राय. सा p 196 (reads ग्रासान् for पिण्डान्)

301. एकभक्तेन मासेन कथितं चैकभक्तकम् । नक्तकृच्छ्र तु नक्तेन मासस्संवत्सराच्चरेत् । प्रा प्रकाश (folio 48 a).

302. प्रातराशान् भुक्त्वा तिस्रो रात्रीर्नाश्नीयात् । अथापर त्र्यह नक्तं भुञ्जीताथापर त्र्यह न कञ्चन याचेदथापर त्र्यहमुपवसेत् तिष्ठेदहानि रात्रावासीत क्षिप्रकाम । सान ब्रा. I 2 1–4 गौ (26. 1–6) is word for word the same except that Gaut omits the word त्रीन् in the first sūtra. अथातस्त्रीन् कृच्छ्रान् व्याख्यास्याम । इत्येवान् त्र्यहमनक्ताश्यवित्वाग्नी ततस्त्र्यह त्र्यहमयाचितव्रतस्त्र्यहं नाश्नाति किंचनेति कृच्छ्रद्वादशरात्रस्य विधि । आप ध. सू I. 9 27 7

303. स्मृतिशास्त्रेषु निरुपपदस्य कृच्छ्रशब्दस्य प्राजापत्य एव प्रायुर्येण प्रयोगात् कृच्छ्रमिति प्राजापत्यमिति केवलस्मरणाच्च । परा मा. II part 1. p 30 men and women that are anāryas (not of the three higher castes), always singing the sāmans called 'Raurava' and 'Yaudhājapa', bathing thrice in the day in the morning, the noon and the night, then performing mārjana[304] (sprinkling of of water) with the three verses beginning with 'Āpo hi sthā' (Rg X.9.1–3), with the mantras called 'pavitravatī' viz. those beginning with 'pavamānah suvarjanah' (Tai. Br. I 4 8 1) and the eight verses beginning with 'Hiranyavarnāh' (in Tai. S V. 6.1), he should perform tarpaṇa with water with 13 mantras (Gaut 26.12); he performs the worship of Āditya (the sun) with the same mantra (i.e. after tarpana with the 13 mantras, he is to perform the worship of the sun with the same thirteen mantras) and offers oblations of clarified butter with the same 13 mantras and then on the 13th day he cooks boiled rice and offers oblations into ordinary Agni ('svāhā' added at the end of each, such as 'agnaye svāhā), Soma, Agni and Soma, Indra and Agni, Indra, Viśve devāh, Brahman, Prajāpati and Agni Śviṣtakṛt and then feeds the brāhmanas.

Kṛcchra-saṁvatsara—Āp. Dh. S. I. 9.27.8 speaks of this as a penance in which Krcchras are undergone continuously in a cycle for one year.

Krcchrātikrcchra—Gaut. 26.20 and Sāma. Br. I. 2. 8, Vas. 24 3 define it as a krcchra where only water is drunk on those days on which food is allowed and Gaut. 26.23 and Sāma. Br. I 2 9 state that this penance frees a man from all sins.[305] Yāj. III. 320 (= Devala 86, first half) and Brahmapurāna q. by Pr. Pr. (folio 40 a) prescribe that in this one has to subsist on water alone for 21 days. This difference between the views of Yāj on the one hand and of Gaut. on the other is reconciled by the digests by saying that the period depends on the capacity of the sinner. According to Pr. Pr (folio 46b) and Aparārka p. 1238, Yama prescribed a krcchrātikrcchra for 24 days.[306] Vide Par.

---

304. For mārjana vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp 317, 812 n and for tarpana the same vol pp. 668–9, 689–695. Raurava Sāman is sung on the rk 'punānah soma dhārayā' (Rg IX. 107.4 = Sāmaveda Nos. 511 and 675) and Yaudhājapa on 'Duhāna ūdhar' (Rg. IX. 107.5 = Sāmaveda No. 676).

305 अभक्षस्तृतीयः स कृच्छ्रातिकृच्छ्रः । ..तृतीयं चरित्वा सर्वस्मादेनसो मुच्यते । गौ. 26, 20, 23; कृच्छ्रोऽभक्ष स कृच्छ्रातिकृच्छ्र । वसिष्ठ 24, 3.

306. चतुर्विंशतिरात्रं तु नियतात्मा जितेन्द्रिय. । कृच्छ्रातिकृच्छ्रं कुर्वीत एकस्थाने द्विजोत्तम.॥ यम प by अपरार्क p. 1238, मद-पा. p 716, महार्णव folio 182 explains, पूर्वोक्तादशाहसाध्यातिकृच्छ्रद्वयेन एकः कृच्छ्रातिकृच्छ्रो भवतीत्यर्थ.।

M. II part 1 p. 179 and Madanapārijāta p. 716. According to Manu XI 208 (= Visnu Dh. S. 54.30) when a person strikes a brāhmana with a weapon and draws blood, he has to undergo this penance. The Pr. Prakarana (p 15) states that for those unable to undergo Krcchra, one milch cow is a substitute, for Atikrcchra two milch cows and for Krcchrātikrcchra four.

GOMŪTRA-KRCCHRA—The Pr. Sāra p. 187 quotes a verse about this: one should make a cow eat to satiety grains of wheat mixed with barley and then may collect the yava grains that are to be found in her dung and then drink the gruel of those yavas cooked in cow's urine. [307]

GOVRATA— Pr. Prakarana (p. 132) quoting the Mārkandeya describes this as follows: One should bathe with cow's urine, should subsist on cow-dung, should always stand among cows, should sit down on cowdung, should drink water only when cows have drunk water; one should not eat when they have not eaten, should stand up when they stand, should sit down when they sit down. This should be continued for a month.

CĀNDRĀYANA—The word is derived in this way That rite, where there is action by means of increase and decrease (in the intake of food) in imitation of the course of the phases of the moon, is cāndrāyana [308] The word occurs in Pān. V. 1. 72 (pārāyana-turāyana-cāndrāyanam vartayati) From very ancient times Cāndrāyana has been divided into two varieties, called Yavamadhya [309] (lit. being large in the middle like a grain of yava, and therefore tapering or thin at the ends) and Pipīlikāmadhya (lit. having a middle like that of an ant, that is, slender in the middle and large at the ends). Baud Dh S. III. 8. 33 names these two varieties. According to Jābāli [310] there are five

---

307. आ तृतेश्चारयित्वा गा गोधूमान्यवमिश्रितान्। तान् गोमयोत्थान् संगृह्य पिबेद्गोमूत्र यावकम्॥ q. by प्राय. सा p.187. This is quoted as from योगयाज्ञवल्क्य by महार्णव० folio 185a (which reads पचेत् for पिबेत्)

308. चन्द्रस्यायनमिवायनं चरण यस्मिन् कर्मणि ह्रासवृद्धिभ्या तच्चान्द्रायणम्। संज्ञाया दीर्घ । मिता on या III. 323. These very words are quoted in प्राय सार (p. 192), प्रा. प्रकाश (folio 50b) and other works The word should be चान्द्रायण, but being a technical term the first syllable is lengthened

309 तवेतच्चान्द्रायणं पिपीलिकामध्य विपरीत यवमध्यम्। यौ. ध III 8. 33. 'यववत् प्रान्तयोरणीयो मध्ये च स्थवीय इति' प्राय. सा p. 192. पिपीलिकावन्मध्ये कृशिष्ठ भवतीति पिपीलिकामध्यामिति कथ्यते' मिता on या III 323.

310. पिपीलिकायवमध्यं च यतिचान्द्रायणं तथा। चान्द्रायणं तथा ज्ञेय चतुर्थं सर्वतोमुखम्॥ पञ्चम शिशुसाख्य च तुल्यपुण्यफलोदयम्। जाबालि q. by दीपकलिका on या. 325, प्राय वि p. 517.

varieties of Cāndrāyaṇa viz. Yavamadhya, Pipīlikāmadhya, Yaticāndrāyaṇa, Sarvatomukha and Śiśucāndrāyaṇa. These will be described later on. Yājñavalkya says (III. 326) that where no specific penance is prescribed in the smṛti texts, cāndrāyaṇa effects purification and cāndrāyaṇa may be undergone not as a penance but for the purpose of accumulating merit and that in the latter case (when performed for a year) the performer enjoys the happiness of going to the world of the moon after death.[311] Manu XI. 221 and Gaut. 27.18 state the same view about cāndrāyaṇa for accumulating merit. When the vrata of cāndrāyaṇa is performed for the sake of merit, there is no tonsure (vide Gaut. 27.3 'vapanam vratam caret' and Haradatta thereon). Gaut. 19.20 (= Vas. 22. 20) prescribes that Kṛcchra, Atikṛcchra and Cāndrāyaṇa are the same penance for all sins (collectively for grave sins, for lesser ones separately, according to Haradatta and others). Compare Manu V 21 and XI. 215 (=Baud. Dh S. IV. 5. 16). Manu XI. 27, Yāj. III. 323, Vas. 27 21, Baud. Dh. S. IV. 5.18 and others define Cāndrāyaṇa (of the Yavamadhya type) as follows: On the first day of the bright half of a month only one morsel of food (grāsa or piṇḍa) is taken, on the second tithi two and so on; on the full moon (Paurnamāsī) 15 morsels are taken; then on the first of the dark half 14 morsels, one being reduced on each succeeding day. So on the 14th of the dark half only one morsel is eaten and on the Amāvāsyā there is a complete fast. Here in the middle of the month of thirty days the largest number of morsels is taken (and so this is Yavamadhya) just as on the Paurnamāsī day the moon becomes full and begins to wane from the next day. Here Paurnamāsī is in the middle of the period of the observance as Viṣnu Dh. S. 47.6 says. If one begins the vrata on the first tithi of the dark half, he reduces one morsel on the 1st i. e. takes 14 morsels on that day, 13 on the 2nd tithi of the dark half and so on On the 14th of the dark half he eats one morsel and on the amāvāsyā he eats nothing. Then on the 1st of the bright half he takes one morsel and goes on increasing the intake till on the Paurnamāsī he takes 15 morsels The month is taken in this latter case to be Pūrnimānta. Here in the middle of the observance there is no food taken and a large number of morsels is taken at the beginning and at the end So this is called Pipīlikāmadhya. This latter is described by Vas 23.45

311. अनादिष्टेषु पापेषु शुद्धिश्चान्द्रायणेन तु। धर्मार्थं यश्चरेदेतच्चन्द्रस्यैति सलोकताम्॥ या. III 326. सवत्सरं चाप्त्वा चन्द्रमसः सलोकतामाप्नोति। गौ. 27. 18.

and Manu XI. 216. Viṣṇu Dh. S. 47.5–6 say: Yasyāmamāvāsyā madhye bhavati sa pipīlikā-madhyah yasya paurnamāsī sa yavamadhyah. If there are 14 or 16 tithis in any particular paksa (half of a month) then the number of grāsas must be regulated accordingly There are other descriptions of cāndrāyana Vide Haradatta on Gaut. 27.12–15. The Kalpataru appears to have held (explaining two verses of Jābāla) that on the first of the dark half of a month 15 morsels were taken, then one morsel less was taken on each succeeding tithi; so that on amāvāsyā one morsel was eaten, then on the first of the bright half two morsels were eaten and one morsel was added every day so that on the 14th of the bright half fifteen morsels were taken and there was a complete fast on Paurnamāsī. But this seems to be opposed to the very idea of increase and decrease of the intake of food on the analogy of the waxing and waning of the Moon and to several smṛti texts such as Vas 23.45 and Parāsara X 2 Therefore the Pr. Prakāśa (folio 58b) finds fault with it [311a] Cāndrāyana may be divided from another point of view into two varieties: (1) MUKHYA (in the primary sense, viz. following exactly the waxing and waning of the moon) and GAUṆA (having a secondary or metaphorical sense). The former is either yavamadhya or pipīlikā-tanu-madhya), while the latter is of four kinds, viz. sāmānya, ṛṣi-cāndrāyana, śiśucāndrāyana and yaticāndrāyana The last two will be described later. The Sāmānya (or sarvatomukha) consists in eating only 240 morsels of sacrificial food in a month of 30 days, distributing them according to one's choice (not necessarily in imitation of the phases of the moon) as stated by Manu XI 220, Baud. IV. 5.21, Yāj III. 324 and the Mit (on Yāj. III. 324), the Madana-pārijāta and other works. Here the penance, though it is not regulated by the phases of the moon, is called Cāndrāyana for the purpose of prescribing the same procedure and observances in it as in the Cāndrāyana which follows the phases of the moon. Here the Mīmānsā rule of Kundapāyinām-ayana applies. [312] From the words of Gautama 311a अत्र कल्पतरुव्याख्यानम्। एकैक ह्रासयेद् ग्रासमिति कृष्णप्रतिपदि पञ्चदशग्रासा-नारभ्य एकैकापचयेनामावास्यायामेको ग्रास। तदनन्तरं प्रतिपदि द्वौ ग्रासौ एवं वृद्धिक्रमेण चतुर्दश्या पञ्चदशग्रासा संपद्यन्ते पौर्णमास्यां चोपवास इति पिपीलिकातनुमध्यं चान्द्रायणम्। प्राय पि p 519.

312. अत्राय क्रमः। दिने दिनेऽष्टौ ग्रासान् भुञ्जीत, अथवा नक्त चतुरो दिवा चतुर इति। अथैकस्मिन्दिने चतुरोऽपरस्मिन् द्वादश तत्रैकराजमुपेक्ष्यापरस्मिन् षोडश। यद्वा दिन द्वयमुपोष्य तृतीयादिने द्वात्रिंशादित्यादिप्रकाराणा मध्ये शक्त्यपेक्षया भुञ्जीतेति। अत्र तिथ्यपेक्षया

(Continued on the next page)

27.12–15 it appears that he envisaged a cāndrāyaṇa of 32 days (pipīlikāmadhya) or 31 days, when he says that the performer should fast on the 14th of the bright half, eat fifteen morsels on the Full Moon day, then reduce it by one morsel, so that there is a total fast on the amāvāsyā and then on the first of the bright half one morsel is taken until on the full moon 15 morsels are taken. Thus from the 14th of the bright half (when there is a complete fast) to the full moon of the succeeding month there are in all 32 days and the penance is of the pipīlikā-madhya type.

As regards the size of the morsels, different views are expressed. Gaut. 27.10 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 47.2 prescribe that the size of a morsel shall be such as not to cause a distortion of the mouth (while swallowing it) Yāj III. 323 allows that the morsels may be as large as the egg of a peahen, and Parāśara X.3[313] prescribes the size of a hen's egg and Śaṅkha that of an undried āmalaka fruit (myrobalan). The Mit explains that Gautama's words apply to boys and young people and that the other sizes confer an option according to the capacity (śakti) of the man undergoing penance. The procedure of cāndrāyaṇa is described in Gaut. 27.2–11, Baud. III.8, Manu XI.221–225, Vṛddha-gautama chap. 16 and other works. The one given by Gautama, being probably the oldest among Dharmaśāstra works, is here set out.

The general rules prescribed for the Kṛcchra penance in Gaut. 26.6–11 are applicable to Cāndrāyaṇa also. If it is performed as a penance the performer must tonsure his hair and observe a fast on the day preceding the Full Moon. He offers libations of water, oblations of clarified butter, consecrates the sacrificial food and worships the moon, reciting 'āpyāyasva' (Rg I. 91. 17), 'sam te payāmsi' (Rg. I. 91. 18). He shall offer clarified butter, reciting the four (ṛks) beginning with 'yad devā devaheḍanam' (Vāj. S. 20.14 or Tai. Br. II. 6. 6.1). These

---

(Continued from the last page)

प्रायनियमो नास्ति उपक्रमस्तु शुक्लकृष्णप्रतिपदोरन्यतरत्र एव कर्तव्यः। नद पा. p. 743, यत्र तु चत्वारिंशदधिकशतद्वयप्रासानां नास्तेन यथाकथंचिद्भक्षणं तत्र चन्द्रगत्यनुविधानाचरणाभावेन चान्द्रायणशब्दः कुण्डपायिनामयने अग्निहोत्रशब्दवत्तद्धर्मप्राप्त्यर्थो गौण इति। प्रा. प्रकाश (folio 56b. Vide नद. पा. p. 743 for the maxim of the Agnihotra in Kuṇḍapāyināmayana and Jai. VII. 3. 1, where शबर says 'कुण्डपायिनामयने श्रूयते 'मासमग्निहोत्रं जुहोतीति। तत्रैतत्सनावियतं नैयमिकादग्निहोत्रात्कर्मान्तरमेतदिति। अधुना आग्निहोत्र-शब्दश्चिन्त्यते। ..नैयमिकस्याग्निहोत्रस्य ये धर्मास्तेऽस्मिन्कर्मणि नाम्नातिदिश्येरन्।'।

313. कुकुटाण्डप्रमाणं तु ग्रासं वै परिकल्पयेत्। पराशर. X 3; vide also प्राय. म. p.21.

four together with the preceding are seven oblations of clarified butter that have to be offered. At the end of the offering of clarified butter he shall offer pieces of sacred fuel while reciting the (eight) texts beginning with 'devakṛtasya' (Vāj S VIII. 13). Each mouthful must be consecrated by (mentally) reciting one of the [314] following words 'om bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ, tapaḥ truth, fame, prosperity, vigour, refreshment, strength, lustre, brightness, soul, dharma and śiva' [315]; or he may consecrate all of them at once saying 'adoration' svāhā'. The sacrificial food must be one of the following. boiled rice, food obtained by begging, ground barley, grain separated from the husk, barley gruel, vegetables, milk, sour milk, clarified butter, roots, fruits and water. Among these each succeeding one is preferable to that enumerated earlier.

JALA KRCCHRA—See under Toyakṛcchra

TAPTAKRCCHRA—There is great divergence of views about this penance Manu XI 214, Vas 21 21, Viṣnu Dh. S 46 11, Baud Dh. S. IV 5.10, Saṅkha-smṛti 18.4, Agnipurāṇa 171 6–7, Atri verses 122–123, Parāsara IV. 7 speak of it as of 12 days' duration comprising four periods of three days each In this one drinks hot water, hot milk, hot ghee for three days each and then for three days there is a complete fast when he inhales hot vapour or atmosphere (acc to Manu XI. 214) Manu adds that the performer has to bathe only once (and not thrice as in some other penances) and that he should practise self-control Yāj III 317 (= Devala 84) speaks of this as of four days' duration, viz he takes hot milk, hot ghee and hot water for one day each and observes a total fast on the 4th day. The Mit on Yāj. III. 317 calls this mahātapta-kṛcchra and also mentions a taptakṛcchra of two days, viz on the first day the sinner takes . . e three, viz hot water, hot milk and hot ghee and observes a total fast on the 2nd day. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 50a) remarks that the authority for the two days' taptakṛcchra spoken

314. Haradatta says that on the days when the performer eats less than fifteen morsels, the counting is to be from the beginning and the later mentioned texts must be left out and that, while eating, the performer must employ the Prāṇāhuti mantras, viz. 'prāṇāya svāhā, apānāya svāhā' etc

315. The words of the Mantras are 'ओं भूर्भुवः स्वस्तप सत्य यश श्रीर्ध्मेधाजः स्तेजो वर्चः पुरुषो धर्म शिव इत्येतैर्नामानुमन्त्रणं प्रतिमन्त्र मनसा । नमः स्वाहेति वा सर्वान्। गौ 27. 8–9, some MSS omit वर्चः of by the Mit has to be found out The Pr. Prakāśa refers to a tapta-krcchra for 21 days. It may be said, as done by the Pr. Prakāśa, that the penance of tapta-krcchra for twelve days is meant for great sins and that the one for four days is meant for lesser sins The quantity of water, milk and ghee, that was to be taken is laid down by Parāśara [316] IV. 8, Atri 123–124 and Brahmapurāna (q. by Pr V. p. 511) viz. that hot water, hot milk and hot ghee should be six palas, three palas and one pala respectively The Brahmapurāna adds that water, milk and ghee are to be taken respectively in the evening, morning and noon TULĀPURUSA KRCCHRA—Jābāli speaks [317] of the duration of this penance as eight days; Śankha (18.9–10) and Visnu Dh. S. 46 22 describe one of ten days where oil-cake, the foamy scum of cooked rice, butter-milk, water and barley meal are to be eaten, each respectively on one day, followed by a fast on the next day Yāj. III. 322 (= Atri verses 129–130) describes one of 15 days where the above five ingredients are eaten for three days each. Yama on the other hand speaks of Tulāpurusa for 21 days, when the five things are separately eaten for three days (vide Mit. on Yāj III. 322). Aparārka pp. 1239–1241, Par. M II. part 2 pp 184–189, Madanapārijāta pp. 718–727, Pr. Sāra pp 179–181 set out at length the mode of the performance of Tulāpurusa as a penance. In this penance two images of the performer made of fragrant usīra grass were to be prepared and placed in the pan of a balance a span high made either of gold or silver or sandalwood and were to be weighed against pebbles and placed in another pan and worship was to be offered to Mahādeva and Umā and many other subordinate deities such as Agni, Vāyu, the sun.

---

316. षट्पल तु पिबेदम्भस्त्रिपलं तु पय. पिबेत्। पलमेकं पिबेत्सर्पिस्तप्तकृच्छ्रं विधीयते॥ पराशर IV 8 (B S series) vol II part 1 p 26 It may be noted that the Mit on Yāj. III 317, the Pr, Sāra p 136 read पराशर's verse as 'अपा पिबेत्तु त्रिपल द्विपल तु पय पिबेत्। पलमेक पिबेत्सर्पिस्त्रिरात्रं चोष्णमाचरेत्॥' and that the Mit. explains 'त्रिरात्रमाचरेत्य पूरणे उष्णोदकवाप्यं पिबेदित्यर्थः'। The मद. पा. pp. 735–736 contains both these verses and ascribes both to पराशर According to Yāj I 363–64 a pala is equal to 4 or 5 suvarnas and a suvarna is equal to 80 krsnalas (guñjas) in weight.

317. तत्र जाबालिः। पिण्याकं च यथाचाम तक्रं चोदकसक्तव। त्रिरात्रमुपवासश्च तुलापुरुष उच्यते॥ q. by मा. सार p. 178, परा मा. II. part 2 p. 183.

TOYA-KRCCHRA—This is also called Varuna-krcchra by Yama (q in Pr. Prakāśa, folio 48 a) and by Śankha (q in Pr. Sāra p. 182). Visnu Dh S. (46. 14) states [318] that subsisting on nothing but ground barley mixed with water for one month is called Udakakrcchra. Since Varuna was regarded as the lord of waters even from the times of the Rgveda (e. g. in Rg. VII. 49. 3) and to mark the truth and falsehood among men, this Toya-krcchra was called Vāruna. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 47 b)[319] quotes Jābāla to the effect 'If a sinner remains immersed in water for a whole day and night without taking food and recites mantras (addressed to Varuna) he removes by the jalakrcchra the sins which he may have committed for a year'. According to Yājñavalkya (q in Pr. Sāra p 187) this penance consists in observing a fast for a day and night standing up the whole day and passing the night without sleep in water and reciting the next day the sacred Gāyatrī mantra 1008 times. According to Śankha (q. by Madana-pārijāta p 737) this penance is constituted either by subsisting on lotus stalks grown in water or on saktus boiled in water.

DADHIKRCCHRA—This is spoken of by the Pr Prakāśa quoting from the Visnudharmottarapurāna as a penance in which the sinner subsists on curds alone for a month.[320]

DEVAKRCCHRA—Yama quoted by Par. M. (II. part 2 pp. 191–192) describes this as follows [321]: One should partake

---

318 उदकसक्तुना मासाभ्यवहारेणोदककृच्छ्रः । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 46 14, 'विसान्युदक-सिद्धानि मासमश्नीत संयत. । सक्तून्वा सोदकान्मासं कृच्छ्रो वारुण उच्यते ॥' शङ्ख q by बालम्भट्टी on या III 318, मा सार. pp 186–87.

319. अनश्नञ्जलमध्यस्थस्त्वहोरात्रं जपन्युध. । सवत्सरकृतं पाप जलकृच्छ्रे व्यपोहति ॥ जाबाल q. by मा सार p 187, मा. प्रकाश folio 47 b, where it is said जपश्च वारुण-मन्त्राणाम्, as to योगियाज्ञवल्क्य 'वायुभक्षो दिवा तिष्ठेद्रात्रि नीत्वाप्सु सूर्यदृक्। सहस्राष्टाधिक जप्त्वा गायत्रीं जलसङ्गक ॥', vide द्वितीयेद्धि सूर्ये द्वयष्टोत्तरसहस्रगायत्रीजप कृत्वा पारण कुर्यादिति । मा सार p. 187. This is q. by मा प्रकाश folio 47 b. The first half is या III, 311.

320 विष्णुधर्मोत्तरे । दध्ना क्षीरेण तक्रेण पिण्याकाचामकैस्तथा । शाकैर्मास तु कार्याणि स्वनामानि विचक्षणै ॥ मा प्रकाश folio 48a.

321. यवागूं यावक शाक क्षीरं दधि घृत तथा । त्र्यहं त्र्यह तु प्राश्नीयाद्वायुभक्षस्त्र्यह परम्। मरुद्भिर्वसुभी रुद्रैरादित्यैश्चरितं व्रतम् । व्रतस्यास्य प्रभावेन विरजस्का हि तेऽभवन् ॥ कृच्छ्र देवकृत नाम सर्वकल्मषनाशनम्। यम q. by परा मा II part 2 pp 191–192 and by मा सार pp. 183–184 (which omits the last verse मरुद्भि) लौगाक्षिगृह्य VI 3 reads 'यवागू. . .शाकं पय. सर्पि. कुशोदकम्। त्र्यह ..त्र्यहम्॥'. देवपाल explains 'यवागूरुपासिततुषयव सम्पाद्या देयमाया प्रसिद्धा यावकोपि तद्वत्स तु भक्तमायः कठिन.'

of only rice gruel, barley gruel, vegetables, milk, curds, ghee each for a period of three days in succession and then should observe a complete fast for three days; this is called Devakṛta (performed by the gods) penance and destroys all sins. It was practised by the Maruts, the Vasus, Rudras, and Ādityas. By the power of this penance they became free from rajas (impurity). Thus this penance lasts for 21 days. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 48 b) refers to another variety of it and quotes a long prose passage on it, which is passed over here for want of space.

DHANADAKṚCCHRA—See under Vāyavya-kṛcchra. According to the Viṣnudharmottara [322] (q. by Pr. Prakāśa) this penance consists in subsisting for a month on food just sufficient to fill the extended but hollowed palm, mixed with gold (i. e. in which gold is rubbed or boiled).

NITYOPAVĀSA KRCCHRA—The Pr. Prakāśa (p. 48 a) states that this is constituted by a man eating only twice in the day (in the morning and evening) for six years and not drinking even water between the two meals. [323]

PAÑCAGAVYA—For the various details connected with pañcagavya prepared from cow's urine, dung, milk, curds and ghee, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 773–774. Pañcagavya is to be offered into fire with the mantras 'Irāvati' (Rg. VII. 99.3), 'idam Viṣnur' (Rg I. 22. 17), 'mā nastoke' (Rg. I. 114. 8), 'Śam no devīr' (Rg. X 9. 4) and then the remainder is to be drunk. It is to be drunk with the middle of a sprig of three Palāśa leaves or with a lotus leaf. Manu. XI. 165 (= Agnipurāna 169. 30) prescribes this drinking of pañcagavya as the penance for petty thefts Similarly, Yāj. III. 263 prescribes that one guilty of killing a cow should drink pañcagavya for a month. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 263 quotes Viṣnu to the effect that one who kills a cow should perform one of three penances, viz. drinking three palas of pañcagavya every day for one month or undergoing the penance of Parāka or Cāndrāyaṇa. [324] Though Viṣnu 54. 7 and Atri (verse 300) state that a brāhmaṇa 322 वाजमभृतिमप्येका कनकेन समन्विताम्। भुञ्जानस्य तथा मासं कृच्छ्रं धनददैवतम्॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर q. by मा प्रकाश folio 48 b.

---

323 सायं प्रातश्च भुञ्जानो नरो यो नान्तरा पिबेत्। षड्भिर्वर्षैरिदं प्रोक्तं कृच्छ्रं नित्योपवासितम्॥ मा प्रकाश p 48a.

324 गोघ्नस्य पञ्चगव्येन मासमेकं पलत्रयम्। प्रत्यहं स्यात्पराको वा चान्द्रायणमथापि वा॥ विष्णु q by मिता. on या III. 263 and परा मा II part I p. 243 (which reads मासमेकं निरन्तरम्। प्राजापत्यं पराको वा) drinking surā and a śūdra drinking pañcagavya both went to hell (Mahāraurava, according to Visnu), yet Devala (verse 61) and Parāśara XI 3 and 27 and medieval works like the Pr M. (p 13) and Śūdrakamalākara (p. 42) allowed śūdras to take pañcagavya without Vedic mantras. And women of all varnas, being treated like śūdras for certain purposes, were also allowed optionally to do the same.

PATRAKRCCHRA—Vide Parna-kūrca below.

PARĀKA—Manu XI. 215 (= Baud. Dh S IV. 5.16), Yāj. III. 320 (= Śankha 18 5 = Atri 128), Agnipurāna 171, 10, Visnu Dh. S. 46. 18 and Br. [325] prescribe that this penance is constituted by not taking any food for twelve days, while the performer controls his senses and remains vigilant, and that this penance removes all sins.

PARNAKŪRCA—This is a more severe type of patra-krcchra Yāj III 316 (= Devala 83) and Śankha-Likhita [326] define Parnakrcchra as one where the leaves of palāśa, udumbara, lotus, and bilva are boiled separately on each day in succession and the decoction of each is drunk on each day separately and then water in which kuśas have been dipped is drunk. Thus parnakrcchra is a penance of five days The Mit. on Yāj. III. 316 quotes a verse of Yama to the effect that when a sinner fasts for three days and nights and thereafter he drinks together the decoctions of all the four and kuśa water on the same day then the penance is called parnakūrca. The Par M (II part 2 p 181)[327] regards Parnakūrca as a variety of Parna-krcchra Vasistha, Jābāli and Atri (116–117) make Parna-krcchra a penance of six days by adding the leaves of Aśvattha to the five mentioned above. Visnu Dh S 46 23 mentions another variety of Parnakrcchra for seven days [328]

---

325. जपहोमरत कुर्याद् द्वादशाहमभोजनम्। पराक एष विख्यातः सर्वपापप्रणाशन ॥ बृह q by प्राय वि p 515.

326 शङ्खलिखितौ—पत्रबिल्वपलाशोदुम्बरकुशोदकान्येकैकमभ्यस्तानि पर्णकृच्छ्र । मद पा p 733, दीपकलिका on या III. 317, while अपरार्क p 1234 reads एकैकमभ्यस्तानि पर्णकृच्छ्र. समस्तान्येतानि त्रिरात्रेणोपयुक्तानि च पर्णकृच्छ्र. (0 कूर्च ?) The मद पा p 734 reads पर्णकूर्च

327 तथा वसिष्ठ । पलाशोदुम्बरपलाशबिल्वाश्वत्थकुशानासुदक पीत्वा षड्रात्रेणैव शुध्यति । प्रा प्रक p. 128.

328. कुशपलाशोदुम्बरपद्मशङ्खपुष्पीवटब्रह्मसुवर्चलाना पत्रै क्वथितस्याम्भस प्रत्येक (प्रत्यह ?) पानेन पर्णकृच्छ्र. । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 46 23 बालम्भट्टी on या III 316 remarks on this 'इति विष्णुना सप्ताहसाध्य उक्त.', मद पा p 733 explains 'शङ्खपुष्पी लताविशेषः। ब्रह्मसुवर्चला ब्राह्मीविशेष.' ।

PARṆAKṚCCHRA—Vide Parnakūrca above.

PĀDAKṚCCHRA—According to Yāj. III. 318 (=Devala 85) this is defined as a penance where a sinner takes food one day only once by day, only once by night, then once only (by day or night) but without asking for it from any one (a stranger, a servant or even his own wife) and observes a total fast for one day. Thus this penance lasts for four days. There was difference of view as to the number of mouthfuls to be eaten, Āpastamba (q by Mit. on Yāj. III. 318) saying that the mouthfuls are respectively 22, 26 and 24 when food is taken only once in the evening or morning or without asking for it, while Parāśara states the number of mouthfuls to be 12, 15 or 24 respectively when food is taken only at night or in the morning or without asking for it The Caturvimśatimata (q. by Par. M. II part 2 p. 172) puts them as 12, 15 and 10 respectively

PĀDONAKṚCCHRA—This lasts for nine days [329] only instead of the 12 days of the Prājāpatya and in it one eats by day only for three days, eats food once only for three days without asking for it from any one and observes a complete fast for three days (i. e. three days when food is eaten by night only are omitted here).

PUṢPAKṚCCHRA—According to the Agnipurāna 171. 12 and the Mit. on Yāj III. 316 (quoting Mārkaṇḍeyapurāna) this penance is constituted by drinking for a month the decoction of flowers boiled in water. [330]

PRASṚTA-YĀVAKA or PRASṚTIYĀVAKA— Visnu Dh S chap. 48 and Baud. Dh. S. III. 6 contain elaborate descriptions (which agree with each other in many respects almost verbatim) and so does Hārita (q. by Par. M. II. part 2 pp. 192–194) who has many sūtras and verses in common with Visnu and Baud. Prasrti means the hand with all fingers stretched out, the palm being hollowed. The yavas taken out were as many as could be placed on the palm of the hand thus stretched

---

329 मासं प्रातर्विनार्धं स्यात्पादोन नक्तवर्जितम्। आपस्तम्बस्मृति I. 14, q by मिता on या III. 318, प्राय सार p. 172, परा मा. II part 2 p. 173

330 यथाह मार्कण्डेय। फलैर्मासेन कथितः फलकृच्छ्रो मनीषिभिः। श्रीकृच्छ्र श्रीफलै मोक्ष पद्माक्षैरपरस्तथा। मासेनामलकैरेवं श्रीकृच्छ्रमपरं स्मृतम्। पत्रैर्मत पत्रकृच्छ्र पुष्पैस्तत्कृच्छ्र उच्यते। मूलकृच्छ्र स्मृतो मूलैस्तोयकृच्छ्रो जलेन तु॥ मिता. on या III. 316, मद पा p. 734 We should read कथित for कथितः as मद पा does, which remarks 'शरीरयात्रामात्रप्रयुक्तफलानि मासं भक्षयेत् तत्र सर्वव्रतसाधारणेतिकर्तव्यतापि कर्तव्या। तानि च फलानि कानीत्याकाङ्क्षायामाह श्रीकृच्छ्र.'.

out and hollowed. Some passages from Baud who is probably the oldest of the three authors may be set out here.[331] "Now if a man feels his conscience heavy with bad actions committed by himself, let him boil for himself, when the stars have risen, a handful of barley and prepare gruel with that. Let him not perform (the Vaiśvadeva) offering with (a part of) that nor a Bali[332] offering. Let him consecrate the barley before it has been placed on fire, when it is being boiled and after it has been boiled with the following mantras 'thou art barley, the king of grains, thou art sacred to Varuna and mixed with honey, the sages have declared thee to be an expeller of all sins and a means of purification' Then there are five verses more invoking the barley grains to purify the performer from all sins whether due to deeds, words, or thoughts, to destroy distress and evil fortune, to free him from the food of gaṇas (guilds or multitudes of men), harlots, śūdras, or food offered at śrāddhas by persons in impurity due to birth or death, food of a thief, food at navaśrāddha (i e on 1st, 3rd, 5th, 7th, 9th, 11th days after death) or from dreadful mortal sins or from guilt against children and guilt due to serving in a royal court, from sin of stealing gold, sin of the violation of a vrata or sacrificing for an unworthy person and sin of speaking ill of brāhmanas Then Baud proceeds "while the barley is being boiled he should guard it and recite 'Adoration to Rudra, lord of created beings; pacified

---

331 अथ कर्मभिरात्मकृतैर्गुरुमिवात्मानं मन्येतात्मार्थे प्रसृतयावक श्रपयेदुदितेषु नक्षत्रेषु। न ततोऽग्नौ जुहुयात्। न चात्र बलिकर्म। अक्षत श्रप्यमाणं क्षत चाभिमन्त्रयेत। यवोसि धान्यराजोसि वारुणो मधुसयुत । निर्णोद· सर्वपापाना पवित्रमृषिभि स्मृतम्॥ सर्व पुनथ मे यवा·॥ इति। श्रप्यमाणे रक्षा कुर्यात्। नमो रुद्राय भूताधिपतये यो शान्ता कृणुष्व पाज· प्रसितिं न पृथ्वीमित्येतेनाद्यवाकेन। ये देवा पुर सदोऽग्निनेत्रा रक्षोहण इति पञ्चभि पर्यायै । मानस्तोके ब्रह्मा देवानामिति द्वाभ्याम्। क्षृत च लब्ध्वाग्नीयात्प्रयत पात्रे निधिच्य। ये देवा मनो· जाता मनोयुजः सुरक्षा दक्षपितरस्ते न· पान्तु ते नोऽवन्तु तेभ्यो नमस्तेभ्य स्वाहेति। आत्मनि जुहुयात् त्रिरात्र मेधार्थी षड्रात्र पीत्वा पापकृच्छ्रद्धो भवति। सप्तरात्र पीत्वा भ्रूणहनन गुरुतल्प· गमनं सुवर्णस्तैन्य सुरापानमिति च पुनाति। एकादशरात्र पीत्वा पूर्वपुरुषकृतमपि पाप निर्णुदति। अपि वा गोनिष्क्रातानां यवानामेकविंशतिरात्र पीत्वा गणान्पश्यति गणाधिपति पश्यति विद्या पश्यति विद्याधिपति पश्यतीत्याह भगवान् बौधायन.। बौ ध सू III. 6. The verses eulogising yava (यवोसि) are Baud. III 6. 5–10, Visnu Dh S 48 17–22 and Hārīta (q. in Par M. II. part, 2 p 193) with some variations and omissions. As to the rest Hārīta agrees closely with Baud while Visnu differs a good deal from Baud. as to the mantras. Visnu has a verse referring to food licked by dogs and pigs and food defiled by leavings and the sin of disobeying parents, but omits two verses that occur in Baud about mahāpātakas Visnu 48 6 prescribes Rg IX 96 6 (ब्रह्मा देवाना॰) as the mantra to be recited at the time of guarding the grains that are being cooked

332. For Vaiśvadeva and Bali, vide H. of Dh II pp. 741–747 is the sky'. He should recite the text beginning with 'Krnusva pājah' (Tai. S. I. 2. 14. 1), the five sentences beginning with 'Ye devā' (Tai. S. I. 8. 7 1), the two texts 'mā nastoke' (Rg I. 114 8 and Tai S. III. 4. 11. 2) and 'Brahmā devānām' (Rg. IX. 96.6, Tai. S III. 4 11. 2) "Then having sipped water he should eat a little of the boiled food after pouring it into another vessel. Let him offer it as a sacrifice to the soul reciting 'ye devā' (Tai. S. I. 2. 3. 1)."

Then Baud. prescribes: "one desirous of wisdom must perform this rite for three days and nights A sinner who drinks it during six days becomes pure, he who drinks this during seven days becomes purified from the mahāpātakas, he who drinks during eleven days removes even the sins committed by his ancestors. But he who during 21 days drinks gruel of barley grains which have passed through a cow (i. e. cowdung) sees the Ganas, the lord of the Ganas, the goddess of learning and the lord of learning."

PRĀJĀPATYA—Vide under Krcchra above where it is shown that the word Krcchra without any qualifying epithet means Prājāpatya. Manu XI. 211, Yāj III. 319, Visnu Dh. S. 46 10, Atri 119–120, Śankha 18 3, Baud Dh. S. IV 5 6 mention the word Prājāpatya and define it. This Prājāpatya has several varieties. The first is that described by Manu XI. 211 and Vas. 21. 20 viz. four periods of three days each following one another in which there is respectively eating once only by day, once only by night, eating once only without asking for it and complete fast. The second is that described by Vas. 23. 43, where on the first day food is taken only by day, on the 2nd only at night, on the 3rd day food got without asking for it is taken and on the 4th a complete fast is observed and where the same process is repeated for two periods of four days each The first [333] is called Prājāpatya by 'sthānavivrddhi' and the 2nd is called 'Dandakalita'. Further, both these are said to be made 'ānulomyena' (by the proper and straightforward order). If the sequence described above is reversed i. e if for three days there is first a total fast, then subsisting for 3 days on food got without asking for it, then for three days eating at night only and for three days eating by day only, it is Prājāpatya by 'prātilomya'. Further it may be performed with recitation of Vedic texts or without (for women and śūdras) [334]

333. अयमेव पादकृच्छ्रः यथाकथंचिद्दण्डकलितवदाचर्त्या स्वस्थानविवृद्ध्या वा, तत्राप्यानुलोम्येन प्रातिलोम्येन वा तथा वक्ष्यमाणजप्यादियुक्तं तद्रहितं वा त्रिरभ्यस्तं. प्राजापत्योऽभिधीयते। मिता on या III 319 The मद् पा p 710 explains 'तत्रार्थं पक्षमाह मनु —ऽथ प्रात' ॥ अत्रैकभक्तादीना स्वस्थान एवाभिवृद्धत्वात् स्वस्थानवृद्धि ।'

PHALAKṚCCHRA— Subsisting on fruits alone for a month. Vide the passage from Mārkandeya quoted above (n 330). Śrīkṛcchra mentioned below will be also phalakṛcchra The fruits of Bilva and of Āmalaka and lotus seeds were the only fruits to be employed and they were to be eaten only for bare subsistence.

BĀLAKṚCCHRA—See Śiśukṛcchra

BṚHAD-YĀVAKA—The Pr. Pr. (folio 49 a) quoting Brahmapurāna describes it as follows:—One should feed cows on plenty of yavas anointed with clarified butter Then he should mix water with the dung of those cows and take out the grains of barley which are voided by them after eating them He should then dry them in the sun, should grind them on a clean stone and cook them mixed with sesame and anointed with ghee in cow's urine on a fire brought on an altar He should place the boiled holy grains in a vessel of gold or in a cup made of palāśa leaves and present them to the gods and manes and he may eat them. He should carry this on for twelve, twenty-four or thirty-six years for the removal of all sins. This is prescribed as a penance for killing one's guru, brother, friend or a near relative &c.

BRAHMAKŪRCA—The Mit [335] on Yājñavalkya III 314 states that when a man fasts on one day and on the next day mixes up the ingredients of pañcagavya with Vedic mantras and drinks it with mantras it is called Brahmakūrca. According to Śankha cow's urine is taken with the Gāyatrī (Ṛg. III. 62 10), cowdung with the mantra 'Gandhadvārām' (Tai. Ā. X. 1), milk with 'ā pyāyasva' (Ṛg I 91.16), curds with 'dadhikrāvno' (Ṛg IV. 39. 6), ghee with 'Tejosi' (Vāj. S. 22. 1) and Kuśa water with 'devasya tvā' (Vāj S. 22 1, Ait. Br. 37. 3 &c.). Jābāla [336]

---

334 तस्माच्छ्रद्धं समासाद्य सदा धर्मपथे स्थितम् । प्रायश्चित्तं प्रदातव्यं जपहोमविधर्जितम् ॥ अङ्गिरस् q by the मिता on या III. 319 and महार्णव folio 182 a

335. यदा पुन पूर्वेद्युरुपोष्यापरेद्यु समन्त्रकं सयुज्य समन्त्रकमेव पञ्चगव्यं पीयते तदा ब्रह्मकूर्चं इत्याख्यायते । मिता on या III 314. Vide लघुशातातप 156–166 for ब्रह्मकूर्च, which is the penance for all sins where no specific penance is prescribed

336. अहोरात्रोषितो भूत्वा पौर्णमास्या विशेषत । पञ्चगव्यं पिबेत् प्रातर्ब्रह्मकूर्चविधिः स्मृत ॥ जाबाल q. by मा वि p. 515, मा. प्रकाश folio 50a and प्राय म p 22

prescribes that when a man observes a fast for the whole day and night on a day and particularly on a Full Moon day and then drinks pañcagavya the next morning this is called the rite of Brahmakūrca. Parāśara (XI. 27-28) appears to hold that Pañcagavya and Brahmakūrca are synonyms. The Madanapārijāta p. 729 and Pr. Sāra. p. 189 state that the Sāntapana described by Yāj. (III. 314) is styled Brahmakūrca.[337]

BRAHMAKRCCHRA— Vide Hemādri's work on Prāyaścitta p. 964 quoting Devala and Mārkandeya. It is a penance for 12 days on each of which one has to drink in the noon Pañcagavya in a temple or cowpen after offering it with mantras in fire; one has to contemplate on Visnu till the evening and should sleep near an idol and give up tāmbūla and unguents.

MAHĀTAPTAKRCCHRA—Vide Taptakrcchra.

MAHĀSĀNTAPANA—Sāntapana, according to Yāj. III. 314, Manu XI 212 (=Baud. Dh. S.IV. 5.11=Śankha 18.8=Bṛhad-Yama I. 13), Atri 117-118, Visnu Dh. S. 46.20, lasts for two days; on the first the sinner drinks together cow's urine, dung, milk, curds, ghee and kuśa water and on the second day he fasts altogether. Mahāsāntapana penance consists, according to Laugākṣigṛhya VII. 3, Yāj. III. 315 (=Devala 82=Atri. 118-119), in drinking separately for six days in succession the six ingredients mentioned above and fasting on the next day (i e it lasts for 7 days) According to Śankha 18.9, Baud Dh. S.IV.5.17 and Jābāla[338] the Mahāsāntapana lasts for 21 days, each of the six ingredients referred to above being taken for three days and a fast being observed for three days. Yama speaks [339] of a mahāsāntapana for 15 days viz when each of cow's urine, dung, milk, curds and ghee is taken as subsistence for three days consecutively.

---

337. ततश्च योगीश्वराभिहित सान्तपनमेव ब्रह्मकूर्च इत्युच्यते । स एव ब्रह्मकूर्चोपवास इति । मा सार p. 189, vide also मद पा. p 729. The reference is to the verse 'उत्तमाधिगत पापं देहे तिष्ठति मानवे । ब्रह्मकूर्चोपवासस्तु दहत्यग्निरिवेन्धनम् ।' cited as पराशर's in मा सार p 189, while पराशर (XI. 37-38 reads) यत्र ..देहिनाम् । ब्रह्मकूर्चो दहेत्सर्वं मदीयाग्निरिवेन्धनम् ॥

338. षण्णामेकैकमेतेषा त्रिरात्रमुपयोजयेत् । ऽयहं चोपवसेदन्त्यं महासान्तपनं विदुः ॥ जाबाल q. by अपरार्क p. 1234, परा मा. II. part 1 p 31.

339 ऽयहं पिबेत्तु गोमूत्रं ऽयहं चै गोमयं पिबेत् । ऽयहं दधि ऽयहं क्षीरं ऽयहं सर्पिस्ततः शुचि. ॥ महासान्तपनमेतत्सर्वपापप्रणाशनम् । यम q. by मिता. on या. III. 315, मा सार p 191, परा मा. II part 1 p. 31.

MAHEŚVARA KRCCHRA— Vide Hemādri (on Prāyaścitta) p. 961, which sets out a passage from Devala, that states that Brahmā prescribed it for Maheśvara on the burning of Madana In this penance in the after-noon one should carry a broken jar (kapāla) and beg at three houses of learned brāhmanas for vegetables, offer them to God and eat them and should sleep in the evening near an idol After getting up the next day he should donate a cow and drink pañcagavya

MŪLAKRCCHRA—Visnu Dh. S 46 15 [340] states that it is so called when one subsists on lotus stalks alone and the Mit. on Yāj III. 316 quotes Mārkandeya to the effect that one must subsist on mūlas (edible roots) alone

MAITRAKRCCHRA—The Pr. Prakāsa (folio [341] 53 a) mentions it Its peculiarity is that in the Sāntapana on the third day milk of a kapilā (tawny) cow is to be partaken of The same work notes that the Kalpataru states that this is a sāntapana in which on the first day all the six ingredients (cow's urine &c) are taken followed by two days of fasting

YAJÑAKRCCHRA—This is a penance for one day laid down by Angiras (q by Pr. Sāra p. 183, Smrti-muktāphala p 939) as follows: The sinner should bathe thrice, should be self-controlled and silent: and after the morning bath he should recite the sacred Gāyatrī 1008 times together with om and the Vyāhrtis at the beginning When reciting he should be in the Vīrāsana [342] posture He should drink cow's milk only once either sitting down or standing or curds of cow's milk (if he cannot secure cow's milk) or butter-milk or barley gruel mixed with cow's urine (in the absence of milk, curds or butter milk). This one-day penance called Yajña-krcchra removes all sins

---

340 विसाम्यवहारेण मूलकृच्छ्र । विष्णुध सू 46 15

341 द्वितीयसान्तपने तृतीयदिने कपिलाक्षीरपाननधिकम् । एष नैत्रकृच्छ्रेपीति प्राय-श्चित्तविवेके । कल्पतरौ तु गोमूत्रादिकनेकस्मिन्नहनि द्वादशवासादिति दिनत्रयसाध्यं सान्तपन-मिति यज्ञस्वामी । मा प्रकाश folio 53a, कपिलायास्तु दुग्धाया धारोष्णं तु पयः पिबेत् । एष मैत्रकृत कृच्छ्र सर्वपापप्रणाशक । पन in प्राय. वि p 513; the words द्वितीयसान्तपने · कृच्छ्रोपीति (in मा प्रकाश) are taken from प्राय. वि p 513

342 वीरासनं निराश्रयमुपवेशनम् । तथा विष्णुधर्मोत्तरे । उत्थितस्तु दिवा तिष्ठेदुपविष्ट-स्तथा निशि । एतद्वीरासनं नाम महापातकनाशनम् ॥ प्राय. वि pp. 197–198 The word occurs in several smrtis such as Saṅkha 18.2, Laghu-Viṣṇu III 9. The Agni-purāna (171 3–4) defines it in the same way

YATICĀNDRĀYAṆA—Manu XI 218 (= Baud Dh. S. IV. 5.20), Agnipurāṇa 171. 4, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 47. 7 define [343] it as a penance where the sinner eats only eight mouthfuls of sacrificial food only once in the noon for a month and exercises control over himself.

YATIŚĀNTAPAṆA—When the ingredients [344] of Pañcagavya are mixed together (with kuśa water) and drunk for three consecutive days it is Yati-śāntapaṇa according to the Mit. on Yāj. III. 314. The Pr Prakaraṇa p. 128 adds that the three days must be followed by a fast for one day.

YĀMYA.—According to Viṣṇudharmottara-purāṇa quoted by Pr. Prakāśa (folio 48 b) this consists in subsisting for a month on saktu grains found in cowdung.

YĀVAKA—Śaṅkha [345] (18. 10–11) states that partaking of boiled yavas obtained from cowdung for a month is the Yāvaka penance for destroying all sins. The Par. M. and Pr. Prakāśa quote a prose passage from Devala, [346] according to which the penance may last for seven days, a fortnight or a month and which states that the procedure of Prājāpatya will apply to this penance.

VAJRA—Atri 164 defines [347] it as a penance, where barley grains fried in clarified butter and mixed with cow's urine are partaken of.

---

343 अष्टौ ग्रासान् प्रतिदिवसं माससमग्रीयात् स यतिचान्द्रायण. । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 47. 7, q as बृहद्विष्णु by प्रा. प्रकरण p 131. As to हविष्य food, vide कात्यायन 'हविष्येषु यवा मुख्यास्तदनु व्रीहयः स्मृताः । अभावे व्रीहियवयोर्दध्नापि पयसापि वा । तदभावे यवान्वा वा जुहुयादुदकेन वा । q. by स्मृतिच I p 163 गोभिलस्मृति I. 131 has हविष्येषु.. स्मृता. । and then adds 'माषकोद्रवगोरादि सर्वालाभे विवर्जयेत् । and गोभिल III. 114 has the verse अभावे व्रीहि०. On आश्व गृ. I 9 6 (हौम्यं च मांसवर्जम्) हरदत्त quotes 'पयो दधि यवागूश्च सर्पिरोदनतण्डुलाः । सोमो मासं तथा तैलमापश्चैव दशैव तु ।'. Vide कृत्यरत्नाकर p. 400 and नित्याचारपद्धति (p 320) for this last verse and further details about हविष्यान्न.

344. यदा श्वेतदेव मिश्रितं पञ्चगव्यं त्रिरात्रमभ्यस्यते तदा यतिसान्तपनसज्ञा लभते । एतदेव व्यहाभ्यस्तं यतिसान्तपनं स्मृतम्-इति शङ्खस्मरणात् । मिता. on या. III. 314.

345 गोपुरीषाशनो भूत्वा मासं नित्यं समाहित. । व्रतं तु यावकं कुर्यात् सर्वपापापनुत्तये॥ शङ्ख. 18.10–11 q. by परा० मा. II. part 2 p 192 (reads०शीयवाभ्यासो) and प्राय. सार p 199, मद पा. p 746 (reads० रीषाद्यवाशं च)

346 देवलोऽपि । यवानामप्तु साधितानां सप्तरात्रं पक्षं मासं वा प्राशन यावकः । एतेन यावकपायसौदकानि व्याख्यातानि । q by परा. मा III. part 2 p 192 and प्रा. प्रकाश folio 49 a

347. गोमूत्रेण तु संयुक्त यावकं घृतपाचितम्। एतद्वज्रमिति प्रोक्तं भगवानत्रिरब्रवीत्॥ आत्रि 164.

VĀYAVYA-KṚCCHRA—According to the Agnipurāna[348] and Viṣnudharmottara this penance consists in subsisting for a month every day on food that will just fill the extended palm.

VṚDDHAKṚCCHRA—VṚDDHI-KṚCCHRA—This is a penance for eight days, according to Śankha-Likhita[349] and Yama, in which one takes food only by day for two days, only by night for two days, without asking for food for two days and fasts for two days VYĀSAKṚCCHRA—This is the same as Maitra-kṛcchra,[350] for which see above p 148.

ŚIŚUKṚCCHRA—also called Bālakṛcchra by Śankha-Likhita and Pādakṛcchra by Devala and Prāyaścittamuktāvalī (folio 10 a) and is the same as Laghu-kṛcchra[351] It lasts for four days, eating once only in the day, eating once only by night, eating food got without asking for it only once on one day and fast on one day. Vide Vas 23.43 (q by Haradatta on Gaut. 26.5), Baud Dh. S II 1. 92. Yāj. III. 318

ŚIŚU-CĀNDRĀYANA—Manu XI. 219, Baud Dh. S IV., 5 19, Agnipurāna 171.5 state that when a brāhmana eats (for a month) four mouthfuls in the morning and four after sun-set, that is Śiśu-cāndrāyana (cāndrāyana for boys, old men &c).

ŚĪTAKṚCCHRA—This is the reverse of Taptakṛcchra, as here all the articles are to be taken when they are cold[351a] and not hot (as in Tapta-kṛcchra). Vide Viṣnu Dh S 46 12, Agni-purāna 171 7 and Mit on Yāj. III. 317 According to Viṣnu quoted by Pr Sāra (p. 185) and Madana-pārijāta (p. 736) this is a penance for 10 days (and not for twelve days as the Mit. states), viz cold water, cold milk and cold ghee are drunk three days each and there is a total fast for one day

---

348 मास वायव्यकृच्छ्रं स्यात्पाणिपूरान्नभोजनात् । अग्निपु. 171. 14, वायव्य कृच्छ्रमुक्तं तु पाणिपूरान्नभोजनम् । मासेनैकेन धर्मज्ञ सर्वकल्मषनाशनम् ॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर q by मा प्रकाश folio 48 a 349 तत्र शङ्खलिखितौ । प्रात सायमयाचितमुपवासस्त्रयह त्र्यहमिति प्राजापत्यं द्वयह द्वयहमिति वृद्धकृच्छ्र., एकैकमिति बालकृच्छ्र. । प्राय. वि. p. 511. The प्राय सार p 177 quotes a verse of यम to the same effect.

350 The मा प्रकाश (folio 56b) cites a verse of अङ्गिरस् which is कापिलाया ..एष व्यासकृत· कृच्छ्रः श्वपाकमपि शोधयेत् ॥

351. लघुकृच्छ्रस्यैव शिशुकृच्छ्र इति नामान्तरम् । प्राय म p. 21.

351a. यदा तु शीतं क्षीरादि पीयते तदा शीतकृच्छ्र । त्र्यह शीत पिबेत्तोय त्र्यह शीत पय पिबेत् । त्र्यहं शीतं घृतं पीत्वा वायुभक्ष परं त्र्यहम् ॥ इति यमस्मरणात् । मिता. on या III. 317.

ŚRĪKRCCHRA—According to Visnu Dh. S. 46.16, Agnipurāna [352] 171.12 and Mit. on Yāj III. 316 (quoting Mārkandeya) this is constituted by subsisting on Bilva fruit or lotus seeds or āmalaka fruit for a month. The Madanapārijāta (p. 737) quotes a verse of Śankha to the same effect.

SANTAPANA—Vide Mahāsāntapana and Atisāntapana above It is of five kinds, viz the first for two days, the 2nd for seven days, the third for twelve (Atisāntapana), the 4th for 15 days and the fifth for 21 days.

SURACĀNDRĀYAṆA—The Agnipurāna defines it as one where somehow or other (and not in a rising or falling scale) a man partakes of 240 morsels of food in a month. Yāj. III. 324 speaks of it as a variety of Cāndrāyana. Visnu. Dh S. (47 9) calls it 'sāmānyacāndrāyana' [353]

SUVARṆA-KRCCHRA—Vide Hemādri on Prāyaścitta pp 969–972 quoting Devala and Mārkandeyapurāna, in which a varāha or a half of it or quarter of it had to be donated. A Varāha was equal to nine rūpakas and a rūpaka was one māsa of five guñjas (of silver it seems). For killing a brāhmana secretly or for the guilt of incest one had to perform ten thousand or 40 thousand suvarna-krcchras and a lesser number for various other lapses.

SOMĀYANA—According to the Madanapārijāta pp. 744–746 (quoting Hārītadharmasūtra and Mārkandeya) and Pr Prakāśa (folio 60b) the penance lasts for thirty days divided into five periods of 7, 7, 7, 6, 3 days, in which the milk of all the four udders of a cow, of three udders, of two udders and of one udder is respectively drunk and for the last three days there is a complete fast. There is another variety which lasts for 24 days from the 4th tithi of the dark half of a month to the 12th of the bright half of the next fort-night, the 24 days are divided into eight periods of three days each; in the first four 352 बिल्वाभ्यवहारेण श्रीफलकृच्छ्रः पद्माक्षैर्वा । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 46.16; फलैर्मासं फलं कृच्छ्र बिल्वै. श्रीकृच्छ्र ईरित । पद्माक्षैः स्यादामलकै. पुष्पकृच्छ्रं तु पुष्पकै. । अग्निपु 171 12 Vide note 330 above for मार्कण्डेय.

---

353. यथा कथंचित्पिण्डानां चत्वारिंशच्छतद्वयम्। मासेन भक्षयेदेतत्सुरचान्द्रायणं चरेत्॥ अग्निपु 171 5–6 या III 324 reads the 2nd half as मासेनैवोपभुञ्जीत चान्द्रायणमथापरम्॥ The Mit explains यथाकथंचित् as 'प्रतिदिनं मध्याह्नेऽष्टौ ग्रासान्, अथवा नक्तादिनयोश्चतुरश्चतुरो वा, अथवैकस्मिंश्चतुरोऽपरस्मिन्द्वादश वा तथैकरात्रमुपोष्यापरस्मिन्पोडश वेत्यादिप्रकाराणामन्यतमेन शक्त्याद्यपेक्षया भुञ्जीत' यथाकथंचित्यदूनौना त्रिंशतीं मासेनाश्नीयात्स सामान्यचान्द्रायण.। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 47.9

periods of three days each the milk of a cow's four udders, three udders, two udders and one udder is respectively drunk and then in the next four periods of three days each the milk of one udder, two, three and four udders is respectively drunk Vide also Prāyaścittendu-śekhara p 12

SAUMYAKRCCRA—According to Yāj III 321 this penance lasts for six days, in the first five of which one subsists in succession upon oilcake alone, foamy scum of boiled rice alone, butter-milk alone, water alone and saktus (barley) alone and on the last day a total fast is observed The Mit, Madanapārijāta p 717, Pr Sāra p 178 and other digests state that one has to partake of the five ingredients in quantities just sufficient to keep body and soul together. Jābāla (quoted by the Mit., Par M. II part 2 p 183 and others) makes it a penance of four days' duration, in the first three of which one partakes successively of oilcake, saktus and butter-milk and observes a fast on the 4th day. Atri (128–129) also mentions it. The Pr. Prakāśa (quoting Brahmapurāna) speaks[354] of another variety of six days' duration, on the first of which there is a complete fast and on the last of which the sinner subsists on saktus alone and in the intervening four days he subsists on the thick gruel of barley cooked in cow's urine.

---

354 प्रकारान्तरेण षडह सौम्यकृच्छ्र उक्तो ब्रह्मपुराणे। प्रथमेऽहनि नाइनीयात्सौम्य-कृच्छ्रेपि सर्वदा। गोमूत्रयावकाहार षष्ठे सक्तूंश्च तत्समान्॥ इति। प्र. प्रकाश folio 46b

CHAPTER VI

CONSEQUENCES OF NOT UNDERGOING PENANCES

If a sinner did not undergo a prāyaścitta, the Smṛtis, Purāṇas, medieval digests declared that he had to suffer dire and far-reaching consequences Yāj. III. 221 declares that men addicted to sins, who feel no repentance and who (therefore) do not undergo the proper penances, fall into painful and horrible hells Manu XII. 54 ff and Yāj. III. 206 ff provide that those guilty of grave (and other) sins after having passed numbers of years in hells and suffered the tortures of horrible hells are born again in this world because of (the remnants of their) evil actions in different forms such as lower animals, insects, trees and shrubs &c Manu XI. 53 ordains that one should always perform penance in order to free oneself from sins, since those who have not destroyed their sins (by means of prāyaścittas) are born again endowed with disgraceful marks (such as having bad nails, black teeth &c.). Manu XI. 48 also emphasizes that wicked men suffer mal-formations owing to their wicked deeds committed in this very life or in a former life. The Viṣṇupurāṇa[355] echoes the words of Yāj. III. 221. The Viṣnudharmottara declares[356] that those (sinners) who do not undergo penances nor are punished by the king fall into hell and are born also as lower animals and even after attaining human bodies they become marked (with bodily defects). Viṣnu Dh. S. (44. 1–10) prescribes[357] that evil-doers, having experienced the horrors of hell pass into animal bodies and that those guilty of atipātakas, mahāpātakas, anupātakas, upapātakas, jāti-

355. पापकृत्याति नरक प्रायश्चित्तपराङ्मुख । विष्णुपुराण IV. 5 21. q by परा मा II. part 2 p 209

356. प्रायश्चित्तविहीना ये राजभिश्चाप्यवासिता' । नरकं प्रतिपद्यन्ते तिर्यग्योनिं तथैव च ॥ मानुष्यमपि चासाद्य भवन्तीह तथाङ्किता. । विष्णुधर्मोत्तर II. 73. 4–5 q. by परा मा. II. part 2 p. 210 and प्राय वि. p. 120 (both of which read अदण्डिताः for अवासिताः of the printed ed.).

357. अथ पापात्मना नरकेष्वनुभूतदु खाना तिर्यग्योनयो भवन्ति । अतिपातकिनां पर्यायेण सर्वा· स्थावरयोनयः । महापातकिना च कृमियोनयः । अनुपातकिनां पक्षियोनयः । उपपातकिना जलजयोनयः । कृतजातिभ्रंशकराणा जलचरयोनय. । कृतसङ्करीकरणकर्मणां सृगयोनय. । कृतापात्रीकरणकर्मणां पशुयोनयः । कृतमलिनीकरणकर्मणा मनुष्येष्वस्पृश्ययोनय. । प्रकीर्णेषु प्रकीर्णा हिंसा. क्रव्यादा भवन्ति । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 44. 1–10.

bhramśa-kara actions, sankarikarana, apatrikarana, malinikarana and miscellaneous sins, respectively enter the bodies of all plants, of worms (or insects), of birds, of aquatic animals, of animals roving in waters, of deer, of cattle, of untouchables among men, of miscellaneous and cruel carnivorous animals (like tigers). Visnu Dh. S. 45.1 provides[358] that sinners, after having undergone the horrors of hells and after having passed through the bodies of lower animals, are born as human beings with certain marks (indicative of their sins) So the teaching of these and other authorities comes to this that sins when not expiated by penances or by State punishment, lead to hell, that then, owing to some remnants of the evil deeds, to birth as lower animals and then as decrepit or diseased human beings.

It is now necessary at this stage to enter upon a historical though brief account of the idea of Hell and of its opposite Heaven[359] There are in the Rgveda hardly any clear or express references to Hell In Rg II. 29.6 the sage prays to the Visve-Devas 'save me from the pit, from falling down into it' (trādhvam kartād-avapado yajatrāh). In Rg IV 5 5 it is said[360] that those men who are bereft of rta and satya, being sinful, create a deep place for themselves. In Rg. VII. 104.3 the poet calls upon Indra and Soma to strike down[361] into bottomless darkness evil-doers, and in VII. 104.11 the poet prays that whatever enemy desires to harm the poet by day or night may be deprived of his body and progeny and may be hurled below the three earths Indra is implored in Rg X. 152.4 by the sage to send down into darkness whoever attacks him and his people. In Rg. IX. 73 8 Soma is said to throw down in a pit those who do not observe Soma's ordinances and who are disliked by him. From these passages what emerges is that the sages of the Rgveda had some faint glimmerings of (or belief in) the idea of a dark 358 अथ नरकाभिभूतेषु खानाः तिर्यक्कुलमुत्तीर्णानां मनुष्येषु लक्षणानि भवन्ति। विष्णु धर्मसूत्र 45 1.

359 Vide for 'Heaven' and 'Hell' in Vedic Literature 'Vedic Mythology' by Prof A. A Macdonell, pp 167–170, 'The religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanisads' by Prof. Keith pp 405–410, Journal of American Oriental Society, Vol. 13 pp cm ff, Vol. 61 pp 76–80, Vol 62 pp 150–156, 360. पापास सन्तो अनृता असत्या इदं पदमजनता गभीरम्॥ ऋ. IV 5 5.

361 इन्द्रासोमा दुष्कृतो वज्र अन्तरनारम्भणे तमसि म विध्यतम्। ऋ VII 104, 3; यो नो अरातिं समिधान आनळ् ऋ VII. 104. 11. यो अस्मां अभिदासत्यधरं गमया तमः। ऋ X. 152 4. विद्वान्त्स विश्वा भुवनाभिपश्यत्यवान्मघान् विध्यति कर्ते अव्रतान्। ऋ IX 73.8.

deep pit below the earth to which wicked persons were relegated by the gods But there is no mention in the Rgveda of the tortures of Hell. It is in the Atharvaveda that we find the clearest references to Hell (Naraka). Sorcerers and demons dwell in a house below (the earth), according to A. V. II. 14. 3. Atharvaveda V. 30 11 asks a man to come out from death, from the deep and black darkness. In Atharvaveda [362] V. 19. 3 it is asserted that those who spat in the face of a brāhmana or who imposed a levy of money on him remain biting hair in the midst of a river of blood Atharvaveda XII. 4. 36 mentions 'Nāraka-loka'. In the Vāj. S. XXX. 5 the Vīrahan [363] (i. e. one who gives up or extinguishes the consecrated Vedic fires) is relegated to nāraka (nārakāya vīrahanam). A vīrahan may also mean 'one who kills a valiant man' but that does not seem to be a proper sense in this passage of the Vāj S. In the Śat. Br. XI. 6. 1 4 we find a reference to torments of Hell, viz. men cutting up the limbs of others one by one for crimes committed The Tai. Ā I. 19 speaks of four narakas called Visarpin, Avisarpin, Visādin and Avisādin in the south-east, south-west, north west and north-east. From the Kathopanisad it appears that at that time there was a belief that those foolish men who do not know the Reality and who only believe in the existence of the mundane world alone have to be born again and again and fall into the hands of Yama [364] (II. 5–6) The same Upanisad (V. 7) states that after the death (of the body) some enter the womb in accordance with their actions and knowledge to have an embodied existence, while others go into fixed matter (the form of trees and the like). But that Upanisad says nothing about the torments of Hell. They were therefore probably not believed to exist in those days, at least, to the same degree as in the days of the Epics and Purānas. The very words at the beginning of the Katha Up. (I. 21 'devair-atrāpi vicikitsitam') indicate that there were even then various views about the fate of the departed The Kausitaki Br (XI. 3) propounds the remarkable proposition that

---

362 ये ब्राह्मण प्रत्यष्ठीवन्ये चास्मिन् क्षुल्कमीषिरे। अन्तस्ते मध्ये कुल्याया' केशान् खादन्त आसते॥ अथर्व. V 19. 3

363 अथातुर्नारक लोक निरुन्धानस्य याचिताम्। अथर्ववेद XII 4 36, वीरहा वा एष देवाना योऽग्निमुद्वासयते। तै स II. 2 5 5

364. न साम्पराय प्रतिभाति बालं प्रमाद्यन्तं वित्तमोहेन मूढम्। अयं लोको नास्ति पर इति मानी पुन. पुनर्वशमापद्यते मे॥ कठोप० II, 6, vide n. 94 above for कठोप० V. 7.

just as men in this world eat the (flesh of) beasts, so in the next world the beasts eat men.[365]

As regards the opposite idea of svarga (Heaven) the matter is much clearer In certain Ṛk verses there are said to be three heavens (e g Ṛg I 35 6, VIII. 5 8, VIII. 41 9, IX. 113. 9) The generous donor or worshipper is said to occupy heaven and to mix among gods; and gods like Mitra and Varuna are implored to give the worshipper immortality[366] (Ṛg I. 125, 5, V. 63. 2, X 107 2) Life in heaven is full of joys and delights and the denizen of heaven has all his desires fulfilled (Ṛg. IX. 113 10-11).[367] In Ṛg IX. 113 8 the poet prays 'make me immortal (in heaven) where dwells king Vaivasvata, where the sun is confined (i e. where it never sets) and where the divine waters flow' A person who neither offers sacrifices to gods, nor worships, and observes ordinances other than those of Indra is thrown down from Heaven[368]. A sage exultingly addresses Soma 'we have drunk soma, we have become immortal, we have reached Light (Heaven) and we have known the gods; what will an enemy or harmful person do to us who have been mortals so far?'[369] The pious dead become united in Heaven with their Iṣṭāpūrta (merit due to sacrifices and charitable acts) and with their fore-fathers and become endowed with a refulgent body (Ṛg X 14 8). Those who practise tapas or those who perform sacrifices in which the fees run to thousands (of cows) reach Heaven (Ṛg X. 154. 1-3)[370], and Soma, ghee and honey flow for them there. Heaven is said to be the abode of Yama and there resounds the sound of flutes and of songs[371] The Atharvaveda, being more popular in

365. तद्यथा ह वा अस्मिँल्लोके मनुष्या पशूनश्नन्ति यथैभिर्भुञ्जत एवमेवामुष्मिँल्लोके पशवो मनुष्यानश्नन्त्येषमेभिर्भुञ्जते । कौषी ब्रा XI 3

366. नाकस्य पृष्टे अधि तिष्ठति श्रितो यः पृणाति स ह देवेषु गच्छति। ऋ I 125 5, उतो अस्मानमृतत्वे दधातन। ऋ V 55. 4, वृष्टिं वा राधो अमृतत्वमीमहे। ऋ V 63 2, उच्चा दिवि दक्षिणावन्तो अस्थुर्ये अश्वदा सह ते सूर्येण। ऋ X. 107 2.

367. यत्रानन्दाश्च मोदाश्च मुदः प्रमुद आसते। कामस्य यत्रा आप्तास्तत्र मामृतं कृधीन्द्रायेन्दो परिस्रव । ऋ. IX. 113 11

368, अन्यव्रतममानुषमयज्वानमदेवयुम्। अव स्व सखा दुधुवीत पर्वत सुध्नाय दस्यु पर्वत॥ ऋ. VIII. 70 11.

369. अपाम सोमममृता अभूमागन्म ज्योतिरविदाम देवान्। किं नूनमस्मान्कृणवदराति. किमु धूर्तिरमृत मर्त्यस्य ॥ ऋ VIII. 48 3.

370. ये युध्यन्ते प्रधनेषु शूरासो ये तनूत्यजः । ये वा सहस्रदक्षिणास्ताँश्चिदेवापि गच्छतात्॥ ऋ X. 154 3

371. इदं यमस्य सादनं देवमानं यदुच्यते । इदमस्य धम्यते नाळीरयं गीर्भिः परिष्कृतः ॥ ऋ. X. 135. 7.

character, contains much more information about Heaven. In Atharvaveda III. 29.3 it is said that a donor goes to Heaven where a weak man has not to render to the strong any contribution [372] In Atharvaveda IV. 34.2, 5-6 it is stated that in the heavenly world there are bevies of women (for the denizens), that there the dwellers get many edible plants and flowers and that there are ponds of ghee, streams of milk and honey, wine flows like water and lotus lakes surround the denizens. In Heaven the meritorious enjoy delight, their bodies being free from disease[373]. Atharvaveda VI. 120.3 and other verses express a yearning to meet one's parents, wife and sons (vide Atharva XII. 3.17).[374] The Tai. S. is full of references to Heaven and so no quotation is cited here except one where it is said that he who offers the Adābhya cup in Jyotistoma goes to heaven while still living in this world.[375] The Tai. Br. appears to hold that those who offer sacrifices become shining stars in the firmament (I. 5. 2. 5-6)[375a] The Śat. Br. (XI 1. 8. 6) states 'that sacrificer who offers a sacrifice as this redemption is born in the next world (Heaven) with his body entire'.[376] Survival of the soul after death is emphatically asserted in the Tai. Br. III. 10. 11. These passages are enough to establish that the state of the pious after death and of heroes killed in battle was one of happiness in heaven, that there the food and material things (such as honey, ghee) that a person required in this world were also available in greater perfection and abundance The remark of Macdonell 'Heaven is a glorified world of material joys as pictured by the imagination not of warriors but of priests' (Vedic Mythology p. 168) is not (in view of Rg. X. 154.3) quite accurate or justified There is nothing to show

---

372. स नाकमभ्यारोहति यत्र शुल्को न क्रियते अबलेन बलीयसे ॥ अथर्व III 29. 3.

373 नैषा शिश्नं प्र दहति जातवेदा स्वर्गे लोके बहु स्त्रैणमेषाम्॥ घृतह्रदा मधुकूलाः सुरोदकाः क्षीरेण पूर्णा उदकेन दध्ना। एतास्त्वा धारा उप यन्तु सर्वा स्वर्गे लोके मधुमत्पिन्वमाना। उप त्वा तिष्ठन्तु पुष्करिणीः समन्ता.॥ अथर्व IV. 34.2 and 6

374 यत्रा सुहार्दः सुकृतो मदन्ति विहाय रोगं तन्वः स्वायाः। अश्लोणा अङ्गैरहृता. स्वर्गे तत्र पश्येम पितरौ च पुत्रान्॥ अथर्व VI. 120 3. स्वर्गे लोकमभि नो नयासि सं जायया सह पुत्रैः स्याम॥ अथर्व XII 3 17.

375 किं तद्यज्ञे यजमान. कुरुते येन जीवन्सुवर्गं लोकमेतीति जीवग्रहो वा एष यददाग्नीऽ नभिपुनरस्य गृह्णाति जीवन्नेवैनं सुवर्गं लोक गमयति॥ तै सं VI. 6 9 2.

375 a 'यो वा इह यजते असुं स लोकं नक्षते ... देवगृहा वै नक्षत्राणि' तै. ब्रा. I.5 2.5-6 that the warriors of Vedic times did not believe what the priests believed. In later times (as in the Bhagavadgītā II 37 'hato vā prāpsyasi svargam' or in the Raghuvaṃśa VII. 51) warriors killed in battle were supposed to go to heaven and were privileged to have the company of beautiful damsels Heaven as a place or state of eternal bliss to which the spirits of the religious or meritorious people or warriors go, is an idea common to most ancient peoples and was probably based on the idea that the Earth was flat and the sky was a dome carrying various celestial objects In the Brhadāranyaka Up (IV 3 33) and Tai Up. (II. 8) it is[377] stated that the joys of the world of gods are hundreds of times more delightful than those of the mortal world[378] In the Kathopanisad (I 12) it is stated by Yama himself that in Heaven there is no fear and no old age, that the denizen of Heaven is beyond hunger, thirst and sorrow and is in the midst of all delights. The Kausītaki Br Up as quoted by Śankarācārya on Vedāntasūtra I. 1 28 contains the statement that the abode of sinners is below this world or[379] the earth. The Chāndogya Up in one place remarks[380] 'those whose conduct has been good will quickly attain some good birth, the birth of a brāhmana or a ksatriya or vaiśya But those whose conduct has been evil will quickly attain an evil birth, the birth of a dog or a hog or a cāṇḍāla'.

376 स ह सर्वतनूरेव यजमानोऽमुष्मिंल्लोके सम्भवति य एवं विद्वान् निष्क्रित्या यजते। शतपथ. XI.1.8 6.

We have here a complicated blending of two theories The original theory of early Vedic times was that of Heaven and Hell which is also that of most religions Later on when the doctrines of karma and punarjanma came to be universally believed in India the theory of Heaven and Hell came to be modified by holding that the pleasures of heaven and the torments of Hell both came to an end some time or other and the author of sins was born again as an animal or a tree or a human being suffering from diseases and defects

---

377 तस्येयं पृथिवी सर्वा वित्तस्य पूर्णा स्यात्। स एको मानुष आनन्द । ते ये शत मानुषा आनन्दा स एको मनुष्यगन्धर्वाणामानन्द । ..ते ये शत देवानामानन्दा स एक इन्द्रस्यानन्द'। तै उप. II.8.

378. स्वर्गे लोके न भय किंच नास्ति न तत्र त्व न जरया बिभेति। उभे तीर्त्वाशनायापिपासे शोकातिगो मोदते स्वर्गलोके॥ कठोप I.12

379 एष उ एवासाधु कर्म कारयति त यमेभ्यो लोकेभ्योऽधो निनीषते। कौ आ. उ III 9.

380 तद्य इह रमणीयचरणा अभ्याशो ह यत्ते रमणीया योनिमापद्येरन्ब्राह्मणयोनिं वा क्षत्रियोनिं वा वैश्ययोनिं वा। अथ य इह कपूयचरणा अभ्याशो ह यत्ते कपूया योनिमापद्येरन् श्वयोनिं वा सूकरयोनिं वा चण्डालयोनिं वा। छान्दोग्योप V. 10.7.

The fate of the departed soul after the death of the body will be touched upon in the section on Antyesti and Śrāddha, but in connection with the doctrine of Hell it is necessary to say something about Yama. In Rg. X. 58. 1 Yama is called Vaivasvata (son of Vivasvat, the Sun). Yama is at least an Indo-Iranian deity. Yama is eulogised in Rg. X. 14. He is called a king and is credited with the task of gathering together people (X. 14. 1); he is said to have been the first to make a way (to Heaven) which was followed by former ancestors of mankind (X 14. 2 'Yamo no gātum prathamo viveda. yatrā nah pūrve pitarah pareyuh '). The soul when departing from this world is told that when he follows the paths of the ancient ancestors he would see the two kings Yama and Varuna. In Rg. X. 14. 13–15 the priests are asked to press Soma for Yama, to offer oblations to him and it is said that yajña reaches Yama, Agni being the messenger. In Rg. X. 135. 1 Yama is stated to drink in the company of gods, he is the lord of men. Yama owns two dogs each having four eyes who guard the way, who are the spies of Yama and who move among men and mark their doings. In Rg. X. 97. 16 the sage prays 'May the plants release me from the (effects of the) violation of oaths, from the violation of the ordinances of Varuna, from the fetters which Yama claps on the feet of sinners and from all sins against the gods'[381] In Rg. X. 165. 4 Yama is identified with Mrtyu (death) and the owl (an evil omen) or a kapota is said to be the dūta (harbinger) of Yama Rg I. 38 5 (addressed to the Maruts) appears to crave for something which is opposed to what other references to Yama state 'May not the singer of your praises go by the path of Yama'.[382] Thus, though in the Rgveda, Yama is a god and mostly a beneficent ruler of men, there is an element of fear associated with him as the two prying dogs that guard the way to heaven and his being called Mrtyu would suggest. The Atharvaveda refers to Yama in several places in the same strain as in the Rg. In A. V 18 3 13 it is said[383] 'serve the king Yama with offering, who was the first to die among men, who was the first to depart from this world and who, the son of Vivasvat, is the gatherer of men'. In Tai S. V. I. 8 2 and V 2. 3. 1 it is stated that Yama is the lord of all mortals and of 381 सुञ्जन्तु मा शपथ्यादथो वरुण्यादुत। अथो यमस्य पड्वीशात् सर्वस्माद्देवकिल्बिषात्॥ ऋ X 97 16.

382 मा वो मृगो न यवसे जरिता भूदजोष्यः। पथा यमस्य गादुप॥ ऋ I 38.5.

383. यो ममार प्रथमो मर्त्यानां यः प्रेयाय प्रथमो लोकमेतम्। वैवस्वतं सङ्गमनं जनानां यमं राजानं हविषा सपर्यत॥ अथर्व 18.3.13.

the whole extent of the earth. In Tai S III. 3 8 3-4 it is declared [385a] 'Yama is indeed Agni and this (earth and altar) is Yami. When a sacrificer strews Oṣadhis on the Vedi it is indeed tantamount to taking up a debt from Yama If he (the sacrificer) were to go from this world without burning them they (Yama's men) might take him to the next world with fetters round his neck' In Rg X. 14. 10[385] the pitṛs are said to enjoy delights in the company of Yama In the Ait Br [385a] (XII. 3) Mṛtyu is credited with having fetters (pāśas) and wooden maces (sthāṇu) for catching erring men. It has already been seen how Yama is said to have within his powers again and again foolish men who believe in the existence of this world alone and deny the existence of the next Thus, from being a beneficent ruler of the departed souls in the very early Vedic times, Yama came gradually to be looked upon as a dreadful punisher of men.[385] The Purāṇas contain graphic descriptions of Yama's abode and of his assistants, chief among whom is Citragupta For example, the Varāhapurāṇa [386a] chap 205 contains a dialogue between Yama and Citragupta, in which the latter recommends the fate that a dead person deserves for his actions The Agnipurāṇa chap. 371. 12 states that a sinner falls into horrible hells that are declared by Citragupta at the order of Yama.

---

384. अग्निर्वाव यम इयं यमी कुसीदं वा एतद्यमस्य यजमान आदत्ते यदोषधीभिर्वेदिं स्तृणाति यदनुपौष्य प्रयायाद् ग्रीवबद्धमेनमनुष्मिंल्लोके नेनीयेरन्। तै सं. III 3 8 3-4.

385. अधा पितॄन्त्सुविदत्राँ उपेहि यमेन ये सधमादं मदन्ति। ऋ X 14 10

385a स सर्वान्पाशान्सर्वान् स्थाणून् मृत्योरतिमुच्य स्वस्त्येनोदमुच्यत। ऐ ब्रा XII 3

386. Vide an article in the Journal of the Benares Hindu University, vol, IV pp 19–46 on 'Yama and the Pitṛs' (where Vedic, Avestic and Norse evidence is led and a naturalistic explanation is given such as Yama being the light of dawn, pitrs as 'rays of light' and saramā 'light of twilight') Vide Dr R. N. Dandekar in B C Law Presentation vol I pp 194–209, where most of the theories of Western scholars about Yama are presented and examined. The naturalistic explanations have been in vogue from very ancient times, as the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā VII 10 implies 'अहर्वावासीच्च रात्री सा यमी भ्रातरं नृत नाभृष्यत तां यदभृच्छन् यमि कामं ते भ्रातामृतेत्यब्रवीत्यब्रवीत्'

386 a. अयं वृक्षस्त्वयं तिर्यगयं नीचं व्रजेच्चर ॥ 2 अयमायोधने शत्रुं हत्वा तु निधन गतः। ब्राह्मणार्थे गवार्थे वा राज्ञार्थे निधनं गत। शक्रस्य ह्यमरावत्यां निवेदयत मा चिरम्। verses 9–10 of chap 205 of वराहपुराण; अन्यच्छरीरमादत्ते यातनीय स्वकर्मभि। भुंक्ते च पापकृद्दुःखं सुखं धर्माय सङ्गत ॥ यमाज्ञप्तै किङ्करैस्तु पात्यते नरकेषु च। अग्नि. 203 4–5; गृह्णाति नरकाणाद्योगे शरीरं चातिवाहिकम्। आकाशवायुतेजांसि विग्रहाद्यूर्ध्वगामिन ॥ ..यम दृष्ट्वा यनोक्तेन चित्रगुप्तेन चोरितान्। प्राप्नोति नरकान्दीप्तान् धर्मी शुभपथोर्दितम् ॥ अग्नि. 371. 9 and 12.

We must now turn to the ideas of Heaven and Hell contained in the post-Vedic Literature, sūtras, smṛtis, purāṇas and digests. The Nir. (I 11) quotes[387] a quarter of a Vedic verse which means 'for fear that if we (women) acted crookedly (towards our husbands) we might fall into Hell' The word Naraka is derived by it in two ways (na + araka), viz. as meaning 'going below' (the earth) or (na + ra + ka) 'where there is not the slightest place for joy'. In another place, while deriving the word 'putra' (son) the Nir. (II. 11) declares that the son is called putra because he saves (the father) from the hell called put. The same derivation of the word putra is offered by Manu IX 138 (=Ādiparva 229.14= Viṣṇudharmasūtra 15.44). Gautama (13.7) promises[388] heaven to the witnesses in a cause if they speak the truth, but Hell (naraka) if they tell the opposite (of truth). After defining patana as loss of the capacity to perform the privileged acts of twice-born classes (such as Veda study &c) and stating that by being guilty of sins a man does not in the next world reap the fruits of his good actions, Gautama states the striking view of other sages that naraka is nothing more than this loss of capacity and of the fruits of good acts, his own view however being that naraka is a particular place where a man has to dwell solely in distress and sorrow. It was the emphatic view of Gautama that men of the several varṇas and āśramas that are devoted to the actions prescribed as peculiar to each, enjoy after departing from this body, the fruits of their actions and then owing to some remainder of their total actions are born in bodies in appropriate circumstances as to the country, caste, family, appearance, length of life, learning, conduct, wealth, happiness and intelligence, while those who act contrariwise

---

387. अथापि न इत्येष इत् इत्थनेन संप्रयुज्यते परिभवे नेज्जिह्मायन्त्यो नरकं पताम इति। नरकं न्यरकं नीचैर्गमनं नास्मिन्नरमणं स्थानमल्पमप्यस्तीति वा। निरुक्त I. 11. Some editions give the whole verse हविर्भिरेके स्वरितः सचन्ते सुन्वन्त एके सवनेषु सोमान्। शचीमदन्त उत दक्षिणाभिर्ने°. This is a खिल verse after Rg X. 106.1. विश्वरूप on या III 217 quotes नेज्जि°. and explains 'जिह्मायन्त्य· कौटिल्येन प्रवृत्ता कामकार-प्रवृत्ता इति यावत्। अतश्चाकामकृते नैव नरकप्राप्ति.'; पुत्र· पुरु त्रायते निपरणाद्वा पुत् नरकं ततस्त्रायत इति वा। निरुक्त II. 11.

388. स्वर्गः सत्यवचने विपर्यये नरक। गौ 13 7. द्विजातिकर्मभ्यो हानि· पतनम् तथा परत्र चासिद्धि.। तमेके नरकम्। गौ. 21. 4–6, on the last of which हरदत्त remarks 'स्वमत तु विशिष्टे देशे कु.लैकतानस्य वासो नरक इति'; vide also अपरार्क p. 1045 for the view of Gautama.

pass into all sorts of births and are ruined[389]. Āp. Dh. S. holds that a man becomes fit for Naraka if he follows activities solely dictated by sensual pleasures.[390] In another place Ap. Dh S. affirms that Naraka is indeed one's lot when one transgresses one's dharma. It also states that rewards without end are denominated svargya. The Vedāntasūtra III. 1.13 makes it[391] clear that after enjoying the fruits of one's actions in the abode of Yama (Samyamana) evil-doers ascend to this mortal world. In Vedāntasūtra III. 1.15 the narakas[392] are said to be seven Pānini VI. 2 38 teaches the accent of mahāraurava. In the Kāśikā com on Pānini III. 2.88 a vedic verse is cited according to which one who kills his mother enters the 7th naraka. The Visnupurāna I. 6.41 names seven hells, Tāmisra, Andhatāmisra, Mahāraurava, Raurava, Asipatravana, Kālasūtra and Avīci and (in II. 6 2–5) names 26 narakas. Śankha-Likhita as quoted by the Madanapārijāta pp 694–695 mentions in detail the torments that evil-doers undergo in the hells called Kumbhīpāka, Raurava, Mahāraurava &c. Manu IV. 88–90, Yāj. III. 222–224, Visnu Dh. S. 43. 2–22, Agnipurāna 371. 20–22, Nārada (prakīrnaka 44) enumerate 21 narakas. The names are almost the same in all these works, the variations being due mostly to the scribes having read certain letters differently. The 21 names are generally significant and may be set out from Manu as follows: Tāmisra (darkness), Andhatāmisra (blinding darkness), Mahāraurava, Raurava (abounding in paths with heated surfaces, according to Pr. V. p. 15), Kālasūtra (like the thread on the wheel with which the potter cuts off a raw earthen pot in two), Mahānaraka, Sañjīvana (where one is made to revive and is again killed), Mahāvīci (where one is submerged in surging waves), Tapana (as burning hot as fire), Sampratāpana (same as Kumbhīpāka, according to Pr. V. p. 15), Sanghāta (making many stay in a small place like the legendary Black-

389. वर्णाश्रमा स्वस्वधर्मनिष्ठा प्रेत्य कर्मफलमनुभूय तत शेषेण विशिष्टदेशजातिकुलरूपायु श्रुतवृत्तवित्तसुखमेधसो जन्म प्रतिपद्यन्ते। विध्वञ्सो विपरीता नश्यन्ति। गौ XI. 29–30, q by शङ्कर in his भाष्य on वेदान्तसूत्र III. 1 8

390. तदनुवर्तमानो नरकाय राध्यति। आप. ध सू. I 4 12 12, हृष्टो वर्षति इसो धर्ममतिक्रामति धर्मातिक्रमे खलु पुनर्नरकः। आप ध सू I 4 13 4, तत. परमनन्त्य फल स्वर्ग्यशब्दं श्रूयते। आप ध सू II 9.23.12.

391. संयमने त्वनुभूयेतरेषामारोहावरोहौ तद्गतिदर्शनात्। वेदान्तसूत्र III 1 13 शङ्कर in his भाष्य relies on Kathopanisad II. 6 and Rg. X.14.1 (both quoted above) in support

392. अपि च सप्त। वेदान्तसूत्र III.1.15; अपि च सप्त नरका रौरवप्रमुखा दुष्कृतफलोपभोगभूमित्वेन स्मर्यन्ते पौराणिकै .। शाङ्करभाष्य.

hole of Calcutta), Kākola (where one is preyed on by crows), Kuḍmala (where one is bound with ropes into a bundle, which looks like a closed bud), Pūtimṛttika (where the clay has a putrid smell), Lohaśaṅku (piercing one with iron nails), Ṛjīsa (where boiled flour is thrown about), Panthāḥ (where one is made to walk constantly to and fro), Śālmali (where one is struck with thorns like those of the silk-cotton tree), Nadī (i. e. where one is carried away by a river such as the Vaitaraṇī), Asipatravana (where one is cut up by a forest of sword blades), Lohadāraka (which cuts up limbs with iron). Manu (XII. 75–76) again mentions the Tāmisra, Asipatravana and Kumbhīpāka narakas and Manu III. 249 Kālasūtra. Kullūka (on Manu. IV. 88–90). Pr. V. (p. 16), the Dīpakalikā (on Yāj. III. 222–224) and other commentaries say that the conditions in the hells may be read in the Mārkaṇḍeya-purāna and other works. Vide Agnipurāṇa 203 and 371 (where Hells are said to be 144), Brahmapurāṇa, chap. 22 (which names 25 narakas and states what sinners fall into which of them), chap 214 (verses 14–17 of which speak of 22 narakas and verses 51–103 contain harrowing descriptions of the horrible torments of hell), chap. 215. 83. ff. (for names and descriptions of several narakas).[393]

Brahma-vaivarta (prakṛtikhaṇḍa chap. 29 which names 86 narakakuṇḍas[394] and chap. 33), Nāradapurāna, pūrvārdha 15.1–20 (for narakas and torments), Padmapurāna (Uttara, chap. 227 for 140 narakas and Pātālakhaṇḍa chap. 48 for several narakas), Bhaviṣyapurāṇa (Brahmaparva, chap. 192.11–27 for torments of Hell and Uttaraparva Chap. 5–6 for sins and narakas). The Bhāgavatapurāṇa V 26.6 states that there are 28 narakas, though according to some there are 21. Vide also Viṣṇupurāṇa

393. Yāj and Viṣṇu read 'avīci' for mahāvīci. Yāj. reads Sampratāpana (throwing down in a pit) for Sampratāpana and adds Kumbhīpāka separately, which latter means 'heating after placing inside a jar'. The printed Marusmṛti reads 'Pratimūrtikam', which is a misreading of some mss. Some Mss read 'Lohacāraka' which may mean 'being made to walk over red hot iron' or 'being fettered with irons' (Pr. V. p. 16) All the names are explained by Pr. V. (pp. 15–16) and by some of the commentators of Manu. According to Jamadagni quoted in Pr. V p. 16 Vaitaraṇī is a river in the nether regions which is full of foul smell and blood, which has hot water, is very rapid and has on the crest of its waves bones and hair. Saṅkha-Likhita (q. by Madanapārijāta p. 695) describes Vaitaraṇī as 'taptodakā' (having hot water).

394. नरकाणां च कुण्डानि सन्ति नानाविधानि च। नानापुराणभेदेन नामभेदानि तानि च।...पञ्चाशीतिश्च कुण्डानि संपतन्तीं वसन्ति च। ब्रह्मवैवर्त, प्रकृतिखण्ड 29. 4–6,

V. 6.2–5, Skandapurāna I, chap. 39 and VI. 226–227. In the Mārkandeyapurāna (chap 12) we have a description of several narakas like the Raurava, Mahāraurava, Asipatravana &c. and chap 14 (verses 39–94) mentions the punishments meted out to perpetrators of various sins In the Mahābhārata also narakas and the torments thereof are frequently referred to For example, Śāntiparva 321 32 speaks of Vaitaranī and Asipatravana, Anuśāsana (23 60–82) speaks of the actions that lead to hell[s](each verse having the refrain te vai nirayā-gāminah) Anuśāsana 145.10–13. Svargārohanika–parva (2 16–26) describes the several horrible sights and torments of such hells as 'Asipatravana' (named in verse 23) and Kūtaśālmalī (named in Svargārohanika 3 4). The Vrddha-Hārīta-smrti (IX. 167–171) mentions almost the same 21 narakas as the Manusmrti does. The craze for multiplying narakas went so far that the Brahmapurāna, the Visnudharmottara[395], the Garuda-purāna and others declared that there were thousands, lakhs and crores of narakas.

The Visnu Dh. S. (46. 23–29) provides that those guilty of atipātakas, anupātakas, sankarikarana, who have not undergone prāyaścittas suffer respectively for one Kalpa,[395a] for one Manvantara, for four Yugas, for a thousand years in the 21 narakas in rotation and the other sinners for many years. Yama quoted by the Madanapārijāta p. 696 says that those guilty of Mahāpātakas stay in Hell with face downwards for a yuga and Yama has numerous other verses stating what sinners undergo which horrors of Hell.

Buddhists appear to have borrowed the doctrine about hells from Brahmanical writers Vide Dr B C. Law's monograph on 'Heaven and Hell in Buddhist perspective' (1925), pages 111–113, which refer to eight Mahānirayas and there are other lesser Hells. The eight Mahānirayas are Sañjīva, Kālasutta, Sanghāta, Roruva, Mahāroruva, Tapa, Mahātapa and Avīci. It will be noticed how those names agree closely with Manu's list of hells. For the gruesome details of Hell and torments therein in ancient Jain works, vide Uttarādhyayana-sūtra (S B.E. vol. 45 pp 93–97) and Sūtrakrtānga I. 5 (S B. E. vol. 45 pp. 279–286). Similarly, for the ideas of Heaven and Hell in Zoroastrianism, vide Mr. S. N Kanga's 'Heaven and Hell and their location in Zoroastrianism and in the Vedas' (1933).

395. खड्गशूलनिपातैश्च भिद्यन्ते पापकारिणः । नरकाणां सहस्रेषु लक्षकोटिशतेषु च स्वकर्मोपार्जितैर्दोषैः पीड्यन्ते यमकिङ्करैः । ब्रह्मपुराण 215 82–83 . अष्टाविंशतिकोट्यस्तु यातनानां नरकाणि वै । महापातकिनश्चात्र सर्वे स्युर्नरकाब्धिषु ॥ आचन्द्रतारकं यावत्पी ड्यन्ते विविधैर्वधैः । अतिपातकिनश्चान्ये निरयाणैकविंशतिषु । विष्णुधर्मोत्तर प्र. in स्मृतिषु (मा) p 859, गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड) chap 3 3 नरकाणां सहस्राणि वर्तन्ते ह्यरुणाद्रज ।.

395a For Kalpa, Manvantara and Yuga, vide H of Dh vol. III pp. 890–891.

The Buddhists held their penitential meetings (Pātimokkha), for which see S. B E vol. XIII. pp 1–69 and for the 92 pācittiya (Prāyaścittiya) rules, vide pp. 32–55 of the same volume.

There are very glowing descriptions of Heaven (svarga) in the Mahābhārata, the Purānas and other works. We have already seen how Heaven was supposed to be a place of delights in the Rgveda and even in the Upanisads like Katha (I. 12–13 and 18 'śokātigo modate svargaloke '). Rg. X. 107.2 affirms that those who give (large) dakṣiṇā stand high in the Heavens (as stars), those that donate horses go in the company of the Sun and those that donate gold become immortal. An[396] echo of this is found in Vanaparva 186.9. The Kaus Up 1 3 speaks of several worlds (lokas) of the gods such as those of Agni, Vāyu, Varuna, Āditya, Indra, Prajāpati, Brahmā and a similar gradation of higher worlds is described in Br. Up. III.6 (such as Devaloka, Indraloka, Prajāpatiloka, Brahmaloka) The Br. Up. I.5. 16 speaks of manusyaloka, pitrloka and devaloka and holds that devaloka is the best of all worlds.[397] Kaus. Up. 1. 4 implies that in the heavenly world divine nymphs, garlands, collyrium, fragrant powder, garments wait upon the fortunate denizens. Śankara on Vedānta-sūtra (IV. 3 4) says that the word 'loka' means 'a place for enjoying the fruits of one's actions' (bhogāyatana) and that Hiranyagarbha is the adhyakṣa of Brahmaloka (on Vedānta-sūtra IV. 3 10) In the Vanaparva (54. 17–19) it is stated that svarga is the place for those who die in battle How svarga is like and what the pleasures of heaven are is described in Vanaparva, chap. 186. 6–7, viz. that there are extensive lakes full of golden lotus flowers and fish and devoid of mud, that on the banks of those lakes dwell the meritorious honoured by Apsarases who apply fragrant cosmetics to their 396 परं लोकं गोमदास्त्वाप्नुवन्ति दत्त्वानड्वाहं सूर्यलोकं व्रजन्ति। वासो दत्त्वा चान्द्रमसं तु लोकं दत्त्वा हिरण्यममरत्वमेति। वनपर्व 186 9.

397. त्रयो वाव लोका मनुष्यलोकः पितृलोको देवलोक इति सोऽयं मनुष्यलोकः पुत्रेणैव जयो नान्येन कर्मणा कर्मणा पितृलोको विद्यया देवलोको देवलोको वै लोकानां श्रेष्ठ.। बृह उप. 1.5 16.

bodies, wear ornaments and have brilliant golden complexions. Similar pleasures enjoyed in the Nandana park are promised in Brahmapurāna, 225. 5–6. Vanaparva (chap. 261 verses 28–29) says that there is one great draw-back in going to heaven, viz. that there one simply enjoys the rewards of one's good actions, no new merit is accumulated there, one simply subsists on the accumulated principal or store of merit and that when that store is exhausted one has to fall down, the only good point about this being that one is born a man and that too in such a way that he enjoys[398] happiness. Anuśāsana (23. 84–102) sets out numerous actions whereby a man attains heaven (each verse having the refrain 'te narāh svarga-gāminah') Similarly, in Brahmapurāna 224. 9–14, 18–25 and 30–37 we have the same refrain. Vide also Anuśāsana chapters 144 (verses 5–15, 19–26, 31–39) and 145 Śānti (99. 4–5) states that svarga is full of those fallen in battle, there are Gandharva damsels there for the brave (and there is hell for the coward) and that svarga yields all desires that one may entertain. The Śāntiparva (192. 8 and 21) states that svarga was in the North, that (Śānti 191 13, 193 27) there was neither hunger nor thirst nor weariness nor old age nor sin (in Heaven), that good men (Śānti 271. 24) are seen as stars (or become stars). In the Matsyapurāna (276 17) it is[399] stated that he who performs Brahmāndadāna (one of the 16 mahādānas) reaches the world of Viṣnu and delights in the company of Apsarases. The Brahmapurāna (225. 6–7) assures us that a generous donor goes to heaven where he enjoys the best pleasures in the company of Apsarases and in the heavenly garden called Nandana and when he falls down from heaven he is born as a mortal in a rich and noble family. Vide also Garuḍapurāna II. 3.86–89. It is not necessary to multiply passages. There are two matters to be noted in connection with Heaven and its pleasures. One is the calculating or bargaining spirit which the smṛtis and purānas display viz. make this or that gift and then there is so much delight to be enjoyed in heaven, a sort of profit and loss account; and the second is that the highest pleasures of Heaven have a time limit, i. e. they are to come to an end one day and the meritorious have to be born again in mortal bodies. The doctrine was gradually evolved that there is no final release from the cycle of births and deaths by the performance of meritorious deeds alone

---

398. कृतस्य कर्मणस्तत्र भुज्यते यत्फलं दिवि। न चान्यत् क्रियते कर्म मूलच्छेदेन भुज्यते॥ सोऽत्र दोषो मम मतस्तस्यान्ते पतनं च यत्। सुखव्याक्षेपनस्कानां पतनं यच्च शूल॥ अयं खल्वो गुण· श्रेष्टः च्युताना स्वर्गतो भुवि। शुभाद्गुशययोगेन मनुष्येषूपजायते। तत्रापि स महाभागः सुखभागभिजायते। वनपर्व 261 28–29 and 33.

399 इत्थं य एतदखिलं पुरुषोऽत्र कुर्याद् ब्रह्माण्डदानमधिगम्य महाविमानम्। निर्धूतकल्मषविशुद्धमनूपुरोरुरानन्दकृत्यदमुपैति सहाप्सरोभि॥ मत्स्यपु 276.17 q. by अपरार्क p 323.

It is not necessary to set out at length the gruesome torments of Hell described in great detail in several smṛtis and purāṇas. By way of a sample, the following description taken from a Dharmaśāstra work (viz. Visnu Dh. S. 43.32–45) will be quite enough. "Sinners guilty of having committed (one or more of the nine kinds of) sins have to endure terrible sufferings when they have left this life and reached the path of Yama. Being dragged hither and thither by the fierce servants of Yama they are led (to hell) by them with frightening gestures. (In Hell) they are devoured by dogs, jackals, crows, herons, cranes and other birds eating raw flesh, by snakes and scorpions that have fire in their mouths (i. e. that emit stinging poison). They are scorched by fire, pierced by thorns, divided into parts by saws and oppressed by thirst. They are afflicted with hunger and by terrible hordes of tigers and they faint away at every step on account of the stinking smell of pus and blood. Desiring to secure the food and drink of others they are beaten by the servants (of Yama) whose faces are similar to those of such horrible animals as crows, herons and cranes. In some places they are boiled in oil, in others they are pounded with pestles or ground down in iron or stone vessels. In some places they (have to) eat what is vomitted or pus or blood or excrements, and hideous meat smelling like pus. In one place they have to stay in terrible darkness, and are devoured by horrible worms having flames in their mouths. In some places they are overwhelmed by cold or have to pass through the midst of unclean things and in other places the departed devour each other, thus becoming most horrible. In some places they are beaten on account of their former deeds and are suspended in other places (from trees &c.) or are struck with heaps of arrows or are cut into pieces. In other places they have to tread upon thorns and they are encircled by the hoods of serpents, they are tormented with machines and are dragged by their knees. Their backs, heads and necks are fractured, they become terrible (to look at), their throats being reduced to the size fit for a cave shelter and they become unable to bear torments. Sinners are being tormented in this way and having suffered intense pain undergo various further sufferings in their passage through animal bodies (in which they are thereafter born)"

That naraka is a place below the earth is frequently stated in the Purāṇas For example, in the Garuda and Brahmāṇda purāṇas all Hells such as Raurava are stated to be situated below the earth. Vide Viṣṇupurāṇa II. 6. 1 also. The Bhāgavatapurāṇa states that Hells are below the earth and above water to the south of the three worlds and hang without support, in which dwell the troups of pitṛs called Agniṣvātta and others.[400] The Agnipurāṇa (371 13–14) avers that the 28 groups of narakas are below the earth and even below the 7th Pātāla

We come across Vedic passages such as these 'This sacrificer who is possessed of the utensils of yajña directly reaches Heaven' (Śat. Br. XII 5 2 8)[401], 'one who desires Heaven should offer the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice', 'one desirous of attaining heaven should perform the Jyotiṣtoma sacrifice'. What is meant by svarga or naraka has given rise to hot discussions from very ancient times The popular view as reflected even in the Vedas, the smṛtis and purāṇas was that svarga was a place above the earth and naraka was a place of actual torments below the earth Even ancient astronomical works located svarga thousands of yojanas above the earth. Parāśara,[402] an astronomer and a predecessor of Varāha-mihira quoted by Utpala on Br. Saṁ I. 11, stated 'Bhū (the earth) is 67080 crores of yojanas and it is the expanse of the earth; beyond it there is impenetrable darkness, in the midst of which there is the golden

400 भूमेरधस्तात्ते सर्वे रौरवाद्या. प्रकीर्तिता । गरुड (प्रेतखण्ड) 3. 55, ब्रह्माण्ड, उपसंहारपाद chap 2 52, ततश्च नरकान् विप्र शृणोऽध सलिलस्य च । पापिनो येषु पात्यन्ते तान् शृणुष्व महामुने ॥ ब्रह्मपुराण 22 6. 1. राजोवाच। नरका नाम भगवन् किं देशविशेषा अथवा बहिस्त्रिलोक्या आहोस्विदन्तराल इति । ऋषिरुवाच। अन्तराल एव त्रिजगत्यास्तु दिशि दक्षिणस्यामधस्ताद्भूमेरुपरिष्टाच्च जलाद्यदग्न्यामिश्वात्तादय पितृगणा. निवसन्ति । भागवत पुराण V 26 3–4

401 Vide H of Dh. Vol II p 985 note of 2233 for enumeration of the ten yajñāyudhas from Tai S I 6. 8 2–3 and Śat Br I 1 1 22

स एष यज्ञायुधी यजमानोऽक्षसा स्वर्गं लोकं याति। शतपथब्रा XII 5 2 8 quoted by शबर on जै I 1 5 in the पूर्वपक्ष; 'दर्शपूर्णमासाभ्या स्वर्गकामो यजेत' q by शबर on जै II 1. 1.

402 सप्तषष्टिसहस्राण्यशीतियोजनकोट्यो भूर्यत्पृथिवीमण्डलं परस्मादगम्यं तम । तन्मध्ये हिरण्मयो मेरुश्चतुरशीतियोजनसहस्रोच्छ्रितो षोडश चाधस्तात्। त्रिगुणविस्तारायामो यं स्वर्गमाचक्षते तन्मध्येनार्कचन्द्रौ ज्योतिश्चक्रं च पर्येति। पराशर q by उत्पल on बृ. सं. I. 11.

nountain Meru, 84000 yojanas high and sixteen below and hrice as much in length and width, which is called svarga. 3ut it would be far from the truth to say that all eminent vriters were agreed on the actual existence of svarga and 1araka as places. It has already been shown how several :enturies before Christ Gautama refers to the view of some predecessors of his that naraka is not a place, but simply means :he loss of the capacity to perform the peculiar actions of one's jaina There were others who argued in the same strain. Śabara (on Jai IV. 3. 27–28) quotes a Vedic passage where the view of the sage appears to be that sacrifices yield the reward promised by śruti in the next life and where Kumārila [403] in his brief comment propounds the view that the injunctive passage (vidhi) of the Veda only promises a reward but does not state that it follows immediately in this life, that svarga which means unsurpassed joy, can happen only in another life. On Jaimini VI. 1. 1. Sabara first puts forward the prima facie view that svarga [404] imports in popular language such things (dravya) as fine silken clothes, sandalwood paste, young damsels only 16 years old and that the word svarga is also popularly applied to a particular place where there is neither heat nor cold, neither hunger nor thirst, neither distress nor fatigue and where only those that have done meritorious deeds can reach and not others. Śabara refutes this view and holds that the primary meaning of the word svarga is joy [405] or delight and not a thing (dravya) which brings joy.

There is a well-known and oft quoted verse which defines svarga as follows: [406] that happiness which is not mixed up with 403 फलं भवतीत्येतावति विधिशब्दोऽस्ति। न त्वनन्तरत्वे। तस्मादनियमः। स्वर्गस्तु जन्मान्तर एव। स हि निरतिशया प्रीतिः कर्मानुरूपा चेति न शक्येह जन्मन्यनुभवितुम्। यतोऽस्मिँल्लोके क्षणेक्षणे सुखदुःखे अनुभवन्ति। ... देहान्तरं तु निरतिशयप्रीत्यनुभवनायान्यथानुपपत्त्या कल्प्यते। तच्चामुतस्य न भवतीत्यतो जन्मान्तरे स्वर्गः। दुपूटीका on जै IV.3.27–28.

---

404. सर्वेषामेव शब्दानामर्थज्ञाने लौकिक प्रयोगोऽनुपाय्यः। तस्मिंश्च लौकिके प्रयोगे द्रव्यवचनः स्वर्गशब्दो लक्ष्यते। कौशेयानि सूक्ष्माणि वासांसि स्वर्गः, चन्दनानि स्वर्गः, द्वयष्टवर्षाः स्त्रियः स्वर्ग इति। यद्यत् प्रीतिमद् द्रव्यं तत्तत्स्वर्गशब्देनोच्यते। ...नन्वु स्वर्गशब्दो लोके मसिद्धो विशिष्टे देशे यस्मिन्कोष्णं न शीतं न क्षुद् न तृष्णा नारतिर्न ग्लानिः पुण्यकृत एव प्रेत्य तत्र गच्छन्ति नान्ये। शबर on जै VI 1 1.

405. तत एतत्तावद्वर्ण्यन्ति। प्रीतिः स्वर्ग इति। कुतः। एवमुक्तं भवता प्रीतिविशिष्टे द्रव्ये स्वर्गशब्दो वर्तत इति। यद्येवं पूर्वं तर्हि प्रीतौ वर्तितुमर्हति। तां हि स न व्यभिचरति। व्यभिचरति पुनर्द्रव्यम्। शबर on जै VI.1.2. On जै.VI 1 1 the दुपूटीका remarks 'एकस्य (सिद्धान्तवादिन) प्रीतिः स्वर्गशब्दवाच्या, अपरस्य (पूर्वपक्षवादिन) प्रीतिमद्द्रव्यम्। विशिष्टो देशो उभयोरप्यवाच्यः। किं कारणं, तस्याप्रत्यक्षत्वेन व्यवहाराभावः। तेन व्यवहाराभावात्प्रयोगाभावः।'

406. यत्र दुःखेन संभिन्नं न च ग्रस्तमनन्तरम्। अभिलाषोपनीतं च तत्सुखं स्वःपदास्पदम्॥ pain, which is not immediately afterwards overwhelmed (by pain) and which is present whenever desired, is denoted by the word svaḥ (or svarga). The Prakaraṇa-pañcikā of Śālikanātha,[406a] one of the early works of the Prabhākara Mīmānsā school, affirms that in such sentences as 'one desirous of heaven should perform the Jyotistoma' the rite is simply commended by Vedic passages, which are no more than arthavādas, as a means of securing long-enduring happiness which is free from the taint of all kinds of sorrow and which is present at the mere desire of the enjoyer. The Śāntiparva expressly states 'The wise do not regard the other world as directly seen by anyone; one has to entertain faith (in the existence of the other world) because otherwise one may run counter to the Vedas.'[407] The Brahmapurāna and the Viṣnupurāna speak in the same strain as Śabara that svarga is what causes happiness to the mind, that naraka is the opposite of it and that meritorious deeds and wicked deeds are designated as svarga and naraka respectively and that svarga and naraka are really states of the mind characterised by happiness and pain respectively.[408]

One need not wonder at the crude ideas of naraka and svarga entertained by most ancient Indian writers and works. The same ideas were prevalent among peoples of all religions all the world over. For example, The Egyptians whose dynastic history covers a period of about 5000 years had very remarkable beliefs about Heaven and Hell which were illustrated with pictorical representations copiously (as no other nation had ever done), although the oldest Books of the Dead are without illustrations of any sort (vide E. A. W. Budge's 'Egyptian Heaven and Hell', 1905 p. XI and 2). Sheol was the name the Hebrews gave to the gloomy abode of the dead in the lowest parts of the earth and it was a land of darkness, which was appointed as the house for all living (Job 10. 21–22 and 30. 23) The Greek Hades closely resembles the Hebrew Sheol in its chief characteristics. In the New Testament also Hell is a land of everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels and it is a place where the wicked go into everlasting torment 406 a ज्योतिष्टोमेन स्वर्गकामो यजेतेत्येवमादिसमाम्नायं सकलदुःखसम्भेदरहिताभिलाषोपनीतदीर्घतरसुखसाधनत्वेनार्थवादै स्तूयमानं कर्म इष्यते । प्रकरणपञ्चिका (p 102).

407. न दृष्टपूर्वं प्रत्यक्षं परलोकं विदुर्बुधाः । आगमास्त्वनतिक्रम्य श्रद्धातव्यं सुभूषता ॥ शान्ति 28 42.

408. मनःप्रीतिकरः स्वर्गो नरकस्तद्विपर्ययः । नरकस्वर्गसंज्ञे वै पापपुण्ये द्विजोत्तमाः ॥ ब्रह्मपु 22.44, विष्णुपु II.6.46. मनस परिणामोऽयं सुखदुःखादिलक्षणः । ब्रह्मपु. 22 47.

and punishment, while the righteous attain life eternal (Matthew 25. 41 and 46, Luke 16.23). The words of the New Testament are plain enough that Heaven was supposed to be a place above the earth and the clouds and that Hell was a place below the earth full of darkness and torments. Vide Luke 23. 43, Ephesians I. 3 and 20, II. Cor. 12. 4, Rev. 2. 7; and Luke 12.5 and 16.23; II. Peter 2.4 and Rev. 6 8, 20. 13–14. Bloomfield in his 'Religion of the Veda' p. 257 remarks 'In later Hindu times Hell is filled out with the usual gruesome stage-setting in the style of Dante's Inferno or the wall painting in the campo santo at Pisa'. Even men of genius like Shakespeare and most Christian theologians[409] down even to modern times believed in a literal interpretation of passages from the Bible which speak of Heaven and Hell as places. It is only recently that many Christians have begun to hold that the language of the Bible about Heaven and Hell is purely symbolical in character[410].

---

409. Vide William James in 'Varieties of religious experience' p. 264, where he says that the fear of the old-fashioned Hell fire was employed by Christianity to extract from it fruits for repentance and conversion value and Pringle-Pattison in 'Idea of Immortality' pp. 15–19. Vide for the Quranic ideas of Hell, SBE. vol IX p. 317 'Hell is a reward for the outrageous to tarry therein for ages. They shall not taste therein cool nor drink but only boiling water and pus'. Vide also SBE. vol. VI p 247 (Hell contains seven divisions), vol. VI p. 165 (for the misbeliever is the torment of hell fire), vol. XIV p. 317 and p. 340 (for boiling water, pus and fire). In the Quran Heaven was supposed to consist of seven divisions viz Garden of Eternity, Abode of peace, Abode of rest, Garden of Eden, Garden of Resort, Garden of pleasure, the Garden of the most High, the Garden of Paradise.

410. The Report on the 'Doctrine of the Church of England' published in 1938 by a Commission consisting of some of the highest dignitaries of the English Church makes interesting reading, though to a non-christian the language appears rather full of circumlocution and far from clear and definite. On p. 205 the Report states "The drama of the Last Things as set forth in the medieval 'Doom' pictures rests on a tradition which makes use of a more or less literal conception of heaven and hell as specific 'places', of which a picture was formed by drawing upon traditional material, more especially the imagery of the Book of Revelation, which is itself largely drawn from Jewish and other pre-christian sources... .....A quasi-literal interpretation of the imagery has in fact generally prevailed among Christians and has been wide-spread even in educated circles almost down to the present day.' On p. 219 the above Report remarks "As the essence of Hell is exclusion from the fellowship of God, so the essence of Heaven is that fellowship It is not a selfish happiness offered in reward for

(Continued on the next page)

The Smṛtis had evolved the doctrine, as stated above, that if a sinner did not undergo prāyaścitta, he had to suffer torments in hell, thereafter he became born as some insect or lower animal or a tree on account of some remnants of his sins and that he was born as a human being afflicted with certain diseases or with defects.[411] These last two consequences are described under the title karmavipāka (the fruition of evil deeds). Śātātapa (I. 1–5) asserts that men guilty of grave self suppression at an earlier time, it is fellowship with God who is love ... This is infinite bliss to the soul which is purged of self-interest. Heaven is also a fellowship of finite spirits " It will be patent how modern European minds have begun to think of Heaven and Hell in terms analogous to those in which some of the best minds of India thought of them centuries before and after the Christian era In spite of the glowing pictures of the pleasures of Heaven and terrifying descriptions of the torments of Hell detailed in many of the sacred and popular works in Sanskrit and other Indian languages people have gone on committing all sorts of sins. The ancient machinery of Heavens and Hells must be deemed to have largely failed of its purpose in these days. Large masses of men appear to be slipping into an abyss of despair, misery, hardness of heart, wanton brutality and lawlessness The lurid accounts of bombings and night raids on big cities, the reports of the bloody battles for six years in the World War No 2, the harrowing tales of tortures in such prisoners' camps as at Belsen, the phenomenal rise in the prices of all necessities of life (food, clothing and shelter), frequent strikes and struggles between the employed and the industrialists, growing indiscipline, arson, plunder and bestial treatment of human beings on the ground of race or religion have produced hardness of heart and debased large masses of Indian people. It is a very difficult question for our leaders how to revive among the common people of India, (whom Westerners dubbed mild Hindus) the old characteristics of tolerance, peacefulness, goodwill and respect for human life and property, how to build up a new fabric of society, a new civilization and culture on the ancient Upanisadic foundations of the pursuit of Reality, brotherhood of man, the unity of all life, and love of mankind even without pressing into service the ancient and medieval literal conceptions of Heaven and Hell.

---

(Continued from the last page)

411 प्रायश्चित्तविहीनाना महापातकिना नृणाम् । नरकान्ते भवेज्जन्म चिह्नाङ्कित-शरीरिणाम्॥ प्रतिजन्म भवेत्तेषां चिह्न तत्पापसूचकम्। प्रायश्चित्ते कृते याति पश्चात्तापवता पुनः॥ महापातकजं चिह्न सप्त जन्मनि जायते। उपपापोद्भव पञ्च त्रीणि पापसमुद्भवम्॥ दुष्कर्मजा नृणां रोगा यान्ति चोपक्रमै शमम्। जाप्यै सुरार्चनैर्होमैर्दानैस्तेषा शमो भवेत्॥ शातातप I 1–4. The verses 5–10 (about the diseases) and the following verses about the gift of cows, bulls, land and gold are quoted in the महार्णवकर्मविपाक of भान्धातृ (folio 4a and 4b) as from शातातपीयकर्मविपाक The प्राय वि p 106 remarks 'पूर्वजन्मकृतयो सुवर्णापहारसुरापानपापयोर्नरकोपभोगक्षीणयोरपि सुवर्णचौरः कौनखं सुराप· इत्यावदन्वताम् (मनु ११ ४९)–इत्यनुमितयो· किंचित्सावशिष्टत्वादल्पमायश्चित्तमाह वसिष्ठ (20 6)।'

sins that have not undergone prāyaścitta are, after undergoing the torments of Hell, born with bodies marked with certain condemned signs. One guilty of grave sins bears such signs for seven births, one guilty of upapātaka for five births and one guilty of pāpa for three births. These marks indicative of their having committed a particular sin are observed in each life and only disappear after they repent and perform prāyaścitta. Similarly, the diseases arising from sinful deeds subside by adopting the remedies of the recitation of Vedic texts, worship of gods, homas and gifts.' Verses 6–10 specify the diseases that arise in consequence of sins such as leprosy, tuberculosis, gonorrhœa, dysentery, kidney trouble, stone in the bladder, cough, fistula &c. A man may commit sins of three kinds viz. by the body, in words and mentally (Manu XII. 3). Really speaking, it is the mind that is the spring of all actions (Manu XII 4), but for the sake of convenience, this threefold division is made. Coveting another's wealth by unfair means, desiring that evil should befall another and persistence in false ideas (such as the one that there is no soul, but that the body is the soul)–these three are mental sins (Manu XII. 5). Harshness of speech, falsehood, backbiting and irrelevant prattling—these four are vocal sins (ibid XII. 6). Appropriating to oneself another's wealth without his consent, injury to sentient beings against the injunctions of śāstra, sexual intercourse with another's wife—these three are bodily sins (ibid XII. 7). Manu provides that bodily sins reduce a man to the state of a fixed object (tree &c.), vocal sins reduce him to the state of birds and beasts and mental sins to the lowest castes (Cāndāla and the like). Hārīta (q. by Par. M.)[412] speaks of 18 evil actions that lead to hell, of which six are mental, four vocal and the rest are bodily sins. Manu XII. 54–59 and 62–68, Yāj. III. 131, 135–136, 207–208 and 213–215, Visnu Dh. S. Chap. 44, Atri Chap. 4 5–14, 17–44 (in prose) state into what animals, trees and creepers sinners are born after undergoing hell torments. The statements of Yāj being concise are set out here. 'This soul enters into hundreds of bodies in this samsāra, viz. as one of the lowest castes, bird or fixed object (tree &c.) on account of his lapses springing from the mind, speech and body (Yāj. III 131); a man who tells lies, who is a back-biter, whose speech is harsh and who babbles what is irrelevant is reduced to being a bird or a beast (ibid III. 135); one who is addicted to misappropriating another's wealth and to sexual intercourse with another's wife, who injures another against śāstric rules is born as a fixed object; the murderer of a brāhmana becomes born in the body of a beast (deer &c), a dog, a pig or a camel; the drinker of surā is born as an ass, a pulkasa (one born from śūdra woman of a niṣāda), or a vena (one born of an Ambastha woman from a vaidehaka); the thief of gold reaches the state of a worm, an insect (an ant &c) or a moth and one guilty of incest becomes grass, a bush or a creeper (Yāj. III 207–208). On stealing leafy vegetables one is born as a peacock, on stealing perfumes one is born a chuchundarī (musk-rat), the thief of corn, of a vehicle, fruits, water, milk, domestic utensils (like pestle), honey, flesh, a cow, fire, cloth, juice (of sugarcane or the like) and salt is born respectively as a mouse, a camel, a monkey, a plava (duck), a crow, a sparrow, bee, vulture, godhā (iguana), crane, a man suffering from white leprosy, a dog, cīnī (cricket bird). The Brahmapurāna (chap 217 verses 37–110) contains a long disquisition on the different kinds of animal births that sinners of various kinds have to undergo Vide also Garudapurāna (Pretakhanda) 2 60–88, Agni 371 30–32 (which latter states that the murderer of a brāhmana is born as a beast or deer or a dog, hog, or camel, the drinker of wine as an ass or pukkasa or mleccha, the thief of gold as a worm or pest or moth, one guilty of incest as grass or a bush).

412. सर्वाभक्ष्यभक्षणमभोज्यभोजनमपेयपानमगम्यागमनमयाज्ययाजनमसत्प्रतिग्रहणं परद्रव्याभिगमनं द्रव्यापहरणं प्राणिहिंसा चेति शारीराणि। पारुष्यमनृतं विवादं श्रुतिविकथश्चेति वाचिकानि। परोपतापनं पराभिद्रोह. क्रोधो लोभो मोहोऽहङ्कारश्चेति मानसानि। तदेतान्यष्टादश नैरेयाणि कर्माणि...। हारीत q. by परा. मा II part 2 pp 212–213.

It was believed in very ancient times that diseases were the consequences of sins[413] In the Atharvaveda VIII. 7.3 plants are said to have destroyed from each limb the disease due to sin[414]. Manu XI. 49–52, Vas. 20 44, Yāj III. 209–211, Visnu Dh. S Chap 45, Śātātapa I. 3–11 and II. 1, 30, 32, 47, Gautama-smrti in verse chap 20 and Gautama (in prose q by the Mit on Yāj. III. 216) or Vrddha-Gautama (according to Smrtimuktāphala

413 This belief is not confined to India In the Gospel of St John (9 1–3) when a man blind from birth came before Jesus the disciples asked him 'who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind'. Jesus is said to have rejected that idea and performed a miracle by restoring to him his sight after applying to the man's eyes clay mixed with the spittle of Jesus and washing his eyes in a pool

414. आपो अग्न दिव्या ओषधय.। तास्ते यक्ष्ममेनस्यमङ्गादङ्गादनीनशन् ॥ अथर्व. VIII.7.3.

p. 861), Yama (q by Pr. M. p 9), Śaṅkha (q. by the Mitāksarā on Yāj. III. 216), Smrtyarthasāra pp. 99–100 state the diseases and bodily defects from which sinners suffer after they are born as men. As a sample Yāj. III. 209–211 may be cited here; the murderer of a brāhmana suffers from Tuberculosis, a drinker of surā has black teeth, the thief of brāhmana's gold has diseased nails, one guilty of incest suffers from leprosy; the thief of food suffers from dyspepsia, one who stealthily learns without permission (or one guilty of plagiarism) is born dumb, one who mixes up inferior corn with superior corn is born with excessive limbs (with six fingers &c.), a backbiter is born with pus in the nose; a thief of oil is born as tailapāyī and one who falsely reports faults in others has a foetid breath. Yāj. III. 217 states that after reaping the consequences of their (evil) deeds (by falling into Hell and) by reaching the state of lower animals, sinners are born as human beings of a low order, poor and with condemned marks on the body; even medical works like the Carakasamhitā held the belief that diseases were the consequences of actions done in past lives (vide Sūtrasthāna, Chap. I. 116),

The smrtis are not in complete agreement about the diseases or bodily defects that sinners of various grades suffer. For example, though Vas 20 44 and Śankha (q by Mit. on Yāj. III. 216) state that the murderer of a brāhmana suffers from leprosy, Manu XI. 49, Yāj III. 209, Visnu Dh. S 45. 3, Agni. 371. 32 aver that he suffers from phthisis. For want of space the long lists of the births as lower animals and the diseases and deformities from which sinners suffer contained in Śankha, Hārīta, Gautama, Yama and the Purānas quoted by the Mit. on Yāj III. 216, the Par M. II. part 2 pp. 230–240, 242–272, Madanapārijāta pp 701–702, the Mahārnava-karmavipāka are passed over here.

Āp. Dh. S (II. 1. 2. 6–7) states that a brāhmana, ksatriya or vaiśya sinner guilty of brāhmana murder, after undergoing the torments of Hell is born again respectively as a Cāndāla, Paulkasa and Vaina and that other sinners who have become outcasts by their sins are born on account of these as certain animals (like pigs) Similarly, Manu XII. 61 provides that one who from greed steals precious stones, pearls, corals and jewels of various kinds is born as a goldsmith.

Although the word Karman is ordinarily employed to denote good as well as evil actions still in the section on penances the word 'Karman' prominently presents to the mind the idea of evil deeds. Hence Karmavipāka means the ripening (or fruition) of evil actions or sins This fruition takes three forms, as stated in the Yogasūtrā[415] II 13, viz jāti (birth as a worm or animal &c), āyuh (life i. e living for a short period such as five or ten years) and bhoga (experiencing the torments of Hell &c) The word Karmavipāka appears to have been known to Yāj. III 131 (vipākaḥ karmanām pretya kesām cid-iha jāyate) and it occurs frequently in the Purānas (e g in Brahma-purāna 224 41, 225 43 and 59, Matsya 115 14 &c). The Pr. Sāra pp. 219-231 contains probably the longest treatment of Karmavipāka The doctrine of Karmavipāka was well known to the Buddhist philosopher Nāgārjuna, who in his Ratnāvali refers to it[416]. The Buddhist Avadānaśatakas also refer to the doctrine of Karmavipāka. Vide also Suttanipāta (S B. E vol 10 part 2) p. 38 and S B. E vol 21 p. 130 (Saddharma-pundarika). In some medical works also such as the Hāritasamhitā it is said that the murderer of a brāhmana suffers from white leprosy and the killer of a cow from black leprosy; a regicide suffers from phthisis, and the destroyer of a park from dysentery &c.[417]. In the Vivāgasuyam (Vipākaśrutam), which is the 11th anga of the Jaina-āgama and an edition of which was brought out by Dr. P L Vaidya (in 1933) we have stories of persons who suffered from evil diseases owing to their committing evil deeds in former lives and other stories of the fruits of good deeds.

The doctrine based upon the implications of Manu XII[418]. 3, 9 and 54 and Yāj III. 206 was that it is human beings alone (and not lower animals like tigers &c.) that have to experi-

---

415 सति मूले तद्विपाको जात्यायुर्भोगा। योगसूत्र II 13. The ब्रह्मपुराण 217 40 illustrates both jāti and āyuh viz. 'पतितं याजयित्वा तु कृमियोनौ प्रजायते। तत्र जीवति वर्षाणि दश पञ्च च भो द्विजा ॥'

416. Vide JRAS for 1934 p 307 at p 311 for the views of नागार्जुन on कर्मविपाक Verse 14 is हिंसया जायतेऽल्पायुर्बद्धाबाधो विहिंसया। चौर्येण भोगध्वंसनी सशत्रु परदारिकः ॥.

417. Vide Journal Asiatique (Paris) for 1934, pp 125-139 for the text of the हारीतसंहिता 'ब्रह्मघ्नो जायते पाण्डु कुष्ठी गोवधकारक। राजघ्नो राजयक्ष्मी स्यादारामघ्नोऽतिसारवान् ॥ स्वाम्यङ्गनाभिगमने मेहरोगी भवन्ति हि। गुरुजायाप्रसङ्गेन मूत्ररोगोश्मरीगद ॥ स्वकुलजाप्रसङ्गेन जायते च भगन्दर। शूली परोपतापी च पैशुन्याच्छ्वासकासिन ॥ verses 12-14 at p 134.

418. कर्मजा गतयो नृणामुत्तमाधममध्यमा ॥ मनु XII, 3, शरीरजै कर्मदोषैर्याति स्थावरता नर.। मनु XII, 9.

ence in Heaven and Hell the consequences of their deeds. The Viṣṇudharmottara explicitly states so[419].

The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 216), the Smṛtyarthasāra, Par. M., Pr. Sāra and other works state that the disquisition on Karmavipāka[420] is merely an arthavāda, that it is not to be taken literally, but is meant to induce sinners to undergo such prāyaścittas as Prājāpatya which entail great worry and trouble and which no one might willingly undertake. The Mit points out that the description of the diseases (like pthisis) is not intended for requiring those who suffer from them to undergo the penances for twelve years or the like nor for inducing people to avoid contact with such persons, that śiṣṭas do not avoid contact with those who have bad nails, that in the case of such persons the disease or defect is the last result of what little sin remained attached to them and that by the very fact of their having the disease or defect mentioned in the texts they become free from the last remnants of their sins and therefore they do not stand in need of any further penance and as their sin is finally removed by suffering the disease or defect their fitness for being allowed to mix among people is established

The teaching of the works on Karmavipāka, though dismal and terrifying, comes to this that no soul need be without hope provided it is prepared to wait and undergo torments for its misdeeds, that it need not be appalled by the numerous existences foreshadowed in those works and that the soul may in its long passage and evolution be ultimately able to discover its true greatness and realize eternal peace and perfection.

Manu XII. 69 (almost the same as Viṣṇu Dh. S. 44.45 and Garuḍapurāna II. 2. 89) states that women guilty of the sin of theft become the wives of men who are guilty of the same offences.

VĀMANAPURĀṆA, chap. 12 is called Karmavipāka and Mārkaṇḍeyapurāna chap. 15 treats of the same subject. The 419 मनुष्या प्रतिपद्यन्ते स्वर्गं नरकमेव वा। नैवान्ये प्राणिनः केचित्सर्वे ते फलभोजिन ॥ शुभानामशुभानां च कर्मणां भुञ्जनन्दन। सञ्चय. क्रियते लोके मनुष्यैरेव केवलम् ॥ तस्मान् मनुष्यस्तु सुतो यमलोकं प्रपद्यते। नान्य प्राणी महाभाग फलयोनौ व्यवस्थितः ॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर-पुराण II, 102 4-6 q. by परा मा. II, part 2 pp. 208-209, मा. सार p. 215 (after affirming मनुष्याणामेव शुभाशुभकर्मफलोपभोग।).

420. इदानीन्तनपापिनां प्रायश्चित्तोन्मुखत्वार्थं पूर्वजन्मकर्मविपाका दर्शिताः। स्मृत्यर्थ-सार p 100; नन्व नार्थं विपाको विधातुं प्रतिषेद्धुं वा शक्यतेऽननुष्ठेयत्वादवर्जनीयत्वाच्च। अत एवैतस्मिन्विधिप्रतिषेधपरे शास्त्रे तन्निरूपणमयुक्तम्। नार्थं दोषः। प्रायश्चित्तार्थवादत्वेन तदुपपत्तेः ..अत्र च प्राजापत्याद्यनुष्ठानरूपस्य प्रायश्चित्तस्य क्लेशात्मकत्वाद्गतत्व. प्रवृत्तिर्न सम्भवतीति तत्र मद्यनिषिद्धये प्ररोचना कर्तव्या। परा मा. II. part 2 pp. 206-207, Varāhapurāna (chap. 203 21 ff) expatiates at length upon the topic how sinners endure torments in Hell for innumerable years, how after their evil deeds have been almost wiped out they become human beings suffering from various diseases or deformities.

In the Mahārnava-karmavipāka of Māndhātr it is stated that there are two means of destroying the consequences of (evil) actions, viz krcchra (penances) and the reversal (or remedies) against diseases[421]. The latter consists in making golden images of the sun (as the superintending deity of good health) and of the deity of a disease and offering worship to both these in a mandapa on a raised vedikā (platform). The work expatiates at length on the Vedic verses employed according to Āśvalāyana and the Taittirīya Śākhā for ghosa-śānti (propitiatory ceremonies with loud recitation of Vedic mantras); the worship of the sun with Vedic mantras and of the planets, the offerings of āhutis, the Rudraikādaśini, Mahārudra (11 times as many as the preceding) and Atirudra, repeating the thousand names of Visnu, Vināyaka-śānti (as laid down by Yāj. I. 271–294), Navagraha-yajña in which it assigns each planet to some country and some gotra[422]. It also prescribes how for the removal of particular diseases particular dānas may be given (such as Kadalidāna i e. manufacturing a kadali plant from one pala of gold and donating it). It deals with the gifts of the images of all diseases supposed to be incurable and quotes Śātātapa II. 47–48 in connection with the removal of rājayaksmā (phthisis). It deals at length with fevers and other diseases and bodily defects such as greenish or cat-like eyes, deafness &c. But the detailed treatment of all these matters is passed over here from considerations of space, and also for the reason that these prescriptions are now either hardly believed in by people or hardly ever performed.

421. अथ कर्मक्षयोपायौ कृच्छ्रव्याधिविपर्ययौ। तत्राथ व्याधिविपर्यय इत्यनेन व्याधिप्रतिकृतिदानं वक्ष्यत इति।.. प्रतिमा द्विप्रकारा अधिदेवता देवतात्मिका च। आतङ्को देवता तत्र तत्र पूज्याधिदेवता प्रायेण सूर्य सर्वथा रोगाणामधिदैवत-आरोग्य भास्करादिच्छेत्-इति त्ररूपा श्रुति स्मृति। तत्र व्याधिप्रतिमायामातङ्कनाम्नी देवता भवति। महार्णव folios 33b and 34a. रोगप्रतिमादाने सर्वत्र सूर्य एवाधिदेवता व्याधिदेवता च भिन्ना व्याधीना भिन्नत्वात्। अतश्च जलरोगादिषु वरुणादयो देवता भवन्तीति। ibid folio 44a

422. 'ओं भूर्भुव स्व कलिङ्गदेशोद्भव काश्यपसगोत्र सूर्य इहागच्छेत्यावाह्य इद तिष्ठेति रक्तपुष्पाक्षतै स्थापयेत्। ओं भूर्भुव स्व, अवन्तीसमुद्भव भरद्वाजसगोत्र भौम इहागच्छे. स्यावाह्य ..स्थापयेत्। ओं स्व मागधदेशोद्भव आत्रेयसगोत्र बुध इहागच्छे...। महार्णव, folio 157 b.

SECTION II

ANTYEṢTI (rites after death), ŚUDDHI (purification from impurity due to death, birth and other causes)

CHAPTER VII

ESCHATOLOGY

What happens after death to a human being (which is the subject matter of Eschatology) has been a great mystery that has intrigued and baffled mankind in all ages and was a question of vital importance among almost all ancient peoples such as the Indians, Egyptians, Chaldeans, Greeks and Persians. The word Eschatology is derived from a Greek term meaning 'last things' and is applied to the study of opinions that men have held from time to time concerning the future, including such matters as the state of man after life on this earth and the end of the world. It exercises a great fascination over most people and speculation on it can be carried on endlessly. Every religion has its own eschatology. There are two aspects of Eschatology; one is concerned with the destiny of the individual after death, immortality of the soul, sin and punishment, the meaning and content of 'Heaven' and 'Hell'; the other aspect of eschatology has relation to the whole universe, its creation, destination and renovation, and the ultimate end of all things. The first aspect and matters relevant to it from the ancient Indian point of view will be dealt with in this section and the second aspect of Eschatology is reserved for treatment in a later section. In ancient works far more emphasis was laid on the first than on the second, while modern men with a more or less scientific outlook and attitude are inclined to think more of the second aspect.

Death has been generally looked upon with feelings of awe and terror, though there were men (often philosophically minded) who looked upon it as a blessing and as a release of the spirit from the shackles imposed upon the latter by the body. The terror of death was in many cases due not so much to the pain caused at the time of death but rather to the mystery that surrounds what happens after death and to the thoughts about what the survivors would have to undergo. It is said by C E. Vulliamy in his work 'Immortal man' (p. 2): 'although the idea of that life (ghostly life) ranges from the most dismal and horrible fantasies to the most sublime imaginations, the fundamental thought is always the same, the body dies but not the spirit'. There were several attitudes adopted by primitive as well as civilized people towards death. In the Kathopaniṣad we read (I. 1.20) 'When a man dies there is a doubt, some saying that there is survival after the death of the body and some denying any survival' and Naciketas requests the dreaded God Yama to solve this doubt. There are several beliefs[422a] even among those who hold that there is survival after death. Some say that there is a world of the dead to which whatever survives goes after death Others believe that the surviving part goes to Heaven or Hell according as the man has been virtuous or sinful in his life on earth. Others believe in transmigration and re-incarnation. Several of the great writers in ancient Greece believed in this last doctrine, as Pindar (in second Olympian Ode), Plato (in Phaedrus and Timaeus) and Herodotus (II. 123) indicate.

The Brahmapurāna (chap. 214 verses 34–39) sets out the persons to whom death is happy and easy and not a source of misery and sorrow. A few may be mentioned here.–'He who did not tell lies, he who did not prove false to affection or friendship, who is an āstika (a believer in God and the life to come), who is devoted to the worship of gods and the honouring of brāhmaṇas, he who does not bear malice to anyone–these have a happy death.' Similarly, the Anusāsanaparva of the Mahābhārata (chap. 104. 11–12, chap. 144 49–60) states at length the causes of premature death and of long life. Some of them may be translated here. 'Those who are atheists, do not perform the acts (or sacrifices) proper for them, violate the (dictates of) elders and of śāstras, who do not know what dharma is and are evil-doers are short-lived. Those who have no character, who always break all rules of conduct, who have promiscuous sexual intercourse become short-lived and go to Hell. One who is not irritable by temper, speaks the truth, does not cause injury to beings, who bears no malice to any one and who is not crooked—these live for a hundred years' (104. 11–12 and 14).

422a. Compare C. E. Vulliamy's 'Immortal man' (p. 11).

Several works specify the signs indicative of the approach of death. The Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata (chap. 318. 9-17), Devala quoted in the Moksakānda of the Kalpataru (pp. 248-250, about 20 verses), the Vāyupurāna (chap. 19 verses 1-32), the Mārkandeyapurāna 43. 1-33 (chap. 40 verses 1-33, Veṅkateśvara Press ed.), Lingapurāna (pūrvārdha chap. 91) and other Purānas contain long lists of the signs of approaching death. It is impossible for want of space to set out in detail these signs. But the gist of a few verses is mentioned by way of sample. The Śāntiparva (chap 318) states that a man who is not able to see the star of Arundhatī which he could formerly see, nor the pole-star nor the full moon, nor his own reflection in another man's eye has only one year to live; he has only a span of six months of life left to him who sees the orb of the moon with a hole in it; a man has only seven days left of life who sees a hole pierced in the orb of the Sun, who smells the odour of a corpse when fragrant substances are near; when the nose and ears bend down, when his teeth and eyes become discoloured, when there is loss of consciousness, and loss of bodily heat, when smoke emerges from the crown of the head, when the left eye begins to ooze moisture all of a sudden-these are indications of the immediate approach of death. Devala states indications that prognosticate life for only one year, 11, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2 months, one month, half a month, 12 days, 4 days, 3 days, 2 days and winds up by saying that one who cannot hear the humming sound in his ear (when closed with fingers) or cannot see the light in the eye is going to die immediately. The Vāyupurāna (19.28) and Lingapurāna 91.30 regard the last two as the worst indications of approaching death[423]. The Lingapurāna (pūrvabhāga chap. 91.24) states that he who cannot see his own reflection in another's eye will not live. There is an interesting paper by Dr R.G. Harshe in the Munshi Diamond Jubilee volume (pp. 246-268) where the learned writer gives the text of two mss. on the prognostications derived from dreams e. g. if a man sees an ass in a dream he is sure to die, or if he sees an old maid then it is an indication of danger, disease and death (p. 251) or if he sees a trident death is indicated (p. 254).

---

423. ह्रे चात्र परमेऽरिष्टे एतद्रूपं परं भवेत्। घोषं न शृणुयात्कर्णौ ज्योतिर्नेत्रे न पश्यति॥ वायुपुराण 19.27; नष्टं वा अनणं दृष्ट्वा विद्यान्मृत्युमुपस्थितम्। लिङ्गपुराण (पूर्वभाग 91 19).

When a man is sinking and is almost on the point of death it was and even now is the practice in many parts of India to take the dying man down from the bedstead and place him on a bed spread on the earth[424]. For example, the Kauśika-sūtra (80 3) prescribes[425]: When the man is losing all strength, he (the son or other attending relative) spreads kuśas on the grass growing in the shed and takes him down (from the bed-stead) with the mantra 'syonāsmai bhava' (mayst thou be good to this man, Oh Earth). The Baud P S III 1 18 says that sand should be spread on the ground in the sacrificial shed when it is feared that the sacrificer is dying and darbha grass should be strewn on the sand with the sharp ends turned to the south and the dying man should be placed thereon and one (son or the like) should repeat in his right ear the anuvāka beginning with 'āyusah prānam santanu'. The Gobhilasmrti III. 22 and later works like the Pitrdayitā provide the same procedure.

Medieval digests like the Śuddhiprakāśa (pp 151–152) state that when a person is moribund, has half closed his eyes and is taken down on the ground (from a bed-stead), his son or other relative should make him give one or more of ten gifts viz of cows,[426] land, sesame, gold, clarified butter, clothes, grain, jaggery, silver, salt These gifts are superior even to a śrāddha performed at Gayā or to even hundreds of Aśvamedhas. The

---

424. In Europe a very widespread custom is to take a dying man out of bed and to lay him on the earth or on straw Vide Prof Edgerton's very exhaustive article on 'the Hour of Death' in Annals of the Bhandarkar O.R. Institute, vol. VIII pp 219–249.

425. दुर्बलीभवन्तं शालातृणेषु दर्भानास्तीर्य स्योनास्मै भवेत्यवरोहयति। मन्त्रोक्तावनुमन्त्रयते। यत्ते कृष्णेत्यन्नदीपयति। कौशिक 80 3–5. अथर्व० 18.2–19 is 'स्योनास्मै भव पृथिव्यनृक्षरा निवेशनी। यच्छास्मै शर्म सप्रथा॰॥ ऋ I 22 15 and वाज सं 36 13 are almost the same, reading स्योना पृथिवि भवानृक्षरा॰ and स्योना पृथिवि नो भवा॰ respectively; vide निरुक्त 9.32 for explanation of this verse The पितृदयिता (p 74) states यदा कण्ठस्थानगतजीवो विह्वलो देही भवति तदा बहिर्गोमयेनोपलिप्तायां भूमौ कुशान्दक्षिणाग्रानास्तीर्य तदुपरि दक्षिणशिरस स्थापयित्वा सुवर्णरजतगोभूमितिलपात्राणि वापयेत्। गोभिलस्मृति III 22 'दुर्बल स्नापयित्वा तु शुद्धचैलाभिसवृतम्। दक्षिणाशिरस भूमौ बर्हिष्मत्यां निवेशयेत्॥.'

426 दानानि च जातूकर्ण्य आह। उत्क्रान्तिर्वैतरण्यौ च दश दानानि चैव हि। प्रेतेऽपि कृत्वा तं प्रेत शवधर्मेण दाहयेत्। दश दानानि च तेनैवोक्तानि। गोभूतिलहिरण्याज्यवासोधान्यगुडानि च। रूप्यं लवणमित्याहुर्दश दानान्यनुक्रमात्॥ शुद्धिप्रकाश p 152, for a similar verse about ten dānas vide गरुडपु. (प्रेतखण्ड) 4 4. An Inscription of Vikramāditya, a chieftain under the Kalachuri king Sankama (published in E I vol XIX pp 230) records the gifts of land, coins, house and gold on the occasion of the prāyaścitta in honour of his deceased father.

saṅkalpa (verbal declaration of the gift) is made in the words 'I shall make ten gifts for the attainment of heaven (abhyudaya), or for the removal of all sins'. After the ten dānas, a cow with a calf should be donated if possible [427] (this cow being called utkrānti-dhenu 'a cow donated in view of death') and then another cow called Vaitaraṇī with gold (or two pieces of cloth &c) should be donated. The Antyestipaddhati and the Śuddhi-prakāśa (pp. 152–153) set out all the mantras (not vedic) that are to be recited at the time of making the several gifts, which (mantras) are passed over here for want of space. The Antyesti-paddhati, the Antyakarmadīpaka and other works prescribe that when a person is near death, his son or other relative should make him perform Vratodyāpana, sarvaprāyaścitta and the gift of ten dānas or if the dying man is unable to do these himself, the son or the other relative should perform these and give the merit thereof to the dying man. A person often resolves upon observing certain vratas, but fails to carry out all the details of those vratas to the end. The Vratodyāpana for the dying man is meant to cure all such unfinished vratas. The A. K. D. (pp. 3–4) has a long note about the performance of vratodyāpana. Briefly it comes to this. The son or other relative having brought about the purity of the dying man's body by a bath or by sprinkling it with holy water (mārjana) or by making him drink Ganges water, having himself taken a bath and performed his daily duties (of sandhyā), having lighted a lamp, having bowed to Gaṇeśa and prayed to god Viṣṇu, having placed before him the materials of worship and having repeated the usual sankalpa (see note [428]), he should honour a brāhmana

---

427 आसन्नमृत्युना देया गौः सवत्सा तु पूर्ववत्। तदभावे तु गौरेव नरकोत्तरणाय वै। तदा यदि न शक्नोति दातुं वैतरणीं तु गाम्। शक्नोऽप्योऽरुकू तदा दत्त्वा दत्वाच्छेदो मृतस्य च॥ व्यास. q. by क्षुद्धितत्त्व p 300, क्षुद्धिप्रकाश p 153, अ. क. दी. p 7. पूर्ववत् means हेमाद्रिकारादिना. The गरुडपुराण (प्रेत०) 4 6 says 'नदीं वैतरणीं तद्वै दर्भाद्वैतरणीं च गाम्। कृष्णसनीं सकृष्णाङ्गी सा वै वैतरणी स्मृता॥' The idea was that at the door of यम there was a river called वैतरणी, full of blood and sharp weapons and that there those who donated a cow at the time of death cross that terrible river by holding the cow's tail, vide स्कन्दपु VI 226 32–33 for वैतरणी and verse 34 is 'मृत्युकाले प्रयच्छन्ति ये धेनुं ब्राह्मणाय वै॥ तस्या. पुच्छं समाश्रित्य ते तरन्ति च तां नृप॥'. The श्राद्धरत्न of लक्ष्मीपति prescribes two mantras at the time of donating the वैतरणी cow, one of which is उत्तमे वर्षति शीते वा मारुते वाति वा भृशम्। दातारं त्रायते यस्मात्तस्माद्वैतरणी स्मृता॥.

428. अद्य पृथिव्या जम्बूद्वीपे भरतखण्डे आर्यावर्तैकदेशे विष्णोराज्ञया प्रवर्तमानस्य ब्रह्मणो द्वितीयपरार्धे...अमुकतिथौ अमुकगोत्रः...अमुकशर्माहं ममात्मन. (मम पित्रादेः) already invited and should give to him the gold (or silver) set apart for the purpose and the brāhmana should pronounce the words "May all vratas be fulfilled! May there be the attainment of the fruits of udyāpana (accomplishment of vrata)". In the sarvaprāyaścitta the son approaches 4 or 3 learned men or one man knowing adhyātma (metaphysics) and offers the substitutes (of gold &c.) for sins that involve penances for 6, 3 or 1½ years or makes a declaration and performs the prāyaścitta, after the days of impurity.

(Continued on the next page)

The sarvaprāyaścitta was to be performed by the dying man or by his son or other relative who was to shave himself, take a bath, drink pañcagavya, honour a brāhmana with sandal paste and other things; after having honoured the cow or the money to be paid in lieu of it, and after referring to the several kinds of sins that one may be guilty of (vide note [429]) he is to make a gift of a cow (with a calf) to the brāhmana or in lieu of it, of some money. After sarvaprāyaścitta come the ten dānas stated above. In the dānas the Kāmastuti [430] as studied by the followers of each veda was to be recited. The Garudapurāna (II. 4. 7–9) further prescribes other dānas called mahā-dānas viz, of sesame, iron, gold, cotton, salt, seven kinds of corn, land and cows when a man is dying and also other gifts called padadānas such as of umbrella, sandals, ring, water-jar, seat, food. The Garudapurāna (II 4 37) further provides that if a man about to die takes sannyāsa according to the rules laid

---

(Continued from the last page)

अतग्रहणदिवसादारभ्य अद्य यावत्फलाभिलाषादिगृहीतानां निष्कामतया गृहीतानां च अमुकामुकव्रतानामकृतोद्यापनदोषपरिहारार्थं श्रुतिस्मृतिपुराणोक्ततत्तद्व्रतजन्यसाङ्गफलसाप्त्यर्थं विष्ण्वादीनां तत्तद्देवानां प्रीतये इदं सुवर्णमग्निदैवतं (तदभावे इदं रजतं चन्द्रदैवतं) अमुकगोत्रायामुकशर्मणे ब्राह्मणाय दास्ये ओं तत्सत् न मम इति सङ्कल्प्य etc. अ क ही p 4 -

429 देशकालौ संकीर्त्य मम (मत्पित्रादेर्वा) ज्ञाताज्ञातकामाकामसकृदसकृत्कृतकायिकवाचिकमानसिकसांसर्गिकसृष्टास्पृष्टभुक्ताभुक्तपीतापीतसकलपातकानुपातकोपपातकलघुपातकसङ्करीकरणमलिनीकरणापात्रीकरणजातिभ्रंशकरमकीर्णकादिनानाविधपातकानां निरासेन देहावसानकाले देहशुद्धिद्वारा श्रीपरमेश्वरप्रीत्यर्थमिमा सर्वमायश्चित्तप्रत्यान्नायभूतां यथाशक्त्यलंकृतां सवत्सां गां रुद्रदेवतामुकगोत्रायामुकशर्मणे ब्राह्मणाय तुभ्यमहं संप्रददे ओं तत्सत् न मम। अ. क ही p 5 अन्त्योदिप of नारायण has also the words ज्ञाताज्ञात पातकानां निरासार्थं.

430. क इदं कस्मा अदात्काम कामायादात्। कामो दाता काम प्रतिग्रहीता। कामसमुद्रमाविवेश। कामेन त्वा प्रतिगृह्णामि कामैतत्ते। अथर्ववेद III. 29.7, तै ब्रा II. 2 5.9 (where this Kāmastuti is explained) and Tai Ā III. 10. This कामस्तुति occurs in many ceremonies (such as marriage, adoption etc.). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 1069, and आश्व. श्रौ. V. 13,15 (which reads कामं समुद्रमाविश) and आप श्रौ 14,11.2.

down for what is called āturasannyāsa he never returns to the cycle of births and deaths.

From ancient times it was a firmly held belief that the thoughts that a dying man entertains at the time of death determine what will happen to his spirit after physical death (this is expressed in the well-known words 'ante matih sā gatih'), that therefore a man should, when death approaches, give up all thoughts of mundane affairs and all earthly attachments, should think of his favourite deity (Hari or Śiva), should inaudibly recite such mantras as 'om namo Vāsudevāya'. Several texts insist on making the dying man listen to holy Vedic texts. The Gautamapitr-medhasūtra (I. 1–8) prescribes that one should at the time when one's father, mother, brother, teacher or a brāhmana friend is on his death-bed make the dying man hear the first and last verses of the Veda and certain sāmans and should mutter in the dying man's right ear (one sāman) The Ṛgvidhāna provides that one should repeat at the time of death the sūkta beginning with 'trātāram' [431] (?)

The Hir. P. S. I. 1 provides that when it is thought that the āhitāgni is going to die, he (the son or the like) should mutter in the dying man's ear (if he is a knower of Brahma) the two anuvākas of the Tai. Up. II. 1 (beginning with 'brahmavidāpnoti param') and III. 1 (beginning with 'Bhrgurvai vāruniḥ'). The A. K. D. (p 18) says [432] that if the dying man is unable to engage in japa he should revolve in his mind the benign form of Visnu or Śiva and should listen to the thousand names (of Visnu or Śiva), the Bhagavadgītā, the Bhāgavata, Bhārata, Rāmāyana, the Upanisads like Īśāvāsya and hymns to Soma.

---

431. त्रातारमिति सूक्तं तु अन्तकाले सदा पठेत्। जप्त्वा चैव परं स्थानममृतत्वाय कल्पते। ऋग्विधान q in शुद्धिप्रकाश p 154 The अन्येदिपद्धति of नारायणभट्ट (Nir. edition, pothi size p. 163 b) reads नानानामिति · स्थानममृतत्वं स गच्छतीति ऋग्विधानवचनात्॥ The Rgvidhāna edited by Jagadish Shastri reads (III.19–20) नानानामिति सूक्तानि अन्तकाले जपेत्सकृत्। नानान is the first verse of Rg IX 112. It is likely that the editor of शुद्धिप्रकाश misreads नानानामिति as त्रातारमिति, since त्रातारम् is not a sūkta (hymn) but only one stanza in a hymn.

432 जपेऽसमर्थश्चेद् हृत्पद्मे चतुर्भुजं शङ्खचक्रगदापद्मधरं पीताम्बरकिरीटकेयूरकौस्तुभवनमालाधरं रमणीयरूपं विष्णुं त्रिशूलडमरुधरं चन्द्रचूडं त्रिनेत्रं गङ्गाधरं शिवं वा भावयन् सहस्रनामगीताभागवतभारतरामायणेशावास्याद्युपनिषद· पावमानादीनि सूक्तानि च यथासम्भवं शृणुयात्। अ. क डी p 18. For विष्णुसहस्रनाम vide अनुशासनपर्व 149 14–120 and अनुशासन 17.31–153 for 1008 names of शिव, vide also शान्तिपर्व 285.74 ff.

The germs of this idea are found even in the Upanisads. The Chāndogya Up. (in the famous Śāndilya-vidyā, III. 14. 1) remarks 'All this is Brahman. A man should meditate on that (all this) as beginning, ending and subsisting in it (Brahman). Now man is a creature of his will According to whatever is his will (or thought) in this world, so will he become after departing from this world.'[433] The Praśna Up. III. 10 contains a similar idea. It is here asserted that it is thought power or the will that raises the soul higher and higher, and that the human mind should try to realize the idea that behind all physical transformations the Universe is one and is informed by one all-pervading Essence. Similarly, the Bhagavadgītā puts this idea in a much more clear way. 'The man, who remembering me alone in his last moments, departs from this life, comes to me, there is no doubt about this' (8. 5). But in order to guard against the possible inference that it is only the thoughts at the approach of death that matter whatever the past life led by a dying man may have been, the next verse emphasizes that a man's spirit is engrossed by the thoughts that he has entertained throughout life and that a man can think of spiritual matters or about God at the time of death only if he has been thinking about such matters or about God throughout his life That verse (8.6) is 'whichever form (or thing) a man remembers when he leaves the body at death, to that alone he goes, having been always (throughout his life) engrossed in meditating over it"

Some of the digests, on the authority of several Purānas, prescribe that the dying man should be taken, if possible, near a holy place (tīrtha) such as the Ganges. For example, the Śuddhitattva[434] (p 299) quotes a passage from the Kūrmapurāna to this effect 'a man attains mokṣa (final release from saṃsāra) by dying in the waters of the Ganges, on land or in water at 433. सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म तज्जलानिति शान्त उपासीताथ खलु क्रतुमय. पुरुषो यथाक्रतुरस्मिँल्लोके पुरुषो भवति तथेत प्रेत्य भवति स क्रतु कुर्वीत। छा उप III. 14 1. अन्तकाले च मामेव स्मरन्मुक्त्वा कलेवरम्। य. प्रयाति स मद्भावं याति नास्त्यत्र सशय॥ य य वापि स्मरन्भावं त्यजत्यन्ते कलेवरम्। त तमेवैति कौन्तेय सदा तद्भावभावित॥ भगवद्गीता 8.5-6, vide शाङ्करभाष्य on ब्रे सू I 2 1 for the explanation of तज्जलान् and on ब्रे. सू IV. 1 12 for quoting the छा. उप and भगवद्गीता 8. 5-6.

---

434. कूर्मपुराणम्। गङ्गाया च जले मोक्षो वाराणस्या जले स्थले। जले स्थले चान्तरिक्षे गङ्गासागरसङ्गमे॥ तथा (स्कन्दे)। तीराद्व्यूतिमात्रं तु परित क्षेत्रमुच्यते। अत्र दान जपो होमो गङ्गाया नात्र संशय। अत्रस्थास्त्रिदिव यान्ति ये मृता न पुनर्भवा। शुद्धितत्त्व pp 299, 300, शुद्धिप्रकाश p 155, गव्यूति is equal to two क्रोश.

Vārānasī (Benares) and at the confluence of the Ganges with the sea either on land, in water or in the air.' Another passage to the same effect is quoted from the 'Skanda-purāna and it is further said in the same Purāna that for one gavyūti from the banks of the Ganges is a kṣetra (holy place): 'gifts, japa (muttering of sacred texts), homa performed within this extent is equal to doing the same on the Ganges itself, those who die within this kṣetra go to heaven and are not born again.' In the Puṇyāratnākara [435] it is said: 'Hari is present wherever there is the Śālagrāma stone; one dying near a Śālagrāma stone reaches the highest abode of Viṣnu'. It was said that a person (even a non-Aryan) dying within one krosa of a Śālagrāma reaches Vaikuntha (world of Viṣnu) Similarly, one dying in a garden of tulasī (Basil) plants or with Tulasī leaf placed in his mouth at the time of death attains mokṣa even if guilty of crores of sins. These are popular notions held even up to this day among common people, not thoroughly affected by modern ideas.

There are also dicta about the time when it is best to die. The Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata states 'he who dies after the sun has gone to the northern direction (i. e. when the apparent motion of the sun towards the north begins) and on any auspicious nakṣatra and muhūrta is really one who has a store of merit (with him)' [436]. This is based on the ideas of death in Uttarāyaṇa and Dakṣiṇāyana found in the Upanisads. For example, the Chāndogya Up. (IV. 15. 5–6) states 'Now (if one who knows this dies) whether people perform obsequies for him or not he goes to light (arcis), from light to day, from day to the bright half of the moon, from thence to the six months during which the sun goes to the north, from the months to the year, from the year to the sun, from the sun to the moon, from the moon to lightning. There is a person who is not human that leads them to Brahman. This is the path of the Devas, the path that leads to Brahman. Those who proceed on that path do not return to the life of man, yes, they do not return'. There is a similar passage in Chāndogya Up. V. 10.1–2 where it is said that even householders who know the doctrine of the five fires (Pañcāgni-vidyā) and those who in the forest follow the path of faith and austerities (i. e. vānaprasthas and parivrājakas who do not yet know Highest Brahman) go by the path called Devayāna, while (V. 10. 3–7) those, who, living in a village, practise sacrifices, works of public utility and alms, go to smoke, from smoke to night, from night to the dark half of the moon, from thence to the six months when the sun goes to the south, from thence to the worlds of the fathers, from thence to ether (ākāśa) and to the moon, where they consume their works and return again the way they came. The Chān Up. (V. 10. 8) refers to a third place where small creatures (like flies, worms &c.) are continually going and returning. The Br. Up. (VI. 2. 15–16) contains similar passages about Devaloka, Pitrloka and the third world of worms, birds and creeping beings. The Bhagavadgītā, basing itself on these Upanisad passages, puts the matter succinctly (in 8 23–25) as follows:—'I shall state the times at which devotees departing from this world go, never to return or to return. The fire, the flame, the day, the bright fortnight, the six months of the northern (apparent) motion of the sun; departing from the world in these those who know the Brahman go to Brahman. Smoke, night, the dark fortnight, the six months of the southern (apparent) motion of the sun; dying in these the devotee goes to the lunar light and returns. These two paths, bright and dark, are deemed to be eternal in this world. By the one a man goes never to return, by the other he comes back'. The Vedāntasūtra (IV. 3 4–6) explains that the words 'light' 'day' and others are not to be taken in their literal sense (i. e. as signposts or stages on the paths) but they are to be understood as referring to superintending deities that help the spirits and lead them on the path to the worlds of the Devas or of Pitrs (i e. they are ātivāhikas and abhimānidevatās). Śankara on Vedāntasūtra IV. 2. 20 (ataścāyanepi daksine) explains that the waiting for the day of Uttarāyana on the part of Bhisma (narrated in the Mahābhārata) is only meant as a eulogy of the path called 'arcirādi', that one who has realized Brahma, even if he dies in dakṣiṇāyana, does secure the fruits of his knowledge (viz.

---

435. पूजारत्नाकरे। शालग्रामशिला यत्र तत्र संनिहितो हरिः। तत्सन्निधौ त्यजेत् प्राणान् याति विष्णोः परं पदम्॥ लिङ्गपुराणे। शालग्रामसमीपे तु क्रोशमात्रं समन्ततः। कीकटेपि मृतो याति वैकुण्ठभवनं नरः॥ वैष्णवामृते व्यासः। तुलसीकानने जन्तोर्यदि मृत्युर्भवेत् क्वचित्। स निर्भर्त्स्य नरं पापी लीलयैव हरिं विशेत्॥ प्रयाणकाले यस्यास्ये दीयते तुलसीदलम्। निर्वाणं याति पक्षीन्द्र पापकोटियुतोपि सः॥ शुद्धितत्त्व p. 299, शुद्धिप्रकाश p 155. कीकट is the country of Magadha, which was regarded as a land beyond the pale of Aryanism in the Rgveda (III 53.14). Vide Nir VI 32 where the country of कीकट is said to be अनार्यनिवास. The शुद्धिप्रकाश reads कीटकोऽपि (even a worm) for कीकटेपि, which is better, but might be an emendation.

436. आपन्ने तूत्तरां काष्ठां सूर्ये यो निधनं व्रजेत्। नक्षत्रे च मुहूर्ते च पुण्ये राजन्स पुण्यकृत्॥ शान्तिपर्व 298.23 q. by the मोक्षकाण्ड of कल्पतरु p. 254.

teaching Brahma), that Bhīsma waited for the beginning of uttarāyaṇa to abide by popular ideas and practices and to show that he possessed the power to depart from the world at his will owing to the boon conferred on him by his father. The Yājñavalkya-smṛti refers to the path (devayāna)[437] that leads to Devaloka (in III. 193–194, where it reads 'mānasah' for 'amānavah' of the Ch. Up.) and the Pitryāna (in III. 195–196). In spite of the interpretations of the Vedāntasūtra (and of Śankara) the popular belief that death in Uttarāyana is best persisted and still persists. For example, the Baud. P.S.(II.7. 21) remarks '(the sages) provide that death during the northern path of the sun, in the bright half of a month, during the day and at the end of a Śrauta sacrifice is best[438].' The G. P. S. (II. 7.1–2) remarks: 'It is desirable to avoid dying in the dark half of a month or at night and the following sūtras provide for the offering of certain oblations if the death occurs in the dark half or at night.

FUNERAL RITES (antyesti) are a saṃskāra. Antyesti is one of the 16 (or more) saṃskāras of a twice-born person

437. The words 'devayāna' and 'pitryāna' are a legacy from the hoary past. Even in the Rg. there are frequent references to them. In Rg III. 58 5 the Aśvins are addressed a prayer 'may you come here (to this sacrifice) by the paths leading to the abode of the gods' (eha yātam pathibhirdevayānaih). Rg. VII 38 8 also has a similar idea 'may you, being gratified, go by the devayāna paths' (trptā yātam pathibhir-devayānaih). In Rg-VII 76.2 (addressed to Usas) the sage Vasistha exclaims that he has seen the Devayāna paths when the dawn shone in the East (pra me panthā devayānā adrśran). Agni is asked to make the devayāna paths easily accessible and to carry the offerings in a pleased mood (Rg. X 51.5, sugān pathah krnuhi devayānān vaha havyāni sumanasyamānah) Rg. X 98 11 describes Agni as knowing the devayāna paths according to the seasons and a prayer is offered to him to place Aulāna (son of Śantanu) in heaven among the gods (vidvān patha rtuśo devayānān-apyaulānam divi devesu dhehi). In Rg. X 18.1 it is stated that the path of Death is different from devayāna (param mrtyo anu parehi panthām yaste sva itaro devayānāt). In Rg X 2.7 Agni is said to know the pitryāna path (panthāmanu pra vidvān pitryānam). In the Tai. Br II 6 3 5 it is said 'I have heard of two paths of the Fathers; I have heard about the paths of the gods and mortals' (dve srutī aśrnavam pitrnām aham devānām-uta martyānām). The Śat Br. I 9.3 2 remarks 'this is the path called Devayāna or Pitryāna.' In the Br. Up. I.5.16 it is said 'there are indeed three worlds, viz. the world of men, the world of pitṛs and the world of gods'.

438 उदगयने आपूर्यमाणपक्षे दिवा ऋत्वन्ते श्रेयो मरणमित्युपदिशन्ति॥ गौ पि. सू. II 7 21 (ed by Dr. Shamsastri, Mysore).

performed with Vedic mantras according to Manu II. 16, Yāj. I. 10, Jātūkarnya[439]. These samskāras were formerly performed for women also (Āśv gr I. 15.12, I. 16 6, I. 17–11, Manu II. 66) but without Vedic mantras (except in marriage) and for sūdras also (Manu X. 127, Yāj I. 10) but without Vedic mantras. The Baud. P. S. III. 1.4 states that there are two samskāras of every human being and they are like a debt i e. they must be performed, just as a debt must be discharged viz the saṁskāra on birth and the one on death (mṛtasamskāra). Funeral rites and rites after death varied according as the deceased was an āhitāgni (one who had consecrated the śrauta fires) or one who had only kindled the smārta fire, or one who had neither the śrauta fires nor the smārta fire, or a woman, a child, an ascetic (parivrājaka), or one dying in a distant land or one dying by accident or committing suicide &c. The srauta and gṛhya-sūtras differ among themselves in many details even on the same topic and the procedure becomes more elaborate in medieval and later times. It would be impossible to state all the differences on each topic in this section. A separate volume would have to be written for the purpose of setting out all the variations and additions from ancient times to modern times, to discuss why and how they arose or were made, to compare the various sūtras and to compare these again with the purānas and medieval digests, and to appraise their worth or usefulness. All that can be attempted here is to give the bare outlines of the procedure in different sūtras, smṛtis and digests by way of sample in a chronological order. The Nirṇayasindhu (p. 569) expressly says that the last rites differ in each Śākhā, though certain things are common to all [439a] Chronological conclusions have been drawn about the relative ages of the sūtras (as Dr. Caland does), of the smṛtis, purānas and nibandhas from the presence or absence of this or that detail or the elaboration of this or that ritual But with all respect to the industrious scholars of the West such conclusions are often tentative or misleading and are purely subjective in many cases and are often due to ignorance or loss of ancient works.

439. निषेकादिश्मशानान्तो मन्त्रैर्यस्योदितो विधि । तस्य शास्त्रेऽधिकारोऽस्मिञ्ज्ञेयो नान्यस्य कस्यचित् ॥ मनु II. 16. ब्रह्मक्षत्रियविट्शूद्रा वर्णास्त्वाद्यास्त्रयो द्विजा । निषेकाद्याश्मशानान्तास्तेषां वै मन्त्रतः क्रियाः ॥ या I 10, आधानपुंससीमन्तजातनामान्नचौलकाः । मौञ्जी व्रतानि गोदानं समावर्तविवाहकाः ॥ अन्त्यं चैतानि कर्माणि प्रोच्यन्ते षोडशैव तु ॥ जातूकर्ण्य q. in संस्कारप्रकाश p 135 and अन्त्यकर्मदीपक p 1

439 a. प्रतिशाखं भिन्नेष्वन्त्यकर्मसु साधारणं किंचिदुच्यते । निर्णय p 569.

Before setting out the rites of cremation contained in the Śrauta sūtras, Grhya sūtras and later works, it would be best to give here a translation of the five hymns from the Rg. (X. 14–18)[440]. The verses in these hymns are employed by most of the sūtras and are used even now in the cremation rites and most of them occur in the other Vedic Saṁhitās. Varying interpretations have been given of some of these stanzas by Indian and Western commentators and critics Only a few of these have been mentioned in the notes. Besides some stanzas are employed for different details of the cremation rites by the different sūtras All such differences cannot be set out for want of space. The five hymns are so placed that they follow the order of the stages in which the funeral ritual proceeded in fact and is performed even now to a great extent. Vide Appendix for the text of the Ṛgveda hymns without accents.[441]

X. 14. 1 (O! sacrificer!) worship with an offering Yama, king (of pitrs), son of Vivasvat, the gatherer of men (that are dead), who sought out the way for many (men who do meritorious acts) and who passed along great (non-terrestrial) heights[442]. 2. Yama was the first to know (find out) the path for us men; that is a pasture (abode) that cannot be taken away (by anybody), that is (an abode) where our ancient

---

440. The work of Bertram S Puckle on 'Funeral customs' (London, 1926) is a very interesting and instructive one It describes at great length funeral customs in various parts of England, France and other countries in Europe and among Jews and also in other parts of the world. Many of the customs and beliefs that he records bear a close resemblance to customs and beliefs in ancient and modern India, such, as, for example, the alighting of a raven or other black feathered bird on a cottage where a man is very ill as a death warning (p 17), washing and anointing of dead bodies before burial (pp. 34, 36), the hiring of professional women for wailing and shrieking for the dead (p 67), condemning burial at night (p 77), the cutting of the hair as a sign of mourning (p. 91), placing meat and drink on the grave for the spirit of the departed (pp 99–100), refusal of burial in the churchyard by the Church for unbaptised children, suicides, lunatics, and those excommunicated (p. 143).

441. Vide Appendix.

442. X.14.1. This verse is explained in Nir X 20. 'Pareyivāṁsam' may also be taken with 'panthām'. The meaning of 'pravataḥ' is rather uncertain. The Tai Ā. VI 1.1, Sat. Śr. 28 1 20, Baud. P. S. (L.2), Vaik. Śr. S. 20.22 (p. 311) read 'pareyuvāṁsam'.

ancestors went, each knowing his own way thereto[443]. 3. Mātali (Indra's charioteer or Indra himself) with the (pitṛs) called kavya, Yama with the Angirases and Brhaspati with the Ṛkvans become prosperous (or increase in strength); whom (the pitṛs) the gods support and who support the gods; some of them (the gods, Indra and others) are delighted by svāhā (by offerings given after uttering that word) and others (pitṛs) are delighted by svadhā[444]. 4. O! Yama! Being of one mind with the pitṛs called Angirases come to this (sacrifice) and sit down on the seat (of kuśas). May the mantras recited by the wise (priests) bring you (here). May you (O king) delight yourself with this offering! 5. O Yama! (come with the adorable) Angirases and Vairūpas and delight (or exhilarate) yourself. I invoke Vivasvat, your father; (May he delight himself) after sitting on the kuśa grass (spread) in this sacrifice[445] 6. The Angirases, the Navagvas,[446] the Atharvans, the Bhrgus are our pitṛs and love soma (drink). May we secure the good will of those adorable ones! May we be in their gracious favour also! 7. Hasten, hasten[447] by the ancient paths (to that place) where 443 It is quite possible to understand 'eva jajñānāḥ' as meaning 'being thus born' (like ourselves), 'eva' being taken adverbially and 'jajñānāḥ' from 'jan' (to be born). Compare A V 18 3.13 यो मसार प्रथमो मर्त्यानां य मेयाय प्रथमो लोकमेतम्। The Parsi scriptures also speak of Yama (Yima) as the first mortal and as the son of Vivanghat Vide Vendîdad, Farʿard II 1. p 11. (SBE. vol. IV)

444. Kāvyas, Angirases and Rkvans are different classes of Pitṛs In Rg VII 10 4 the Rkvans (singers) are associated with Brhaspati. In other places they are associated with Viṣnu, Aja-Ekapāt and Soma also. The exclamation svāhā is uttered when making an offering to Gods and svadhā when making an offering to pitṛs

445. 'Niṣadya' is really a gerund and not a finite verb We have to supply some verb like 'mādyatām' understood from the preceding half. Vairūpas are a subdivision of the Aṅgiras group

446 Navagvas seem to be a subdivision of Aṅgirases, just as 'daśagvas' are, as in Rg III 29.5, IV 51 4, V 29 12, X 62.6. The late Mr Tilak in his 'Arctic home in the Vedas' (pp 162–169) gave a somewhat far-fetched interpretation of these two words which can hardly be accepted as satisfactory in the presence of words like 'atiṭhigva' (Rg. I 53 8, I 30 7, II 14 7, IV 26 3, VIII 68.17), 'abhiṭyugvan' (Rg VI 45 15), 'etagva' (Rg. VIII 70.7). This verse is explained in Nir XI 19.

447. This and the following three stanzas are addressed to the departed man For the meaning and history of the word Iṣṭāpūrta, vide H of Dh. vol II. pp. 843–845. It means 'the cumulative spiritual result or merit due to the performance of sacrifices and charitable acts'.

our forefathers that went before us passed. May you (the departed) see the two kings Yama and god Varuna rejoicing as they will. 8. (O departed one!) be united in the highest heaven with the pitṛs, with Yama and with your iṣṭāpūrta; leaving here blamable acts (sins), come back to your home! Being endowed with bright lustre, be united with a (new) [448] body! 9 (Ye evil spirits!) Go away, depart, move aside from this place (the cemetery), the pitṛs made (or assigned) for him (the departed person) this abode Yama gives to him (this) resting place characterized by waters, days and nights. 10. (O departed!) proceeding by a good path, hurry on past the two dappled dogs (of Yama), offspring of Saramā, each having four eyes. Thus approach the pitṛs who will recognize [449] you and who enjoy delight in the company of Yama 11. O king Yama! Give him (the departed one) in charge of those two dogs of yours, who are guards, having four eyes each, who guard the path (to pitṛ-loka) and who watch men. May you bestow on him happiness and health! 12. The two messengers of Yama, that have wide nostrils, that are very strong, that are satisfied with difficulty, move among the people. May those two (messengers) restore to us to-day auspicious life in order that we may see the Sun! [450] 13. Extract Soma juice for Yama (O priests!), offer oblation to Yama.[451] Sacrifice, in which Agni is messenger (carrier) to the gods and which is well prepared reaches Yama. 14. (O priests) offer oblation sprinkled with ghee to Yama and then start. May he keep us (tied) to the worship of gods, [452] so that we may live a long life! 15. Offer to king Yama an oblation which is extremely sweet. Here is salutation to the sages who were born before us and who made the path for us.

---

448 This appears to postulate the acquisition of a new ethereal body for the departed enabling him to enjoy the pleasures of pitṛloka.

449. 'Suvidatrāṅ'—who will know or recognize you. The Nir. VI.14 explains 'suvidatrāḥ kalyāṇavidyāḥ'.

450. The life implored for here is that of the persons related to the deceased who are left behind on the earth. 'Asutṛpa' according to Sāyaṇa and Oldenberg means 'who steal away the lives of men'. This is a good meaning in view of what is stated in the last pāda of the verse. In translating as done above the word is taken as 'a+su+tṛpa', while Sāyaṇa takes it as 'asu+tṛpa'.

451. This and the following two verses are addressed to the priests.

452. 'Sa no devesvāyamad'—For the translation of these words given above, compare Rg. IX. 44 5.

16. The one great (Bṛhat-sāman) passes in three sacrifices (called Jyotir-gaur-āyuh) to the six wide expanses [453]. Tristubh, Gāyatrī and the metres are all centered in Yama.

X. 15. 1. May the Soma—loving [454] pitrs, whether of the lower, middling or higher grade, come forward, those pitrs that attained life (an eternal life or a life of spirit) being kind-hearted and knowing rta (the rule of right)! May those pitrs protect us when invoked! 2. Today may this be our salutation to the pitrs who went (died) before (the birth of this departed one) or who went after (the birth of the departed [455]), also (those pitrs) that are seated in this world or those who have places among the powerful people. 3. I have known the pitrs as those who will recognize (me, their descendant) and I have known the stride of Visnu and the child (viz. Agni), the pitrs who sit on kuśa grass and partake of food and Soma offering at their will, repeatedly come here. [456] 4. O pitṛs, that occupy kuśa grass! (come) down towards us with your protection, we have prepared for you these offerings; accept them. May you come with very blissful protection and then may grant us happiness that is free from trouble (or evil)! [457] 5. May the Soma-loving pitrs invited by us to the dear treasures (offerings) placed on the kuśa grass come! May they hear (our prayers) here! May they speak

---

453 This is rather a very obscure stanza The A. V. reads 'pavate' for 'patati'. 'Trikadruka' occurs frequently in connection with Soma (as in Rg II 22 1; VIII 92,21). Sāyana explains that for the performance of Trikadruka sacrifices Yama gives protection and that he comes to the six wide ones for supervising over what was done or not done The six are mentioned in Śat Br I.5 1.22 as fire, earth, water, wind, day and night The six wide ones are referred to in Rg VI 47 3. The conception is rather vague The meaning probably is that in the Trikadruka sacrifices the Brhatsāma is sung and it reverberates throughout the universe (symbolized as the six wide ones) and that all the verses recited in the several metres do the same.

454. X 15. 1 This and the following seven stanzas were employed as mantras in offering oblations to pitrs in the rite performed on the day previous to the day (8th tithi) of Astakā-śrāddha, vide Āśv. gr. II. 4 6.

455 X 15. 2. 'Purvāsah' and 'uparāsah' may simply mean 'ancient and modern' 'Pārthive rajasi'—here probably means 'the regions contiguous to or just above the earth'

456. X. 15 3. 'Napātam' is difficult to construe: probably it refers to Agni who is often addressed as 'ūrjo napāt' (Rg. I. 58.8, II. 6.2, VI.48.2).

457. X. 15.4. 'Sam yoḥ' is explained by the Nir. IV. 21 as शमनं च द्रोगाणां यावनं च भयानाम् and रपः in अरपः as meaning पाप.

in favour of us and may they protect us! 6. O Fathers! May you all, bending your knee and sitting to the right side (of the offering) commend our sacrifice; whatever fault we may commit in reference to you through our being (erring) men, do not injure us for the sake of that. 7. O Fathers! sitting in front of (in the lap of) brilliant (flames) may you bestow wealth on (me) the mortal sacrificer! May you give wealth to the sons (of the deceased mortal) and may you impart vigour (to them)! 8. May Yama desiring offerings and enjoying the company of our ancient and rich pitrs, who came to (or valued) Soma drinks one after another, who were glorious and in whose company Yama (the king of pitrs) found great delight, partake of (eat) the offerings (given by us) according to his liking[458] 9. O Agni! come down towards us with the pitrs that were thirsting and gaping (to reach the world of the gods), that knew about sacrifice and that were authors of stomas by means of prayers (that they offered), that know us well, that are unfailing (in responding to our call), that partake of the kavya offering and that sit round the heated milk. 10. O Agni! come with the pitrs earlier and later (in time) that are unfailing, that partake of the offerings (presented to them), that drink the offerings, that are seated in the same chariot with Indra and the gods, that make obeisances to the gods in their thousands, that sit round the hot milk. 11. O pitrs called Agnisvātta[459], that are good guides! Come (to this rite) and sit down each on his proper seat. Eat (partake of) the pure offerings (offered) on the sacred kuśa grass and then bestow wealth (or prosperity) together with all heroic sons. 12. O Agni Jātavedas! when praised (by us) you, having made the oblations savoury, have carried them and presented (them to the pitṛs). May they eat them as is their wont (or as they are offered with the word svadhā)! O God! May you eat (partake of) the pure offerings! 13. O Jātavedas! you know how many (pitṛs) are there, viz. those who are here (near us), those who are not here, those whom we know and those whom we do not know (because they are remote ancestors). Be gracious to accept as is your habit this

---

458 X. 15. 8.—अनूहिरे is perfect of either वह् with अनु or of ऊह् with अनु. वसिष्ठाः may be taken as meaning 'Vasistha, his descendants and others' and as the worshippers of Pitrs or simply means 'rich or dressed in rich clothes.'

459. X, 15 11. अग्निष्वात्त = अग्नि + स्वात्त (from स्वद्) means 'tasted or licked by Agni'.

sacrifice which is well prepared. 14. (O Agni) Resplendent (or self-ruling) along with those (pitrs) who (whose bodies) were burnt by fire and also whose bodies were not burnt and who enjoy delight (on account of offerings made) with svadhā (or as is their wont) in the midst of the heavens. May you arrange a body as (the deceased) desires that will inspire him to a (new) life (in heaven)!

X. 16. 1. O Agni! Do not burn out this (departed person?), do not singe him all round, do not throw here and there (parts of) his skin or his body, O Jātavedas (fire)! when you burn him completely, may you send him (the deceased) on to the pitrs! 2. O Jātavedas! When you thoroughly burn this (departed person), then may you hand him over to the pitrs! When he (the dead person) follows this (path) that leads on to a (new) life, may he become one that carries out the wishes of the gods[460]! 3. May your eye (of the deceased) go to the Sun, your breath to the wind, may you go to Heaven and earth by your merit or you may go to the waters if you find pleasure there (or if that be your lot)! May you rest (stand) with all your limbs in the herbs! 4 O Jātavedas! May you burn by your heat the goat that is your share! May your flame, may your bright light burn that goat,[461] carry this (departed) to the world of those who do good deeds by means of your beneficent bodies (flames). 5. O Agni! discharge again towards the pitrs (this deceased) who being offered on to you moves about (or wanders) as is his habit. O Jātavedas! may he take on (a new) life and increase his offerings and be united with a new (ethereal) body.[462] 6. (O dead man!) May Agni who consumes all make free from blemish that limb of yours which the dark bird (crow) has pierced or an ant or a snake or a wild beast struck at and may Soma that entered into the brāhmanas do the same[463].

460 X. 16. 2. The words अनुनीतिमेता have in view the words अनुनीतिमेतां यथावद्दा तन्वं कल्पयस्व in X 15 14 above.

461. X 16. 4 अजो भाग'—This refers to the goat that was optionally carried with the dead body Vide note 486 below and Rg. X 16.7 where the cow is mentioned as being burnt with the dead body.

462. X 16 5. For the meaning of शेषस्, compare Rg. VII 4.7 (न शेषो अग्ने अन्यजातमस्ति).

463. X 16 6—For सोम ..आविवेश, compare 'सोमोऽस्माकं ब्राह्मणानां राजा' शतपथब्रा V. 4.2 3 and 'स यदि सोमं ब्राह्मणाना भक्ष ' ऐ. ब्रा.' 35 3 In X.16.7 the idea seems to be that when the corpse is covered with the parts of a slaughtered animal the corpse may not be burnt too quickly.

7. (O deceased) put on (yourself) with cows an armour (i e. against fire flames) of Agni (i e. with the skin of the cow) and surround yourself with the thick fat (of the cow), so that (Agni) that overwhelms with his lustre, that takes delight (in destroying things), that is bold and seeks to burn completely may not scatter (all your parts). 8. O Agni! do not destroy this cup that is dear to the gods and the Soma-loving (pitṛs). In this cup from which the gods drink, the immortal gods take delight[464]. 9. I send far away the fire that eats raw flesh: may Agni that carries evil (or sins) go (to regions) where Yama reigns! The other Agni (Jātavedas), knowing everything, may take even here the offering to the gods 10. I, observing the other Agni (Jātavedas) for the purpose of offering a sacrifice to the pitṛs, leave aside the fire that devours raw flesh and that entered your house; may he (the other fire) urge on to the highest world the gharma (heated milk or sacrifice[465]). 11. May that fire which carries the havya[466] offerings offer them to the pitṛs that prosper according to ṛta! May he offer the oblations to the gods and pitṛs! 12. (O Agni!) we who love you have established you and have kindled you. May you loving (the pitṛs) bring here the pitṛs that love us in order that they may partake of the offering! 13. O Agni! May you extinguish (with water) that spot which you burnt (at the) time of cremation! May Kiyāmbu (plant) arise here and may dūrvā creeper spreading its tendrils grow here! 14. O Śītikā (cool plant), O herb full of cooling effect, O Hlādikā (freshening herb) causing delight, may you be well associated with a she frog! May you gladden this fire!

---

464 X 16. 8. This mantra is repeated as invocation when the prauītā water is carried forward in the cup As stated below all sacrificial implements are placed on the body of the deceased āhitāgni and burnt But the sage prays that the cup may not be completely destroyed, since it may have to be used in the other world by the departed spirit.

465. X. 16. 10. This verse is rather involved If the words of this verse and the next are literally construed it would seem that the kravyād fire was employed for pitryajña It is possible to hold that kravyād fire was considered as something evil and to be kept distinct from the ordinary or sacrificial fire.

466 X 16.11 Sāyana explains on the assumption that the word is kavyavāhana in this, while the Saṃhitā and the padapātha have kravyavāhana. The Vāj S. 19 65 and Tai S. II. 6 12 5 read 'havyavāhanah'. Here apparently at least the flesh-eating fire is admitted not only in the rites for the pitṛs but also in the rites for gods.

X. 17. The verses of this hymn, except 3-6, have hardly any bearing on funeral rites. Therefore only those four verses are translated here. The first two verses refer to the marriage of Vivasvat with the daughter of Tvastr and to the legend of the birth of Yama and Yamī from Vivasvat. Both are explained at length in Nir. XII. 10-11. Verses[467] 7-9 which contain prayers to Sarasvatī are almost the same as A. V. 18. 1. 41-43 and are employed by the Kauśika-sūtra (81.39) in the cremation rite along with A. V. 7.68 1-2 and 18 3.25.

3. May the all-knowing Pūsan, who does not allow cattle to perish and who protects the world, discharge (despatch) you from this (world to the next)! May he (Pūsan) hand you over to these pitrs and may Agni hand you over to the gods that know you well! 4. May Pūsan, who is the life of the Universe and who is himself life, protect you! May he who is ahead of you guard you on the way (to heaven)! May god Savitr place you in that place where the doers of good deeds went and dwell 5. Pūsan knows all these quarters in order; may he take us by (a path) most free from danger! He is the bestower of happiness, full of refulgence, he has all heroes with him; may he (Pūsan) the wise one go in front of us without committing a mistake! 6 Pūsan exists (stands) in the fore-front of the paths (leading to the world of pitrs), of the paths leading to heaven and of the paths on the earth. He stands facing both the worlds that are very dear (to all) and he, the knowing one, travels towards and away from both.

X. 18. 1. O Death! Move aside along another path that is your own and different from the Devayāna path. I address you who have eyes and ears. Do not injure our children, do not harm our heroic sons. 2. (O relatives)[468] that are sacrificers! Since you have come obliterating the foot-prints of Death and firmly establishing long life for yourselves, prospering with progeny and wealth, may you be pure and holy! 3. These living (relatives) have turned back separated from the dead; this day our invocation (sacrifice to) of the gods became auspicious. We then went forward for dancing, for 467. Sarasvatī is a sacred river and also imagined as a deity Rg VI. 61 and VII 95 are two hymns addressed to Sarasvatī. Probably waters of rivers were used at the time of cremation and they are all identified with and held as sacred as Sarasvatī.

468. X 18.2 This verse is addressed to the relatives when they turn homeward after cremation.

laughter (with our children) firmly establishing our long life. 4. I place (here) this barrier (stone) for the (protection of) the living (relatives, son and the like) so that none of them may go this goal (that the departed went). May they live for a hundred prosperous autumns! May they keep off Death by means of the mountain[469] (the stone). 5. O Dhātṛ! Arrange the lives of these (the survivors) in the same way as the days come one after another in proper order, as the seasons follow each other in a proper order, as a younger one does not abandon an elder (relative)[470]. 6. May you (the survivors) accepting old age attain (long) life, striving in order (of age) whatever your numbers may be; may Tvaṣṭr of noble birth and gracious give you here (in this world) a long life to live![471] 7. Let these women whose husbands are worthy and are living enter the house with ghee (applied) as collyrium (to their eyes). Let these wives first step into house, tearless, without any affliction,[472] and well adorned. 8 O wife (of the dead)! Raise yourself up towards the world of the living (your sons and other relatives); you lie down near one (your husband)

---

469. X 18 4. Paridhis are encircling sticks of sacrificial wood such as palāśa, khadira placed round the fire. This verse is employed by Āśv. gṛ. IV. 6.9 in the śāntikarma performed after the collection of bones. Here the fire is surrounded on three sides by the wooden sticks and a stone is placed on the north of the fire with the last quarter as stated by Āśv. gṛ. IV. 6. 10 अन्तर्वेद्यूदीचीं दधतां पर्वतेनेत्यश्मानमुत्तरतोऽग्नेः कृत्वा...यथाहान्यनुपूर्वं भवन्तीत्यनात्मानीक्षेत। अनात्म here means all members of the family, men and women, except the performer of the rite.

470. X. 18.5 यथा न पूर्वमपरो &c. Probably this refers to the funeral procession arranged according to ages, as Āśv. gṛ. IV. 2.9 states expressly 'अन्वञ्चोऽनात्मा अधोनिवीताः मवृत्तशिखा ज्येष्ठप्रथमाः कनिष्ठजघन्याः'. The वै. पि सू. I. 21.4 remarks 'अथैनाननुपूर्वं कल्पयति यथाहान्यनुपूर्वं भवन्तीति or the idea may be that each generation should die in the order it was born and that a son should not die before his father.

471. X. 18 6. This may be symbolic of the fact that the members of the family of the deceased are made to stand on the hide of an ox spread to the west of the fire. Vide Āśv. gṛ. IV. 6.8 'अथाग्निमुपसमाधाय पश्चादस्यानडुहं चर्नास्तीर्य...वस्त्रिऋनात्मानारोहयेदारोहतायुर्जरसं वृणाना इति.'

472. X 18 7. This verse was employed in the procedure of widow burning (satī or sahamaraṇa or anugamana) by medieval and later writers. Some of them read 'agneḥ' or 'agne' for 'agre'. But even without this change Aparārka (p. 111) and others rely for the practice of satī on this verse. For a discussion on this verse and the next, the different readings in the old texts, the different theories built upon these and the practice of widow-burning, vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 617–619 and pp. 625–635.

who is now lifeless; come! You have kept true to this your wifehood of the husband who held your hand (formerly in marriage) and who loved you passionately[473] 9. (I) Take the bow from the hand of the departed (ksatriya) in order that there may be in us martial vigour, brilliance and strength[474]. May thou (the departed) there and may we here be endowed with heroic sons and conquer here all competing and aggressive enemies! 10. (O departed) approach this mother Earth which is spread wide and is pleasant May this young one (the Earth) as soft as (wool) to you who have bestowed gifts save you from the lap of Death.[475] 11 O Earth! heave yourself up, do not crush it, be of easy approach and of easy resort to him, and O Earth! cover him (the dead person represented by his bones) just as a mother would cover her son with the fringe (of her garment).[476] 12 Let the Earth heave itself up and remain firm. Let the

---

473. X. 18 8 This verse is somewhat misplaced. It should occur earlier in X.14 The last quarter is rather difficult to construe In the Tai Ā VI 1 there is a similar verse 'इय नारी पतिलोक वृणाना निपद्यत उप त्वा मर्त्य प्रेतम्। विश्वं पुराणमनुपालयन्ती तस्यै प्रजा द्रविणं चेह धेहि'॥ The Tai Ā. VI 1 also has the verse उदीर्ष्व नार्यभि० and as printed reads 'सम्बभूव', but सायण explains आभिमुख्येन सम्यक् प्राप्तुहि (i. e he explains सम्बभूथ) The बौ पि सू I 8.1–2 reads सचभूव and says about Rg X 18 8 and Tai. Ā verse अथास्य भार्यामुपसवेशयति। इयं नारी . धेहीति। ता प्रतिहितः सव्ये पाणावभिपाद्योत्थापयति उदीर्ष्व...बभूवेति।

474. X 18 9 अस्मे is used with all cases as shown by the Nir. VI.7. Here it may be equal to अस्मभ्यं or अस्मासु This verse also should occur earlier along with verse 8 above In Śān Sr I6 13 13 both 8 and 9 are called utthāpinī (verses) 'उदीर्ष्व नार्युदीर्ष्वातः पतिवत्युदीर्ष्वातो विश्वावसोऽहमन्वतीत्युत्थापिन्य' The com remarks 'आभिर्होत्रादयो महिषीमुत्थापयन्ति'. उदीर्ष्वात पतिवती is Rg X 85 21, उदीर्ष्वातो विश्वावसो is Rg X 85.22 and अहमन्वती is Rg X 53 8 These are recited in अश्वमेध at the time of making the crowned queen get up from near the dead horse Compare H of Dh. vol II. p 1235. The तै आ VI. 1 reads three verses respectively applicable to ब्राह्मण, क्षत्रिय or वैश्य departed person as 'सुवर्ण हस्तादादाना०, धनुर्हस्तादा०, मणिं हस्तादादाना' and बौ पि सू I 8 3–5 cites them and remarks 'अथास्य सुवर्णेन हस्तौ निमृजते स्वर्णं हस्ता० इति ब्राह्मणस्य, धनुर्हस्ता० इति क्षत्रियस्य' &c.

475 X 18 10 Vide the passage from Āśv Sr 5 where this and the following three verses are stated to be among the 24 verses to be recited on the death of a dīksita The Āśv gr 4 5 5 employs this as a mantra to be recited at the time of depositing in a pit the jar containing the burnt bones of the dead The बृहद्देवता (VII 17–18) says that X 18 10–13 are employed in the rite of collecting the bones pillars in their thousands stand up supporting this house. May these homes (the clods of earth) drop him nourishment! May they become here for all days the shelter [477] for him (the departed represented by bones)! 13. I prop up the earth around you for your sake. May I placing this lump of clay receive no harm! May the pitṛs support (make steady) this post! [478] May Yama provide here seats (or resting places) for you. 14. (The gods) have placed me in the day that will come back (tomorrow) like the feather of an arrow; (therefore) I restrain backwards (stop) my speech as a person restrains a horse with a bridle. [479]

476 'X 18. 11. This verse is employed by the Āśv gr 4.5 6 for recital at the time of scattering dust over the jar containing the charred ones ;

It should be noted that the word 'pitr-yajña' actually occurs in Rg. X. 16. 10. What does it mean? It has to be remembered that the hymns Rg. X. 15–18 refer to rites immediately on the death of a single person. They are not concerned with rites performed for deceased male ancestors long after their deaths. The anxiety (in X. 15–18) seems to be to make the ancient pitrs (styled Barhisadaḥ and Agnisvāttāḥ in Rg. X. 15. 3–4, 11) favourably disposed to the recently departed spirit. Havis (sacrifical food such as boiled rice) was offered to the ancient pitṛs (Rg. X. 15. 11) who were supposed to have partaken of the food offered (X. 15. 12). The purpose of these Rgvedic hymns is entirely different from the purpose of the mantras in Tai. S. I. 8. 5 (which refer to the pitṛyajña performed in Sākamedha). As a matter of fact three of the mantras in Tai. S. I. 8. 5 do occur in Rg. X. 57. 3–5 and are employed in the piṇḍa-pitṛyajña. There is hardly any reason to suppose that the pitṛyajña in Rg. X. 15. 10 is more ancient than the piṇḍapitṛyajña. It is quite possible that both referring as they do to different matters were coeval.

---

477. X. 18. 12. This is recited after the bones are covered with particles of dust. It is probable that the particles were poetically described as posts.

478. X 18 13. It looks very likely that a wooden post was employed as a support for the urn that was deposited under ground.

479. X. 18. 14. This verse is rather obscure and various interpretations have been proposed by German scholars (Roth, Grassmann, Ludwig, Geldner and Oldenberg) and others like Whitney and Hopkins The translation is only tentative, but it probably brings out the sense in the context much better than many other interpretations. The idea probably is that the speaker wants to disconnect himself from the dead just as a feather may become loosened from an arrow that is shot and therefore he states that he wants to stop addressing the dead and close up all connection with the dead. The Bṛhaddevatā (VII. 18–19) remarks on this verse 'प्रतीचीने यथाहानि अपह्नुत्येतराणि तु । अहःसु पितरो वधूरित्याशास्तेऽन्त्ययाशिषः' ॥

It would be interesting to see how the ceremonies on the death of an āhitāgni are described in the śrauta and gṛhya sūtras. The Āśv. Śr. S. VI. 10 describes what is to be done in case one that has undergone a dīkṣā (initiation) for a Soma sacrifice or a sattra dies before the sacrifice is finished. It states "When the dīkṣita is dead, they take out the body by the tīrtha,[480] place it on the spot where it was intended that avabhṛtha (bath at the end of a soma or sattra sacrifice) was to be taken and deck the body with the decorations that ordinarily are placed on a dead body. They cut the hair (on the head) of the corpse, the hair on the lips, the hair on the body and also pare the nails. They apply paste of Nalada (Indian spikenard) to the corpse and throw on it a garland of naladas. Some (having cut open the entrails) take out the fecal matter from them and fill them with prsadājya (when clarified butter is mixed with curds it is so called). They cut off a portion as wide as the foot of the corpse from a new (unworn) garment and cover the dead body with it in such a way that the fringe is towards the west (the head being placed towards the east) and the feet of the corpse are exposed to view. The portion cut off from the piece of cloth is taken by the sons and the like. The deceased man's śrauta fires are placed on the churning sticks (the two araṇis), the dead body is taken outside the vedi (fire altar) towards its south, fire is produced by attrition and then the body is burnt therewith. After returning from the cremation, they should finish the work of the day. On the next morning, the recitation of the śāstras, the singing of the stotras and the samstavas (reciting hymns in chorus) should be without repetition and the uttering of the hum sound. On the same day before taking up the grahas (cups), the priests come out by the tirtha, go round the place of cremation with the right hand turned away (from the place) and sit round it in the following manner viz. the hotr priest sits to the west (of the place of cremation), the adhvaryu to the north, and the sāma priests to the west of the adhvaryu (and the brahmā priest to the south). Then the sāma priests sing in a low voice the verse beginning with 'āyam gauh prśnirakramīt' When the singing is finished the hotr walks round the place of cremation thrice with his left 480. तीर्थ means the path to the sacrificial ground between the चात्वाल and उत्कर (vide H. of Dh vol. II p 984) For स्तोत्रिय that occurs a little lower down, vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 1186.

turned towards the place of cremation and without uttering the syllable 'om' recites immediately after the song of the sāma priests the stotriya in a low voice and also the following verses attributed to Yama and Yāmyāyanas (as seers or authors) viz. Ṛg X 14. 7–8, 10–11, X. 16. 1–6, X. 17. 3–6, X. 18. 10–13, X. 154. 1–5. They should finish with Ṛg. X. 14.12, then collect the charred bones in a jar, take the jar by the way of the tīrtha and place it on the seat that was occupied by the deceased sacrificer.[481]

The Śānkhāyana Śr. S. (IV. 14–15) deals at great length with the death of an āhitāgni and the rites that follow. Kāt. Śr.

---

481. संस्थिते तीर्थेन निहत्यावभृथे मेतालङ्कारान् कुर्वन्ति । केशश्मश्रुलोमनखानि वापयन्ति। नलदेनाछलिम्पन्ति। नलदमालां प्रतिमुञ्चन्ति। निर्पुरीषमेके कृत्वा घृतदाज्य पूरयन्ति। अहतस्य वासस पाशत. पादमात्रमवच्छिद्य भोर्णुवन्ति प्रत्यग्दक्षेनावि पादम् । अवच्छेदमस्य पुत्रा अमा कुर्वीरन् अग्नीनस्य समारोप्य दक्षिणतो बहिर्वेदि दहेयुः।...प्रत्येत्याह· समापयेयुः। प्रातरग्न्यासमनभिहिङ्कृतानि शस्त्राण्युवचनाभिष्टवनसंस्तवानि । पुरा ग्रहग्रहणात् तीर्थेन निष्क्रम्य त्रिः प्रसव्यमायतनं परीत्य पर्युपविशन्ति। पश्चाद्धोता। उत्तरोध्वर्युः। तस्य पश्चाच्छन्दोगा.। आयं गौः पृश्निरक्रमीदित्युपाशु स्तुते। स्तुते होता प्रसव्यमायतनं परिव्रजन्स्तोत्रियमनुद्रवेदपशुवन्। यामीश्च। प्रेहि प्रेहि पथिभि. पूर्व्येभिरिति पञ्चाना तृतीयामुद्धरेत्। मैनमग्ने विदहो माभिशोचं इति पद्। यूपा त्वेतभ्यावयतु प्र विद्वानिति चतस्र उपसर्प मातरं भूमिमेतानिति चतस्र. सोम एकेभ्यः। उरुणसा उदुम्बलावेति च समाप्य सञ्चित्य तीर्थेन प्रपाद्य यथासनमासादयेयु'। आश्व. श्रौ 10.

The Śat. Br. (XII, 5 2.5) refers to the practice of cleansing the deceased of all foul matter, but does not approve of it It recommends 'having washed him out inside he anoints with ghee and thus makes the body sacrificially pure' आयं गौः पृश्निरक्रमीत्—is the first verse of the hymn Rg. X. 189. 1–3 which are also S V. No. 630–632 (Āranyakānda) and 1376–78 (Uttarārcika). The hymn also occurs in the other Vedas. The verses are called सार्वराज्य ऋचः. It may be noticed that the Āśv. gr. (IV.4 6) prescribes the recitation of the 24 mantras prescribed in the Āśv Sr. above and employs some more verses (from Ṛg X. 14–18) in the ritual set out below from the Āśv. gr. In the Āśv Sr. II, 19 there is a description of a rite called 'pitryā karma,' in which offerings are offered in fire taken from the Dakṣiṇāgni and in which the devatās are five viz. Pitarah-somavantaḥ, Soma pitrmān, Pitaraḥ barhiṣadah, Pitaraḥ Agniṣvāttāḥ, Yama, for each of whom three verses are recited respectively in order viz Rg. X. 15. 1, IX.96 11, X 15.5, Rg I 91.1, I 91 12. VIII. 48 13, X. 15.4, X 15 3. X. 15,2; X. 15.11, X 15 13, X. 15.14; X. 14.4–5, X. 14 1. Rg. X, 16 12 (repeated thrice) becomes the sāmidhenīs in that rite, X. 14 5 is Yājyā and X 14.4 and X 14.1 are anuvākyās, Rg. X. 15 9, IV 11 3, I 96.1 are recited when the rite is finished (instead of Agni Sviṣṭakṛt Agni Kavyavāhana is invoked); Rg. X. 16 11, X. 15.12 are two Samyājyās in Vasaṭkāra. The editor of the Prayogaratna explains that Nalada means 'Uśīra' (i e Wālā in Marathi) and that some substitute japā flowers (china rose) for naladas.

S. 25.7 does the same but more briefly. Kāt. (25. 7. 18) refers to the cutting of hair and nails and taking out fecal matter and Kauś. (80. 13–16), Śān. Śr. 4. 14 4–5 also speak of the cutting of hair, of bathing the dead body, applying paste and putting garlands. The Baud. P. S (1 2) refers to these and adds that if they cut open his entrails from the right side they again sew it with darbha grass or they may simply wash the body (without taking out the fecal matter), cover the body with a piece of cloth, deck it, remove the body by the way between the vedi and utkara, place it on a couch (āsandī) over which a black antelope skin was spread with the head to the south, put Nalada garland on it and cover it with an unworn piece of cloth (as in Āśv. Śr. above). Sat Śr. 28 1. 22 and G. P. S. I. 10–14 contain similar provisions adding that the toes of the feet and thumbs of the corpse are tied with a white thread or the fringe of a garment (baddhvā daśenāngusthau-pādayoh pānyośca, G. P. S. I. 12) and that the āsandī (a small couch or chair on which the corpse was carried) was to be of udumbara wood. The Kauśikasūtra (80. 3. 3–45) refers to numerous stanzas from A V. that are to be recited in kindling the funeral fire and offering oblations, viz. 18. 2. 4 and 36, 18. 3. 4; 18. 1. 49–50, 58; 18. 1. 41–43; 7. 68 1–2; 18. 3. 25; 18. 2 4–18 (omitting 18. 2. 10); 18.4.1–15 &c. Compare SBE vol. XI p. XLI for Budhist practics.

The Āśv. gr.[482] (IV. 1 and 2) prescribes in general the ceremonies on the death of an āhitāgni, while the Āśv. Śr. S. quoted

---

482. It deserves to be noted that the numbering of the sūtras in Āśv. gr. IV. 1–2 differs in different editions considerably The rules about the selection of the site for cremation are ancient. The Sat Br. XIII. 8.1 and Kāt. Sr XXI. 3,15–26 also lay down elaborate rules. The latter may be set out here. 'the site for cremation should be one surrounded by a thicket of trees, but it should be so open that the sun shines directly on it at mid-day. It should be saltish land or land sloping to the north or it may be all level land. Some say that it should slope towards the south. The spot should be such that the houses in the village cannot be seen from it and should be at a distance from the road and from the vata, pippala, tilvaka, haridru, sphūrjaka, bibhīdaka and other trees that have an evil name (such as śleśmātaka and kovidāra) The Śat. Br. XIII 8.1.16 names all these trees that are to be avoided The spot should be such that a pile of wood (as directed in Kāt. Śr. 25 7 16–17) can be constructed thereon. It should be a pleasing one and should have a thicket of various trees to its west or in default, water, which may be to its west or north The spot should have streams or holes and grass growing thereon The Kāt Śr. S.

(Continued on the next page)

above deals with what should be done in case the āhitāgni dies while engaged in a Soma or other sacrifice. The Āśv. gr. remarks 'when an āhitāgni dies, one (a son or other relative) should arrange to have a piece of land dug up to the south-east or south-west at a place sloping towards the south or south-east, or according to some towards the south-west. The piece of land dug up should be of the length of a man with upraised arms, of the breadth of one vyāma[483] and one vitasti (twelve finger breadths) in depth. The cemetery (śmaśāna) should[484] be free (open) on all sides. It should abound in herbs, but plants with thorns and with milky juice (should be dug out) as stated before (in Āśv. gr. II. 7.5 about vāstu-parīkṣā). From which the waters flow on all sides (that is the spot should be a little higher than the surrounding ground); this should be a characteristic required for that (kind of) cemetery where (the body) is to be burnt. They should cut off the hair on the head, the lips and the body and pare the nails (of the deceased); this has been declared already (in Āśv. Śr. VI. 10.2). They should make provision for plenty of sacrificial grass and clarified butter. In this (funeral rite) they pour clarified butter into curds. This is the prṣadājya used

---

(Continued from the last page)

21 3. 27 adds that a bamboo staff with a bundle of grass at its top is carried to the cremation ground and held by a person to the north of the ground while the rites go on and that it is brought back to the house and kept raised at the house. The ground is measured and pegs of palāśa, śamī, varana and a stone are driven into the ground from the east, north, west and south in order. The Śat. Br. XIII. 8. 4. 1 mentions pegs (śanku). Sān. Śr. (IV. 14, 6-9) states that the ground of cremation slopes to the south or south-east, that the ground is swept with a palāśa branch with the verse 'apeta' (Rg. X. 14. 9), then it is cleared with the sphya and sprinkled with water and the pile of wood is made to face south-east.

483. व्याम is defined as 'व्यामो बाह्वोः सकरयोस्ततयोस्तिर्यगन्तरम्' अमरकोश. It is as much as the out-stretched arms together with the hands (i. e. a fathom).

484. इमशान has two meanings viz. the place where a corpse is cremated and also the place where the charred bones (after cremation) collected in a jar are deposited in the earth. नारायण remarks on आश्व. गृ. IV. 1.11 (अभित आकाशं इमशानं) 'इमशानग्रहणेनात्र इमशानद्वयं गृह्यते । ..दहनदेशश्च इमशानं सञ्चित्य यत्रास्थीनि निधीयन्ते तच्च इमशानम् । तद्द्वयं सर्वतआकाशं भवेत्'. The शतपथब्रा. XIII 8.1.1 derives इमशान in two ways as being a form of शवाक्ष or इमशाक्ष in the words अथास्मै कल्याणं कुर्वन्ति । अथास्मै इमशान कुर्वन्ति । . इमशा उ हैव नाम पितृणामत्तारस्ते हामुष्मिँल्लोकेऽकृतइमशानस्य साधुकृत्यामुपदग्भयन्ति तेभ्य एतद्वासं करोति तस्माच्छ्मशानं इमशानं ह वै तच्छ्मशानमित्याचक्षते परोक्षम्। अथर्व० 18 4 44 shows that the dead body was carried in a cart drawn by oxen.

(in the rites) for pitṛs. (The relatives of the deceased) carry his sacred fires and his sacrificial vessels in that direction (viz. where the ground is dug up for cremation). After these aged persons, in odd numbers, men and women not going together, carry the dead body. Some say that (the dead body) should be carried in a cart with a seat drawn[485] by oxen. Some prescribe that a she-animal, either a cow[486] or a she-goat, of one colour or of a dark colour (should be taken to the cemetery). The (relatives of the dead) tie (a rope) to the left fore-foot and lead it behind (the corpse). Then follow the relations (of the deceased) with their yajñopavītas brought low (round their body) and with the top knot untied (dishevelled), the older ones going first, the younger ones last. Having thus arrived at the spot (of cremation), the performer (of cremation rites) while walking three times round the spot (for cremation) with his left side turned towards it, sprinkles water on it with a śamī twig with the verse 'apeta vīta vi ca sarpatātaḥ' (Rg. X. 14. 9). To the south-east on a slightly raised corner (of the spot for cremation), he (son or the like) places the Āhavanīya fire, to the north-west the Gārhapatya fire and to the south-west the Dakṣiṇa fire. Then a person that knows (how to prepare a funeral pile) collects a pile of fuel between the fires (on the dug-up spot). Then the performer of the rites spreads barhis (kuśas) and a black antelope skin with the hairy part outside on the pile, (the relatives) place the dead body thereon carrying it by way of the north side of the Gārhapatya fire and turning its head towards the Āhavanīya fire. They make the wife 485. The Baud. P. S. (I. 4. 5-6) says that servants or old men should carry the dead body on a couch or chair covering the body with a mat or according to some in a cart.

486. अनुस्तरणी is a cow or she-goat which is killed and then is made to cover the dead body with its limbs. The word is explained by नारायण as 'प्रेतमनुस्तर्यते या स्त्री पशुः सानुस्तरणी'. The कात्यायनश्रौत (25.7.34-37) 'अनुस्तरणी चेत्पश्याकर्णमाहत्य हस्तयोर्धृक्वौ। अङ्गैरङ्गानीति जातूकर्ण्यः। न वास्ति सन्देहात्। वपया सुख-मवच्छाद्याग्निभिरादीपयति। आहुतिं जुहोति पुत्रो भ्रातान्योवा ब्राह्मणोऽसात्त्वमधिजातोऽसि स्वर्दयं जायता पुन. असौ स्वर्गाय लोकाय स्वाहेति। The mantra अस्मात्त्व.. लोकाय स्वाहा is वाज सं 35 22 Vide शतपथ ब्रा XII. 5 2 15 for the same words and mantra as in Kāt Sr. The com of Yājñikadeva on Kāt. Sr. 25 7 34 explains धृक्वौ as कुक्षिगोलकौ Vide also Baud. P. S I 4 1 and I 9-10, Sat. Sr 28.2 3-13, Kauś 81.20-27 The latter prescribes that the cow is led round with the left side towards the corpse with the mantras A V 18 3 3 and 4, that the cow is struck on her buttocks and loins, that two vṛkkas are taken from the cow's back and placed on the hands of the corpse with the mantra 'ati drava' (A V. XVIII 2 11) which is Rg. X 14 10 of the deceased (belonging to any one of the three higher varnas) lie down (on the pile) to the north of the dead body, and also place his bow to the north if (the deceased was) a kṣatriya. The wife's brother-in-law[487] (husband's brother) or a representative of the husband or a pupil (of the deceased) or an old servant (slave) should make her rise (from the pile) with the mantra 'udīrṣva nāryabhi jīvalokam' (Ṛg. X. 18. 8); the performer (of the rites) should mutter this verse if a śūdra (servant) makes her rise and he takes away the bow with the verse 'dhanur-hastādādadāno' (Ṛg. X. 18. 9). It has been stated (above what is to be done) in case a śūdra (should perform this act). Having strung the bow he should before the piling up of the things (mentioned below on the dead body) is done, break the bow to pieces and throw it on the pile.[488] He then should put the following sacrificial implements (on the dead body) viz. into the right hand the spoon called Juhū, in the left hand the spoon Upabhṛt, on his right side the Sphya (wooden sword), on his left side the Agnihotrahavanī (the ladle with which the Agnihotra offerings were offered into fire), on his chest, head and teeth respectively the dhruvā (the big sacrificial ladle), the dishes (or the kapālas), the pressing stones (used for pressing out Soma juice in a soma sacrifice), on the two nostrils the two small ladles (sruva), on the ears the two Prāśitra-haranas,[489] if there be only one then breaking

487. Many of the sūtras refer to this act of making the wife of the deceased lie down to the north of the dead body on the funeral pile and then making her rise up from it. Vide Kauśikasūtra 80. 44-45 'इयं नारीति पत्नीमुपसंवेशयति। उदीर्ष्वेत्युत्थापयति' These two verses are A. V. XVIII. 3. 1-2. Sat Sr. (28. 2. 14-16) states that before the corpse is placed on the pyre the wife is made to lie down near it with the verse 'iyam nārī' and then her husband's brother or another brāhmana makes her get up with the verse 'udīrṣva nārī'. The same sūtra (28. 2. 22) says that the wife may be made to lie down near the corpse after the latter is placed on the pyre or before (as it appears to prefer).

488. Here the Sat. Br. XII 5. 2. 6 and some of the sūtras (such as Kāt. Sr. 25. 7. 19, Sān. Śr. IV. 14. 16-35, Sat Śr. 28. 2. 23-50, Kauśika 81. 1-19, Baud P. S I. 8-9) and smṛtis like Gobhila (III 24) add that in the seven seats of vital air viz. the mouth, the two nostrils, the two eyes and the two ears, they cast small pieces of gold. Others add that sesame wetted with ghee are also thrown on the corpse The G. P S. II. 7 12 says that it is the adhvaryu who deposits the kapālas on the head (of the dead body).

489. On the Prāśitraharana, vide H. of Dh vol II. p 1064 (the vessel in which a portion of purodāśa is kept for the brahmā priest). For the Samyā (yoke-pin), vide H. of Dh vol. II. p. 1112 n. 2487.

it into two; on the belly the pātrī (in which the oblations ar collected before offering) and the camasa (cup) in which (the idā portion) cut off is placed; on his private parts the śamyā· on the thighs the two aranis (wood sticks for kindling fire by attrition) and on the spanks the mortar and pestle, on the feet the winnowing baskets (śūrpa) or if there be one only, by tearing it in two pieces. Those of the sacrificial implements which have a hollow (into which a fluid can be poured) are filled with Pṛṣadājya. The son (of the deceased) should take the upper and the lower mill-stones for himself and the implements made of copper, iron and earthenware [490].

The Śat. Br. XII. 5. 2. 14 first states that sacrificial implements made of stone or earthenware should be donated to a brāhmana but people regard the latter as a corpse-bearer (and so) they should be thrown into water.[491] Taking out the omentum (vapā) of the Anustaranī she-animal he should cover therewith the head and the mouth (of the deceased) with the verse 'Agner varma' (Rg. X. 16. 7). Taking out the two kidneys (vrkkau) of the animal he should deposit them into the 490. It should be noted that there are some variations in the statements about the sacrificial implements made here and in the Sat Br. XII. 5. 2, Sat Sr. 28. 2 23–50, Kāt Sr 25 7 21–33, Kaus. 81 1–19, Baud. P. S. I. 8 11–I. 9 7, Śān Śr. IV 14. 18–36. For example, the Śāñ Śr. (IV. 16 21–31) prescribes that the Agnihotrahavanī is placed on the thront and the two aranīs on the private parts, while Āśv. gr. places the agnihotrahavanī on the left side and the śamyā on private parts Sabara quotes several times a passage which says 'They burn the āhitāgni with his (vedic) fires and sacrificial implements' (āhitāgnim-agnibhir dahanti yajñapātraiśca) on Jai IV 1 9, VI, 6 34, XI 3.34 Those words occur also in Baud P. S. III 1.9 Jai XI 3 34 states the proposition that the cremation of the sacrificer with the sacrificial implements is what is called pratipattikarman (the final disposal) of the yajñapātras.

491. अथास्य सप्तसु प्राणायतनेषु सप्त हिरण्यशकलान्प्रत्यस्यति ज्योतिर्गौऽमृतं हिरण्य ज्योतिरेवास्मिंस्तदमृतं दधाति। अथैनमन्तरेणाग्नीश्चितिं चित्वा कृष्णाजिनमुत्तरलोम प्राचीनग्रीवं प्रस्तीर्य तस्मिन्नेनमुत्तानं निपाद्य ध्रुवं घृतेन पूर्णां दक्षिणे पाणावादधाति सव्य उपभृतमुरसि ध्रुवा मुखेऽग्निहोत्रहवणीं नासिकयोः स्रुचौ कर्णयो प्राशित्रहरणे शीर्ष्णमसं प्रणीताप्रणयन पार्श्वयो· शूर्पे उदरे पात्री समवत्तधानी पृषदाज्यवतीं शिश्नस्थान्ते शम्यामाण्डयो· रन्ते वृषारावन्वक्षुलूखल च मुसलं चान्तरेणोरू अन्यानि यज्ञपात्राणि दक्षिणे पार्णौ रपयम्। स एष यज्ञायुधी यजमान· । यथा विन्मदामोयमतीयादेवमेव योऽस्य स्वर्गो लोको जितो भवति तमन्वत्येति। शतपथब्रा. XII. 5 2 6–8 The गौ. पि. सू I 2.31, Sat Sr. 28.2 23–4 and others provide that either gold bits or drops of clarified butter were to be cast over the seven orifices (mouth and others) A comparatively later smrti like that of Parāśara mentions this depositing of sacrificial implements on the sacrificer's body (V. 19–22) hands (of the deceased) the right kidney in the right hand and left kidney in the left with the mantra 'ati drava' (Ṛg X. 14, 10, recited once only). He puts the heart (of the animal) on his heart and according to some also two lumps of flour (of rice or barley); according to others only if there are no kidneys.[492] Having deposited the whole animal limb by limb (on corresponding limbs of the dead body) and having covered it with its own hide he recites when the Prañitā water is being carried forward, by way of invocation the mantra 'imam agne' (Ṛg. X. 16. 8). Bending his left knee he should offer into the Dakṣina fire oblations of clarified butter with the formula 'to Agni svāhā! To Soma svāhā! To the world svāhā! To Anumati svāhā!' A fifth oblation (is to be offered) on the chest of the deceased with the formula 'from this one, indeed thou hast been born! May he now be born out of thee, N. N.! To the heavenly world, svāhā' (Vāj S. 35. 22). He gives the order 'Light the fire together.' Then the Āśv. gr. (IV. 4. 2–5) states what one has to understand if the Āhavanīya or Gārhapatya or Dakṣina fire reaches the dead body first or if all the fires reach the body at the same moment; while the body is burning he recites over it the same texts (Ṛg. X. 14. 7 and others quoted above in n. 481 from Āśv. Śr. sūtra). Being cremated by a person who knows this he goes to the heavenly world together with the smoke (of the funeral pile)—thus it is known (in the Śruti). After he has recited the verse 'ime jīvāḥ' (Ṛg. X, 18. 3) they (all relatives) turn round from right to left and go away without looking back. When they have come to a place where there is standing water, having once plunged into it and raised their heads out of it they pour one handful of water, pronounce the gotra name and the proper name (of the deceased),

492. According to Kāt Śr. quoted above in n. 486 the Anustaraṇī animal was to be struck behind the ear and killed. According to Jātūkarnya the several limbs of the animal were to be placed on the corresponding limbs of the dead body. But Kāt. disapproves of this since when burnt there may be a doubt (in collecting bones) whether they are of the deceased or of the animal (and so only the flesh of the animal was to be placed on the limbs according to Kāt.). Compare Sat Br. XII 5. 9–12 for similar remarks. Āśv. gr IV 2. 4 (as interpreted by Nārāyaṇa) itself shows that there was an option viz. that the animal may be killed or let off and donated to a brāhmaṇa (vide also Baud P S I. 10. 2) The Śāṅ. Śr. (IV 14. 14–15) states that the kidneys were to be taken from the killed or living animal from behind and being slightly heated on the Dakṣina fire were to be placed in the two hands of the deceased with the two mantras 'ati drava' (Ṛg. X 14 10–11) come out (of the water), put on other garments, wring out (already worn garments) once, lay them away with their skirts to the north and sit down until the stars appear or they may enter their houses when a part of the Sun's disc is still visible, the younger ones entering first, the older ones last When they have come to the houses they touch a stone, the fire, cow-dung, fried barley, sesame seeds and water. Compare Śat. Br. XIII. 8. 4. 5 for bath and offering of water by relatives and touching a bull on returning from cremation and reciting 'udvayam' (Vāj. S 35. 14 = Rg. I. 50. 10) and applying collyrium and unguent to their bodies[493].

It is not possible from considerations of space to set out all that is said in the other grhya sūtras A few interesting points may be noted here The Sat Br XIII. 8. 4. 11, Pār. gr. (III. 10. 10 ff) expressly provide that funeral rites for any one whose upanayana has been performed are the same from the choosing of the site for the burning of the body to the descent into water on the part of the relatives (for bathing themselves) as those prescribed for a person who has set up the srauta (Vedic) fires, the only difference being that an āhitāgni is cremated with the three Vedic fires kept by him, that one who has kept only the smārta[494] or aupāsana fire is burnt with that and that common persons who have neither kept the śrauta fires nor smārta fire are burnt with the ordinary[495] fire Devala provides that when using ordinary fire, one should avoid taking the fire from a cāndāla or any unclean fire or the fire in the room of a freshly delivered woman or the fire of a patita or fire from a funeral pyre.[496] The Pitrdayitā states that the mantra 'asmāt tvam &c' was not to be recited when the deceased was a person

---

493 अपामार्गैरपसृजते । . यत्रोदकं भवति तत्नान्ति सुमित्रिया आप ओषधयः सन्त्वित्यञ्जलिनाप उपाचाति । स्नात्वाहतानि वासांसि परिधायानडुह पुच्छमन्वारभ्यायन्त्याग्नेयौ यानग्नानग्निमुखा एवं तत्पितृलोकाज्जीवलोकमभ्यायन्ति । . उद्वयं तमसस्परीति । एतासूचं जपन्तो यन्ति ..। तेभ्य आगतेभ्य आञ्जनाभ्यञ्जने प्रयच्छन्त्येष ए मानुषेलङ्कारस्तेनैव तं मृत्युमन्तर्दधते । शत. ब्रा. XIII. 8.4 4–7. सुमित्रिया is वाज. स 35 12 and उद्वयं is वाज. सं. 35.14 (= ऋ. I 50 10)

494, अथानग्निचितः । एतदेव भूमिजोपणमेतत्सर्वोनं कर्म यदन्यदग्निकर्मणः । शतपथब्रा. XIII 8.4,11

495 आहिताग्निर्यथान्यायं दग्धव्यस्त्रिभिरग्निभिः । अनाहिताग्निरेकेन लौकिकेनेतरो जनः॥ वृद्धया q. by मिता. on या III 2, अपरार्क p 873 This is कूर्मपुराण (उत्तरार्ध) 23 67

496. लौकिकाग्निश्च चण्डालादिव्यतिरिक्ता ग्राह्य । चण्डालाग्निरमेध्याग्नि सूतिकाग्निश्च कार्हिचित् । पतिताग्निश्चिताग्निश्च न शिष्टग्रहणोचिता ॥ इति देवलस्मरणात् । मिता. on या. III, 2, अपरार्क p. 873, परा. मा. I. 2 p. 286.

who had not kept sacred fires.[497] The Pār. gr. further provides that all relatives residing in the same village, if they can trace the relationship, do the same, that they wear only one garment, suspend their sacred thread over the right shoulder, that with the fourth finger of the left hand they spurt away the water with Vāj. S 35. 6 and facing the south plunge into water and pour out one libation of water with joined hands. The Āp. Dh. S. (II. 6. 15. 2–7) lays down a bath when a person's relatives on the mother's side and father's relatives up to the 7th degree or as long as relationship can be traced die, except in the case of children less than a year old In the case of a child's death before one year, the parents and those who carry the child's body have to bathe. All the above should have dishevelled hair, should throw dust in the hair, wear only one garment, turn their faces to the south, plunge into water, offer water to the dead thrice and then sit down on the bank (of the river or pond), then come to the village and do what the women tell them to do (such as touching fire and bull &c.). Yāj. III 2 also provides the same rules as Pār. gr. and prescribes the recitation of the mantra 'apa nah śośucad agham' ('May evil be burnt away from us,' Rg. I. 97 1, A.V. IV. 33 1, Tai. Ā. VI. 10.1). The G. P. S. (II. 23) provides that the funeral pyre is to be made with the wood of sacrificial trees, (II. 37 and 39) that the sapiṇḍas of the deceased headed by the women, the youngest being the first, fan the corpse placed on the pyre with the fringes of their garments, that the performer of the funeral rites takes a jar filled with water, places a darbhendva (?) on his head and goes round the corpse thrice and the priest gives a light stroke on the jar thrice separately with a stone (aśman) or an axe and recites a mantra 'imā āpo &c.' when a stream of water rushes out of the broken jar, (changing the words about 'asmin loke' to 'antarikse' and 'svarge' at the 2nd and 3rd perambulations). The performer while standing should drop behind him the jar of water. Then after repeating the mantra 'tasmāt tvam adhijātosi...asau svargāya lokāya svāhā,' he should set fire to the pyre to burn the body.[498] The Sat Śr 28 1 38 provides that the family members

497 अनग्नेर्ब्राह्मणस्य यज्ञपात्राभावात्पात्रन्यासन्यतिरिक्तसमस्तेतिकर्तव्यता दग्धव्यः । अस्मात्त्र ..मन्त्रस्त्वस्मिन्नपि न प्रयोक्तव्यः । पितृदयिता p 78

498. अथ कर्तोदकुम्भमादाय पत्नी वा । दर्भैरुद्धं शिरसि निधाय सूतं पर्येति । तमश्मना परशुना वाधस्तात्किंचित्प्रहरति । तां धारामनुमन्त्रयेत इमा आपो मधुमत्योस्मिंस्ते लोक उपदुत्यन्तामक्षीयमाणा. स्वधा नम इति । ..तिष्ठन्नेवोदकुम्भं पृष्ठतो विसृजेत् । ..तस्मात्त्वमपि-जातोसि त्वदयं जायता पुनरसौ स्वर्गाय लोकाय स्वाहेत्यसौ शब्देन प्रेतस्य नाम संकीर्त्तयन्तेन गृहीत्वा शरीरेणाग्निं संयोजयेत् । गौ. पि. सू. I. 3.1–13.

beat their right thighs, fan the corpse with the fringes of their garments and go thrice round the corpse with the left side towards the corpse and recite the mantra 'apa nah śośucadagham' (Rg. I. 97 1. Tai. Ā. VI. 10. 1). It further provides (28. 1 37–46) that the corpse is carried in a cart or by (four) men and while being carried four stops are made, at each of which clods of earth are dug up and boiled rice is offered thereon with mantras like 'pūsā tvetah' (Rg. X. 17 3., Tai Ā VI. 10 1), 'āyur viśvāyur' (Rg. X. 17. 4, Tai. Ā VI. 10. 2). The Varāhapurāna prescribes that a Paurānic mantra should be recited, that the performer should go round the pyre and apply the kindled fire towards the part of the pyre where the head is placed.[499]

In modern times the procedure of cremation is generally on the lines of that described in the Āśv. gr. cited above and the procedure described in the Garudapurāna II. 4. 41 ff. The following is a summary of the procedure set out in the Antyestipaddhati of Nārāyanabhatta which is generally followed by Ṛgvedins in Western India. The dead body is washed with water, is decked with a tilaka on the forehead, is clothed in a garment, is covered with a paste of Jatāmāmsī and a garland of naladas is placed round its neck. Then the performer washes his own feet, sips water, performs prānāyāma without Vedic mantra, then makes a Sankalpa (as in note 500),[500] he wears his sacred thread under the left shoulder (and on the right shoulder) and prays to the earth with the mantra 'upasarpa' (Rg. X. 18.10), he then thrice goes round the place dug up (for cremation) and sprinkles water with a śamī branch at the end of the mantra 'apeta' (Rg. X. 14. 9). This mantra is repeated thrice. Then. he draws three lines on the ground with an iron piece or kuśa roots saying 'I draw a line for Yama, the lord of cremation,' 'I draw a line for Kāla, lord of &c' 'I draw a line for Mrtyu, lord of &c' Then he throws into the dug-up ground pieces of gold and sesame and water mixed with sesame in the middle of the dug up spot for Yama, to the north for Kāla and to the south for

499. कृत्वा सुदुष्करं कर्म जानता वाप्यजानता। मृत्युकालवशं प्राप्य नरं पञ्चत्वमागतम्॥ धर्माधर्मसमायुक्तं लोभमोहसमावृतम्। दहेय सर्वगात्राणि दिव्यान् लोकान्स गच्छतु॥ एवमुक्त्वा ततः शीघ्रं कृत्वा चैव प्रदक्षिणम्। ज्वलमानं तथा वह्निं शिरःस्थाने प्रदीपयेत्। चतुर्वर्णेषु संस्कार एवं भवति पुत्रक॥ वराहपुराण q. by शुद्धिप्रकाश p. 170 and by शुद्धिकौमुदी p. 115. These verses occur with variations in वराहपुराण chap 187,106-108.

500 अद्येत्यादि देशकालौ स्मृत्वामुकगोत्रस्यामुकशर्मणोस्मन्मित्रादेः प्रेतस्य प्रेतत्वविमोक्षार्थमौर्ध्वदेहिकं करिष्ये इति सङ्कल्प्य प्राचीनावीती भूमिं प्रार्थयेत्। अन्त्येष्टिपद्धति folio 165 a.

Mṛtyu (each being associated with pitṛs, the formula being 'Yamāya dahanapataye pitṛbhyaḥ svadhā namaḥ'). He puts sesame in the mouth of the corpse and prepares a funeral pile sufficient for burning the body by means of sacrificial wood brought by the castemen of the deceased. On that pile he spreads kuśa grass and over the latter black antelope skin with the hair outside Then the corpse is carried to the north of the fire and is placed on the funeral pile with the head to the south. To the north of the dead body, he makes the wife of the deceased sit down. Then the husband's brother, pupil or an old servant makes her get up with the mantra 'udīrsva' (Ṛg. X. 18. 8). Then the performer puts pieces of gold in the seven holes of the body (vide above note 491) or drops of clarified butter. He then throws on the body of the departed sesame anointed with ghee, he performs parisamūhana (wiping with the wet hand) of the fire, then paristarana (strewing darbha grass) round the fire together with the funeral pile) and paryuksana (sprinkling water) and brings to the south of the fire the vessels viz proksanī, sruva, camasa and the vessel containing clarified butter. Then he puts water in the camasa (cup), covers it with darbha grass and carries it forward and invokes the camasa with Ṛg. X. 16. 8 (imam-agne &c) He makes a saṅkalpa that he would wait upon (or worship) the dead, takes two fuel sticks and offers them into fire and performs the worship of Agni, Kāma, Loka and Anumati by offering clarified butter in fire with the appropriate formula (viz. agnaye svāhā, agnaya idam na mama). Then he offers on the chest of the deceased clarified butter (or prṣadājya) (according to some) with the mantra 'asmādvai &c. (vide above note 498). Then he prepares apūpas (balls) with barley flour and mixes them with prsadājya and places portions of the balls on the five parts viz. forehead, mouth, the two arms and chest with the following mantras viz Ṛg X. 16. 7 (for the ball on forehead and mouth), Ṛg X. 14. 10 (for the two arms) and Ṛg. X 14. 11 (for the chest). Then he makes the fire flame up with the mantra Ṛg. X. 16 9 (kravyādam-agnim) towards the head of a male (and the feet of a woman). Then he should repeat certain mantras while the body is being burnt viz. Ṛg. X. 14. 7–8, Ṛg. X. 14. 10–11, Ṛg. X. 16. 1–6, X. 17. 3–6. X. 18. 10–13, X. 154. 1–5, X. 14. 12 While muttering these mantras he should throw sesame on the body that is being burnt. Then the performer should take a jar (full of water) on his left shoulder, should make a hole in it on the back of the jar with a broken but smooth stone. He should go round thrice with the left towards the burning body from the spot where the feet of the corpse lie and mutter certain mantras The jar is struck thrice All the sagotra relatives go round the burning corpse. Then the jar is completely broken near that part of the funeral pyre where the head rests The relatives without looking back turn to the left and come out of the cemetery with the youngest members first The performer recites Rg X. 18 3 (ime jīvā &c). The relatives repair to a spot where water is flowing, wearing only one garment and with faces to the south and hair dishevelled, plunge into the water once, sip water, place on the bank that stone (aśman) with which holes were made in the jar, offer water mixed with sesame on that stone with folded hands with the words 'O departed, of such a gotra and of such a name! May this water mixed with sesame reach you'. The performer offers water with the uttariya for allaying the thirst (of the departed) due to the burning.

Many rules were prescribed as regards the carrying of the dead body. It has been seen above that the corpse was carried in a cart or on a couch by the relatives or by the servants (dāsas). Some sūtras, smṛtis, commentaries and other works lay down many other rules here The Rāmāyaṇa (Ayodhyā 76. 13 ff) states that on the death of Daśaratha his Vedic fires were carried by his priests before the corpse, that the dead body was placed in a palanquin (śibikā), that his servants carried it and that coins of gold and clothes were thrown about on the road in front of the bier (for the poor). The general rule was that members of the three higher varnas alone should carry to the cemetery a dead body belonging to any one of those varnas and a śūdra should not carry the dead body of a man of a higher caste (when there were men of the caste of the dead available) nor should a man of one of the three higher varnas carry the dead body of a śūdra, and that the impurity in the case of a śūdra carrying a dead dvijāti or a dvijāti carrying a śūdra's body is determined by the caste of the dead man. Vide Viṣnu Dh S 19 1–4, Gaut. Dh. S. 14 29, Manu 5 104, Yāj III 26, Parāśara III 43–45. A brahmacārin was not permitted to be a carrier of the dead body of a person or relative even of his own caste, except his parents, guru, ācārya and upādhyāya and he was not guilty of breaking his vows of student-hood if he carried the bodies of any one of the five mentioned above. Vide Vas 23. 7, Manu 5. 91, Yāj III 15, Laghu-Hārīta 92–93, Brahmapurāṇa (q by Par. M. I. 2 p. 278). Guru, ācārya and Upādhyāya are defined by Yāj. I. 34–35. If a brahmacārin carried the corpse of any one except the above five he was held to have swerved from his vrata and he had to undergo the expiation for vratalopa. Manu 5. 103 and Yāj. III. 13–14 state that those who merely carry a dead body of their own caste should bathe with the clothes on, then bite off nimba leaves, should perform ācamana, touch fire, water, cowdung, white mustard, place slowly a foot on a stone and then enter their house It being the duty of sapiṇḍas[501] to carry the dead body of their relative they, after doing so, had simply to bathe, to touch fire and drink clarified butter for being pure (Gaut. 14. 29, Yāj. III. 26, Manu IV. 103, Parāśara III. 42, Devala q. by Par. M. 1 2, p. 277, Hārīta q. by Aparārka p. 871). Carrying the dead body of a brāhmaṇa who has no relatives is highly extolled by Parāśara (III. 39–41) who says that a person, that thus carries the dead body of a brāhmaṇa, secures at each footstep the reward of the performance of a sacrifice and he becomes pure at once simply by plunging into water and performing prāṇāyāma, while Manu (5. 101–102) prescribes that if one carries the dead body of a person who is not a sapiṇḍa through affection he becomes pure after three days. The Hāralatā p. 121 quotes the Ādipurāṇa that if a kṣatriya or vaiśya cremates the dead body of a poor brāhmaṇa or of a kṣatriya who has lost everything or of a poor vaiśya, he secures great merit and becomes pure at once after a bath. Even now generally (particularly in villages) men of the same caste carry or follow a dead body and are held to be purified by a bath with clothes on. The medieval commentaries like the Mitākṣarā stuck strictly to the extreme exclusiveness of caste by prescribing 'if a man[502] carries a dead body through affection, eats food in that family and dwells in their house he is under impurity for ten days; if he simply stays with the dead man's family but does not eat their food he is impure for three days; these rules apply when the carrier is of 501 विहितं तु सपिण्डाना प्रेतनिर्हरणादिकम्। तेषां करोति यः कश्चित्तस्याविकर्म न विद्यते॥ देवल q. by परा मा I 2 p. 277, विहितं हि सपिण्डस्य प्रेतनिर्हरणादिकम्। दोषः स्यादसपिण्डस्य तत्राना धक्रियां विना॥ हारीत q by अपरार्क p. 871.

---

502. अत्रेयं व्यवस्था। यः स्नेहादिना शवनिर्हरणं कृत्वा तदीयमन्नमश्नाति तद्गृहे च वसति तस्य दशाहेनैव शुद्धिः। यस्तु केवलं तद्गृहे वसति न तुन्नदन्नमश्नाति तस्य त्रिरात्रम्। यः पुनर्निर्हरणमात्रं करोति न तद्गृहे वसति न च तदन्नमश्नाति तस्यैकाह इति। एतज्जातीयविषयम्। विजातीयविषये पुनर्यज्जातीयं प्रेतं निर्हरति तज्जातिप्रयुक्तमाशौचं कार्यम्। यथाह गौतम. (१४.२१) ... विप्रस्य शूद्रनिर्हरणे मासमाशौचं शूद्रस्य तु विप्रनिर्हरणे दशरात्रं नित्यैवं शववदाशौचं कार्यमित्यर्थः। मिता. on या. III 14.

the same caste as the dead person But if a brāhmana carries a śūdra's corpse, the brāhmana is impure for a month, but if a śūdra carries a brāhmana's body the śūdra is impure for ten days.' The Kūrmapurāna prescribes that if a brāhmana carries the dead body of a brāhmana for a fee or from other interested motive he becomes impure for ten days, a ksatriya, vaiśya and śūdra doing the same becomes impure for 12, 15 or 30 days and the Visnupurāna says that the person carrying a dead body for a fee has to become impure for the period of impurity prescribed for a man of that caste. It may be stated that these rules about impurity on the ground of carrying or following the carrying of a dead body of another caste are no longer enforced and it is extremely doubtful whether they were ever strictly enforced or followed Hārīta [503] prescribes that a dead body should not be carried through the midst of a village if while going to the cemetery a village comes in the way, but it should be carried away from it. Manu, 5 92 and Vrddha-Hārīta IX. 100-101 prescribed that the dead body of a śūdra, vaiśya, ksatriya and a brāhmana was to be taken out respectively by the southern, western, northern and eastern gates of the town or village It was provided by Yama and the Garudapurāna II 4 56-57 [504] that the fuel for the funeral pyre should not be carried (for higher varnas) to the cemetery by a śūdra and if a śūdra did so the deceased would always remain in the state of preta The Hāralatā (p 121) says that if firewood is carried by śūdras still the pyre should be made by brāhmanas only (for a brāhmana's body). The smrtis and purānas provide that the corpse [505] should be first bathed with water and then cremated, that the corpse should never be burned naked, but that it should be covered with cloth, decked with flowers and have fragrant unguents (sandalwood paste &c.), that fire should be carried in front of the corpse and one man should carry cooked food in an unbaked earthen vessel and another should deposit part of the food on the way and one should give clothes and the like to cāndālas and the like (that stay near the cemetery).

503. तथा हारीतोऽपि न ग्रामाभिमुखं प्रेतं हरेयुरिति। मिता on या. III. मद. 2, पा p. 395, हारलता p. 119 which explains 'निर्हरता यदि वर्त्मनि ग्राम. स्यात्तदा तन्मध्ये न गन्तव्यमित्यर्थ ।'.

504. यस्यानयति शूद्रोऽग्निं तृणं काष्ठं हवींषि च। प्रेतत्व च सदा तस्य स चा.र्मेण लिप्यते ॥ यम q. by मिता. on या III. 2, अपरार्क p 871, हारलता p. 120 (reads मन्यते लोप धर्मोस्ति) which last takes स ..लिप्यते as referring to the brāhmana who is cremated, तृणकाष्ठतिलाज्यादि स्वयं निरयु. सतादय ॥ शूद्रानीते. कृत कर्म सर्वं भवति निष्फलम्। गरुड०.

505 चन्दनोक्षितसर्वाङ्गं सुमनोभिर्विभूषितम्। .निर्हरेयु सुतादय. ॥ आमपात्रेऽन्नमादाय प्रेतनिर्हरणं सरम्। एकोद्दिष्टश्राद्धस्यार्धमर्धपथ्युत्सृजेद्भुवि ॥ गोभिलस्मृति III 23-25 q by अपरार्क p 873, प्रचेता। स्नान प्रेतस्य पुत्राद्यैर्वस्त्राद्यै पूजन तत । नग्नदेहं दहेत्तेन किंचि. देयं परित्यजेत्॥ किंचिद्दत्तं यदा लोके देयत्वेन प्रसिद्धं तत्परित्यजेत् तत्स्थेम्यश्चण्डालादिभ्य' । अपरार्क p 871, मिता. on या III. 2 also quotes प्रचेतस्.

The Brahmapurāna (q. by Śuddhiprakāśa p. 159) states that when carrying a dead body to the cemetery, a great deal of noise should be created by means of the four kinds of instruments.[506]

There were differing rules laid down about vapana (shaving) for the performer as an auxiliary (anga) of the rite of cremation, after the cremation and bath thereafter. A smrti text provides[507] 'shaving of the head and moustaches is declared in seven cases, viz. on the Ganges, at the Bhāskaraksetra, on the death of the mother or father or guru, on consecrating the śrauta fires and in a Soma sacrifice'. The A. K. D (p. 19) prescribes that the son or other performer of the rites of cremation should first perform vapana and then bathe, then carry the dead body to a sacred spot, bathe it there, or if such a spot is not at hand should invoke the presence of the Ganges, Gayā and other tīrthas in the water to be used for washing the dead body, then anoint it with ghee or sesame oil, again bathe it and put on it a fresh garment, should deck it with yajñopavīta, gopīcandana, garland of basil leaves and then should apply to the whole body fragrant substances like sandalwood paste, camphor, saffron, musk &c. But if the cremation took place at night, there was to be no vapana at night, but on the next day.[508] Other smrtis allowed vapana on the 2nd, 3rd, 5th or 7th or any following day up to the offering of śrāddha on the 11th day.[509] Āp Dh. S. I. 3. 10. 6

506. The four kinds of वाद्य were enumerated by भरत as 'ततं चैवावनद्धं च घनं सुषिरमेव च' and the अमरकोश illustrates them as follows : 'ततं वीणादिकं वाद्यमानद्धं मुरजादिकम्। वंशादिकं तु सुषिरं कांस्यतालादिकं घनम्॥'

507. गङ्गाया भास्करक्षेत्रे मातापित्रोर्गुरोर्मृतौ। आधानकाले सोमे च वपनं सप्तसु स्मृतम्॥ q by मिता. on या III 17, परा. मा I 2. p. 296, शुद्धिप्रकाश p. 161; माध तत्त्व p 493 (from स्मृतिसमुच्चय) भास्करक्षेत्र is प्रयाग

508. रात्रौ दग्ध्वा तु पिण्डान्तं कृत्वा वपनवर्जितम्। वपनं नेष्यते रात्रौ अस्तगौ वपनक्रिया॥ संग्रह q in शुद्धिप्र p 161

509 अलुप्तकेशो यः पूर्वं सोऽत्र केशान् प्रवापयेत्। द्वितीयेऽह्नि तृतीयेऽह्नि पञ्चमे सप्तमेऽपि वा। यावच्छ्राद्धं प्रदीयेत तावदित्यपरं मतम्। बौधायन q by परा मा I. 2, p 2. वापनं दशमेऽहनि कार्यम्। तदाह देवल। दशमेऽहनि संप्राप्ते स्नानं ग्रामाद् बहिर्भवेत्। तत्र त्याज्यानि वासांसि केशश्मश्रुनखानि च।; this verse is q. by the मिता on या III. 17; the नद् पा. p 416 after quoting देवल and other authors remarks 'प्रथमादिदिनेषु कृतक्षौरस्यापि शुद्ध्यर्थं दशमदिनेऽपि वपनं कर्तव्यम्।' provides[510] vapana for all sapindas that are younger than the deceased The Madanapārijāta holds that the performer of cremation rites had to undergo vapana on the first day and also on the expiry of the period of impurity, while the Śuddhiprakāsa (p 162) following the Mit on Yāj. III 17 states that the day on which vapana is to be undergone is determined by the usage of each country. This difference in usages has been even judicially noticed. In Chandra choora Deo v. Bibhuti Bhushan Deva A.I R. 1945 Patna p. 211 at p. 219 it has been stated that according to the Benares School the person who performs the cremation shaves his head at the time of cremation, whereas under the Mithilā school there is no such shaving at that time.

The Garudapurāna (II. 4. 67–69) provides that loud weeping may be indulged in when the body is burning but there should be no weeping after cremation and the offering of water to the departed.

There was some difference of opinion as to the offering of water (udakakriyā or udakadāna) to the deceased by his sapiṇḍas and samānodakas Āśv gr. quoted above (p 209) speaks of offering water once, but the Sat. Śr 28 2. 72 and others prescribe that water mixed with sesame is offered thrice with joined hands on the day of death to the deceased after reciting his gotra and name and every day thereafter up to the 11th,[511] Gaut Dh. S. 14. 38, Vas. 4 12 prescribe that water should be offered by sapiṇḍas to the deceased with their faces to the south on the first, third, seventh and ninth days of death and Haradatta says that in all 75 añjalis of water were to be offered (three on 1st day, 9 on 3rd, 30 on 7th and 33 on 9th), but that the usage in his country was that on the first day water was offered three times with joined hands and then one more añjali on each succeeding day from the 2nd. On the other hand, Viṣnu Dh S. 19. 7 and 13, Pracetas, Paiṭhīnasi (both quoted by Aparārka p. 874)

510. अङ्गभाविना च परिवापनम्। आप ध सू I. 3.10 6 For explanation of this sūtra, vide मिता on या III 17.

511. केशान् प्रकीर्य पांसूनोप्यैकवाससो दक्षिणामुखा सकृदुन्मज्ज्योत्तीर्य सर्व आचान्त्य वास. पीडयित्वोपविशन्त्येवं त्रिस्तत्प्रत्ययं गोत्रनामधेयं तिलमिश्रमुदक त्रिरुत्सिच्याहरहरञ्जलिनैकोत्तरद्वृद्धिरेकादशाहात्। सत्याषाढश्रौत 28 2 72 The यौ पि. सू I. 4.7 is almost in the same words. The water would be offered in the form 'काश्यपगोत्र देवदत्तशर्मन्, एतत्ते उदकम्' or 'काश्यपगोत्राय देवदत्तशर्मणे प्रेतायैतत्तिलोदकं ददामि' (हरदत्त) or 'देवदत्तनामा काश्यपगोत्र प्रेतस्तृप्यतु' (मिता. on या III. 5.). Vide गोभिलस्मृति III 36–37 also, q by अपरार्क p 874 and परा मा I. 2 p 267.

prescribe that water and pinda were to be offered to the deceased for ten days.[512] The Śuddhiprakāśa (p. 202) quotes verses from Gṛhya-pariśiṣta, one of which says that some declare that only ten añjalis were to be offered, some say 100 were to be offered and others that 55 were to be offered and that one should follow the usage settled in one's vedic Śākhā. The Āśv. gr. pariśiṣta 3. 4 has a similar rule in prose The Garuḍapurāna (Pretakhanda chap. 5 verses 22–23) also refers to the offering of 10, 55, or 100 añjalis. Some smṛtis prescribed that the number of añjalis of water were dependent on the caste of the deceased. Pracetas (q. by Mit. on Yāj. III. 4) provides that 10, 12, 15, 30 añjalis should be respectively offered to a deceased person of the brāhmana, ksatriya, vaiśya or śūdra varna. Yama (verses 92–94) states how water is to be offered to the deceased standing in navel-deep water and (98) prescribes that water is to be offered in water to gods and pitṛs but on the ground to those that died without upanayana being performed. In a smṛti quoted by Devayājñika[513] it is stated that six pindas were to be offered from the day of death as follows: at the place where the death occurred, at the door of the house, where four roads meet, where the funeral procession on the way to the cemetery rested, on the pile of wood arranged for burning (citā), and at the time of the collection of the burnt bones. It was further provided that for the benefit of the departed a lamp fed by sesame oil was to be kept burning continuously for ten days after death and an earthenware vessel was to be kept filled with water and a handful of cooked rice was to be offered on the ground at the time of the mid-day meal after uttering the name and gotra of the departed. This was called pūtheya śrāddha because it helped the departed to go on his way from the earth to the world of the departed (vide Dharmasindhu p 463). According to some of the digests

---

512. दिनेदिनेऽञ्जलीन् पूर्णान् मदद्यात्प्रेतकारणात्। तावद्वृद्धिश्च कर्तव्या यावत्पिण्डः समाप्यते॥ मचेतस् q. by मिता on या III. 3; 'यावदाशौचं तावत्प्रेतस्योदकं पिण्डं च ददुः। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 19.13 If water is offered only once a day for ten days there would be only ten añjalis in all, but if 10 were offered on each day there would be 100, if one was offered on first day and one more added on each succeeding day to the 10th there would be 55 añjalis

513. अत्र च आद्योत्तरं पिण्डदानमुक्तं देवयाज्ञिकोदाहृतायां स्मृतौ। मृतस्योत्क्रान्तिसमपात्यद् पिण्डान् क्रमशो दिशेत्। मृतस्थाने तथा द्वारे चत्वरे तार्क्ष्य कारणात्। विश्रामे काष्ठचयने तथा व्रजपथे च षट्। q. by बुद्धिमकाश p. 158. Vide गरुडपुराण II. 4 48 for a similar provision.

a śrāddha called Nagna-pracchādana was to be performed on the day of the death of a person after his sapindas undergo shaving and bath, enter the village and the house. It consists in filling a jar with grains of rice wound round with a piece of cloth and putting clarified butter in a vessel of bell-metal and some gold (or coins) thereon according to one's ability. The whole was to be given to a poor brāhmana of good family after remembering Visnu for the benefit of the departed Vide Smrti-muktāphala (on śr) pp. 595–596, Sm C (on Āśauca p. 176).

The smrtis and purānas (like Kūrma, uttarārdha 23. 70) prescribe that after offering with joined hands water to the deceased a ball of rice or barley flour with sesame was to be presented on darbha grass There are two views on this point. According to Yāj. III. 16 a pinda was to be offered for three days after death according to the procedure prescribed for Pinda-pitr-yajña (such as wearing of the sacred thread on the right shoulder and under the left shoulder), while according to Visnu 19. 13 one pinda was to be offered every day as long as impurity on death lasted The pinda was to be offered on darbhas spread on the ground if the deceased had his upanayana performed, but without mantras or may be offered on a stone [514] While water could be offered by any and every sapinda, pinda was to be offered only by the son (and when there were many sons, by the eldest if free from defect); in default of a son the nearest sapinda like a brother or brother's son was to offer it and in default of such then the sapindas of the mother (maternal uncle, his son or the like) could[515] offer it. Even when pindas were to be offered for three days or āśauca lasted only for 3 days the pindas were prescribed to be ten by Śātātapa and Pāraskara distributed them as follows· three on the first day, four on the 2nd and 3 on the third and Daksa [516] distributed them as follows· one on the first day, four on the 2nd and five on the 3rd Pāraskara prescribed that 10, 12, 15, 30 pindas were to be offered according to the varna of the deceased In the case cited above from A I R. 1945 Patna p 211 at p 219 it has been stated that according to the Benares school 4, 5 or 6 514 भूमौ माल्यं पिण्डं पानीयमुपले वा दद्युः। शङ्ख q. by मिता. on या. III 16.

515. पुत्राभावे सपिण्डा मातृसपिण्डाः शिष्याश्च वा दद्युः। तदभावे ऋत्विगाचार्यौ। शौ. प्र. सू 15.13–14.

516 प्रथमेऽह्नि तत्पिण्ड द्वितीये चतुरस्तथा। तृतीये पञ्च दे दद्यादेव पिण्डविधिः स्मृतः॥ ब्रह्म q. by अपरार्क p. 888.

pindas are offered at the time of cremation, while according to the Mithilā school only one pinda is offered. Everybody, whether a person of the same gotra as the deceased or of another gotra, had to carry out all the rites up to the tenth day when he once began them on the day of death, as stated by the Grhya-pariśista[517] and Garudapurāna. It is further prescribed that when the funeral rites are begun by a person and then a nearer relative such as a son comes, even then the former is to carry on all the rites up to the 10th day, but the rites of the 11th and later days are to be performed by the son and in default of him by a near sapinda. The Matsyapurāna states[518] that pindas should be offered to the deceased for twelve days; they become his food on his journey (to the other world) and they give him satisfaction; since the deceased is taken to the abode of departed spirits after twelve days, he (his spirit) sees his house, sons and wife for twelve days Ŗsyaśrnga quoted by Aparārka (p. 889) specifies the limbs of an ethereal body with which the deceased is endowed on each day of the ten days after death when a pinda is offered The Garudapurāna (pretakhanda chap. 5. 33–36) says the same.

Just as sapindas of the same gotra and samānodakas were bound to offer water to the deceased, a person was bound to offer water to his maternal grandfather and to the two further ancestors and to his ācārya on their death. Every man, if he so desired (i. e. he was under no religious duty), could offer water to his friend, to his married sister or daughter, to his sister's son, father-in-law and his sacrificial priest on their death (Pār. gr. III. 10, Śankha-Likhita, Yāj.[519] III, 4) Pāraskara (III. 10) refers to a peculiar practice. When the sapindas are about to enter water for bathing and thereafter offering water to the deceased they pray to their relatives or brother-in-law for water with the words 'we shall perform udakakriyā', where-upon 517. असगोत्रः सगोत्रो वा यदि स्त्री यदि वा पुमान्। प्रथमेऽहनि यो दद्यात्स दशाहं समापयेत्॥ गृह्यपरिशिष्ट q. by मिता on या. I, 255 and III 16, अपरार्क p 887, स्मृ. पा. p. 400, हारलता p. 172. This is लघ्वाश्वलायन 20.6 and गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड) 5 19–20.

518. प्रेताय पिण्डदानं तु द्वादशाहं समाचरेत्। पाथेयं तस्य तत्प्रोक्तं यतः प्रीतिकरं महत्॥ यस्मात् प्रेतपुरं प्रेतो द्वादशाहेन नीयते। गृहपुत्रकलत्रं च द्वादशाहं प्रपश्यति। मत्स्यपुराण q. by अपरार्क p 889. These two verses are the same as पद्मपुराण, सृष्टिखण्ड 10.5–6.

519. 'उदकक्रियां कामं श्वशुरमातुलयोः शिष्ये सहाध्यायिनि राजनि च'। शङ्खलिखित q by दीपकलिका on या III. 4.

the other replies 'do so but don't come again (with a similar request),' if the deceased was less than one hundred years of age, but the reply would be simply 'do so' if the deceased was hundred years of age or more.[520] The G. P. S. (I, 4. 4–6) has a somewhat similar symbolic dialogue. A king's officer, a sagotra or a brother-in-law takes a branch having thorns and prevents them from entering water with the words 'don't enter'; then the sapindas should reply 'we shall not again enter water'. The probable significance of this was that they thereby would be able to escape from another death in the family soon after.

There were rules prohibiting certain persons from offering water to the deceased and also directing that water should not be offered to certain deceased persons. Impotent[521] persons and the like, thieves of gold, vrātyas, those who follow forbidden conduct and women that kill their own foetus or husband and that drink the kind of liquor (forbidden to them) should not offer water to a deceased person. Yāj (III. 6) provides that water should not be offered to and no āśauca observed for heretics, for those who do not belong to one of the four āśramas, to thieves, to women who kill their husbands or who are guilty of prostitution or who drink surā, or who commit suicide. Manu (V. 89–90) is to the same effect. Gaut Dh. S.[522] 14. 11 provides that in the case of those who start (through anger) on the Great 520 संयुक्त मैथुनं वोदकं याचेरन्नुदकं करिष्यामह इति। कुरुध्व मा चैव पुनरित्यशतवर्षे प्रेते। कुरुध्वमित्येवेतरस्मिन्। पारस्करगृह्य III 10, which are included in the procedure of udakadāna even by such a late writer as Govindānanda (S. K. p. 122) and explained by शुद्धिप्रकाश pp 199–200, अप· प्रतिपद्यन्ते। अत्र राजपुरुष· सगोत्रमिथुनो (सगोत्रो मैथुनी?) वा कण्टकिनीं शाखामादाय मावतरतेति वारयेत् न पुनरवतरिष्यान इति प्रतिब्रूयुः। गौ पि सू I 4 3–6.

---

521 क्लीबाया नोदकं कुर्युः स्तेना व्रात्या विधर्मिणः। गर्भभर्तृद्रुहश्चैव सुराप्यश्चैव योषित. ॥ वृद्धमनु q. by कल्पतरु (शुद्धि) p.89, शुद्धिप्रकाश p 203. The word क्लीबाया: probably includes all those mentioned by Yāj II. 140 For vrātya vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 96, 386

522 प्रायानाशकशस्त्राग्निविषोदकोद्बन्धनप्रपतनैश्चेच्छताम्। गौ 14 11; क्रोधात्प्रायं विषं वह्निः शस्त्रमुद्बन्धनं जलम्। गिरिवृक्षप्रपात च ये कुर्वन्ति नराधमा·। ब्रह्मदण्डहता ये च ये चैव ब्राह्मणैर्हताः। महापातकिनो ये च च पतितास्ते प्रकीर्तिता.। पतितानां न दाह. स्यान्न च स्यादस्थिसञ्चय.। न चाश्रुपातः पिण्डो वा कार्या आद्धक्रिया न च ॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by हरदत्त on गौ 14 11 and by अपरार्क pp. 902–903, quoting many more verses; similar rules are laid down by Aṅgirasasmṛti VII. 1. p 539 (Jiv.), संवर्त verses 178–179; Atri 216–217, कूर्मपुराण (उत्तरार्ध chap. 23, verses 60–63) q. by हारलता p. 204, शुद्धिम p. 59.

Journey, who commit suicide by fasting or by means of a weapon or by fire, by poison, in water, by hanging or falling from a precipice or tree, there is no cremation, no āśauca, no offering of water or pinda. Haradatta on Gaut, 14. 11 quotes three verses from Brahmapurāna that those who die of a brāhmana's curse or black magic and those who are patitas are dealt with in the same way. But Angiras (q. by Mit. on Yāj. III. 6) says that if one dies by water or fire or the like through inadvertence, there was āśauca for him and udakakriyā was performed. Vide Vaik. Sm S. V. 11 for a long list of persons who must not be cremated. In the Mahābhārata the rites of cremation have been described frequently e. g. the cremation of Pāṇḍu in Ādiparva, chap 127 (the body was carried in a śibikā covered on all sides, there were musical instruments, the royal parasol and chowries were carried in the procession, distribution of wealth to mendicants, carrying the dead body to the bank of the Ganges on a charming sylvan spot, bathing the body, applying sandalwood paste to it), of Drona in Strīparva, chap 23.38–42 (three Sāmans were sung, his pupils with Droṇa's wife in front went round the funeral pyre, going to the Ganges); of Bhīsma in Anuśāsana 169 10–19 (fragrant resins were used on the pyre, his body was covered with fine clothes and flowers, an umbrella and chowries were held over the body, Kaurava women fanned the body with fans, sāmans were sung); of Vasudeva in Mausalaparva 7. 19–25; of killed warriers in general in Strīparva, chap. 26. 28–43 and of Kuntī, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī in Āśramavāsikaparva, chap. 39. In the Rāmāyana (Ayodhyā, chap 76 verses 16–20), it is said that the funeral pyre for Daśaratha was made with sandalwood, aguru and fragrant resins, with Sarala, Padmaka and Devadāru (pine) wood and various fragrant substances were heaped thereon, then Daśaratha's body was placed on the pyre and that Kausalyā and other women followed the corpse in śibikās and conveyances according to their status.

If an āhitāgni died away from home, the Śat. Br. (XII. 5.1.13–14) provides that, having brought his bones home they were to be spread on a black antelope skin and arranged in imitation of the human frame, were to be covered with wool and ghee and burnt with his śrauta fires and sacrificial implements. Similar rules are laid down in Kāt. Śr. 25.8–9, Baud. P. S. III 8, Gobhilasmrti III.47, Vas. Dh. S. IV. 37.

If even the bones could not be found, then the sūtras following the Ait Br. (chap. 32.1) and similar ancient works[523] provide that on a skin of black antelope one should make the effigy of a human frame with palāśa stalks (leaves) 360 in[524] number, the effigy should be bound round with woollen thread, should be covered with yava flour mixed with water and anointed with clarified butter and cremated with his fires and sacrificial implements. The Brahmapurāna (q. by Suddhiprakāśa p. 187) contains similar rules about burning an effigy and ordains three days' impurity thereafter. Acc. to a smṛti (q by Aparārka p. 545), the palāśa leaves were to be 362. They were to be distributed according to Baud. P S and Gaut. P S. as follows: 40 represent the head, 10 the neck, 20 the chest, 30 the abdomen (udara), 50 each of the arms, 10 the fingers of the two hands, 70 each of the two legs, 10 the toes of the feet, 8 the male organ, 12 the testicles. This is also the enumeration in Sat Śr. 29.4.39. Vide also Śān. Śr. IV 15.19-31,[525] Kāt. Śr. XXV. 8.15, Baud. P. S. III 8, G. P. S. II 1.6-14 Gobhila-smṛti III.48, Hārīta q by Śuddhiprakāśa p. 186, Garudapurāna II. 4. 134-154 and II.40 44 ff. It may be stated here that all the sūtras and smṛtis do not entirely agree as to the number of palāśa leaves taken as representing the several parts of the body, as may be seen from a comparison of the Śān. Śr. quoted in the note with Baud. P S. set out here. A smṛti quoted by Aparārka (p 545) gives the numbers as follows: 32 for the head, 60 for the neck, 80 for the chest, 20 for the hip and loins, 20 each for the two arms, 10 for fingers, 6 for testicles, 4 for the penis, 60 for the two thighs, 20 for the knees, 20 for the lower parts of the legs, 10 for toes of the feet. Jātūkarnya (q. by Aparārka p. 545) and Bhavisyapurāna (q. by Śuddhiprakāśa p. 187) say that when a son does not hear for 15 years about his father who had gone to a distant land, he should perform the cremation of the effigy (called 'ākrtidahana'). Bṛhaspati advises waiting for 12 years before resorting to ākrtidahana (Śuddhipr. p 187). The Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra V. 12 regards the burning of the effigy as a meritorious act for every one and does not restrict it to the case where the body or bones are not found. The Śuddhiprakāśa p. 187 quotes several verses from the Brahmapurāna that the procedure of burning an effigy of palāśa stalks was to be followed even in the case of one who has not consecrated Śrauta fires and āśauca for three days has to be observed, while the āśauca for burning the effigy of an āhitāgni was ten days.

523. The ऐ ब्रा reads यदि शरीराणि न विद्येरन् पर्णशर. षष्टिश्लोणि च शतान्याहरय तेषा पुरुषरूपकमिव कृत्वा तस्मिंस्तामावृतं कुर्युरथैनाञ्छरीरैराहृते संस्पर्शोद्वासयेयुरध्यर्धशतं कामे सविधनी द्विपञ्चाशे च विंशे चोरू द्विपञ्चविंशे शेषं तु शिरस्युपदध्यात् सा तत्र भापश्चित्तिः।

524. शरीरनाशे त्रीणि षष्टिशतानि पलाशदन्ताना कृष्णाजिने पूर्ववत्। काल्या श्रौ 25. 8 15, on which the com. remarks 'पुरुषविध्यादि पूर्ववत् द्राहान्तम्। तेषामेव सञ्चयनं पितृमेधश्च तैरेवेति।'

525. चत्वारिंशच्छिरसि। ग्रीवाया दश। अंसान्वसयोर्बाह्वो· शतम्। उरसि त्रिंशत्। जठरे विंशतिः। षड्वृषणयोः। शिश्ने चत्वारि। ऊर्वो शतम्। त्रिंशज्जानुजङ्घाष्टीवतो। पादाङ्गुलीषु विंशति'। एव त्रीणि षष्टिशतानि भवन्ति। पुरुषाकृति कृत्वोर्णासूत्रै· परिवेष्टय यवचूर्णैः श्लिष्टय सर्पिषाभ्यज्याग्निभिः संस्कुर्वन्ति। शा श्रौ. सू IV. 15. 20-31 Each stalk of Palāśa has three leaves, ऊर्णासूत्रs will represent the muscles and यवचूर्णलेप will represent flesh It will be seen that as enumerated in Sān S. the palāśa stalks are exactly 360 The कूर्मपुराण (उत्तर) 23.58 refers to it as 'देहाभावात्पलाशैस्तु कृत्वा प्रतिकृतिं पुन.।'

It is further provided in Sat Śr. 29. 4. 41, Baud P. S. (III. 7. 4) and Garudapurāna II. 4. 169–70 that, if after the effigy is cremated in the belief that a person died in a foreign land, he returns alive, then he is plunged in a pit containing clarified butter and then he comes out of it, takes a bath, then all the saṃskāras from jātakarma are performed on him, then he marries the same wife again or if she be dead, he may marry another girl, then consecrate again śrauta fires. Some sūtras provide that if the wife of an āhitāgni dies before him, he may, if he so desires, cremate her with his śrauta fires or he may cremate her with fire prepared from cowdung and some easily inflammable things (like straw) placed in three sthālīs (cooking pots [526]). Manu (V. 167–168) provides that if the savarṇa and virtuous wife of a twice-born person who had consecrated sacred śrauta fires died before him she was to be cremated with his fires (śrauta and smārta) and with the sacrificial implements. Then he may marry again and consecrate śrauta or smārta fires again. To the same effect are Yāj. I. 89, Baud. P S. II. 4, 6, Gobhila-smrti III. 5, Vaikhānasa-smārtasūtra VII. 2, Vrddha-Hārīta XI. 213, Laghu-Āśv. 20 59. [527] Viśvarūpa on Yāj. 1. 87 quotes a Kāṭhaka-śruti to 526. दुच्छन् पत्नीं पूर्वमारिणीमग्निभिः संस्कृत्य सान्तपनेन वान्यामानीय तत. पुनरादधीत। शां श्रौ IV. 15.32. How the सान्तपन fires are produced is stated in Sat. Br. XII. 5 2 3 'इत्थमेव कुर्यात्। तिस्र एव स्थालीरेटवै ब्रूयात्तासु गोमयानि च शुम्बलानि वावधाय नाना त्रिष्वग्निषु प्रवृञ्च्यात्ते ये तत. सन्तापादग्नयो जायेरंस्तैरेनं दहेयुः।' शुम्बल means some material which is easily inflamed such as straw.

527. तस्माद्यावत्य. पत्न्यः सर्वा एवाग्निहोत्राद्यर्थेनाग्निना दग्धव्या इति स्थितम्। तथा च काठके श्रुतौ 'शवाग्नयो वा एते भवन्ति ये पत्न्यां प्रमीतायां धार्यन्ते' इत्युपक्रम्य 'तस्मात् पत्नीमग्निभिर्दहेत्' इति विस्पष्टो विशेषविधिः। विश्वरूप on या I. 87.

the effect that if a person keeps the same śrauta fires after the death of his wife they are (impure like) the fires used for burning a corpse and adds that even if a brāhmana āhitāgni had a wife of the ksatriya class and she died before him, she was to be cremated with his śrauta fires This view is opposed to that of many other commentators and he explains Manu V 167 (where 'savarnām' occurs) as merely illustrative and that if it were interpreted as restricted to a savarna wife alone, there would be the fault of vākyabheda. Some of the smrtis provide that he may remain a widower and perform his Agnihotra by having a golden effigy of the wife or one made of kuśa grass, as Rāma did Vide Gobhilasmrti III,[528] 9–10, Vrddha–Hārīta XI. 214 If the householder did not marry again (when his wife died before him and was cremated with his śrauta fires) and did not consecrate fresh vedic fires he was to be cremated with ordinary fire If the householder was unable to marry again, he may cremate his wife with fire kindled by means of the kindling sticks (aranis) and keep his śrauta fires and carry on agnihotra with the image or effigy of the wife. If the āhitāgni died first and his wife then died as a widow she was to be cremated with fire (nirmanthya) kindled by attrition of the aranis Vide Baud P. S II. 4 6–8, Kāt Śr. 29 4 34–35, and Trikānda-mandana II. 121.[528a] When the wife was cremated the mantra 'Asmāttvam-abhijātosi' quoted above was not to be recited (vide Gobhilasmrti III. 52) It was only a virtuous wife and not an unchaste one that was cremated with śrauta or smārta fire (Gobhilasmrti III. 53) Kratu (q. by

528 मृतायामपि भार्यायां वैदिकाग्नि न हि त्यजेत्। उपाधिनापि तत्कर्म यावज्जीवं समाचरेत्॥ रामोऽपि कृत्वा सौवर्णीं सीतां पत्नीं यज्ञस्विनीम्। ईजे यज्ञैर्बहुविधैः सह भ्रातृभिरीश्वरैः॥ गोभिलस्मृति III 9–10, the first being quoted by अपरार्क p 114 as विष्णु's It is also quoted by गृहस्थरत्नाकर p 110 अपरार्क does not accept the interpretation that the verse मृतायां etc allows the householder to have an image of his deceased wife beside him while performing a Vedic sacrifice The words 'उपाधिनापि' according to Aparārka mean that he may marry a woman not of the same varna Both verses are q by शुद्धिप्रकाश (pp. 164–165) which summarises various views on this point

528a तयोर्यं पूर्वो म्रियेत तस्याग्निरेतया यज्ञपात्रैश्च पितृमेध.। य. पश्चात्तस्यौपासनेन। औपासनेऽविद्यमाने निर्मन्थ्येन पितृमेध.। बौ. पि सू. II 4 6–8, compare सत्या. श्रौ. 29 4 34; 'पत्नी चेद्विधवा भूत्वा ममीयेत कदाचन। तदा श्रौताग्निशून्यत्वान्निर्मन्थ्येनैव दह्यते॥ त्रिकाण्डमण्डन II 121.

Śuddhiprakāśa p. 166) [528b] and Baud P. S. III. 1. 9–13 state that a widower and a widow were to be cremated with fire generated on a kapāla (made red hot and then cow-dung thrown thereon), a brahmacārin and yati were to be cremated with uttapana (or kapālaja) fire, an unmarried girl and a boy whose Upanayana is not performed are to be cremated with fire produced from chaff If an āhitāgnī became patita or guilty of suicide in various ways or met death by challenging animals or snakes, his śrauta fires were to be cast into water and smārta fire was to be cast on the place where four roads meet (or in water), his sacrificial implements were to be burnt (a smrti q by Par. M. I. 2. p. 226, Parāśara V. 10–11, Vaik Smārta V. 11) and he was to be cremated with ordinary fire

Manu V. 68, Yāj III. 1, Parāśara III 14, Visnu Dh. S. 22. 27–28, Brahmapurāna quoted by Par M. I 2 p. 238 provide that in the case of abortion, the foetus, and a still-born child, and a child that has not yet struck teeth should be decked with clothes and the like and should be buried Children of tender years were not to be cremated, but there was some difference of opinion among ancient writers on the exact age at which one or the other method of disposal was to be resorted to. Pāraskara-gr. [528c] III. 10, Yāj III. 1, Manu V. 68–69, Yama and some others provide that a child that had not completed two years at death was to be buried under ground in an unsullied spot outside the village (other than the usual cemetery), the dead body being anointed with ghee and decked with flowers and sandal paste and that no burning nor offering of water nor the collection of bones was to be performed in this case The relatives may all follow the body or not 528b निगुर विधवा चैव कपालस्याग्निना दहेत्। ब्रह्मचारियती चैव दहेदुत्तपनाग्निना॥ तुषाग्निना च दग्धव्य कन्यका बाल एव च। अग्निवर्ण कपालं तु कृत्वा तत्र विनिक्षिपेत्। कारीषादि ततो वस्तु जात. स तु कपालज ॥ क्रतु q. by शुद्धिप्रकाश p 166 The उत्तपनाग्नि is explained as दर्भाग्रेर्दग्धं तु मज्जालय पुनर्दर्भैस्तु संयुत । पुनर्दर्भै तृतीयेग्निरेष उत्तपन स्मृत.॥ स्मृत्यन्तर q. by शुद्धिप्रकाश 166, अथाहिताग्नि . यज्ञपात्रैश्च । गृहस्थौपासनेन । ब्रह्मचारिणं कपालसन्तपनाग्निना॥ उत्तपनीयेनेतरान् । एव स्त्रियम्। वौ पि चू. III. 1 9–13.

---

528c. अथोदककर्माह्विवर्षे प्रेते मात्रापित्रोराशौचं शौचमेवेतरेषामेकरात्र त्रिरात्रं वा शरीरसदग्धा निखनन्ति। ..नात्रोदककर्म। पारस्करगृह्य III. 10, ऊनद्विवार्षिकं प्रेत घृताक्त निखनेद्भुवि। यमगाथा गायमानो यमसूक्तमनुस्मरन्। यम q by मिता॰ on या. III.1. यमगाथा. are verses addressed to यम such as 'nāke suparnam' (Rg X. 123 6 acc to दीपकालिका), or तै. आ. VI 5. 3 अहरहर्नयमानो गामश्वं पुरुषं जगत्। वैवस्वतो न तृप्यति पञ्चभिर्मानवैर्यमः॥, or पोस्य कौष्ठ्य जगत. and the two following verses from तै आ. VI. 5.2 (acc. to अपरार्क p. 871) and स्मृतिच. (आशौचकाण्ड p 201) and Yama allows the recital of the Yamasūktā (Rg. X. 14) and the verses in honour of the god Yama. Manu V 70, however, states other optional provisions viz. that the offering of water may be done (and therefore the cremation also of the dead body) in the case of infants that have struck teeth or after nāmakaraṇa. Therefore there is an option as to cremating an infant of less than two years, viz it may be buried or cremated after nāmakaraṇa or after the appearance of teeth. In this case it is not necessary that all the sapiṇḍa relatives should follow the dead body If a child is two years old or more at death and upanayana has not been performed it must be cremated with ordinary fire and water must be offered silently. The same rule applies to a child whose cūḍā (tonsure) had been performed before death as stated by Laugākṣi.[528d] The Vaik. Sm. S. V.11 lays down that there is no burning with fire until the 5th year for a boy and the 7th year for a girl After Upanayana the child was to be cremated according to the rites prescribed for an āhitāgni so far as they could be applied (i. e. there would be cremation without sacrificial implements and the mantra 'asmāt tvamabhijātosi' was not to be recited) The Baud[529] P. S. (II 3.10-11) provides that there is no cremation for children dying before the performance of caula (tonsure) and there is no pitṛmedha for those whose upanayana had not been performed at death or for unmarried girls. It also provides that infants that have struck no teeth are to be buried with syllable 'om' and those that have had teeth with the Vyāhṛtis The Mit. on Yāj. III 2 summarises the rules as follows: Before Nāmakaraṇa there was to be only burial and no offering of water and the like; after Nāmakaraṇa up to the third year cremation and offering of water are optional with burial, from the third year up to upanayana there is cremation and also offering of water but silently (without mantras), if Cūḍā ceremony was performed before the 3rd year and the child died then also the same rule applied. After Upanayana the deceased was to be cremated with ordinary fire but the procedure was to be the same as for an āhitāgni.

528d. तूष्णीमेवोदकं कुर्याच्चूष्णीं संस्कारमेव च। सर्वेषां कृतचूडानामन्यत्रापीच्छया स्त्रियः॥ लौगाक्षि q. by मित. on या III 1

529. न प्राक् चौलात्मृतानां दहनं विद्यते। नाद्युपनीतानां कन्यानां वा पितृमेधः। जो पै. सू. II. 3. 10-11. सायण on तै आ III 21 explains 'आहिताग्नित्वे सति यो ब्रह्मतत्त्वं जानाति तस्य दहनादिसंस्कारो ब्रह्ममेधः। आहिताग्नेर्यो दहनादिसंस्कारः सोऽपि पितृमेधः।'

A yati (sannyāsin) was and is even now buried. In a previous note (n. 528b) a verse of Kratu is quoted that a brahmacārin and yati are to be cremated with uttapana fire. The explanation of the Śuddhiprakāśa (p. 166) is that the word yati here means an ascetic of the Kuṭīcaka kind and quotes a [530] verse as to how the dead bodies of the yatis of four grades are to be disposed of. The [531] Baud. P. S. III.11 gives a brief description which is adopted with some variations by the Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 98) that contains a description of the death rites of a parivrājaka.[532] One should go to the east or north of the village, he should dig a pit (lit. a sacrificial place) as deep as the staff (carried by the yati) under a palāśa tree or on a river bank or on some other pure spot to the accompaniment of the vyāhṛtis; then he should sprinkle water thereon thrice repeating the seven vyāhṛtis each time, should spread darbha grass on the bottom of the pit, should deck the dead body (with garlands, sandal paste), deposit the body in the pit with the mantra (Tai S.I.1.3.1) 'O Viṣnu! guard this offering (the dead body).' He should place in the right hand the staff of the parivrājaka (breaking it into three parts) with the mantra 'Viṣnu took strides over this' (Ṛg. I.22.17, Vāj. S. V. 15, Tai. S. I.2.13.1). He places the śikya (loop of strings) in the left 530 कुटीचकं तु प्रदहेत्पूरयेच्च बहूदकम्। हंसो जले तु निक्षेप्य. परहंस प्रपूरयेत्॥ q. by स्मृत्यर्थसार p. 98, शुद्धिप्रकाश p. 166. For the four kinds of sannyāsins, vide of H. of Dh vol II. pp. 338–342.

---

531 अथ परिव्राजकस्य संस्कारविधिं व्याख्यास्यामः। पृथिव्या 'अक्षिभ्यामोषधीभ्याम्' इति शरीरं निधाय 'भूमिर्भूमिमगान्माता मातरमप्यगात्। भूयास्म पुत्रैः पशुभिर्यो नो द्वेष्टि स मिद्यताम्' इत्युदरे पात्रं निधायाथ होतारमधीत्य तस्य दक्षिणे हस्ते कमण्डलुं निदधाति व्याहृतिभिर्देवयजनं पूरयेत् 'अग्निनाग्नि. समिध्यते' इत्यशेषसंस्कारोऽश्वमेधफलम्। तत्रोदाहरन्ति। शृगालश्च वायसा. खादन्ति चेद्दोषमाहारयेत्कर्तुः. तस्मादविशङ्कां वेदिं प्रच्छादयेदिति बोधायन.। यौ पि. सू. III 11. अग्निना अग्निः is Rg I. 12.6 (= Tai. S. I. 4.46 3). The mantra भूमिर्भूमिः occurs in यौ पि. सू. I. 4.9 also,

532. अथ परिव्राजकस्य संस्कारविधिः। ग्रामात्प्राचीमुदीचीं वा गत्वा ब्रह्मवृक्षस्याधस्तान्नदीतीरे वा शुचौ देशे वा दण्डप्रमाण देवयजन व्याहृतिभिः खात्वा त्रि सप्तव्याहृतिभिः प्रोक्ष्य दर्भास्संस्तीर्यालंकृत्य शव निदधाति श्वभ्रे विष्णो हव्य रक्षस्वेति। इदं विष्णुर्विचक्रमे इति दक्षिणहस्ते दण्डं निदधाति। यदस्य पारे रजस इति सव्यहस्ते शिक्यम्। येन देवा' पवित्रेणेति मुखे जलपवित्रम्। सावित्र्या उदरे ब्रह्मभाजनम्। भूमिर्भूम्नेति शुद्धे कमण्डलुम्। चित्तिः सुगेति दशहोत्रिभिरनुमन्त्रयते। नात्र शेषसंस्काराः पूर्वमनुष्ठितत्वात्। सर्वसङ्गनिवृत्तस्य ध्यानयोगरतस्य च। न तस्य दहनं कार्यं नाशौचं नोदकक्रिया॥ स्मृत्यर्थसार p. 98. The Baud. Gr Sesasūtra IV. 17.9 reads 'शुद्धे कमण्डलु चैव भूमिर्भूमिमगादिति'. The verse सर्वसङ्ग occurs in Baud gr Sesasūtra IV 17. 17–18. According to the Baud Dh. S. II. 10 11 the paraphernalia of a yati is: पात्रं शिक्यं जलपवित्रं कमण्डलुं पात्रमिति hand with the mantra 'what is beyond this world' (Tai. S. IV 2.5.2), the piece of cloth used as a water-strainer on the mouth with the words 'by which strainer the gods' (Tai. Br. I 4.8.6), the pot on his belly with the Gāyatrī stanza (Rg. III.62.10, Vāj S III. 35, Tai S. I.5 6 4), his water pot near his private parts with the mantra 'earth went to earth'. He then invokes with the mantras beginning with 'cittiḥ sruk' (ten sentences in Tai. Ā, Maitrāyaṇī S I 9 1 which are called 'caturhotārah') [533] The other rites are not performed here as they were performed before No cremation should be done, no āśauca should be observed nor should water be offered to (an ascetic who is dead) who was free from all attachments and who had given himself up to meditation. The Smṛtyarthasāra adds that no ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha nor sapiṇḍīkaraṇa is performed for an ascetic, but only pārvaṇa on the 11th day, that a kuṭīcaka should be cremated, the bahūdaka should be buried, haṃsa should be thrown into water and paramahaṃsa should be thoroughly buried. The Nirṇayasindhu (pp 634-635) quotes the Smṛtyarthasāra and then adds a few details from Bṛhat-Śaunaka, viz that the dead body of a yati should be bathed with the Puruṣasūkta (Rg X, 90), then the pit (dug for burial) should be sprinkled eight times with the syllable 'Om' on all sides; having deposited the body in the pit with the Yajus formula 'O Viṣṇu! guard this offering' (Tai S I 1. 3.1) and with 'Om', he should place in the right hand the staff with the mantra 'Viṣṇu took strides over this' (Rg. I 22. 17), then pierce the crown of the head with a conch by repeating the mantra 'bhūr-bhuvah-svah', he should fill up the pit with salt to the recitation of the Puruṣasūkta (Rg. X. 90). He should fill up the pit thoroughly (with sand) in order to guard against jackals and dogs and the like (exhuming the body with their paws) The Dharmasindhu (p 497) adds some details particularly as to the number of hymns and mantras to be repeated It states that the crown of the head should be pierced with a conch or an axe, that one who is unable to do this should smash a ball of jaggery placed on the head. It adds that no yati except kuṭīcaka should be cremated. In modern times a sannyāsin is always buried and not cremated, since kuṭīcaka and bahūdaka kinds of yati are no longer in vogue and it is only the paramahaṃsa that is prevalent in the whole of India. The reason why ascetics were buried and not cremated appears to me to be as follows; part of the procedure of becoming an ascetic consisted in giving up his śrauta fires and throwing in fire his sacrificial wooden implements (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 954). One of the rules for ascetics is that he should not kindle śrauta or smārta fires nor kindle ordinary fire for cooking his food but was to subsist on cooked food obtained by begging (H. of Dh. vol II pp. 933–934). The householder was cremated with his śrauta or smārta fire but the ascetic, having abjured these, was without any fire and was therefore buried. The Vaikhānasasmārtasūtra X. 8 (ed. by Caland) contains a brief description of the burial of an ascetic who was not an āhitāgni and the cremation of an ascetic who was āhitāgni.

533. Vide H of Dh. vol. II. p. 993 notes 2247 and 2248 for the Daśahotārah and their relation to caturhotṛs.

Special rules were laid down about the cremation of women dying in or immediately after child-birth and women dying while still in their monthly illness. A smrti quoted by the Mit and the Smrti-candrikā (I p. 121) provides that in the case of a sūtikā, one should take water and pañcagavya in a jar, should repeat holy texts (such as 'āpo hi sthā' Ṛg. X. 9. 1–9, verses addressed to Varuna) over them, should then bathe the sūtikā with water and pañcagavya and then cremate the body. A woman in her monthly illness was to be similarly bathed and she was to be covered with another garment and then cremated. Vide Garudapurāna II. 4. 171 ff and Nirnayasindhu p. 621. Similarly, elaborate rules are prescribed about the rites of cremation in relation to the death of a pregnant woman (vide Baud P. S. III. 9, Nirnayasindhu p. 622) which are passed over here.

Dead bodies were disposed off in different ways at different times and in different countries The various methods of disposal were cremation, burial underground, water burial, exposure of the body for being destroyed[534] by vultures and other birds (as among Zoroastrians) or beasts, being preserved in

534. According to the Parsi scriptures burying a human corpse in the earth was a grave sin and if the body was not disinterred there was no atonement in the case of a professor of the law of Mazd or one who had studied it and if he did not disinter it within six months or within a year, he was liable to receive five hundred or a thousand stripes respectively Vide Vendidad, Fargard III (S B E Vol. 4 pp 31–32). Corpses were to be laid down on the summits of mountains to be devoured by birds and dogs and the exposure of corpses was the most striking practice of the Mazdean profession (S B E Vol IV part 1 Intro p XLV).

caves,[535] or being mummified (as in Egypt). The general rule in India from times of which we have literary evidence was cremation; though burial took place in certain exceptional cases such as in the case of infants, ascetics &c How the ancient Indians hit upon this scientific though rather heart-rending method of the disposal of dead bodies it is difficult to say[536]. Burials were not unknown in India even in very early times, as Atharvaveda 5. 30 14 (mā nu bhumigrho bhuvat) and 18 2 34 show. The last may be rendered as follows: O Agni! bring all those pitrs here in order that they may partake of the offering, those (pitrs whose bodies) were buried or cast aside (exposed) or burnt or deposited above (on trees or in caves?)[536a]. In the word 'anagnidagdhāh' occurring in Rg. X. 15. 14, scholars see a reference to burial. But it is quite possible that no burial is referred to. If some ancestors were killed far from home in a fight or if they were kidnapped and killed by enemies, their bodies might have been left uncared for in a distant land and not cremated nor buried. A passage in the Chāndogya[537] Up. (VIII. 8. 5) is construed by some scholars as referring to burials. It may be rendered as follows: Therefore they designate even now a man, an asura who does not make gifts, who has no faith and who offers no sacrifices; for this is the esoteric doctrine of Asuras. They deck out the body of the dead with bhiksā (perfumes and flowers?), with raiment by way of decoration, and think that they will thus conquer the next world. Though the passage is not quite clear, the reference to Asuras, their usage of decorating the dead body and thereby being able to gain the next world render it probable that the usage of the burial of the body among Asuras is referred to. In Rg. VII 89. 1 the sage prays 'O Varuna!

---

535 In Rome the bones of over 4000 monks are preserved in the walls of the subterranean burial chapels in the Capuchin Church near the Piazza Barberini. For a description of the catacombs in Rome, vide Puckle's 'Funeral customs' p. 136 (quoting from Frothingham)

536. Vullhamy in 'Immortal man' (p. 34) throws out the suggestion that one of the purposes of cremation may have been the complete destruction of the human aspect of the ghost or its transference to a region from which contact with mankind in any material sense was impossible 536 a. ये निखाता ये परोप्ता ये दग्धा ये चोद्धिता । सर्वांस्तानग्न आ वह पितॄन्हविषे अत्तवे ॥ अथर्व० 18 2 34.

537 तस्मादप्येवाद्दानमश्रद्दधानमयजमानमाहुरासुरो बतेदमुराणां हि रूपमेतत् परेतरप शरीरे भिक्षाया गमनेनात्मसंस्करणमि मौरकुर्वन्तेन यद्वै तत्प्रेत्य तेऽभिवदन्ती यन्त्र । छा. उप VIII. 8.5.

may I not go to the earthen house'. This is probably a reference to burial. Besides, after the charred bones were collected, they were placed in an urn or pot, which was buried in the ground and after a good deal of time a mound (śmaśāna) was built upon the bones as will be seen immediately from a passage in the Śat Br. and other sources In A. V. XVIII 2 25 it is said, 'may the tree not oppress them, nor the great goddess Earth'. This is probably a reference to a coffin and burial.

It is somewhat curious that the progressive nations of the West, believing in a literal interpretation of the Biblical words (such as Matthew 22. 23–33, Mark 12. 18–27 and Luke 20. 37–38, John 5. 19–31 and 6. 32–56) about physical resurrection of the dead, held fast by burial alone and up to the end of the 19th century people in Christendom would not allow the cremation of a dead body. The case of Reg. v. Price illustrates how deep the sentiment against cremation was and how popular fury prevented Price from disposing of the body of his dead child of five months by petroleum fire in a field, how he was prosecuted for two offences viz. misdemeanor at Common Law for burning a dead body instead of burying it and misdemeanor on the ground that he attempted to burn the body with intent to prevent an inquest being held on it by the coroner.[538] It was only in 1902 that the Cremation Act (2 Edw. 7 Ch. 8) was passed empowering burial authorities to establish crematoria on plans approved by the Minister of Health. The Catholic Church does not even now allow cremation. The ancient Romans on the other hand held cremation as the honourable means of the disposal of the dead body but reserved burial for the suicide and the murderer.

Embalming the dead for some time at least was not quite unknown in India. The Sat. Śr. 29. 4. 29 and Vaik. Śr. 31.23[539] prescribe that if an āhitāgni died away from his people his corpse should be laid down in a tub or trough filled with sesame oil and brought home in a cart. In the Rāmāyana it is several times said that the body of Daśaratha was placed for several days in a tub containing oil till the arrival of Bharata (vide Ayodhyā 66. 14–16, 76.4). In the Visnupurāna [540] it is stated that the body of Nimi being covered with oil and fragrant substances did not become decomposed and looked as if the death was recent.

538 (1884) 12 Q. B. D p 247. Ultimately Price was acquitted on both charges.

539. आहिताग्निमजने प्रमीतं तैलद्रोण्यामवधाय शकटेनाहरन्ति निर्मन्थ्येन वा वृक्षात् कृष्णाजिनेऽस्थीनि निधायाहरेत् वाससा संवेष्ट्य दीर्घवंशे मन्थ्यानधो निवधाना. प्रयता मृन्मयभाजना आहरन्ति। सत्या श्रौ 29 4. 29; almost the same words occur in वैखानसश्रौत 31.23 p. 312 (Caland's ed).

What the state of things was before the composition of the Ṛgveda cannot be said with certainty. There is no general agreement as to the age of the Ṛgveda and of the ruins found at Mohenjo-daro and Harappa. Sir John Marshall (in Mohenjo-daro vol. I. p. 86) refers to complete burials, partial burials and post cremation burials. The excavations at Lauriya [541] Nandangarh have brought to light supposed Vedic burial mounds in which has been found a small repousse golden plaque bearing the figure of a nude female, the Earth Goddess These and the disposal of corpses in paleolithic ages are matters for archaeologists and are outside the proper scope of the present work.

The Hāralatā (p. 126) quotes a passage from the Ādipurāna to the effect that Magas (Magians) are buried underground and that Daradas and Luptrakas (?) go away after placing their dead relatives on trees. [541a]

It appears that among early Buddhists in India hardly any religious ceremony was performed, whether the person deceased was a layman or even a member of the Order. In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta the death and the funeral ceremonies of the great founder of Buddhism are described in chapter VI (Section 14 ff). All that is gathered from that chapter is that the favourite disciple of the Buddha, Ānanda, uttered a stanza, some of the disciples that were not free from passion wept and fell headlong on the ground, while others (who were Arahats) bore the grief with composure, that next morning Ānanda went to the Mallas of Kusinārā, that the Mallas took perfumes,

---

540. निमेरपि तच्छरीरमतिमनोहरं तैलगन्धादिभिरुपस्क्रियमाणं नैव क्लेदादिकं दोषमवाप सद्यो मृतमिव तस्थौ। विष्णुपुराण IV. 5. 7.

541 Vide T Bloch in Z. D. M. G. vol. 60 pp 227–232 for the excavations at Lauriya, also Bulletin of the Archaeological Survey of India for megalithic burial and urn fields in South India, Prof V G Childe in 'Man' for 1945 p 13 ff for the disposal of corpses in Paleolithic, Neolithic and Bronze ages and Prof. E O. James in 'Christian Myth and Ritual', chap' VII on 'Last rites' 541a. मगा भूमौ निखन्यन्ते दरदाश्च मृतान् सदा। आसव (जय?) पूर्णे गच्छन्ति लुप्तकाश्च स्वबान्धवम्॥ आदिपुराण q. by हारलता p. 126 which explains 'दरदस्तु धर्मस्तु घनच्छायवृक्षे मञ्चादितमदेशे वर्षमेकमवलम्ब्य स्थापनम्। ततो गृहान्तरमुत्थितस्य दाहः'.

garlands, all musical instruments and five hundred suits of apparel, the Mallas passed seven days in paying homage to the body of the Buddha that lay in the śāla grove with dancing, hymns, music, garlands and perfumes, in making canopies of their garments, that on the 7th day they carried the body of the Blessed One to the south but owing to a miracle (described in sections 29–32) they carried it through the city by the north gate and laid the body to the east (the general rule was that a dead body was not to be carried through the middle of a village, and was to be carried to the south but as Buddha was so extraordinary and holy the above was allowed to be done). The body of the Buddha was then wrapped in a new cloth, then with cotton wool, then in a new cloth and so on till 500 layers of cloth and cotton wool covered the body The body was then placed in an oil vessel of iron which was covered with another oil vessel of iron. Then a funeral pile of all kinds of perfumes was built upon which the body was placed. Then Mahākassapa and five hundred brethren accompanying him arranged their robes on one shoulder (representing the way in which the sacred thread is arranged among the brāhmanas), bowed down with clasped hands, went round the body reverently thrice. The body was then burnt and only bones remained. Then the narrative states that Ajātaśatru, king of Magadha, the Licchavis of Vesāli and several others claimed portions of the relics of the Buddha. Then the relics were divided into eight parts. Those who received them built mounds (Thūpas) over the relics and the Moriyas who got only embers also built a Thūpa over them and a brāhmana Dona (Drona) built a mound over the jar (kumbha) in which the bones were collected. Mr. Rhys Davids remarks (S. B. E vol. XI Introduction p. XLV) 'though funerals are naturally not infrequently mentioned in the historical books and in the Birth stories there is nowhere any reference to a recognised mode of performing any religious worship'. It will be noticed that the Buddhist ritual[542], though simple, agrees closely with some of the rules of Āśv. gṛ.

542. Vide Fleets' papers in J. R. A. S. for 1906 pp 655–671 and 881–913 on the disposal of the bones and ashes of Buddha based on the Mahāparinibbāna-sutta, the Divyāvadāna, Fa Hian's work, the Sumangalavilāsinī and other writings. He therein states his view that the Piprahava relic vase, on which there is an inscription that is the oldest Indian Inscription found up to date (it is about 375 B C.) and in which 700 articles were

(Continued on the next page)

After the relatives (sons and the like) of a deceased person have offered water, have taken a bath and after they emerge from the water (of a river or the like) and are sitting on a plot of soft green grass, elderly persons should talk to them (in order to lessen their grief) about ancient narratives (Yāj. III. 7 and G. P. S. I. 4.2[543]). Viṣṇu Dh. S. 20. 22–53 contain a long disquisition on the grip that Kāla (Time, Death) has on every body including even Indra, gods, daityas, great kings and sages, how everyone that is born is sure to die (i. e Death is inevitable), and how no one (except the wife) can follow the departed on his journey to the other world, how the good actions and bad actions will accompany the spirit of the dead, how śrāddha confers great benefit on the departed; it winds up that therefore the surviving relatives should offer śrāddha and give up lamentations that help no one, that it is dharma that alone follows the soul through his wanderings[544]. Yāj III. 8–11 (=Garuḍapurāṇa II. 4. 81–84) are verses in a similar strain and are intended to serve the same purpose. They are: 'He, who seeks everlastingness in this human life that is as devoid of strength as the stock of a plantain plant, and that is as inconstant as a bubble of water, is a deluded person. What is the use of lamentation if the body, created out of the five elements by reason of actions performed in a former life, returns to those five elements? The earth, the ocean and the gods found, enshrines the relics, not of the Bhagavān Buddha, but of his kinsmen. Fleet further refers to the tradition that the great emperor Aśoka dug up seven out of the eight mounds of the relics of Buddha and transferred almost all their contents to 84000 boxes of gold and silver and distributed them throughout India and built monuments (stūpas) over them. Rhys Davids in 'Buddhist India' (pp. 78–80), after stating that deceased persons of distinction either by birth or wealth or official status or as public teachers were cremated and the ashes were buried under a tope (Pāli 'thūpa'), remarks 'The dead bodies of ordinary people were disposed of in a unique way. They were put away in a public place. There as a rule the bodies or the remains of the pyre were not buried but left to be destroyed by birds or beasts or dissipated by the process of natural decay'.

---

(Continued from the last page)

543. शोकमुत्सृज्य कल्याणीभिर्वाग्भिः सात्त्विकाभिः कथाभिः पुराणैः सुकृतिभिः कृत्वा धौतमुखा व्रजन्ति। गौतमपितृमेधसूत्र I. 4. 2.

544. It may be noted that Viṣṇu Dh. S. 20. 29, 48–49 and 51–53 are the same or almost the same as Bhagavadgītā II. 27, 28, 13, 23–25 respectively. Viṣṇu Dh. S. 20. 47 (yathā dhenusahasreṣu &c.) is the same as Śāntiparva 181. 16, 187.27 and 323.16 and Viṣṇudharmottara II. 78. 27; and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 20.41 is the same as Śānti 175. 15 and 322. 73. The कल्पतरु (शुद्धि pp. 91–97) quotes याज्ञ. (III. 7.11), विष्णु 20.22–53 and गीता II. 13, 28.

are destined to go to destruction (at some future date when pralaya takes place). How is it possible that the world of mortals which is (evanescent) like foam will not meet with destruction? As the departed spirit, being helpless, has to swallow the tears and phlegm cast by kinsmen, they should not weep but should perform (obsequial) rites according to their ability.' Gobhilasmrti III. 39 urges 'do not lament for what is perishable and what is the characteristic (destiny) of all beings. Exert yourselves in the performance of meritorious acts which will accompany you' Gobhila then quotes Yāj. III. 8–10 and one verse from the Mahābhārata [544a] viz. 'All collections are to end in dissipation, all rise is to end in fall, all unions in separation and life in death'. Aparārka quotes the Rāmāyana and Vāsudeva's words from the Śalyaparva to Dhrtarāstra on the death of Duryodhana. The Par. M. I. 2 pp. 292–93, the Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 205–206 and several other works quote the verses of Visnu, Yāj. and Gobhila.

The Garudapurāna here (II. 4. 91–100) waxes eloquent over the immolation of a wife on her husband's funeral pyre, over the miraculous power of a pativratā, and states that a brāhmana woman should not burn herself apart from her husband's body (or after he is cremated), but that ksatriya and other women may do so, that the practice of satī is common to all women even including chāndāla women, but pregnant women or those that have young children should not do so and that a woman does not become free from the liability to be born again and again as a woman until she becomes a Satī.

After listening to the philosophical discourse of elders the relatives return to their house, placing children in front and standing at the door of the house, they with minds under control bite the leaves of the nimba tree, perform ācamana, touch fire, water, cowdung, white mustard; then they should enter their house after slowly (firmly) planting their foot on a stone. According [545] to Śankha the relatives should touch the tendrils of Dūrvā, fire and a bull, should offer a pinda to the departed at 544a. सर्वे क्षयान्ता निचयाः पतनान्ता समुच्छ्रयाः । संयोगा विप्रयोगान्ता मरणान्तं च जीवितम् ॥ This is शान्तिपर्व 331.20 (in 330. 20 in Citrasālā edition).

---

545. दूर्वामालमग्निं वृषभं चालभ्य गृहद्वारे प्रेताय पिण्डं दत्त्वा पश्चात्प्रविशेयुः । शङ्ख q. by मिता on या. III. 13, परा मा. I 2 p. 293.

the door of the house and then enter it. Baijavāpa[546] q by Śuddhitattva prescribes the mantras to be recited in touching śamī, the stone (aśmā), fire and provides further that a cow and a goat should be touched holding fire between themselves and these animals: food should be purchased or obtained from another's house, it should be of one kind only without salt, that they should for one day eat only by day and stop all actions for three days. Yāj III. 14 prescribes that the actions prescribed by him in III. 12 for relatives (viz. biting nimba leaves up to entering the house) must be done by others who, though no relatives, carried the corpse or decked it &c.

The Śāṅ. Śr. IV. 15.10, the Āśv. gr. IV. 4.17–27, Baud. P. S. I. 12.10. Kauśikasūtra 82.33–35 and 42–47, Pār. gr. III. 10. Āp. Dh. S. I. 3.10.4–10, Gaut Dh. 14.35–36 Manu V. 73, Yas. 4.14–15, Yāj III. 16–17, Viṣṇu Dh S 19.14–17, Saṁvarta 38–43, Śaṅkha 15.25, Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa chap. 5 1–5) and others lay down several rules for those (both men and women) who have lost a near sapiṇḍa by death to be observed immediately after they return from the cremation and for three more days.[547] The Śāṅ. Śr. provides that they should sleep on the bare ground (not on a cot), they should subsist on sacrificial food, they should give up the performance of their usual religious duties (except in relation to the vedic fires) for one night, three nights or nine nights or till the day of the collection of the bones. The Āśv. gr. (IV. 4.17–24) provides these observations viz. 'Let them not cook food during that night, let them subsist on bought food or on food received from others, 546. शमीमालभन्ते शमी पापं शमयतीति अश्मान्नश्मेव स्थिरो भूयासमिति अग्निमग्निर्नः शर्म यच्छत्विति ज्योतिष अन्तरा गामनड्वाहमुपसृजन्त आलभते वा आलभ्य दक्षिणे काष्ठमलवणमेकरात्रं हविष्यं भोक्ष्यन्त एकरात्रं व क्रमेणैवमनड्वान् । वैजवाप quoted in कल्पतरु (शुद्धि p 109), शुद्धितत्त्व p 319, the शुद्धितत्त्व itself being q. by निर्णयसिन्धु III p 580 (which reads आलभ्य वान्यगेहादेकाः).

547. अथः शव्या हविष्यमक्षता भूमौ च कर्तनं वैतानाग्निसंस्कारं त्रिरात्रं नवरात्रं वा, वासःप्रक्षालनादिवर्जनानि । शां. श्रौ IV. 15.10, मातरि पितर्यन्वार्यं वृत्ते त्रिरात्रमक्षारलवणं भोजनमधःशयनं ब्रह्मचर्यं क्रियाः पतिते द्वादशाहं संवत्सरे यावद् ग्रहणं द्वादशरात्रार्धं परकुर्वेवमधोदकान्तिकेषु त्रिरात्रं यावज्जीवं प्रेतपत्नी । यो पि चू I 12.10 ; न स्नात्वाप्रयतो धीरान् । नित्यानि निवर्तेरन्नैतानवर्जम् । शालाग्नौ चैके । अन्य एतानि कुर्युः । यार चू III. 10 (ascribed to पैठीनसि in निता on या III. 17): अमत्र हविष्यानि कुर्वन्ति न भुञ्जते । द नं मनियहो होमो स्वाध्यायश्च निवर्तते । cited as महा in अपरार्क p 892, परा. मा I 2. p 211 Aparārka and others explain that the cessation of homa refers to smārta and not to śrauta homa. The last verse is ascribed to दक्ष by निता on या III. 17, where it adds the half verse सूतके तु कुलस्यान्नदोषं मनुरब्रवीत् । The विष्णुपुराण III. 13 18 reads मृतकप्रेतसंस्कारानि कुर्वन्त्यार्ष. निवर्तने ४. .

let them eat no mineral salt or ordinary [548] salt for three nights, let them optionally avoid for twelve nights the distribution of gifts and the study of vedic texts if one of the principal gurus (father, mother or the teacher who performed upanayana and taught the whole Veda) dies. Pār. gr. III. 10 adds that they should remain chaste, eat food only once in the day and that they should not repeat Veda study, and should give up the daily obligatory duties except those connected with Vedic fires. Manu (V. 73) adds that they should not eat flesh for three days. Vas. (4.14–15) lays down that the relatives who returned from the cemetery should sit down for three days on mats and fast, that if they are unable (to fast for three days) they should subsist on food bought in the market or obtained unasked. Yāj. III 17 and Pār. III. 10 [549] provide that for the night they should put milk and water in an earthen vessel in the open space (on a śikya) with the words 'O departed one! bathe here (in the water) and drink this milk'. Yāj III. 17, Paithīnasi, Manu V. 84, Par. gr. III 10, and others state that the relatives of the departed should perform their own daily rites to be performed in the śrauta fires (such as Agnihotra and Darśapūrnamāsa) and in the smārta fire (such as morning and evening homa) on account of the peremptory dictates of the Veda (such as 'one should perform Agnihotra as long as one lives'). The commentators have added several limitations and restrictions. The Mit. [550] on Yāj. III. 17 states that, as Manu V. 84 only prohibits the stopping of the rites in (Vedic and Smārta) fires, such religious duties as the five daily Mahāyajñas are excluded, that Vaiśvadeva, though performed in fire, is excluded because there is an express text of Samvarta a brāhmana should be without Vaiśvadeva for ten days (after the death of a sapinda), that the Śrauta and Smārta rites should be got performed by another, as Pāraskara (III 10 'anya etāni kuryuh) expressly lays down Only nitya and naimittika acts to be performed in Vedic and Smārta fires are allowed and so kāmya rites cannot be performed. Even at present Agnihotrins

548. For the different explanations of 'ksāra-lavana' vide H of Dh vol II. p. 304 n 723.

549 प्रेतात्र स्नाहीत्युदकं स्थाप्यं पिब चेदमिति क्षीरम्। पार गृ III. 10.

550 सूतके कर्मणा त्याग सन्ध्यादीनां विधीयते—इति यद्यपि सन्ध्याया विनिवृत्तिः श्रूयते तथाञ्जलिप्रक्षेपादिकं कुर्यात्। सूतके सावित्र्या चाञ्जलिं प्रक्षिप्य प्रदक्षिणं कृत्वा सूर्यं ध्यायन्नमस्कुर्यादिति पैठीनसिस्मरणात्। मिता on या III. 17. सूतके कर्मणां त्यागः is गोभिलस्मृति III. 60. Vide विष्णुपुराण III. 13 18 'दानं प्रतिग्रहो होम. स्वाध्यायश्च निवर्तते' perform their śrauta nitya homa during days of impurity themselves, though some get it performed by another (Vide Yāj. III. 17, Manu V 84). Although there is a text of Gobhilasmrti (III 60) prohibiting the performance of sandhyā, yet relying on a sūtra of Paithīnasi the Mit says that a man can offer water to the Sun in worship; others like the Smrtimuktāphala (p. 478) say that sandhyā mantras may be revolved in the mind, except the prānāyāma mantras. This is followed in modern times in many parts of India. Visnu Dh. S. 22 6 prescribes that in impurity due to birth or death homa (Vaiśvadeva), giving and accepting gifts and the study of Veda cease. The Vaik Sm. S. VI.4 states that the performance of sandhyā adoration, all rites for the gods and manes, gift and acceptance and Veda study should be given up during impurity on death. Gautama 14.44 appears to hold that a brāhmana is not affected by impurity on birth and death for the purposes of Veda study. On the other hand Samvarta [551] (43) affirms that on the days of impurity on birth and death there is no performance of the five Mahāyajñas nor of Veda study. The Nityācāra-paddhati p 544 states that even in āśauca the thousand names of Visnu may be recited.

Asthisañcayana or Sañcayana means that rite in which the (charred) bones (of the cremated person) are collected. This rite is dealt with in many sūtra and smrti works, such as Śān. Śr. IV. 15. 12–18, Sat Śr. 28. 3, Āśv. gr. IV. 5 1–18, Gaut P. S I. 5, Visnu Dh. S. 19. 10–12, Baud P. S I. 14, Kausika-sūtra 82. 29–32, Vaik. Smārta Sūtra V. 7, Yama 87–88, Samvarta 38, Gobhila-smrti III. 54–59 (q. by Hāralatā p. 183). There is great divergence of views about the day on which this was to be done. For example, Sat Śr. 28. 3. 1 provides: [552] 'bones are collected on the next day (after cremation) or on the 3rd, 5th or 7th.' Samvarta (verse 38) and Garudapurāna (Pretakhanda 5 15) prescribe that collection of bones should be made on the 1st, 3rd, 7th or 9th and (particularly) on the 4th by twice-born persons The Vāmanapurāna (14 97–98) allows it on the 1st, 4th or 7th day. Yama (87) requires the relatives to collect bones from the 1st to the 4th day after cremation and also provides (verse 88)

551. पञ्चयज्ञविधानं तु न कुर्यान्मृत्युजन्मनोः । वृत्ताहानु परं सम्यग्विप्रोऽधीयीत धर्मवित् ॥ संवर्त 43.

552. अपरेद्युस्तृतीयस्यां पञ्चम्यां समम्या वास्थीनि संचिनोति । सत्या. श्रौ 28. 3.1. अथ सञ्चयनं स्युष्टे द्विरात्रं त्रिरात्रं चतूरात्र पञ्चरात्रं वा । गौ. पि सू. I 5 1. प्रथमेह्नि चतुर्थे वा सप्तमे वास्थिसञ्चयम्। ऊर्ध्वं सञ्चयनात्तेषामङ्गस्पर्शो विधीयते ॥ वामनपुराण 114. 97–98.

that the four varṇas should respectively perform sañcayana on the 4th, 5th, 7th and 9th day. The Āśv. gr. S. IV. 5. 1 states that sañcayana should be performed after the 10th day from cremation in the dark half, but on uneven tithis (i. e. 1st, 3rd, 11th, 13th, 15th) and on a nakṣatra which bears a name not applicable to two or more naksatras (i. e. except on the two Āsāḍhas, two Phalgunīs and two Bhādrapadās). Viṣṇu Dh. S. 19 10, Vaik. Smārta-sūtra V. 7, Kauś. 82. 29, Viṣnupurāna III. 13 14, Kūrmapurāna (uttara) 23 and a few other works lay down that sañcayana must be done on the 4th day after cremation. The various texts differ a good deal in details. The following is the procedure in the Āśv. gr. IV. 5:—The bones of a male should be collected into an urn that has no special marks (protuberances), those of a woman in an urn that has protuberances but no other special marks. Aged persons, odd in number [553] not being together with women, (i. e. not as a mixed assemblage) collect the bones. The performer walks thrice round the spot (where the body was burnt) with his left side turned towards the spot, sprinkles on it with a śamī branch milk mixed with water with a verse 'śītike' (Ṛg. X. 16. 14). With the thumb and the 4th finger they (gatherers) should put each single bone into the urn without making a rattling noise (of the bones in the urn), the bones of the feet being taken first, those of the head last. Having well gathered the bones and having purified them with a winnowing basket (i. e. removing the dust attaching to them) they should put the urn in a pit at a place where the waters from different sides do not flow together except rain water with the verse 'upasarpa' (Ṛg. X. 18. 10) and he should throw earth (into the pit) with the following verse (Ṛg X. 18. 11) After having thrown (earth) he should repeat the next verse (Ṛg. X. 18. 12). Then covering (the mouth of the urn) with a lid with the mantra 'ut te stabhnāmi' (Ṛg. X. 18. 13) (he fills up the pit) Then without looking back they return (towards the house), bathe in water and then offer śrāddha to him alone (the departed). Dr. B. N. Datta in his paper 'Vedic funeral customs and Indus Valley culture in 'Man in India', vol. 16

553. The हारलता (p 184) explains अयुजो मिथुनाः प्रवयसः (in आश्व. गृ.) as 'मिथुनं पुरुषद्वयं बहुवचनात् त्रयो मिथुनाः षट् पुरुषा इत्यर्थः. पञ्च वा मिथुना दश पुरुषाः प्रवयस. मकृदवयस ?. It is probable that women also accompanied the cortege to the cemetery in ancient times, that gradually they ceased to do so and by the time of the Hāralatā only men comprised the funeral procession and so it explained the words of Āśv. as above.

pp. 223–307 regards (p. 285) Rg. X. 18 as a hymn dealing with burial of the whole body (and not of ashes), while he admits (p 287) that Rg. X. 16 is a cremation hymn. I dissent from him for various reasons; the most important is that if his theory be correct a period of several centuries must be postulated between the two hymns. This is inadmissible.

The Kauśikasūtra (82. 29–32) prescribes certain details differently. It says that the bones are collected with A. V. 18. 2. 24, 26, then they are consigned to a jar over which all fragrant powders are scattered, then the jar is raised with the Utthāpanī verses and carried with the verses called Harinis (i e. A V. 18 2 11–18). He (the performer) deposits (in the earth the urn) at the root of a tree with the verse 'mā tvā' (A. V. 18. 2. 25 'May the tree not injure thee all round, may not the wide goddess Earth also injure thee'). [554]

The other sūtras present several variations which are passed over here, excepting one or two matters. The Sat. Śr. provides that the twig should be of the Udumbara tree, that the bones are collected by women of the family of the deceased (his wife and others) odd in number (five or more), or other women (in the absence of women of the family). A woman who is not likely to have a child should tie in her left hand a Bṛhatī fruit with two threads, blue and red in colour, should step on a stone with her left foot, collect the bones first from the teeth or head with the mantra 'uttiṣṭhata' (Tai Ā VI. 4. 2) and she should deposit those bones in a jar or garment, then a second woman of the same type collects bones from the shoulders or arms, a third woman from the sides or hips, a fourth from the thighs or legs, and a fifth from the feet They or more women collect the bones completely. The urn is deposited at the root of a śamī or palāśa tree.

In modern times, particularly in towns and cities, the collection of bones has to be done immediately after cremation. The Antyesti-paddhati closely follows the procedure prescribed in the Āśv. gr quoted above. It says. the performer goes to the place of cremation, sips water, mentions the time and place, makes a saṅkalpa (declaration) that he will perform the collection of the bones of the departed naming him and his gotra. He walks thrice round the place of cremation with his left towards it and sweeps it with a śamī branch and sprinkles it with milk mixed with water with the mantra 'śītike' (Rg X. 16. 14). Then old men odd in number with the performer collect the bones (as stated by Āśv. gr. above) and place them in a new jar and if they are of a woman in a jar with protuberances They also winnow the ashes with a śūrpa and place in the jar even small bones and throw the ashes into the Ganges. Then at some time other than the rainy season a pit should be dug in a pure spot whereon water would not flow and the performer deposits the jar in the pit with the mantra 'approach this mother, Earth' (Rg. X. 18. 10). With Rg X. 18. 11, he throws earth in the pit all round the jar and murmurs with folded hands the mantra (Rg X. 18. 12) and he closes the jar with a new earthen disk with the verse Rg. X. 18. 13 Then he should put earth on the jar in such a way that it may not be seen by anybody and without looking back should go elsewhere and bathe. The Nirnayasindhu (p. 586) expressly states that the procedure for the collection of bones may be gathered from one's sūtra or from the work of Bhaṭṭa (i. e. Nārāyana, Kamalākara's grandfather).

554. मा ते मनो यत्ते अक्षमिति सञ्चिनोति पच्छ । प्रथम शीर्षकपालानि । पश्चात्कलशे समोप्य सर्वसुरभिचूर्णैरवकीर्योत्थापनीभिरुत्थाप्य हरिणीभिर्हरेयु. । मा त्वा वृक्ष इति वृक्षमूले निदधाति । कौशिकसूत्र 82 29–32. It appears that the sūtras are not properly arranged by Bloomfield They should be read as पच्छ प्रथमम् । शीर्षकपालानि पश्चात् । कलशे etc For the उत्थापनी verses see n. 474 The हरिणी verses from अथर्ववेद are 18.2. 11–18 and are the same as Rg X. 14 10–12 and X. 154, 1–5.

The Visnudharmasūtra (19.11–12) and Anu. 26.32 state that the collected bones should be cast in Ganges water, since as many particles of the bones of a man remain in Ganges water for so many thousands of years he dwells in heaven. It was provided in the Purāṇas that a virtuous son, brother or daughter's son or a relative on the father's or mother's side should cast the bones in the Ganges, that one not so related should not do it and that if he does it he has to perform cāndrāyana prāyaścitta. Even in modern times many Hindus take the charred bones of their parents or other dear relatives to the Ganges at Prayāga (Allahabad) or some other holy river [554a] or cast them into the sea. The Nirnayasindhu (p. 587) quotes an elaborate rite of casting the ashes in the Ganges from Śaunaka It is briefly as follows: The performer should go out of the village, bathe with clothes on, sprinkle the earth where the ashes are deposited with the Gāyatrī and the other mantras usually repeated over pañcagavya. With the four mantras 'upasarpa' (Rg. X. 18.10-13) he should respectively pray to the earth, then dig it, take out the earth, and then the bones. Then he should bathe and purify the bones by touching the bones again and again and repeating the mantras 'eto nvindram stavāma śuddham &c' (Rg VIII. 95. 7-9). Then he should bathe with pañcagavya and become pure. Then he should bathe ten times with cow's urine, cow's dung, cow's milk, curds, clarified butter, water in which kuśas have been dipped, ashes (of sacred fires), earth, honey and water. Then he should sprinkle (with kuśas) water on the bones with the mantras, viz. Rg. I.22 16. Rg VIII. 95.7-9,[555] Rg VII. 56.12-14, Rg. X. 126 1-8, Rg. X. 119.1-13, Rg. IX. 1.1-10 (called Pāvamānī verses), Rg. X 128.1-9, Rg. I. 43.1-9 (a hymn to Rudra); then he should offer a hiraṇya śrāddha for the deceased, offer piṇḍa to him and perform tarpaṇa with sesame. Then he should cover the bones in seven ways viz. by deer-skin, woollen blanket, darbhas, cow's hair, hempen cloth, birch leaf and palm leaf. He should cast among the bones pieces of gold and silver, pearls, coral and sapphire for the purification of the bones, then he should offer into fire 108 oblations of clarified butter and sesame with the hymn beginning with 'udīratām' (Rg. X. 15). Then he should cast the bones in holy water; thereby he does not incur the fault of touching an unclean object. While answering the calls of nature or performing ācamana one should not hold the bones.

554 a. The स्मृतिच (आशौच) p. 190 quotes several verses on this point तत्र शाण्डिल्यः। द्वारवत्यां सेतुबन्धे गोदावर्यां च पुष्करे। अस्थीनि विसृजेद्यस्य स मृतो मुक्तिमाप्नुयात्। शङ्खलिखितौ। गङ्गायां च प्रयागे च केदारे पुष्करोत्तमे। अस्थीनि विधिवत् त्यक्त्वा गयायां पिण्डदो भवेत्। पितॄनुद्धरणात्मुच्येत तौ नित्यं मोक्षगामिनौ। इति। योगयाज्ञवल्क्यः। गङ्गायां यमुनायां वा कावेर्यां वा शतद्रुतौ। सरस्वत्यां विशेषेण ह्यस्थीनि विसृजेत्सुतः॥

The Nirnayasindhu adds (p. 588) that there is no asthisañcayana for one whose upanayana had not been performed.

The Āśv. gr. IV.6, the Sat Sr. 28 4, Śān Śr 4 6 (called paridhikarma) and some others prescribe a Śānti rite after collection of the charred bones of a deceased person. The Baud. P. S. (II. 3 3) and Visnu Dh. S. 19.19 appear to prescribe the Śānti rite after the ten days of impurity have expired ('daśarātre saucam krtvā śāntih'). It is described by Āśv. gr as follows: They who have lost a guru (father or mother) by death should perform on the new moon day an expiatory ceremony. Before sunrise they should carry fire together with its ashes and with its receptacle to the south with the half verse 'I send away the flesh-devouring Agni' (Rg X 16 9) Having cast that fire down at a place where four roads meet or somewhere else, they 555. It should be noticed that in Rg VIII 95 7-9 the word 'śuddha' (pure) occurs thirteen times and hence it is appropriate that those verses are employed as purificatory ones Similarly, in Rg. VII. 56.12 the word 'śuci' (pure) occurs six times.

walk round it thrice, with their left side turned to it and beating their left thighs with the left hand. They should then return home without looking back, bathe in water, have their hair, beards and hair on the body and nails cut, furnish themselves with new jars, pots, vessels for rinsing the mouth, with garlands of śamī flowers, with fuel of śamī wood, with two pieces of śamī wood for kindling fire[556] and with branches for encircling the fire, with bull's dung and hide, fresh butter, a stone and as many bunches of kuśa grass as there are young women (in the house). At the time of the Agnihotra (in the afternoon) he should kindle fire (by means of the araṇis) with the half verse 'Here may this other Jātavedas' (Rg X. 16.9 latter half)'. Keeping the fire burning they sit till night silence falls, repeating tales of old men (of the family) and stories of auspicious contents, Itihāsas and Purāṇas When all sounds have ceased or when the others (members of the deceased's family) have gone to their houses or resting place, (the performer) should pour out a continuous stream of water beginning at the south side of the door with the verse (Rg. X. 53.6) 'spreading the thread follow the light of the world' and go round the house ending at the north side of the door. Then having placed the fire and spread to the west of it a bull's hide with neck to the east, with the hair outside, he should cause the people of the house (including women) to step on that hide with the verse 'Arise to long life'[557] (Rg. X. 18.6). He should place twigs round the fire with 'Here do I deposit an encircling thing' (Rg. X. 18.4). Having placed a stone to the north of the fire with the words 'May they place a mountain between themselves and death' (Rg. X. 18.4 last pāda) and having sacrificed with four verses 'Go hence, O Death' (Rg. X. 18.1–4), he should look at his people with the verse 'as days follow each other' (Rg. X. 18.5). The young women (belonging to the house) should with each hand separately with the thumb and 4th finger salve (at one and the same time) their eyes with fresh butter by means of young darbha blades and cast

556. Nārāyaṇa explains that the fire means ordinary kitchen fire and he seems to be right in spite of Oldenberg's note to the contrary on p. 246 (of S. B E vol. 29) The deceased sacrificer is cremated with his śrauta fires (vide Āśv. gr. IV. 4) and smārta fire (if any) and on his death the śāntikarma is performed by the son or other relative who may have no consecrated fires at all or, if he has, he cannot cast them away as long as he lives. The Com on Sat Sr 28. 4, 1 states that it is the adhvaryu priest that kindles the fire and not he who performed the cremation.

557 Most of these mantras occur also in Tai. Ā. VI. 10 away the blades turning their faces away. The performer should look at them while they are salving their eyes, with the verse 'these women, being no widows and having good husbands' (Rg. X. 18.7). The former should first touch the stone with 'the stream containing stones flows' (Rg. X 53 8). After that, stationing himself to the north-east, while others go round with the fire, bull-dung and a continuous stream of water he should, after repeating the three verses (āpo hi sthā, Rg X. 9.1-3), murmur the verse 'these have led round the cows' (Rg. X. 155 5). A tawny-coloured bull should be led round. They then sit down at a place where they like to stop, having put on fresh unwashed garments and they sit there till sunrise avoiding sleep. After sunrise, having murmurred the hymns sacred to the sun and auspicious hymns, having prepared food and made oblations with the hymn beginning 'May he burn away evil from us' (Rg. I. 97.1-8), verse by verse, having given to the brāhmanas to eat, he should cause them to pronounce auspicious words. A cow, a cup of metal and a fresh unworn garment are the sacrificial fee for each of the brāhmanas.

A few details may be added from other sūtras. The Sat Śr. (28.4.1) provides that the Śānti is performed on the 10th day after cremation by a priest, that in the folded hands of the wives (of the members of the family) he puts the remains of the material used for oblations with the verse 'these women, not being widows' (Rg. X. 18.7=Tai. Ā. VI. 1 8 2), that the priest plants in the earth the stalk of a plant with the verse 'yathā tvam' (Tai. Ā. VI. 10 2)[558], that after they return home, they cook goat flesh and boil yava grains and eat them and then may occupy couches and cots (i. e. give up the observances of mourning)

Interesting information is furnished by the Śat. Br. about graves (XIII. 8. 1-4) and Kāt Śr[559] It is said in Śat. Br that

558 The mantra is very significant, यथा त्वमुद्निनत्सि ओषधे पृथिव्या अधि। एवमिम उद्निन्दन्तु कीर्त्या यशसा ब्रह्मवर्चसेन॥ तै आ VI. 10. 2

559. अथैकेषा कुम्भान्त निधानमनाहिताग्ने स्त्रियाश्च निवपनान्त इवियाजिन पुन र्दहनान्तं सोमयाजिनश्चयनान्तमग्निचित इति। सत्या श्रौ 28 4, 28, almost the same words occur in बौ पि. सू II 3 2 This passage refers to four modes of the disposal of the charred bones viz. burial in the earth of the urn for women and men who had not consecrated śrauta fires, depositing the bones alone on the earth for him who performs havir-yajñas (in which only boiled rice and clarified butter are offered, vide Gaut 8 20), re-cremation for one who had offered soma sacrifice and building a brick or clod structure for him who

(Continued on the next page)

the grave[560] or monument should not be built too soon after death, lest he (the performer) freshen up the sin of the deceased ; that he should make it a long time after and when people do not even remember the years (that have elapsed since the decease). He should make it in uneven years and under a single naksatra (i. e. containing a single star such as Citrā and Pusya, and not dual such as Punarvasu and Viśākhā or plural such as Krttikā) and on the New Moon day. Let him make it in autumn or in Māgha or in summer. The sepulchral mound should be four cornered, because the people who are worshippers of gods (or godly) make their burial mounds four-cornered, while those who are followers of Asuras, the Easterns and such like people, make them round. As to the choosing of the ground, the Śat. Br. states several views viz. he makes it on ground sloping towards the north or, according to some, to the south; but the Śat. Br. disapproves of both the views and prescribes that he should make the burial mound on any level ground where the waters flowing from a southernly direction come to the east and stand still without dashing forward and on such a ground one may make it (burial mound). Let him make it on a pleasant and peaceful spot, but not on a road nor in an open space lest he should make the deceased's sin manifest. It should have the sun shining on it (at mid-day). It should not be made at a place

---

(Continued from the last page)

had performed the solemn rite of Agnicayana. Modes of urn burial, earth burial and re-cremation resemble the funeral customs of the copper age folk of the lower Indus at Mohenjo-daro and Harappa. Vide Memoir No 31 of the Archaeological Survey of India by Ramprasad Chanda at pp. 13-14

560. अथास्मै श्मशानं कुर्वन्ति । तद्वै न क्षिप्रं कुर्यात् । नेन्नवमवं करवाणीति चिर एव कुर्यादथैव तत्तिर. करोति यत्र समा नाद्रु च न स्मरेयुः ..यद्यद्रुस्मरेयु । अयुग्मेषु संवत्सरेषु कुर्यात् । एकनक्षत्रे . अमावास्यायाम् ।. शरदि कुर्यात् ।...माघे वा मा नोऽधि भूदिति निदाघे वा नि नोऽध धीयाता इति । चतु स्रक्ति । तस्माद्या दैव्य. प्रजाश्चतुःस्रक्तीनि ताः श्मशानानि कुर्वतेऽथ या आसुर्य. प्राच्यास्त्वथत्वे परिमण्डलानि ।.. अथातो भूमिजोषणस्य । उदीचीनप्रवणे करोति । दक्षिणाप्रवणे कुर्यादित्याहु ।...यस्यैव समस्य सतः दक्षिणत. पुरस्ताद्वाप एत्य संस्थायो प्रह्वस्य एतां दिशमभिनिष्पद्याक्षय्या अपोऽपिपद्यैरस्तत्कुर्यात् ।...कम्वति कुर्यात् कं मेऽ सदित्यथो शंवति शं मेऽसदिति नाधिपथं कुर्पाज्ञाकाशे नेदाविरर्धं करवाणीति ।...आदित्यज्योतिष-मेवैन करोति । न तास्मिन् कुर्यात् । यस्येत्थादनूत्काश. स्यात् । चित्रं पश्चात्स्यात् ।...यदि चित्रं न स्यादाप. पश्चाद्दोत्तरतो वा स्यु । ..ऊपरे करोति । समूले .. । न भूमिपाशामभिविद्धयात् । न शर नाश्मगन्धा नाश्वाण्डा न पृश्निपर्णी नाश्वत्थस्यान्तिके कुर्याच्च विभीतकस्य न तिल्वकस्य न स्फूर्जकस्य न हरिद्रोर्न न्यग्रोधस्य ये चान्ये पायनामान . । अग्निविधयाग्निचितः श्मशानं करोति ।.. तद्वै न महत्कुर्यात् । नेन्महद्दधे करवाणीति ।...पुरुषमात्रं त्वेव कुर्यात् ...पश्चाद्वरीयः... उत्तरतो वर्षीय. । तद्विधायापसलविच्छद्याभिः स्पन्द्याभिः पर्यूहनेति ..। शतपथब्रा XIII 8. 1; compare कौशिक 83. 5-7 for similar derivations of माव, निदाघ &c where it would be visible from the village and there should be charming objects to its west (woods, gardens &c.). If there be no charming objects there should be waters to its west or north. He makes it on salt (barren) soil, on such ground as abounds in roots. Let him not make it near where grows the Bhūmipāśā plant or where reeds grow, or Aśvagandhā or Adhyaṇḍā, or Pṛśniparṇī grows. He should not make it near an aśvattha tree or near a vibhītaka tree or a tilvaka, a sphūrjaka or a haridru or nyagrodha tree or other trees that have an evil name (like śleśmātaka or kovidāra) For one who has performed Agnicayana, he makes a tomb after the manner of the fire altar. One must not make it too large lest he should make the sin (of the deceased) large He should make it just a man's size, broader behind (to the west) and broader on the north side He encloses it with cords twisted in the non-sunwise way. He then bids them to cut out the earth which would be just sufficient for making the mound of a man's size.

The Kāt Śr. (21. 3. 1 and 6) closely follows the above directions contained in the Śat [561] Br The Sat. Śr. 29. 1.2 provides that when the day of cremation is not known or remembered one may erect a mound over the bones (with clods of earth or bricks) on the New Moon day that comes immediately after the Full Moon day of Māgha, Phālguna, Caitra, Vaiśākha or of the summer months (Jyestha and Āsādha)

The Śat. Br. (XIII. 8 2–4) pursues the subject of sepulchral monuments as follows: Godly people make their sepulchres so as not to be separate from the earth; while those who are of the Asura stamp, the Easterns and others, make the sepulchral mounds so as to be separate from the earth, either on a stone basin or a similar thing He then encloses it with an undefined number of stones silently. He then sweeps the sepulchral site with a palāśa branch with (Vāj S. 35.1 'May the niggardly god-haters go away') and prays that Yama may grant him (the deceased) an abode He throws out the branch to the south side He then yokes the team of six oxen to the plough on the south side or on the north side, as he chooses Having given the order 'Yoke' he (the performer) utters the mantra (Vāj. S. 35. 2).[562] Having turned round the plough from right (south side) to the north, he ploughs the first furrow with Vāj. S. 35.3 ' May Vāyu purify ' along the north side towards the west; with ' May Savitr purify ' along the west side towards the south; with ' Agni's lustre ' along the south side towards the east, with ' Sūrya's brilliance ' along the front side towards the north. Four furrows he ploughs with a Yajus formula. He then ploughs across the body (of the sepulchral site) silently with an undefined number of furrows He then unfastens the team of oxen To the right side (south-west) he removes this (the plough and the team).

561 The grave is to be constructed in such a way that the four corners would lie in the direction of the four quarters, as Kāt. Śr. (21. 3. 28–29) states 'dikṣrakti puruṣamātram mimīte uttarataḥ pṛthu paścācca)'.

He then sows seeds of all kinds of herbs with a single verse (Vāj. S 35 4); for long life he thereby prays for these (the performer's family) and accordingly each subsequent one of them dies of old age He then pours out that (jar of bones). He does so before sunrise so that the sun should rise over him while he is doing it He does so with Vāj S. 35. 5–6. He then says to some one ' Proceed in that (southern) direction without drawing breath and having thrown down the jar, return hither without looking behind.' He then mutters Vāj S. 35.7. He then arranges the dead man (the bones) limb by limb with Vāj. S. 35.8–9. Now thirteen unmarked[563] bricks each measuring a (human) foot (pada) have been made and are laid down

---

562. It is not possible, owing to considerations of space, to set out all the verses of the Vāj S. chap. 35 mentioned as mantras by the Sat Br Only a few are set out here in order to show how appropriate they are as referring to the actions prescribed by the Sat Br. Verse 1 first half is 'अपेतो यन्तु पणयोऽसम्ना देवपीयव' ।', सविता ते शरीरेभ्य पृथिव्याँल्लोकमिच्छतु । तस्मै युज्यन्तामुस्रियाः ॥ वाज सं 35 2. वायु पुनातु सविता पुनात्वग्नेर्भ्राजसा सूर्यस्य वर्चसा । विमुच्यन्तामुस्रियाः ॥ वाज स 35, 3

563 The bricks of the fire altar are marked with lines (vide H of Dh. Vol II. p 1248) The bricks in Agnicayana are as long as the foot of the sacrificer. Thereon gods have to be worshipped Here it is the fathers to be honoured Throughout Śat. Br. XIII 8 2–3 a distinction is drawn between what is done for the gods and what is to be done for pitṛs in order to keep the divine distinct from what belongs to the fathers In Agnicayana a bird-like pattern is the most frequent (vide H of Dh vol II p 1249) It is hence that the Sat Br. speaks of wings and tails. The heights prescribed for men of the several varnas and for women are symbolic Kṣatriyas, brāhmanas and vaiśyas represent the arms, the mouth and thighs of the Puruṣa (as stated in Rg. X. 90.12). The Kāt Sr (21 4 13–14) gives an option in the case of a kṣatriya viz. the mound may be as high as the ches or as high as a man with upstretched arms.

silently (and not with mantras as in the case of the Agnicayana). One of the thirteen he places in the middle, with the front towards the east (this represents the trunk), three are placed in front (representing the head), three on the right (that is the right wing); three on the left (that represents the left wing); three behind (representing the tail). He then directs them to bring some soil from a cleft in the ground. Some dig in the intermediate (south-eastern) quarter and fetch it from there; others dig in the south-west and fetch it northwards; he may do as he likes (there is an option) Let him not make the sepulchral mound too large For a kṣatriya he may make it as high as a man with upstretched arms, for a brāhmaṇa reaching up to the mouth, for a woman up to the hips, for a vaiśya up to the thighs, for a śūdra up to the knee, or let him rather make it so high (for all) as to reach below the knee. While the mound is being made, they hold a bundle of reed grass to the north of it. Let him not throw it down after holding it up or after bringing it, but let him set it up in the house (as it represents offspring) Having prepared it he sows barley grain, thinking 'May they ward off (yavaya) sin from me!' He covers it over with Avakā plants in order that there may be moisture (kṣa or joy) for him and with darbha grass for softness.

They fix pegs round it, a palāśa one in front, a śamī one on the north corner, a vaṛana one behind and a vṛtra[564] peg on the right (south corner). On the south side they dig two somewhat curved furrows and fill them with milk and water and they dig seven on the left (north) side and fill them with water for sin not to pass beyond They throw three stones each into the northern furrows and pass over them with Vāj S 35 10 (= Rg. X. 53 8) They cleanse themselves with Apāmārga[565] plants with Vāj S 35 11; they thereby wipe away sin They bathe at any place where there is water. With Vāj S . 35 12 he takes water with his joined hands and he throws it in the direction in which he who is hateful may be and thereby overthrows him[566] Having bathed and put on garments that have never yet been washed they hold on to the tail of an ox and return to their home. They proceed towards the village muttering Vāj. S. 35.14 (ud vayam). When they have arrived, ointments for their eyes and feet are given to them; such indeed are human means of embellishment and therewith they keep off death from themselves Then in the house having kindled (domestic) fire and laid enclosing sticks of tarana wood round it he offers by means of a sruva (spoon) an oblation to Agni Āyuṣmat. Vāj. S. 35. 16 serves [567] as a puronuvākyā (invitatory formula). He then offers with Vāj. S. 35.17. He says this so that Agni may guard and protect these men. The sacrificial fee is an old ox, old barley, old chair with a head cushion. He may give more if he desires. This is the procedure in the case of one who has performed Agnicayana.[568] In the case of him who has not performed Agnicayana, there is the same procedure for selecting a site and the same performance save that of the fire-altar Having fetched a clod from the boundary he deposits it midway between the sepulchral mound and the village with Vāj. S. 35. 15 (imam [569] jivebhyaḥ). He then makes this a boundary between the Fathers and the living, so as not to commingle the two.

564 The meaning of Vṛtra-Śanku cannot be stated Kāt Śr 2 1 3 31 reads ट्रेहशङ्कु for वृत्रशङ्कु and the Com explains वृत्रशङ्कु as पाषाणशङ्कु

565 अपाघमप किल्बिषमप कृत्यामपो रिप । अपामार्ग त्वमस्मदप दुष्वप्न्यं सुव ॥ वाज सं 35 11.

566 सुमित्रिया न आप ओषधय सन्तु दुर्मित्रियास्तस्मै सन्तु योऽस्मान्द्वेष्टि य व वयं द्विष्म ॥ वाज सं 35 12.

The Sat. Śr. 29. 1 3 ff. and Baud. P. S. I. 17–20 provide a lengthy procedure for erecting a mound over the bones of one who has performed the special rite of agnicayana which is passed over here. In building a mound the urn deposited under a tree is taken out and after the bones are purified in various ways (such as the spilling on them of curds mixed with vājina from a jar, the digging up of the clods by means of a plough to which a certain number of oxen are yoked). The Sat. Śr. (29. 1. 3–12) deals with one kind of procedure in which there is no dhavana, while 29.1. 13–32 deal with the procedure where dhavana is employed and sūtras from 33 deal with procedure common to both paksas (viz. one without dhavana and the other with dhavana) The building of a mound with clods (lostaciti) in which there is dhavana is rather an obscure matter in its nature and had some symbolic significance which is now lost. It may be briefly described as follows .— The members of the deceased's house 567. अग्न आयूंषि पवस आ सुवोर्जमिष च न । आरे बाधस्व दुच्छुनाम् ॥ वाज. सं. 35 16.

---

568. आयुष्मानग्ने हविषा वृधानो घृतप्रतीको घृतयोनिरेधि । घृतं पीत्वा मधु चारु गव्यं पितेव पुत्रमभिरक्षतादिमान् स्वाहा ॥ वाज सं 35 17.

569 इमं जीवेभ्यः परिधिं दधामि मैषां नु गादपरो अर्थमेतम् । शतं जीवन्तु शरदः पुरूचीरन्तर्मृत्युं दधतां पर्वतेन ॥ वाज. सं. 35. 15.

build a shed or a seat for a bed. They drive in the eastern half or middle or western half of it a three-pronged palāśa peg. In front of it one born of a śūdra woman or a brahmabandhu (a brāhmana only in name) sits down for a dialogue He asks the principal wife (of the deceased) 'will you dwell with me.' That woman replies to him 'I shall not give (what you ask).' The same dialogue takes place on the 2nd day. Then on the third day she replies 'I shall give for one night' Or if this peculiar practice (of talking about dhavana, which literally means 'sexual intercourse') was intended to last for more days than three she was to give a suitable reply (viz. for three nights or for five nights &c). When the words of the reply are uttered by the wife, the performer deposits the bones (of the deceased) at the root of the peg and places between the three prongs of the peg a jar having a hundred holes at the bottom The mouth of the jar is covered with a hide and kuśa grass On that jar he sprinkles curds mixed with vājina with the mantra 'Vaiśvānare haviridam' (Tai. Ā. VI. 6. 1). When the liquid oozes from the jar on the bones he invokes the two verses 'drapsaś-caskanda' and 'imam samudram' (Tai. Ā. VI 6). Then the Sat Śr. (29.1. 26–29) provides that four brahmacārins or other brāhmanas, that are pure, tie up their locks on their heads that are to the right and keep dishevelled those on the left side of the head, they strike their right thighs and also the hide that is wound round the jar of bones, fan it with the fringes of their garments, go round the peg thrice with their left side towards the jar and the people living in the same house (with the deceased) and women also do the same,[570] that lutes (vīnā) are played upon and also conches are blown and other instruments like nāḍika, tūna, panava are beaten and there is also dancing, singing and playing on musical instruments. This practice of dhavana (symbolic) may go on for five, seven, nine, eleven days, half a month, a month or a year during which time one has to donate food and money (gold &c) according to one's ability or on the last day according to some.[571] If one may offer a conjecture, this rite was intended to assure the deceased man (represented by the charred bones) that his wife had remained faithful and unattached to any one else even long after his death. The Baud. P. S. (I. 17.8) also states that female dancers dance in this rite. Various measurements are given in the sūtras for the mounds that are constructed over the bones. Sat. Śr. (29.1 5–6) says [572] that the site of the mound (śmaśānāyatana) is five prakramas on all four sides (or six on the east and five in the other directions, acc. to some). The height of the mound is variously given even in the same sūtra. [573] Sat Śr. states that the height may be two finger-breadths, or three or four or a prādeśa (the distance between the thumb and index finger when both are stretched away) or a vitasti (twelve finger-breadths), or it may be up to the knee or thighs or buttocks The Baud P S.I. 18 gives different [574] measurements. It states 'if the mound to be raised is as high as the neck towards the west, then it is up to the navel on the east, if it is as high as the navel on the west, then it is as high as the knee on the east; if up to the knee on the west then on the east it is level with the ankle'. The Kauśikasūtra [575] (85 4–10) gives certain options viz. the mandapa on which the mound is to be erected is either 7, 7, 5, 3 prakramas on the south, north, east and west or 9, 9, 7, 5 on the same sides in order or 11, 11, 9, 7; that in the case of those who worshipped the gods, the length was eleven on all sides; that in the case of the Śaunakins the sides (of the mound) are to be measured in odd numbers (of prakramas) and the mounds are either round or four-cornered; that such mounds are seen (in those days) and that the grave built for one who had set up vedic fires was to be of the height of a man with arms upraised. These passages show that the graves were generally

570 Compare कौशिकसूत्र 85 10–11 'कस्ये सृजाना इति त्रि प्रसव्य प्रकीर्णकेश्य. परियन्ति दक्षिणानूरूनाघ्नाना । एवं मध्यरात्रे अपररात्रे च ।', कस्ये सृजाना is अथर्ववेद 18. 3. 17

571. On एकरात्राय वदामीति तृतीये (सत्या औ 29. 1 19.) the वैजयन्ती remarks 'एतच्च वचनमात्रम् । न तु तेन सह वासः कार्य एवमेतेनाह'.

---

572. अपराह्णे श्मशानायतनं विमिमीते पञ्च पञ्च प्रक्रमान् सर्वत । पद पुरस्ताद्दित्येके। सत्या. श्रौ 29 1. 5–6, the Com. वैजयन्ती explains 'तथा च पञ्च प्रक्रमसंमितं समचतुरस्रं लोष्टचितेरायतनं भवति। प्रक्रमो द्विपदक्षिपदो वेत्युक्तं शुल्वेषु'

573. श्मशानस्य मात्रा द्व्यङ्गुलं त्र्यङ्गुलं चतुरङ्गुलं प्रादेशो वितस्तिर्जानुदघ्नमूरुदघ्नं रिक्नद्घ्नं वैषोत्तमा मात्रा श्मशानस्य। सत्या. श्रौ. 29 1 70. The com says 'इदानीमूर्ध्वप्रमाणमुच्यते । तत्र द्व्यङ्गुलादीनामष्टानामन्यतममूर्ध्वप्रमाणं स्थलस्य तस्योपरीष्टकाश्चेतव्याः ।'.

574 तस्य मात्रा यदि ग्रीवदघ्नं पश्चात्पुरस्ताज्जानुदघ्नं यदि नाभिदघ्नं पश्चात्पुरस्ताज्जानुदघ्नं यदि जानुदघ्नं पश्चात्पुरस्ताद्गुल्फदघ्नं &c. । वी पि सू I 18 6, Dr Caland's text reads the exact opposite (I 15 p 21) 'यदि ग्रीवदघ्नं पुरस्ताज्जानुदघ्नं पश्चाद्यदि नाभिदघ्नं पुरस्ताज्जानुदघ्नं पश्चाद्यदिजानुदघ्न पुरस्ताद्गुल्फदघ्न पश्चात्'.

575 एकादशभिर्दैवदक्षिणाम्। अयुग्मभानानि परिमण्डलानि चतुरस्राणि वा शौनकिनाम्। तथाहि दृश्यन्ते । यावान्पुरुष ऊर्ध्वबाहुस्तावानन्विचितः । कौशिकसूत्र 85. 7–10.

quadrangular but sometimes round also (acc. to certain schools). The mounds at Lauriya referred to above are round.

Another feature to be noted is that clods were employed (and so the mound was called loṣṭacit) or baked bricks in building the mound or grave over the bones by piling up layers of clay or bricks. In laying down the bricks first on the east, then on the north, then on the west and then on the south, the sūtras such as Sat. Śr. (29.1.53),[576] Baud. P. S. (I. 19.4–7) four verses were respectively employed that are (in order) Rg. X. 18.13, 10, 11, 12 (which are also A. V. XVIII. 3.52. 49 50, 51 and Tai. Ā. VI.7.1). One of these (Rg. X. 18.12) speaks of pillars and the other (Rg. X. 18.13) of a post (sthūnā). Vide above p. 189. The discovery of two wooden posts in two mounds (at Lauriya above) in which the bones were deposited indicates that the Lauriya mounds followed a vedic custom which is mentioned by the srautasūtras. The main difference between the Vedic and sūtra ritual on the one hand and the Lauriya mounds on the other is the height of the latter, which betokens a later age than that of the sūtras.

The Sat. Śr. describes in the 28th praśna what is called pitṛmedha while in praśna 29 it describes the brahmamedha. The difference between the two is pointed out in Sat. Śr. 29.3.4–18 and it is stated[577] (in Sat. Śr. 29.3. 20. 22) that the mantras called 'catur-hotārāḥ' are spoken of as brahma (in Tai. Br. III. 12.5) and that the procedure of Brahmamedha is to be employed only for an ācārya or a śrotriya and for no one else. The Vaijayantī by Mahādeva states (in the Introductory verses) that prasnas 28 and 29 of Sat. Śr. are taken from Bharadvāja. It may be stated here that the procedure of dhanya described above in Sat. Śr. is no longer followed in India in modern times. In the Baud.[578] P. S. I. 17 there are passages that bear a close resemblance to some passages of the Sat. Śr on dhavana. Similarly, Kāt Śr.[579] 21. 3. 6 provides (immediately after the months in which mounds were to be constructed) that as many jars should be taken as there are persons performing dhavana (or dhuvana) and the commentator explains that word as meaning 'fanning'.

---

576. विधृतिलोष्टान् प्रतिदिशमनन्वीक्षमाण उपदधात्यैते स्तन्वोमीत्यैते अनिनम्त्रं त्रिः-मिश्राभिर्धानाभिस्त्रि प्रदक्षिणं परिक्रित्येणीर्धाना इति। सत्या. श्रौ. 29 1. 53, on which the Com says अत्रापि पूर्वस्यां दिशि पारम्भः।; अथ क्षेत्रविदुर्ग्नौ चतुरो लोष्टानुपदधात्यैते स्तन्वोमि.. निनोत्विति पुरस्तादुपदधाति।. उच्छ्रयमाना पृथिवी हि निहिते मर्त्ये तिर्यङ् उप हि अयन्ताम्।. .स्तन्वेति दक्षिणत.। बौ पि सू

577. On 29.3.2 (एवं ब्रह्ममेध इत्याचक्षते) of सत्या. श्रौ. the वैजयन्ती explains 'अत्र सहेतुकोऽधिकारः। यस्माद् ब्रह्मसंज्ञको मेध इति विग्रहः। ब्रह्मशब्देन मेधसहचरेण स्तूयते देशस्तुतिः। चतुर्होतृसंज्ञको दहनकल्प इत्यर्थः'. On 'तान् परं ब्रह्मेत्याचक्षते' सत्या श्रौ 29.3.20, the वैजयन्ती says 'तांश्चतुर्होतॄन्। परब्रह्मशब्दः सारभूतमन्त्रवाची। ब्रह्म वै चतुर्होतार इति।'

It will be seen that the disposal of the dead in ancient India was divided into four stages viz. cremation, collecting the charred bones and depositing them underground in an urn, expiatory rites (called Śāntikarma) and erection of a monument over the bones. The last was not necessarily done in every case. The Andhau Inscription of the time of Rudradāman in the year 52 (probably of the śaka era) refers to the erection of a staff (lasti i e. yasti) as a funeral monument to the memory of a sister, brother and wife by Madana son of Sihila (vide E I. Vol. 16 pp. 23–25). In a long passage of the Brahmapurāna quoted by Aparārka (pp. 885–886) it is stated that the charred bones of a cremated person should be collected in an urn and deposited at the root of a tree or cast in the Ganges, that the place of cremation should be purified with cowdung and water, that a puskaraka tree should be planted there or an edūka (a structure) should be built over it.[580]

The Sat Śr 28. 4 28 and Baud P S. II. 3. 2 state as shown above that the rites immediately after death were performed only up to the depositing of the urn (containing the bones) underground in the case of those householders who had not set up the vedic fires and in the case of married women and that in the case of him who had performed the solemn rite of Agnicayana a mound with bricks or clods was built up on the bones.

---

578 एकाहं धुवयुक्तीण्यहानि धुवयु· पञ्चसप्तनवैकादशाहान्यर्धमासं धुवयुरनुग्मा रात्रीरर्धमासान् मासादूर्ध्वं संवत्सर वा संपाद्य संधुवयुरिति । अथान्तरेण ग्रामं च श्मशानं चागारं वा विमित वा कारितं भवति। बो पि. सू I 17. 1 and 3, compare सत्या. श्रौ noted above p. 252.

579. यावन्तो धुविष्यन्त· स्युस्तावत. कुम्भानादाय छत्राणि चापारिमितानि। कात्या. श्रौ. 21, 3. 6 On this the com says 'अग्रे अमात्यानां पुत्रपौत्रादीनामुपवाजनं वक्ष्यति। उपवाजनं धवनम्'

580. गृहीत्वास्थीनि तद्भस्म नीत्वा तोये विनिक्षिपेत् । तत· संमार्जने भूमे· कर्तव्यं गोमयाम्भोभि: । ..भूमेराच्छादनार्थं तु वृक्ष. पुष्करकोऽथवा । एडूको वा प्रकर्तव्यस्तत्र सर्वैः स्वबन्धुभि· ॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by अपरार्क p 886, the same passage is quoted in रघुनाथ's Commentary on त्रिंशश्लोकी (verse 28 p. 253) which explains पुष्करक: as पुष्करिणी and reads पद्मक· for एडूक and explains it as चत्वर·.

It is remarkable that while slaves and even attendants were often buried with the master in Babylon and Celtic Britain, there is no similar reference to the burial or cremation of anybody with the deceased even in the ancient procedure found in the Śat Br It is only possible to say that in some cases in the pre-Vedic age the wife might have burnt herself along with the deceased husband on the funeral pyre. There is no doubt that later works like the Visnudharmasūtra recommended to women the practice of Satī as an option to leading the life of perfect celibacy after the husband's death.

The persons entitled to perform the funeral rites after death (antyakarmādhikārin) are the same as those entitled to offer śrāddha. There is a good deal of difference as to the order of the persons so entitled For example, Gautama (Dh.S 15 13-14) states 'On failure of sons the sapindas (e g. brother, brother's son), the sapindas of the mother (e g maternal uncle or his son) and pupils may perform śrāddha for the deceased; in default of these the family priest and the ācārya (veda teacher).' Śankha says[581] 'The offering of pinda and water should be done by the son for the father; in default (i e absence or death) of the son, the wife (of the deceased) should offer, but in default of her the full brother' The Visnupurāna[582] provides' 'the son, grand-son, great grandson (of the deceased), the offspring of the brother (of the deceased), the offspring of a sapinda become entitled to offer (pinda)' The Mārkandeya-purāna provides (30. 19-21, chap 27. 19-23 of the Venk. ed.) 'On failure of the sons, sapindas, on failure of them the samānoda-kas, then the sapindas of the mother, and samānodakas of her, should perform these rites, a daughter's son should perform them (if the man dies sonless), the putrikāputra should perform them for his maternal grand-father; in default of all these, women should perform these rites for their husbands but without Vedic mantras; in default of wife the king should get the rites per-formed by some one belonging to the family (of the deceased)

---

581. पितु. पुत्रेण कर्तव्या पिण्डदानोदकक्रिया। पुत्राभावे तु पत्नी स्याद्दुहितृभावे तु सोदर' ॥ शङ्ख q by स्मृतिच. II p 335, निर्णयसिन्धु III p 380

582 पुत्र. पौत्र प्रपौत्रो वा तद्वद्वा भ्रातृसन्तति। सपिण्डसन्ततिर्वापि क्रियार्हा नृप जायते ॥ तेषामभावे सर्वेषां समानोदकसन्तति । मातृपक्षस्य पिण्डेन सबद्धा ये जलेन च। कुलद्वयेपि चोत्सन्ने स्त्रीभि कार्या क्रिया नृप। सङ्घातान्तर्गतैर्वापि कार्या प्रेतस्य च क्रिया। उत्सन्न-बन्धुरिक्थाना कारयेदवनीपति। विष्णुपुराण III 13 31-33 q by अपरार्क p 433, स्मृतिच II p. 336, परा मा I. 2 p 461, शुद्धितत्त्व p 383. The विष्णुपुराण mentions the king as the अधिकारी in v. 34.

or by persons of his caste, since the king is the relative of all varnas'[583] There was a close connection between taking the estate of a man and performing the rites after death up to the 10th day. For the doctrines represented by the Mitākṣarā and the Dāyabhāga, vide H. of Dh. vol III pp. 734–743. Even those that regarded that inheritance was based on relationship by blood and not on the capacity to offer pindas held that it was obligatory on everyone who took the estate of another (including the king who took as the ultimate heir by escheat) to arrange for the rites after death and śrāddha. Visnu[584] Dh. S. XV. 40 declares 'whoever inherits the estate of a deceased person has to offer pinda to him.' Yāj. II. 127 says the same thing about the Kṣetraja son (ubhayorapyasau rikthī pinda-dātā ca dharmataḥ).

The Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 94) states the order of adhikārins as follows; a competent son is the first adhikārī for offering pinda; in default of a son, husband, wife and co-wives; in default of these, the brother's son, the brother, daughter-in-law, daughter, daughter's son, any other sagotra, a sapiṇḍa, a fellow-student, a friend, a pupil, the teacher, any relative and anyone who takes the wealth of the deceased may offer piṇḍa. The father is not competent to perform śrāddha rites for his (deceased) son, an elder brother for his younger brother; these may even do so through affection but they cannot perform the sapiṇḍīkaraṇa. Parents may offer pinda to unmarried daughters, and even to married daughters in the absence of another (proper) giver. The daughter's son and the maternal grandfather may offer to each other; the daughter's son to maternal grand-mother; the son-in-law and father-in-law to each other, the daughter-in-law to her mother-in-law, brothers among themselves, teacher and pupil to each other. For the order of śrāddhādhikārins, according to the Dāyabhāga, vide H. of Dh

583. पुत्राभावे सपिण्डास्तु तदभावे सहोदराः । मातुः सपिण्डा ये च स्युर्ये वा मातुः सहोदराः ॥ कुर्युरेन विधिं सम्यगुभयस्य सुतासुत । कुर्युर्नोतामहाश्चैवं दौहित्रकुलनप्तारस्तथा । सर्वाभावे स्त्रियः कुर्युः स्वभर्तृणाममन्त्रकम् । तदभावे च नृपतिः कारयेत् स्वकुटुम्बिना। तज्जातीयैर्नरैः सम्यग्दाहाद्याः सकला क्रियाः । सर्वेषामेव वर्णानां बान्धवो नृपतिर्यतः। मार्कण्डेयपुराण 30 19–24 (B I. ed) q by स्मृतिच्च II. p 336, परा. मा I 2 p 463 (reads कारयेत्तस्य रिक्थत). These verses (पुत्राभावे ..नृपतिर्यत) occur with the addition of a few half verses and variants in the ब्रह्मपुराण 220 76–80 and the reading of the ब्रह्म० (नृपतिः कारयेत्कुटुम्बिना by someone who does not belong to the family of the deceased) is better and makes good sense

584. मृतस्य रिक्थग्राहिणा येन केनापि राजपर्यन्तेनौर्ध्वदेहिकं दशाहान्तं कार्यम् । तथा च विष्णुः। यश्चार्थहरः स पिण्डदायी स्मृत इति । व्यवहारमयूख p 145.

vol. III p. 739. The Nirnayasindhu[585] says that in the Kali age only two kinds of sons viz. aurasa and dattaka are allowed (out of the twelve mentioned by Yāj. II. 128–132) and the order of śrāddhādhikārins is given by it as follows: aurasa son, then grandson, then great grandson, then adopted son. If there are many sons then the eldest alone is the adhikārin; if the eldest be not present or is patita, then the son next to the eldest is the adhikārin (and not the youngest). If the sons are divided from each other, then all the rites up to sapiṇḍīkaraṇa are to be performed by the eldest alone who may make the other sons contribute to the expenses, but the yearly śrāddha may be performed by each son separately. If the sons (of the deceased) are not divided, then all rites including the yearly śrāddha also are to be performed by the eldest alone When the eldest son not being present, the younger one or the youngest performs the cremation, he should perform all rites up to and including the sixteen śrāddhas, but not sapiṇḍīkaraṇa and he should wait for one year for the arrival of the eldest If the eldest comes to know of the death within one year, he alone should perform the sapiṇḍīkaraṇa. If the eldest son does not come even at the end of one year, then even the youngest may perform sapiṇḍīkaraṇa. If before the expiry of one year the youngest son or some one other than a son performs the monthly, anumāsika, sapiṇḍīkaraṇa śrāddhas, then the eldest son or a son should again perform these. If there is a grandson who has his upanayana performed and there be a son whose upanayana is not performed it is the latter who is a preferable adhikārin, provided he is either three years old or has the cūḍā ceremony performed as stated by Sumantu[586]. Manu II. 172 states that a boy should not repeat the Veda before the performance of Upanayana except the mantras that are required for the śrāddha of his deceased father or mother. Such a son may perform with Vedic mantras the funeral rites on the death of his father or mother and their yearly and other śrāddhas. If he is unable to repeat the Vedic mantras, he may simply perform the cremation with mantras and the rest may be got performed through another person. In the same way he should make only the declaration (saṅkalpa) of darsaśrāddha and mahālaya and the rest may be performed by some one else. An adopted son becomes an adhikārin for funeral rites and the like only if the upanayana has been performed. If there be no lineal descendant up to a great-grandson and also no adopted son, then the wife should perform with mantras the funeral rites and yearly and other śrāddhas but if she is unable to repeat the Vedic mantras, then the same rules apply as in the case of an anupanita son. Even if the husband be not divided from his brother, or he be re-united with his brother, it is the wife and not the brother who is to be preferred as having adhikāra for śrāddha, though the brother gets all the property. Though some of the latest works on dharmaśāstra like the Nirnayasindhu [587] and Dharmasindhu (bhāryayāpi samantrakam-eva-aurdhvadehikādikam kāryam) allowed the wife to perform rites after death with vedic mantras, several works such as the Mārkandeya-purāna and the Brahmapurāna did not allow the wife to repeat Vedic mantras (vide note 583 above). In default of the wife, the daughter has the right to perform rites after death if the deceased was separated and not re-united. But if the deceased was joint then his full brother would be the proper adhikārin after the wife. Among daughters the married one is preferred, though an unmarried daughter is a preferable heir. In default of daughters, the daughter's son is an adhikārin; then a brother, then a brother's son. Among brothers a full brother is preferred to a half brother and if there be both elder and younger brothers, then the younger is preferred for performing rites after death (in order to make as near an approach as possible to the relation of father and son). If there be no younger brother, then even an elder one could be adhikārin; in default of full brother, a half brother. Some held that even if the deceased was separate from his brother and had a daughter or daughter's son as heir the funeral rites were to be performed by the brother (and not by the daughter or her son), since a sagotra is to be preferred as an adhikārin to one of a different gotra. If there be no brother, then a full brother's son was to be preferred, then the half brother's son, then father, then mother, then daughter-in-law, then sister. In case of there being full sisters, half sisters, younger and older sisters the same rules apply as in the case of brothers; in default of any sister, sister's son. If there be many sister's sons, the rules as to brothers would apply. Then come paternal uncle, his son, other sapindas;[588] then samānodakas, then other persons born in the same family. In default of these, the sapindas of the mother, such as the maternal grand-father, maternal uncle, maternal uncle's son in that order; in default of the sapindas of the mother, the sons of the deceased's paternal or maternal aunt; in default of these the pitr-bandhus such as the sons of the father's father's sister, of the father's mother's sister, of father's maternal uncle; then the mātr-bandhus such as mother's father's sisters's son; in default of these, a disciple (of the deceased); in default of disciple, son-in-law of the deceased (or the father-in-law of the deceased); in default of these, a friend; in default, any one who takes the wealth of a brāhmana (deceased); if the deceased was other than a brāhmana the king (who took the wealth of everyone dying heirless, except the wealth of a brāhmana) who arranges for funeral rites through another.

585 औरसाभावे पौत्र तदभावे प्रपौत्रस्तदभावे दत्तकादय इति क्रेयम्। निर्णयसिन्धु p 381, which relies on Manu IX 137 (=Vas 17 5 and Visnu 15 46) and Yāj. I. 78 This is opposed to the धर्मसिन्धु p 368 'दत्तकाभावे पौत्र· पौत्राभावे प्रपौत्र । अन्ये तु औरसाभावे पौत्र. तदभावे प्रपौत्र· प्रपौत्राभावे दत्तक इत्याहु'

586. अनुपेतोऽपि कुर्वीत मन्त्रवत् पैतृमेधिकम्। यद्यसौ कृतचूड. स्याद्यदि स्याच्चिरवत्सरः ॥ सुमन्तु q. by परा. मा I 2 p 465, निर्णयसिन्धु p 382, मद पा. p 403.

---

587 असंस्कृतेन पत्न्या च ह्याग्निदानं समन्त्रकम्। कर्तव्यमितरत्सर्वं कारयेदन्यमेव हि॥ कात्यायन q. by नद. पा pp 402-403, which remarks 'यदा स्वयमपनीत पुत्र संस्कर्ता पत्नी वा तदाग्निदानमेव समन्त्रकं कार्यम्।' This is opposed to the view of the निर्णयसिन्धु, धर्मसिन्धु and other works.

In the case of women the following order of those entitled to perform rites of a deceased woman is given in the Dharmasindhu (p. 370); If the female be unmarried then her father is the adhikārin, then her brother and the like; if the woman was married, her son, then her co-wife's son, then co-wife's grandson and then great-grandson; in default of these, the husband; in default of husband, daughter, then daughter's son; then husband's brother; then husband's brother's son; then daughter-in-law; then (the deceased) woman's father, then her brother; then her brother's son and the rest.

An adopted son should perform the śrāddha of his natural father if the latter left no son or other adhikārī If a brahmacārin dies, his monthly, yearly and other śrāddhas should be performed by his father and mother. A brahmacārin may carry the dead body of his parents, or of his maternal grand-father, upādhyāya and ācārya and perform the cremation and other rites; but if another adhikārin is available, he should not do these even for the parents and the other three. A brahmacārin should not at all carry the dead body of any one except of the above five or perform the cremation and other rites for any one else. If a brahmacārin performed all the rites for ten days he had to observe āśauca for ten days, but if he performed only the cremation he had to observe āśauca only for one day. Even while in mourning his obligatory acts do not stop; but he should not eat the food cooked for his relatives that are in mourning nor should he dwell among them; if he did (both these) he had to undergo prāyaścitta and perform upanayana again.

588. The word sapinda here means a man of the same gotra as the deceased but within seven degrees of the common ancestor, tracing relation ship through males only, a samānodaka means one of the same gotra from 8th to the 14th degree descended from a common ancestor tracing descent through males only and gotraja means a relative of the same gotra as the deceased but beyond the 14th degree from the common ancestor.

It is somewhat curious that Baudhāyana, the Lingapurāna (quoted in Śrāddhaprakāśa pp. 361–371), the Mārkandeya-purāna, the Pitrdayitā (p 82) and several other works allow man himself while living to perform his own rites after death (antyesti).[589] This will be dealt with briefly later on under śrāddha Further, if a man became patita and refused to undergo prāyaścitta, he was driven out of the Hindu fold by the procedure of ghatasphota (vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 387–388), and Gaut. Dh. S. 20 2 and Manu XI. 182–183 provide that such a man was to be held to be dead and his relatives were to perform all rites for him such as offering water and śrāddha and were also to observe āśauca for him.[590]

Many commentators and digests quote certain verses of the Visnupurāna (III. 13. 34–39) wherein the rites (kriyāh) after death performed for a person are enumerated as falling into three classes, viz. pūrva, madhyama and uttara. The rites from cremation up to the end of the 12th day are called pūrva, the śrāddhas performed monthly and sapindīkarana and ekoddista are called madhyama rites and those that are performed after sapindikarana, when the deceased has reached the position of pitr after being a preta, are designated uttara.[591] The pūrva and madhyama rites of the deceased may be performed by the father, the mother, sapindas, samānodakas and those belonging to the deceased's group (gotra) or by the king if he takes the wealth of the deceased. But the rites called uttara are to be performed only by the son, grandson, great-grandson, daughter's son or the latter's sons Even in the case of women, on the day of the anniversary of death every year an ekoddista śrāddha may be performed for them. There is also another classification of śrāddhas viz. Navaśrāddha (those rites up to ten days after death), Navamiśra (those performed after ten days up to six seasons), Purāna (those performed after a year).[591a]

589 अन्त्येष्टिमात्मनः कृत्वा शास्त्रतश्चौर्ध्वदेहिकम्॥ मार्कण्डेयपुराण 3.45 (B. I. ed).

590. तस्य विद्यागुरून्योनिसम्बन्धाश्च संनिपात्य सर्वाण्युदकादीनि प्रेतकार्याणि कुर्युः। गौ ध सू 20 2.

591. पूर्वा क्रिया मध्यमाश्च तथा चैवोत्तरा क्रियाः। त्रिप्रकाराः क्रिया ह्येतास्तासां भेदं शृणुष्व मे॥ आद्याहाद् द्वादशाहाच्च मध्ये याः स्यु क्रिया मता। पूर्वास्ता मध्यमा मासि मास्येकोद्दिष्टसंज्ञिताः॥ प्रेते पितृत्वमापन्ने सपिण्डीकरणादृते। क्रियन्ते या. क्रियाः पित्र्याः प्रोच्यन्ते ता नृपोत्तरा॥ पितृमातृसपिण्डेश्च समानसलिलैस्तथा। तत्सङ्घातान्तगतैश्चैव राज्ञा वा धनहारिणा॥ पूर्वा· क्रिया मध्यमाश्च पुत्रायैरेव चोत्तरा। दौहित्रैर्वा नरश्रेष्ठ कार्यास्तत्तत्तनयैस्तथा॥ मृताहनि च कर्तव्याः क्षीणामप्युत्तरा क्रिया. । प्रतिसंवत्सरं राजन्कोद्दिष्टविधानतः॥ विष्णुपुराण III. 13. 34–39, q. by अपरार्क pp 433–434, स्मृतिच० II, p 336, परा. मा I. 2 p 464, मद. पा. pp 478–79, निर्णयसिन्धु p 387. The printed विष्णुपुराण reads आदाद्यार्घायुधादिस्पर्शान्तास्तु या· क्रियाः । It has been provided in विष्णुपुराण III 13 21 that after the brāhmanas are fed on the 11th day after death the relatives should touch water, weapons, whip or a staff respectively according as they belong to the four varnas and then they become pure.

As stated above, for ten days after death a handful of water mixed with sesame was to be offered to the deceased on a stone (aśman) placed on kuśa grass and one large pinda (called pūraka-pinḍa) was to be offered on kuśa grass everyday with the face to the south and the sacred thread on the right shoulder (prācīnāvītī) for the purpose of freeing the departed from the state of being a preta. On the pinda, water mixed with sesame was to be offered and leaves of Bhṛngarāja (called mākā in Marathi) and Tulasī also. The verse 'anādinidhano' was to be repeated[592]. The performer throws the pinda in water and then bathes. Vide A. K. D pp. 43–50 and Antyesti-paddhati of Nārāyana for detailed treatment of the procedure of these ten days. Besides this, the Āśvalāyana-gṛhyapariśista[593] III. 6 speaks of five śrāddhas called 'nava-

---

591 a. नवश्राद्धं दशाहानि नवमिश्रं तु षड्ऋतून्। अत ऊर्ध्वं पुराणं वै त्रिविधं श्राद्धमुच्यते॥ आश्वलायनगृह्यपरिशिष्ट q. by अपरार्क p 525, निर्णयसिन्धु III. p 395. अपरार्क (p. 521) says: एकोद्दिष्टमुक्तं तच्च त्रिविधम्। नवं मिश्रं पुराणं च। तत्रैकादशाहान्तं नवम्॥ तदूर्ध्वमा संवत्सरान्मिश्रम्। तत उत्तरं पुराणम्। The printed आश्व गृ परि. III 9 (B. I edition) reads अथैकोद्दिष्टं तत् त्रेधा भवति नवं मिश्रं पुराणं चेत्यन्तर्दशाहे नवं मिश्राणि मासिकानि चतुर्दश्यादौ पुराणानि। The स्मृतिच. on आश्वो च p 175 quotes प्रजापति 'नवश्राद्धं दशाहान्तं मिश्रं संवत्सरावधि। एकादशाहमारभ्य कुर्यात्प्रेतत्वमुक्तये॥' śrāddhas' (or Visamaśrāddhas) performed on the uneven days (i. e. 1st, 3rd, 5th, 7th and 9th) with uncooked food. According to the Garuḍapurāna (Pretakhanda 34. 36 which speaks of six śrāddhas on uneven days from 1st day to 11th) and Āpastamba they are six (Dharmasindhu p 464, Nirnayasindhu p 588, Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 214–216, Śrāddhatattva p. 619) and according to others there is an option. Aṅgiras and Vasistha speak of six Navaśrāddhas on uneven days from the 1st to the 11th, while Baud Pitrmedha S. II. 10. 6 speaks of five. Some prescribe the placing of some cooked food sprinkled with ghee on the hand of a brāhmana. Others do not approve of this They prescribe the placing of uncooked corn in front of a brāhmana or in front of a figure of a brāhmaṇa made with kuśas (called cata in Marathi). The Garudapurāna (II. 5. 67 ff) holds that the navaśrāddhas are those performed at the place where a man died, where the funeral procession rested on the way, when the bones were collected and those performed on the 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th day. The Śuddhiprakāśa p. 214 quotes similar views from Kātyāyana and the view of Vrddha–Vasistha that the deceased does not become free from the status of a preta, unless the navaśrāddhas are performed. The Garuḍapurāna, Pretakhanda (chap. 34. 27–28, 44, 48) states that by the pindas offered for ten days the several limbs of a subtle body are provided for the departed spirit which at first wanders like thin air. There are several differing views on the navaśrāddhas which are passed over here. On the uneven days if navaśrāddha is performed two pindas will be offered (one the daily one and the other, of the navaśrāddha). The Padma (Srstikhanda 10. 19) prescribes that one should not partake of the food at navaśrāddha and on doing so should undergo the cāndrāyana expiation.

592. अनादिनिधनो देव शङ्खचक्रगदाधरः। अक्षय्य पुण्डरीकाक्षः प्रेतमोक्षप्रदो भव॥ quoted by अन्त्येष्टिपद्धति of नारायण

593. अथ नवश्राद्धानि दशाहेषु विषमदिनेष्वामेन कुर्यात्प्रेतमभिसन्धाय ब्राह्मणसुदङ्मुखमुपवेश्य तस्मिंस्तूष्णीं तिलानवकीर्य काश्यपगोत्र देवदत्तासुष्मिन्नहनि एतदार्द्रमासुपतिष्ठतामिति तदह सम्बन्धेनोत्सृज्य पिण्डं चामन्त्र्योक्तवन्मदाय स्नायादेष विधिरन्तर्दशाहकर्माणि। आश्वलायनगृह्यपरिशिष्ट III. 6. The नवश्राद्ध्स are एकोद्दिष्ट and several details which occur in other श्राद्ध्s are omitted here and the word पितृ is not to be employed, but only the word प्रेत. The गरुडपुराण (II. 29 35–37) enumerates eighteen details that were to be omitted in प्रेतश्राद्ध्s Vide बुद्धिमयूख pp 215, 221; 'तथाचाङ्गिराः। प्रथमेद्धि तृतीयेद्धि पञ्चमे सप्तमे तथा। नवमेकादशे चैव तन्नवश्राद्धमुच्यते॥' q. by मद. पा p. 618, the मिता on या I 252 (without name) and भट्टोजि on चतुर्विंश p. 168.

In modern times, after the rites of the first day of cremation and of the collection of the bones, the rites for the dead generally begin on the 10th day. The performer goes to the place where the rites of the first day were performed, makes a sankalpa and offers a pinḍa with the words 'May this pinḍa wait upon the preta named N. N. and of the gotra (Kāśyapa &c) in order that hunger and thirst affecting the preta may be removed'. Then he offers water mixed with sesame, places leaves of bhṛṅgarāja and tulasī, repeats the verse 'anādinidhano' (note 592), removes the pinḍa to another place from the place where it was offered. Then he prepares a vedi with loose earth with a triangular shape, purifies it by means of cowdung, decks it with turmeric powder and places thereon five jars full of water and on each of them a ball of rice. Then he offers a request to the middle jar with the words 'May this pinda together with the jar of water wait upon the preta by name N. N, of such and such a gotra in order that his hunger and thirst may be allayed'. There is a prayer before the jars to the east, south, west and north respectively to those whom the preta had befriended, to Yama, to crows, to Rudra respectively. There is a difference of view here, some prescribing four jars, some three, while others offer a pinda with the jar of water only on the place meant for the preta and mere pinda to others Then water is offered over the pinda and to each of the above he offers sandals, umbrella, banner, bread. Then the performer waits till a crow seizes or eats the pinda placed to the west[594]. Then the aśman (stone) is anointed with oil and cast in water. Then the performer requests the relatives, who offer one handful or three handfuls of water to the preta on the bank of the reservoir of water. Then the sons and others according to usage cut their hair and nails. Then all persons of the same gotra, according to the custom of the country, bathe with sesame and myrobalan, wear pure and dried garments, go home and take their meals there.

---

594 In modern times great importance is attached by many people to a crow touching and pecking at the pinda food There is a common belief that if a crow does not touch the pinda then the deceased had some intense wish at his death that was unfulfilled and it is certainly heart-rending and a source of poignant sorrow even for passers-by to see the relatives waiting for hours and tempting the crow or crows to come down from trees with dainty pieces of copra and other things and also loudly declaring that they would do this or that and fulfil the last desire of the deceased Often it so happens that no crow touches the pinda food in honour of the deceased, a very old and venerable man, and relatives are very much distressed to find that their venerable ancestor who could have hardly any ambition or desire at the advanced age of 80 or 90 (except to die speedily), judging from the reluctance of the crow, had some unfulfilled desire. Often the crow immediately touches the pinda offered to one who died very young (say 25 or 30 years old) and who would naturally be presumed to have many unfulfilled desires In such cases the relatives feel very much relieved at the thought that their young relative passed away without any unfulfilled desires The Suddhikaumudī refers to this offering to crows as a usage स्थाचारात् काकबलिदानम् । पिण्डशेषमन्नं पात्रे क्षिप्त्वा अमुकगोत्रस्य प्रेतस्यानुऋणभूतो द्विशेषनिवृत्तये यमद्वारावस्थितवायसाय एष बलिर्न मे इत्युच्चैरुक्त्वा कृताञ्जलि —काक त्व यमदूतोसि गृहाण बलिमुत्तमम् । यमलोकगतं प्रेतं स्वमाप्यायितुमर्हसि ॥ काकाय काकरूपाय वायसाय महात्मने । तुभ्य बलिं प्रयच्छामि प्रेतस्य तृप्तिहेतवे ॥ इति पठेत् । शुद्धिकौमुदी p. 135.

Some of the Purānas and medieval digests assert that after a man dies, the soul or spirit assumes what is called an ātivāhika[594a] body consisting of three of the five elements (viz. fire, wind and ākāśa) that rise up from the dead body (while two viz. earth and water remain below), that such a body is obtained only by men and not by other beings, that with the aid of the piṇḍas that are offered to the departed at the time of cremation and during ten days thereafter, the soul secures another body called bhogadeha (a body for enjoying the piṇḍas offered) and that at the end of a year when sapiṇḍīkarana is performed, the soul secures a third body wherewith the spirit reaches heaven or hell according to the nature of his actions. The word 'ātivāhika' is comparatively an ancient one. It occurs in Vedāntasūtra IV. 3.4 (ātivāhikās-tal-lingāt). But there the meaning is somewhat different. The Upanisads speak of the soul as going by the path of arcis, day &c. The sūtra says that these (viz. arcis, ahah &c.) are superintending deities that take the soul gradually onward by the path that leads to Brahma. Govindānanda in his commentary on the Prāyaścitta-viveka (pp. 13–14) holds that there are only two bodies (and not three as appears at first sight), viz. the ātivāhika or pretadeha and the bhogadeha. The belief was that the man on whose death no pinda was offered or the sixteen śrāddhas (to be described below) were not performed remained for all time in the condition of a piśāca, from which he would not be freed even if numerous other śrāddhas were later on offered for him.[595] The Brahmapurāna calls the body 'yātanīya' (i. e. one that has to undergo trials and torments), while the Agnipurāna calls it 'yātāniya' or 'ātivāhika' and asserts that this body is made up of the elements of ākāśa, vāyu and tejas The Padmapurāna (II. 67. 98) states that persons who commit certain sins secure after death a body similar in shape to the physical body for undergoing torments. The underlying conception was that when the gross body was destroyed after death by cremation, burial or other methods an intermediate subtile body had to be built up before the departed soul was compelled to assume another body in a fresh incarnation The subtile body was gradually built up, as stated by the Mārk 10.73, by the rites performed on death and on several days after death. Though this conception is very clearly set forth in the Purānas it should not be supposed that it was altogether a new one. It had its roots deep down in the earliest Vedic period and was implicit in some of the hymns as indicated by Rg. X. 15. 14, X. 16. 4-5 translated above. Though in the Tai. S. I. 8. 5 1-2 and in passages of the Tai. Br. and Śat. Br to be set out later on it is said that the offerings are made to the paternal ancestors, it does not follow that the brāhmanas were not fed at the same time on the food prepared for being offered to the ancestors, just as in the solemn Vedic sacrifices offerings were made to the gods, Agni, Indra, Prajāpati, Viṣnu and others and at the same time priests engaged in the sacrifices were fed and given presents (dakṣinā). Therefore, it need not be necessarily supposed that feeding the brāhmanas at śrāddha was a later idea and offering food to the dead was the original idea.

---

594 a. तत्क्षणादेव गृह्णाति शरीरमातिवाहिकम्। ऊर्ध्वं व्रजन्ति भूतानि त्रीण्यस्मात्तस्य विग्रहात्॥ आतिवाहिकसंज्ञोऽसौ देहो भवति भार्गव। केवलं तन्मनुष्याणां नान्येषां प्राणिनां क्वचित्॥ प्रेतपिण्डैस्ततो दत्तैर्देहमाप्नोति भार्गव। भोगदेहमिति प्रोक्तं क्रमादेव न संशयः। प्रेतपिण्डा न दीयन्ते यस्य तस्य विमोक्षणम्। इमशानाग्निकेभ्यो देवेभ्य आकल्पं नैव विद्यते॥ तत्रास्य यातना घोराः शीतवातातपोद्भवाः। ततः सपिण्डीकरणे चान्यदेहः स कृते नरः। पूर्णे संवत्सरे देहमतोन्यं प्रतिपद्यते॥ तत. स नरके याति स्वर्गे वा स्वेन कर्मणा। विष्णुधर्मोत्तरपुराण quoted by आद्य वि. pp. 13–14, and शुद्धितत्त्व p. 324. गोविन्दानन्द explains त्रीणि भूतानि as 'पृथिव्यप्तेजांसि' and thus differs from रघुनन्दन. The गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड chap. 10 79. ff) says the same. 'उत्क्रामन्ते.. ज्ञानचक्षुषः॥ आतिवाहिकमित्येवं वायवीयं वदन्ति हि। ...पुत्रादिभि कृताश्चेत्सु. पिण्डा दश दशाहिकाः। पिण्डजेन तु देहेन वायुजश्चैवतां व्रजेत्। पिण्डतो यदि नैव स्यादाद्यजोहेति यातनाम्॥ ' The first verse (उत्क्रामन्तं) is गीता 15 10. The ब्रह्मपुराण states विहाय सुनहत्कृत्स्नं शरीर पाञ्चभौतिकम्॥ अन्यच्छरीरमादत्ते यातनीयं स्वकर्मजम्।.. स्वशरीरं समुत्सृज्य वायुभूतस्तु गच्छति। chap 214 29–30 and 51: निमित्तं किंचिदासाद्य देही त्यजति वै वपुः॥ अन्यच्छरीरमादत्ते यातनीयं स्वकर्मभिः। अग्निपुराण 230. 2–3. गृह्णाति तत्क्षणाद्योगे शरीरं चातिवाहिकम्। आकाशवायुतेजांसि विग्रहाद्ध्वंगामिनः॥ जलं मही च पञ्चत्वमायान्तः पुरुष' स्मृत.। आतिवाहिकदेहं तु यमदूता नयन्ति तम्॥ अग्नि. 371. 9–10. The मार्कण्डेय (10 63–64) says 'बाध्यग्रसारी तद्रूपं देहमन्यं प्रपद्यते। तत्कर्मज यातनार्थं न मातापितृसम्भवम्॥.'

---

595. यस्यैतानि न दीयन्ते प्रेतश्राद्धानि षोडश । पिशाचत्वं ध्रुवं तस्य दत्तैः श्राद्धशतैरपि ॥ यम q. by श्रा क्रि. कौ p. 362 and तत्त्वार्थकौमुदी on प्रा. वि p. 14. Almost the same verse is लिखितस्मृति V. 16 and गरुडपुराण, प्रेतखण्ड 34. 131.

CHAPTER VIII

SUDDHI

Śuddhi (purification) is a very comprehensive topic including within it purification after āśauca (impurity on birth and death), purification of a person after contact with an impure object or on account of certain occurrences, purification of pots, wells, food &c., after they are polluted. Āśauca, however, is the most important subject under śuddhi and therefore the Śuddhi-kaumudī defines 'śuddhi' as 'the state of being fit for or capable of performing the rites that are understood from the Veda'[596] The Smrtis employ the word śuddhi in relation to purification after āśauca. For example, Manu V. 57 starts by saying that he will expound purification after a man is dead (pretaśuddhi) and purification of things (dravyasuddhi). Manu V. 83 (= Daksa VI. 7) avers that a brāhmana becomes pure after ten days (on the death or birth of a relative), a ksatriya after twelve &c. The Parāśara-smrti starts chapter three by declaring 'I shall expound śuddhi on birth and death.' Yaj. III. 14, 25 also employ the word śuddhi. Therefore āśauca on birth and death will be first dealt with.

The word āśauca is formed from śuci (pure) according to Pān. V. 1. 131[596a] and Pān. VII. 3. 30 (vide note below) with the negative particle na (a). In some smrtis such as that of Devala the form 'āśucya' also is found (see Hāralatā pp. 2, 9, 36 in quotations from Devala[596b]). Another word which is often used as a synonym for āśauca is 'agha'. It has been seen above (p. 6) that the word agha means 'sin' in the Vedic Literature (as in Rg. I. 97. 1-8, X. 117.6). But in the Śān. Śr. IV. 15. 11, 596 वेदचोदितकर्मार्हता शुद्धिः। शु. कौ p. 1.

---

596a इगन्ताच्च लघुपूर्वात्। पा. V. 1 131 (अण् अशुनर्तते)—शुचेर्भाव. कर्म वा शौचम्। न शौचमशौचम्। This is one way of explaining the word We may also explain न शुचि अशुचि, अशुचेर्भावः कर्म च आशौचं or अशौचं according to नञः शुचीश्वरक्षेत्रज्ञकुशलनिपुणानाम्। (पा VII 3, 30).

596 b. जनने मरणे नित्यमाशुच्यमनुधावति। देवल q. by हारलता p 2. आशुच्यं दशरात्र तु सर्वत्राप्यपरे विदु। देवल q. by शुद्धिप्र. p. 41.

Manu V. 84 (na vardhayed-aghāhāni) the word 'agha' has come to mean the same thing as āśauca.[597] The Padmapurāna II. 66. 73–74 states that since the outlets of the body always emit mucus, urine &c. it is always impure.

The Mit. on Yāj. III 1 defines[598] āśauca as an emergent attribute attaching to a person, which is got rid of by lapse of time or a bath and the like and which is the cause of the positive direction to offer (to a deceased person) pinda, water and the like and of the cessation of Vedic study and other actions The Mit adds that āśauca is not merely the absence of the privilege or power to do religious acts, since even those who have incurred impurity (on death &c) are enjoined to do certain religious acts such as offering water (to the deceased) This definition of the Mit appears to be an echo of the Garuda-purāna (pretakhanda) 5. 9 and is probably based on a verse of the work called Sangraha. Haradatta[599] on Gautama 14. 1 states that āśauca may be defined as 'the absence of the privilege to perform religious acts, unfitness for being one whose food may be partaken of, untouchability and the loss of the privilege to make religious gifts.' A comparatively early writer Bhattācārya,[600] appears to have defined 'śuddhi' as the 'removal of sin' or as 'being fit for performing religious acts.' This was accepted by the Smrti-candrikā, but rejected by Nandapandita, commentator of Ṣaḍaśīti (pp. 2–3) Even the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 18) emphasizes that āśauca has two characteristics, viz. it takes away the privilege of performing 597 नाघाहानि वर्धयेयुरिति ह स्माह कौपीतकि । शां श्रौ. IV. 15 11. The com. says 'अघशब्देनात्र मरणमुच्यते । येऽह्न सपिण्डमरणं सङ्गतं तान्यघाहानि मरणादारभ्य कराग्रादीनि यानि व्रतैर्व्यौतान्युक्तानि तानि न वर्धयेयु. नाभ्यधिकानि कुर्युः । कर्मानधिकार-व्रतैर्न व्याप्नुयुः ।'.

---

598. आशौचशब्देन च कालस्नानाद्यपनोद्य. पिण्डोदकदानादिविधि· अध्ययनादि-पर्युदासस्य च निमित्तभूत पुरुषगत· कश्चनातिशय कथ्यते न पुन कर्मानधिकारमात्रम्। मिता on या. III, 1. अपनोद्यं त्विदं कालादिभिराशु निषेधकृत्। पिण्डाध्ययनदानादे पुगतोति-शयो हि तत्॥ गरुड (प्रेतखण्ड 5 9), निमित्त पिण्डदानादे पुरुषस्थमशुद्धिकृत्। कालस्नानाप-नोद्य यत्तदाशौचमितीर्यते॥ संग्रह q by स्मृतिषु (आशौच) p 477

599 किं पुनरिदमाशौचलक्षणम्। कर्मण्यनधिकारोऽभोज्यान्नताऽस्पृश्यता दानादिष्वना-धिकारिता। हरदत्त on गौ 14. 1.

600 शुद्धिशब्दार्थस्तु पापक्षय शुद्धिर्धर्मयोग्यत्वमेव वा इति भट्टाचार्योक्तो द्रष्टव्य । पापक्षय. सपिण्डादौ जनने मरणे वा तत्सम्बन्धादापद्यमानस्य पापविशेषस्य क्षय । धर्मयोग्यत्वं दानादिधर्मानुष्ठानार्हत्वम्। एवं शुद्धिशब्दार्थो मतभेदेन द्विधा विवृतो भट्टाचार्यैः। स्मृतिच. (आशौचकाण्ड p. 2) स्मृतिषु p. 477 mentions this view.

religious acts and it renders a person untouchable. The Smṛtimuktāphala follows this. Rudradhara in his Śuddhiviveka (D. C ms. No. 309 of 1887–91 folio 1) says that śuddhi is a special attribute which brings about a capacity or privilege for the performance of all dharmas, while aśuddhi is an attribute opposed to śuddhi and arises on the occasion of the birth of a sapinda or the like.[601]

Āśauca is of two kinds, viz. that arising on birth[602] (and so called jananāśauca or sūtaka) and that arising on death (and therefore called śāvāśauca or mṛtakāśauca or maraṇāśauca). Śāva is derived from śava (meaning a corpse). The word sūtaka occurs in the[603] Ait. Br. (chap. 32. 8) and is there probably used in the sense of impurity on both birth and death. There it is said that if an āhitāgni partook of food from the house of him who was affected by sūtaka, then the prāyaścitta was to offer a puroḍāśa cooked on eight potsherds to Agni Ṭantumat. Tantu means also 'son or progeny' and so it may be argued that it is an indication that sūtaka is used in the Ait. Br. in the sense of impurity on birth. The word sūtaka is used in the smṛtis in three senses: (1) impurity on birth (vide Manu V. 58); (2) impurity both on birth and death, as in Gobhilasmṛti III. 60 and 63;[604] (3) impurity on death alone (as in Dakṣa VI. 1 and Gobhilasmṛti III. 48)[605]. In some of the modern vernaculars (such as Marathi) the word 'sūtaka' is used in the 3rd sense alone. In each of these two divisions there are two varieties viz. where the duration is brief or comparatively long (Ṣaḍaśīti, verse 2).

A question arises why birth and death should cause impurity to the members of the family or to relatives. Only a

---

601. शुद्धिस्तावदखिलधर्माधिकारापादको धर्मविशेषः। अशुद्धिस्तु तद्विरोधी धर्मविशेष एव। स च सपिण्डजन्मादिनिमित्तक। शुद्धिविवेक of रुद्रधर.

602. आशौचं द्विविधं कर्मानधिकारलक्षणं स्पृश्यत्वलक्षणं च। स्मृतिसु (p 477).

603. तदाहुर्य आहिताग्निर्यदि सूतकान्नं प्राश्नीयात्का तत्र प्रायश्चित्तिरिति। सोऽग्नये तन्तुमतेऽष्टाकपालं पुरोडाशं निर्वपेत्तस्य याज्यानुवाक्ये तन्तुं तन्वन्रजसो भानुमन्विह्याक्षान्हो नप्तायनोत सोम्या इति। आहुतिं जुहुयादग्नये तन्तुमते स्वाहेति। ऐ ब्रा. 32. 8 तन्तुं तन्वन् is Rg. X. 53 6 and अक्षान्हा is Rg X 53. 7.

604. सूतके कर्मणा त्याग. सन्ध्यादीनां विधीयते। होम. श्रौतस्तु कर्तव्य. शुल्काच्चेनापि वा फलैः॥ गोभिलस्मृति called छन्दोगपरिशिष्ट q. by हारलता p 6, शु. कौ, and श्राद्धम. p. 83.

605. सूतकं तु प्रवक्ष्यामि जन्ममृत्युनिमित्तकम्। यावज्जीवं तृतीयं तु यथावदशुपूर्वजः॥ दक्ष. VI. 1. अस्थ्नामलाभे पार्णानि शकलान्युक्तयाहृता। भर्जयेदस्थिसख्यानि ततः प्रभृति सूतकम्॥ गोभिल III. 48, The 4th pāda of the latter is q by हारलता p. 2, few have to say anything on this question. Hārīta says: 'the family incurs death impurity because by death the family feels overwhelmed (or frustrated), while when a new life appears the family increases (and there is gratification or joy)'[605].

The literature on Śuddhi (including āśauca) is very extensive. Apart from the sūtras, smṛtis and Purāṇas there are numerous digests dealing with the subject at great length. Some of them have been printed. The smṛtis contain a mass of contradictory dicta to such an extent and different from the usages of medieval times that the Mit on Yāj III. 22 after quoting the views of Parāśara, Śātātapa, Vasiṣṭha and Aṅgiras on the periods for which impurity had to be observed by persons belonging to the four varṇas refuses to evolve order out of them and remarks that the usages in its day were different from the dicta of those sages[607]. The Madana-pārijāta (p 392) agrees with the Mit and also suggests other modes of dealing with the conflict. Two examples may be cited of the way in which different smṛtis approach the same problem. Atri 83, Parāśara III. 5 and Dakṣa VI. 6 provide that a brāhmaṇa who has consecrated the three Vedic fires and has mastered the Veda becomes free from impurity (on birth and death) in one day, one who has merely mastered the Veda (but has not consecrated the śrauta fires) in three days and one who is devoid of both in ten days. Manu V. 59 gives various options viz 10 days, 4 days, 3 days, 1 day but does not state explicitly to whom his remarks apply. Bṛhaspati[607a] (q.

---

606. अस्य च कुलस्यापित्वे कारणमाह हारीत.। प्रेताभिभूतत्वाच्चाशौचं जीवे बुद्धियोगेन कुलस्य भवति। इति। जायमानत्रियमाणयो सम्बन्धिनां सन्तोषदासन्तीपदाण्या बुद्धिक्षययोगाद्वा कुलस्याप्याशौचं भवतीत्यर्थ। शुद्धिचन्द्रिका on पडशीति p 4 The स्मृतिच (आशौच) p. 11 reads somewhat differently "सम्बन्धरूपाशौच सपिण्डसपिण्डानां न भवति कारणाभावादित्याशङ्क्याह हारीत' 'प्रेताभिभूतत्वाच्चाशौच जाते बुद्धियोगेन केनेति मीमांसन्ते नाम्यच्छिन्नकालानालुप्तेदमृषस्वाच्च कुलस्याशौच भवति' इति।."

607. इत्येवमनेकोच्चावचाशौचकल्पा दर्शिता। तेषां लोके समाचाराभावात्मानीव व्यवस्थाधर्मप्रदर्शनस्योपयोगीति नात्र व्यवस्था प्रदर्श्यते। मिता on या III 22. लोकसमाचारादनादरणीयनिति केचन। अथवा देशाचारतो व्यवस्था। उत गुणवद्गुणवद्विषये यथाक्रम न्यूनाधिककल्पाश्रयेण निर्वाह.। किंवा आपद्नापद्भेदेन व्यवस्था। नद या p 392

607 a त्रिरात्रेण विशुध्यते षोडशिवेदसनन्वित। पञ्चाहेनाग्निहोत्रस्तु दशाहाद ब्राह्मणव्रतः॥ बृहस्पति q. by कल्प० (शुद्धि) p 4, हारलता p 5 and शु कौ p.7 अङ्गिरस् defines ब्राह्मणव्रत as 'गर्भाधानादिसंस्कारैरुपेतश्च नियमव्रत.। नाध्यापयति नाधीते विप्रशेषो ब्राह्मणव्रत स्मृ.

by Hāralatā p. 5 and Haradatta on Gautama 14. 1) states that a brāhmana who is endowed with Veda and śrauta fires becomes pure after three days, one who is devoid of śrauta fires (but is master of the Veda) in five days and one who is only a brāhmana by caste (has not studied the Veda or does not teach it) in ten days. The Śān Śr. and Manu [608] (both quoted above) urge a man not to increase through laziness the number of days for which impurity is to be observed. It is possible that persons claiming to be learned observed impurity for a few days only, while neighbours disputed their claim to this special dispensation in favour of Vedic learning and keeping śrauta fires. The result was that later on a flat number of ten days was prescribed for all brāhmaṇas whether learned or not and the provision for lesser number of days of impurity was relegated to Kalivarjya usages. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 941–42.

Another example of the dependence of the days of impurity on the caste of the deceased and of varying dicta thereon may be cited. Manu V. 83, Daksa VI 7, Yāj III. 22, Atri (verse 85), Sankha (15. 2–3), Matsyapurāna (18. 2–3), Brahmapurāna 220. 63, Visnu Dh. S 22. 1–4, all lay down periods of 10 days, 12 days, 15 days and a month for impurity among brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras respectively. Yaj. III.22 makes the virtuous śūdra observe impurity only for 15 days as a concession. Gaut. (15. 1–4) prescribes 10, 11, 12 days (or half month) and a month respectively for the four varṇas, while Vas. (4. 27–30) gives the periods of 10, 15, 20 and one month for the four varnas. Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar, in his article on Nāgara brāhmanas and Kāyasthas of Bengal, protests that the Kāyasthas of Bengal (owing to social tyranny) still observe āśauca for one month as if they are ordinary śūdras (I. A. for 1932 at p. 71). On the other hand, Angiras (quoted by the Mit. on Yaj. III. 22) states that Śātātapa declared that all varnas become purified after ten days whether the impurity is due to birth or death.[609] Parāśara (III. 9) quoted by the Mit. on Yāj. III. 18 provides that a sapiṇḍa who is 4th in descent from the common ancestor of the deceased and himself becomes pure after ten days, one who is 5th after 6 days, one who is 6th in descent after four days and one who is 7th after one day. The Mit. says that this should be discarded as it is in conflict with many other smṛtis and is disapproved of by people.[610] Some of the rules mentioned by Vijñāneśvara (about 1100 A. D.) themselves underwent changes in 500 years as noted by the Nirnayasindhu (composed in 1612 A. D.[611]).

608. On न वर्धयेदघाहानि (मनु. V 84) कुल्लूक comments: यस्य तु वृत्तस्वाध्यायापेक्षया पूर्वमर्वाक्संचयनादस्थनाम्-इत्याद्याशौचसङ्कोच उक्तः स निष्कर्मा सुखमासितव्ये इति बुद्ध्या नाशौचदिनानि दशाहादिरूपतया वर्धयेत्संकुचिताशौचदिनेष्वपि।.

609. अङ्गिरास्त्वाह-सर्वेषामेव वर्णानां सूतके मृतके तथा। दशाहाच्छुद्धिरेतेषामिति शातातपोऽब्रवीत्॥ मिता. on या. III. 22.

The Mit. on Yāj III. 18 declares that when a child that has not completed two years dies, it is the parents that have to observe āśauca for ten days and not all sapiṇḍas and that their āśauca entails untouchability for them. The Nirnayasindhu (p. 517) remarks that what Vijñāneśvara said is not now (in its time) the usage and that the Smṛtyarthasāra also did not accept Vijñāneśvara's view.

In view of the above-mentioned circumstances no useful purpose would be served by setting out in detail the varying dicta of the smṛtis, Purāṇas[612] and the digests upon the several matters that fall to be treated under āśauca. Digests on this subject are too numerous to mention. The following printed ones and a few mss have been made use of in preparing the following account. In the first place, there are several works that deal with this subject in verse. The Aśaucāṣṭaka attributed to Vararuci (published in the Trivandrum series) with a

---

610 यत्पुनः स्मृत्यन्तरवचनम्-चतुर्थे दशरात्रं स्यात्पञ्चमे षष्ठे च षष्ठेऽहोरात्रं सप्तमे त्वहरेव तु॥ इति तद्विगीतत्वाज्जादरणीयम्। यद्यप्यविगीतं तथापि मधुपर्काङ्गपश्वालम्भनवल्लोकविद्विष्टत्वाच्छास्त्रीयम्। अस्वर्यं लोकविद्विष्टं धर्म्यमप्याचरेन्न तु-इति मन्वस्मरणात्। मिता. on या III. 18. अस्वर्यं० is the latter half of या I 156

611. यत्तु विज्ञानेश्वरेणोक्तं-ऊनद्विवर्षे उभयो क्षुतकं मातुरेव हीति याज्ञवल्क्योक्तः गर्भस्थे मृते मातुर्दशाह जात उभयो. कृते नास्ति सोदराणां च इति पैठीनसोक्तश्च पित्रो सोदराणां च दशाहमस्पृश्यत्वमिति तन्नेदानीं प्रचरति। अत एव स्मृत्यर्थसारे तथोक्तम्। निर्णयसिन्धु p. 517 The स्मृत्यर्थसार (p. 80) states 'अज्ञपनीतमरणे मातापित्रोर्दशाहाशौचं पक्षोऽनादृतः'।

612. Several among the Purāṇas devote considerable space to āśauca. For example, the Kūrma (Uttarārdha Chap 23), Liṅgapurāṇa (Purvārdha, Chapter 89. 77-92), Garudapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa Chap. 5), Agnipurāṇa (Chapters 157-158), Vāmana (14. 96-102) do so In the Garudapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa 5) several verses are taken from Yājñavalkya, Manu and other smṛtis.

commentary by an anonymous writer that names the bhāsya of Maskarin on Gautama-dharmasūtra (on p. 35) deals with the subject in eight sragdharā verses. The Aśaucadaśaka or Daśaślokī attributed to Vijñāneśvara seems to have been a very popular work. There are several commentaries on it. The one by Harihara is the earliest of them. In the Deccan College collection of Mss (now at the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, Poona) there are several Mss of it, two of which were copied in saṁvat 1539 (D. C. No. 216 of 1879–80) and saṁvat 1579 (D. C. No 196 of 1884–87) and which expressly state that the work was composed by Vijñāneśvara-yogīndra. The ten Śārdūlavikrīdita verses of the Āśaucadaśaka are set out in the appendix. The Kalpataru of Lakṣmīdhara has a section on śuddhi which has been recently published in the G. O. S. The Hāralatā of Aniruddha is very useful (B. I. Series). The Āśaucakānda of the Smṛticandrikā has been edited by the late Dr. Shamsastry and published as No. 56 of the Mysore University Sanskrit publications. The Triṁśacchlokī with the commentary of Raghunātha composed in śake 1645 has been published at the Poona Ānandāśrama press and contains 30 Sragdharā verses on āśauca. The Ṣaḍasīti (86 verses in the Anustubh metre) of Kauśikāditya with the commentary Śuddhicandrikā by Vināyaka alias Nandapandita (composed about 1600 A. D.) has been published in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series. The Śuddhikaumudi of Govindānanda (B. I. Series); the Śuddhitattva of Raghunandana (ed. by Jivananda pp. 233–412), the Śuddhiprakāśa (part of the Vīramitrodaya of Mitramiśra) published in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series, the Śuddhimayūkha of Nīlakantha (edited by Mr. J. R. Gharpure) and the Smṛtimuktāphala of Vaidyanātha (edited by Mr. J. R. Gharpure) are compilations that are useful in their own way. These exhaustive treatises on āśauca show one thing unmistakably that brāhmanas of the medieval ages attached an extremely exaggerated importance to ceremonial purity of the body on birth and death.

The periods of impurity depended on many circumstances. There was a difference between impurity on birth and that on death; so also the duration depended upon whether the deceased was an infant or a male or a female or one whose upanayana had been performed or not performed; it depended on caste and also on the question whether the deceased died near the relative or far away; also upon the degree of relationship; and on the time that elapsed from the birth or death till it reached the ears of the relative. The intensity of impurity was different in each of the following: a sūtikā (a freshly delivered woman), rajasvalā (woman in monthly illness), impurity on death, impurity on birth (the last being the least).

Daksa (VI. 2–3) states that there are ten varieties in impurity, viz. immediate purity (after taking a bath), one day, three days, four days, six days, ten days, twelve days, a fortnight, a month and till the end of one's life[613] Daksa then explains in what cases these different periods apply. As to what is meant by impurity till life's end (lit till he is reduced to ashes), Daksa (VI. 8–10) says. 'those who take their meals without bathing or offering to gods or without making gifts-all such persons are in impurity till life ends. One who is permanently afflicted with a disease, who is close-fisted (i. e. stints himself, wife and son and religious acts through greed), who is always in debt (i. e. who has not paid off his debts to gods, sages and manes), who is bereft of religious acts (nitya or naimittika), who is a fool and is under the thumb of his wife, whose mind is bent on vices (gambling, prostitution &c), who is always dependent (a king's servant or the like), who is devoid of faith and benevolence (charitable gifts)—he incurs impurity which ends only with his ashes (i e. only when he is cremated).[614] These words are not to be taken literally; what is meant is that such a man is to be shunned by others (i e it is an arthavāda conveying merely censure)

We shall now turn to the impurity on birth.

That the impurity on birth lasted for ten days even in Vedic times can be inferred from the story of Śunah-śepa narrated in the Ait Br (chapter 33 2), where occurs the passage 'when the animal is more than ten days from birth he becomes pure (and fit to be offered in sacrifice)' The same

---

613. सद्य शौचं तथैकाहस्त्र्यहश्चतुरहस्तथा। पक्षदशाहादशाहाश्च पक्षो मासस्तथैव च ॥ मरणान्तं तथा चान्यद् दश पक्षास्तु सूतके। दक्ष VI 2–3, referred to by विश्वरूप on या III. 30 and q. by कल्प० (on शुद्धि) p 5, अपरार्क p. 894, परा मा I, 2. p. 207.

614. अस्नात्वा चाप्यहुत्वा च ह्यदत्त्वा ये तु भुञ्जते। एवंविधाना सर्वेषा यावज्जीव हि सूतकम्॥ व्याधितस्य कदर्यस्य ऋणग्रस्तस्य सर्वदा। क्रियाहीनस्य मूर्खस्य स्त्रीजितस्य विशेषत। श्वेतनासक्तचित्तस्य पराधीनस्य नित्यश। श्रद्धात्यागविहीनस्य भस्मान्तं सूतक भवेत्॥ दक्ष VI 8–10 q by विश्वरूप on या III. 30, कल्प० (on शुद्धि) p 15, हारलता p 14, अपरार्क p. 895 The last verse of षडशीति is to the same effect as the first verse quoted above The कूर्म (उत्त.) 23. 9 provides 'क्रियाहीनस्य मूर्खस्य महारोगिण एव च। पथेष्टाचरणस्येह मरणान्तमशौचकम्॥' q. by हारलता p. 15.

inference can probably be drawn from Tai. Br. II. 1 1.3, where it is said 'therefore people do not take the milk of a cow for ten nights when a calf is born.' [615]

Abortion in the first four months [616] of pregnancy is called srāva, abortion in the 5th or 6th month is called pāta and from the 7th month of pregnancy onwards it is called prasūti or prasava (according to Parāśara III. 16, Sadaśīti verse 9). When there is srāva the mother incurs impurity for three days, in the case of pāta the mother has to observe impurity for as many days as correspond to the months of pregnancy (i. e. 5 days or 6 days). The impurity consists in the mother being untouchable. The father alone has to bathe when there is srāva, but when there is pāta the father and sapindas have to observe impurity for three days (according to Madana-pārijāta p. 380–381 and others) but they don't incur impurity as on death. These rules hold good for all castes. But when the foetus comes out dead in any month from the 7th or the child is still-born, then the impurity is for ten days for both parents and the sapindas for all varnas or for 10, 12, 15 and 30 days respectively for the four varnas as laid down in Yāj. (III. 22) and the samānodakas have to observe āśauca for three days and sagotras for one day (Dharmasindhu p. 427). The above rules are more or less laid down by Gautama 14. 15–16, Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 136, Parāśara III. 24, Manu V. 66, Yāj. III. 20 (latter half) and the first verse of Āśaucadaśaka. The mother is untouchable for ten days on birth, still-birth or abortion in 7th, 8th or 9th month but the father and sapindas [617] when they take a bath after the prasava are not untouchable (Yāj. III. 19). In ancient times there were several differing views about jananāśauca for the father as vouched for by Baud.[618] Dh. S. I. 5 125–128. Although a woman 615 अजनि वै ते पुत्रो यजस्व माऽनेनेति। स होवाच यदा वै पशुर्निर्दशो भवत्यथ स मेध्यो भवति। ऐ ब्रा 33 2; तस्माद्वत्सं जातं दशरात्रीर्न दुहन्ति। तै. ब्रा. II 1.1.3.

---

616 आचतुर्थान्नवेत्स्रावः पातः पञ्चमषष्ठयोः। अत ऊर्ध्वं प्रसूतिः स्याद् दशाहं सूतकं भवेत्॥ स्रावे मातुस्त्रिरात्रं स्यात्सपिण्डाशौचवर्जनम्॥ पाते मातुर्यथामासं पित्रादीनां दिनत्रयम्॥ मरीचि q by मिता on या III 20, हरदत्त on गौ 14.15, स्मृतिच्च (आशौच) p 4. The first is पराशर III 16 and is quoted as such in शुद्धिप्र. p 16.

617. Vide H. of Dh vol. II pp. 452–455 for the meaning of sapinda and samānodaka (H of Dh. vol III. pp 752–753). These words mean in this section generally (unless otherwise expressly stated) persons descended from a common male ancestor through unbroken male descent.

618. जनने तावन्मातापित्रोर्दशाहमाशौचम्। मातुरित्येके। तत्परिहरणात्। पितुरित्यपरे शुक्रमाधान्यात्। अयोनिजा अपि पुत्रा सूयन्ते मातापित्रोरेव तु संसर्गसामान्यात्। गौ. ध. सू I. 5. 125–128 q. by स्मृतिच्च (आशौच) p. 9.

becomes touchable in ten days after delivery she is not fit to take part in religious rites for 20 days after she becomes touchable (i. e. 30 days from birth) if she gave birth to a son but for 30 days (i. e. 40 days from birth) if a daughter was born.[619] Women of all varnas become pure (i. e. touchable) ten days after delivery—says Pracetas.[620] Devala states that there is no āśauca on the ground of birth when the period of (ten or twelve) days has expired.[621] If a woman was delivered at her father's or brother's house, then her parents and her brothers staying with the father had to observe āśauca for one day (Dharmasindhu p. 427), but if a woman was delivered of a child at her husband's house then her father or brother had to observe no āśauca (on birth). Even when sagotras have to observe āśauca on birth they are not untouchable (Ṣaḍaśīti verse 6).

It would be better to state here certain general rules once for all. When any text employs the word day (ahaḥ) or night (rātri) in prescribing the duration of āśauca what is meant is ahorātra (both day[622] and night). When counting the days of āśauca one has to begin from the day of the cremation, if the deceased was an āhitāgni, but from the day of death in the case of one not an āhitāgni[623] (Āśauca-daśaka verse 4, Kūrma, Uttarārdha 23. 52). Birth and death are causes of āśauca only when they are known to the person who is to be affected by it and not by the mere fact of the birth or death. This follows from certain

---

619. यथाह संवर्तः। जाते पुत्रे पितुः स्नानं सचैलं तु विधीयते। माता शुध्येद्दशाहेन स्नानात्तु स्पर्शनं पितुः। माता शुध्येद्दशाहेनेत्येतच्च सव्यवहारयोग्यतामात्रम्। अहताथेषु पुनः कर्मसु पैठीनसिना विशेष उक्तः। सूतिका पुत्रवती विंशतिरात्रेण कर्माणि कारयेत्। मासेन स्त्रीजननीम्। इति। मिता. on या III 19.

620. सूतिका सर्ववर्णानां दशाहेन विशुध्यति। ऋतौ तु न पृथक् शौचं सर्ववर्णेष्वयं विधिः। प्रचेतस् q by हारलता p. 20, शुद्धिचन्द्रिका on verse 6 स्मृतिच. (आशौचकाण्ड) p. 5 quotes it but explains it differently.

621. नाशौचं प्रसवस्यास्ति व्यतीतेषु दिनेष्वपि। देवल q. by कुल्लूक on मनु V. 76; रघुनाथ in his com. on त्रिंशच्छ्लोकी verse 6 p. 27 reads 'नाशुद्धिः प्रसवाशौचे व्यतीतेषु दिनेष्वपि'.

622 अत्राशौचप्रकरणे अहर्ग्रहणं रात्रिग्रहणं चाहोरात्रोपलक्षणार्थम्। मिता. on या. III. 18

623. इदं चाशौचमाहिताग्नेरुपरमे संस्कारदिवसप्रभृति कर्तव्यम्। अनाहिताग्नेस्तु मरणदिवसप्रभृति। मिता on या III 20. दाहाहादाहिताग्नौ मरणदिवसतोऽन्यत्र कुर्यादहशाहम्। त्रिंशच्छ्लोकी verse 11 (second पाद). दाहाद्यशौचं कर्तव्यं द्विजानामग्नेरोवेणाम्। सपिण्डानां च मरणे मरणादितरेषु च॥ कूर्म (उत्तरार्ध 23. 52).

passages of Pāraskara gr. III. 10 and Manu V. 75–76 and the Brahmapurāna. Pāraskara (III. 10) provides:[624] 'if one who had gone abroad dies, (his relatives) should on hearing (of his death) sit down and offer him water and should remain untouchable for the days that remain out of the proper period (viz. 10, 12, 15, 30 days); if the prescribed period (of āśauca) has expired they should observe āśauca for one night or three nights.' Manu (V. 75–76) is to the same effect. The Brahmapurāna states: 'if a donor makes a gift and the acceptor accepts it when both are not aware of there being a birth or death in their family, no blame attaches.'

We should now turn to āśauca on death. Here again there is no unanimity and therefore the views perferably of the latest works (such as the Dharmasindhu) will be set out after referring to a few smrti passages. Āśauca on death renders those who incur it untouchable and unable to perform religious rites. Pār. gr. III. 10. 29–30 (S. B. E. vol. 29 p. 357) stated generally that the impurity caused by death lasts through three nights and that according to some teachers through ten nights. If a child dies within ten days of birth, the father and mother have to observe Jananāśauca and become purified by the end of the āśauca on birth and the father remains untouchable for those days (Kūrma-purāna q. by S. K. p 21). If a child died before it struck teeth the sapiṇḍas had only to undergo a bath, while the parents had to observe āśauca for three days if the child was a son and for one day if a daughter (vide Yāj. III. 23, Śankha 15. 4, Atri 95, Āśaucadaśaka verse 2). If the child died after striking teeth but before Cūḍā (or the end of the third year) the sapindas had to observe āśauca for one day and night (Yāj. III. 23, Śankha 15. 5), but the parents had āsauca (of death) for three days. If the child was a girl the sapindas became pure by a bath up to the girl's third year. If death occurs between Cūḍā (or three years) and upanayana or marriage (in the case of girls) the sapiṇḍas including the father have to observe āśauca for three days and samānodakas become purified by a bath alone After upanayana all sapiṇḍas have to observe āśauca (on death) for ten days (Gaut. 14 1, Manu V. 59, Āsaucadaśaka 2) and all samānodakas for three days. In the case of a śūdra dying after three and before marriage or 16 years the āśauca is three days for all sapindas. After sixteen years or marriage (in the case of a śūdra) it is the āśauca prescribed for his caste. In the case of a girl dying after three years and before vāgdāna (betrothal) the parents have āśauca for three days and the sapindas (up to three generations) one day. If a girl dies after vāgdāna and before marriage the sapindas of her father as well as of the proposed bridegroom had to observe āśauca for three days. In the case of women and śūdras if death takes place after marriage or after 16 years (if the Śūdra was unmarried) the period of āśauca for all sapindas is ten days. If a woman dies at her father's house after marriage, her parents, step-mother, full brothers and step-brothers have to observe āśauca for three days and her paternal uncle and the like that stay in the same house with her father for one day. Some say that if the married daughter dies in a village other than that of the father, the parents have to observe āśauca for a paksini[625] (i. e. two nights with a day between or two days with a night between). There are other views on this point which are passed over. For example, Visnu-dharmasūtra (22. 32-34) says that in the case of a married woman there is no āśauca on the parents' side; but when she is delivered of a child or dies in the father's house then the impurity is for one day or three days respectively.[626] A married woman has to observe āśauca for three days for the death of her parents or step-mother if ten days have not elapsed from the day of death or for the remaining days out of the period of ten (Yāj. III. 21 latter half). If the married daughter hears of the death of the parents or step-mother at a time more than ten days after the death or within one year she has to observe āśauca for a paksini. If a brother whose upanayana has been performed dies at his married sister's house or vice versa, āśauca has to be observed for three days by them, but if they do not die at each other's house but in a different one then the āśauca is for a paksinī and if the death occurs in another village then there is āśauca only for one day. The same rules apply to step-brothers and step-sisters and also among sisters. A married woman on the death of her paternal grand-father or paternal uncle has to undergo only a bath. If a maternal uncle dies, the nephew and the niece have to observe āśauca for a paksinī. If the maternal uncle dies in the house of the nephew then there is āśauca for three days and for only one day if the maternal uncle had not his upanayana performed or died in another village; the same rules apply to one's mother's step-brother. If the wife of a maternal uncle dies, the nephew or the niece of the maternal uncle have to undergo āśauca for a paksinī If a nephew whose thread ceremony has been performed dies, his maternal uncle and maternal aunt have āśauca for three days The same rules apply if the deceased be the son of a step-sister of the maternal uncle. If the niece (sister's daughter) dies there is only a bath for the maternal uncle. If a maternal grandfather dies, the grandchild (the son or daughter of a daughter) has to observe āśauca for three days, but only for a paksinī if the maternal grandfather dies in a different village. On the death of the maternal grandmother the grandchildren have to observe āśauca for a paksinī. Some works do not prescribe āśauca for a female descendant such as a niece or grand-daughter. If a daughter's son, whose upanayana had been performed, died, the maternal grandfather and grandmother had to observe āśauca for three days and for paksinī if the daughter's son had not upanayana performed for him. On the death of a daughter's daughter the maternal grandfather and mother incur no āśauca In all these matters the general rule is that a male whose upanayana had been performed and a married woman alone are liable to undergo āśauca for any relative other than the parents (i e. on the death of a parent a male though without upanayana and a woman though unmarried are liable to undergo āśauca).

624 मोदितश्चेत्प्रेयात् श्रवणमभृति कृतोदकाः कालशेषनासीरन्नतीतश्चेदेकरात्रं त्रिरात्रं वा। पारस्करगृह्य III, 10.

---

625. Gaut Dh S. 14 17 (श्रुत्वा चोर्ध्वं दशम्या पक्षिणीम्), Manu IV 97 and V 81 employ the word पक्षिणी हरदत्त explains 'अहर्द्वयमध्यगता रात्रि पक्षिणी रात्रिद्वयमध्यगतमहर्वा'. The अमरकोश gives only the first meaning 'आगामिवर्तमाना-हर्युक्तायां निशि पक्षिणी' The शुद्धिप्रकाश p 36 remarks 'द्वावहावेकरात्रिश्च पक्षिणी-त्यभिधीयते—इति भट्टनारायणधृतवचनात्। पक्षतुल्यौ त्रिवसौ पार्श्वयोः रत इति पक्षिणी रात्रिरिति।'.

626 स्त्रीणां विवाहः संस्कार। संस्कृतासु स्त्रीषु नाशौचं भवति पितृपक्षे। तत्सवसमरणे चेत्पितृपक्षे स्यातां तदैकरात्रं त्रिरात्रं च। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22. 32-34.

If a man's father-in-law or mother-in-law die near (in the house of) the man, he has to undergo āśauca for three days, but only for paksinī if the death is elsewhere than with the son-in-law. On the death of a son-in-law, the father-in-law and the mother-in-law have to observe āśauca for one day or they have only to take a bath, but if the son-in-law dies in the house of the father-in-law then the āśauca is for three days. On the death of one's wife's brother, the āśauca is for one day i upanayana had been performed; but if no upanayana was performed or if he died in another village a mere bath is enough.

On the death of one's mother's sisters (full or half) the person (whether man or woman) has to undergo āśauca for a paksinī; the same rule applies on the death of the father's sister. If it is a step-sister of the father then a mere bath is enough. The father's sister has to undergo a bath if the nephew dies If one's father's sister or mother's sister dies in one's house then the āśauca is for three days.

In the case of bandhus (described by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 135 as bhinnagotra sapindas) of[627] the three kinds, the āśauca is for a paksinī, provided the bandhu is upanīta but if he died before upanayana then āśauca is for one day and if the bandhu died in one's house then for three days If the daughter of the father's sister (and of the other bandhus enumerated in the three verses) dies married, the āsauca is one day, but if they die unmarried only a bath is necessary. Among the three kinds of bandhus, a man himself and his three ātmabandhus have to observe āśauca for each other's death; but the case is different as to pitrbandhus and mātrbandhus. If any one of these latter dies, there is āśauca for the man whose bandhus they are, but if a man dies, his pitrbandhus and mātrbandhus have to observe no āśauca.

If an adopted son dies, his natural father and adoptive father have to observe āśauca for three days (the Vyavahāramayūkha differs from this) and the sapindas for one day.

If the adoptive or natural father dies, the adopted son has to observe āśauca for three days and for one day for the sapindas of any one of them. On the death of the son and the grandson of an adopted son, the sapindas of the natural father and the adoptive father have to observe āśauca for one day and 627 The bandhus are of three kinds, आत्मबन्धु, पितृबन्धु and मातृबन्धु. In three verses variously attributed to Baudhāyana or Sātātapa three illustrations of each of the three kinds of bandhus are given आत्मपितृष्वसुः पुत्रा आत्ममातृष्वसु सुताः। आत्ममातुलपुत्राश्च विज्ञेया आत्मबान्धवा ॥ पितु पितृष्वसु पुत्रा पितुर्मातृष्वसुः सुता। पितृर्मातुलपुत्राश्च विज्ञेया पितृबान्धवा। मातु पितृष्वसु पुत्रा मातुर्मातृष्वसु सुता। मातुर्मातुलपुत्राश्च विज्ञेया मातृबान्धवा ॥ q by the मिता. on या. II. 135, व्यव नि. p 455, परा मा III p 528, मद पा. p. 674. For further details, vide H. of Dh vol. III. pp 754-762.

vice versa. These rules apply if the son adopted is not a sapinda or samānodaka of the adopter, when he was in his family of birth. But if a sagotra sapinda or a samānodaka be adopted, then the āśauca is for ten or three days respectively.

If one's ācārya[628] dies, the pupil has to observe āśauca for three days, but only one day if he dies in another village (Gautama 14. 26, 52, Manu V. 80). On the death of the ācārya's wife or son the āśauca is for one day.[629] On the death of a guru (who instructs in Vedic mantras) the āśauca is three days and paksini if he dies in another village. On the death of a teacher who imparted instruction in grammar, astronomy and other aṅgas (subsidiary lores) of the Veda, the āśauca is one day. Similar rules are laid down about the death of a pupil, rtvik (sacrificial priest), a sacrificer, a dependent śrotriya, a fellow-student, a friend, which are all passed over as not now useful Vide Gaut. 14. 19–20 (which prescribe one day's āśauca on the death of a fellow-student or a dependent śrotriya).

These provisions about āśauca on the death of the ācārya and rtvik who were not sapiṇḍas show how closely the bond between teacher and pupil was thought to be in ancient times, almost equalling the tie of blood. When a yati (ascetic) dies,[630] all his sapindas have simply to undergo a bath (and nothing more). Conversely, a yati and brahmacārin have to observe no āśauca Manu V. 82, Yāj III. 25, Visnu 22.45, Sankha 15. 15 provide that on the death of the ruler of the country in which one resides one has to observe āśauca up till

---

628. An ācārya is defined by Manu II. 140 as one who performs the upanayana of his pupil and teaches him the Veda together with the Kalpasūtra and Upaniṣads. Rtvik is defined by Manu II. 143 as one who is chosen for the performance of Agnyādheya, the pākayajñas and the solemn sacrifices like Agnistoma.

629. आचार्यपत्नीपुत्रोपाध्यायमातुलश्वशुरश्वशुर्यसहाध्यायिशिष्येष्वतीतेष्वेकरात्रेण । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22. 44. श्वशुर्य means wife's brother. Manu (V. 80–81) prescribes three days' āśauca on the death of the ācārya, his wife and son, and śrotriya Gaut. 14.26 does the same.

630 वानप्रस्थे यतौ चोपरमति कुलजे पण्ढके चाहव. स्यात् । त्रिंशच्छ्लोकी 5th verse, 3rd pād. Vide मनु V. 91 (= Visnu 22.86) about a ब्रह्मचारिन् carrying the corpse of his parents.

the coming of the day or night next to that on which the king dies.[631]

As long as a corpse is not removed from the village in which a man dies, the whole village is in āśauca Āp Dh. S. 1 3 9 14 declares that there is no Veda study till a corpse lies in the village The Smrti-muktāphala (p 541) quotes[632] several smrtis to the effect that in a village in which a corpse lies unremoved, there is to be no eating, no Vedic study and no sacrifice, but that this does not apply where in a village there are more than four hundred brāhmanas. The Dharmasindhu (p 433) also says the same about a village, but adds that this rule does not apply to a town

The ideas of ritualistic purity went so far as to provide (as stated in the Śuddhitattva quoted by the Nirnayasindhu) that if a dog died in a brāhmana's house the house became impure for ten days, that, if a śūdra,[633] a patita or a mleccha died in a brāhmana's house, the house became impure for a month, two months or four months respectively and the house had to be abandoned if a śvapāka died therein

Atika antāśauca (impurity on coming to know of birth or death after the several periods fixed). The general rule[634] is

---

631 प्रेते राजनि सज्योतिर्यस्य स्याद्विषये स्थित । मनु V 82 सज्योति॰ is explained by the मिता॰ as 'ज्योतिषा सह वर्तते इति सज्योतिराशौचम्। अग्नि चेद्यावत्सूर्यदर्शन रात्रौ चेद्यावन्नक्षत्रदर्शनमित्यर्थ ।'. या. III 25 (निवासराजनि प्रेते तदह शुद्धिकारणम्) is explained by the Mit in the same sense as मनु V. 82, but the शुद्धिप्र p. 36 holds that the āśauca for king's death is for a whole day and night provided he is a good king protecting his subjects

632 स्मृत्यन्तरे। ग्रामस्थे शवचण्डाले शूद्राद्यशुचिसंनिधौ॥ नाध्येतव्य न भोक्तव्य न होतव्यं कदाचन॥ इति। ..स्मृत्यन्तरे विशेषो दर्शित । चतु शताधिकैर्विप्रै सम्पूर्णे ग्राममध्यके। विशेष संभवस्यागि जपहोमार्चनं प्रति। अन्त शवस्य दोषस्तु नास्ति तत्र समाचरेत्। स्मृतिसु (आशौच) p. 541

633 शुद्धितत्त्वे बृहन्मनु । श्वशूद्रपतिताश्चान्त्या मृताश्चेद् द्विजमन्दिरे। शोच तत्र प्रवक्ष्यामि मनुना भाषितं यथा। दशरात्राच्छुनि सूते मासाच्छूद्रे भवेच्छुचि । द्वाभ्या तु पतिते गेहमन्त्ये मासचतुष्टयात्। अत्यन्त्ये वर्जयेद्देहमित्येव मनुरब्रवीत्। अन्त्यो म्लेच्छ । अत्यन्त्य श्वपाक इति वाचस्पति । निर्णयसिन्धु III p 528, these verses are quoted by शुद्धिप्र. p 100 also 634 देशान्तरगत' श्रुत्वा कुल्याना मरणोद्भवौ। यच्छेषं दशरात्रस्य तावदेवाशुचिर्भवेत्॥ शङ्ख 15.11. The स्मृतिच॰ (आशौच) p 47 reads 'कल्याण मरण तथा' in the 2nd पाद. The same verse occurs in अग्निपुराण 157 12-13 which reads देशान्तरस्थ श्रुत्वा तु, प्रोषितश्चेत्समेयाच्छ्रवणमभृति कालशेषमासीरन्नतीतश्चेदेकरात्रं त्रिरात्र वा। पार यू III 10.

that, if a person stays in a different country and hears of a birth or death among his sapindas, he has to observe āśauca not for ten days after hearing but for that number of days that are short of the ten days (counting from birth or death) prescribed for sapindas. Vide Manu V. 75, Yāj III. 21 (latter half), Śankha 15.11, Pār. gr III. 10 Āśauca interferes very much with one's activities and it is hence that often-times people send a closed letter to their relatives living in a different place stating thereon that it be opened on a particular day (which is the 10th day from the death of a sapinda). Everyone knows the meaning of such a direction and by such a subterfuge inconvenience is avoided and the dictates of the śāstra are deemed to be satisfied. If a son hears of the death of a parent he has to observe āśauca for ten days from the day of hearing, but if he hears of the death of a parent before the collection of bones then he has to observe āśauca only for the days that remain (Smrti-muktāphala p. 534). There is great divergence about the period of āśauca if the death of a sapinda comes to one's ears more than ten days after the day of death. Manu V. 77 provides that on hearing of the death of a sapinda or the birth of a son after ten days (from the event) a man becomes pure after plunging into water with the clothes on and Yāj III. 21 (last pāda, 'pūrne dattvodakam śuciḥ') states that he becomes pure after (a bath and) offering water when the period fixed has passed off. From the words of Manu that only the father, even if he hears of the birth of a son more than ten days after the event, has to take a bath the Mit infers that there is no atikrāntāśauca for sapindas on birth[635]. The Mit. quotes Devala in support (vide note 621 above). The Dharmasindhu follows the Mit. Manu V. 76, Śankha 15.12, Kūrmapurāna (Uttarārdha) 23.21 state that when ten days have passed after the event of death, the man who hears of the death is impure for three days and if he hears of the death more than a year after death, he becomes pure after a bath. In order to remove the conflict among smrtis Vrddha-Vasistha lays down 'āśauca is for three days if the news of death is heard within three months (but later than ten days after death), for a paksini if it is heard within six months (but later than three months), for one day if heard before nine months (but later than 6 months) and thereafter (i. e. up to one year but later than nine months) one becomes pure by a bath. But the Mit. says [636] that this holds good as to all except one's parents and quotes Paithīnasi and another smṛti for the proposition that whenever a son staying in a distant country hears of the death of a parent whether within a year or after a year he has to observe āśauca for ten days from the day he becomes aware of it. Laghu-Āśvalāyana (20.88) lays down the same exception in the case of a son. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 21 last half) further says that the rules about atikrāntāśauca apply only to a deceased person whose upanayana had been performed. The Dharmasindhu (p 433) remarks that there is no atikrāntāśauca as regards the periods of one day and three days prescribed on the death of one whose upanayana had not been performed or as regards the periods of paksini and three days on the death of the maternal uncle and others of a different gotra. Similarly, there is no atikrāntāśauca with reference to the āśauca for three days prescribed in the case of samānodakas; but in these cases even after the lapse of the fixed time a bath is necessary. The rules about atikrāntāśauca apply only to āśauca on death for ten days. As in the case of the son, so in the cases of husband and wife and of co-wives among themselves even after the lapse of more than a year and even if the death is in a different country the husband or wife or co-wife has to observe āśauca for ten days The parents, even when they hear of the death of an aurasa son after a year, have to observe āśauca for three days. On the news of the death of a sapinda living in the same country coming to a sapinda's ears after ten days but up to three months, the period of āśauca is three days, paksini up to 6 months, up to nine months one day and up to one year a bath. Here also there are various views such as those of Mādhava and others. Vide Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 49–51 for various views.

635. जन्मन्यतिक्रान्ताशौचं सपिण्डाना नास्तीति गम्यते। पितुस्तु निर्देशेऽपि जनने स्नानमस्त्येव श्रुत्वा पुत्रस्य जन्म च इति वचनात्। एतच्च पुत्रग्रहणं जन्मनि सपिण्डाना-मतिक्रान्ताशौच नास्तीति ज्ञापकम्। अन्यथा 'निर्देशं ज्ञातिमरणं श्रुत्वा जन्म च निर्दशम्' इत्येवावक्ष्यत्। न चोक्तम्। मिता. on या III. 21 (latter half).

The Mit. on Yāj. III. 21 (latter half) makes a distinction between knowledge of the death of a sapinda staying in the

---

636. तथा च वृद्धवसिष्ठ । मासत्रये त्रिरात्र स्यात्पण्मासे पक्षिणी तथा। अहस्तु नवमादूर्ध्वं स्नानेन शुध्यति॥ इति । एतच्च मातापितृव्यतिरिक्तविषयम्।.. सवत्सरादूर्ध्वमपि प्रेतकार्यमाशौचदानादिकं कार्यं न पुनः स्नानमात्राच्छुद्धिरित्यर्थ । मिता on या. III. 21 (latter half) The परा. मा. I 2 p. 232 quotes a similar verse of देवल 'आ त्रिपक्षात् त्रिरात्र स्यात्पण्मासात् पक्षिणी तत । परमेकाहमा वर्षादूर्ध्वं स्नातो विशुध्यति॥ इति। The षडशीति (34) includes the verse of वृद्धवसिष्ठ. The verse मासत्रये occurs in Laghu-Āśvalāyana-smṛti 20 86 same country coming to a person's ears after ten days from death and of the death of a sapinda staying in another country separated by a big river &c In the latter case the sapindas coming to hear of the death after ten days but even before three months are purified by a mere bath. It quotes[637] a smrti verse 'on hearing that a person (sapinda) died in another country and in the case of the death of an impotent person or a forest hermit or an ascetic purification follows after a bath and the same applies to sagotra sapindas in the case of abortion.' The Sadaśīti (35) has a similar verse[638] The Mit. quotes two verses of Brhaspati which define what deśāntara (a different country) means[639] 'Where there is a large river or there is a mountain which separates (one territory from another) or where the languages differ then there is deśāntara. Some say that a different country means the distance of sixty yojanas, while others put it down at forty yojanas and still others at thirty yojanas.' There is a difference of opinion as to whether in order to constitute a different country all three must co-exist (viz. a large river, a mountain and difference of speech) or any one of the three will suffice or whether 60, 40 or 30 yojanas would constitute a different country or whether the requirement of ten days for news to be carried to a place would constitute deśāntara The Sm. C and Ṣadaśīti 37 hold the view that any one of the above three is sufficient while others hold other views. The Śuddhiviveka[640] holds that a distance of 60 yojanas constituted deśāntara by itself, but even within sixty

---

637. यत्तु नद्यादिव्यवहितं देशान्तरे मृतस्तत्सापिण्डानां दशाहादूर्ध्वं मासत्रयादर्वागपि सद्यः शौचम्। देशान्तरमृतं श्रुत्वा क्लीबे वैखानसे यतौ। सूते स्नानेन शुध्यन्ति गर्भस्रावे च गोत्रिण ॥ इति। मिता on या III. 21.

638 ज्ञातिमृत्यौ यदाशौचं दशाहात्तु बहिः श्रुतौ। एकदेश इदं प्रोक्तं स्नात्वा देशान्तरे शुचि ॥ षडशीति 35.

639. देशान्तरलक्षणं च बृहस्पतिनोक्तम्। महानद्यन्तरं यत्र गिरिर्वा व्यवधायकः। भाषो यत्र विभिद्यन्ते तद्देशान्तरमुच्यते॥ देशान्तरं वदन्त्येके षष्टियोजनमायतम्। चत्वारिंशद्वदन्त्यन्ये त्रिंशदन्ये तथैव च॥ इति। मिता on या. III 21. The first verse is ascribed to बृद्धमनु by अपरार्क p 905, स्मृतिच (आशौच) p 52 and to बृहन्मनु by शुद्धिप्र. p. 51. The स्मृतिच. p 53 adds one more verse and शुद्धिप्र p 51 and the com on षडशीति 37 add the same and another half verse from बृहन्मनु viz देशनामनदीभेदो निकटे यत्र वै भवेत्। तेन देशान्तरं प्रोक्तं स्वयमेव स्वयम्भुवा॥ दशरात्रेण या वार्ता यत्र न श्रूयतेऽथवा।; लघ्वाश्वलायन 20 87 is पर्वतश्च (स्य?) महानद्या व्यवधानं भवेद्यदि। त्रिंशद्योजनदूरं वा सद्यःस्नानेन शुध्यति॥ yojanas if a large river, a mountain and difference of speech occurred together, that could give rise to deśāntara. The Smrtyarthasāra[641] avers that deśāntara is differently described in the Smrtis, Purānas and the works on tīrthas For yojana, vide H of Dh. vol. III n 185 pp. 145–146

640 एतेषां च पक्षाणां देशपरिग्रहेण व्यवस्था। शुद्धिविवेके तु षष्टियोजनान्तरत्वं तद्व्यन्तरेषि भाषाभेदगिरिमहानदीव्यवधानानि चेति लक्षणद्वयमेव निष्कर्षेणोक्तम्। रघुनाथ on त्रिंशच्छ्लोकी verse 6 p 29.

The Dharmasindhu (p. 435) provides that if the bones of an āhitāgni were not found and only an effigy of palāśa leaves were burnt, still the āśauca is for ten days even if he died in a different country and a long time had elapsed. Similarly, in the case of the effigy of one who is not an āhitāgni, the āśauca is for ten days for his son and wife if they have not already observed any āśauca for him but if they had observed it (on hearing of his death) then for three days (on the burning of the effigy). For other sapindas (than the son and wife) in the same circumstances three days and bath are respectively prescribed.

It is provided in the Grhya kārikas, the Smrtyarthasāra (p 94), Dharmasindhu (p. 435) and other works that if a man[642] went to a distant country and no news of his being alive was heard, then his son (or other relative), after the lapse of 20 years from the time when no news was heard if the man went away when he was young or 15 years if he left when he was of middle age or 12 years if he left later in life, should perform three cāndrāyanas or thirty krcchras, prepare an effigy of the man with kuśas (or with palāsa leaves), should burn it and then observe āśauca and perform śrāddhas &c.

To summarize the above discussion it is clear that as indicated by Medhātithi on Manu V. 58 there is a distinction as regards the periods of āśauca and the persons affected by it in several ways (1) There is a distinction between āśauca on birth and āśauca on death; (2) As to āśauca on death numerous distinctions arise viz (a) when there is abortion (garbhasrāva or garbhapāta, as in Śankha 15 4, Brhat-Parāśara VI p 186); (b) when the foetus comes out from the 7th to the 9th month of 641 देशान्तरमनेकधा स्मृत स्मृतिपुराणतीर्थकल्पेषु। स्मृत्यर्थसार p 90.

642 देशान्तरगतस्य तु जीवद्वार्तानाकर्णने विशेषो गृह्यकारिकायाम्। दूरदेशान्तरगते जीवद्वार्ती पुन पुनः। इतस्तत समन्विच्छेत्पर्यालोच्य गतागतै॥ तस्यामश्रूयमाणाया वय काल-विशेषतः। तस्य पूर्ववयस्कस्य विंशत्यब्दोर्ध्वत क्रिया॥ ऊर्ध्वं पञ्चदशाब्दात्तु मध्यमे वयसि स्मृता॥ चान्द्रायणत्रय कृत्वा त्रिंशत्कृच्छ्राणि वा सुतै। कुशै. प्रतिकृतिं तस्य दग्ध्वाशौचादिका क्रिया॥ कार्या इति शेष। रघुनाथ's com on त्रिंशच्छ्लोकी verse 15 p. 97.

pregnancy or the child is still-born or dies after being born but before the appearance of teeth (Yāj. III. 23, Atri 95); (c) after the appearance of teeth but before cūḍā or three years (Viṣṇu 22. 29, Yāj. III. 23); (d) after cūḍā or three years up to upanayana (Manu V. 67), (e) after upanayana (Yaj. III. 23, Manu V. 59, Gaut. 14. 1); (f) as to āśauca on death after upanayana the duration at one time depended in the case of brāhmaṇas on Vedic study, the performance of śrauta rites and whether the brāhmana subsisted on ears of corn left in the field after the crops were harvested[643] (Parāśara III 5, Śankha 15 1, Atri 83, Agnipurāna 158. 10-11), (g) the duration of āśauca depended on caste (Gaut. 14. 1-4, Yāj III. 22 &c); (h) the duration of āśauca depended on nearness of blood i. e. whether the person affected was a sapinda or a samānodaka (Gaut 14 1 and 18, Manu V. 59, 64); (i) the duration depended also on the nearness or distance from the place of death (Laghu-Āśvalāyana 20. 85, 89), (j) it also depended on whether the deceased died in a different country separated by a large river, a mountain or thirty yojanas (Laghu-Āśvalāyana 20.87); (k) duration depended on the time that elapsed before it came to the knowledge of the relative; (l) the duration depended upon whether another āśauca supervened when the period of the first was not over.

If a person is born or died at night or news thereof is received at night, a question arises as to from what day the periods of āśauca are to be calculated For example, if a man died at 1 A M. on Monday, was Monday to be included in counting ten days of āśauca or was it to be excluded? There are two views on this point.[643a] One view is that any time before midnight is to be counted as belonging to the previous day, while any time after midnight is to be taken as belonging to the next day. On this view in the above illustration Monday would be excluded in the calculation of ten days. The other view is that the night is to be divided into three parts and if death occurs in the first two of the three parts then the day is to be included in the calculation; if the time of death falls in the 3rd part, the ten days are to be calculated from the next day. On this view Monday would be included in the ten days. The Dharmasindhu (p. 435) remarks that in this matter the usage of the country is to be followed. Vide Madanapārijāta pp. 394–395 also.

---

643 शिलोञ्छायाचितैर्जीवन् सद्यः शुध्येद् द्विजोत्तम.। संग्रहकार q. by परा मा. I. 2 p. 216 For शिलोञ्छवृत्ति vide मनु X 112 and या I. 128.

643 a. रात्रौ जननमरणे रात्रौ मरणज्ञाने वा रात्रि त्रिभागां कृत्वा मध्यमभागद्वये पूर्वदिनं तृतीयभागे उत्तरदिनमारभ्याशौचम्। यद्वार्धरात्रात् प्राक् पूर्वदिनं परत. परदिनम्। अत्र देशाचारादिना व्यवस्था। धर्मसिन्धु p 435. This view is based on verses of पारस्कर and काश्यप 'अर्धरात्रादस्ताच्चेत्सूतके मृतके तथा। पूर्वमेव दिनं ग्राह्यमूर्ध्वं चेद्दुत्तरेऽहनि॥ रात्रिं कुर्यात्त्रिभागां तु द्वौ भागौ पूर्ववासरे.। उत्तरांश' परादिनं जातेषु च मृतेषु च॥ पारस्कर q. by स्मृतिच. (आशौच) pp. 118-119.

Several rules are mentioned in the smrtis about the periods of āśauca for the relatives of higher castes when they marry women of lower varnas (i e when there are anuloma marriages). For example, Daksa VI. 12 says that if a brāhmana has married wives of the four varnas, then the impurity on the delivery or death of these women respectively lasts for 10, 6, 3 or 1 day Visnu Dh. S (22. 22–24) provides that when a ksatriya has sapindas of the vaiśya or śūdra varna the āśauca on the birth and death of these lasts for six or three days, if a vaiśya has a śūdra as sapinda then impurity is removed after six days. But when people of lower varnas have sapindas of higher varnas then impurity on birth and death ceases when the impurity of the higher varna sapindas ceases. Laghu-Hārīta 84 (= Āpastambasmiti IX verse 13) has similar provisions. Other smrtis and purānas like the Kūrma (Uttarārdha 23. 30–36) mention differing views quoted in Hāralatā pp 54–60, Smr M. pp. 495–496 The Madanapārijāta remarks (pp 425–426) that some say that these varying provisions may be discarded or that they may be assigned their proper place according to the usages of the several countries or they should somehow be explained as based upon the person affected being possessed of virtues or not or they may be held to be applicable to seasons of distress or otherwise.

According to the Mit on Yāj.[644] III. 22 persons belonging to the pratiloma castes have no periods of āśauca, but they have to observe rules of purification similar to those relating to answering the call of nature Others like the Smrti-muktāphala[645] p. 495 aver, relying on Manu (X 41), that the pratiloma castes are like śūdras and have to observe the āśauca prescribed for sūdras The Hāralatā (p 12) quotes Ādipurāna to the effect that varnasankaras (i.e pratilomas)

644 प्रतिलोमानां स्वाशौचाभाव एव प्रतिलोमा धर्महीना.—इति मनुस्मरणात्। केवलं सूतौ प्रसवे च मलापकर्षणार्थं सूत्रपुरीषोत्सर्गवत् शौचं भवत्येव। मिता on या III 22 प्रतिलोमास्तु धर्महीनाः is गौ 4. 20.

645. सङ्करजातीना शूद्रेष्वन्तर्भावाच्चेषा शूद्रवदाशौचम्। स्मृतिषु (आशौच) p. 495.

should follow the śūdras in the matter of āśauca and purification. The Smṛtyartha-sāra (p. 92) states that those born of pratiloma unions should observe āśauca if they perform prāyaścitta, but if they do not perform prāyaścitta then there is no āśauca for them.

It has already been stated (p 215) how it was the duty of sapiṇḍas to take out the corpse and to cremate it and how carrying the dead body of a poor brāhmaṇa was highly eulogised (Parāśara III. 39–40). But, as Manu V 101–102 provide, if a brāhmaṇa carried through affection the dead body of one[646] who was not his sapiṇḍa, as if he were a bandhu or carried (the dead body) of his mother's bandhus (such as mother's brother or sister) he became pure after three days; but if he partook of the food of those who were bereaved by death he became pure after ten days and if he does not stay in the house of those bereaved nor partakes of their food he becomes pure in a day (but if he stays in their house though not partaking of their food he has to observe aśauca for three days). Vide Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23. 37) and Viṣṇu 22. 7–9 also. Gautama (14. 21–25) has rules on the same subject but they somewhat differ and Haradatta remarks that this āśauca is somewhat different from the āśauca observed by sapiṇḍas, viz. he becomes untouchable but he need not follow the other rules such as sleeping on the ground &c. If a person carried a dead body through greed (for money), a brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya, vaiśya or śūdra had to observe āśauca respectively for 10, 12, or 15 days or a month. This was called nirhārāśauca, the word 'nirhāra'[647] including the covering of the dead body with a garment, decking it with garlands, perfumes and ornaments, carrying it and cremating it. Sapiṇḍas who are observing āśauca for the death of the same person may dine in the same house and partake of the food cooked, but not others who are not undergoing the same āśauca.[648]

---

646. असपिण्डं द्विजं प्रेत विप्रो निर्हृत्य बन्धुवत्। अहित्वा च सहोषित्वा दशरात्रेण शुध्यति। कूर्मपुराण (उत्तरार्ध 23.37), नाशौचे कस्यचिदन्नमश्नीयात्। ब्राह्मणादीनामाशौचे य सकृदेवान्नमश्नाति तस्य तावदाशौचं यावत्तेषाम्। आशौचापगमे प्रायश्चित्तं कुर्यात्। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22.7–9.

647. निर्हारशब्दार्थः. स्मृत्यन्तरे दर्शितः। प्रेतस्य वास सुगन्धधूपणाद्यैरलंक्रिया। यहन दहनं चेति निर्हारार्थो निरुच्यते। इति। q. by स्मृतिसु (आशौच) p. 544.

648. तथा सूतकान्नभोजनमपि न कार्यम्। उभयत्र दशाहानि कुलस्यान्नं न भुज्यते- इति यमस्मरणात्। उभयत्र जननमरणयोः कुलस्य सूतकयुक्तस्य सम्बन्ध्यन्नमसकुल्यैर्न भोक्तव्यम्। सकुल्याना पुनर्ने दोषः। सूतके तु कुलस्यान्नमदोषं मनुरब्रवीत्- इति तेनैवोक्तत्वात्। मिता on या. III 17. कल्पतरु (on आशौच) p. 23 and अपरार्क ascribe (p. 892) the verse उभयत्र० to मनु. Vide Mit. on Yāj. III. 17.

Gaut 14. 29, Manu V. 103, Yāj. III. 26, Parāśara III. 42 prescribe that a brāhmaṇa should not follow the funeral procession of a deceased brāhmaṇa, but if he does so, he has to bathe, touch fire, take in ghee and then he becomes pure. Parāśara III.43–46 and Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23 45) provide a rising scale of the days of āśauca if a brāhmaṇa follows the corpse of a kṣatriya (āśauca for one day and pañcagavya), a vaiśya (āśauca for two days and six prāṇāyāmas), a śūdra (āśauca for three days, bath in a river going to the sea, 100 prāṇāyāmas [649] and drinking of ghee) Vide Trimśac-chloki verse 13.

If a brāhmaṇa who is not a sapiṇḍa of the deceased went to the bereaved family and wept along with the relatives before the collection of bones he had to observe āśauca for a day and then a bath if the deceased was a kṣatriya or vaiśya, but āśauca for three days if the deceased was a śūdra; but he had to undergo only a bath if he went after the collection of the bones, when the deceased was a śūdra and the weeping took place after the collection of bones he had to observe āśauca for a whole day and night. Vide Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23 46–47), Agnipurāṇa 158 47–48, Par M 12 pp 283–285, Smr M (āśauca) p. 543 and Āśāucadaśaka verse 9 (for mṛhāra, following a funeral procession and weeping)

Persons [650] undergoing an āśauca on birth or death for one person were forbidden to touch other persons undergoing āśauca for the birth or death of another person altogether. If they did so they had to perform prāyaścitta (Prājāpatya or Sāntapana)

Even if a person's wife left him and lived in illicit relationship with a person of the same or higher caste he had to observe on her death āśauca for one day But if she lived with one lower in varṇa than her husband, the latter had not, on her death, to observe any āśauca at all (Yāj III 6) Similarly, one had to observe one day's āśauca on the death of sons that were not aurasa (such as kṣetraja) Vide Yāj III.25 and Viṣṇu 22 42–43

Certain exceptions were recognized to the above rules about partaking of food at the house of one who is afflicted with

649 एकाहाद्भस्त्रिये शुद्धिर्वैश्ये च स्याद् द्व्यहेन तु। शूद्रे दिनत्रय प्रोक्त प्राणायामशतं पुन ॥ कूर्मपुराण (उत्तरार्ध 23 45) q in शुद्धितत्त्व p. 293, शुद्धिप्र. p 63

650. आशौचिनामन्योन्यसंस्पर्शे निषेधति शंखः। ज्ञाताज्ञाते सकृत्स्पृष्टे भुक्ते च त्रिरात्रिभिः। अन्याशौचवतां स्पर्शो न कर्तव्यो द्विजन्मनाम्॥ आशौचेष्वन्यदाशौचं स्पृष्टेष्वेवं च कामतः। चरेत् सान्तपनं कृच्छ्रं ज्ञाताप्यत्यमकामतः॥ स्मृतिमु (आशौच) p 502.

āśauca. While a marriage[651] rite (as also caula and upanayana), festival in honour of a deity and a sacrifice (like Jyotistoma) are in progress, if impurity due to birth or death overtakes the performer, the materials (money and other things) already set apart for them may be dedicated or donated to the deity or brāhmaṇas and no fault is incurred. As regards food, a smṛti text[652] quoted by the Mit. says 'if in marriage, in a festival in honour of a deity or in a sacrifice āśauca on birth or death intervenes, the cooked food should be served through others (not affected by the āśauca) and the donor and the partaker of the food incur no blame. Acc. to Angiras,[653] Paiṭhīnasi (q by Sm. C.) and Viṣṇu Dh. S., when once a sacrifice (like a Somayāga), a marriage, a sacrifice or festival in honour of the mother Goddesses or a deity or the dedication or foundation of an idol or temple has been begun a supervening āśauca does not matter. Even in modern times this is followed as regards upanayana and marriage. When exactly a sacrifice or marriage ceremony may be said to have begun is laid down by Laghu-Viṣṇu as follows[654] in the case of a sacrifice it may be said to begin when the priests are chosen, in the case of vratas and japa when the saṅkalpa (declaration) is made, in the case of marriage when the Nāndīśrāddha is performed, and in the case of a śrāddha when the food meant for the brāhmaṇas has been cooked completely. Certain things could be taken from the house of one who was undergoing āśauca[655] on birth or death and who was the owner thereof (though not actually

---

651. विवाहोत्सवयज्ञेषु ह्यन्तरा सूतसूतके। पूर्वसङ्कल्पितं द्रव्यं दीयमानं न दुष्यति॥ पराशर III. 27. The latter half is also ascribed to क्रतु by the मिता. on या. III. 29.

652 विवाहोत्सवयज्ञादिष्वन्तरा सूतसूतके। शेषमन्नं परैर्देयं दातृभोक्तॄंश्च न स्पृशेत्॥ q. by मिता. on या III. 29 and परा मा I. 2. p 262. हारलता (pp. 105–106) quotes a very similar verse from आदिपुराण 'विवाहयज्ञयोर्मध्ये सूतकमपि चान्तरा। शेष ..स्पृशेत्'.

653. Vide स्मृतिच (आशौच p 70) for the verses of अङ्गिरस् and पैठीनसि. न देवप्रतिष्ठाविवाहयो पूर्वसम्भृतयोः न देशविप्लवे आपद्यपि च कष्टायाम्। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22 53–55 q. by मिता on या III. 29 (with variants) from his hand, but with his permission). The Kūrmapurāna enumerates such articles They are 'fruits, flowers, raw vegetables, salt, firewood, butter-milk, curds, ghee, oil, drugs, milk and dry food' (like laddus, lājas). Marīci (q. by Mit on Yāj III. 17) and Trimśac-chlokī verse 20 present even longer lists of such things.

654 व्रतयज्ञविवाहेषु श्राद्धे होमार्चने जपे। प्रारब्धे सूतकं न स्यादनारब्धे तु सूतकम्॥ प्रारम्भो वरणं यज्ञे सङ्कल्पो व्रतजापयो। नान्दीश्राद्धं विवाहादौ श्राद्धे पाकपरिक्रिया॥ लघुविष्णु q by शुद्धिप्रकाश p 94, मद या p 423. The स्मृत्यर्थसार p. 17 begins प्रारम्भाद्ध्वमाशौचे विवाहः कार्य एव च, then has the verses प्रारम्भो वरणं ..परिक्रिया and adds 'निमन्त्रणं या श्राद्धे तु प्रारम्भः स्यादिति स्मृति।.'

655. फलानि पुष्पं शाकं च लवणं काष्ठमेव च। तक्रं दधि घृतं तैलमौषधं क्षीरमेव च। आशौचिनां गृहाद्ग्राह्य शुष्काऽन्नं चैव नित्यशः। कूर्मपुराण, उत्तरार्ध 23 66 q. in हारलता p. 31.

Some smrtis and commentators lay down rules about the āśauca to be observed by slaves when their masters are in āśauca. Vide Visnu Dh. S. 22.19, Devalasmrti verse 6, Brhaspati quoted by Haradatta on Gaut. 14.4. But as slavery has long been abolished this topic is passed over here.

Āśaucasannipāta or āśaucasampāta (the knowledge of another āśauca coming to a person already observing one āśauca) [656] The rules about this matter were promulgated early enough and they are based on convenience and common sense. The rules try to give relief to persons who may be sorely tried if it were held that, when another āśauca supervenes while a person is already in the midst of one, he has to finish all the days of the first āśauca and then begin the period of the second āśauca. The Gaut. Dh. S. 14.5 starts by saying that if another āśauca supervenes on one already being undergone, purification results after the remaining days of the first āśauca are over. Then sūtras 6 and 7 provide that if the second āśauca supervenes in the last night of the first āśauca then purification results in two days after the first āśauca ends and if the second āśauca comes to be known in the last watch of the night of the last day of the first āśauca, the second ends in three days after the first ends. Baud Dh. S. I. 5. 123 appears to be similar to Gaut. 14 5-6 Manu V. 79, Yāj. III. 20, Visnu Dh. S. 22. 35-38, Śankha 15. 10, Parāśara III. 28 lay down the general rule promulgated by Gautama 14.5.

Some general rules concerning this topic may first be stated The first rule is that in a conflict between āśauca on death and āśauca on birth, that on death is stronger [657] The 656. सम्पातो नामाशौचिनामेकाशौचित्वज्ञाने पराशौचित्वज्ञानम्। धर्मसिन्धु p 436.

657. अचाना यौगपद्ये तु शुद्धिर्ज्ञेया गरीयसा। मरणोत्पत्तियोगे तु गरीयो मरणं भवेत॥ देवल q by शुद्धिकरण p 31, स्मृतिच. (आशौच) p 57, शुद्धिप्र p 74, and as from कूर्मपुराण by परा मा I 2. p 265; सूतकाद् द्विगुणं शावं शावाद् द्विगुणमार्तवम्। आर्तवाद् द्विगुणा सूति सूतेश्च शवदाहक ॥ लघ्वाश्व (Jiv. vol I p 10) chap V, अङ्गिरस् according to हरदत्त on गौ. 14 5, वृद्धगार्ग्य according to निर्णयसिन्धु p. 539. शावाशौचे समुत्पन्ने

(Continued on the next page)

2nd rule is that if both āśaucas are of the same kind and the second is of the same duration or of lesser duration than the first then a man gets rid of both at the end of the first, but if the second, though of the same kind, has a longer duration than the first, then purification follows at the end of the one that is of longer duration. It has to be remembered that birth and death give rise to āśauca[658] only when they are known by a person.

On this topic there is a good deal of divergence between the views of the followers of the Mitāksarā, of the Gaudas and Maithilas (vide Śuddhiprakāsa pp 74-82, Nirnayasindhu 536-540). Following the Nirnayasindhu it may be said that twelve alternatives are possible, when another āśauca supervenes on an already existing one. They are set out here. (1 & 2) If both āśaucas are due to birth and the second is of the same duration as the first or of lesser duration, then at the end of the first āśauca there is purification from both (Visnu 22.35, Śankha 15 70); (3) If both āśaucas are due to birth and the second one is of longer duration than the first then purification results at the end of the second (Śankha 15.10, Ṣadaśīti 19); (4 and 5) If both āśaucas arise on death and the second is of the same duration as the first or of lesser duration, then at the end of the period of the first āśauca there is purification from both; (6) If both āśaucas arise on death and the second that intervenes is of longer duration than the first then purification results at the end of the second (Sadaśīti 21); (7, 8 and 9) When the firt āśauca is one arising from birth and an āśauca due to deaths intervenes, the āśauca on death must run its full course (i. e. there is no purification by the lapse of the first āśauca due to birth), whether the āśauca for death is of lesser duration than the āśauca on birth, or whether it is of the same or of longer

---

(Continued from the last page)

सूतकं तु यदा भवेत्। शावेन शुध्यते सूतिर्न सूति. शावशोधनी॥ लघुहारीत verse 80, यद्-त्रिदात्मत according to हरदत्त on गौ 14 5 and परा मा. I. 2 p. 264, यदि स्यात्सूतके सूतिर्मरणे वा सूतिमेवेत्। शेषेणैव भवेच्छुद्धिरहः शेषे त्रिरात्रकम्। मरणोत्पत्तियोगे तु मरणेन समाप्यते। कूर्मपुराण (उत्तरार्ध 23 18-19) q by शुद्धिप्र. p 74 (reads द्विरात्रकम्); सूतके मृतकं चेत्स्यान्मृतके त्वथ सूतकम्। तत्राधिकृत्य मृतकं शौचं कुर्याच्च सूतकम्॥ अङ्गिरस् q by परा मा I 2 p 264, मद् पा p 438. This occurs in अग्निपुराण 158 64.

658. समानं लघ्वशौचं तु प्रथमेन समाप्येत्। असमानं द्वितीयेन धर्मराजवचो यथा॥ अग्निपुराण 157. 11-12. This echoes शङ्ख (q. by हारलता p. 65) 'समानाशौचं प्रथमेन...यथा', while परा. मा. I. 2 p. 265 reads शङ्ख as समानाशौचसम्पाते प्रथमेन ... and explains असमानं as दीर्घकालाशौचम्. The reading समानं खलु शौचं तु printed in शुद्धिकल्प. p. 31 makes no sense.

duration (Ṣaḍaśīti 18); (10, 11) If the [659] first āsauca arises on death and the supervening one is due to birth and is of lesser duration than the one on death or of the same duration then both end at the expiration of the first āśauca on death (Ṣaḍaśīti 21); (12) If the first āsauca arises on death and the supervening one arises on birth and is of longer duration, then both run their proper courses (Ṣaḍaśīti 21)

The Dharmasindhu (p 436) generally follows the Nirnayasindhu but remarks: 'Āsauca on death cannot be done away with by āśauca on birth which is of the same or greater duration; āśauca on death of the extent of paksinī cannot get rid of āśauca on birth which is three or ten days in duration and āśauca on birth extending to ten days cannot be got rid of by āsauca on death which is of three days' duration' These are the views of many writers A certain writer says that āsauca on birth though longer in duration can be got rid of by āsauca on death which is of lesser extent

The Mit on Yāj. III. 20 (first half) states an exception to the above rules about āsauca-sannipāta When a person's mother dies and then, while the period of āśauca for the mother's death is not over, the father dies, it does not follow that the āsauca for the father comes to an end with the end of the āsauca for the mother, but the son has to observe the full period of [660] the āsauca for father's death Similarly, if the father died first and then, while the period of āsauca for the father was not over, the mother died, it does not follow that the āsauca for the mother's death comes to an end with the end of the first period of āśauca for the father, but the son after observing the period of the father's āśauca has to observe āsauca for the mother for one paksinī in addition It may be remarked that Aparārka construes this verse differently by stating that if the father dies during the period of āsauca for the death of the mother, then the general rule applies, viz that purification follows at the end of the āśauca for the mother

---

659 जातके नैव मृतकं क्षयं याति न संशय । बृहद्यम IV 20, जातके मृतक या स्यात् तके सूतकं तथा । सूतके मृतके शुद्धिर्मृते शुद्धिस्तु सूतके ॥ लघुहारीत 58

660 तथा सजातीयान्त पातित्वेपि दाश्रय क्वचिदूर्ध्वदेशेन शुद्धेरभाव स्मृत्यन्तरे दर्शित. । मातर्यग्रे प्रमीतायामशौचौ त्रिंयते पिता । पितु शेषेण शुद्धि स्यान्मातु कुर्यात्तु पक्षिणीम् ॥ मिता on या III 20 The verse is ascribed to शातु by अपरार्क p 903, परा मा I 2 p 267, शुद्धिप्रकाश p 76 Verses 24-25 of the पद्धति contain the same idea, नद. पा. p 438 ascribes it to अङ्गिरस्

If, while an āśauca on death is being undergone, an āśauca on birth arises, the father of the child born is able to perform the rites of Jātakarma and the like, because he is to be deemed to be purified for the nonce, according to Prajāpati.[661]

The Sadaśīti (verse 22) provides[662] that the rule about purification on the expiry of the first āśauca in the case of succeeding āśaucas on birth or death has three exceptions, viz. a woman who is delivered of a child, the person who actually cremates the body (of the deceased) and the sons of the deceased; that is, a sūtikā has to observe the proper period of untouchability and one who cremates a dead body has to observe āśauca for ten days, though the delivery or cremation takes place in the midst of an āśauca on death.

SADYAḤ—ŚAUCA (purification on the same day). It has already been seen (p 274) that Dakṣa (VI 2) speaks of ten kinds of impurity on birth or death, the first two of which are sadyaḥ-śauca and ekāha Ekāha means day and night together (vide note 622 above) The ordinary meaning of 'sadyaḥ' is 'at once, immediately.' But when Yāj III. 29, Parāśara III 10, Atri 97 and other smṛtis employ the word 'sadyaḥ-śauca' what is meant is that there is no āśauca for a whole day or three days or ten days, but only up to the taking of a bath or up to the end of the day or the end of the night on which the event occurs Pāṇini[663] mentions 'sadyaḥ' and thirteen other words in one sūtra as nipātas (irregularly formed). From Yāj. III. 23 (ādantajanmanaḥ sadya ācūḍānnaiśikī smṛtā) it impliedly follows that sadyaḥ has the meaning of 'a part of a day or a part of the night' (as the case may be) and 'naiśikī' means a whole day and night (as note 622 shows). The Śuddhitattva

---

661. प्रेतक्रिया पुत्र. सूतकसंनिपातेऽपि न निवर्तत इति तेनोक्तम् (शातातपेन)। तथा शावाशौचयोः सन्निपातेऽपि प्रेतकृत्यं कार्यम्। तुल्यन्यायत्वात्। तथा जातकर्मादिकमपि पुत्रजन्मनिमित्तमाशौचान्तरसन्निपातेऽपि कार्यमेव। तथाह प्रजापतिः। आशौचे तु समुत्पन्ने पुत्रजन्म यदा भवेत्। कर्तुस्तात्कालिकी शुद्धिः पूर्वाशौचेन शुध्यति। निता on या III. 20, मद या p. 439.

662 पूर्वेणैव या शुद्धिः सूतिना मृतिना तथा। सूतिकामग्निदं हित्वा प्रेतस्य च सुतानपि॥ षडशीति 22; this is made clear by the verses of देवल and शातातप quoted by शुद्धिचन्द्रिका on षडशीति 'सूतिकानां भवेच्छुद्धिः कालेनैव रजः क्षये। नाशौचान्तरपातेन सूतके मृतकेऽपि च। सपिण्डानां तु य. काश्चिद्दहेत वा। तस्याशौचं दशाहं तु नाभ्याशौचेन शुध्यति॥'

663 सद्य:परुत्परारैषम. परेद्यव्यद्यपूर्वेद्युरन्येद्युरन्यतरेद्युरितरेद्युरपरेद्युरधरेद्युरुभयेद्युरुत्तरेद्यु: या V. 3,22. 'समानस्य सभावो यस् चाहनि' is वार्तिक on the सूत्र. The महाभाष्य explains 'समानेऽहनि सद्य'

(pp. 340–341) explains [664] 'sadyaḥ' as meaning 'a portion of the day or of the night' and cites several authorities in support The Śuddhiprakāśa (p 92) explains that 'sadyahśauca' in some contexts means 'absence of āsauca,' while in others it means 'bath' and with reference to those killed in battle and the like (to whom piṇḍas have to be offered) it means 'a part of the day or of the night.' The Smṛtimuktāphala [665] (āsaucakāṇḍa) p 481 says that 'sadyaḥsauca' means 'impurity that comes to an end by a bath' That piṇḍas have to be offered to those about whom there is 'sadyahśauca' is stated by the Ādipurāna [666] According to the Śuddhikaumudī (p 73) 'sadyahsauca' has two meanings, viz. (1) the entire absence of āśauca as in the cases of sacrificial priests &c (Yāj III. 28), (2) āśauca that is removed by a mere bath (as in Manu V. 76)

The rules about āśauca for several days do not operate in five classes of cases, viz certain persons are exempted altogether, certain activities of certain persons who would ordinarily be untouchable owing to āśauca are allowed without causing pollution, certain articles can be taken by anybody without fear of pollution from those who are affected by āśauca, no asauca is to be observed for certain deceased persons owing to their faults, in the case of certain persons express texts say that no āsauca need be observed for them These five classes will briefly be dealt with in order In the principal texts these five classes of cases are rather mixed up. In the Viṣnupurāna III. 13 7 it is provided that there is sadyaḥśauca on the death of a child, or of a person dying in another country, of a patita, or of an ascetic or on the death of a person committing suicide by water, fire or hanging Vide also Gaut 14 11 and 42 and Vāmanapurāna 14.99.

---

664 अत्र सद्य पदमहोरात्रार्धपरम्। द्वे सन्ध्ये सद्य इत्याहुस्त्रिसन्ध्यैकाहिक स्मृत । द्वावहोरात्रेकरात्रिश्च पक्षिणीत्यभिधीयते ॥ इति भट्टनारायणवचनात्। द्वे सन्ध्ये सद्य इत्याहुस्त्रिसन्ध्यैकाह उच्यते । दिनद्वयैकरात्रिस्तु पक्षिणीत्यभिधीयते इति नन्यवर्धमानपूतवचनाच्च। सद्य एकाहिनाशौचमिति पारिजाते सद्य एकाहेनेति स्मृतिसारे। एकस्मात् सद्य इति शुद्धिप्रकाशे दर्शनाच्चेति। तद्यार्ध दिनमात्रं रात्रिमात्रं च। एतदेव क्वचित् सद्योति पदेन व्यपदिश्यते। शुद्धितत्त्व pp 340–341. शुद्धिप्रकाश p 93 states that the verse द्वे सन्ध्ये सद्यः occurs in the गोभिलभाष्य of नारायणभट्ट.

665 सद्य शौचं नाम स्नानान्तमवम्। सद्य शौचे तु तावत्स्यादाहश्चं संनिधनरद तु। यावत्स्नान न कुर्वन्ति सचैलं वान्धवा यहि ॥ इत्यङ्गिर स्मरणात्। स्मृतिषु p 481

666 दिवसे दिवसे पिण्डो देय एवं क्रमेण तु। सद्यःशौचेपि दातव्या सर्वेषि युगपत्तया॥ आदिपुराण q. by हारलता p. 165 The latter half is cited as from ब्रह्मपुराण by रघुनाथ on त्रिंशच्छ्लोकी verse 28 p. 249 It is not unlikely that the ब्रह्मपुराण which is mentioned in several works as the first of the 18 पुराणs was therefore called आदिपुराण.

Yāj. (III. 28–29) prescribes that there is sadyaḥśauca (purification after a bath) in case of birth or death (of a sapinda) for priests chosen for a sacrifice (after they are offered Madhuparka), for those who have undergone dīkṣā for a vedic sacrifice (like Somayāga) and those who are engaged in performing the constituent parts of a Vedic sacrifice, those who continuously distribute food at a charity house, those who are engaged in prāyaścittas like cāndrāyana or the vows of snātakas, for brahmacārins (when performing the duties of their āśrama), for persons who everyday make gifts of a cow, gold etc (at the time of making the gift), for those who have realized Brahman (ascetics); there is sadyaḥśauca at gifts (when once begun), at marriage, in a Vedic sacrifice, in battle (for those who are about to be engaged in it), when there is commotion in a country (through invasion), and in a severe calamity (like famine when one can accept food from any body). Gaut. (14. 43–44) says that there is sadyaḥśauca in the case of kings as otherwise there will be obstacles in their duties and also in the case of brāhmanas in order to prevent the cessation of their duties of teaching. Śaṅkhalikhita say the same 'Rāja dharmāyatanam sarvesām tasmādanavaruddhaḥ pretaprasavadosaiḥ' (Śuddhikalpataru p. 62). It is stated in Manu V. 93 that kings,[667] those engaged in vratas and sattras (like Gavām-ayana) are not liable to undergo the blemish of aśauca, because they (kings) occupy the position of Indra (ruler) and are like Brahma (which is free from all taint) and Manu V. 94 clinches the matter further by observing 'sadyaḥśauca is ordained for the position of a king which can be obtained only by great merit (in past lives) for the sake of the protection of the subjects and the reason of this (rule) is the position that he occupies.' Similarly, Gobhilasmrti[668]

667. न राज्ञामधदोषोस्ति व्रतिना न च सत्रिणाम्। ऐन्द्रं स्थानमुपासीना ब्रह्मभूता हि ते सदा॥ राज्ञो माहात्म्यके स्थाने सद्य शौचं विधीयते। प्रजानां परिरक्षार्थमासन्नं चात्र कारणम्॥ मनु V. 93–94. The first verse is the same as Vasistha 19.48 (Furher's text is corrupt, which must be corrected into नाघदोषोस्ति) which cites it as Yama's. It is the position that he holds that renders the king (whether a ksatriya, brāhmana or śūdra) free from aśauca The विष्णुधर्मसूत्र (22. 47–52) restricts the absence of aśauca by saying 'kings are free from aśauca when they are performing the duties of a king (such as administration of justice)': 'न राज्ञां राजकर्मणि न व्रतिनां व्रते न सत्रिणां सत्रे न कारूणां स्वकर्मणि न राजाज्ञाकारिणां तद्विक्लवया।'

668 न स्पर्शेत्सूतके कर्म ब्रह्मचारी स्वक क्वचित्। न दीक्षणात्परं यज्ञे न कृच्छ्रादि तपश्चरन्॥ पितर्यपि मृते नैषां दोषो भवति कर्हिचित्। गोभिलस्मृति III. 64–65 q. by हारलता p. 107, अपरार्क p 919, शुद्धिकल्प. p 64.

(III. 64–65, often quoted as Chandogaparisista of Kātyāyana) states 'in a sūtaka, a brahmacārin should not give up his peculiar duties (Veda study and vratas), a sacrificer his various actions (required) in a sacrifice after he has undergone dīksā, one who is practising penance should not give up krcchra and the like; these do not incur impurity even on the death of their father (or mother)' The Kūrmapurāna[669] provides 'no impurity is declared on death in the case of perpetual or temporary brahmacārins, forest hermits or ascetics'. Similar rules are given by Atri 97–98, Linga-purāna, pūrvabhāga, chap. 89.77. The Mit. on Yāj III. 28 remarks that in the case of the three āśramas of brahmacārin, vānaprastha and yati there is freedom from impurity in all cases and at all times; ascetics and brahmacārins have to undergo a bath with clothes on the death of their father or mother (Dharmasindhu p. 442); in the case of several others such as those who are continually making gifts or are observing vratas there is freedom from impurity only when they are engaged in those particular actions and not when they are engaged in any action whatever or when they mix up among others for everyday work.[670] Similar rules occur in Parāśara III.21–22. It has already been stated following Manu V. 91 (= Visnu 22.86) that a brahmacārin was not to perform the last rites (of carrying the corpse, cremation) for anybody except for five persons (viz. his parents, upādhyāya, ācārya and guru) He did not incur āśauca by performing the funeral rites of his parents and offering water and pinda to them. But if he did so for any one other than the five mentioned by Manu he had to observe āśauca for ten days, and to undergo prāyaścitta and had his upanayana performed again. A brahmacārin had to observe after samāvartana (returning from the Vedic teacher) āśauca for three days for all relatives that died during the period of his studenthood (Manu V. 88, Visnu Dh. S. 22.87). Gautama (14. 42–44) says generally[671] that on the death of children (before the appearance of teeth or before Cūḍā), of those who are separated by a country, of ascetics and of those who are not sapindas, the relatives are purified by only a bath; so also there is sadyahśauca for kings, for otherwise there would be conflict with their duty (of protecting the subjects) and for a brāhmana also in order that there may be no cessation of Vedic study.[672] The Śuddhiprakāśa (p. 93) remarks that though there is no āśauca (as stated by Yāj III. 28) yet a sacrificial priest and a dīksita had to bathe on the death of a sapinda, a brahmacārin also would have to take a bath if he followed the funeral procession of his father or mother &c, but an ascetic would not have even to bathe and that usage was the same in its day.

669. नैष्ठिकाना व्रतस्थाना यतीना ब्रह्मचारिणाम्। नाशौचं कीर्तितं सद्भि. पतिते च तथा सुते॥ कूर्मपुराण (उत्तरार्ध) 23 61 q by hāralatā p. 114, parā mā I 2 p. 254. देवल has almost the same verse, नैष्ठिकाना ..शौच सूतके प्रोक्त शावे चापि तथैव च॥ q. by parā. mā I. 2 p. 254, निर्णयसिन्धु p. 543 A similar verse occurs in लिङ्ग-पुराण (पूर्वार्ध) chap 89 77.

670 सत्रिणां व्रतिना सत्रे व्रते च शुद्धिर्न कर्ममात्रे संव्यवहारे वा।.. ब्रह्मविद्याति.। एतेषां च त्रयाणमाश्रमिणा सर्वत्र शुद्धि.। विशेषे प्रमाणाभावात्। मिता on या. III 28.

671. बालदेशान्तरितमव्रजितासपिण्डाना सद्यःशौचम्। राज्ञां च कार्यविरोधात्। ब्राह्मणस्य च स्वाध्यायनिवृत्त्यर्थम्। गौ 14 42–44 पराशर III. 10 and वामनपुराण 14.99–100 contain verses almost in the same words as the first sūtra.

The second class of exceptions refers to cases where certain persons, though they have incurred āśauca, are allowed to do certain acts or carry on their activities without bringing pollution to those with whom they deal or come in contact. For example, Parāśara (III. 20–21) says; 'craftsmen (such as those who draw pictures or washermen), workers (cooks and the like), physicians, male and female slaves, barbers, kings and śrotriyas are declared to be sadyahśauca, as also one observing a vrata (cāndrāyana &c.), one purified by being engaged in a sattra (such as Gavām-ayana), a brāhmana who has established śrauta fires; the king has not to observe āśauca and also any one (such as his purohita) whom the king for his own purpose desires not to observe it' The Ādipurāna[673] gives the reason why craftsmen, physicians and others were allowed not to observe āśauca when engaged in their peculiar tasks, viz. what these people do cannot be done by any one else at all or at least so well or so easily.

---

672 शिल्पिनः कारुका वैद्या दासीदासाश्च नापिता । राजान श्रोत्रियाश्चैव सद्य:शौचाः प्रकीर्तिता. ॥ सत्रतः सत्रपूतश्च आहिताग्निश्च यो द्विजः । राज्ञश्च सूतकं नास्ति यस्य चेच्छति पार्थिवः ॥ पराशर III.20–21,

673 तथा चादिपुराणे। शिल्पिनश्चित्रकाराद्या' कर्म यत्साधयन्त्यलम्। तत्कर्म नान्यो जानाति तस्माच्छुद्धा स्वकर्मणि। सूपकारेण यत्कर्म करणीयं नरेन्द्रिह। तदन्यो नैव जानाति तस्माच्छुद्धः स सूपकृत्॥ चिकित्सको यत्कुरुते तदन्येन न शक्यते। तस्माच्चिकित्सक. स्पर्शे शुद्धो भवति नित्यश॥ दास्यो दासाश्च यत्किंचित् कुर्वन्त्यपि च लीलया। तदन्यो न क्षम. कर्तुं तस्मात्ते शुचय सदा॥ राजा करोति यत्कर्म स्वमेऽप्यन्यस्य तत्कथम्। एवं सति नृपः शुद्धः संस्पर्शे सूतसूतके॥ यत्कर्म राजभृत्यानां हस्त्यश्वगमनादिकम्। तत्तस्ति यस्मादन्यस्य तस्मात्ते शुचय स्मृता॥ q. by परा मा I 2. pp 255–256 Three of these from सूपकारेण are quoted as from ब्रह्मपुराण by हारलता p 110, as from आदिपुराण by शुद्धितत्त्व pp. 289–90 and all from सूपकारेण onwards are quoted from आदिपुराण by शुद्धिप्र p 95, the verse चिकित्सको० is q. by मिता. on या III. 27.

It has [674] to be noted that the absence of āśauca in the case of craftsmen, physicians and the like has to be restricted to the peculiar activities of these and does not extend to all actions such as religious rites, śrāddhas and gifts This is clear from the words of the Viṣnudharmasūtra [675] 22. 48–52. The Trimśacchloki (verse 18) [676] gives a long list of such peculiar activities The Kūrmapurāna (Uttarārdha 23 57–64) has nine verses on this topic which are quoted by the Hāralatā (p. 114).

It has already been seen (pp 238–240) that Pār gr. III 10 (nityāni vinivartante vaitānavarjam), Manu V. 84, Yāj III. 17 (latter half) provide that even those who have to undergo āśauca on death should not stop rites to be performed with śrauta fires, but should perform them themselves or get them performed through others. Thus certain religious rites were allowed to be done even by those who were āśaucin.

The Dharmasindhu (p 552) emphasizes that this exception to āśauca should be availed of only when there is no other alternative or in a season of distress.

It has already been stated how certain materials and things can be received without any pollution from those who are undergoing āśauca. That is the third class of cases which are exceptions to the rules of āśauca.

The fourth class of cases where rules of āśauca do not apply relate to persons deceased to whom some fault or taint attaches. Gaut. (14. 11) [677] and Śankha-Likhita provide that there is sadyahśauca for those who kill themselves (i. e. commit suicide) by starting on the great journey (to the Himālaya), by fasting, by a weapon (like a dagger), by fire or poison or water or by hanging or by falling down from a precipice.

---

674. अयं चाशौचाभावस्तत्तदसाधारणकर्मण्यसृष्टयत्वप्रतिषेधरूपो बोध्य, न तु सर्वेषु दानश्राद्धादिधर्मकृत्येष्वाशौचाभाव। शुद्धिप्र p 95.

675. (आशौच) न राज्ञां राजकर्मणि। न व्रतिना व्रते। न सत्रिणा सत्रे। न कारिणां कारुकर्मणि। न राजाज्ञाकारिणा तदिच्छया। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22 48–52.

676. तत्तत्कार्येषु सत्रिव्रतिनृपनृपदीक्षितस्त्रिकृत्स्वदेशश्रेशापत्स्वध्वनेकश्रुतिपठनभिषङ्नाक्षशिल्पानुराणाम्। संभारध्वेषु दानोपनयनयजनश्राद्धयुद्धप्रतिष्ठाचूडातीर्थार्थयात्राजपपरिणयनाद्युत्सवेष्वेतदर्थे॥ त्रिशच्छोकी 18. नृपवत् means नृपसेवक.

677. For गौ 14 11 vide note 522 above, प्रायाग्निविषोदकोद्बन्धनप्रपतनैश्चेच्छताम्। अथ शस्त्रानाशकाग्निरज्जु-भूयु-जल-विषमापणेष्वेवमेव। शङ्खलिखितौ q. by हारलता p. 113; भूम्वाग्निपाशकाम्भोभिर्मृतानामात्मघातिनाम्। पतितान च नाशौचं विद्युच्चन्द्रहताश्च ये॥ अग्निपुराण 157.32. Vide वामनपुराण 14 99–100

Yāj. III. 6 provides [678] that women that have gone over to heterodox views and practices, that do not belong to any particular āśrama, that are thieves (of gold and the like), that (attempt to) kill their husbands, that are unchaste and the like, that drink liquor and that attempt suicide, do not deserve to have water offered to them (on death) and no āśauca should be observed for them. This verse applies to men also as far as possible. Manu V. 89–90 are to the same effect. The Kūrmapurāna also prescribes [679] that for him who kills himself by means of fire, poison and the like, no āśauca, no cremation and no offering of water is prescribed, there is no cremation for patitas, nor antyesti nor collection of bones, no shedding of tears and no pinda and no śrāddha should be performed for them. It is provided by Angiras quoted by Mit. on Yāj III. 6 that 'death results to evil-minded men from cāndālas (with whom a quarrel is purposely got up), from water, from a snake, from a brāhmana, from lightning and from animals that have sharp fangs (like tigers). If water and pinda are offered to such people (who die wilfully in these cases) they (water and pinda) do not reach them and perish in mid air.' These verses refer to death in a wrathful fight with tigers, snakes and the like or suicide in water through wrath or sorrow. But, if one died in water or by fire through inadvertence or negligence, then Angiras [680] himself provides that water should be offered and āśauca should be observed. Long passages are quoted from the Brahmapurāna by Haradatta on Gaut. 14. 11, Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 56–57, Nirnayasindhu p. 550, which elaborate the same ideas as those of Yāj. III. 6, Angiras and others and wind up by stating that if any one offers water or śrāddha to patitas through affection or cremates them, he has to undergo prāyaścitta (viz. two Taptakrcchras).

---

678. For या. III 6 read p 222 above अपरार्क reads 'पाषण्डानाश्रिता' and explains 'पाषण्डान्बौद्धादीनाश्रिता तद्दीक्षायां मविदा', while the मिता० reads पाखण्डश्चनाश्रिता: and makes two different classes

679. पतितानां न दाहः; vide note 522 above; the अग्निपुराण (159. 2–4) states 'आत्मनस्त्यागिना नास्ति पतितानां तथा क्रिया। तेषामपि तथा नाङ्गे तोयेऽस्थ्नां पतनं स्मृतम्। तेषां दत्तं जलं चार्कं गगने तत्प्रलीयते। अनुग्रहेण महता प्रेतस्य पतितस्य च। नारायणबलिः कार्यस्तेनाऽनुग्रहमश्नुते॥'

680. यादे कश्चित्प्रमादेन म्रियेताम्भसुदकादिभिः। तस्याशौचं विधातव्यं कर्तव्या चोदकक्रिया॥ अङ्गिरस् q. by मिता. on या III 6 A similar verse is औशनसस्मृति (Jiv. vol I p 540), chap. VII.

If an āhitāgni were killed by cāndālas in defiant fight with them or commits suicide, his corpse should be got cremated by śūdras without proper mantras and Gobhilasmrti (III. 49–51) provides for the disposal of his srauta fires and sacrificial implements Though suicide was generally condemned, the smrtis (such as Atri 218–219) and Purānas allowed certain exceptions, viz. very old men (above 70), very weak men who cannot observe the rules of bodily purification or those who have no desire left for the pleasures of the senses or who have carried out all tasks and duties, may start on Mahāprasthāna or die at Prayāga Vide H of Dh vol. II pp 926–928 for detailed treatment of this topic If a man killed himself in the way allowed by the śāstra then there was no blemish and āsauca had to be observed and water and śrāddha had to be offered. It may be noted that starting on Mahāprasthāna and suicide on the part of old men by falling down from a precipice or in fire are forbidden in the Kali age. Vide H of Dh. vol. III p. 939 and pp. 958–959

The Mit on Yāj. III. 6 quotes Vrddha-Yājñavalkya and Chāgaleya to the effect that in the case of those who commit suicide in any manner that is not sanctioned by the śāstras, Nārāyanabali should be performed one year after their death and then the rites of śrāddha may be performed thereafter. The Mit.[681] on Yāj. III. 6) relying on Visnupurāna describes the Nārāyanabali as follows On the 11th day of the bright half of a month, having worshipped Visnu and Yama, one should with the face to the south offer near them on darbhas with ends turned towards the south ten pindas laved with honey and ghee and mixed with sesame after bringing to mind the deceased[682] who should be looked upon as having the form of Visnu and having uttered the name and gotra of the deceased; he should honour the pindas with sandalwood paste and the rest and having performed all the rites up to the removal of pindas, should cast them in a river and not give them to the wife or to others Then on the night of the same day he should invite an uneven number of brāhmanas, should observe a fast, should worship Visnu the next day, in the noon he should perform all the rites from washing the feet of brāhmanas up to the query about the gratification of the brāhmanas (by the food served to them) according to the procedure of ekoddista śrāddha, then he should silently go through all the rites from ullekhana (drawing lines) up to avanejana (anointing) by the procedure of Pinda-pitryajña He should offer four pindas to (images of) Visnu, Brahmā, Śiva and Yama together with the attendants, should remember the deceased by name and gotra, should utter the name of Visnu and then offer the 5th pinda Then having gratified the brāhmanas (after they have sipped water) with fee, he should bring to his mind one (of the brāhmanas) that is the most qualified of all as representing the deceased and having gratified him to the utmost with the gifts of cows, land and money, should then make the brāhmanas that have pavitras on their hands offer to the deceased water together with sesame and should then take his meal along with his relatives.

681 एवं नारायणबलि प्रेतस्य शुद्ध्यापादनद्वारेण श्राद्धादिसंपदानत्वे योग्यतां जनयतीति और्ध्वदेहिकमपि सर्वं कार्यमेव। अत एव षट्त्रिंशन्मतेऽपि और्ध्वदेहिकस्याग्यतज्ञा दृश्यते। गोब्राह्मणहताना च पतिताना तथैव च। ऊर्ध्वं संवत्सरात्कुर्यात्सर्वमेवौर्ध्वदेहिकम् ॥ इति। एवं संवत्सराद्ध्वमेव नारायणबलिं कृत्वौर्ध्वदेहिकं कार्यम्। मिता on या III. 6 The same provisions are recommended by परा मा. I 2 pp 226–227, स्मृतिमु p 489 Vide गरुड, प्रेतखण्ड, 40 15-65 for नारायणबलि

682. The सङ्कल्प will be अमुकगोत्रस्यामुकस्य दुर्मरणात्मघातजदोषनाशार्थमौर्ध्वदेहिकसंपदानत्वयोग्यतासिद्ध्यर्थं नारायणबलिं करिष्य इति सकल्प्य। निर्णयसिन्धु p. 559.

The passage quoted by the Mit. makes it clear that Nārāyanabali is meant only for those who commit suicide and is to be offered one year after the death of the person guilty of suicide. The Hāralatā[683] (p. 212) also says the same and explains a verse of Visnu extending the performance of Nārāyanabali to those killed by cows and brāhmanas and those who become patita as a usage restricted to a certain country only.[684]

The Antyestipaddhati of Nārāyanabhatta describes (on folio 187) Nārāyanabali rite at greater length than in the Mitāksarā. One or two details may be pointed out. Five kalaśas (jars) are to be placed over a quantity of rice or yavas, then filled with water, then have the three mantras 'Apo hi sthā'

683 आत्मघातिन इत्यभिधानात् आत्मघातकमात्रस्यैवेदं विधानं न तु महापातक्यादौ नामिति दर्शयति। विष्णु.। गोब्राह्मणहतानां च पतितानां तथैव च। ऊर्ध्वं संवत्सरात्कुर्यात् सर्वमेवौर्ध्वदेहिकम् ॥ एतच्च देशविशेषव्यवस्थितमिति आदिपुराणवचन एवोक्तं न तु दास्या पत्तोयदाननारायणबलिदानयो. प्रथमसंवत्सराभ्यन्तरविषयत्वं व्यवस्थाप्यम्। हारलता p 212. A long passage is quoted from आदिपुराण in हारलता pp 203-205, the last verses of which are. क्रियते पतितानां तु गते संवत्सरे क्वचित्। देशधर्ममप्रमाणत्वात् गयाकूपेषु वप्नुभिः। मार्तण्डपादमूले वा श्राद्धं हरिहरं स्मरन्।

684. Nārāyanabali is described in the Appendix B to the Sholapur District Gazetteer in Bom. Gaz vol. XX. pp. 522-523.

(Rg. X 9. 1–3) repeated over them, then copper plates are to be placed over them on which five images of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Yama and the deceased are to be drawn and the worship of these five is to be performed respectively with the Puruṣa-sūkta (Rg. X. 90), Rg. X. 121 1–10, Rg. I. 43. 1 (= Tai. Ā. X. 17), Rg X. 14. 13 and the name and gotra of the deceased, sixteen oblations of cooked rice are to be offered to Nārāyaṇa with the sixteen verses of the Puruṣasūkta (Rg X. 90). Ten pindas[685] are to be offered on darbhas to the deceased after repeating his name and gotra (as stated in the note below). After the ten pindas are cast in a river, there is tarpaṇa of the deceased sixteen times with the sixteen stanzas of the Puruṣa-sūkta. Then bali is offered separately to Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Śiva and Yama with his servants.

In the Mitāksarā, there is no homa nor bali, both of which are described in the Āntyeṣṭipaddhati and the Smṛtyarthasāra (pp. 85–86) copies verbatim the procedure given in the Mit. Bṛhatparāśara (V. pp. 175–176) contains the same procedure that is set out by the Mit. from the Viṣṇupurāna. The Nirṇaya-sindhu first describes Nārāyaṇabali as gathered from Hemādri and the Garuḍapurāna (III. 4. 113–119) It then describes Nārāyaṇabali to be performed for a deceased ascetic on the 12th day (along with Pārvaṇaśrāddha), following the procedure laid down by Baudhāyana. It then describes another form of Nārāyaṇabali based on Śaunaka which is meant for all those who commit suicide or who are killed by cāṇḍālas, [686] snakes, lightning, animals with fangs or who die in a distant land or for ascetics and yogins. The Vṛddha-Hāritasmṛti (IX. 123–143) describes another method of Nārāyaṇabali for devotees of Viṣṇu.

The Vaikhānasa-smārtasūtra (X. 9) sets out a rather brief procedure of Nārāyaṇabali which was intended for the benefit of men who committed suicide or were slain and for ascetics and provides that the same may be performed for those guilty of mahāpātakas after twelve years from their death. The

---

685. अर्चितदेवसमीपे अमुकगोत्रायामुकशर्मणे प्रेताय विष्णुरूपिणेऽयं विष्णु – इति मधुघृताक्तांस्तिलमिश्रान्दश पिण्डान् विष्णुरूपिण प्रेतमनुस्मरन् प्रेतस्य नामगोत्रे उच्चार्य दक्षिणाग्रेषु दर्भेषु दक्षिणामुखोऽपसव्येन दत्त्वा। ततः पुरुषसूक्तेन प्रेतस्य नामगोत्रे उक्त्वा अमुकं नारायणरूपं तर्पयामीति षोडशवार तर्पयेत्मन्त्रचम्। अन्त्येष्टिपद्धति

686. चाण्डालाद्वुदकात्सर्पाद्ब्राह्मणाद्वैद्युतादपि। दंष्ट्रिभ्यश्च पशुभ्यश्च मरणं पापकर्मिणाम्॥ कौ गृ शेषसूत्र III. 21. The same is q. by अपरार्क p 877 as यम's, as स्मृत्यन्तर by श्राद्धम. p. 56 and without name by the मिता. on या. III. 6.

Baudhāyana-gṛhya-śesasūtra III. 20 and 21 contain two different sets of the procedure of Nārāyaṇabali, the latter of which appears to be the later one. The latter contains the well-known verse about death at the hands of cāṇḍālas, from a snake &c.

The 5th class of exceptions to āśauca rules comprises those that are declared by express texts as not liable to observe an āśauca. Gautama (14. 8–10) provides[687] that (the sapiṇḍas) of those that met death for the sake of cows and brāhmaṇas, of those that met death through the wrath of the king and those that were killed in battle have to observe no āśauca but only 'sadyahśauca'. Manu V. 95 and 98 state[688] that (the sapiṇḍas) of those that are killed in a sudden affray or by lightning or by the king (for an offence) or of those that met death in protecting cows and brāhmaṇas and of one who was killed in the fashion of ksatriyas in a battle by the sword have to observe no āśauca, as also he whom the king desires (for his purpose) to observe no āśauca. It is provided by Śātātapa[689] that as regards a yati dying, his sons and other sapiṇḍas are not to offer water or piṇḍa to him or to observe āśauca for him. The Dharmasindhu (p. 449) says that this applies to all ascetics, whether they be tridaṇḍin or ekadaṇḍin, haṁsas or paramahaṁsas. So also on the death of a vānaprastha there is no āśauca. In the case of one who has performed his own śrāddha while alive his sapiṇḍas have an option either to observe āśauca or not. On the death of a brahmacārin āśauca is to be observed. The Dharmasindhu further notes that in all works it is stated that there is no āśauca[690] for one killed in battle, but at least

---

687. गोब्राह्मणहतानामन्वक्षम्। राजकोधाच्च। युद्धे। गौ. 14 8–10. हरदत्त explains 'अन्वक्ष्यते मृत्यक्ष्यते शवस्तावत्संस्कारान्ते स्नात्वा शुध्येरन्निति', while the मिता on या III 21 (first half) explains 'तत्सम्बन्धिनां चान्वक्षमनुगतमक्षमन्वक्षं सद्य शौचमित्यर्थः'. The मिताक्षरा takes the corresponding passage of Yāj III 21 (first half) to mean 'of those that were killed by the king, by bulls or brāhmanas'. The मिता० reads राजकोधाच्चायुद्धे, while हरदत्त says that he does not like to read अयुद्धे but would read आयुद्धे.

688 डिम्बाहवे हतानां च विद्युता पार्थिवेन च। गोब्राह्मणस्य चैवार्थे यस्य चेच्छति पार्थिव॥ मनु V. 95 डिम्बाहव is explained by कुल्लूक and हारलता (p 111) as 'नृपतिरहितं युद्धं,' while हरदत्त takes डिम्ब to mean जनसंमर्द and अपरार्क p 916 explains डिम्बाहव as अशस्त्रकलह and शुद्धिकल्पतरु as अशस्त्रकलहः संमर्दो वा (p 46).

689. एकोद्दिष्टं जलं पिण्डमाशौचं प्रेतसत्क्रियाम्। न कुर्यात्पार्वणादन्यद् ब्रह्मीभूताय भिक्षवे॥ शातातप स्मृतिच. (आशौच) p 171 ascribes this to वसिष्ठ.

690. युद्धमृतेष्वाशौचं नेति सर्वग्रन्थेषूपलभ्यते न त्वेवं ब्राह्मणेषु शिष्टाचार इति। धर्मसिन्धु p 449.

among brāhmanas (i. e. as to brāhmanas killed in battle) th usage of the śiṣṭas is different (i. e. āśauca is observed).

Parāśara (III. 12–13) provides that, if a man has gone for many years to a distant land and it is ascertained that he died there but the exact date of his death is not known, then either of three tithis viz. the 8th or 11th day of the dark half or the amāvāsyā should be accepted as the day of his death and water, pinda and śrāddha should be offered on that date and the Par. M. I. 2 p. 237 adds that āśauca also must be calculated from that date. On the other hand Laghu-Hārita says that if there is some obstacle at the time of a śrāddha or when the date of death is not known, then the funeral rites should be performed on the 11th tithi of the following dark half (Śuddhikaumudī p. 17)

The digests lay particular emphasis on the fact that in matters of āśauca the usages of a country must be observed. The Hāralatā (pp. 55, 205) quotes passages from the Ādipurāna where special reference is made to the authority of the usages of a country (deśa-dharmapramānatvāt). The Śuddhitattva p. 275 quotes[691] a verse of Marīci 'one should not disregard the manner of observing śauca and religious usages that are current in particular localities; the dharma is of that sort alone in those localities'. On p. 276 it quotes a passage of the Vāmanapurāna to the same effect.

It deserves to be noted that Daksa[692] (VI. 15) states that all rules about āśauca apply when the times are easy and peaceful but when a man is overwhelmed by distress there is no (enforcement or application) of the (rules of) āśauca.

Visnu (19. 18–19) provides[693] that at the end of the period of āśauca one should go out of the village, get himself shaved and take a bath after applying a thick paste of sesame or white mustard to the body, change garments and then re-enter the house. Then he should perform a śānti (propitiatory rite)

691 तथा च मरीचिः। येषु स्थानेषु यच्छौचं धर्माचारश्च यादृश। तत्र तत्तावन्मन्येत धर्मस्तत्रैव तादृश ॥ कल्पतरु in शुद्धिविवेक (D C. ms No 309 of 1887–91, folio 77 b), शु. कौ p 360, शुद्धितत्त्व p. 275, "तथा च वामनपुराणं 'देशाचाराश्रित कुलधर्मसमन्वित स्वगोत्रधर्मं न हि सत्यजेच्च" शुद्धितत्त्व p. 276.

692 स्वस्थकाले तथा सर्वं सूतकं परिकीर्तितम्। आपद्ग्रस्तस्य सर्वस्य सूतकेऽपि न सूतकम् ॥ दक्ष VI 15.

693. ग्रामाद्विनिष्क्रम्याशौचान्ते कृतशमश्रुकर्माणस्तिलकल्कै सर्षपकल्कैर्वा स्नाता. परिवर्तितवाससो गृहं प्रविशेयु । तत्र शान्तिं कृत्वा ब्राह्मणानां च पूजनं कुर्युः । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 19.18–19 and honour brāhmaṇas. Many medieval digests provide for a more elaborate procedure. For example, the Śuddhikaumudī (pp. 155–164) sets out the procedure of the 11th day separately for the followers of the three Vedas. A few salient points may be mentioned. After a bath for the whole body, the sapiṇḍas should touch a cow, gold, fire, dūrvā, clarified butter and repeat the name of Govinda, then engage brāhmaṇas to sprinkle śānti water over them and say 'svasti'. If a brāhmaṇa cannot be had one should himself perform śānti. The Hāralatā and others say that without śānti water āśauca is not completely removed. The followers of Sāmaveda should sing the Vāmadevagāna for śānti or should repeat the four Vāmadevya verses viz. 'kayā naścitra,' 'kastvā satyo,' 'abhī sū naḥ' (No. 682–684 of the Sāmaveda) together with the last verse of the Sāmaveda ('svasti na Indro') preceded and followed by the sacred Gāyatrī; these form the śānti mantras for Sāmavedins. For followers of Yajurveda seventeen mantras beginning with 'roam vācam prapadye' and ending with 'dyauḥ śāntiḥ', preceded and followed by the Gāyatrī form the śānti mantras; the Ṛgvedins should employ for śānti Ṛg. X. 9. 4, VII, 35. 1, V. 47. 7 &c. preceded and followed by the Gāyatrī. Then some gold with silver as dakṣiṇā should be donated to a brāhmaṇa, then the Vaitaraṇī cow should be donated, if one was not given at the approach of death, then a gift of the bedstead &c. should be made.

We have seen (p. 270) that originally the sūtras (like Śān Śr.) and smṛtis (like Manu) emphasized that one should not increase the number of the days of āśauca and that men learned in the Veda and consecrating śrauta fires had to undergo only one day's āśauca (Parāśara III. 5, Dakṣa VI. 6). But ultimately a fiat period of ten days of āśauca (Manu V. 59) for all sapiṇḍas came to be prescribed. In the old days the means of communication were very limited, and hence the news of a birth or death must have taken considerable time to reach relatives staying even at a short distance and hence the restrictions imposed by the rules of āśauca were not felt to be very irksome It is on account of this reason and also the great penchant of dharmaśāstra writers for all sorts of divisions, sub-divisions and classifications that we find medieval writers bestowing an enormously exaggerated attention in very exuberant and enthusiastic style on such a subject as āśauca Most nations have their own usages to indicate that a person (male or female) or a family is in mourning. But probably no country in the world can equal (much less surpass) the Dharmaśāstra writers in the elaborate rules evolved in books about āśauca on birth and death. In these days when there is a State postal system and the means of communication abound owing to railways, air-mail, telegraph and wireless, the ancient and medieval rules of āśauca are felt by all people to be most galling and troublesome Mischievous people sometimes create trouble in the celebration of marriages by sending information about a death or a birth to persons against whom they have a grudge. Devices have to be employed for dodging the inconvenience due to rules of āśauca. It is therefore necessary to introduce substantial changes in the rules about āśauca that will prevent trouble, loss of time and work and would at the same time be more or less in agreement with the spirit of the dicta of the smṛtis and the sentiments of most common people. At the end in the appendix note 693a is added which gives the text of the Āśauca-daśaka with Sanskrit explanation.

As regards āśauca on birth I would recommend that hereafter in the changed set-up of society in these days one simple rule should be observed, viz. it is only the mother that has to observe impurity for ten days and no one else has to observe impurity on birth. This is in general accordance with the ancient smṛtis set out above.

As regards impurity on death four rules should ordinarily suffice.[693a]

(1) Āśauca for ten days on death should be observed by the father and the mother for the son and by the son for the parents, by the wife for the husband and vice versa and by one who performs the rites of cremation and the rites after death.

(2) For others (than the above) staying near the deceased as members of a joint family āśauca for only three days should suffice.

(3) For all other relatives of the deceased whenever the news of death may reach them within a year after death, only a bath should be enough.

(4) When the death occurred more than a year before the news reached the relatives not even a bath should be required in the case of any relative except those mentioned in the first rule, who should be held clean after a bath.

---

693 a. Vide appendix.

Practices observed among ancient and modern primitive tribes show that the most important tabus were those on the dead, on women in child-birth and women in their monthly illness Among the ancient Israelites all that were unclean through the dead were put outside the camp and they were not allowed to offer an offering at the Passover (Numbers V. 1–4 and IX 6). Among the Syrians those who belonged to the family of the dead man were tabu for 30 days and could then enter only with shaven heads Child-birth made a woman unclean and the number of days that she was to be unclean depended on whether the child was a male or a female (Leviticus 12 2–5). In India also the ancient Aryans probably inherited their ideas about uncleanness on death and child-birth from their remote ancestors If one may surmise one can say this it must have been found out by the remote ancestors of the Vedic Aryans that if a person touched a dead body or used the clothes worn by the dead man when living, he also suffered from the same disease (particularly in the case of contagious diseases like plague, cholera, typhoid &c.) and that segregating such a person for ten days from other members of the tribe or community made the latter immune from the attack of such diseases. Therefore, those who touched the dead or carried the corpse for cremation or burial and the members of the family were thought to be unclean and were segregated for ten days. Gradually the ideas about the uncleanness on death and the necessity of segregation were made applicable to death due to all diseases or causes whatever. The uncleanness on child-birth might have been a case of extension by analogy derived from the tabu on death At all events smṛti writers put both on the same level (e. g. Manu V 61 "Just as impurity on death is ordained for ten days in the case of sapindas the same holds good in the case of birth"). Rules about women in their monthly illness were prescribed as early as the Taj. S. and have been already dealt with in H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 802–805.

We have now to turn to the subject of śuddhi apart from āśauca. Śuddhi of a dravya means the[694] removal of a taint attaching to a thing and it is of two kinds, purification of the body and the purification of an external object (Manu V. 110 and Aparārka p 253). It has already been seen (note 555 above) how even the Rg. lays great emphasis on śuddhi and being pure (śuci). There are Vedic[695] passages laying down that the cups (grahas) used in Jyotistoma and other sacrifices were to be cleansed with a strainer of wool, but not the camasas. In the Ait. Br. 32.4 it is provided that if the milk of an agnihotra that was heated by him for the homa became impure (amedhya, by an ant or worm falling therein), the milk is to be taken up in an agnihotrahavanī and was to be poured upon the ashes near the Āhavanīya fire. This shows that great care was taken about the purity of vessels to be used in sacrifices and about the offerings to be made. Śauca is one of the eight qualities of the soul (ātmaguṇas) mentioned by Gaut 8 24, Atri (verses 33, 35), Matsyapurāna 52. 8–10, Brhaspati (q. by Aparārka p 164). Haradatta on Gautama quotes a verse that śauca is of four kinds viz. monetary purity, mental purity, bodily purity and purity in speech; while Atri and Brhaspati[696] (q. by Aparārka p. 164), aver that śauca is constituted by avoiding what ought not to be eaten, by associating (only) with those who are not censured (i. e. are not reprehensible) and by firmly abiding by one's own prescribed duties. Many works divide śauca into two varieties viz bāhya (external) and āntara or ābhyantara (internal). Vide H. of Dh vol. II. pp 651–52 for passages from Baudhāyana Dh. S. (I. 5. 3–4), Hārita, Daksa and others defining and subdividing these. Agni 372. (17–18) is the same as Daksa V. 3. The Vanaparva 200. 52 speaks of purity in speech, in actions and that brought about by water. The Padma (II. 66. 86–87) emphasizes that it is the mental attitude that is the highest thing and illustrates it by saying that a woman embraces her son and her husband with different mental states. There is an interesting passage in the Lingapurāna 8. 34–36 (not quoted there) which after stating that ābhyantara śauca is superior to bāhya śauca (verse 31) remarks[697] that one void of inner purity is dirty even after a bath, that moss, fish and animals subsisting on fish are always immersed in water, that in spite of that no one would call them pure, that therefore one must always endeavour to secure inner purity and that one should bathe in the water of correct knowledge of the Self, apply once the sandal paste of faith and purify oneself by the clay in the form of desirelessness and that this is declared to be (the real) śauca. Manu V. 106 provides that of all kinds of purity mental purity is the highest. He who is pure as to wealth (i. e. who does not deprive another of wealth by unjust means) is the (only) pure man and not he who is purified by water and earth. Visnu 22. 89 is the same except that for wealth (artha) it substitutes food (anna). The Trikāndamandana (prakīrnaka 21) has the same verse as Manu V. 106. Vide also Anuśāsana 108. 12 (for purity of conduct, of mind, of a holy place, purity due to correct philosophical knowledge); Brahmānda III. 14. 60 (śucikāmā hi devā vai), and Yogasūtra II. 32 (for śauca as one of the five niyamas).

694. द्रव्यस्य दोषापगमः शुद्धि.। तत्र द्विविधा शुद्धि. शरीरशुद्धिर्बाह्यद्रव्यशुद्धिश्च। अपरार्के pp 252–253, तत्राशुद्धिर्नाम द्रव्यादेः स्पर्शनाद्यनर्हतापादको दोषविशेष.। शुद्धिस्तु संस्कारविशेषोत्पादिता तन्निवृत्ति.। हेमाद्रि (on श्राद्ध p 787).

695 अस्ति ज्योतिष्टोम । तत्र श्रूयते दशापवित्रेण ग्रहं समार्ष्टि इति। तत्रैषोर्थ समधिगत· सर्वे ग्रहा समार्जितव्या इति। इदमिदानीं सन्दिह्यते किं चमसा अपि समार्ष्टव्या उत नेति। शबर on जै III. 1 16

696 अभक्ष्यपरिहारश्च संसर्गश्चाप्यनिन्दितै । स्वधर्मे च व्यवस्थानं शौचमेतत्प्रकीर्तितम्॥ बृहस्पति (q by अपरार्क p 164). अत्रि verse 35 (reads आचारेषु व्यवस्थानं)

697. अवगाह्यापि मलिनो ह्यन्त शौचविवर्जित· । शैवला ह्यपका मत्स्या· सत्त्वा मत्स्योपजीविन ॥ सदावगाह्य सलिले विशुद्धा किं द्विजोत्तमा । तस्मादाभ्यन्तरं शौच सदा कार्यं विधानत ॥ आत्मज्ञानाम्भसि स्नात्वा सकृदालिप्य भावत:। सुरैरप्यसदा शुद्धा शौचेनेव यकीर्तितम्॥ लिङ्गपुराण 8 34–36, भावशुद्धि परं शौचं ·प्रमाण सर्वकर्मसु। अन्यथालिङ्गते कान्ता भावेन दुहितान्यथा ..अन्यथैव सुत: पुत्रं भार्यापत्यन्यथा पतिम्॥ पद्म (भूमिखण्ड 66 86–87)

External purity of the body by various means (rinsing the mouth, bath & c.) has already been described in detail in H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 648–668. The ancient and medieval Indians insisted on a daily bath for all, recommended two baths a day in certain cases and three baths to a hermit and did not subscribe to the view of some of the early Christians. St. Agnes was canonized primarily for her refusal to bathe and St. Francis of Assisi considered dirt as one of the proper insignia of holy poverty.[698]

In śrauta rites (such as Agnistoma) the sacrificer had to undergo a severe discipline of consecration (or dīksā), one item of which was the purification of the intending sacrificer's body by the adhvaryu priest by rubbing the former's body twice with three bunches of seven darbhas each (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1136) Śātātapa q by Sm. C. I p. 120, Śuddhiprakāśa p. 147 provide bath for one who has sexual intercourse with his wife during the period from the 5th to the 16th day after monthly illness begins, but for intercourse after these days the purification is the same as for urination and voiding ordure; bath is also prescribed for vomiting after sunrise, after shaving, after a bad dream, on the touch of foul men (such as cāndālas).

---

698. Vide Reginald Reynolds' work on 'Cleanliness and godliness' p. 36 (chapter IV).

The Ap Śr. II 12 provides[699] that Pavitresti should be performed by him who is desirous of śuddhi and that if one performs in each season the three iṣṭis, viz Vaiśvānarī (to Agni Vaiśvānara), Vrātapati (to Agni Vratapati) and the Pavitresti one purifies ten generations (of his family).

The following pages will deal with the purification of things (dravyaśuddhi). But a few general observations must first be made. The Āp Dh. S (II 6. 15 17–20) states that infants do not become polluted or impure (by the touch of a woman in her monthly course) up to the time the saṃskāra of annaprāśana (taking cooked food for the first time), that, according to some, up to one year or as long as they cannot distinguish between the different directions or up to the time of Upanayana according to others. Manu V. 127–133, Yāj I. 186, 191–193, Viṣnu Dh. S 23. 47–52, Baud. Dh I. 5 56–57, 64, 65, Śaṅkha 16 12–16, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 35 19–21 state that the following are always pure.—what is not seen to be polluted; what is cleansed with water; what is commended expressly (by a brāhmaṇa as pure, when there is a doubt), water collected on (pure) ground that is not visibly polluted by an impure thing and that in quantity is so much that a cow can slake its thirst therein and that has the smell, colour and taste (of pure water); the hand of a craftsman (such as a washerman or a cook while engaged in his peculiar work); articles exposed for sale in a market such as rice and barley (though touched by many intending buyers); alms (collected by a brahmacārin though walking from house to house on the road), the mouth of a woman (at the time of dalliance), meat of animals seized or killed even by dogs, cāṇḍālas, and carnivorous birds, rays (of the sun), fire, dust, the shadow (of a tree or the like), a cow, a horse, land, wind, dew drops, flies, a calf at the time of making the cow flow with milk from the udder–these latter are pure when they come in contact with a person Then it was said that certain birds and animals were either always pure or as to certain parts of the body e. g. Yāj I. 194 says that the mouths of goats and horses are pure but not of the cow. Baudhāyana[700] quoted by Aparārka p. 276 provides that the cow is pure except as to its mouth, and a cat when it is leaping or moving about. Bṛhaspati[701] and Yama (q. by Aparārka p. 276) state: 'the feet of brāhmanas, and the mouth of goats and horses, the backs of cows and all limbs of women are pure; the cow as to its back, the elephant as to its shoulder, the horse as to all its limbs and the dung and urine of cows, all these are pure'. Atri (240, 241) contains several verses[702] on this point. 'Things taken out from a mine or from kitchens (or places where grain is pounded &c.) are never impure, since all such places (where anything is prepared in the mass) except a place for the manufacture of liquor are pure. All fried (or roasted) things, fried barley and grain, dates, camphor, whatever else is well fried is pure'. In Atri V. 13 we read[703] 'flies, a continuous stream (of any liquid), the earth, water, fire, a cat, a wooden ladle and a mongoose are always pure'. Parāśara (X. 41) states:[704] 'space (ākāśa), wind, fire, water fallen on the earth, darbhas are not to be deemed polluted just as camasas in sacrifices are held to be not polluted.' Par. M. quotes a verse of Caturviṁśatimata[705] that raw meat, ghee, honey, oils extracted from fruits—these even when contained in vessels belonging to caṇḍālas become free from taint the moment they are taken out of these vessels. Bṛhaspati provides:[706] 'machines for crushing grapes and sugarcane stalks, mines, the hands of craftsmen, the milk pail, fluids that come

699 शुद्धिकामो वा। तस्येष्टाभियज्ञगाथा गीयते। वैश्वानरीं मातपति पवित्रेष्टिं तथैव च। क्रतावृतौ प्रयुञ्जानो पुनाति दशपौरुषम्॥ इति। आश्व श्रौ II 12

700. मुखवर्जं तु गौर्मेध्या माजारश्वबकक्रमे (? श्वाजक्रमे) शुचि। औशनस q. by अपरार्क p. 276, almost the same words occur in शङ्ख 16 14 (latter half).

---

701. बृहस्पति । पादौ शुची ब्राह्मणानामजाश्वस्य मुखं शुचि । गवां पृष्ठानि मेध्यानि सर्वगात्राणि चोदितान् ॥ यम । पृष्ठतो गोर्गजः स्कन्धे सर्वतोऽश्वः शुचित्तया । गोः पुरीषं च मूत्रं च सर्वं मेध्यमिति स्थितिः ॥ पृष्ठशब्दोऽत्र मुख्यव्यतिरिक्तविषयः । अपरार्के p 276.

702. आकराहृतवस्तूनि नाशुचीनि कदाचन । आकराः शुचयः सर्वे वर्जयित्वा सुराकरम् ॥ भृष्टा भृष्टयवाश्चैव तथैव चणकाः स्मृताः । खर्जूरं चैव कर्पूरमन्यद् भृष्टतरं शुचि ॥ अत्रि 240–241. आकराः . .करम् occurs in कौ. ध सू I. 5 58. The शु कौ. (p. 258) after quoting शङ्ख 16 13 (शुद्धं नदीगतं तोयं सर्वं एव तथाकराः) explains. सर्वं एवाकरा धान्यादिनिष्पत्तिस्थानानि तथा अक्षलाजादिनिष्पत्तिस्थानानि चेत्यर्थः ।.

703. मक्षिका सन्ततिर्धारा भूमिस्तोयं हुताशनः । मार्जारश्चैव दर्वी च नकुलश्च सदा शुचि ॥ अत्रि V, 13. विश्वरूप on या I. 195 quotes it without name as मक्षिका विप्रुषो नार्यो भूमि . दर्वी च मातरश्च etc. मार्जारश्च...मातरश्च—occurs in लघुहारीत 43. शुद्धिकौमुदी p 357 explains: सन्ततिः शिष्टुः यज्ञवर्षाभ्यन्तरवस्कः धारा तु पतन्ती ।.

704. आकाशं वायुरग्निश्च मेध्यं भूमिगतं जलम् । न दुष्यन्ति दर्भाश्च यज्ञेषु चमसा यथा ॥ पराशर X. 41.

705. आमं मांसं घृतं क्षौद्रं स्नेहाश्च फलसम्भवाः । अन्यभाण्डस्थिता ह्येते निष्क्रान्ताः शुचयः स्मृताः ॥ चतुर्विंशतिमत q. by परा. मा. II 1 p 115 याज्ञ. विवेक p. 328 quotes the verse as यम's reading म्लेच्छभाण्ड°. शु. कौ. p 318 also ascribes it to यम.

706 द्राक्षेक्षु यन्त्राकरकाष्ठहस्ता गोदोहनी यन्त्रविनिःसृतानि । बालैश्च स्त्रीभिरशुद्धिमद्भिः सत्सङ्गदानि शुचीनि तानि ॥ बृहस्पति q by शुद्धिप्रकाश p. 106.

out from crushing machines, actions (such as cooking) done by women and children when they are impure (by walking barefooted on the road) and are seen to be so, are still free from taint One's[707] own bed, garment, wife, child, water pot—these are free from taint for oneself, but these are impure to others. Śankha 16.15 is to the same effect

Śankha[708] states that whatever removes the dirt (or pollution) that is natural to a substance or arises from contact with another polluting substance must be declared to be its purifier. Śankha-Likhita[709] declare that the substances that bring about purification of all (polluted things) are water, clay, the powder (or paste) of soap berries, bilva fruit, rice and mustard cake, salts (ashes), cow's urine and dung and that according to some when a substance is heaped up in a big mass, sprinkling with water. Manu V. 118, Yāj. I. 184, Visnu Dh. S 23.13 also provide that sprinkling with water is the mode of purification when large quantities of corn or clothes are polluted, but when the quantity is small they must be washed with water. The quantity is said to be large when it is more than what one man can carry as a load (according to Kullūka on Manu V. 118).

The general rule laid down by Gaut. I. 45-46, Manu V 126 (= Visnu 23. 39), Yāj. I. 191 about the purification of things or bodies that are smeared with foul matter is that water and earth are to be employed for purification till the foul odour and the contact of the foul thing is entirely removed[710]. Devala (q. by Aparārka p. 270) defines śauca as the removal by means of clay, water, cowdung and the like of the besmearing, the oiliness and odour of a thing that cause impurity.

---

707. आत्मशय्या च वस्त्रं च जायापत्यं कमण्डलु । आत्मन शुचीन्येतानि परेषान्तु शुचीनि तु ॥ आपस्तम्बस्मृति II 4, बौधायन I 5 61 (reads शय्यासनं वस्त्र). अपरार्क p 257 quotes it as बौधायन's

708. मलं सयोगजं तज्ज्ञं यस्य येनोपहन्यते । तस्य तच्छोधनं प्रोक्तं सामान्यं द्रव्यशुद्धिकृत् ॥ शङ्ख q. by अपरार्क p. 256, दीपकालिका on या I. 191. मद पा p 451 reads मलसंयोगजम्

709. सर्वेषामाप्यो मृदरिष्टकेङ्गुदबिल्वतण्डुलसर्षपकल्कक्षारगोमूत्रगोमयादीनि शौचद्रव्याणि संहतानां प्रोक्षणमित्येके । शङ्खलिखितौ q by चतुर्वर्ग० vol. III part 1 p 517.

710. लेपगन्धापकर्षणं शौचमनेद्याकस्य । तदद्भि पूर्वं मृदा च । गौ प ध I 45-46. Almost the same words occur in वसिष्ठ III.48, यावल्लेपस्यनैद्यात्स्याद्गन्धो लेपस्य तत्कृत. । तावन्मृद्वारि चादेय सर्वासु द्रव्यशुद्धिषु ॥ मनु V. 126=विष्णु 23.39

Gaut. Dh. S. (I. 28–33) briefly deals [710a] with the purification of things as follows: Purification of metallic substances (like bell-metal), earthenware, substances manufactured from wood, cloth made of threads or yarn is brought about respectively by rubbing (or scouring) them, by baking in fire, by chiselling or planing, by washing in water; objects made of stones, jewels, shells and pearls are purified by the same means as metallic substances; bones (ivory and the like) and mud (floor of houses) are purified in the same way as wooden substances; and earth (when polluted) is also purified by adding to it earth (brought from another pure spot); ropes, chips of bamboos and reeds, leather are purified by the same means as cloth or they may be abandoned when they are extremely polluted (as by the spilling of wine or urine or ordure). Vas (III. 49–53) has almost the same words, employing the word 'bhasmaparimārjana' (scouring with ashes and washing) for 'parimārjana'. The Āp. Dh. S. (I. 5. 17. 10–13) [711] provides: 'If one gets a used vessel only, he shall eat from it after having heated it thoroughly; a vessel made of metal is purified by being scoured with ashes and the like; a wooden vessel becomes pure by being scraped; at a sacrifice, vessels must be cleaned according to the precepts of the Veda.' Yāj. (III. 31–34) states; time (lapse of ten days or a year as to āśauca), fire, religious rites (like Aśvamedha or performing of sandhyā), clay, wind, mind, spiritual knowledge, austerities (such as krcchra), water, repentance (in the case of sins), fasting—all these are the causes of purification. Gifts are the (main) cause of purification for those who do what is forbidden, flow of water in the case of a river, clay and water are means of śuddhi in the case of substances that are not clean, sannyāsa (order of asceticism) in the case of the twice-born, austerities in the case of those that have studied the Veda when they commit a sin (through ignorance), forbearance in the case of those who know the Self, water in the case of dirty limbs, silent recital of Vedic mantras (japa) is the means of purifica-

---

710 a द्रव्यशुद्धि परिमार्जनप्रदाहतक्षणनिर्णेजनानि तैजसमार्तिकदारवतान्तवानाम्। तैजसवदुपलमणिशङ्खमुक्तानाम्। दारुवदस्थिभूम्यो। आवपनं च भूमे.। चैलवद्रज्जुविदलचर्मणाम्। उत्सर्गो वात्यन्तोपहतानाम्। गौ 1 28–33. अत्यन्तोपहत is explained by विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 23.1 as 'शारीरैर्मलैः सुराभिर्मद्यैर्वा यदुपहतं तदत्यन्तोपहतम्।'

711. अनाग्नीते मृण्मये भोक्तव्यम्। आग्नीतं चेदभिदग्धे। परिमृष्टं लोहं प्रयतम् निर्लिखितं दारुमयम्। यथागमं यज्ञे। आप ध. सू. I. 5 17. 9–13 हरदत्त explains, 'आग्नीतं क्वचित्कार्ये पाकादावुपयुक्तम्. अग्निहोत्रहवणी दर्भैरुद्भि. प्रक्षालिता सोमपात्राणि मार्जालीये प्रक्षालितानि आज्यपात्राण्युष्णेन वारिणा।'.

tion for those guilty of secret sins, truth in the case of the mind (that is full of or is polluted by sinful thoughts), austerities and esoteric knowledge in the case of the man who identifies his soul with the body, correct knowledge in the case of intelligence, knowledge of God is the pre-eminent purifier of the soul. Manu V. 107–109 (= Viṣṇu 22.90–92) contain almost the same idea in almost the same words.

In prescribing the methods of cleaning polluted objects certain matters have to be considered according to a verse ascribed to Baudhāyana [712] by the Mit. (on Yāj I 190) which states: 'One should prescribe means of purification after considering the time, the place, the body (or himself), the thing (to be purified), the purpose for which the thing is to be used, origin (of defilement), the condition (of the thing or person defiled).'

There is some divergence of views about the means of purifying or cleansing certain objects. It is unnecessary to set out in detail these differences. It is proposed to take certain objects one after another and to specify how they were rendered pure according to several of the smṛtis and digests.

Certain foul things were said by the Smṛtyarthasāra p 70 to be the causes of extreme pollution and certain others as causes of lesser or insignificant pollution. For example, excreta, urine, semen, blood, fat, marrow, liquor and intoxicants were the causes of great pollution; while dogs, village swine, cats, their urine, the wax from the ear, nails, phlegm, discharge from the eyes, perspiration are the causes of insignificant pollution.

Baud. Dh. S. I. 5 66 provides [713] that the purification of the ground is brought about by means of sweeping with a (faultless) broom, by sprinkling (cow's milk, urine or water), by smearing with cowdung, by scattering (pure clay on it) and by scrubbing away (or scraping) some of the soil, when these are employed according to the situation of the ground and the particular impurity (of which it is to be purified) Baud. Dh.

---

712. देशं कालं तथात्मानं द्रव्यं द्रव्यप्रयोजनम्। उपपत्तिमवस्थां च ज्ञात्वा शौचं प्रकल्पयेत्॥ बौधायन q also by विश्वरूप on या. I 195 and मेधातिथि on मनु V 115. बौधायनधर्मसूत्र I. 5 55 reads देशं ..वस्थां च विज्ञाय शौचञ्च कुशलो धर्मेषु समाचरेत्। The verse is लघुहारीत 55 which reads कालं देशं The मिता reads तथा मानं which means 'the bulk' (or extent of the thing to be purified)

713. भूमेस्तु संमार्जनमोक्षणोपलेपनावस्तरणोल्लेखनैर्यथास्वं दोषविशेषानवस्थाप्य बौ. ध. सू. I. 5 66 वसिष्ठ III. 56 is almost the same

S in another place states:[714] when firm soil is polluted it is purified by smearing it with cowdung, hollow ground (one having holes) is purified by ploughing, ground wet (with impurity) by covering it (with pure clay brought from elsewhere) after removing the impure thing Land is purified by means of four viz, being trodden under the foot of cows, by digging it up, by burning (firewood or grass thereon), by pouring over it (water, cow's urine or milk &c.) and fifthly, by smearing it (with cowdung) and sixthly, by the lapse of time. Vasistha III 57 quotes a verse which mentions five means of purification almost in the same words as those of Baudhāyana (except the sixth viz time) Manu V. 124 mentions five means of purification, viz. sweeping with a broom, smearing with cowdung, sprinkling, digging (and removing), the stay of cows thereon (for one day and night). Visnu Dh S. 23 57 adds dāha (burning) to the five of Manu Yāj. I. 188 mentions seven means of the purification of the ground by adding dāha (burning) and kāla (lapse of time) to the five mentioned by Manu. According to[715] the Vāmanapurāna the ground is purified by digging, burning, sweeping, treading by cows, smearing of cowdung, scrubbing and by sprinkling water. Devala quoted by the Mit and Aparārka on Yāj. I 188 gives a more elaborate treatment According to him polluted ground (bhūmi) is of three kinds, viz amedhyā (impure), dusṭā (soiled), and malinā (dirty). Where a woman is delivered of a child or dies or is cremated or where a spot has been inhabited by cāndālas or where there are heaps of ordure and the like, ground that is full of foul things in this way is declared to be amedhyā.[716] That ground which is polluted by the contact of dogs, pigs, asses, camels and the like becomes dustā (soiled) and it becomes malinā (dirty) by charcoal, husk, hair, bones or ashes. Then

---

714 घनाया भूमेरुपघात उपलेपनम्। सुषिराया. कर्षणम्। क्लिन्नाया मेध्यमाहृत्य प्रच्छादनम्। चतुर्भि शुध्यते भूमिर्गोभिराक्रमणात्खननाद् दहनादभिवर्षणात्। पञ्चमाच्चोपलेपनात्पष्ठात्कालात्। कौ. ध सू I 6.17-21 quoted and explained by शु कौ p. 100.

715. भूमिर्विशुध्यते खातदाहमार्जनगोक्रमैः। लेपाद्धुलेखनात्सेकाद्देशमसंमार्जनार्चनात् ॥ वामनपुराण 14 68.

716. यत्र प्रसूयते नारी म्रियते दह्यतेपि वा। चण्डालाध्युषितं यत्र यत्र विष्ठादिसंहति ॥ एवं कश्मलभूयिष्ठा भूरमेध्या प्रकीर्तिता। श्वसूकरखरोष्ट्रादिसंस्पृष्टा दुष्टतां व्रजेत्। अङ्गार-तुषकेशास्थिभस्माद्यैर्मलिना भवेत्। मिता on या I 188. अपरार्क reads यत्रारिष्टादिसङ्गतिः in the first verse and धूम for तुष. शु कौ. p. 101 reads प्रसूते गर्भिणी यत्र म्रियते यत्र मानुष। ..यत्र वा दह्यते शवः॥ विण्मूत्रोपहतं यत्र कुणपो यत्र दृश्यते। एवं कश्मल०. The definitions of दुष्टा and मलिना as quoted from देवल by शु कौ. p 101 and शुद्धिम. p 99 are different.

Devala[717] prescribes the purification of the three kinds of ground: 'Purity is of five kinds, viz. digging up, burning (with wood or grass), smearing (with cowdung), washing (with water) or the fall of rain Even amedhyā ground may be purified by these five means employed together (where a corpse is cremated or candālas dwell) or by four (i e. omitting rainfall or burning in other cases of amedhyā); ground that is dustā is purified by three (digging up, burning and smearing with cowdung) or two (viz digging up and burning) and malinā ground is purified by one (i. e. by digging up).

The Smṛtyarthasāra (pp. 73–74) provides that if an idol made of iron or other metal is slightly polluted (as defined above) then it can be purified by means of pañcagavya after rubbing it with ashes; similarly a stone idol, when slightly polluted, should be washed with water mixed with the clay from an ant-hill and becomes pure after being treated with pañcagavya. Any idol, if polluted with ordure, urine or village mud would become pure after first being flooded for five days with pañcagavya, after being well washed with cow's urine, cowdung and clay from an ant-hill and by being again installed (with all installation rites). Questions about the pollution of temples by the entry of the so-called untouchables or by the entrance of persons other than brāhmanas in the inmost shrine (garbhagrha) have come before the courts e. g. in Gopala Muppanar v. Dharmakarta Subramania 27 Madras Law Journal p. 253 at p. 258, where reference is made to the ceremonies for the removal of pollution according to the Āgamas and Tantras. In S. K. Wodeyar v. Ganapati (37 Bom. L R 584) the point arose whether, when a custom was alleged that in a temple at Banavasi in the Canara district none could enter the inner sanctum except persons belonging to the ten sub-divisions of brāhmanas and a Lingayat entered it in spite of the protests of the worshippers in charge of the temple, his entry polluted the temple and whether he was liable to pay for the sum spent over the purification of the temple, the High Court of Bombay held that the custom alleged viz of excluding from the inner sanctum all that were not brāhmanas was proved and that the Lingayat gentleman who entered it in spite of protests was liable to pay damages for the wrongful entry. In the Nirnayasindhu (III.

717. दहनं खननं भूमेरवलेपनवापने। पर्जन्यवर्षण चेति शौचं पञ्चविध स्मृतम्॥ पञ्चधा वा चतुर्धा वा भूमेरेभ्या विशुध्यति। द्विधा त्रिधा वा दुष्टा तु शुध्यते मलिनैकधा॥ देवल q by शु. कौ p. 101 which explains वापनं as मृदन्तरेण पूरणम्.

pūrvārdha pp. 351–52), the Dharmasindhu (III p. 324) and other medieval digests provision is made for the re-consecration (punaḥ-pratiṣṭhā) of an idol in a temple when the idol is polluted by the touch of cāṇḍālas or wine or is burnt by fire or is defiled by the touch of sinners or the blood of a brāhmaṇa [718] If the idol be broken in two or more pieces or if it becomes broken (irregularly), if it be burnt or falls from its pedestal or be insulted, is without worship or is touched by an ass or the like animal, or falls on foul ground or is worshipped with the mantras of other gods,–in these ten circumstances Godhood ceases to indwell in the idol. If an idol be touched by robbers, cāṇḍālas, patita people, by a dog or a woman in her courses or if it be polluted by the touch of a corpse re-consecration is necessary.

The Viṣnu-dharmasūtra (23. 34) provides that idols when polluted should be purified in the same way in which the substance of which they are made (such as stone or copper &c.) is purified and then they should be re-consecrated. If the worship of an idol already consecrated is stopped for a day, two days, a month, or two months or it is touched by śūdras or a woman in her monthly course, then at a proper time puṇyāhavācana should be performed, an even number of brāhmaṇas should be fed, the idol should be submerged in water for a night and next day bathed with pañca-gavya from a jar full of it to the accompaniment of the respective mantras, then another jar should be filled with pure water and therein the nine kinds of precious stones should be cast, the jar should then have the

---

718. अथ पुन प्रतिष्ठा । ज्ञानधिकृत्य हरशीर्षपञ्चरात्रे । चाण्डालमद्यसंस्पर्शदूषिता वह्निनाथवा । अपुण्यजनसंस्पृष्टा विप्रक्षतजदूषिता ॥ संस्कार्येति शेषः । पदार्धादर्शे ब्राह्मे । खण्डिते स्फुटिते दग्धे भ्रष्टे नानविवर्जिते । यागहीने पशुस्पृष्टे पतिते दुष्टभूमिषु । अन्यमन्त्रार्चिते चैव पतितस्पर्शदूषिते । दशस्वेतेषु नो चक्रु. संनिधानं दिवौकस.॥ याग. पूजा पशु. गर्दभादिः ।... सिद्धान्तशेखरे । चौरचण्डालपतितश्वोदक्यास्पर्शने सति । शवाद्यपहतौ चैव प्रतिष्ठां पुनराचरेत्॥ ..शुद्धिविवेके विष्णु.। द्रव्यवत्कृतशौचानां देवतार्चानां भूयः प्र.तिष्ठापनेन शुद्धिरिति । अर्चाः प्रतिमा' । तद्द्रव्यस्य ताम्रादेरुक्तशौचं कृत्वा पुनः प्रतिष्ठा कुर्यादित्यर्थः । तद्विधिर्बोधायनसूत्रे । पूर्वप्रतिष्ठितस्याशुद्धिपूर्वकमेकरात्रं द्विरात्रमेकमासं द्विमासं वा अर्चनादिविच्छेदे शूद्ररजस्वलाद्यु-पस्पर्शने पूर्वोक्ते काले पुण्याहं वाचयित्वा युग्मान् ब्राह्मणान् भोजयित्वा निशायां जलाधिवासं कृत्वा श्वोभूते कलशपूर्णेन पञ्चगव्येन तत्तन्मन्त्रै. स्नापयित्वा अन्यं कलशं शुद्धोदकेनापूर्य तस्मिन्नवरत्नानि प्रक्षिप्य तं कलशं तत्तद्वायड्याष्टसहस्रमष्टशतमष्टाविंशतिवार वाभिमन्त्र्य तेनोदकेन देवं स्नापयेत्तत· शुद्धोदकेन स्नापयेदष्टसहस्रमष्टशतमष्टाविंशतिवार वा पुरुषसूक्तेन मूलमन्त्रेण च। ततः पुण्याणि दत्त्वा यथासम्भवमर्चयित्वा शुद्धोदनं निवेदयेदिति । शुद्धिपूर्वं तु विच्छेदे पूर्वोक्तां प्रतिष्ठां पुन कुर्यात्। निर्णयसिन्धु III पूर्वार्ध pp 351–52 The passage from पूर्वप्रतिष्ठितस्याशुद्धिः to the end is a quotation (with some omissions and additions) from बौधायनगृह्यशेषसूत्र II.19 (Mysore Un. ed.)

Gāyatrī mantra appropriate to the idol repeated over it 1008 or 108 or 28 times and the idol should then be bathed with that water, it should be bathed with pure water to the accompaniment of the Puruṣasūkta (Rg. X. 90) and the mūlamantra 1008, or 108 or 28 times. Then flowers should be offered and worship of the idol should be performed and a naivedya of boiled rice and jaggery should be offered.

Recently after the attainment of Independence some of the Provincial Legislatures in India have passed laws (e g Bombay Act 35 of 1947, C. P. and Berar Act 41 of 1947) throwing open all Hindu public temples to people who were once called untouchable This is not the place to discuss in detail the arguments for and against these measures. Many orthodox Hindus hold that their inmost feelings are hurt by this tyranny of the majority in the Legislatures. They feel that these measures are contrary to the four freedoms that are promised in many constitutions viz. freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear. These measures are likely to be followed by serious consequences. It is felt that the younger generation now being educated has hardly any faith in religion or in anything being sacred, that the so-called untouchables themselves when once they have asserted their right of entering Hindu temples scarcely ever care to frequent them and the orthodox Hindus also often cease to worship therein. There is the further fear that, if religious feelings even when unreasonable according to progressive views could be trampled upon by the views of the majority, there is no knowing where the process would stop. There would be temptation for the majority in a country to say that the sacred places of other religions should either not exist at all or be opened for any one not belonging to the faith of the minorities. It would have been far better that, while removing all the disabilities of the so-called untouchables as to employment, public places, courts and education, temples had been left alone for some years to come. The entrance of one set of people into the temples often entails the departure of another set, as said by P. C. in Sallat v. Bella 28 Bom. L R 161, which is not a very desirable thing. The equality of the former untouchables in all secular matters is sure to spread in a generation or so to other non-secular matters and so to entry into temples. Adjustments on an unprecedented scale are taking place in modern India with regard to usages cherished for ages and the entry into temples of the so-called untouchables would have been effected in a few years without recourse to the threat of punishments and without bitterness and rancour in the hearts of many people.

From very ancient times water has been regarded as a great purifier. Rg. VII. 47 and 49 are hymns addressed to waters as divinities and they are there described as themselves pure and as purifying others (as in Rg. VII. 49. 2 and 3 'śucayaḥ pāvakāḥ'). Similarly Rg. X. 9 and 30 are hymns addressed to waters, in the former of which the waters are invoked to remove whatever sin or wrong one may have committed (Rg. X. 9. 8 'idam-āpaḥ pra vahata yat kiñca duritam mayi') Atharva-veda I. 33 is a hymn addressed to waters, wherein also they are described as 'śucayaḥ pāvakāḥ' (in A. V. I. 33. 1 and 4). The Vāj S. VI. 17 (closely following Rg. X. 9. 8) invokes waters to remove whatever is censurable and dirty.[719] In Vāj S. IV. 2 the sage prays 'May the Waters, our mothers, purify us!'[720] The Śat. Br. I. 7. 4. 17 (S. B. E. vol. 12 p. 213) states 'water is a means of purification.' Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 191 quotes a long Vedic passage[721] wherein it is said "whatever creates doubt (whether it is pure or impure) should be touched with waters; then it becomes pure." It is therefore that water (hot or cold) is said to be the purifier of various kinds of vessels and of the ground in Yāj. I. 182–183, 188, Manu V. 109, 112, 126. Gobhila (I. 31–32)[722] lays down that when a man engaged in any religious rite hears a mantra addressed to the pitṛs, scratches his body, looks at a man of the lowest caste, or allows the wind to escape from his intestines, laughs loudly or speaks an untruth, touches a cat or a mouse, or uses harsh language, has a fit of anger, he should perform ācamana (or touch water).

According to Yāj I. 187 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 23.56 a polluted house is purified by being swept and cowdunged. But more stringent rules were laid down if a dog, a śūdra, a patita, a mleccha or a caṇḍāla died in a brāhmana's house (vide note 633 above). After keeping the house vacant for the periods 719 इदमापः प्रवहतावद्यं च मलं च यत्। यच्चाभिदुद्रोहानृतं यच्च शेपे अभीरुणम्। आपो मा तस्मादेनसः. पवमानश्च मुञ्चतु। वाज. सं VI. 17.

720. आपो अस्मान्मातरः शुन्धयन्तु घृतेन नो घृतप्वः पुनन्तु। वाज. सं IV 2.

721. तथा चाम्नाय। वायवै देवेभ्योऽपाक्रामत्... तस्माद्यद्यन्मीमांस्यं स्यात्तत्तद्भिः स्पृशेत् शुच्येव भवति। विश्वरूप on या. I. 191.

722. पितृयानरहोद्रवण आत्मालम्भेऽधनेक्षणे। अधोवायुसमुत्सर्गे महासेऽनृतभाषणे॥ मार्जारनकुलस्पर्शे आकुष्टे क्रोधसम्भवे। निमित्तेष्वेषु सर्वत्र कर्म कुर्वन्नपः स्पृशेत्॥ गोभिलस्मृति I. 31–32, quoted by कृत्यरत्नाकर p 50.

stated in note 633, it is provided by Samvarta[723] that a house that is polluted by the existence of a corpse inside it should be dealt with as follows: earthen pots and cooked food should be cast away and thrown out of the house which should then be smeared with cowdung and then a goat should be made to go about in it smelling it and then the whole house should be sprinkled over with water in which gold and kuśas are put in by brāhmaṇas rendered holy by the repetition of the Gāyatrī mantra; then the house becomes pure. Marīci prescribes[724] that if a caṇḍāla (merely) entered a house, it can be purified by plastering it with cowdung, but if he were to stay in it long, purification can be had only by heating it and making flames of fire lick its walls.

The ground in a brāhmaṇa's house, in a temple, in a cow-pen should, says Yama, always be regarded as pure (unless it has been polluted).

A great deal is said in the smṛtis and digests about the purification of water. Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 2 says[725] in a general way that a person after sipping water from what is collected on the ground becomes pure But the Baud. Dh. S I. 5. 65, Manu V. 128, Yāj. I. 192, Śaṅkha 16. 12–13, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 35.19 and others add that water collected on the ground that is of such volume that a cow can slake its thirst therein, that is in its natural state and is not polluted by any thing impure and that has natural colour (is transparent) and taste and odour (either no odour or a fragrant odour) is pure. Śaṅkha says[726] the same about water collected on a stony surface and adds that the water of a flowing river is always pure. Devala states[727] that water brought in clean vessels is 723. संवर्तः। गृहशुद्धिं प्रवक्ष्यामि अन्त श्वशवदूषणे। प्रोत्सृज्य मृन्मय भाण्डं सिञ्चमल तथैव च ॥ गृहादपास्य तत्सर्वं गोमयेनोपलिप्याथ छागेनाघ्रापयेद् हुध.। ब्राह्मणैर्मन्त्रपूतैश्च हिरण्यकुशवारिणा। सर्वमभ्युक्षयेद्वेश्म ततः शुध्यत्यसंशयम् ॥ अपरार्क p. 265, शुद्धिप्र pp. 100–101, शुद्धिकौ. pp. 303–304.

724. गृहेष्वजातिसंघेषु शुद्धिः स्याद्गुपलेपनात्। संवासो यदि जायेत दाहतापै-र्विनिर्दिशेत्॥ मरीचि q. by अपरार्क p. 266, शुद्धिप्र p 101, शु को p. 303 (reads दाहलेपैः).

725 भूमिगतास्वप्स्वाचम्य भयतो भवति। आप. ध सू I 5.15.2.

726 भूमिष्ठमुदकं शुद्धं शुचि तोयं शिलागतम्। वर्णगन्धरसैर्दुष्टैर्वर्जितं यदि तद्भवेत्॥ शङ्ख 16 12-13 q. by शु. को. p. 297, शु. प्र p. 102.

727. उद्धृताश्चापि शुध्यन्ति शुद्धे पात्रैः सहृद्धृता। एकरात्रोषिता आपस्त्याज्या. शुद्धा अपि स्वयम्॥ देवल q by मिता and अपरार्क on या. I. 192.

pure but when it is (stale owing to its being stored) for one night (or more) it should be thrown though it was pure (when originally brought). There[728] is no taint in water that cannot be agitated by any beings and in the water of springs (that flow from hills). Tanks (that are so deep) that they cannot be agitated, rivers, wells and lakes (that are similar) should not be used by the usual way of descent (the ghat) if they come in contact with candālas and other impure persons or things. In Narhari v. Bhimrao, the Bombay High Court had to deal with the question whether a certain tank at Mahad in the Kolaba District could not be resorted to by untouchables for taking water and held that the untouchables were not prevented from using it (vide 39 Bombay L. R. p. 1295).

Brhaspati provides that if in a well the dead body of an animal with five nails (man or beast) is found or if the well is otherwise extremely polluted all the water of the well should be taken out and the rest should be dried up by means of clothes, then if the well be built with burnt bricks flames of fire should be made (to lick the surface of the walls), and then pañcagavya should be poured over when fresh water begins to flow in (from the springs)[729]. Āpastamba (q. by Śuddhikaumudī p. 299) states the circumstances when a well may be said to be extremely polluted: 'hair, excrements and urine, menstrual discharge, a dead body—when a well is defiled by these one should take a hundred jars of water from it' (and further purification by putting pañcagavya in it should be resorted to if there is more water). Parāśara VII. 3 says the same about wells (with steps), wells without steps and tanks.

Yāj. I. 197 (=Viṣnu Dh. S. 23. 41) provides that mud and water on roads which come in contact with lowest castes (like candālas), dogs and crows and buildings (like mathas) constructed with burnt bricks are purified by the wind alone

---

728. अशौच्यानि तडागानि नदीविषमेसरांसि च । चण्डालाद्यशुचिस्पर्शे तीर्थतः परिवर्जयेत् । अशौच्याणामपां नास्ति मशुतानां च दूषणम् । देवल q by अपरार्क p 272 शु प p 102 (reads कश्मलाशुचियुक्तानि) and explains कश्मलं as शवादि and अशुचि as विण्मूत्रम्

729. मृतपञ्चनखात्कूपादल्पतोपहतात्तथा। अप. समुद्धरेत्सर्वाः शेषं यत्नेन शोधयेत् ॥ वह्निप्रज्वालनं कृत्वा कूपे पक्वेष्टकाचिते । पञ्चगव्यं क्षिपेत् पश्चान्नवतोयसमुद्भवे ॥ बृहस्पति q by अपरार्क p. 272. The first is quoted as a text of Uśanas by शु. कौ. p. 298 and reads शास्त्रेण (शास्त्रविधिना) for यत्नेन. The two verses are विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 23.44-45.

(blowing on them). Parāśara VII. 34 states[730] that mud and water on roads, boats, paths, grass and whatever is constructed with burnt bricks are rendered pure by the wind and the sun.

Rain water after it fell on the ground was supposed to be impure[731] for ten days. Similarly Yogiyājñavalkya (q. by S. K. p. 291) remarks that water of a river (dried up in summer) coming down in a flood for the first time (after rains) should not be taken (as pure) and also water that is agitated by some one (with the feet &c.) and waters that start in a separate stream by themselves from a holy river (like the Ganges). Even when a well (without steps) or a well (with a flight of steps) or a reservoir with a dam is constructed by men of the lowest castes, no prāyaścitta is prescribed for bathing therein or for drinking water therefrom.[732]

Visnu Dh S 23. 46 provides[733] that the purification of small reservoirs of water that are static (i. e. from which no streams flow down) is made in the same way as that of wells (without steps), while in the case of large reservoirs no pollution is recognised. It is declared that waters are purified by the rays of the sun and the moon and the contact of the wind and by cowdung and the urine of cows; some of these ideas are supported by modern scientific discoveries.

A verse q. by Aparārka p. 273 provides[734] that even the water at a prapā (a shed where water is distributed gratis to 730 रथ्याकर्दमतोयानि नाव. पन्थास्तृणानि च। मरुतार्केण शुध्यन्ति पक्वेष्टकाचितानि च॥ पराशर VII. 34. दीपकलिका on या. I. 197 and शु कौ p 304 quote it but read स्पर्शनाच्च प्रशुध्यन्ति पक्वे० and the latter explains 'स्पर्शनादन्त्यजातीनामित्यर्थ.' विश्वरूप does not comment on या. I 197 saying that it is superfluous, for the verse रथ्याकर्दमतोयानि &c. is clear. Vide वामनपुराण 14. 73.

731. अजा गावो महिष्यश्च ब्राह्मणी च प्रसूतिका। दशरात्रेण शुध्यन्ति भूमिष्ठ च नवोदकम्॥ यम q. by शु कौ. p. 297, while अपरार्क p. 293 ascribes it to मनु.

732. अन्त्यैरपि कृते कूपे सेतौ वाप्यादिके तथा। तत्र स्नात्वा च पीत्वा च मायश्चित्तं न विद्यते॥ शातातप q. by मिता and अपरार्क on या. I 192. शुद्धिप्रकाश p 106 remarks 'इति त्वत्यन्तापद्विषयमिति शूलपाणि..'

733. जलाशयेष्वल्पेषु स्थावरेषु महीतले। कूपवत्कथिता शुद्धिर्महत्सु च न दूषणम्। सोमसूर्यांशुपातेन मारुतस्पर्शनेन च। गवा मूत्रपुरीषेण शुध्यन्त्याप इति स्मृतम्॥ विष्णु q. by अपरार्क p. 273 The first is विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 23,46 and the 2nd is almost like आपस्तम्ब (in verse) II. 7.

734. प्रपास्वरण्ये चटगं च कूपे द्रोण्यां जलं कोशगतास्तथाप'। कृतेपि शूद्रात्तदपेयमाहुरापद्गतः कांक्षितवत् पिबेत्तु॥ यम q. by अपरार्क p. 273 and शु प्र p 104 (which reads 'भूमिगता' पिबेत्तु). This reading would mean that he should pour such water on the ground and when it is as much in volume as would slake a cow's thirst he may drink it. The first half occurs in अत्रि 233, आपस्तम्बस्मृति II. 2. शु प्र. p. 103 quotes शङ्खलिखित to the same effect thirsty travellers) in a forest or from a jar placed near a well (for drawing water by any body) or the water in (a stone or wooden) trough (meant for all and sundry) and water from a leather bag even though these may not belong to a śūdra are unfit for drinking, but one may drink even such water as much as he desires when in distress. This shows that even in ancient times water was carried in leather bags or drums where there was scarcity of water and was allowed to be used even by twice-born people.

We may now turn to the purification of metals and vessels. Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 34–35 and I. 6. 37–41, Vasistha III. 58 and 61–63, Manu V. 111–114, Yāj. I. 182 and 190, Visnu 23..2, 7, 23–24, Śankha 16. 3–4, Smrtyarthasāra p. 70 and others lay down rules about the purification of metals which do not agree in details. Therefore it is proposed to set out only what is said by Manu and one or two others. Manu (V. 113 ff.) says 'The wise declare that the purification of metals (like gold), of precious stones (like emerald), of all articles of stone is brought about by ashes, water and clay. Articles of gold that are not smeared (with dirty things like leavings of food &c.) become pure by means of water alone; the same holds good of articles that are found in water (coral and shells), that are made of stone and are made of silver on which no craftsmanship (such as drawing lines or figures) has been expended. Gold and silver sprang forth through the union of water and fire; therefore their purification is brought about best by their causes, viz. water (in case of slight pollution) and fire (in case of extreme pollution). The purification of copper, iron, bell-metal, brass, tin and lead should be brought about by salts (ashes), acids and water according to circumstances (i. e. pollution caused). Vasistha (III. 58, 61–63) says: 'bell-metal is purified with ashes, gold and silver with water alone and copper with acids.' Yāj. I. 190 says 'the purification of tin, lead and copper is brought about by salt water, acids and ordinary water, of bell-metal and iron by ashes and water.' The Lingapurāna (pūrvārdha, 189. 58) says: bell-metal is purified by ashes, iron articles by salt; copper, tin and lead by acids; golden and silver vessels are purified by water and jewels, stones, conches and pearls are purified in the same way as metallic vessels. Vide Vāmanapurāna (14. 70) which states that copper pots are purified by acids, tin and lead ones by salts, bell-metal by ashes and water. Medhātithi on Manu V. 114 quotes a verse [735] which says 'vessels of bell-metal (or brass) when licked (or breathed over) by cows, in which śūdras have taken their food and which have been defiled by dogs and crows are purified by being scoured ten times with ashes (salts).' Śātātapa has a similar verse (vide Par. M. vol II part 1 p 172).

Elaborate rules are laid down about the purification of polluted pots and vessels used in ordinary life, in Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 34–50, I. 6. 33–42, Yāj. I. 182–183, Visnu 23. 2–5, Śankha 16. 1–5 and others. There is some variation in all these, but, as the Mit. on Yāj. I. 190 remarks, it is not an absolute rule that copper must be purified by acids alone but if purification is possible by other means, they may be resorted to It is not necessary to set out the different modes of purifying vessels. A passage from the Śuddhi-prakāśa pp. 117–118 would be sufficient to indicate how this matter of pātraśuddhi (cleansing of polluted vessels) was dealt with in medieval India. "vessels made of gold, silver, conches, shells, stones, precious stones, bell metal, brass, tin, lead are purified by mere water, provided they have no dirt or pollution sticking to them, if these vessels are polluted by the contact of leavings of food &c. they are purified by ashes and water or acids and water according as anyone of these is appropriate; the vessels made of the above substances that are polluted for a long time owing to being used by śūdras or owing to contact with leavings of food should first be scoured with salts (ashes) and water three times and should be then cast into fire so long as it can be borne (without the vessels being broken, melted or burnt up) and then they become pure. Vessels of bell metal when polluted by only dogs, crows, śūdras and leavings of food only once or licked by cows become pure by being scoured ten times with salts and water; but if they are polluted by the above several times then they have to be scoured 21 times for becoming pure. If in a vessel belonging to the three higher varṇas a śūdra takes his meal, it becomes pure after being washed four times with salts and being cast in fire and then taken up with hands that are washed clean with water. A vessel of bell-metal that is polluted once by the leavings of a woman freshly delivered or by intoxicants or liquors becomes pure after being heated in fire; but if it is polluted several times then it becomes pure by being again manufactured. A vessel of bell-metal that is polluted by being frequently used for holding the water expelled from the mouth after rinsing it or the water in which the feet are washed should be buried in the ground for six months, then heated in fire and then it becomes pure (compare Parāśara VII. 24–25); but if it is polluted thus only once it becomes pure after (being buried in the ground) for ten days All metal vessels polluted for a short time by the bodily dirts such as urine, excrement, semen become pure after being placed for seven nights in cow's urine or in a great river; but if they are polluted as above many times or are polluted by the contact of a corpse, a freshly delivered woman or a woman in her monthly course they become pure after being thrice washed with salts, acids and water and after being heated in fire till they can bear it, but if these are polluted by urine and for a long time and frequently they become pure by being beaten into shape (manufactured) again.

735 गवाघ्रातानि कांस्यानि शूद्रोच्छिष्टानि यानि च। शुध्यन्ति दशभिः क्षारैः श्वकाकोपहतानि च॥ q. by मेधा on मनु V. 113 and मिता. on या I. 190 This is लघुशातातप 141. This verse is ascribed to अङ्गिरस् by शु कौ p 307 and to शातातप by शु. प्र. 116. This occurs in पराशर VII. 23, where the words शूद्रोच्छिष्टानि and श्वकाकोपहतानि are transposed.

Visnu (23. 2 and 5) provides that all metal vessels when extremely polluted (as stated in note 710) are purified by being cast into fire and that vessels of wood or clay when extremely polluted should be given up, but Devala [736] and others provide that wooden vessels when slightly polluted become pure by being planed or chiselled or by means of clay, cowdung or water and that earthen vessels if not extremely polluted become pure by being baked in fire [737] (also Yāj. I. 187). But Vas. III. 59 provides that an earthen vessel if polluted by the contact of wines, urine, excrement, phlegm, tears, pus and blood is not purified even by being burnt in fire. [738]

Special rules are provided for the purification of vessels and implements used in Vedic sacrifices. Baud. Dh. S. (I. 5. 51–52) [739] remarks that the camasa vessels used in sacrifices

736 काष्ठाना तक्षणाच्छुद्धिर्मृन्मयानां तु पात्राणां दहनाच्छुद्धिरिष्यते॥ देवल q. by शुद्धिप्र. p. 118. Vide मनु V. 115 for the same rule about wooden vessels

737. Vide Leviticus 11. 32–33 about unclean vessels of wood and earthenware and their purification.

738 मद्यैर्मूत्रै पुरीषैर्वा श्लेष्मपूयाश्रुशोणितै.। संस्पृष्टं नैव शुध्येत पुनःपाकेन मृन्मयम्॥ वसिष्ठ III. 59=मनु V. 123. It may be noted that मेधातिथि does not comment on this verse and quotes it on मनु V. 122 without naming the source are purified according to the special Vedic texts, since the Veda says that camasa vessels do not incur the fault of being ucchiṣṭa when it is soma liquid that is drunk from them. Manu V. 116–117, Yāj. I. 183–185, Visnu Dh S. 23. 8–11, Saṅkha 16. 6, Parāśara VII. 2–3 and others lay down rules about the purification of sacrificial implements. For example, Manu (V. 116–117) provides 'sacrificial vessels should be first rubbed with the right hand (or with darbhas or strainer) and then camasas and cups are to be washed with water before using them in the sacrifice; the carusthālī (the vessel in which the oblation of boiled rice is prepared), sruc (a wooden vessel used for pouring clarified butter on sacrificial fire), and sruva (wooden ladle of a semicircular shape) are purified by being washed with hot water; the sphya (wooden sword), the winnowing basket, the cart (for bringing the soma plant), wooden mortar and pestle, are purified with water (or sprinkling water according to Yāj. I. 184).

739. वचनाद्यज्ञे चमसपात्राणाम्। न सोमेनाच्छिद्या भवन्तीति श्रुति.। बौ. ध. सू. I. 5. 51–52 Vide H of Dh vol. II p 1177 n. 2598, for the drinking of soma from camasas by the priests one after another.

Several rules were laid down about the purification of polluted corn and polluted cooked food. A reference has already been made to the purification of heaps of corn Common sense, convenience and the loss that may be caused by very stringent provisions are the considerations which prompt the rules on this subject. Visnu 23.35 provides[740] that where a heap of rice (or other grain) is polluted, one should throw away only that portion of it which is actually defiled and should submit the rest to pounding and washing with water; cooked food that exceeds in volume one drona and that has been defiled does not all become tainted, but that throwing away the defiled portion alone, one should sprinkle over the rest water mixed with gold on which the sacred Gāyatrī verse has been repeated and should hold it before a goat to see it and should also bring fire near it. Vide Baud. Dh. S. I. 6. 44–48. 'If grains of rice are polluted they should be washed and dried. But if it is a large quantity then sprinkling with water is enough; husked rice (if polluted) should be cast away. The same rule applies to cooked offerings. But in the case of large heaps of cooked food that portion which is polluted by dogs or crows should be cast away and the rest should be sprinkled with the Anuvāka p avamānaḥ suvarjanaḥ' (Tai. Br. I. 4 8). Gaut. 17. 9–10 provide[741] that one should not partake of food that was cooked along with hair and insects (like ants), nor food that is polluted by the contact of a woman in her monthly illness, by a crow or by being struck with the foot (of some one). But where food is already cooked and then it is smelt by a cow or it is polluted by the falling into it of hair, insects, flies, then Yāj. I. 189 and Parāśara VI. 64–65 provide that in order to purify it water, ashes (with water) or loose earth (with water) should be cast over it. Āp. Dh. S. I. 5 16. 24–29 provide that one should not partake of food in which hair exists (i. e it was there from the beginning) or anything else (like nails) that is impure or of food that is touched with an unclean substance or in which an insect that subsists on impure things exists or food which is struck by the feet of any person or in which the excrement or the tail (or limb) of a rat is found.

740. असिद्धस्यान्नस्य यावन्मात्रमुपहतं तन्मात्रं परित्यज्य शेषस्य कण्डनप्रक्षालने कुर्यात्। द्रोणाधिक सिद्धमन्नमुपहत च दुष्यति। तस्योपहतमात्रमपास्य गायत्र्याभिमन्त्रित सुवर्णाम्भः प्रक्षिपेद् पशतस्य च मदृशंयेदृग्रेश्च। विष्णु० 23 11. The छाद्धिकौ p 317 reads 'सूर्यस्य दर्शयेदृग्रेश्च'

The general rule is stated by Manu V. 118 which applies not only to corn and clothes but to many other articles viz. if there is a heap or a large quantity then sprinkling with water (prokṣaṇa) suffices for purification but if the quantity is small then washing with water is necessary. Manu V. 125 (= Viṣṇu Dh. S. 23.38) provides that (a small quantity of) cooked food part of which is pecked by birds (whose flesh is eaten by men), which is smelt by a cow, which is struck with the foot (by a man) and over which some one has sneezed or which is polluted by the falling in of hair and insects becomes pure by casting into it loose earth (and water). Parāśara (VI. 71–74) puts the matter[742] thus: "food licked by dogs and crows or smelt by a cow or ass, if little in quantity, should be thrown away by a brāhmaṇa, but purification should be resorted to if it is a drona or āḍhaka in quantity. That portion which is defiled by the saliva of a dog or crow should be thrown away and water in which gold is put should be sprinkled over the remaining portion, then flames of fire should lick the remaining

---

741. नित्यमभोज्यम् । केशकीटावपन्नम् । रजस्वलाकृष्णशकुनिपदोपहतम् । गौ. 17 8–10.

742 काकश्वानावलीढं तु गवाघ्रातं खरेण वा । स्वल्पमन्नं त्यजेद्विप्रः शुद्धिर्द्रोणाढके भवेत्॥ अन्नस्योद्धृत्य तन्मात्रं यच्च लालाहतं भवेत्। सुवर्णोदकमभ्युक्ष्य हुताशेनैव तापयेत्। हुताशेनेन संस्पृष्टं सुवर्णसलिलेन च। विप्राणां ब्रह्मघोषेण भोज्यं भवति तत्क्षणात्॥ पराशर VI 71–74, q. by शुद्धिमयूख pp. 128–129 (which reads यच्च लालाकृतिर्भवेत् in the 2nd verse).

food and brāhmaṇas should loudly recite Vedic hymns (like the Pavamānasūkta) over it and then the food becomes fit for eating". The Śuddhiprakāśa explains that the wealthy should not throw away food if it is more than a drona in quantity and a poor man if it is more than an ādhaka [743].

Manu V. 115 [744] says that in the case of all liquids (such as oils, ghee &c.) purification (when they are little in quantity) is brought about by means of two kuśas dipped into them (or by straining them through a piece of cloth into another pot) and if the quantity is large then by sprinkling (water). Śaṅkha provides [745] that purification is brought about by mere proksana in the case of all exudations (Asafoetida &c.), jaggery, salts, safflower, saffron and in the case of wool and cotton. Vide note 705 above about certain articles being pure the moment they are transferred from the pots of even mlecchas &c.

A few words may be said about the purification of different kinds of cloth and garments and the materials of which they are made. Laghu-Āśvalāyana (I. 28–30) provides that a white garment is always commended for wearing (as a dhoti), but they are commended for wearing as upper garments and both are not defiled by the touch of anybody. Men may take their food or answer calls of nature while covered with both; trasara is purified by being washed while a silken garment is always pure. Manu V. 120–121, Yāj I 186–187 and Viṣnu (23. 19–22) provide almost in the same words that silken and woollen cloth is cleansed by saline earth (and with water and cow's urine), Nepalese blankets by the powder of soap berry, clothes made of tree bark with Bilva fruit and linen cloth by (paste of) white mustard. Viṣnu 23. 6 says [746] that when a garment is extremely polluted that portion thereof which when washed with water loses its colour should be cut off. Śaṅkha [747] quoted by Viśva-

743. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 124 for the measures of capacity called drona and ādhaka. According to most writers four ādhakas are equal to a drona.

744. द्रवाणां चैव सर्वेषां शुद्धिरुत्पवनं स्मृतम्। प्रोक्षणं संहतानां च दारवाणां च तक्षणम्॥ मनु V. 115. कुल्लूक explains 'प्रादेशप्रमाणकुशपत्रद्वयाभ्यामुत्पवनेन शुद्धिः।', while the शुद्धिप्र p. 133 remarks उत्पवनं वस्त्रान्तरितपात्रप्रक्षेपेण कीटाद्यपनयनमित्युक्तम्'

745. निर्यासाना गुडानां च लवणाना तथैव च। कुसुम्भकुङ्कुमानां च ऊर्णाकार्पासयोस्तथा। प्रोक्षणात्काथिता शुद्धिरित्याह भगवान्यम॥ शङ्ख 16. 11–12.

746. अत्यन्तोपहतस्य वस्त्रस्य यत्प्रक्षालितं विरज्येत तच्छिन्द्यात्। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 23.6.

747. चेलानामुत्स्वेदन प्रक्षालन तन्मात्रच्छेदो वा। शङ्ख. q. by विश्वरूप on या. I. 182.

rūpa on Yāj. I.182 prescribes that garments are purified by being submitted to hot steam, by washing with water or by cutting off only that portion that is defiled. Parāśara VII. 28 provides that garments made from bamboos and barks of trees, linen and cotton garments, garments of wool and birch bark are purified by mere prokṣana.

The smṛtis speak of purification of many other things, which is of little importance and is passed over here. Only a few illustrations are given here. Manu. V. 119 provides that skins and things made of split bamboos (or canes) are cleaned in the same way as clothes, while vegetables, roots and fruits are purified on the analogy of grain. Manu V. 120–121 state that the purification of conches, horns (of buffaloes and rams) and bones and tusks (of the elephant or boar) is to be caused in the same way as that of linen or with cow's urine or water and that grass, wood and straw become pure by being sprinkled with water. Visnu Dh. S. 23. 15, 16, 23 and Yāj. I. 185 are very similar.

From the above it will be clear that purification of substances depends on many circumstances, viz. whether they are metallic or are earthen, whether they are solid or liquid, whether a polluted substance is small in quantity or is a big heap, whether the pollution is extreme or insignificant and so on.

In Manu the purification of substances follows (V. 110) the means of purifying one's own body. Purification of the body by means of ācamana and snāna (bath) has already been described in H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 315–316 and 652–653 (about ācamana), 656–668 (about snāna). Purification by bath on āśauca has already been dealt with before. Special rules were prescribed for women guilty of adultery (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 594, vol. III. pp. 647–649), as also for women raped (vide vol. II p. 575). Snāna (bath) with the clothes on was prescribed for purification of the body when a person touches one who is patita (murderer of a brāhmana &c.), a caṇḍāla, a woman freshly delivered, a woman in her monthly illness, a corpse or one who has touched a corpse; also when a man follows a funeral procession or touches a dog (vide Gaut. 14. 28–30, Manu V. 85 and 103, Angiras verse 152, Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 15–16, Yāj III. 30). Baud. Dh S I. 5. 140 provides that on touching one who sells the Veda (teaches it for money), a yūpa, a funeral pyre, a patita, a dog and a cāndāla one should undergo a bath [748] Parāśara also has a similar verse.[749] It has already been stated elsewhere (in H. of Dh vol. II. pp 175-176) how the rules about touching untouchables were relaxed when people congregated in a temple or in a religious procession, at marriages and festivals and at holy places. It is said by some that this refers not to the so-called untouchables, but to men who are untouchable owing to āśauca. But this is not correct The explanation of the Suddhi-kaumudī and Śuddhiprakāśa given below makes it clear that the untouchables are meant. In the first place, the words are quite general and not restricted. In the second place, there is no untouchability (except for the mother) on the ground of Jananāśauca and it is most unlikely that a person who has incurred mourning on death should visit a temple or go to a marriage or enter a religious procession, or festival. In the third place, looking to the several occasions mentioned together (particularly pilgrimages, battles, fire in a town or village and commotion or invasion of a country) it appears most unlikely that the verse refers only to āśauca on birth and death.[750]

The ancient and medieval Indians put very great emphasis on purity of mind, of body, of the place where they resided or performed religious rites, of the vessels used by them and of the ingredients of their food and worship. Many of the rules about purification of substances may appear to modern minds as very stringent; but it should not be forgotten that the ancient Indians were imbued with the thought that purity of the mind followed from purity of food

---

748. देवविक्रयिणं सूपं पतितं चितिमेव च। स्पृष्ट्वा सचैलमाचरेत्स्नानं श्वान चण्डालमेव च॥ कौ. ध. सू. I. 5.140.

749. चैत्यवृक्षश्चितिर्यूपश्चाण्डालः सोमविक्रयी। एतास्तु ब्राह्मण स्पृष्ट्वा सचैलो जलमाविशेत्॥ पराशर q by शु कौ p. 327, which explains 'चैत्यवृक्षो ग्राममध्ये देवभूतवृक्षः, यूपोन्त्येष्टिकर्मयूपश्चितिसंनिधानात्'

750. तीर्थे विवाहे यात्रायां सङ्ग्रामे देशविप्लवे। मरग्रामदाहे च स्पृष्टास्पृष्टिर्न दुष्यति। बृहस्पति q. by शु कौ p 323, शु म p 130. शु कौ. explains 'स्पृष्ट अस्पृष्टि अस्पृश्यो येन स तथा' and शु म remarks अस्पृष्टिरस्पृश्यं स्पृष्टमस्पृष्टिर्येनेति च बहुव्रीहिः। तेन तीर्थादौ अस्पृश्यस्पर्शने नाचमनस्नानादि॥. The स्मृतिच I pp 121-122 quotes this verse and two others 'ग्रामे तु यत्र संस्पृष्टिर्यात्रायां कलहादिषु। ग्रामसूपमे चैव स्पृष्टिदोषो न विद्यते॥ and 'देवयात्राविवाहेषु चक्षेषु मृतेषु च। उत्सवेषु च सर्वेषु स्पृष्टास्पृष्टिर्न विद्यते॥' from शातातप and यद्यङ्गिरस्मत respectively and explains ग्रामे ग्राम्यजनादौ।.....एतच्च वाक्यत्रय यत्राहमनेन स्पृष्ट इति ज्ञानं नास्ति तद्विषयमिति केचित्। अस्पृश्यचाण्डालादिस्पर्शविषयमित्यन्ये।.

(as stated in the Chāndogyopanisad VII. 26.2 'āhāraśuddhau sattvaśuddhih' and by Hārīta). It would be conceded that some of their rules about purification (such as about large quantities of corn or heaps of cooked food) are based on common sense and convenience. We are probably going to the other extreme in taking our food anywhere and in any surroundings.

SECTION III

CHAPTER IX

ŚRĀDDHA

This subject is of great practical importance from several points of view.

The Brahmapurāna defines śrāddha as follows: 'whatever is given with faith to brāhmanas intending it to be for the (benefit of) pitrs at a proper time, in a proper place, to deserving persons and in accordance with the prescribed procedure is called śrāddha[751]. The Mit on Yāj I. 217 defines śrāddha as 'abandonment with faith of an article of food or some substitute thereof, intending it for (the benefit of) the departed'. The Kalpataru on śrāddha defined it as 'the giving up of sacrificial material intending it for pitrs and its acceptance by brāhmanas'. The Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara and the Śrāddhaprakāśa define śrāddha in the same way as the Mit. but in a more involved manner. Yāj. I. 268 (= Agnipurāna 163. 40–41) states that the pitrs viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas that are the deities of śrāddha, being gratified by śrāddha, give gratification to the ancestors of human beings. This verse and Manu III. 284 make it clear that the three ancestors of a man,

---

751. देशे काले च पात्रे च श्रद्धया विधिना च यत्। पितृनुद्दिश्य विप्रेभ्यो दत्तं श्राद्धमुदाहृतम्॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by श्रा प्र p 3 and 6, श्रा क ल p. 3, परा मा I. 2. p. 299; श्राद्धं नामादनीयस्य तत्तथानीयस्य वा द्रव्यस्य प्रेतोद्देशेन श्रद्धया त्याग। मिताक्षरा on या I 217; एतेन पितृनुद्दिश्य द्रव्यत्यागो ब्राह्मणस्वीकरणपर्यन्त श्राद्धस्वरूपं प्रधानम्। कल्पतरु (श्राद्ध) p. 4, कल्पतरुलक्षणमप्यनुपादेयं सन्यासिनामात्मश्राद्धे देवश्राद्धे सनकादिश्राद्धे चाप्यासे। श्रा क्रि कौ pp 3–4, अत्र कल्पतरुकार पितृनुद्दिश्य द्रव्यपातो ब्राह्मण स्वीकरणपर्यन्तो हि श्राद्धमित्याह तदयुक्तम्। पितृभक्ति of श्रीदत्त (folio 21a) The दीपकालिका on या I 218 accepts कल्पतरु; श्राद्धं नाम वेदबोधितपात्रालम्भनपूर्वक-प्रमीतपित्रादिदेवतोद्देशको द्रव्यत्यागविशेष। श्राद्धविवेक p. 1, अत्रापस्तम्बादिसकलवचन-पर्यालोचनया प्रमीतमात्रोद्देश्यकात्यागविशेषस्य ब्राह्मणाद्याधिकरणप्रतिपत्त्यङ्गकस्य श्राद्ध-पदार्थत्वं प्रतीयते। श्रा प्र p. 4 The श्राद्धविवेक states that द्रव्यत्याग is enjoined by the words of the Veda (वेदबोधित) and the thing abandoned is handed over to a deserving brāhmana (पात्रालम्भनपूर्वक). प्रतिपत्ति in श्रा प्र means the final disposal of a thing used in a sacrifice e g. in Darśa-pūrnamāsa we have the sentence सह शाखया प्रस्तर प्रहरति Here शाखाप्रहरण is प्रतिपत्तिकर्म (Jai. IV 2. 10–13) and not अर्थकर्म; similarly, the cremation of an āhitāgni with his sacrificial vessels is a प्रतिपत्तिकर्म so far as the यज्ञपात्रs are concerned.

viz. the father, paternal grand-father and the paternal great-grand-father are respsctively to be identified with the three orders of superintending pitr deities, viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas, when performing śrāddha. According to some,[752] śrāddha denotes three things, viz. homa, the offering of pinḍa (ball of cooked food) and gratification of brāhmanas invited to a dinner; the application of this word to any one of these three can only be in a secondary sense.

A firm believer in the doctrine of karma, punarjanma (re-incarnation) and karma-vipāka (explained above) may find it difficult to reconcile that doctrine with the belief that by offering balls of rice to his three deceased paternal ancestors a man brings gratification to the souls of the latter. According to the doctrine of punarjanma (as very clearly and succinctly put in Br. Up IV. 4.4 and Bhagavad-gītā 2 22)[753] the spirit leaving one body enters into another and a new one. But the doctrine of offering balls of rice to three ancestors requires that the spirits of the three ancestors even after the lapse of 50 or 100 years are still capable of enjoying in an ethereal body the flavour or essence of the rice balls wafted by the wind. Further, Yāj. I. 269 (which is the same as Mārk. 29. 38, Matsya-purāna 19. 11–12, Agnipurāna 163. 41–42) provides that the grand-fathers (i. e. pitrs) being themselves gratified (by the offerings of food in śrāddha) bestow on men (their descendants) long life, progeny, wealth, learning, heaven, mokṣa (final beatitude), all happiness and kingdom. In the Matsya-purāna (chap. 19, verse 2) a question is asked by the sages how food which a brāhmana (invited at a śrāddha) eats or which is offered into fire is enjoyed by departed spirits that might have assumed (after death) good or evil forms of bodies. The answer given (verses 3–9) is that fathers, grand-fathers and great-grand-fathers are identified with Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas respectively according to Vedic passages, that the name and gotra (mentioned at the time of śrāddha), the mantras uttered and faith carry to the pitrs the offerings made, that if one's

752. होमश्च पिण्डदानं च तथा ब्राह्मणतर्पणम्। श्राद्धशब्दाभिधेयं स्यादेकस्मिंस्त्रीपचारिक.॥ q. by श्राद्धसार p 30 हरदत्त on आप. ध सू II. 7. 16. 2 says the same thing. श्रीदत्त in पितृभक्ति (folio 23a) says 'पिण्डदानं तु न श्राद्धं किं तु श्राद्धाङ्गं पिण्ड-विरहेपि नित्यश्राद्धदर्शनात्।'.

753. अयमात्मेदं शरीरं निहत्याविद्यां गमयित्वान्यन्नवतरं कल्याणतरं रूपं कुरुते पित्र्यं वा गान्धर्वं वा दैवं वा प्राजापत्यं वा ब्राह्मं वान्येषां वा भूतानाम्। बृह- उ IV.4 4; तथा शरीराणि विहाय जीर्णान्यन्यानि संयाति नवानि देही॥ गीता 2.22.

father has become a god (by his good deeds) the food offered in śrāddha becomes nectar and follows him in his state of godhood, if he has become a daitya (an asura) then (the food) reaches him in the form of various enjoyments, if he has become a beast then it becomes grass for him and if he has become a snake the śrāddha food waits on him as wind (serpents are supposed to subsist on wind) and so on. Verses 5–9 of the Matsya, chap. 19 are quoted as from Mārkandeyapurāna by the Śrāddhakalpalatā p. 5. Viśvarūpa [754] on Yāj. I, 265 (p. 171 of Tri. ed.) also raises the same objection and gives several replies. One is that this is a matter entirely based on śāstra and so when śāstra says that pitṛs are gratified and the performer gets desired objects no objection should be raised. Another reply is that the gods Vasus and others that have access everywhere have the power to gratify pitṛs wherever they may be situated. He does not call the questioners (nāstika) as some other and later writers do.

The Śrāddhakalpalatā of Nandapandita [755] (about 1600 A. D.) enters upon an elaborate reply to these persons (whom he dubs atheists) that aver that the performance of śrāddhas for departed fathers and the rest, who according to the particular actions of each go to heaven or hell or to other forms of existence serves no purpose. He asks: why is śrāddha useless? Is it because there is no prescriptive text laying down an obligation

---

754. 'कथं हि स्वकर्मानुसारादनेकविधयोनिगतपितृतृप्त्युपपत्ति.। शास्त्रप्रमाणकत्वाद्दस्यार्थस्याद्योद्यमेतत्।...एते देवा वस्वादय प्रीता. प्रीणयन्ति यत्रतत्रस्थान् मनुष्याणां पितॄन् श्राद्धान्नरसानुप्रदानेनेत्यर्थ.। सर्वप्राणिगतत्वाच्चैषा सर्ववस्थितपितृतर्पणसामर्थ्यमविरुद्धम्।' विश्वरूप on या I 265 p. 171.

755. अथ ये नास्तिका सूताना पित्रादीना प्रातिस्विकशुभाशुभकर्मवशेन स्वर्गनरकादिषु तत्तद्योनिषु वा गताना श्राद्धकरणमनर्थकमाहुस्तन्निराकरण तावत् क्रियते। किं विध्यभावाद्वा श्राद्धकरणमनर्थकमुत फलाभावाद्वा पित्रादीनां तृप्त्यसिद्धे। न तावदाद्य. तस्मात्सर्वप्रयत्नेन श्राद्धं कुर्यादित्यादिविधिदर्शनात्। न द्वितीय। आयु. प्रजा धनं विद्या स्वर्गं मोक्ष सुखानि च—इत्यादिफलश्रवणात्। न तृतीयः। न ह्यत्र देवदत्तादय एव श्राद्धकर्मणि संप्रदानभूता पित्रादिशब्दैरुच्यन्ते किं त्वधिष्ठातृवस्वादिदेवतासहिता एव। यथा देवदत्तादिशब्देन शरीरमात्रं नाप्यात्ममात्रं किन्तु शरीरविशिष्टाः प्राणिन एवोच्यन्ते। एवमधिष्ठातृदेवतासहिता एव देवदत्तादय. पित्रादिशब्दैरुच्यन्ते। अतश्चाधिष्ठातृदेवता वस्वादय. पुत्रादिभिर्देत्तेनान्नपानादिना तृप्ताः सन्तस्तानपि देवदत्तादीस्तर्पयन्ति कर्तृंश्च पुत्रादिफलेन योजयन्ति। यथा माता गर्भपोषणायान्यदत्तेन दोहदान्नपानादिना स्वयमुपभुक्तेन तृप्ता सती स्वजठरगतमपत्य तर्पयति दोहदान्नमदर्पयिनश्च प्रत्युपकारफलेन संयोजयति तद्वद्वसुरुद्रादित्या. पितर. पितृपितामहप्रपितामहशब्दवाच्या न केवलं देवदत्तादय एव। तदेते श्राद्धदेवता. श्राद्धकर्मणि समदानभूता. श्राद्धेन तर्पिताः सन्तो मनुष्याणां पितॄंस्तर्पयन्तीति। श्राद्धकल्पलता pp 3–4. The passage from न ह्यत्र देवदत्तादयः up to the end is taken almost verbatim from the Mit. on Yāj. I 268. The श्राद्धतत्त्व p 191 remarks 'वसुरुद्रादितिसुताः—इति एतद्वचनं तु तदाकारत्वेन भावनापरमिति श्राद्धविवेकादय.।'.

to perform it or is it because śrāddha produces no consequences or is it that it is not proved that pitṛs and the rest are gratified by śrāddha? To the first he replies that there are such passages as 'therefore a wise man must perform śrāddha with all his efforts' that lay down the obligation; nor is the 2nd objection proper, since Yāj. I. 269 does declare the rewards (of śrāddha) viz. long life &c. Nor is the third alternative acceptable. In the śrāddha rites it is not that the mere ancestors named Devadatta and the like are the recipients and that they are denoted by the words pitṛ, pitāmaha and prapitāmaha, but that those words denote them as accompanied by the superintending deities viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas. Just as by the words Devadatta and the like what is denoted is not merely the bodies (so named) nor merely the souls, but what is denoted by the words is individual souls as particularised by the bodies; in the same way the words pitṛ and the like denote Devadatta and others together with the superintending deities (viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas). Therefore, the superintending deities viz. the Vasus and the rest, being gratified by the food and drink offered by the sons and the rest, gratify those also viz. Devadatta and the rest and endow the performers (of śrāddha) with such rewards as male progeny and the rest. Just as a woman expecting to be a mother becomes gratified by partaking of the food and drink for which she has a longing in pregnancy and which is given to her by another person for the sustenance of the child in the womb, she satiates also the child in her womb and endows those that offer her the food and drink for which she has longings by bestowing on them some reward in return. Thus the pitṛs denoted by the words father, grandfather and great-grand-father are the deities Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas, and not merely (human beings called) Devadatta and the rest. Hence these deities of śrāddha become the recipients (of gifts) in the śrāddha rite, are gratified by the śrāddha and gratify in their turn the ancestors of human beings. The Śrāddha-kalpalatā then quotes 18 verses[756] from the

756. अन्नप्रकिरणं यत्तु मनुष्यैः क्रियते भुवि। तेन तृप्तिमुपायान्ति ये पिशाचत्वमागताः॥ यदम्बु स्नानवस्त्रोत्थं भूमौ पतति पुत्रक। तेन ये तरवस्तासास्तेषां तृप्तिः प्रजायते॥ यास्तु गन्धाम्बुकणिकाः पतन्ति धरणीतले। ताभिराप्यायनं तेषां ये देवत्वं कुले गताः॥ उच्छृतेष्वथ पिण्डेषु याश्चान्नकणिका भुवि। ताभिराप्यायनं तेषां ये तिर्यक्त्वं कुले गताः॥ ये बान्धवाः (चादन्ता.?) कुले बालाः क्रियायोग्या ह्यसंस्कृताः। विपन्नास्तेऽन्नविकिरसंमार्जनजलाशिनः॥ भुक्त्वा चाचामतां जलं यच्च जलं यच्चाङ्गिशोधने। ब्राह्मणानां तथैवान्ये तेन तृप्तिं प्रयान्ति वै॥ मार्कण्डेय 28. 8-13, स्कन्द VII I. 205 23-28 (with slight variations), ब्रह्मपुराण 220.89-95,

(Continued on the next page)

Mārkandeyapurāṇa many of which are found in chap. 28 (verses 3 ff) of the printed text. It is said[757] that just as a calf finds its own mother from among many cows that are scattered about, so the mantras repeated in śrāddha carry the food to the pitṛs.

The explanation offered by the Śrāddha-kalpalatā relying on passages of the Mārkandeyapurāṇa is not satisfactory and is rather far-fetched. The Mārkandeya and the Matsya appear to agree with the doctrine of Vedānta that immediately on leaving one body the soul has recourse to another body, either as a god or a man or a beast or a snake &c. The hypothesis propounded is that the food and drink offered in śrāddhas becomes transformed into various substances for the use of the ancestors (Matsya 141. 74–75). But the great difficulty in accepting this explanation is that the ancestors might die at different places, while śrāddha may very often be performed at one place far away from those places. It is difficult to believe that the grass growing in one place where the ancestor has been transformed into a beast as a result of his evil actions is the same that might have been produced from the substances offered in śrāddha at a place hundreds of miles away. Further, if one or all the three ancestors have been transformed into beasts or the like how can they recognize their offspring and bestow on them long life, wealth &c? If the Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas bestow these, it is better to say so directly and affirm that pitṛs cannot bestow quoted by स्मृतिच. (श्रा p 333.), श्राद्धसार p. 7 (the first three from मार्कण्डेय and the rest from ब्रह्मपुराण), श्रा क. ल p 5; नामगोत्रं पितॄणा तु मापकं हव्यकव्ययोः। नामगोत्रकालदेशा (नाममन्त्रास्तथा देशा) भवान्तरगतानपि॥ प्राणिनः प्रीणयन्त्येते तदाहारत्वमागतान्। देवो यदि पिता जातः क्षुधकर्मानुयोगत। तस्याऽन्नममृतं भूत्वा दिव्यत्वेऽप्युपतिष्ठति। वैरत्वे भोगरूपेण पशुत्वे च तृणं भवेत्। श्राद्धान्न वायुरूपेण सर्पत्वेऽप्युपतिष्ठति। पानं भवति यक्षत्वे राक्षसत्वे तथामिषम्। दनुजत्वे तथा माया (मांसं?) प्रेतत्वे रुधिरोदकम्। मनुष्यत्वेऽन्नरूपाणि नानाभोगरसं भवेत्॥ मत्स्य 19.4–9 (with changes in the order of verses) q as from मार्कण्डेय by स्मृतिच (श्रा. p.448), श्रा क ल pp. 5–6, निर्णयसिन्धु III p. 394 (from मत्स्य) Vide पद्म (सृष्टि 10. 38–43) for same verses with variations The गरुड (प्रेतखण्ड) 10. 4–7 are almost the same as those from देवो etc. to the end and गरुड (प्रेत० 10.12 and 15 are the same as the verses नामगोत्रं...तदाहारत्वमागतान्. The स्मृतिच. (श्रा. 448) explains: नामानि देवदत्तयज्ञदत्तादीनि मन्त्राः पृथिवी ते पात्रमित्यादयः आदेशा इदमन्नादिकमुष्मै भवत्विति एवमादिनिर्देशाः. मार्कण्डेय 29. 27–28 are similar.

---

(Continued from the last page)

757. यथा गोषु प्रनष्टासु वत्सो विन्दति मातरम्। तथा श्राद्धेषु हृद्यान्तो (दत्तान्नं?) मन्त्रः प्रापयते तु तम्॥ मत्स्य 141. 76, वायु 56. 85 and 83. 119–120, ब्रह्माण्ड, अनुषङ्गपाद 218. 90–91, उपोद्घातपाद 20. 12–13, q. by स्मृतिच (श्रा p. 448) which reads गोष्वनष्टासु and आदेशमुदितं), श्रा. क ल. p. 5 any thing on their progeny. It appears very probable that the worship of ancestors by means of śrāddhas was a very ancient institution and that the doctrines of punarjanma and karmavipāka were comparatively later ones and that Hinduism being all-embracing retained the institution of śrāddhas while adopting also the doctrine of metempsychosis. The institution of śrāddha is from one point of view an excellent one. It provides an occasion for remembrance of one's ancestors and relatives that were dear and near when living The Āryasamāja objects to the institution of śrāddha and interprets pitṛs in the Ṛgveda as meaning living men in the Vānaprastha stage. It may be noted that the texts support both views. The Śat. Br. expressly says that food is offered to the father of the sacrificer in the words 'this is for thee.' Viṣnu Dh. S. 75. 4 'He whose father is dead may put down a pinda for his father &c.' On the other hand Manu III. 284 states that fathers are spoken of as Vasus, grandfathers as Rudras &c and Yāj. I. 269 provides that Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas are the pitṛs and the devatās of śrāddha. These latter are to be explained as containing an injunction to contemplate upon the pitṛs as Vasus, Rudras &c.

As stated below (p. 347) with regard to the Ṛgvedic passages, it was on account of the supposed power of pitṛs to benefit or harm the living that the cult of the dead became a prominent feature in primitive societies. Offerings and ceremonies which may have in most ancient times been prompted in part at least by the desire to placate the ancestors are continued as tokens of pure affection and remembrance. Various beliefs about pitṛs are mentioned [758] in post-Vedic Literature. The Baud. Dh. S. II. 8. 14 summarizes a brāhmaṇa text stating that pitṛs move about in the form of birds. The Aṅgirasa-smṛti and Devala quoted by the Kalpataru say the same thing. In the Vāyu-purāṇa [759] it is stated that at the time of śrāddha the ancestors enter the brāhmanas (invited) after assuming an aerial form and that when the best of brāhmanas are honoured with clothes, foods, gifts, eatables, liquids, cows, horses and villages, pitrs become pleased. Manu III. 189 and the Aṅśanasa-smṛti also support this notion that pitrs enter the invited brāhmanas. The Matsyapurāna (18. 5–7) enjoins: pindas should be offered to the departed for twelve days after death, since they serve him as food on his journey and give him great satisfaction. Therefore, the soul leaving the dead body is not taken to the abode of the departed for twelve days (after death), the departed spirit hovers near his house, his sons, his wife for twelve days. Therefore for ten days after death milk (and water) should be placed (hung up) in space for ten nights for reducing all torments (or troubles of the departed) and for the removal of the fatigue of the journey (that the departed spirit has to make). The Viṣnudharmasūtra [760] (20. 34–36) provides "the departed spirit enjoys in the world of pitrs the food offered in śrāddha with the utterance of the word 'svadhā'; whether the departed is in the state of a god or in the place of torments (Hell) or in the form of a lower animal or a human being, the śrāddha food offered by his relatives reaches him; when śrāddha is performed, the performer and the departed soul both certainly secure vigour (or prosperity)."

758. वयसां पिण्डं दद्यात्। वयसां हि पितरः प्रतिमया चरन्तीति विज्ञायते। बौ. ध. सू. II.8.14; न च पश्येत काकादीन् पक्षिणस्तु न वारयेत्। तद्रूपाः पितरस्तत्र समायान्ति बुभुत्सवः॥ औशनस (Jiv. I. p. 531), न चात्र श्येनकाकादीन् पक्षिणः प्रतिषेधयेत्। तद्रूपाः पितरस्तत्र समायान्तीति वैदिकम्॥ देवल q. by कल्पतरु on श्राद्ध p. 17.

759. श्राद्धकाले तु सततं वायुभूताः पितामहाः। आविशन्ति द्विजान् दृष्ट्वा तस्मादेतद् ब्रवीमि ते॥ वन्यैस्तैः मदानैस्तैर्मद्यपेयैस्तथैव च। गोभिरश्वैस्तथा ग्रामै. पूजयित्वा द्विजोत्तमान्। भवन्ति पितरः प्रीताः पूजितेषु द्विजातिषु॥ तस्मादत्नेन विधिवत् पूजयेद् द्विजसत्तमान्। वायुपुराण 75.13–15 (= वायु. उत्तरार्ध 13.13–15, Venk. ed); ब्राह्मणास्ते समायान्ति पितरो ह्यन्तरिक्षगाः। वायुभूताश्च तिष्ठन्ति भुक्त्वा यान्ति परां गतिम्। औशनसस्मृति (Jiv. I. p. 526).

The Brahmapurāna [761] states that śrāddha is to be treated of under five heads, viz. how, where, when, by whom and with what materials. But before proceeding to deal with these five heads, it is necessary to dilate upon the underlying ideas and significance of the word 'pitarah' from the most ancient times of which we have literary records.

The word 'pitr' means 'father', but the word 'pitarah' is used in two senses, viz. (1) a man's three immediate deceased ancestors, (2) the early or ancient ancestors of the human race that were supposed to inhabit a separate world (loka) by themselves.[762] For this second meaning, vide Rg. X 14. 2 and 7, X.15.2 (translated above pp. 191–92, 194) and Rg. IX.97.39.[762a] 'That Soma which becomes stronger and stronger and makes others strong, that is strained through a strainer, that flows in a stream, protected us by means of the luminary (the Sun)—that Soma with whose help our ancestors knowing the place (where the cows were kept concealed) and the higher regions, harassed the mountain for (the sake of recovering) the cows.' In Rg. X. 15 1 the pitrs are said to be of three grades, lower, middling or higher. They are also said to be earlier and later ones (Rg. X. 15 2). They are all known to Agni, though all pitrs are not known to their descendants (Rg. X. 15 13). The pitṛs are divided into several groups such as Aṅgirasas, Vairūpas, Atharvans, Bhrgus, Navagvas and Daśagvas (Rg. X. 14. 5–6), the Angirasas being particularly associated with Yama who is invoked to come to the sacrifice along with the Angirasas (Rg. X. 14. 3–5). In Rg. I.[763] 62. 2 it is said: 'through whose (Indra's) help our ancient ancestors (pitarah), the Angirasas, who sang his praises and who knew the place, found out the cows.' The pitṛs called Angiras were, it appears, again subdivided into two classes viz. Navagva and Daśagva[764] both of which words occur in Rg. I. 62 4, V. 39. 12 and X. 62. 6. In several passages the ancient fathers are identified with the seven sages[765] as in Rg. IV. 42.8 and VI. 22. 2 and sometimes the Navagvas and Daśagvas also are said to be the seven sages (Rg I. 62 4). Angirasas are said to be the sons of Agni (Rg. X. 62. 5) and also of Heaven (Rg. IV. 2. 15). The pitrs are often said to regale themselves in the company of gods,

760 पितृलोकगतश्चान्नं श्राद्धे भुक्ते स्वधासमम्। पितृलोकगतस्यापि तस्माच्छ्राद्धं प्रयच्छत॥ देवत्वे यातनास्थाने तिर्यग्योनौ तथैव च। मानुष्ये च तथामोति श्राद्धं दत्तं स्वबान्धवैः। प्रेतस्य श्राद्धकर्तुश्च पुष्टिः श्राद्धे कृते ध्रुवम्। तस्माच्छ्राद्धं सदा कार्यं शोकं त्यक्त्वा निरर्थकम्॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 20. 34–36 Compare मार्कण्डेय 23.49–51 (Venk. ed) for similar verses

761. शृणुध्वं मुनिशार्दूला श्राद्धकल्पं सुविस्तरात्। यथा यत्र यदा येषु (v. l. येन) चैर्द्रव्यैस्तद्ददाम्यहम्॥ ब्रह्मपुराण 220. 2.

762. This idea is at least Indo-Iranian, if not Indo-European. The ancient Parsi scriptures speak of Fravashis that were originally the same as pitrs of ancient Hindu works or the Manes among the ancient Romans. They were the everlasting and deified souls of the dead Gradually the meaning of Fravashi was extended and even Gods and objects like the Earth and the sky were supposed to have each a Fravashi. Vide S. B E. vol 4 p. 262 for the Fravashis of the holy Yama and for the different classes of Fravashis, also S. B. E. vol 23 pp. 180, 184, 230.

762 a येना न. पूर्वे पितर. पदज्ञा स्वर्विदो अभि गा अद्रिमुष्णन्॥ ऋ X. 97 39.

763 येना न. पूर्वे पितरः पदज्ञा अर्चन्तो अङ्गिरसो गा अविन्दन्॥ ऋ I. 62.2

764. नवग्वास' सुतसोमास इन्द्रं दशग्वासो अभ्यर्चन्त्यर्कैः। ऋ. V. 39 12, ये अग्ने. परि जज्ञिरे विरूपासो दिवस्परि। नवग्वो नु दशग्वो अङ्गिरस्तमः सचा देवेषु मंहते॥ ऋ X 62.6.

765 अस्माकमत्र पितरस्त आसन सप्त ऋषयो दौर्गहे बध्यमाने। ऋ IV. 42 8; तद्व न. पूर्वे पितरो नवग्वा. सप्त विप्रासो अभि वाजयन्तः। ऋ VI. 22 2.

particularly of Yama (Rg VII. 76. 4, X. 14 10, X. 15. 8-10) [766] The pitrs are said to be fond of Soma drink (Rg. X. 15. 1 and 5, IX. 97 39), they lie down on kuśa grass (Rg X. 15.5), they come with Agni and Indra to partake of the offerings (Rg X. 15. 10 and X. 16. 12) and Agni is also said to carry the offerings to the pitrs (Rg X. 15. 12). Fire is supposed to take the spirit of a cremated person to the pitrs (Rg. X 16. 1-2, 5=A. V. 18. 2. 10, Rg X. 17. 3). In later works also (e. g. in Mārk. chap. 45), Brahmā is supposed to have created in the beginning four classes viz. gods, asuras, pitrs and human beings Vide also Brahmāndapurāna, Prakriyā, chap. 8, and upodghāta chap. 9. 35 (ityete pitaro devā devāśca pitaraḥ punaḥ anyonyapitaro hyete).

It was supposed that the departed spirit, after the cremation of the body, was endowed with an ethereal body and became associated with Yama, the gatherer of departed men (Rg. X. 14.1 and 8, X. 15.14, X.16 5), and with pitrs. The departed spirit went to the world of the pitrs and Agni was implored to take the spirit to the world of the departed whose deeds were good and to the stride of Visnu (Rg. X. 14. 9, X. 15. 3, X. 16. 4).

Although Yama is said to dwell in heaven (divi) in Rg. X. 64. 3, he is really a god of the middle region, as the Nirukta states. [767] The Atharvaveda states [768] 'let us worship with obeisance the fathers and grandfathers of our father, that enter the wide middle regions, that dwell on the earth and in heaven.' In Rg. I. 35. 6 [769] it is said there are three worlds; two of them (Heaven and earth) are in the lap of Savitr; one (i. e. the middle region) is in the domain of Yama where departed spirits congregate. 'The great Luminary (the Sun) has risen, a gift of the pitrs' (Rg X. 107. 1). In the Tai Br. I. 3. 10. 5 [770]

---

766 त इद्देवाना सधमाद् आसन्नृतावान कवय. पूर्व्यास.। गूळ्ह ज्योतिः पितरो अन्वविन्दन् सत्यमन्त्रा अजनयन्नुषासम्॥ ऋ VII. 76 4, अथा पितॄन् सुविदत्राँ उपेहि यमेन ये सधमादं मदन्ति॥ ऋ. X. 14,10=अथर्व 18.2 11.

767. माध्यमिको यम इत्याहु। तस्मान् माध्यमिकान् पितॄन् मन्यन्ते। निरुक्त XI.18. The Egyptian legend of Osiris presents many of the details connected with Yama. Vide Vulliamy's 'Immortal man,' chap V pp 140-143

768. ये न पितु· पितरो ये पितामहा य आविविशुरुर्वन्तरिक्षम्। य आक्षियन्ति पृथिवीमुत द्यां तेभ्य. पितृभ्यो नमसा विधेम॥ अथर्ववेद 18 2 49.

769 तिस्रो द्याव सवितुर्द्वा उपस्थाँ एका यमस्य भुवने विराषाट्। ऋ. I 35 6.

770 तृतीये वा इतो लोके पितर। तै. ब्रा. I. 3 10 5, अथ त्रयो वाव लोका मनुष्यलोकः पितृलोको देवलोक इति सोऽयं मनुष्यलोक· पुत्रेणैव जय्यो नान्येन कर्मणा कर्मणा पितृलोको विद्यया देवलोको देवलोको वै लोकानां श्रेष्ठस्तस्माद्विद्या प्रशंसन्ति। बृह. उ. I. 5.16.

it is said that the pitrs dwell in the third world from this. This means that after bhūloka and antarikṣa comes the pitṛloka. In the Br. Up. I. 5.16 three worlds of men, pitrs and gods are separately mentioned. In Rg. X. 135. 1–7, Yama is spoken of in somewhat different language. He is in this hymn mentioned as a god by himself and not as the first mortal who made a path (Rg. X. 14. 2) or as the gatherer of men (X 14. 1) or as being in company of the pitrs In a few other places Yama is no doubt called rājan and praised in the same breath with Varuna (Rg. X. 14. 7). But such a position is very rarely mentioned. For the further development of Yama and his assistants as the punishers of men for evil deeds, vide pp. 159–160 above and notes 381–386.

There is another division of pitrs viz. pitarah somavantah,[771] pitarah barhiṣadah, pitarah agniṣvāttāh The latter two are named in Rg X. 15 4 and 11 (which occur also in Tai. S. II. 6. 12. 2). The Śat. Br. defines these as follows.—"those that performed a soma sacrifice are pitarah somavantah; those that offered cooked oblations (like caru and puroḍāśa) and secured a world are pitarah barhiṣadah; those that did none of these (two actions) and whom fire consumes when burning them are 'pitarah agniṣvāttāh;' these are the only ones that are pitarah." The Tai.[772] Br. has a somewhat similar passage and the Kāthaka Samhitā IX. 6. 17 also refers to these three kinds of pitrs. Later writers introduced certain changes in the meanings of the words for the different classes of pitṛs and also increased the number of the classes of pitrs. For example, the Nandipurāna q. by Hemādri states: the pitṛs of brāhmanas are called 'agniṣvātta', those of ksatriyas 'barhisadah', those of vaiśyas 'kāvyas', those of śūdras 'sukālin' and those of mlecchas and untouchables are called 'vyāma'.[773] Even Manu

771. तद्ये सोमेनेजानाः। ते पितर. सोमवन्तोऽथ ये दक्षेन पक्केन लोकं जयन्ति ते पितरो बर्हिषदोऽथ ये ततो नान्यतरञ्चन यानग्निरेव दहन्त्स्वदयति ते पितरोऽग्निष्वात्ताः। एत उ ते ये पितर.। शतपथब्रा II 6 1 7

772. पितॄन् बर्हिषदो यजति ये वै यज्ञान. । . पितॄनग्निष्वात्तान् यजति ये वा अयज्ञानो गृहमेधिन.। ते पितरो अग्निष्वात्ता । अग्निं कव्यवाहनं यजति य एव पितॄणामग्नि । तस्मादा तृतीयात्पुरुषात्सामानि गृह्णन्ति। एतावन्तो ह्रीज्यन्ते। तै. ब्रा I 6.9.5 वायुपुराण (30.6–7) echoes this 'अग्निष्वात्ता' स्मृतास्ते वै पितरोऽनाहिताग्नयः। यज्वानस्तेषु ये ह्यासन् पितर. सोमपीथिन.। स्मृता बर्हिषदस्ते वै पितरोऽनाहिताग्नय.'.

773. अग्निष्वात्ता ब्राह्मणानां पितरः परिकीर्तिताः। राज्ञां बर्हिषदो नाम विशां काव्याः प्रकीर्तिताः॥ सुकालिनस्तु शूद्राणां व्याम म्लेच्छान्त्यजातिषु। q. by अप. प. p 11 from हेमाद्रि, compare मनु III. 197.

(III. 193–198) mentions several classes of pitṛs, connects pitṛs called Somapās, Havirbhujah Ājyapās and Sukālins with the four varnas and in III. 199 states that the pitṛs of brāhmanas are designated as Anagnidagdha, Agnidagdha, Kāvya, Barhisad, Agnisvātta and Saumya Those verses of Manu appear to summarize different traditions about the several classes of pitṛs Vide Matsyapurāna 141. 4 for the same last four names and 141. 15–18 for their definitions. In Śātātapasmrti (VI. 5–6) twelve groups or divisions of pitṛs are mentioned viz. pindabhājah (three), lepabhājah (three), Nāndīmukhas (three) and Aśrumukhas (three). This is a classification of pitṛs from two different standpoints. In Vāyu 72.1 and 73 60, Brahmānda (Upodghāta 9 53), Padma V. 9 2–3, Visnudharmottara I. 138 2–3 and other Purānas the classes of pitṛs are said to be seven, three of which are formless (amūrtimat) and four have forms (mūrtimat) and they and their offspring are described in detail. All this is passed over here. The Skandapurāna (VI. 216. 9–10) speaks of nine groups of pitṛs, being Agnisvāttāh, Barhisadah, Ājyapāh, Somapāh, Rasmipāh, Upahūtāh, those called 'āyantunah', Śrāddhabhujah, Nāndīmukhāh. In this list old and new elements are mixed up The Indian mind often revels in divisions, sub-divisions and classifications without much basis therefor and this is probably an illustration of that tendency. Manu (III 201) states that from the sages the pitṛs sprang, from the pitṛs sprang gods and human beings and from the gods arose the whole world whether moving or immovable. It is remarkable that here the gods are spoken of as springing from the pitṛs This is really a mere eulogy of pitṛs (i. e. it is an arthavāda).

The pitṛs were in a class apart from the gods. On the meaning of the word 'pañcajanāh' occurring in Rg. X. 774 53. 4

774. पञ्च जना मम होत्रं जुषध्वम्। गन्धर्वाः पितरो देव असुरा रक्षासीत्येके। चत्वारो वर्णा निषाद. पञ्चम इत्यौपमन्यवः। निरुक्त III. 8. The ऐ. ब्रा. 13.7 has 'तत्पञ्च जनाना सुवर्गं देवमनुष्याणा गन्धर्वाप्सरसा सर्पाणा च पितृणां च' The real meaning of पञ्चजना is the same as that of पञ्चकृष्टय. (in Rg X 60 4), पञ्च क्षितीर्मानुषी (Rg VII 79.1), पञ्च चर्षणी. (Rg. V. 86 2) and we have यत् पाञ्चजन्यया विशा in Rg VIII. 63 7. पञ्चजनाः means विशः, the whole Aryan people divided probably into five classes. By the time of the Ait. Br. the original meaning of पञ्चजना was probably forgotten. The वेदान्तसूत्र (I. 4. 11–13) explains that the expression पञ्चजनाः occurring in Br. Up. IV 4 17 refers to Prāna, Caksuh (eye), ear, food and mind occurring in the next verse (Br. Up IV. 4 18). Śankarācārya in his bhāsya on Vedāntasūtra I. 4.12 states that the word पञ्चजन in Rg. VIII 63 7 means prajā (people).

(pañcajanā mama hotram juṣadhvam) and other passages, the Ait. Br. (13.7 or 3.31) explains that they are the five classes, viz. Gandharvas with Apsarases, pitṛs, devas, sarpas and rākṣasas. The Nirukta III. 8 partly follows this explanation and also gives another. In the Atharvaveda X. 6. 32 the gods, pitṛs and men are mentioned in that order. The ancient Vedic texts and practice make a sharp distinction between the Gods and the Pitṛs. The Tai. S. VI. 1. 1. 1 states: 'the gods and men divided the quarters, the gods took the east, pitṛs the south, men the west and Rudras the north.' The general rule is that sacrifices for gods are begun in the forenoon, while the pitṛ-yajña is performed in the afternoon (Śān Br.).[775] The Śat Br. II. 4. 2. 2 narrates that the pitṛs wearing the sacred thread over the right shoulder (and under the left arm) and bending their left knee approached Prajāpati, when Prajāpati said to them 'you will have food at (the end of) each month (on the Amāvāsyā), your svadhā (cordial) will be swiftness of thought and the moon will be your light,' while to the gods he had said that sacrifice will be their food and the sun their light. The Tai. Br. [776] I. 3. 10. 4 appears to make a distinction between pitṛs who are of the nature and position of gods and pitṛs that are more or less like human beings.

The Kauśika-sūtra (1. 9–23) neatly collects in one place the difference in the procedure of the rites meant for gods and for pitṛs. The performer of rites for gods wears the sacred thread on the left shoulder and under the right armpit, while in the case of the rites for pitṛs it is worn on the right shoulder and under the left arm; the rite for gods is either begun facing the east or north, while that for the pitṛs is begun facing the south; the rite for gods is finished in the north-east (or north or east), while that for the pitṛs is completed in the south-west; an action is done only once for pitṛs, while for gods at least thrice or as many times as the texts direct; in going round (perambulating) the right side is turned towards gods and the left one in the case of pitṛs; offerings are made to gods with the words 'svāhā' and 'vasaṭ', while they are made to pitṛs with 'svadhā' and 775. अथ यदपराह्णे पितृयज्ञेन चरन्ति अपक्षयभाजो वै पितर । शा. ब्रा. V. 6.

776. देवान् वै पितॄन् प्रीतान् मन्वप्या पितरोऽनुप्रपिपते । तिस्र आहुतीर्जुहोति त्रिर्निदधाति । पद् वै सम्पद्यन्ते । षड् वा ऋतव. । ऋतवः खलु वै देवा. पितरः । ऋतूनेव देवान् पितॄन् च प्रीणाति । तान् प्रीतान्मन्वप्या. पितरोऽनुप्रपिपते । तै ब्रा. I. 3, 10 4 (com explains अनुप्रपिपते as प्रीता भवन्ति). This is alluded to in the वायुपुराण 30, 4 'मध्वादय षड् व त इस्तान् पितन्परिचक्षते । ऋतवः पितरो देवा इत्येषा वैदिकी श्रुतिः ॥ '

'namaskāra'; the darbhas employed in rites for Fathers are those that are taken out from the earth with their roots, while for gods darbhas used are cut a little above the roots. The Baud. Śr. II. 2. also mentions some of these in one place [777]. The Rgveda itself (in X. 14. 3 'svāhānye svadhayānye madanti') marks this distinction in the words employed at the offerings to Gods and Pitrs. The Śat Br. (II. 1, 3. 4 and II. 1. 4. 9) speaks of the gods as immortal and of the Fathers as mortal.

Though the gods and pitrs are placed in separate classes, still the pitrs partake of some characteristics of the divine. As Rg X. 15 8 shows, the pitrs drank Soma. In Rg. X. 68 11 it is said that the pitrs adorned the sky with naksatras (naksatrebhih pitaro dyām-apimsan) and placed darkness in the night and light in the day. The pitrs are said to have found out the light that was secreted and to have produced the Dawn (Rg VII. 76. 4). Here the pitrs are credited with powers possessed by the highest gods. The pitrs are invoked with affection and regard for conferring various boons and their favour is sought in various ways. In Rg. X. 14. 6 the good will (sumati) and favour (saumanasa) of the pitrs are sought. In Rg X. 15. 1 and 5 the protection of pitrs is sought. They are requested to grant happiness unmixed with trouble (Rg X. 15. 4.), to bestow wealth on the sacrificer (Rg X. 15. 7 and 11) and on his son. Rg X. 15. 11 and A. V. 18 3 14[778] seek the bestowal of wealth and heroic sons. A. V. 14 2 73 says 'May the pitrs who throng round the bride to see her grant her happiness endowed with progeny.'[779] In the Vāj S. II 33 occurs the well-known mantra 'Oh pitrs' deposit (in this wife) an 777. मागधवर्गाण्युदग्गपवर्गाणि वा माध्यम. प्रदक्षिण यज्ञोपवीती दैवानि दर्भाणि हरति। दक्षिणाग्रमसक्थं प्राचीनावीती पित्र्याणि। बौ श्रौ II 2.

778 परा यात पितर आ च यातवं वो वहो मघवा समस्तु। इत्था कृण्वते मह्यं भद्रं रयिं च न सर्ववीरं दधात। अथर्ववेद 18. 3 14

779. ये पितरो वधूदर्शं इमं वहतुमागमन्। ते अस्यै वर्षं सख्यं प्रजामूर्जं दधातु। अथर्व 14. 2 73.

780 आधत्त पितरो गर्भं कुमारं पुष्करस्रजम्। यथेह पुरुषोऽसत्। ह गार्ह में II 7 The खादिरगृह्य III 5 30 provides 'मध्यमे पित्र्ये पुरुषान्तरे आधत्तेति ...' गोभिलगृह्य IV 3 27 and also कौशिकसूत्र 89 6 The तैत्तिरीय श्रौ II 7 13 reads ... आधत्तेदाधत्त पितरो गर्भं कुमारं पुष्करस्रजम्। यथायमरपा असत्'. The Āśvin are called पुष्करस्रजौ and so in पुष्करस्रजं the idea is that the son may be long-lived and ... यथेह ...असत् may be explained as 'येन प्रकारेन इह स्त्रियां पुत्रो दीर्घजीवी भवेत्' भोजदेवविरचिता भूयात् तथा गर्भमाधत्त।' आश्वलायनगृह्य of शाङ्खायन says आधत्तेति मध्यमेऽह्नि पत्नी आधत्ते पुष्करस्रजम् embryo, a child that (will wear later) a garland of lotuses so that he may become a grown-up male' repeated when the wife of the performer of the śrāddha eats the middle one out of the three pindas. It should not be, however, supposed that the element of fear of the pitṛs is altogether wanting.[780a] For example, Rg. X. 15. 6 prays 'whatever fault we may commit in reference to you through our being (erring) men do not injure us for that.' In Rg. III. 55. 2 we read 'May the gods and the ancient pitrs who know the place (of the cows or the path) not harm us here.' In Rg. X. 66. 14 it is said 'the Vasisthas praising the gods fashioned speech (hymns) like pitṛs and like sages.' Here pitrs and rsis are separate groups and Vasisthas are compared to both.[780b]

In many passages of the Vedic Literature the word pitāmah is applied to the three immediate deceased male ancestors of a man. 'Therefore up to three generations they specify (the ancestors) by name; for so many are the ones to whom sacrifice is offered' (vide n. 772 above). The Śat. Br. II 4. 2. 19[781] mentions the presentation formulas of the cakes to the father, grand-father and great-grand-father and 780 a Compare Vullıamy's 'Immortal man' (pp. 24–25) for fear and affection as the elements of the attitude towards the dead among primitive as well as civilized men.

---

780 b देवाः सौम्याश्च काव्याश्च अयज्वानो ह्ययोनिजा'। देवास्ते पितरः सर्वे देवास्तान्वादयन्युत ॥ मनुष्यपितरश्चैव तेभ्योऽन्ये लौकिकाः स्मृताः। पिता पितामहश्चैव तथा यः प्रपितामह.॥ ब्रह्माण्डपुराण II 28.70–71; अङ्गिराश्च क्रतुश्चैव कश्यपश्च महाऋषि । एते कुरुकुलश्रेष्ठ महायोगेश्वरा. स्मृताः। एते च पितरो राजन्नेष आद्धविधिः परः । प्रेतास्तु पिण्ड-सम्बन्धान्मुच्यन्ते तेन कर्मणा ॥ अनु 92 21–22 This last shows that ancient sages like अंगिरस्, क्रतु and कश्यप are पितृs to whom water is offered (and no पिण्डs), while pindas are offered to one's immediate deceased ancestors.

781. स ददाति। असावेतत्त इत्येव यजमानस्य पित्रे ये च त्वामन्वित्थु हैके आहुस्तदु तथा न ब्रूयात् स्वय वै तेषा सह येषा सह तस्माद् ब्रूयादसावेतत्त इत्येव यजमानस्य पित्रे असावेतत्ते इति पितामहायासावेतत्त इति प्रपितामहाय। तद्यदितः पराग्ददाति सकृदु ह्येव पराञ्च पितरः। शतपथ II 8.4 2. The तै सं. I 8 5 1 is: सोमाय पितृमते पुरोडाशं षट्कपालं निर्वपति पितृभ्यो बर्हिषद्भ्यो धाना. पितृभ्योऽग्निष्वात्तेभ्योऽभिवान्याये द्रुग्धे मन्थम्। एतत् ते तत ये च त्वामनु एतत् ते पितामह प्रपितामह ये च त्वामनु अत्र पितरो यथाभागं मन्दध्वम्। Again in तै. सं III 2.5 5 occurs the passage 'एतत्ते तत...मन्दध्वम्'. This is carried on to later times as in अनु० 92 15 'सोमायेति च वक्तव्यं तथा पितृमतेति च'. Vide also अथर्व० 18. 4. 71–77 'अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम । सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नम । पितृभ्य सोमवद्भ्य. स्वधा नम. । यमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः। एतत्ते प्रतत्तामह स्वधा ये च त्वामनु। एतत्ते ततामह स्वधा ये च त्वामनु। एतत्ते तत स्वधा।' In Rg IX 11 2 3 कारुरहं ततो भिषक्, तत means 'father'. नपात् (=पौत्र) and प्रणपात् (प्रपौत्र) occur in Rg. VIII. 17.13.

then states that the performer mutters the words "here, O fathers! regale yourselves, like bulls come here each to his own share' (Vāj. S II. 31 first half). Some (such as Tai. S. I. 8. 5. 1) repeated the formula "this here (ball of rice) is for thee and (for those) that come after thee." But the Śat. Br. emphatically says that he should not offer with this formula, but rather with the formula 'this here is for thee.' In Śat. Br. XII. 8. 1. 7 the three immediate paternal ancestors are said to be svadhā-loving. Relying on these Vedic passages and on the fact that Manu (III. 221) and Viṣnudharmasūtra (21. 3, 75. 4) prescribe the invocation of pitṛs after mentioning their gotra and names that the Śrāddhaprakāśa (p 13) concludes that it is really the father and the other ancestors that are the deities of śrāddha and not Vasu, Rudra and Āditya, since these latter have no gotra and that the description of the father and others as Vasu, Rudra and Āditya is meant only for contemplation (on them as identical with Vasus &c.). On a passage of the Brahmapurāna [782] prescribing that the performer should say to the invited brāhmanas that he would call the pitṛs to the rites and that when the brāhmanas give permission to call them he should do so, the Śr. P. (p. 204) remarks that the pitṛs here meant are the divine ones viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas and also the human ones viz. the performer's father and the rest. The Vāyupurāna (56 65-66) Brahmānda and Anu. distinguish between pitṛs who are above and pitṛs who are laukika, viz father, grand-father and great-grand-father. Vide also Vāyu 70. 34 for pitṛs that are like gods.

In the post-Vedic Literature, particularly in the Purānas, a great deal is said about the origin and classes of pitṛs. For example, the Vāyupurāna 56. 18 speaks of three classes of pitṛs viz 'kāvyāh, barhisadah and agnisvāttāh', while the same Purāna, chap. 73, Varāha 13. 16 ff, Padma (Srsti 9. 2-4) and Brahmānda III. 10 1 speak of the origin of pitṛs of seven classes that dwell in heaven, four of which have a form (mūrtimat) and three of which are without form (amūrta). The Śātātapa-smṛti (6. 5-6) speaks of 12 pitṛs viz. pindabhājah, lepabhājah, nāndīmukhāh and aśrumukhāh. All such descriptions have to be passed over from considerations of space.

782. ब्रह्मपुराणे। पितॄनावाहयामीति स्वयमुक्त्वा समाहित। आवाहयस्वेति परैरुक्तस्त्वावाहयेच्छुचि॥ पितरो दिव्याः वसुरुद्रादित्याः मानुषाः यजमानस्य पित्रादयः। आ. प्र p. 204.

From the sūtra period (about 600 B. C) to the most modern among medieval Dharmaśāstra works the authors wax eloquent over the praises or the importance or benefits of the institution of śrāddhas. One of the earliest works among these, viz. the Āp. Dh. S gives the following interesting information:[783] "Formerly men and gods lived together in this world. The gods went to heaven owing to sacrifices (i. e. as a reward of sacrifices that they performed), but men remained behind. Those among men who perform sacrifices in the same way as the gods did, dwell in the other world (i. e. heaven) with the gods and Brahman. Then (seeing that men lagged behind) Manu promulgated the rite which is designated by the word 'śrāddha' and which tends to the salvation (or happiness) of mankind. In this rite the Manes (pitarah) are the deities but the brāhmanas (that are fed) are in the place of the āhavanīya fire (in which in sacrifices to gods oblations are offered)". On account of this last sūtra Haradatta (com. of Āp. Dh. S.) and others hold that feeding the brāhmanas is the principal act at a śrāddha. The Brahmāndapurāna (Upodghātapāda 9, 15. and 10. 99) speaks of Manu as the promulgator of śrāddha rites and Visnupurāna III. 1 30, Vāyu 44. 38 and Bhāgavata III. 1. 22 designate Manu as Śrāddha-deva. Similarly, in the Śāntiparva 345.[784] 14–21 and the Visnu-dharmottara I.139 14–16 it is stated that the institution of śrāddha was established in the Boar incarnation by Visnu and that Visnu should be regarded as dwelling in the three pindas offered to the father, grand-father and great-grandfather From this and from the passage of the Āp. Dh. S cited above we may infer that it was believed even several centuries before Christ that the institution of śrāddhas had a hoary antiquity behind it and that it was as old as Manu, the father of mankind according to the Rgveda (VIII. 63. 1, VIII 30. 3.). It is, however, very remarkable that the word 'śrāddha' itself does not occur in any undoubtedly authentic and ancient Vedic passage, though the rite called Pindapitr-yajña[785] (performed on the amāvāsyā of each month by an

783. सह देवमनुष्या अस्मिँल्लोके पुरा बभुवु:। अथ देवा कर्मभिर्दिव जग्मुरहीयन्त मनुष्या:। तेषा ये तथा कर्माण्यारभन्ते सह देवैर्ब्रह्मणा चास्मिँल्लोके भवन्ति। अथैतन्मनु. श्राद्धशब्दं कर्म शंसाच्च। प्रजानि श्रेयसाय च। तत्र पितरो देवता ब्राह्मणस्त्वाहवनीयार्थे। आप ध सू II 7 16. 1-3

784. पिता पितामहश्चैव तथैव प्रपितामहः। अहमेवात्र विज्ञेयस्त्रिषु पिण्डेषु संश्रित। शान्ति 345 21, q by श्रा प्र p. 11.

785 That पिण्डपितृयज्ञ is a श्राद्ध is stated by गोभिलगृह्य IV 4. 1-2 'अन्वष्टक्यस्थालीपाकेन पिण्डपितृयज्ञो व्याख्यात.। अमावास्यां तच्छ्राद्धमितरदन्वाहार्यम्।.' Vide श्रा प्र p. 4 for the same For a description of पिण्डपितृयज्ञ, vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 1085–1090, for महापितृयज्ञ ibid. pp. 1101–1103.

Āhitāgni), the Mahāpitryajña (performed in the Cāturmāsya called Sākamedha) and the rites called Astakās were known to the early Vedic literature. The word śrāddha occurs in the Kathopanisad (1. 3. 17) 'whoever proclaims this highly esoteric doctrine in an assembly of brāhmanas or at the time of śrāddha tends to secure immortality.'[786] The other early occurrences of the word śrāddha known to me are confined to the sūtra literature. The most reasonable and probable inference to be drawn from these facts is this that only a few rites (mentioned just above) were known as related to the pitrs and that therefore no need arose for a generic term in very ancient times to comprehend several rites for the pitrs. But when the number of rites in honour of pitrs increased, the generic term 'śrāddha' was hit upon.

A few samples of the panegyrics on śrāddha may be set out here. The Baud.[787] Dh S. states that rites for the Fathers confer long life, heaven, fame and prosperity. The Harivamśa[788] says 'the world derives support from śrāddha and Yoga (i. e. Moksa) springs from it.' Sumantu[789] quoted in the Smrticandrikā (śrāddha p. 333) states 'nothing else is declared to be more beneficial than śrāddha.' The Visnupurāna (III. 14. 1–4) avers that if a man performs śrāddha with faith he thereby propitiates Brahmā, Indra, Rudra and the other gods, sages, birds, men, beasts, creeping animals, hosts of pitrs and whatever else is styled a being and the whole world. Yāj. I. 270[790] promising long life and several other benefits arising from gratifying pitrs has already been quoted above (p. 337). Yama has a similar verse. It is said in a passage of the Visnudharmottara[791] quoted by the Śrāddhasāra (p. 6) and Śrāddhaprakāśa (pp 11–12) that the pinda offered to the 786. य इमं परमं गुह्यं श्रावयेद् ब्रह्मसंसदि। प्रयतः श्राद्धकाले वा तदानन्त्याय कल्पते॥ कठ० I. 3. 17.

787. पित्र्यमायुष्यं स्वर्ग्यं यशस्यं पुष्टिकर्म च। बौ. ध. सू. II. 8 1

788. श्राद्धे प्रतिष्ठितो लोक श्राद्धे योगः प्रवर्तते॥ हरिवंश I. 21. 1.

789. श्राद्धात्परतरं नान्यच्छ्रेयस्करमुदाहृतम्। तस्मात्सर्वप्रयत्नेन श्राद्धं कुर्याद्विचक्षणः॥ सुमन्तु q. by स्मृतिच (श्रा) p. 333.

790. आयुः पुत्रान् यशः स्वर्गं कीर्तिं पुष्टिं बलं श्रियः। पशून् सौख्यं धनं धान्यं प्राप्नुयात्पितृपूजनात्॥ यम q. by स्मृतिच (श्रा. p. 333), श्राद्धसार p. 5. Similar verses are या I. 270 (= Mārkandeyapurāna 32.38) and शङ्ख 14 33.

791. पूजितैस्तैर्भवेद्विष्णुः चतुरात्मा तथाऽव्ययः। पितृपैतामहः पिण्डो वासुदेवः प्रकीर्तितः। पैतामहश्च निर्दिष्टस्तथा सङ्कर्षणः प्रभुः। पितृपिण्डश्च विज्ञेयः प्रद्युम्नश्चापराजितः। आत्मा-निरुद्धो विज्ञेयः पिण्डनिर्वपणे बुधैः॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 139.20–22, q. by श्राद्धसार p. 6 and श्राद्धम. pp. 11–12.

great-grandfather is declared to be god Vāsudeva himself, the one to the grandfather is designated Sankarsana, that to the father is known as Pradyumna and the offerer of the pindas is himself in the position of Aniruddha. In Śāntiparva 345. 21 it is stated that Visnu should be looked upon as staying in the three pindas. In the Kūrmapurāna it is stated 'on the day of Amāvāsyā the pitrs assuming an aerial form come to the door of their former haunt and mark whether śrāddha is being performed by men of their family. This they do till sunset. When the sun sets, being oppressed by hunger and thirst, they become full of despair and feel sorrow, breathe heavily for a long time and go away condemning their descendants. The pitrs of him who does not offer śrāddha on amāvāsyā, even with water or vegetables, go away after cursing him'.

It is necessary to say a few words about the derivation of the word 'śrāddha'. That the word is derived from 'śraddhā' is quite clear. In the definition quoted above from the Brahmapurāna and the definition [792] given by Marīci and Bṛhaspati the connection of śrāddha with śraddhā is emphasized. In śrāddha one entertains the firm faith or conviction that what is given up to the brāhmanas for the benefit of the departed man or the Fathers will reach him or them in some way. The Skandapurāna VI. 218.3 says that śrāddha is so called because śraddhā is the root (or main spring) of that rite. This means that there is not only the conviction stated above but that there is a firm belief that a person is under an obligation to offer it. Śraddhā is deified and addressed as a deity in Rg. [793] X. 151. 1-5, the first verse of which is explained in the Nirukta (IX. 31). The word also occurs in Rg. II. 26. 3, VII. 32. 14, VIII. 1. 31, IX. 113. 4. In some verses the two components of the word 'śraddhā' (viz. 'śrat' and 'dhā') are separated without any change in the meaning For example, in Rg. II. 12. 5 (= A. V. 20. 34. 5) it is said 'Have faith in him; O people! he is Indra'. In Rg. X. 147. 1, addressed to Indra, we have 'I have faith in that high wrath of yours &c.' (śratte dadhāmi

792. प्रेतं पितॄंश्च निर्दिश्य भोज्यं यत्रियमात्मनः। श्रद्धया दीयते यत्र तच्छ्राद्धं परिकीर्तितम्॥ मरीचि quoted from the पृथ्वीचन्द्रोदय by निर्णयसिन्धु III. p. 372, श्रा. म p 7, संस्कृतं व्यञ्जनाढ्यं च पयोमधुघृतान्वितम्। श्रद्धया दीयते यस्माच्छ्राद्धं तेन निगद्यते॥ बृहस्पति q. by हेमाद्रि p. 152, अपरार्क p. 501, कल्पतरु (श्रा. p. 176), श्रा. म. p. 3, श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 189 quotes it as पुलस्त्यस्य.

793. श्रद्धयाग्निः समिध्यते श्रद्धया हूयते हविः। श्रद्धां भगस्य मूर्धनि वचसो वेदयामसि॥ ऋ X. 151. 1 prathamāya manyave). In the Tai S VII 4. 1 1 it is[794] said "Bṛhaspati desired 'may the gods put faith in me, may I reach the position of being their priest'". Vide also Rg. I. 103. 5. Śrat and śraddhā are both mentioned in the Nighantu (III. 10) as meaning 'satya'. In the Vāj. S. 19 77 we are told that Prajāpati put Śraddhā in truth and aśraddhā in falsehood, while in Vāj. S. 19.30, it is said that truth is obtained by śraddhā.

In the post-vedic Literature, Pāṇini explains the forms 'śrāddhin' and 'śrāddhika' in V. 2 85, in the sense of 'one who has eaten a śrāddha dinner' The word 'śrāddha' may be derived from śraddhā according to Pāṇ. V. 1. 109[795]. Śraddhā is variously defined In the bhāṣya on Yogasūtra I. 20, 'śraddhā' is defined as the composure of the mind[796] (or mental approval). Devala defines śraddhā: 'confidence (in the efficacy) of religious acts is called śraddhā, one who has no faith has no reason (or motive) for engaging in religious acts'[797]. The Śrāddhasūtra[798] of Kātyāyana prescribes 'one endowed with śraddhā should offer śrāddha even with vegetables (if nothing else is available)'. Vide Manu III. 275 which emphasizes śraddhā for the gratification of pitṛs The Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa (29, 27) emphasizes[799] the relation of śrāddha to śraddhā and states that what is offered at śrāddhas becomes transformed into that kind of food for the use of the pitṛs who require food in the new bodies they might have assumed according to the doctrine of karma and punarjanma and it also remarks that śrāddha offered with wealth acquired in an improper or unjust way is a means of gratification to the pitṛs that are born as cāṇḍālas, pukkasas and similar very low grades of people.

---

794. बृहस्पतिरकामयत श्रन्मे देवा दधीरन् मच्छेय पुरोधामिति। तै. सं VII. 4. 1. 1.

795 प्रयोजनम्। पा. V. 1 109, तदस्येत्येव। सि कौ; श्रद्धा प्रयोजनं (कारणं) अस्य इति श्राद्धम्

796. श्रद्धा चेतस. संप्रसाद । सा हि जननीव कल्याणी योगिनं पाति । योगसूत्रभाष्य I. 20.

797 प्रत्ययो धर्मकार्येषु तथा श्रद्धेत्युदाहृता। नास्ति ह्यश्रद्दधानस्य धर्महेतुपे प्रयोजनम्॥ देवल q. by कृत्यरत्नाकर p 16 and श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 189.

798 श्रद्धान्वितः श्राद्ध कुर्वीत शाकेनापि। श्राद्धसूत्र of कात्यायन q. by हेमाद्रि p. 152.

799 श्रद्धया परया दत्तं पितृणां नामगोत्रत । यदाहारास्तु ते जातास्तदाहारत्वमेति तत्॥ मार्कण्डेय 29. 27, अन्यायोपार्जितैर्वित्तैर्यैश्च्छाद्ध क्रियते नरे । तृप्यन्ते तेन चाण्डाल पुक्कसाद्यासु योनिषु॥ मार्कण्डेय 28. 16, स्कन्द VII 1. 205 22

It has already been stated above (pp. 349-350) that in very ancient times there were only three rites for departed ancestors, viz. Piṇḍa-pitṛ-yajña (offered by those who had consecrated the śrauta fires) or monthly śrāddha in the case of those who had not done so (vide e. g. Āśv. Gṛ. II. 5. 10, Hir. Gṛ. II. 10. 1, Āp. Gr. VIII. 21. 1. Viṣṇupurāna III. 14. 3 &c.), the Mahāpitṛ-yajña and the Aṣṭakā śrāddhas. The first two have been already described in vol. II. (as said above), but the Aṣṭakā śrāddhas have not been described at all so far. Therefore some remarks will be offered here about them. They are of special importance, but the authorities present great variations on almost all points such as the number of days and the months in which they were to be performed, the deities to be worshipped, the offerings to be made and the procedure to be followed.

Gaut. (VIII. 19) mentions 'Aṣṭakā' rite as the first among the seven kinds of pākayajñas and as one of the forty saṁskāras. Aṣṭakā appears to have meant the 8th tithi in any month after the Full Moon day (vide Śat. Br. VI. 4. 2. 10). The Śat. Br. states [800] 'On the 8th day (after full moon) he (the performer of agnicayana) collects the materials for the fire pan, for sacred to Prajāpati is the 8th day (after full moon) and sacred to Prajāpati is this rite viz. the firepan.' Śabara in his Bhāṣya on Jai.[801] I. 3. 2 cites a verse occurring in the A. V. III. 10. 2 and in the Āp. M. P. II. 20. 27 as a mantra indicative of Aṣṭakā. The mantra is "May that (Aṣṭakā) night be very auspicious for us, whom people welcome like a cow coming towards a person and which is the wife of the Year.' In the A. V. III. 10. 8 the Ekāṣṭakā is said to have the year (Saṁvatsara) as husband. The Tai. S. VII. 4. 8. 1. provides [802] 'Men about to take dīkṣā (consecration) for a Saṁvatsarasattra should undergo dīkṣā on the Ekāṣṭakā; what is called Ekāṣṭakā is the wife of the year.' Jai. (VI. 5. 32-37) explains that Ekāṣṭakā is the 8th tithi after the Full Moon of Māgha. The Āp Gṛ. (quoted by Haradatta

---

800. अष्टकायाङ्खां सम्भरति । प्राजापत्यमेतदहर्यदष्टका प्राजापत्यमेतत्कर्म यदङ्खा प्राजापत्य एव तदहन् प्राजापत्यं कर्म करोति । शतपथ० VI 2.2.23.

801. अष्टकालिङ्गाच्च मन्त्रो वेदे दृश्यन्ते यां जनाः प्रतिनन्दन्तीत्येवमादयः। शबर on जै. I. 3 2. The verse as read by शबर on जै. VI. 5. 35 is: यां जनाः प्रतिनन्दन्ति गां धेनुमिवायतीम् । संवत्सरस्य या पत्नी सा नो अस्तु सुमङ्गली॥ and he adds 'अष्टकायै सुरायते स्वाहा'. In the A. V. III. 10.2 the readings are धेनाः for जनाः and धेनुमुपायतीम्.

802. संवत्सराय दीक्षिष्यमाणा एकाष्टकायां दीक्षेरन्येषा वै संवत्सरस्य पत्नी यदेकाष्टका। तै सं. VII 4 8 1.

on Gaut. 8 19') says [803] the same, but adds that on it (the 8th tithi) the moon is in Jyeṣṭhā constellation. This means that if the 8th tithi is spread over two days, then that day on which the moon is in Jyeṣṭhā would be called Ekāṣṭakā [804] The Hir. Gr. (II.15.9) also says that Ekāṣṭakā is called the wife of the year [805]

According to the Āśv. Gr. II. 4. 1 the Aṣṭakā days (and rites) were four, viz the 8th tithis of the dark halves of the four months of the two seasons of hemanta and śiśira (i. e of Mārgaśīrṣa, Pauṣa, Māgha and Phālguna). Most of the Gṛhya-sūtras viz Mānava Gr. II. 8, Śān. Gr III. 12 1, Khādira Gr. III. 3 27, Kāṭhaka Gr. 61.1, Kauṣītaki Gr. III. 15. 1 and Pār. Gr. III. 3 say that there are only three Aṣṭakā rites viz. on the 8th after the Full Moon day of Mārgaśīrṣa (called āgrahāyaṇī) i e. in the dark halves of Mārgaśīrṣa, Pauṣa (or Taiṣa) and Māgha. The Gobhila Gr. III 10. 48 mentions that the Aṣṭakās are four according to Kauṭsa and in all flesh is to be offered, but that Gautama, Audgāhamānī and Vārkakhaṇḍi prescribe only three and Gobhila follows these latter. The Baud. Gr II. 11. 1 provides that the three Aṣṭakā homas are performed in the months of Taiṣa, Māgha and Phālguna. Āśv. Gr II. 4. 2 refers to an option that Aṣṭakā rites were performed only on one Aṣṭamī (and not on three or four). The Baud. Gr. provides that [806] the rite may be compressed into the three days (7th, 8th and 9th) of the dark half of Māgha or even in one day (i e 8th of the dark half of Māgha). The Hir. Gr (II 14 2)

---

803 यो माघ्या. पौर्णमास्या उपरिष्टाद् ध्यष्टका तस्यामष्टमी ज्येष्ठया संपद्यते तामेकाष्टकेत्याचक्षते। आप. गृ. VIII 21 10. अष्टका व्याख्यास्याम। माध्या. पौर्णमास्या योऽपरपक्षस्तस्याष्टमीमेकाष्टकेत्याचक्षते। हिर गृ II. 14 1-2 Both अनाकुला and तात्पर्यदर्शन explain ध्यष्टका as कृष्णपक्ष.

804 According to a Vārtika on Pāṇ. VII 3. 45 the word Aṣṭakā is formed from 'aṣṭan.' वार्तिक 9 on पाणिनि VII. 3.45 teaches that from अष्टन् we get Aṣṭakā as meaning a rite in which the pitṛs are the deities and Aṣṭikā in any other sense (such as अष्टिका खारी)

805 The Full Moon night of Māgha is said to be the mouth of the year i. e. the year began on that day in ancient times. The Aṣṭakā day after the Full Moon day was the first and most important festival after the Full Moon and it was younger than the beginning of the year. It is probable that because of this it was spoken of as the wife of the year.

806 अथाष्टकाहोम। तैषे माघपरपक्षस्याष्टम्यां क्रियेत। एवं माघे एवं फाल्गुने यदि विहृतः। यद्यु वै समेत्य उपरिष्टान्माघ्या पौर्णमास्या अपरपक्षस्य सप्तम्यामष्टम्यां नवम्यामिति क्रियेतापि वाष्टम्यामेव। बौ गृ II 11.1-4.

describes only one Astakā rite viz. the Ekāṣṭakā in the dark half of Māgha. The Bhāradvāja Grhya II. 15 also speaks of only Ekāstakā but adds that the 8th of the dark half of Māgha on which the moon is in Jyesthā is called Ekāṣṭakā. According to Hir. Gṛ. II. 14 and 15 the one Aṣṭakā extended over three days viz. 8th, 9th (on which a cow was sacrificed for the pitṛs) and 10th (which was the Anvaṣṭakā). The Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra (ed. by Caland) IV. 8 says that Astakā is to be performed on the 8th of the dark half of Māgha and Bhādrapada or on the 7th, 9th or 10th tithi.

There is divergence in the offerings also. The Kāthaka Gr (61. 3), Jaimini Gr. 2. 3 and Śān. Gr. (III. 12. 2) provide that on the three different Aṣṭakās the offerings are of cooked vegetables, flesh and apūpas (cakes), while the Pār. Gr. III. 3 and Khādira Gr III. 3. 29–30 put apūpas for the first Aṣṭakā (and hence Gobhila Gr. III. 10. 9 designates it apūpāṣṭakā) and boiled vegetables on the last. According to Khādira Gr. III. 4. 1 a cow is sacrificed. According to Āśv. Gr. II. 4. 7–10, Gobhila Gr. IV. 1. 18–22, Kauśika 138. 2, Baud. Gr. II. 11. 51–61, on the 8th day very many options are given, viz. either to sacrifice a cow or a ram or a goat; or to offer some jungle flesh that may be available or flesh mixed with sesame and honey, or flesh of the rhinoceros, deer, buffalo, ram, boar, spotted deer, hare, Rohita deer, pigeons, śārnga and other birds, or an old red goat; fishes or rice cooked in milk so as to form thin gruel, or gifts only of uncooked corn or fruits and roots, or gold may be offered or only grass for cows or oxen or one may burn some thickets in a forest or present jars for holding water to those deeply learned in the Veda or should recite the mantras relating to śrāddhas, saying 'this is the Astakā I offer,' but one should not remain without observing the Aṣṭakā day in some such manner as the above [807]

It is remarkable that although the Vārtika quoted above, and the Kāthakagrhya 61. 1 state that the word 'Astakā' is applied to a rite in which the pitṛs are the deities worshipped, the greatest divergence prevails as to the devatā of the Astakās. The Āśv Gr. (II. 4. 3 and II. 5. 3–5) provides that on the 7th of the dark half the offerings are made to the pitṛs and on the 9th also, but Āśv. II. 4. 12 refers to the eight options as regards the deity of the 8th day, viz Viśve-devāḥ (all the gods), Agni, Sūrya, Prajāpati, Rātrī (night), Nakṣatras (constellations), the seasons, the Pitṛs, Paśus (cattle). The Gobhila Gr III. 10 1 starts [808] by saying that Night is the devatā of Astakā, but adds that there are other views about the devatā being Agni, the Pitṛs, Prajāpati, Ṛtus (seasons) or all Gods.

807. अथ यदि गां न लभते मेषमजं वा लभते। आरण्येन वा मांसेन यथोपपन्नेन। खड्गमृगमहिषमेषवराहपृषतशशरोहितशार्ङ्गैतित्तिरिकपोतकपिञ्जलवाध्रीणसानामक्षय्यं तिलमधुसंसृष्टम्। तथा मत्स्यस्य शतबलेः (?) क्षीरोदनेन वा। क्षुद्रोदनेन वा। यद्वा भवत्यामैर्वा मूलफलैर्वा मन्त्रानमात्रम्। हिरण्येन वा मन्त्रानमात्रम्। अपि वा गोग्रासमाहरेत्। अपि वानूच्याय उदकुम्भानाहरेत्। अपि वा श्राद्धमन्त्रानधीयीत। अपि वारण्येनैना कक्षमुपोषेद्वेषा मेऽष्टकेति। न खेवानष्टक. स्यात्। बौ. गृ. II 11. 51-61; अष्टकायामष्टकाहोमाञ्जुहुयात्। तस्या हवींषि धाना. करम्भः शष्कुल्य' पुरोडाश उदौदनः क्षीरौदनस्तिलौदनो यथोपपादियेयुः। कौशिकसूत्र 168 1–2. For वार्ध्रीणस, vide note (951) below.

The procedure of Astakā comprises three parts, viz. homa, inviting brāhmanas for dinner (up to seeing them go away after dinner) and the rite called Anvastakya or Anvaṣṭakā When the Aṣṭakās were deemed to be three or four performed in the several months noted above, all these were gone through at each Astakā When the Aṣṭakā rite was performed only in one month i. e. after the Full moon in Māgha, the above parts were performed on three days, 7th, 8th and 9th of the dark half. When compressed in one day only, they must have been performed one after another on the same day.

Many of the Grhyasūtras, such as those of Āsvalāyana, Kauśika, Gobhila, Hiranyakeśin and Baudhāyana describe a very elaborate procedure in the case of Aṣṭakās One of the shortest being that contained in Āp. Gr. (VIII 21 and 22) is given here by way of sample [808a]. After defining Ekāstakā (in VIII. 21 10) Āp. proceeds: 'He (the performer of the Āstakā rite) should perform subsidiary (or preparatory) rites in the evening of the previous day (i e. on the 7th of the dark half). He cooks (or bakes) a cake from rice taken up (from a heap) in four cups; according to some teachers the cake is prepared on eight potsherds (like a purodāśa) After the actions up to the 808. अष्टका रात्रिदेवता। पुष्टिकर्मा। आग्नेयी पित्र्या वा प्राजापत्यर्तुदेवता वैश्वदेवीति देवताविचाराः। गोभिलगृह्य III. 10.1–3.

---

808 a या माध्वा ...त्याचक्षते। तस्या सायमौपकार्यम्। अपूपं चतु शरावं श्रपयति। अष्टाकपाल इत्येके । पार्वणवदाज्यभागान्तेऽग्नौकरणोत्तरयापूपाञ्जुहोति । सिद्ध शेषेणमधु कृत्वा ब्राह्मणेभ्य उपहरति। श्वोभूते दर्भेण गामुपाकरोति पितृभ्यस्त्वा जुष्टामुपाकरोमीति। तूष्णीं पञ्चाज्याहुतीर्हुत्वा तस्यै वपा अपपित्वोपस्तीर्णाभिधारिता मध्यमेनान्तमेन वा पलाशपर्णेनोत्तरया जुहोति। मांसौदनमुत्तराभि । पिष्टान्नमुत्तरया। आज्याहुतीश्चतस्रा । त्विष्टकृत्यभृति सनानमापिण्डनिधानात् । अन्वष्टकायामेवैके पिण्डनिधानमुपदिशन्ति। अथैतदपरं दृष्ट्वा एवाञ्जलिना जुहोति यथापूपम्। अत एव यथार्थं मांसं शिष्ट्वा श्वोभूतेऽन्वष्टका। तस्या मासिश्राद्धेन कल्पो व्याख्यातः। आप. श्रौ. VIII. 21.10–VIII. 22.12

'Ājyabhāgas' [809] have been performed in the same way as at the Amāvāsyā and Full Moon sacrifices he makes with his joined hands oblations of the cakes with the next verse [810] The rest of the cake that is already baked is divided by him into eight parts and offered to the brāhmanas [811]. On the following day he prepares the cow for immolation by touching her with a darbha with the words 'I make thee that are agreeable to the Fathers ready (for sacrifice)'. Having silently (i. e. without uttering the word svāhā) offered five [812] oblations of clarified butter, having cooked the omentum of that (cow) and having spread under (the cooked omentum) and sprinkled over it clarified butter he offers it with a palāśa leaf from the middle or the end of the stalk with the next verse (i e. Āp M. P. II. 20. 28) [813] He offers boiled rice together with the flesh (of the cow) with the next verses (seven from Āp. M. P II. 20. 29–35). He offers the food of flour cooked (in milk) with the next verse (Āp. M P. II. 21. 1 'Ukthyaścātirātraśca'), [814] Then (he offers) the oblations of clarified butter with the following (eight) verses (Āp. M. P. II. 21. 2–9). The rites from Svistakṛt [815] down to the placing of the pindas are the same as at the monthly śrāddha (described in Āp. Gr. VIII 21. 1–9). Some teachers prescribe that the piṇḍas are to be offered the day after the Astakā (i. e. on the 9th of the dark half). Here follows another method (of celebrating the Astakā rite). He sacrifices curds with his joined hands in the same way as he offers the cake. Having left over from the meat (of the cow) as much as may be required, he performs on the day following

809. For Ājyabhāgas, vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 1059, 1060.

810. The Āp. Gṛ S. here and elsewhere refers to the collection of Mantras called Āpastamba-mantra-pātha (edited by Dr Winternitz) The verse meant here is Āp M. P. (II. 20. 27), quoted above in n 801 (Yām janāḥ &c)

811. The words 'siddhah śesaḥ' are explained by the Anākulā (of Haradatta) as meaning 'the rest of the rites are the usual ones without alterations'.

812 As no devatā is expressly named, the offerings must be taken to be made to Prajāpati.

813. Āp. M. P II. 20 28 is the mantra 'vaha vapām' (carry the omentum to the Fathers, O Jātavedas), which is Vāj S. 35. 20 and is prescribed for this rite in Āśv. Gṛ. II. 4.13, Śāṅ. Gṛ. III 13 3 and elsewhere.

814. The Mantra 'Ukthyaścātirātraśca' occurs also in Sāṅ Gr III. 14. 2

815 For 'Svistakṛt' vide H. of Dh vol. II pp 208 and 125?

(the Astakā day) the Anvastakā rite Its procedure is explained by the description of the monthly śrāddha.

Though Āp. Gr. (II. 5 3) and Śān. Gr. III. 13. 7 state that the Anvastakya rite follows the procedure of Pindapitryajña, some Grhyasūtras (such as Khādira III. 5, Gobhila IV 2-3) give very elaborate descriptions of that rite. The Āśv. Gr. and Viṣnudharmasūtra 74 follow a middle course. The description in Āśv. Gr. is comparatively brief and it is set out below. It may be noted that some Grhya-sūtras state that the Anvastakya rite is performed on the 9th or 10th of the dark half (e. g. Khādira Gr III. 5. 1 'navamīm daśamīm vānvastakyam)'. Further, it may be stated that though most Grhyasūtras call the rite Anvastakya still it is also called Anvastakā by Pār. Gr. III. 3. 10, Manu IV. 150, Viṣnudharmasūtra 74. 1 and 76. 1. The most notable peculiarity of this rite is that therein female ancestors are invoked and offerings are made to them of which liquor (surā), scum of boiled rice, collyrium, salves and garlands form part. Though some sūtras (like Āśv. Gr. II. 5) declare that the Aṣtakā and Anvastakya are modelled on the monthly śrāddha or Pindapitryajña, others (like the Baud. Gr. III. 12. 1, Gobhila Gr. IV. 4., Khādira III. 5. 35) say that the Astakā or Anvastakya is the norm which is followed in the Pindapitryajña and all the śrāddhas. The Kāthaka Gr. (66. 1, 67. 1, 68. 1, 69. 1) avers[816] that the first śrāddha, the other śrāddhas (such as sapindikaraṇa), Paśuśrāddha (in which the flesh of an animal is offered) and the śrāddha performed every month follow the procedure of Astakā. The Pinda-pitryajña could be offered on amāvāsyā only by one who was āhitāgni (i. e. had kept the sacred vedic fires). It is impossible to believe that everyone became āhitāgni. The case was probably the reverse i. e. only a few became āhitāgnis and the rest had only the grhya fire or many of the rest were without even the grhya fire. It appears possible that all were required to offer śrāddha on amāvāsyā on the analogy of pindapitryajña. As the latter became rare, the requirement of offering śrāddha on amāvāsyā remained and in the sūtras and smrtis all the details were mentioned under māsiśrāddha and in the case of the other śrāddhas the sūtras and smrtis pointed out only what was to be omitted. It is owing to this that the māsiśrāddha came to be called the prakrti and the other śrāddhas were called vikrtis or variations of the māsiśrāddha. Most of the details of the piṇḍapitryajña were required in māsiśrāddha and a few (such as giving arghya, gandha, dīpa) were added and more elaborate rules evolved.

816 देवपाल on काठकगृह्य 66 1 says अष्टकाविकाराणि हि सर्वश्राद्धानि The वौ गृ III 12. 1 states 'अष्टकाहकृतिर्मासिक तद्धरस्ताद् व्याख्यातम्'

The Anvastakya[817] is described in the Āśv. Gr. (II. 5. 2–15) as follows :—Having prepared a portion of the same meat,[818] having established the fire on a surface sloping towards the south, having fenced it in and made a door on the north side of the enclosed shed, having strewn round the fire three times sacrificial grass with its roots without touching it, turning the left side (of one's body) towards the fire, he should place down the things to be offered, boiled rice, boiled rice mixed with sesamum, rice cooked in milk, meal pap with curds and meal pap with honey. The ceremony should follow the ritual of the Piṇḍapitryajña (vide Āśv. Śr. II. 6). Having sacrificed (part of the foods specified except meal-pap) with honey let him offer portions of those substances to the pitṛs and to their wives with the addition of liquor and the scum of boiled rice. Some place the portion to be offered into pits, which may be two or six. In those situated to the east he should present the offerings to the pitṛs; in those to the west, to the wives. Thereby the ceremony celebrated in the rainy season on the Maghā day in the dark fortnight after the full moon of Prausthapada (i. e. Bhādrapada) has been declared. And thus he should offer (a festival like the Anvastakā) to the pitṛs every month, observing uneven[819] numbers. He should give food at least to nine (brāhmaṇas) or to any un-even number of brāhmaṇas. (Food should be given) to an even number on auspicious occasions[820]

817. अन्वष्टक्य is explained by रुद्रस्कन्द on खादिरगृह्य III. 5. as 'अष्टकामद्य क्रियते इत्यन्वष्टक्यं कर्म एतच्च प्रत्यष्टकमनन्तरं कर्तव्यम्' and by देवपाल on काठकगृह्य 65 1 as 'अष्टकाया अनु पश्चाद्भवमन्वष्टक्यमित्यन्वर्थिकेयं संज्ञान्वष्टक्यमिति। एतच्च केचिदष्टकाया अङ्गं वदन्ति केचित्तत्सदृशं विकारभूतं कर्मान्तरम्।'

818. The meat is that of the animal killed on the Aṣṭakā day (Āśv Gṛ. II. 4. 13).

819. That is, selecting an uneven number of brāhmaṇas or on uneven tithis.

820. 'Vṛddhi' or "Ābhyudayika" (referring to prosperity or good luck) Śrāddha is performed on such occasions as the birth of a son, the marriage of a son or daughter, the pitṛs in the Vṛddhi-śrāddha being designated Nāndīmukha Pūrta means charitable works such as construction of wells and tanks, building of temples, dedication of parks. Vide H. of Dh vol II p 844 n. 1992 and Yāj I. 250, Śāṅ. Gṛ IV 4 1 ff.

or on the performance of meritorious deeds; to an uneven number (on other occasions). The rite is performed from left to right. Barley grains are to be used instead of sesamum.

The Anvastakya rite was performed after each of the three or four Astakās and if only one Astakā in Māgha were performed, then after the 8th of the dark half.

There are two views about the rite called Māghyāvarsa [821] in Āśv. Gr. II. 5. 9. Acc. to Nārāyana, the rite is performed in the dark half of Bhādrapada for three days on 7th, 8th and 9th.[822] The other view is that it is a rite like the Astakās but performed on the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada, when generally the moon is in the Maghā naksatra. There is doubt about the very name of the rite, as the mss. present various forms (vide Oldenberg's note in S. B. E. vol. 29. p 103 on Śān. Gr. III. 13 1). The real name appears to be Māghyāvarsa or Maghāvarsa (meaning 'a śrāddha in the rainy season when the moon is in the Maghā naksatra)'. The Visnu Dh. S 76 1 [823] mentions the following times for offering śrāddha viz. (twelve) Amāvāsyās (in a year), the three Astakās, the three Anvastakās, the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada when the moon is in the Maghā asterism, the seasons of śarad and vasanta. In Visnu Dh. S. (78. 52–53) also a śrāddha on the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada is highly eulogised Manu III. 273 also states that whatever food mixed with honey is offered on the 13th day in the rainy season when the moon is in Maghā procures endless satisfaction. To the same effect are Vas XI 40 (in the rainy season and on Maghā), Yāj I 26 and Varāhapurāna.[824] In the 821. The word माघ्यावर्ष (as an attribute of Karma or Śrāddha) may be derived from मघावर्ष (मघायुक्त· वर्षः वर्षर्तु.) or वर्षमघा (or वर्षामघा meaning वर्षे मघा or वर्षासु मघा). In the latter case the words are transposed on the analogy of राजदन्त (पा II 2 31). हरदत्त on आश्व गृ explains 'मघासु वर्षासंयोगाद् माघ्या-वर्षमिति भवति तच्च त्रयोदश्याम्' and then quotes या I 261.

---

822. In the गृह्याग्निसागर of नारायणभट्ट आर्डे it is stated 'अथाष्टकाविकृतिभूत माघ्यावर्षश्राद्धं तत्र भाद्रपदापरपक्षे सप्तम्यादिषु त्रिष्वह.सु अष्टकाकर्मवत् सर्वं कुर्यादिति कारिका । हरदत्तस्तु भाद्रपदकृष्णपक्षे मघायुक्तत्रयोदश्यां माघ्यावर्षाख्यं श्राद्धम्।' folio 155 b (of the ms in the BBRAS) Vide Cat No 680 p. 215.

823 अमावास्यास्तिस्रोष्टकास्तिस्रोन्वष्टका माघी प्रौष्ठपद्यूर्ध्वं कृष्णत्रयोदशी व्रीहियवपाकौ च। विष्णुध सू 76 1 माघी is to be connected with कृष्णत्रयोदशी.

824 यद्ददाति गयास्थश्च सर्वमानन्त्यमश्नुते। तथा वर्षात्रयोदश्यां मघासु च विशेषतः॥ या I. 261, गायन्ति चैतत्पितरः कदा नु त्रयोदशीयुक्तमघासु भूय । वर्षासितान्ते शुभतीर्थ-तोयैर्यास्याम तृप्तिं तनयाविदत्तैः॥ वराहपुराण 13.47, correct grammar requires यास्याम-स्तृप्तिम्

Hir. Gr. II. 13. 3–4 (edited by Kirste) the name appears to be Mādhyāvarsa [825] and it is provided that meat is obligatory in it, but that if meat cannot be had then vegetables may be offered. In Pār. [826] Gr. (III. 3) the name (as printed) is madhyāvarsa which is said to be a 4th Astakā in which only vegetables are offered. Aparārka (p. 422) also appears to call the rite 'madhyāvarsa.' In the Bhavisyapurāna [827] (Brahma-parva), chap. 183. 4 also this rite is referred to but it is said that therein meat is to be offered. It appears probable that this ancient rite on the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapads is a precursor of the Mahālayaśrāddha of later times.

If Āśvalāyana's view, viz. that there are four Astakās in Hemanta and Śiśira, were followed and if the Māghyāvarsa-śrāddha were to be performed on the 8th of the dark half of Bhādrapada as Nārāyana holds, then there would be five Astakās in all. Bhaṭṭoji in his Caturvimśatimatasangraha says so.[828]

Considerations of space forbid the comparison of the above procedure from Āp. Gr. and Āśv. Gṛ. with the procedure described in the other Grhyasūtras. It should be noted that several of the sūtras often employ the same mantras in the various stages of the rite (as pointed out above in notes 813–814).

It must be said that the Astakā śrāddhas gradually fell into oblivion and are not performed now.

The foregoing discussion establishes that the monthly śrāddha on Amāvāsyā was the model śrāddha (prakṛti) of

825. मातृदत्त on हिरण्य. गृ. explains 'माध्यावर्षः भौष्ठपदो मासस्तत्र भवम्' i. e. he derives the name from मध्य and वर्ष (year), the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada being almost the middle of the year (when the year begins with चैत्र).

826. मध्यावर्षे च तुरीया शाकाष्टका। पार. गृ. III. 3 (last sūtra) in the Gujarathi Press edition.

827. तिस्रोऽष्टकास्तु कर्तव्या मध्यावर्ता (मध्यावर्षा?) चतुर्थिका। शाकपायसपूपैस्तु मासेन तु चतुर्थिका॥ भविष्यपु. (I. 183.4).

828. एवं भाद्रपदबहुलाष्टम्यप्यष्टका बोध्या। तथा च पद्मपुराणे—अग्निष्वात्तपितृकन्याया वसुनाम्ना पित्रा शसायाः पुनरग्नृगृहीतायाः भाद्रपदापरपक्षाष्टकाकालेनोत्पत्तिर्दर्शिता। भौष्ठपदाष्टका भूयः पितृलोके भविष्यति। आयुरारोग्यदा नित्यं सर्वकामफलप्रदा॥ इति। तदेवं पञ्चाष्टका हेमाद्रयाद्विग्रन्थे स्थिता। तत्रापि श्राद्धं नित्यम्। भट्टोजि on चतु. सं. p. 122. पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड) chap. 9. 28–29 are: भौष्ठपद्यष्टका भूयः...स्वर्गकामफलप्रदा. हेमाद्रि on श्राद्ध p. 185 says 'अथ पूर्वोक्ताष्टकाचतुष्टयव्यतिरिक्तापि भाद्रपदापरपक्षेऽष्टका। तस्याश्चेतिहासपूर्वकमुत्पत्तिः प्रशंसा चोच्यते पद्मपुराणे' and then he quotes eight verses from the पद्म of which भौष्ठपद्यष्टका० is the last.

which the Astakās and other śrāddhas were copies (vikṛtis) with suitable modifications, though a few dissident texts reverse the position.

In the Gobhilagṛhya (IV. 4. 3 ff) another śrāddha called 'Anvāhārya' is prescribed after the Pindapitṛyajña on the same day. The Śān. Gṛ. IV. 1. 13 appears also to describe the monthly śrāddha as distinct from the Pindapitṛyajña. Manu (III.122–23) states: 'After performing the Pitṛyajña (i. e. pindapitṛyajña) a brāhmana who keeps sacred fires shall offer every month on the amāvāsyā day the funeral sacrifice Pindānvāhāryaka.[829] The wise call the monthly offering to the Manes Anvāhārya and that must be carefully performed with the approved kinds of flesh mentioned below.' From this it appears that one who has consecrated the śrauta fires (i. e. an āhitāgni) was to perform the piṇḍapitṛyajña in the śrauta fires and also perform the same day another śrāddha after the pindapitṛyajña, while those who had not consecrated śrauta fires were to perform on amāvāsyā a śrāddha in the gṛhya fire, which was called pindānvāhāryaka or simply anvāhārya and also were to offer pindapitṛyajña in smārta fire (vide Sat. Śrauta II. 7. 64 'gṛhyāgnau anāhitāgneḥ'). From inquiries made I learn that nowadays most Agnihotrins (at least in the Deccan) do not perform Pindapitṛyajña at all or perform it only once a year and that no one performs the Pindānvāhāryaka śrāddha. It is further to be noted that in smārta yajñas no one now sacrifices an animal but employs instead māsa grain and there are āhitāgnis who do not offer meat in śrauta sacrifices also, but only piṣṭa-paśu (an effigy of an animal made of flour).

The literature on śrāddha is enormous in extent. From the Vedic Samhitās several thousand years ago up to medieval and modern commentaries and digests the various matters connected with śrāddha have been dealt with in more or less detail. The Purānas contain thousands of verses on śrāddha. An adequate and thorough treatment of all this vast mass would fill a separate volume, but considerations of space forbid such an attempt here. All that can be attempted here at the most (and that too not in all cases) is to present matters chronologically i. e. describe how śrāddha was dealt with in the Saṃhitās and Brāhmana texts, then in the comparatively older Gṛhya and Dharma sūtras, then in such early smṛtis as those of Manu and Yāj., then in some representative Purāṇas, then in the early commentaries of Medhātithi, Vijñāneśvara and Aparārka, and then in the medieval digests. Even in this way only a skeleton of the ceremonies described in some representative work of each class can be exhibited. Many differences of detail which arose owing to lapse of time, the locality, the śākhā and usages of each writer, his individual inclination and his ability, will have to be passed over altogether. In the days of the Purāṇas the differences in detail in the several śākhās have been adverted to.[829a] Apart from the smṛtis and passages of the Mahābhārata (such as Anuśāsana chap. 87–92) and commentaries on the Sūtras, on Manu, Yāj. and other smṛtis, the digests on śrāddha are legion. Only the following digests (arranged in chronological order) have been laid under contribution in this volume: Kalpataru on śrāddha; the Ḥāralatā and Pitṛdayitā of Aniruddha; the Smṛtyarthasāra; the Smṛticandrikā; the Caturvargacintāmani (section on śrāddha) of Ḥemādri (which in the B. I. edition covers 1716 pages); the Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara; the Madanapārijāta; the Śrāddhasāra (a part of Nrsimhaprasāda); Śrāddhakriyā-kaumudī of Govindānanda; the Śrāddhatattva of Raghunandana; the Śrāddhasaukhya (part of Ṭodarānanda); the Śrāddhakalpalatā of Vināyaka alias Nandapandita; the Nirnayasindhu; the Śrāddhamayūkha of Nīlakantha; the Śrāddhaprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya); the Śrāddhacandrikā of Divākarabhatta; the Smṛtimuktāphala (on śrāddha); the Dharmasindhu; the Bālambhaṭṭī, a commentary on the Mitāksarā. While presenting this exhaustive and heterogeneous material, some generalisations, when called for, will be made here and there. It will be seen later on how several minor matters such as whether food should be offered to gods before śrāddha, definitions of words like parivitti, vṛsalīpati increased the extent of treatises on śrāddha.

829. मेधातिथि on मनु III. 122 explains. 'पिण्डानामनु पश्चादाह्रियतेऽन्वष्टीयते तत् 'पिण्डान्वाहार्यकं भवति', while सर्वज्ञनारायण explains 'पिण्डेभ्योल्पिकां मात्रामन्वाहृत्य 'ब्राह्मणा अत्र श्राद्धे भोज्यन्ते इति पिण्डान्वाहार्यकम्'. These derivations are supported respectively by the पद्मपुराण, सृष्टि 9.88-89 'पितृयज्ञं तु निर्वर्त्य तर्पणान्त्य तु यौगिमान्। पिण्डोन्वाहार्यकं कृत्वा श्राद्धकाले क्षये तदा॥ (कुर्याच्छ्राद्धमिन्दुक्षये तथा?)' and by the मत्स्यपुराण 16. 43 यस्मादकीर्तुता मात्रा भक्षयन्ति द्विजातय'। अन्वाहार्यकमित्युक्तं तस्मात्तश्राद्धसंज्ञये॥. The पद्मपुराण (सृष्टि 9. 119) further says 'एतदग्निमतां प्रोक्तमन्वाहार्यं च पार्वणम्।'. The कल्पतरु (on श्राद्ध p 10) explains मनु III. 122: पितृयज्ञोत्र पिण्डपितृयज्ञः। पिण्डान्वाहार्यकं पिण्डानामनु पश्चादाह्रियते क्रियते यद्दर्शश्राद्धं तसथा॥'.

---

829 a. The स्कन्दपुराण (नागरखण्ड chap. 215. 24–25) says: दृश्यन्ते बहवो भेदा द्विजानां श्राद्धकर्मणि। श्राद्धरूप बहवो भेदा. शाखाभेदैर्व्यवस्थिताः ॥.

We should now turn to the several matters relating to śrāddhas.

First comes the question as to who are entitled to offer śrāddha (śrāddhādhikārin) This matter has been already dealt with in the H. of Dh. vol. III. p 739 ff., and on page 763 and on pp. 256–261 (notes 581–588) above. It would be noticed that some (like the Viṣṇudharmasūtra) prescribe that whoever takes the wealth of the deceased should offer piṇḍas (i. e. perform śrāddha for him), while others said that whoever was preferable as entitled to offer piṇḍas to the deceased propositus was to take the wealth. A few matters not mentioned there may be added here. In the Śāntiparva 65. 13–21 it is narrated[830] that emperor Māndhātṛ was told by Indra how Yavanas, Kirātas and similar non-Aryan peoples (that are styled Dasyus in the Epic) are to be made to conduct themselves and it is stated that all dasyus may perform Pitṛyajñas (in which they should feed men of their own kind and make monetary gifts to them) and offer money to brāhmanas also. The Vāyupurāna (83. 112) also speaks of the Mlecchas as persons that offer oblations to Pitṛs. The general rule is stated by the Gobhilasmṛti[831] that the husband should not offer piṇḍa to his wife even if she dies sonless, nor a father to his son nor an elder brother to a younger brother. The moral of the story of Nimi who performed śrāddha for his predeceased son and repented for having done so as it was dharmasaṅkara is the same. Vide Anuśāsanaparva 91. Aparārka (p. 538) quotes a verse from Ṣaṭtriṁśan-mata that a father should not perform the śrāddha of his son nor an elder brother of a younger one. But Bṛhatparāśara (p. 153) appears to state that even this general rule may have to be set aside sometimes. Baudhāyana and Vṛddhaśātātapa (q by Sm. C. on śrāddha p. 337) allow a śrāddha (except sapiṇḍīkaraṇa) to be performed by any one for any relative through affection, particularly at Gayā. It is emphasized [832] that he alone deserves to be called putra, who, while the father is alive, obeys his words, and gives plenty of food (to brāhmanas) every year (after his father's death) and who offers pindas (to his ancestors) at Gayā. The general rule laid down was that a child, whose upanayana has not been performed, is like a śūdra and lacks authority to utter Vedic passages (vide Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 15. 19, Gaut. II. 4–5, Vas. II. 6, Visnu Dh. S. 28. 40, Manu II. 172).[833] But an exception was recognized by almost all these authorities that a son, though his upanayana may not have been performed, can repeat the Vedic mantras required in funeral rites. Medhātithi on Manu II. 172 explains that a minor son, even though not initiated into Vedic study by upanayana, can offer water to his father, perform the navaśrāddhas (mentioned above in n. 593) and repeat such mantras as 'śundhantām pitaraḥ' required in these rites, but since he has no śrauta or grhya fire of his own he can not perform such śrāddhas as the pārvana. The Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 56) provides that boys whose upanayana has not been performed, women and śūdras should get śrāddhas performed through a priest or they may themselves perform them without mantras but only mention the name and gotra of the deceased or with the two mantras 'devebhyo namaḥ' and 'pitṛbhyaḥ svadhā namaḥ'. The above discussion shows that men and women, adults as well as children, those who are upanīta as well as those that are anupanīta are under an obligation to perform śrāddha.

830 यवनाः किराता गान्धाराश्चीना शबरबर्बराः । शकास्तुषाराः कङ्काश्च पह्लवाश्चाम्रमद्रकाः ॥...कथं धनीश्वरिष्यन्ति सर्वे विषयवासिनः। नहिधैश्च कर्म स्याच्याः सर्वे चैव दस्युजीविनः॥...नात्रापित्रोर्हि शुश्रूषा कर्तव्या सर्वदस्युभिः।...पितृयज्ञास्तथा कूपाः प्रपाश्च शयनानि च। दानानि च यथाकालं द्विजेभ्यो विधुजेत्सदा॥ ..पाकयज्ञा महार्हाश्च दातव्या. सर्वदस्युभिः। शान्तिपर्व 65. 13–21; on this the शूद्रकमलाकर (p. 55) remarks 'इति म्लेच्छादीनां श्राद्धविधानं तदपि सजातीयभोजनद्रव्यदानादिपरम्'।

831. न चोपाया. पतिर्दद्यादपुत्राया अपि क्वचित्। न पुत्रस्य पिता चैव नानुजस्य तथाग्रजः॥ गोभिलस्मृति III. 70 and also II. 104, but see बृहत्पराशर V (p. 153) 'श्राद्धं पत्न्यापि कार्यं स्यादपुत्रायास्तु चोदितं। तस्यापि हि तथा कार्यमेककर्तृ हि तयोर्यतः॥ भ्रातुर्ज्येष्ठस्य कुर्वीत कार्यं ज्येष्ठोऽनुजस्य च। देवहीनं तु तत् कुर्यादिति धर्मविदो विदुः॥. अपरार्क p. 538 quotes पित्रा श्राद्धं न कर्तव्यं पुत्राणां च कथंचन from पद्मलिङ्गात्मत

Tai. S. I. 8. 5. 1, Tai. Br. I. 6. 9 (which will be quoted later on) show that śrāddha was offered to three immediate ancestors, father, grand-father, great-grand-father. The Baud. Dh. S. (I. 5. 113–115) states that there is a group of seven persons closely knit together that is called avibhaktadāya sapiṇḍas viz. great-grand-father, grand-father, father, the man himself (who 832 जीवतो वाक्यकरणात् प्रत्यब्दं भूरिभोजनात्। गयायां पिण्डदानाच्च त्रिभि. पुत्रस्य पुत्रता ॥ quoted by त्रिस्थलीसेतु p. 319.

---

833. नाभिव्याहारयेद् ब्रह्म स्वधानिनयनादृते। शूद्रेण हि समस्तावद्यावद्वेदे न जायते॥ मनु II. 172; on this मेधातिथि says: स्वधाशब्देन पितृभ्यः कल्पितमन्नमिहोच्यते। अथवा पित्र्यं कर्म स्वधाशब्देनोच्यते। तच्चिनीयते त्यज्यते प्राप्यते येन मन्त्रेण स स्वधानिनयन. शुन्धन्तां पितर इत्यादिस्तं वर्जयित्वाऽन्यमन्त्रो नोच्चारयितव्य.। अनुपनीतेनोदकदाननवश्राद्धादि पितुः कर्तव्यमित्यस्मादेव प्रतीयते। पार्वणश्राद्धादौ त्वग्निमत्त्वाभावादनधिकार.। पिण्डान्वाहार्यकं तद्दृश्यते।'. In the वैखानसश्रौत 9.10 we read 'उदकुम्भमादाय यजमान. शुन्धन्तां पितरः-इति त्रिः प्रसव्यं वेदिमपः परिषिञ्चन् पर्येति।'.

offers pindas to the preceding three), his full brothers, his son from a wife of the same caste, the grandson and great grandson; that sakulyas are those that are called 'vibhaktadāyādas', that the wealth of the deceased descends to those who are born of the body of the deceased [834]. Manu IX. 137 (= Vas. 17.5 = Visnu Dh. S. 15. 46) solemnly [835] affirms: 'by (the birth of) a son a man wins the worlds (heaven &c.), he secures immortality by a grandson and by the grandson of a son he reaches the abode of the Sun'. This verse shows that all the three descendants of a person confer equally great spiritual benefit on him. Yāj. also (in I. 78) lumps the three together (without making any distinction between them) when he says 'since a man secures perpetuation of lineage and heaven by means of son, grand-son and great-grand-son'. Therefore when Manu (IX. 106) says that by the birth of a son a man discharges his debt to his progenitors the Dāyabhāga (XI. 34) explains that the word putra stands for the three descendants up to the great-grandson, since all the three are entitled to perform the pārvana-śrāddha and equally benefit the ancestors by the pindas they offer, and that the word putra is not to be taken literally but only as illustrative in order to include the great-grandson, since one may with difficulty find a text expressly mentioning the adhikāra of the grandson (as a performer of śrāddha and taker of wealth) but there is no text expressly mentioning the great-grandson separately (as the taker of wealth and giver of pinda) [836]. On Yāj. II. 50 which lays down that when the father dies or has gone to a distant country or is overwhelmed by calamities (incurable diseases or the like) his debts should be paid by the sons or grandsons, the Mit. adds that even when a son or grandson receives no ancestral property the father's debts must be paid, the only difference being that the son has to pay the principal as well as the interest, while the grandson

834. अपि च मपितामहः पितामहः पिता स्वयं सोदर्या भ्रातरः सवर्णाया· पुत्र· पौत्र· प्रपौत्र एतानविभक्तदायादान् सपिण्डानाचक्षते। विभक्तदायादान् सकुल्यानाचक्षते। सप्तस्वङ्गजेषु तत्प्रसूती ह्यर्थो भवति। बौ. ध सू I.5,113-115, quoted by दायभाग XI.37 and explained in 38 and by दायतत्त्व p. 189. The text printed in the आनन्दाश्रम collection of स्मृतिs is slightly different

835. पुत्रेण लोकाञ्जयति पौत्रेणानन्त्यमश्नुते। अथ पुत्रस्य पौत्रेण ब्रध्नस्याभोति विष्टपम्॥ मनु IX. 137. बौ. ध. सूत्र II. 9 7 reads the last pāda as नाकमेवाधिरोहति.

836. अत एव पुत्रपदं प्रपौत्रपर्यन्तपरं तत्पर्यन्तानामेव पार्वणविधिना पिण्डदानोपकारकत्वस्याविशेषात्। अन्यथा पुत्रपदस्य स्वार्थत्यागानुपपत्तेः पौत्राधिकारज्ञापकं वचनं कथञ्चिदपि लभ्येतापि प्रपौत्रस्य.तु न पृथग्वचनमस्ति। तस्मादुपकारकत्वादेव प्रपौत्रस्याप्यधिकार इति पुत्रपदमुपलक्षणम्। दायभाग XI. 34-36.'

has to return only the principal and has to pay no interest and the Mit. quotes a verse of Brhaspati [837] where all the three descendants are mentioned in one breath and the Mit. adds that the great-grandson has not to pay even the principal if he has received no ancestral property. This last remark implies that the Mit. regarded that the great-grandson was also included in the extended sense of 'putra'. Yāj. II. 51 begins by saying that whoever takes the wealth of a deceased person has to pay the latter's debts, so the great-grandson would have to pay the great-grand-father's debts if he received the assets of the grand-father. Therefore the Mit. on II. 50 expressly mentions that a great-grandson need not pay his great-grand-father's debts if he received no assets, because, otherwise being included in the extended meaning of putra, he would have had to pay. There was no necessity to bring in or mention the prapautra under II. 50 if the Mit. did not include the prapautra in the word putra. Again on Yāj. II. 51 ('putrahīnasya rikthinaḥ') the Mit. included even prapautra under the word putra. This shows that the Mit. is quite conscious that the three descendants of a man form one group and succeed to his estate and liabilities and putra includes three descendants wherever the context so requires. If the word 'putra' is not to be taken as only illustrative and as including both grandson and great-grandson, serious difficulties will arise even in the interpretation of Yāj. on which the Mit. comments. For example, in Yāj. II. 135–136 it is said that when a sonless man dies his wife, daughters and other heirs (named there) succeed one after another. If 'putra' is taken to mean only 'son' and no one else, then on the death of a man without a son his wife or daughter (whoever is alive) will take the wealth even if a son's son exists. But that would be absurd and is not stated by any one. Therefore the word putra has to be interpreted in a wider sense in a proper context. Many works such as the Vyavahāramayūkha, the Vīramitrodaya, the Dattakamīmānsā interpret the word 'putra' as including three generations. Therefore, though the Mit. in its remarks on inheritance and succession expressly names the son and grandson only (lit. it should have mentioned only the son) it must be taken as including the great-grandson also, particularly in view of the fact that it refers to the great-grandson in its comment on Yāj. I. 50 and 51 as taking the riktha which the Mit. (on Yāj. II. 114) interprets as aptratibandha dāya. Baud. Manu, Yājñavalkya speak of the three descendants and Śankha-likhita, Vas. XI. 39 and Yama employ [838] only the word putra or suta in relation to the three ancestors. Therefore, the remark of Dr. Kapadia in 'Hindu Kinship' on p. 162 'Vijñāneśvara understands by the word putra sons and grandsons only' is unjustified. It is impossible to hold with Dr. Kapadia that the Mit. ran counter to the express dicta of renowned Smṛtis such as those of Manu, Śankha-Likhita and Purānas like the Visnu-purāna III. 13.30 (quoted above in note 582) and that in its remarks on succession it forgot its own interpretation of putra on Yāj. II. 51. He has also not correctly understood the words of the Mit. introducing Yāj. II. 137: 'sons and grandsons take the wealth; in their absence, the wife and others; thus it is said (by me)'. This is wrong for several reasons. 'Wife and others take the wealth' is said by Yāj. (in II. 135-36). The following words are 'now (the author) declares an exception to both.' This clearly refers to Yāj. (II. 137) and not to Vijñāneśvara and so 'uktam' also must refer to Yāj. and not to Vijñāneśvara. Therefore, according to the Mit. the great-grandson is included in the extended meaning of the word 'putra', is entitled just like a son or a grandson to offer śrāddha (in default of a son or grandson) and to take the wealth and pay the debts of the ancestor. In the matter of payment of debts there is, on account of the difference in the period that elapses, a difference between all the three descendants if no ancestral wealth is left by the ancestor, viz. the son pays the debt with interest, the grandson only the principal lent but without interest and the great-grandson nothing at all. This shows that even between the son and the grandson that are expressly mentioned by Yāj. II. 50 as to the payment of debts there is a difference and that as the great-grandson had to pay nothing when no ancestral property existed he was not mentioned at all in Yāj. II. 50.

837. ऋणमात्मीयवत्पित्र्यं देयं पुत्रैर्विभावितम्। पैतामहं समं देयमदेयं तत्सुतस्य तु॥ इति बृहस्पतिस्मरणात्। ; समं यावद् गृहीतं तावदेव देयं न वृद्धिः तत्सुतस्य प्रपौत्रस्यादेयमगृहीतधनस्य। मिता. on या. II. 50, पुत्रहीनस्य रिक्थिन इत्येतदपि पुत्रपौत्रहीनस्य प्रपौत्रादयो यदि रिक्थं गृह्णन्ति तदा ऋणं दाप्या नान्यथेत्येवमर्थम्। पुत्रपौत्रौ च रिक्थग्रहणाभावेपि दाप्यावित्युक्तम्। मिता. on या. II. 51.

838. तथा शङ्खलिखितयमाः । पिता पितामहश्चैव तथैव प्रपितामहः । जातं पुत्रं प्रशंसन्ति पिण्डलं शुकला इव ॥ प्रपितामहग्रहणात् पुत्रपदं प्रपौत्रपर्यन्तपरम् । तदुक्तेन प्रपौत्रपर्यन्तस्य श्राद्धदानेन प्रपितामहपर्यन्तोपकारकत्वात् तुल्यौ दायाधिकारौ । दायभाग III. 18 and कल्पतरु p. 20; पिता पितो...उपासते सुतं जातं शकुन्ता इव पिण्डलम् ॥ वसिष्ठ XI. 39, वसिष्ठ XI. 40 is quoted by कल्पतरु p. 20.

Just as the king is an ultimate heir and also the guardian of all minors, so he is like the son of a person (who has no relatives left) for performing śrāddhas

The next question is about the times when śrāddha is to be performed. It has been seen above (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 696 ff) that long before the time of the Śat. Br. five daily observances (called Mahāyajñas) were prescribed for each house-holder, viz the sacrifice to beings, that to men, that to the Fathers, that to the gods and that to Veda The Śat. Br. and the Tai. Ā. (II. 10) say further that this daily rite in which one offers svadhā (food) to the Fathers even up to water was called pitryajña. Manu III. 70 defines pitryajña as tarpaṇa (satiating ancestors with the offerings of water). Manu III. 82 provides that an householder should daily perform a śrāddha with food or with water or with milk, roots and fruits and thus please the Fathers. Śrāddha originally meant a sacrifice performed for the Fathers on Amāvāsyā (vide Gaut. 15. 1–2).[838a] By applying that word to the daily offering of water to the Manes what is intended to be conveyed is that the special characteristics of śrāddha in the strict sense are to be extended to this daily rite so far as possible. Amāvāsyā is of two kinds, Sinīvālī and Kuhū. Those who keep śrauta fires should perform śrāddha on the former, while those who have not kept śrauta fires and śūdras should offer śrāddha on the latter.

Śrāddhas are divided into three classes, nitya, naimittika and kāmya. An observance is called nitya when it is laid down that it must be performed on a certain or fixed occasion (such as every day, on an amāvāsyā, or on Astakā day). What is laid down for being done on an occasion which is uncertain is called naimittika (such as the birth of a son). What is ordained to be done in case one desires a certain reward or fruit is called kāmya (e. g. the performance of a śrāddha on Krttikā or Rohinī by one who desires heaven or progeny). The five daily yajñas including pitṛ-yajña are nitya i. e. they must be performed without any eye to any reward therefrom and the non-performance thereof will lead to sinfulness. Passages mentioning the rewards that follow from the performance of obligatory (nitya) rites are only laudatory, they only convey that such performances make a man pure, but it is not meant that they are not obligatory and may be performed only if a person desires the rewards or results promised (i. e. such performances are not kāmya). Āp. Dh. S. (II. 7. 16. 4–7) provides certain times for the performance of śrāddha viz. that it must be performed in the latter half of every month, that the afternoon is preferable for it, that the last days of the latter half of each month are preferable to the first days of the latter half. Gaut. 15. 3 and Vas. XI. 16 say that śrāddha may be performed on any day of the dark half of a month after the 4th day and Gaut. 15. 5 adds that if particularly appropriate materials or particularly holy brāhmanas are available or the performer is near a very sacred place (such as Gayā) a śrāddha may be performed on any day. Kūrma (II. 20 23) says the same thing. The Agnipurāna 115. 8 says that at Gayā a śrāddha may be performed on any day (na kālādi Gayātīrthe dadyāt pindāmśca nityaśaḥ). Manu (III. 276–278) provides that the days of the dark half of the month beginning with the 10th but excepting the 14th[838b] are recommended for śrāddha, that one performing a śrāddha on even lunar days (i. e. on the 10th, 12th) and on the even naksatras (i. e. on Bharanī, Rohinī &c.) gains the fulfilment of all his desires, that one who worships the Manes on uneven days (11th, 13th &c) and on uneven constellations (Krttikā, Mrgaśiras &c) obtains prosperous offspring and that just as the latter half of a month is 838 b. About the 14th of the dark half या I 264 says 'अतिपत्सर्पभूतिघ्नैका वर्जयित्वा चतुर्दशीम्। शस्त्रेण तु हता ये वै तेभ्यस्तत्र प्रदीयते॥, compare मनु III.276, and मरीचि states विषशस्त्रश्वापदादितिर्यग्ब्राह्मणघातिनाम्। चतुर्दश्या क्रिया कार्या अन्येषा तु विगर्हिता॥ q by स्मृतिच. (श्रा.) p. 367, श्राद्धतत्त्व p 191. ब्राह्मणघातिना here means ब्राह्मणकृतघातेऽप्यस्तीति. This only means that śrāddha should not be performed for anyone on the 14th of the dark half except for those who were killed by poison or by beasts, snakes, lower animals or brāhmanas or in battle But a śrāddha may be performed on any tithi of the dark half for those killed in battle or by poison &c. It should be noted that Manu prescribes (III. 282) that an āhitāgni should not perform a śrāddha except on darśa, from which it follows that only others (who had no śrauta fires) could offer śrāddha on any day of the dark half. Vide स्कन्दपुराण VI. 204, 24–27 and VI 219 19–21 for the proposition that śrāddha should be performed on the 14th tithi of the dark half of Bhādrapada for those who met a violent death by poisoning or fire or were killed by animals having fangs or horns or who committed suicide.

838 a. अथ श्राद्धम्। अमावास्याया पितृभ्यो दद्यात्। गौ. 15. 1–2. दृष्टचन्द्रा सिनीवाली नष्टचन्द्रा कुहूस्तथा। तत्र साग्निकै सिनीवाल्यां श्राद्धं कार्यमितरै कुह्याम्। तथा च व्यास.। दृष्टचन्द्रा सिनीवाली कार्या विप्रैस्तु साग्निकैः। नष्टचन्द्रा कुहूः कार्या शूद्रैर्विप्रैरनग्निकैः॥ अपरार्क p. 417, स्मृतिच. (श्रा. p 344) The स्कन्दपुराण (VI 216 83) gives the following etymology of अमावास्या 'अमा नाम रवे रश्मिसहस्रममलम् स्थितः। तस्मिन्वसति येनेन्दुरमावास्या तत स्मृता' The वायुपुराण (56. 42) states 'अमा वसेतामस्मे तु यस्या चन्द्रदिवाकरौ। एका पञ्चदशी रात्रिममावास्या तत स्मृता॥' अमा means सह or एकत्र.

---

preferable to the first half so the afternoon is preferable to the forenoon for the performance of a śrāddha. Anuśāsanaparva 87. 18 is the same as Manu III. 276. Yāj. (I. 217–218), the Kūrma (II 20. 2–8), Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 20 ff) and Varāhapurāna 13. 33–35 sum up in one place the times for performing śrāddhas as follows: Amāvāsyā, the Aṣṭakā days, lucky days (such as the birth of a son), dark half of a month, the two ayanas (the two days on which the sun appears to start towards the south or north i e. solstices), possession of sufficient materials (such as rice and pulse or meat), the arrival of a worthy brāhmaṇa, the equinoctial points (visuvat, i. e. the sun's apparent entrance into Aries and Balance), the days on which the sun passes into one rāśi from another, the astrological conjunctions called Vyatīpāta[838c], Gajacchāyā, eclipses of the sun and the moon, when the performer has an intense desire to perform śrāddha–these are times for performing śrāddha. The Mārkan-838c. अपरार्क p.426 quotes बृद्धमनु for defining व्यतीपात 'श्रवणाश्विधनिष्ठाद्या-नागदैवतमस्तके। यद्यमा रविवारेण व्यतीपातः स उच्यते॥'. Vide अग्निपु 209. 13 for the same verse with slight variations (due probably to not reading the mss correctly). When Amāvāsyā occurs on a Sunday and the moon is on that day either in Sravana nakṣatra or in Aśvinī, Dhaniṣṭhā, Ārdrā or the first quarter of Āśleṣā, that is a conjunction called व्यतीपात, some explain मस्तक as meaning मृगशिरोनक्षत्र. Bāṇa mentions Vyatīpāta in his हर्षचरित व्यतीपात is also defined in another way with reference to Rāśis. पञ्चाननस्थौ गुरुभूमिपुत्रौ मेषे रवि. स्याद्यदि शुक्लपक्षे। पाशाभिधाना करमेन युक्ता तिथिर्व्यतीपात इतीह योग॥ q, by आ. क. ल. pp. 18–19. When on the 12th of the bright half the moon is in Hasta nakṣatra, the sun in Mesa (Aries) and Jupiter and Mars in Lion, then the conjunction is called व्यतीपात गजच्छाया is a conjunction that occurs when the moon is in Maghā naksatra and the sun is in Hasta and the tithi is 13th in the rainy season. विश्वरूप on या. II 218 quotes· यदि स्याच्चन्द्रमाः पित्र्ये करे चैव दिवाकर. । वर्षासु च त्रयोदश्यां सा च्छाया कुञ्जरस्य तु॥. अपरार्क quotes a काठकश्रुति 'एतद्धि देवपितृणां चायनं यद्धस्तिच्छाया)'. Both the मिता. and अपरार्क p. 427 have a similar verse The कल्पतरु (श्रा)p. 9 and कृत्यरत्नाकर p.319 quote ब्रह्मपुराण 'योगो मघात्रयोदश्यां कुञ्जरच्छायसंश्रित.। भवेन्मघायां संस्थे च शशिन्यर्के करे स्थिते॥.' The सौरपुराण (51.31–32) puts it as 'श्राद्धपक्षे त्रयोदश्यां मघास्विन्दुः करे रवि.' The स्कन्दपुराण (VI 220 42–44) explains हस्तिच्छाया in several ways. The अग्निपु (165 3–4) explains हस्तिच्छाया in two ways Some take गजच्छाया literally and say that śrāddha should be performed in the shadow of an elephant. The Vanaparva 200 121 avers that such a śrāddha in which the ears of the elephant serve as a fan gives gratification for thousands of कल्पs. अपरार्क p 427 quotes a verse from the महाभारत about श्राद्ध performed in the rainy season under the shadow of an elephant and fanned by the flapping of its ears and the meat being that of a goat all red in colour.

---

deya[838d] (chap. 28. 22–23), adds that śrāddha should be performed when a man dreams an evil dream and when evil planets affect the naksatra of his birth. In an eclipse the appropriate time for śrāddha is what is called Spaṛśa Kāla[839] (i e. when the eclipse begins), as stated in a verse of Vrddha-Vasistha. The Brahmapurāna (220. 51–54) contains all the times specified by Yāj. and a few more. Vide also Skandapurāna VII. 1. 30–32, Visnupurāna III. 14. 4–6, Padma (srsti 9. 128–129). Acc. to Visnu Dh. S. 76. 1–2, Amāvāsyā, the three Astakās and the three Anvastakās, the 13th day of the dark half of Bhādrapada on which the moon is in Maghā, Śarad and Vasanta are obligatory (nitya) times for śrāddha and that if a person does not perform śrāddha on these days he goes to Hell. Visnu Dh. S. (77.1–7) states that the day of the sun's passage from one sign of the zodiac to another, the two equinoctial days, particularly the solsticial days, Vyatīpāta, the constellation on which the performer is born, a time of rejoicing (son's birth or the like)—these are kāmya times and a śrāddha performed on these occasions gives infinite pleasure (to the Manes). The Kūrmapurāna (Uttarārdha 16. 6–8) says that śrāddhas called kāmya are commended on eclipses, solstice days, equinoctial days and on Vyatīpāta and they give infinite pleasure (to the Manes) and śrāddha performed on Sankrānti (sun's passage from one sign of the zodiac to another) is inexhaustible and so also on days of birth and on the several naksatras śrāddhas should be performed. Āp. Dh. S. II. 7. 16. 8–22, Anuśāsana 87, Vāyu 89. 10–19, Yāj I 262–263, Brahmapurāna 220. 15–21, Visnu Dh. S. 78. 36–50, Kūrmapurāna (II. 20. 17–22), Brahmānda III. 17. 10–22 state what rewards a man gets if he performs śrāddhas on each of the days from the first to the 15th of the dark half These lists do not completely agree with each other. That of Āp. being probably the most ancient, is set out here:—Śrāddha performed on each of the 15 days of the dark half respectively yields the following results in order, viz. progeny chiefly consisting of females (on 1st tithi of dark half), sons that will be thieves, sons that will be possessed of Vedic learning and the performance of Veda-vratas, son that will own small domestic animals, many sons that will be distinguished (by their learning) and the performer will not die childless, a great traveller and gambler (on the 6th), success in agriculture (on 7th), prosperity (on 8th), one-hoofed animals (on 9th), success in trade (10th day), black iron and tin and lead (on 11th), son possessed of cattle (on 12th), many sons and many friends and handsome children which will die young (13th tithi), success in arms (14th), prosperity (on 15th i. e. Amāvāsyā). Gārgya (q by Par. M. I. 2 p. 324) provides that one should not perform śrāddha on Nandā, on Friday, on 13th of the dark half and on the naksatra of birth and the preceding and the following naksatras for fear of losing one's sons and wealth. The Nandā tithis are 1st, 6th and 11th. The Anuśāsana-parva (87. 16) provides that he who performs śrāddha on the 13th tithi attains pre-eminence among his agnates, but then the young men in his house die as a consequence.

838 d. श्राद्धार्हद्रव्यसंभारो तथा दुःस्वप्नदर्शने। जन्मर्क्षग्रहपीडासु श्राद्धं कुर्वीत यत्नतः॥ मार्कण्डेय 28,22. A man can perform a śrāddha on any tithi of the dark half of a month, but he should not perform it on a tithi when the moon is in the naksatra on which he was born or in Pūrvā-bhādrapadā or in Uttarābhādrapadā or Krttikā, Ārdrā, Āślesā or Mūla or in a naksatra, which is 5th, 14th or 23rd from the nakṣatra of his birth.

839. ग्रहणसुपराग.। तत्रापि स्पर्शकालो ग्राह्य। त्रिदशाः स्पर्शसमये तृप्यन्ति पितरस्तथा। मनुष्या मध्यकाले तु मोक्षकाले तु राक्षसाः॥ इति वृद्धवसिष्ठस्मरणात्। भट्टोजि on चतु सं. p. 124, स्मृतिच. (श्रा) p. 342 quotes the verse.

The śrāddhas performed on the days mentioned in Visnu Dh. S. 77. 1–6 are naimittika and those performed on certain tithis and days of the week for securing certain rewards would be kāmya śrāddhas. According to Par M. I. 1 p. 63 the performance of obligatory (nitya) actions is samskāraka (i e. effects a purifying change in the mind making it fit for higher things), while in some cases it may also produce the desire to know the Reality behind the appearances (i e. it is 'vividisā-janaka' as indicated by the Gītā 9. 27). Jaimini (VI. 3. 1–7) establishes the proposition that the nitya acts (such as Agnihotra, Darśa-pūrṇamāsa-yāga) must be performed even though the performer is unable to perform a subsidiary part of the rite; while Jai. VI. 3. 8–10 provide that every part of kāmya actions must be performed and if the performer thinks that he would be unable to perform all he should not undertake to perform a kāmya rite at all.[839a]

The Visnudharmasūtra (78. 1–7) states that one performing śrāddha on Sunday secures everlasting freedom from disease and those who perform śrāddha on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday (Jaiva), Friday and Saturday respectively secure happiness (or admiration by people), victory in battle, all desires, such learning as he desires, wealth and long life. The Kūrma (II. 20, 16–17) also expatiates on the rewards for śrāddhas on the several days of the week.

839 a. This position is stated by the परा भा. I part 1 p. 176: 'यदा कृत्स्नाङ्गानुष्ठानशक्तिस्तदैव काम्यमनुष्ठेयम्'. The विष्णुपुराण (III. 14.4–8) sets out the times for काम्यश्राद्ध. The two propositions of जैमिनि are often spoken of as यथाशक्तिन्याय and सर्वाङ्गोपसंहारन्याय.

The Visnu-Dharmasūtra (78. 8–15) mentions what rewards follow from performance of śrāddhas on the 28 naksatras from Krttikā to Bharanī (including Abhijit which is placed after Uttarāsādhā and before Śravana). Yāj I. 265–268, Vāyu chap. 82, Mārkandeya-purāna 30. 8–16, Kūrma (II. 20 9–15), Brahmapurāna 220. 33–42, Brahmānda (Upodghātapāda 18.1 ff) also deal with the same topic, but all these works do not present complete agreement For example, Visnu Dh S. and Yāj. agree that śrāddha performed on Krttikā, Rohinī, Aśvinī and Bharanī yield as rewards heaven, offspring, horses and longevity, but they disagree in several others e. g. while Visnu says that prosperity, beauty (or happiness) and all desires are obtained by performing śrāddha on the Pusya, Āślesā and Maghā naksatras respectively, Yāj. provides that a śrāddha on these three yields strength, son and eminence. The Anuśāsanaparva 89 and Vāyupurāna 82 set out the rewards of srāddhas on the several naksatras from Krttikā as declared by Yama to Śaśabindu.

It is stated in the Agnipurāna [840] that śrāddhas performed at a holy place and on days that are called Yugādi and Manvādi yield inexhaustible gratification (to the pitrs) The Visnupurāna [841], Matsyapurāna (17. 4–5), Padma V. 9. 130–131, Varāhapurāna and Prajāpati-smrti verse 22 and Skanda VII. 1. 205 33–34 state that the third tithi of Vaiśākha (bright half), the 9th of the bright half of Kārtika, the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada and 15th tithi of the dark half of Māgha are called Yugādi tithis (i. e the first days of the four Yugas from Krta).

---

840. तीर्थे युगादौ मन्वादौ श्राद्धं दत्तमथाक्षयम्। अग्निपुराण 117.61, युगादिषु च कर्तव्य मन्वन्तरादिकेऽपि च॥ बृहत्पराशर 5.3 (p. 149).

841. वैशाखमासस्य तु या तृतीया नवम्यसौ कार्तिकशुक्लपक्षे। नभस्यमासस्य तमिस्रपक्षे त्रयोदशी पञ्चदशी च माघे॥ एता युगाद्याः कथिता. पुराणैरनन्तपुण्यास्तिथयश्चतस्रः। विष्णुपुराण III. 14. 12–13 q by स्मृतिच I. pp. 58–59, कृत्यरत्नाकर p. 542, मद् पा p. 538. अपरार्क (p. 425) quotes the विष्णुपुराण differently. The मत्स्यपुराण (17.4) and पद्म place 15th of माघ before the 13th of भाद्रपद Vide अग्निपु 209. 14–15 for some different dates for युगादि The स्मृत्यर्थसार (p. 9) gives a different order. शुक्लतृतीया वैशाखे मेतपक्षे त्रयोदशी कार्तिके नवमी शुक्ला माघे दर्शश्च पूर्णिमा। एता युगादय. प्रोक्ता दत्तस्याक्षयकारकाः॥ The वराहपुराण (13 40–41) contains the verse वैशाखमासस्य O. मजापतिस्मृति (22) has a similar verse for युगादि days.

Matsya 17. 6–8, Agnipurāna 117. 61–64 and 209. 16–18, Saurapurāna 51. 33–36, Padmapurāna (Srsti 9. 132–135) mention the first tithis of the 14 Manus (or Manvantaras) as follows: 9th of the bright half of Āśvina, 12th of the bright half of Kārtika, the third of the bright half of Caitra and of Bhādrapada, the amāvāsyā of Fālguna, the 11th of the bright half of Pausa, 10th of bright half of Āsādha and the 7th of the bright half of Māgha, the 8th of the dark half of Śrāvana, the Full Moon of Āṣādha, Kārtika, Fālguna, Caitra and Jyestha. The Matsyapurāna list is quoted in the Sm. C. I. p. 58, Kṛtyaratnākara p. 543, Par. M. I. 1. p. 156 and I. 2 p. 311, and the Madanapārijāta p. 540. The orders in the Skandapurāna VII. 1. 205. 36–39 and the Smrtyarthasāra (p. 9) are slightly different. In the Skandapurāna (Nāgarakhanda) the first tithis of thirty kalpas from Śveta onwards are specified as fit for śrāddha, but are passed over here.

Āp. Dh. S. II.[842] 7. 17. 23–25, Manu III. 280, Visnu Dh. S. 77. 8–9, Kūrma (II. 16. 3–4), Brahmānda III. 14. 3, Bhavisya I. 185. 1 forbid the performance of śrāddha at night or at twilight or when the sun has just risen except in the case of an eclipse of the moon. Āp. adds that when once a śrāddha is begun in the afternoon and owing to some cause there is delay and the sun sets then the performer should perform the remaining rites the next day and he should observe a fast till the placing of the pindas on the darbhas. Visnu Dh. S. declares that śrāddha performed during an eclipse satisfies the Manes as long as the moon and stars exist and brings to the performer all advantages and the satisfaction of all his desires, while the Kūrmapurāna threatens that he who would not perform a śrāddha in an eclipse sinks (incurs sins or becomes ruined) as a cow in mud. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 217 is careful to point out that though there is a prohibition against eating during the progress of an eclipse of the sun or moon, that prohibition would only affect the eater (the brāhmana who eats śrāddha repast in an eclipse) but not the giver who will secure happiness (or good results) thereby.[843]

---

842 न च नक्तं श्राद्धं कुर्वीत। आरब्धे चाभोजनमा समापनात्। अन्यत्र राहुदर्शनात्। आप ध सू II. 7. 17 23–25; नक्तं तु वर्जयेच्छ्राद्धं राहोरन्यत्र दर्शनात्। सर्वस्वेनापि कर्तव्य क्षिप्रं वै राहुदर्शने॥ उपरागे न कुर्याद्यः पङ्के गौरिव सीदति॥ कूर्मपुराण II. 16. 3-4.

843 यद्यपि 'चन्द्रसूर्यग्रहे नाद्यात्' इति ग्रहणे भोजननिषेधस्तथापि भोक्तुर्दोषो दातुरनुवप'। मिता on याज्ञ I 217–218.

Very learned disquisitions are held in Aparārka p. 465 ff, Hemādri p. 313 ff and other writers and digests as to the meaning of aparāhna which is the time for śrāddha prescribed by Manu (III. 278). There are several views. Some hold that the part of the day after noon is 'after-noon.' The word 'pūrvāhna' occurs in Rg. X. 34. 11. Others relying on a śruti [844] text 'The forenoon is for gods, mid-day for men and afternoon for pitṛs' hold that the third part of the day divided into three parts is 'aparāhna.' A third view is that aparāhna is the 4th part of the day divided into five parts and they rely [845] on Śat. Br. II. 2. 3 9. The five parts are called prātaḥ, saṅgava, madhyandina (or madhyāhna), aparāhna and sāyāhna (or sāyam or astagamana). The first three are expressly mentioned even in the Rgveda V. 76. 3 Prajāpati-smṛti (verses 156–157) says that each of these five parts extends over three muhūrtas (the day being divided into fifteen muhūrtas). It further states that kutapa is the 8th muhūrta from sunrise and that śrāddha should be begun in kutapa and should not last beyond Rauhina muhūrta and that five muhūrtas (from 8th to 12th) are the maximum time for śrāddha.[846] The word kutapa has eight meanings as noted by the Sm. C. (śrāddha) p. 433 and Hemādri on śrāddha p. 320. The word is derived from 'ku' meaning 'condemned' (i. e. sin) and 'tapa' means 'what burns.' The eight[847] meanings of 'kutapa' are 'midday, a vessel of rhinoceros horn, woollen seat or blanket 844. पूर्वाह्णो वै देवाना मध्यन्दिनो मनुष्याणामपराह्णः पितॄणाम्। तस्मादपराह्णे ददाति। शतपथब्रा II. 4.2.8.

845. आदित्यस्त्वेव सर्व ऋतव. । यदैवोदेत्यथ वसन्तो यद्रा संगवोऽथ ग्रीष्मो यद्रा मध्यन्दिनोथ वर्षा यदापराह्णोऽथ शरद् यदैवास्तमेत्यथ हेमन्तस्तस्माद्ध मध्यन्दिन एवाधीत तर्हि ह्येषोऽस्य लोकस्य नेदिष्ठं भवति। शतपथ II. 2.3.9, quoted by स्मृतिच (श्रा p 363)

846. आरम्भं कुतपे कुर्याद्रौहिणं तु न लङ्घयेत्। एतत्पञ्चमुहूर्तान्तः श्राद्धकाल उदाहृत ॥ मुहूर्तास्तत्र विज्ञेया दश पञ्च च सर्वदा। तत्राष्टमो मुहूर्तो य स कालः कुतप' स्मृत ॥ प्रजापति verses 158–159. Compare पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 11.91–92) and स्कन्द VII 1 205 6 for similar verses. The names of the 15 मुहूर्तs are quoted in दीक्षितानन्द (on श्रा. folio 25a) and in बृहद्योगयात्रा of वराहमिहिर (VI. 2–4) m. in my paper on 'Varāhamihira and Utpala,' JBBRAS vol., 24–25 p. 21.

847 मध्याह्न' खड्गपात्रं च तथा नेपालकम्बल'। रूप्यं दर्भास्तिला गावो दौहित्रश्चाष्टम स्मृत ॥ पापं कुत्सितमित्याहुस्तस्य सन्तापकारिणि । अष्टावेते यतस्तस्य कुतपा इति विश्रुता ॥ स्कन्दपुराण VII 1. 205. 8–9, पद्म VI. 131.76–78, q. by स्मृतिच, (श्रा. p. 433 as स्मृत्यन्तर) and by हेमाद्रि p 320 and p. 1176 (where these are quoted as पैठीनसि's) लघुशातातप (verse 108) speaks of खड्गपात्र as दौहित्र and is quoted by अपरार्क (p 474) लघुशातातप (109) defines कुतप as the 8th part of the day (out of 15) and is quoted by श्रा. कि कौ p 317 अपरार्क p 474 quotes a smṛti giving three senses of दौहित्र 'अपत्यं दुहितुश्चैव खड्गपात्रं तथैव च। घृतं च फ-पिलाया गोर्दौहित्रमिति कीर्तितम् ॥'.

from Nepal, silver, darbhas, sesame, cows and daughter's son.' The general rule is that śrāddhas are performed in the afternoon (but this applies to śrāddha on New moon, Mahālaya, Astakā and Anvastakā śrāddhas), while Vrddhiśrāddha and śrāddha in which only corn is offered (āmaśrāddha) are performed in the morning. Medhātithi on Manu III. 245 quotes a smrti text on this [848] The Trikāndamandana (II. 150, 162) provides that when it is not possible to perform a religious rite at the time prescribed for it as appropriate, it should be performed at some other time thereafter and that, between the proper time of a rite and the means, the former is to be preferred and one should not wait for a time later than the proper one with the desire of being able to collect all the principal materials. [848a]

A few words must be said about the proper places for the performance of a śrāddha. Manu (III 206–207) lays down that the performer should make efforts to secure a spot sloping to the south and smear it with cowdung, a spot that is pure and unfrequented (by many persons) and that the Fathers are pleased by śrāddha at naturally clean spots or the banks of rivers and spots that are unfrequented. Yāj. I. 227 very briefly puts the requirements by saying that the place of śrāddha should be covered on all sides, should be pure and sloping to the south. Śankha says: [849] 'one should not perform śrāddha on the backs of bulls, elephants and horses, nor on raised earth platforms nor on land owned by others' The Kūrmapurāna states[850] 'Forests, sacred mountains, holy places, temples—these have no (definite) owner and they cannot be private property (of any one)'. Yama provides [851] 'if one offers śrāddha to his pitrs in spots

848. पूर्वाह्णे दैविक कार्यमपराह्णे तु पैतृकम्। एकोद्दिष्टं तु मध्याह्ने मातर्वृद्धिनिमित्तकम्॥ मेधातिथि on मनु III. 245. The दीपकालिका on या. I. 226 quotes this verse as from वायुपुराण and reads पूर्वाह्णे मातृक etc.

848 a. मुख्यकाले यदाप्तवर्यं कर्म कर्तुं न शक्यते। गौणकालेऽपि कर्तव्य गौणोप्यत्रेदृशो भवेत्॥ स्वकालादुत्तरो गौण कालः पूर्वस्य कर्मण॥ मुख्यकालमुपाश्रित्य गौणमप्यस्तु साधनम्। न मुख्यद्रव्यलोभेन गौणकालप्रतीक्षणम्॥ त्रिकाण्डमण्डन II 150, 157, 162.

849. गोगजाश्वादिपृष्ठेषु कृत्रिमायां तथा भुवि। न कुर्याच्छ्राद्धमेतेषु पात्रेष्वासु च भूमिषु॥ शङ्ख q. by परा मा I. 2 p 303, श्रा म. p. 140, स्मृतिच (श्रा p. 385).

850. अटव्य. पर्वता पुण्यास्तीर्थान्यायतनानि च। सर्वाण्यस्वामिकान्याहुर्न क्षेत्रेषु परिग्रह.॥ कूर्म II. 22 17 अपरार्क p 471, कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 116), and श्रा म p 148 quote a very similar verse as यम's.

851. यमः। परकीयप्रदेशेषु पितृणां निर्वपेत्तु यः। तद्भूमिस्वामिपितृभि श्राद्धकर्म विहन्यते॥ तस्माच्छ्राद्धानि देयानि पुण्येष्वायतनेषु च। नदीतीरेषु तीर्थेषु स्वभूमौ प्रयत्नतः। उपद्वारनिकुञ्जेषु तथा पर्वतसानुषु॥ q. by अपरार्क p 471, कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 115), compare कूर्म II 22 16 belonging to others, that śrāddha rite is destroyed by the pitṛs of the owner of those spots. Therefore, a man should perform śrāddha on holy spots, on river banks, in sacred places and particularly in land belonging to himself, in bowers near hills and on mountain tops' The Viṣnudharma-sūtra chap 85 mentions numerous holy places and then adds 'in these and other tīrthas, big rivers, on all natural sandy banks, near streams, on mountains, in bowers, forests, groves and spots that look charming because of being smeared with cowdung (śrāddha may be performed)' Śaṅkha (14 27–29) states 'whatever is given in holy Gayā, in Prabhāsa, Puṣkara, Prayāga, in the Naimiṣa forest (on the Sarasvatī), on the banks of the Ganges, Yamunā, Payoṣnī, on Amarakaṇṭaka, on Narmadā, in Benares, in Kuruksetra, Bhṛgutuṅga, on the Himālaya, on Sapta-Veṇī, on Ṛṣikūpa—all that becomes inexhaustible.' The Brahmapurāna (220. 5–7) also specifies river banks, lakes, mountain tops, sacred spots like Puṣkara as the proper places for śrāddha. The Vāyupurāna, chap 77 and Matsya 22 contain long lists of sacred places, countries, mountains in relation to śrāddhas. The Kalpataru (śrāddha p. 40) and Sr. P. p. 147 state that special characteristics of the tīrthas in the several countries that are declared to be fit places for śrāddha should be understood from the inhabitants of those various countries.

Sacred places will be dealt with in a separate section (on tīrthas).

The Viṣnudharmasūtra[852] (chap 84) prescribes that śrāddha should not be performed in Mleccha country, nor should one go to a Mleccha country and then defines a Mleccha country as one in which the system of the four varṇas is not established and states that Āryāvarta is beyond that The Vāyupurāna provides[853] that the country of Triśaṅku which is

852 न म्लेच्छविषये श्राद्धं कुर्यात्। न गच्छेन्म्लेच्छविषयम्। परानिपातेऽपि पीत्वा ब्रह्मस्वम्यमुपगच्छतीति। चातुर्वर्ण्यव्यवस्थानं यस्मिन्देशे न विद्यते। स म्लेच्छदेशो विज्ञेय आर्यावर्तस्तत पर.। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 84 1–4

853. त्रिशङ्कोर्वर्जयेद्देशं सर्वं द्वादशयोजनम्। उत्तरेण महानद्या दक्षिणेन तु कीकटम्॥ देशस्त्रैशङ्कवो नाम श्राद्धकर्मणि वर्जित.। कारस्करा कलिङ्गाश्च सिन्धोरुत्तरमेव च। प्रणष्टाश्रमवर्णाश्च देशा वर्ज्या. प्रयत्नत। वायुपुराण 78. 21–23. ब्रह्माण्ड, उपोद्घातपाद 14 31–33, quoted by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 162), and श्राद्धप्र. p 147 and अपरार्क p. 472 (as from ब्रह्माण्ड). Vide also विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I 141. 2–4.

twelve yojanas in extent and which is to the north of the river Mahānadī and to the south of Kīkata (i. e. Magadha) is not fit for śrāddha, similarly the countries called Kāraskara, Kalinga, the country to the north of the river Sindhu and all countries where the system of varnas and āśramas is not in existence should be sedulously avoided for śrāddhas. The Brahmapurāna (220. 8–10) makes the somewhat startling remark that the following countries should be avoided for śrāddhas viz. the Kirāta country, Kalinga, Konkana, Krimi (Krivi?), Daśārna, Kumārya (Cape Comorin), Tangana, Kratha, the northern banks of the Sindhu river and the south bank of Narmadā and the east of the Karaṭoyā.

The Mārkandeyapurāna [854] prescribes that for a śrāddha a place (ground) that is full of insects, that is arid, or is burnt by fire, from which proceed sounds that are painful to the ear, that is terrific in its aspect, that emits fetid smell should be avoided.

It was also provided from very early times that certain persons and animals are to be ejected from the place where śrāddha is to be performed and are not to be allowed to pollute the śrāddha rite by looking at it or by disturbing it in various other ways. Gaut. (15. 25–28) provides that food seen by dogs, cāndālas and those guilty of mahāpātakas becomes unclean (and so unfit); therefore one should offer śrāddha in a covered (or screened) place; or he should strew round about the place sesame or a worthy brāhmana who purifies a row of diners by his presence should perform a śānti for removing the taint caused (by a dog or cāndāla seeing the food &c). Āp. Dh. S. prescribes that the learned condemn the seeing of a śrāddha by dogs and those who (being patita) are excommunicated and that a leper, a bald man, one having sexual intercourse with another's wife, the son of a brāhmana who follows the profession of arms, the son of a brāhmana woman from a śūdra man—if these eat śrāddha food they pollute the diners sitting to eat in a row. Manu (III. 239–242) states: 'a cāndāla, a village pig or cock, a dog, a woman in her monthly illness, an impotent person—these should not be allowed to see brāhmanas engaged in taking dinner. Whatever is seen by these at a homa

---

854 वर्ज्या जन्तुमती रूक्षा क्षिति. क्षुता तथाग्निना। अनिष्टदृष्टशब्दोग्रा दुर्गन्धा श्राद्धकर्मणि॥ मार्कण्डेयपुराण 29. 19 q. by श्राद्धम p. 139.

(agnihotra), at a gift (of cows and gold), when brāhmaṇas are being fed, or at a religious rite (like the Darśa-Pūrṇamāsa sacrifice) or at a śrāddha becomes fruitless. A pig taints food (offered to gods or Manes) by merely smelling it, a cock by setting in motion the air with its wings, a dog by casting a glance and a man of low caste by touch. If a servant of even the person who offers śrāddha is lame or squint-eyed or has a limb less or more (i. e. having eleven or nine fingers &c.), he should be ejected from the place where śrāddha is to be performed.' It is provided by the Anuśāsanaparva (127.13) that śrāddha food should not be seen by a woman in her monthly illness or by a sonless woman or by one suffering from white leprosy. Viṣnu-dharmasūtra (82. 3 ff) contains a long list of about 30 persons who are not to be allowed near a śrāddha. The Kūrmapurāṇa (II. 22. 34–35) states that one devoid of a limb, a patita, a leper, one suffering from an open ulcer, an atheist, a cock, a pig, a dog, should be kept far away from a śrāddha; one should also avoid one that has a disgusting appearance, an impure person, one who is naked, a mad man, a gambler, a woman in her monthly course, those that wear indigo-coloured or yellow-red garments and those who follow heretical views. The Mārkaṇḍeya 32 20–24, Vāyu 78. 26–40, Viṣnupurāṇa III. 16. 12–14 and Anuśāsanaparva 91 43–44 also contain long lists which are passed over here. The Skandapurāṇa VI 217. 43 also speaks about a dog, a woman in her monthly illness, a patita and a hog not being allowed to see the śrāddha rite.

The classification of Śrāddhas.

Śrāddhas have been variously classified. One classification, viz. into nitya, naimittika and kāmya has already been described above (p. 369) Another classification is that into Ekoddista and Pārvaṇa[855]. The first is offered to one deceased person alone, while the latter is performed on the amāvāsyā of a month or in the dark half of Bhādrapada or on saṅkrānti and in it the three paternal ancestors are principally invoked. Brhas-

855 Vide H of Dh vol. III p 737, note 1425 for explanation of these two. अमावास्यां यत् क्रियते तत्पार्वणमुदाहृतम्। क्रियते वा पर्वणि यत्तत्पार्वणमिति स्थिति.॥ भविष्यपुराण I. 183 15 q. by कल्पतरु p. 7, श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 192, श्रा वि. of रुद्रधर, श्रा. कि कौ. p. 6 (which explains 'पर्वाणि अन्वष्टका माघीपौर्णमास्यादि') The परा. मा. I. 2 p 199 says पुरुषत्रयमुद्दिश्य यत्क्रियते तत्पार्वणम्। एकपुरुषोद्देशेन यत्क्रियते तदेकोद्दिष्टम्. Venk. ed. of भविष्य reads दर्शे वा क्रियते यत्तु।.

pati quoted in the Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara mentions five classes of śrāddhas as declared by Manu viz. nitya, naimittika, kāmya, Vrddhi and Pārvana[855]. The Śrāddhaviveka remarks that the sixteen pretaśrāddhas (to be described later on) are included under naimittika and that such śrāddhas as Gosthi-śrāddha enumerated in other smrtis are included in Pārvana. The Kūrmapurāna (II. 20. 26) similarly speaks of the five srāddhas as enumerated by Manu[857]. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 217 states that there are five śrāddhas, viz. 'ahar-ahaḥ-śrāddha, pārvana, vrddhiśrāddha, ekoddista and sapindīkarana. The daily śrāddha is described by Manu III. 82 (= Śankha 13 16 and Matsya 16.4) as one that is performed every day with food (cooked rice, yavas &c.) or with water or with milk, fruits and roots. Two verses of Viśvāmitra[858] quoted by several works speak of twelve kinds of śrāddhas, viz. nitya, naimittika, kāmya, vrddhi-śrāddha (performed on the birth of a son, marriage or similar incident of good luck), sapiṇḍana (sapiṇḍī-karana), pārvana, gosthiśrāddha, śuddhiśrāddha, karmānga, daivika, yātrāśrāddha, pustiśrāddha. Explanations of all these are quoted from the Bhavisyapurāna by the same works. Sapiṇḍana and Pārvana will be described below. Some of the rest not already defined may be briefly explained as follows: The Gosthī-śrāddha[859] is one which is performed when a man be-

856. नित्य नैमित्तिकं काम्यं वृद्धिश्राद्धं तथैव च। पार्वणं चेति मनुना श्राद्धं पञ्चविध स्मृतम्॥ बृहस्पति q. by श्रा. वि. of रुद्रधर p 1

857. कर्मारम्भेषु सर्वेषु कुर्यादभ्युदये पुन। पुत्रजन्मादिषु श्राद्धं पार्वणं पर्वसु स्मृतम्॥ अहन्यहनि नित्यं स्यात् काम्यं नैमित्तिकं पुन.। एकोद्दिष्टादि विज्ञेय द्विधा श्राद्धं तु पार्वणम्। एतत् पञ्चविधं श्राद्ध मनुना परिकीर्तितम्। कूर्म. II 20.24-26 आश्वलायन q. by श्राद्धकलिका enumerates them as काम्यं नैमित्तिकं वृद्धिरेकोद्दिष्टं च पार्वणम्। (folio 1)

858. नित्य नैमित्तिकं काम्यं वृद्धिश्राद्ध सपिण्डनम्। पार्वणं चेति विज्ञेयं गोष्ठ्यां शुद्ध्यर्थमष्टमम्॥ कर्माङ्गं नवम प्रोक्त दैविकं दशमं स्मृतम्। यात्रास्वेकादशं प्रोक्तं पुष्ट्यर्थं द्वादश स्मृतम्॥ विश्वामित्र q by कल्पतरु p 6, स्मृतिच्च (श्रा. p. 334), मद. पा p. 475, श्रा. क. ल p. 6, निर्णयसिन्धु III. p 374 The कूर्मपुराण also (II. 20 26-27) mentions यात्राश्राद्ध, शुद्धिश्राद्ध and दैविकश्राद्ध This enumeration occurs in भविष्यपुराण I. 183.6-7 and स्कन्दपुराण VII. 1.205. 41-42 The कल्पतरु refers to two verses of the ब्रह्मपुराण for explaining यात्राश्राद्ध which are quoted at length in श्रा कि कौ p. 267 and श्रा. प्र. p. 333.

859. गोष्ठ्या यत्क्रियते श्राद्धं गोष्ठीश्राद्धं तदुच्यते। बहूना विदुषा संपत्सुखार्थं पितृतुप्तये। भविष्यपु q by कल्पतरु p 7, मद. पा p 476, श्रा क. ल p 7. The कल्पतरु explains गोष्ठी चात्र श्राद्धकर्तृसमुदाय.। संपत्सुखार्थं श्राद्धसामग्रीसम्पदा यत्सुखं तदर्थं बहूनां विदुषा केनचिन्निमित्तेन युगपच्छ्राद्धे कर्तव्य उपस्थिते पृथक्पाकाग्नयस्सम्पत्तौ सम्भूय श्राद्धसामग्रीसंपादनेन.यच्छ्राद्धं क्रियते तद्गोष्ठीश्राद्धमिति शङ्खधर.।' (p. 7) The पण्णवति-श्राद्धप्रयोग of रघुनाथ gives another explanation 'श्राद्धस्य गोष्ठ्यां वार्तायां क्रियमाणाया तज्जनितोत्साहेन यत् क्रियते श्राद्धम्।'.

comes enthusiastic owing to a talk about śrāddha or when many learned men gather together at a sacred place and, finding it impossible to have separate cooking arrangements for each, pool their resources for collecting śrāddha materials and perform simultaneously śrāddha for the pleasure it affords to themselves and for the gratification of pitrs The Śuddhi-śrāddha is one where brāhmanas are fed when a person undergoes śuddhi (purification) after being guilty of some sin or transgression (it is a subsidiary act in a prāyaścitta) That śrāddha is called 'karmānga' which is performed at the time of the Garbhādhāna rite or at the performance of a soma sacrifice, or at simantonnayana, pumsavana (it is like Vrddhiśrāddha). That is called daivika śrāddha which is intended to propitiate gods (it is like nityaśrāddha and is performed on the 7th or 12th tithi or the like with sacrificial food) When a man going to a distant country on a pilgrimage or the like performs a śrāddha in which clarified butter is served (to brāhmanas) in abundance or when he comes back to his house, that is yātrā-śrāddha. That is called pustiśrāddha which is performed for the health (or fattening) of the body (when taking some medicine for the purpose) or for the increase of one's wealth. Out of these [860] twelve the principal ones are pārvana, ekoddista, vrddhi and sapindana. There are works called San-navati-śrāddha such as those of Śivabhatta, son of Govinda, and of Raghunātha. The 96 śrāddhas to be performed in a year are briefly enumerated in a verse [861] quoted in the note. They are · 12 śrāddhas on

---

860. गोष्ठ्या यत्क्रियते श्राद्धं गोष्ठीश्राद्ध तदुच्यते। बहूना विदुषा सम्यक्सुखार्थं पितृतृप्तये ॥ क्रियते शुद्धये यत्तु ब्राह्मणाना तु भोजनम्। शुद्ध्यर्थमिति तत्प्रोक्तं वैनतेय मनीषिभि· ॥ निषेककाले सीमे च सीमन्तोन्नयने तथा। ज्ञेयं पुंसवने चैव श्राद्ध कर्माङ्गमेव च॥ देवानुद्दिश्य यच्छ्राद्धं तत्तु दैविकमुच्यते। हविष्येण विशिष्टेन सतम्यादिषु यत्नत ॥ गच्छन्देशान्तरं यच्च श्राद्धं कुर्यात्तु सर्पिषा। यात्रार्थमिति तत्प्रोक्तं भवेशे च न संशय ॥ शरीरोपचये श्राद्धमर्थोपचय एव वा। पुष्ट्यर्थमेतद्विज्ञेयमौपचायिकमुच्यते ॥ भविष्यपु. I. 183 15-19, q. by स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p. 334, श्रा क. ल. p 7, निर्णयसिन्धु p 374. There are some various readings here that are not noted. The printed text (Venk ed) presents different readings, such as गोग्यश्च क्रियते श्राद्धं and क्रियते देवमुद्दिश्य सतम्यादिषु यत्नत These 12 श्राद्धs are defined in स्कन्दपुराण VII. 1. 205 43-50 also. On दैविकश्राद्ध the टोडरानन्द (श्राद्धसौख्य folio 4 b) remarks 'अत्र यद्यपि प्रकृतं श्राद्धमसम्भवि देवोद्देश्यकत्वेन विधानात् तथापि श्रद्धया कार्यं श्राद्धमिति योगसामान्यात् श्राद्धपदाभिधेयतावत्त्वं बोद्धव्यम्।'

861. अमा युगमन्वन्तरधृतिपातमहालया। आन्वष्टक्य च पूर्वेद्यु· षण्णवत्य प्रकीर्तिता। verse 5 of षण्णवतिश्राद्ध of शिवभट्ट (Ms in Bhadkamkar collection) the 12 amāvāsyās in the year, the four śrāddhas on the Yugādi days (note 841 above), the fourteen śrāddhas on the Manvantarādi days (p. 375 above), the śrāddhas on 12 saṅkrāntis (i. e. the sun's apparent motion from one sign of the Zodiac to another), the 13 śrāddhas on the Yoga called Dhṛti (i. e. Vaidhrti) and the 13 śrāddhas on the Vyatīpāta yoga, the 16 Mahālaya śrāddhas, the four Anvastakā days (according to Āśv. as noted on pp 359–360), the four Aṣṭakā days and the four days (i e. 7th of dark half of the months of Hemanta and Śiśira) of the day previous (to the Astakā). These classifications and enumerations of śrāddhas will afford an idea how the doctrine of śrāddhas was carried to an exaggerated extent in the course of centuries. It goes without saying that only a few people could have indulged in the luxury of so many śrāddhas a year and most people were content with the performance of only one Mahālayaśrāddha and one or two more. It may be noted that Manu (III. 122) first prescribed that on the amāvāsyā of each month an elaborate śrāddha should be performed, but knowing that this was almost impossible Manu recommends to all (III. 281) that an elaborate śrāddha should be performed on three amāvāsyās in one year[862] (viz. in Hemanta, Grīsma and Varsā) and one should perform every day the śrāddha which is one of the five daily sacrifices (III. 82–83). Devala went further and recommended that an elaborate śrāddha may be performed only once a year.

(Continued on the next page)

The next important question is about the qualifications of the brāhmanas that were invited to dinner on a śrāddha day. Only brāhmanas were and are entitled to be invited for śrāddha

---

(Continued from the last page)

The महालयs are 16 as stated by शाट्यायनि and देवल q. by परा मा. I. 2 p 319 and by स्मृ सु. (श्राद्ध) p 745, नभस्यस्यापरे पक्षे तिथिषोडशकं तु यत्। कन्यास्थार्कान्वितं चेत् स्यात्स कालः श्राद्धकर्मणि॥ (शा); अहःषोडशकं यत्तु शुक्लप्रतिपदा सह। चन्द्रक्षयविशेषेण सापि दर्शात्मिका स्मृता॥ (देवल). Generally there are 13 वैधृतियोगs and 13 vyatīpāta yogas in a year, though sometimes there may be 14 of each. There are in a month 27 yogas beginning from विष्कम्भ. The शतपथब्रा (VI. 4. 2. 10) speaks of 12 अष्टकाs 'द्वादश पौर्णमास्यो द्वादशाष्टका द्वादशामावास्याः'.

862. एतेन विधिना श्राद्धं कुर्यात्संवत्सरं सकृत्। त्रिश्चतुर्वा यथाश्राद्धं मासे मासे दिने दिने। देवल q. by स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p. 497 which explains: एतेन विधिना पार्वणविधिना प्रतिसंवत्सरमेकवारं विशिष्टेऽह्नि प्रतिसंवत्सरं त्रिवारं वा कल्पतरु p. 22 (श्राद्ध) quotes the verse.

dinner whoever may be the performer of the śrāddha. In this connection many works contain high eulogies of brāhmanas, but they are passed over here, as the eulogy of brāhmanas has been already dealt with at some length in H. of Dh vol. II. pp. 37–38, 135–138. It may be noted that the grhyasūtras contain a few requirements, but as we proceed the smrtis and purānas go on adding qualifications and enlarging the lists of those that should not be invited. For example, the Āśv. Gr [862a] IV. 7. 2, Śān. Gr. IV. 1. 2. Āp. Gr VIII. 21. 2, Ap. Dh. S. II. 7. 17 4, Hir. Gr II. 10. 2, Baud. Gr. II. 10. 5–6 and II 8. 2–3, Gaut. 15. 9 provide that the brāhmanas to be invited should be possessed of Vedic learning, should be of excellent character (free from anger and passion and possessed of control of mind and senses) and of meritorious conduct, pure, not deficient in a limb or not having an excessive limb (e. g. having six fingers). The Āp. Dh S states that he who has studied the three Vedic verses in which the word 'madhu' occurs (Rg I. 90. 6–8, Vāj. S 13 27–29, Tai. S. IV. 2. 9 3), he who has studied the Trisuparna, one who is a Trināciketa, one who has studied the mantras required for the four sacrifices (Aśvamedha, Purusamedha, Sarvamedha and Pitrmedha) or who has performed these four sacrifices, one who keeps the five fires, he who knows the Sāman called Jyestha, he who carries out the duty of daily Vedic study, the son of one 862 a ब्राह्मणान् श्रुतशीलवृत्तसपन्नानेकैन वा । आश्व. गृ IV. 7, 2. ब्राह्मणान् शुचीन् मन्त्रवत समङ्गानयुज आमन्त्रयते । योनिगोत्रासम्बन्धान् । नार्धापेक्षो भोजयेत् । हिर गृ II 10 2. त्रिमधुस्त्रिसुपर्णपञ्चाग्निनाचिकेतश्चतुर्मेध. पञ्चाग्नियंष्टसामिको वेदाध्याय-दूचानशुत्र श्रोत्रिय इत्येते श्राद्धे भुज्जाना. पङ्क्तिपावना भवन्ति । आप ध II. 7. 17–22. त्रिसुपर्ण is the name applied, according to Haradatta, to the three anuvākas beginning with ब्रह्ममेतु मामू (तै. आ X 48–50) or to the verse चतुः-शिखण्डा युवति सुपेशा in तै ब्रा I. 2 1. 27 or Rg. X 114. 3–5. त्रिणाचिकेत' is explained in different ways viz (1) one who knows the Nāciketa fire, (2) a person who has thrice kindled the Nāciketa fire, (3) a person who has studied the Anuvāka called Virajas. For the Nāciketa fire, vide Kathopanisad I. 1. 16–18 The word 'Trināciketah' occurs in Katha Up I. 1. 17 and is explained by शङ्कर as 'त्रि कृत्वा नाचिकेतोऽग्निश्चितो येन स. त्रिणाचिकेतास्तद्विज्ञानस्त-दध्ययनस्तदनुष्ठानवान् वा । Tai Br (III. 11. 7–8) describes the नाचिकेत fire and the story of Naciketas The five fires are Gārhapatya, Āhavanīya, Daksināgni, Āvasathya (or anupāsana) and Sabbya Vide H. of Dh. vol II. p 679 Vide ibid. II. p 767 note 1838a for explanations of पङ्क्तिपावन, उपेष्टसामिक and the other words explained above देवल defines श्रोत्रिय as 'एका शाखा सकल्पा वा षड्भिरङ्गैरधीत्य वा । षट्कर्मनिरतो विप्र श्रोत्रियो नाम धर्मवित्॥' q. by आ म p 59. Pānini (V. 2.84) derives श्रोत्रिय as श्रोत्रियश्छन्दोधीते षट्कर्म—refers to यजनयाजनाध्ययनाध्यापनप्रतिग्रहदानानि.

---

who has studied the Veda and is able to teach the whole Veda with its aṅgas, a Śrotriya—these persons sanctify the company if they eat at a funeral repast. Gaut. 15. 28, Baud. Dh. S. II. 8.2, Manu III. 185–186, Yāj I. 219, Varāhapurāna 14.2 contain almost the same words about those who sanctify the company of diners (i. e. who are paṅktipāvana). The Anuśāsanaparva (90. 25–31), Kūrmapurāṇa II. 21. 1–14, Matsya 16 7–13, Brahmapurāna 220. 101–104, Vāyu 79. 56–59 and 83. 52–55, Skanda VI. 217. 21–25 give long lists of paṅktipāvana brāhmaṇas. The Hir. Gṛ. II. 10.2, Baud. Dh. S. II 2. 7, Kūrma (II. 21. 14) and others say that a performer of śrāddha should invite one who is not a relative connected by marriage (such as a maternal uncle) nor one who is of the same gotra, nor one who is connected with the performer by Veda study (i. e. is his teacher or pupil), nor a friend nor one who expects monetary help from the performer. Manu (III. 138–139) provides that one should not invite at a śrāddha dinner a personal friend, that one may gain a friend by making valuable gifts to him (on other occasions), that one should feed at a śrāddha a brāhmana whom he does not deem either his friend or foe and that he who performs śrāddhas and offerings to gods chiefly to gain friends reaps no reward after death by those śrāddhas or offerings. But Manu III. 144 (= Kūrma II. 21–22) provides that one may invite even a friend but not a foe though the latter may be learned. Manu (III. 135–137 and 145–147) lays down that the main or best rule to be followed is to present śrāddha food to those who are devoted to spiritual knowledge, that between a man who has studied one whole recension of the Veda but whose father was not a śrotriya and one who is himself not a śrotriya but whose father had studied a whole recension of the Veda (i. e. whose father was a śrotriya) the latter is the more worthy of the two, that one should strive to feed at a śrāddha an adherent of the Ṛgveda who has studied one entire recension of that Veda or a follower of the Yajurveda who has studied one Śākhā thereof or a singer of sāmans who has finished one recension of the Sāmaveda and that if one of these preceding three is honoured and dines at a śrāddha, the ancestors of the performer will be gratified up to the seventh generation for a very long time. Hārīta (q. by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 392 and Kalpataru on śr. pp. 66–67) describes the qualifications of those who are pāṅkteya brāhmanas viz. they must be born in a high family (possessing four characteristics), must be endowed with learning (of six kinds) and śīla

(character of 13 kinds) and good conduct (of 16 kinds). Śaṅkha-Likhita[863] give a long list of pānkteya (fit to be associated with in a paṅkti i. e. row of diners) brāhmanas, viz he who knows the Veda and the Vedāngas (viz. phonetics, kalpa or śrauta ritual, grammar, Nirukta, metrics and astronomy); one who keeps the five fires; one who has studied the Veda with its angas; one who knows Sānkhya, Yoga, Upaniṣads and Dharmaśāstra; a śrotriya, a trināciketa, trimadhu, trisuparṇaka and one that has studied Jyesthasāman; one who has studied Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Upanisads and Dharmaśāstra; who is devoted to Veda; who always keeps sacred fires; who is obedient to his parents and devoted to Dharmaśāstra. Similar rules are laid down by Visnu Dh. S 83, Bṛhat-Parāśara p. 150, Vṛddha-Gautama p. 581, Prajāpati verses 70-72, Laghu-Śātātapa verses 99-100, Aṅśanasasmrti (Jiv. vol. I. pp. 523-524). As Medhātithi[864] on Manu III. 147 says the gist of all these passages is that a learned brāhmana who has studied the Veda, whose conduct is good, whose family is famous, who is the son of a śrotriya father and who is not related to the performer must be invited and all the rest is mere arthavāda (by way of eulogy). Manu (III. 128) laid down two propositions viz. all food offered as sacrifice to the gods and manes must be given only to a brāhmana who studies the Veda and that whatever is presented to the most worthy brāhmana (among brāhmanas studying the Veda) brings in the greatest rewards. Then Manu (III. 133) declares that paṅktipāvana brāhmanas are those that sanctify a row of diners among whom sit some who are tainted by (latent) blemishes that make them unfit to be among the diners. Then Manu (III. 184-186) gives examples of panktipāvana brāhmanas viz. those who are the foremost among students of all the Vedas or their expository works and who are born in a family of unbroken descent of Vedic students, who are Trināciketa &c. Hemādri (on śr. pp. 391-395) and Kalpataru (śr. pp. 64-65) quote numerous verses from Yama on paṅktipāvana.

Manu III. 147 asserts that the best course is to invite a brāhmana who fulfils the conditions laid down in Manu III.

863. शङ्खलिखितावपि। अथ पाङ्क्तेयाः। वेदवेदाङ्गवित् पञ्चाग्निरनूचान साङ्गत्र्यवगोपनिषद्धर्मशास्त्रविच्छ्रोत्रिय. त्रिणाचिकेत त्रिमधु त्रिसुपर्णको ज्येष्ठसामग. । साङ्गत्र्यवगोपनिषद्धर्मशास्त्राध्यायी वेदपरः सदाग्निको मातापितृशुश्रूषुर्धर्मशास्त्ररतिं । इति । q by कल्प० (p 68), आ. म. p.67.

864. श्रोत्रियो विद्वान् साधुचरण. प्रख्याताभिजन श्रोत्रियापत्यसम्बन्धी भोजनीय. । परिशिष्टं सर्वमर्थवादार्थम्॥ मेधा on मनु III 147.

132–146, but adds that if it is not possible to secure such a brāhmaṇa then the next best course[865] ('anukalpa') may be followed, viz. the performer may invite his own maternal grandfather, his maternal uncle, sister's son, father-in-law, his teacher of the Veda, daughter's son, son-in-law, a bandhu (such as mother's sister's son), wife's brother or a sagotra, or his family priest, or his pupil. Similar provisions occur in Yāj I. 220, Kūrma (Uttarārdha 21. 20), Varāhapurāṇa 14. 3, Matsya 16. 10–11, Visnupurāṇa III. 15. 2–4 (anukalpesvanantarān). But Manu is careful[866] to point out in a later chapter that one who is able to observe the best course, but observes the second best does not reap other-worldly rewards by his actions. Even Āp. Dh. S.[867] expressly says that if strangers do not possess the requisite qualifications, then even one's full brother possessed of all the qualifications (as to Vedic learning, good conduct &c.) and pupils may be fed at a śrāddha. Baud. Dh. S. also allows even a sapiṇḍa to be fed.[868] Gaut 15. 20 appears to be of the view that even pupils and sagotras may be invited when they are possessed of excellent qualities and strangers with good qualifications are not available. Even in these times very learned brāhmaṇas are unwilling to be fed at a śrāddha, particularly within a few years (three or five) from the death of the person for whose benefit the śrāddha is to be performed. Smṛtis attach a certain stigma to the fact of being the recipient of a śrāddha dinner and prāyaścittas are prescribed. For example, the Mit. on Yāj. III. 289 quotes several verses of Bhāradvāja, one of which says 'If a brāhmaṇa dines at a pārvaṇa śrāddha he has to perform six prāṇāyāmas (as expiation), if he dines at a śrāddha from the third month after a person's death to one year, he has to undergo a fast; if he dines at a vṛddhiśrāddha, he has to perform three prāṇāyāmas, and a fast for a day and night if he dines at a sapiṇḍana śrāddha.' The Mit. further quotes a

---

865. मुख्याभावे यौगुष्ठीयते प्रतिनिधिन्यायेन गौऽनुकल्प उच्यते। मेधा. on मनु III. 147. The अमरकोश says 'मुख्य· स्यात्प्रथमः कल्पोऽनुकल्पस्तु ततोऽधमः'

866. प्रभुः प्रथमकल्पस्य योऽनुकल्पेन वर्तते। न साम्परायिकं तस्य दुर्मतिर्विद्यते फलम्॥ मनु XI. 30 (= शान्तिपर्व 165.17) q. in तन्त्रवार्तिक p. 191, where the 2nd half is स न जानीति फलं तस्य परत्रेति विचारितम्॥

867. गुणहान्यां तु परेषां सम्बन्धिनः सोदर्योऽपि भोजयितव्यः। एतेनान्तेवासिनो व्याख्याताः। आप. ध. सू. II 7.17.5–6

868. तस्मादेवंविधं सपिण्डमप्याशयेत्। बौ ध. II. 8 5. The श्रा. क. ल p. 40 explains एवंविधं as गुणवन्तम्.

verse from Dhaumya which prescribes Cāndrāyana for dining at a śrāddha on the birth of a son or at sīmantonnayana, in a navaśrāddha etc. Vide also Nirnayasindhu III. pp. 467–468 for prāyaścittas on eating śrāddha dinners. The Varāhapurāna (189. 12–13) provides that if a brāhmana dies while the food offered to a preta is still in his stomach he dwells for a kalpa in a horrible hell, becomes a rāksasa and then becomes free from the sin.

According to Gaut. 15. 10 young persons with the requisite qualifications are to be preferred to older ones, while, according to some, young men were to be invited at a śrāddha for one's deceased father and old men for a śrāddha for one's grandfather. On the other hand, Āp. Dh. S. says among brāhmanas possessing the same qualifications, the older ones are to be preferred and among those that are old are to be preferred the poor that are anxious to earn money.[868a]

Some of the works lay special emphasis on inviting ascetics or yogins at a śrāddha dinner. The Visnu Dh. S states that yogins [869] are particularly pankti-pāvana and quotes a stanza as recited by the pitrs 'May (a descendant) be born in our family who feeds a brāhmana yogin at a śrāddha by which we are ourselves satisfied.' The Varāhapurāna 14. 50 says that a yogin is superior to 100 brāhmanas. The Mārkandeya-purāna provides 'a wise man should always feed yogins at a śrāddha since the pitrs rely for support on Yoga; if a yogin is fed by being seated as the first among thousands of brāhmanas he saves the performer and the other diners as a boat saves men in water.' Then it quotes stanzas sung by the pitrs (29. 32–34) to king Aila. The Saurapurāna, after mentioning the qualifications (in 19. 2–3),[870] winds up by stating that even one may suffice provided he be a single-minded devotee of Śivā (verse 6) 868 a. तुल्यगुणेषु वयोवृद्धः श्रेयान् द्रव्यकृशश्चेप्सन्। आप ध. II 7 17.10.

---

869. विशेषेण च योगिन.। अत्र पितृगीता गाथा भवति। अपि स स्यात्कुलेऽस्माकं भोजयेद्यस्तु योगिनम्। विप्रं श्राद्धे प्रयत्नेन येन तृप्यामहे वयम्॥ विष्णुध सू. 83 19–20.

870 The ब्रह्माण्डपुराण III 9 70 is गृहस्थानां सहस्रेण वानप्रस्थशतेन च। ब्रह्मचारिसहस्रेण योग एव विशिष्यते॥, योगिनश्च सदा श्राद्धे भोजनीया विपश्चिता। योगाधारा हि पितरस्तस्मात्तान् पूजयेत्सदा॥ मार्कण्डेय 29. 29, ब्राह्मणानां सहस्रेभ्यो योगी स्वाशासने यदि। यजमानं च भोक्तृंश्च नौरिवाम्भसि तारयेत्॥ वायुपुराण 76 28, मार्कण्डेय 29 30. These and other verses occur in ब्रह्मपुराण 220. 112–115. मार्कण्डेय 29.29–30 are ब्रह्मपुराण 220. 110–112 q. by हेमाद्रि p 411 and आ. म. p 72–73. The important पितृगाथाs are 'कदा नः सन्तताबन्ध्याः कस्यचिद्भविता सुतः॥ यो योगिभुक्तशेषान्नो भुवि पिण्डं प्रदास्यति। गयायामथवा पिण्डं खड्गमांसं तथा हवि.। कालशाकं तिलाज्यं च तृप्तये कुशरं च न.॥' ब्रह्मपुराण 220. 113–115 and मार्कण्डेय 29, 33–34.

The Matsyapurāna (16. 11–12) recommends 'He who expounds (the meaning of) texts; he who enters upon the discussion of śrauta sacrifices and he who knows the rules about the accents of sāmans is a purifier of paṅktipāvanas; one proficient in the Sāmaveda, a Vedic student, one endowed with knowledge of the Veda or of Brahma —where these are fed in a śrāddha it yields the highest benefit.' [871] Though in the above passages the greatest emphasis was laid on the possession of Vedic learning by the brāhmanas to be fed, one had also to see whether they were men of good character and observers of the rules of proper conduct, as provided by Āśv. Gr. IV. 7. 2 (note 862), Gaut. 15.9 and Manu II. 118 who says 'a brāhmana [872] knowing only the sacred Gāyatrī but living a well-regulated life is to be preferred and not one who knows the three Vedas but who is not well-regulated in conduct and who eats anything (even forbidden food) and who is a vendor of everything.' The Skandapurāna VI. 217. 27 recommends that one should make every effort to know the family of the brāhmanas, then their character (śīla), then their age and then the facts about whom they marry or to whom they give their daughters in marriage. The Brahmāṇḍa (Upodghāta, chap 15) says that there should be no scrutiny of a brāhmaṇa about whom nothing is known because siddhas (yogins) roam about on the earth in the form of brāhmanas. But if faults in a brāhmana are easily seen or if one knows his disqualifications on account of one's dwelling near him, he should not be invited (verses 5–6). The same Purāna (Upodghāta 15. 24–26) arranges the orders of preference as follows· first yati (ascetic), then a brāhmana who knows the four Vedas and itihāsa, then one who knows three Vedas, then one who knows two, then one who knows one Veda, then one who is an upādhyāya. Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 443) quotes the Agnipurāna [873] as follows: 'what is the use of (birth in a) famous 871 यश्च व्याकुरुते वाक्यं यश्च मीमांसतेऽध्वरम्॥ सामस्वरविधिज्ञश्च पङ्क्तिपावनपावन.। सामगो ब्रह्मचारी च वेदयुक्तोऽथ ब्रह्मवित्॥ यत्रैते भुञ्जते श्राद्धे तदेव परनार्थवत् । मत्स्यपुराण 16 11–13.

872. सावित्रीमात्रसारोऽपि वर विप्रः सुयन्त्रित । नायन्त्रितस्त्रिवेदोऽपि सर्वाशी सर्वविक्रयी॥ मनु II. 118=बृद्धगौतम p. 517, which reads चतुर्वेदी. हेमाद्रि p 444 quotes मनु as reading नायन्त्रितश्चतुर्वेदी family if the man is himself devoid of good conduct? Are not insects found in fragrant flowers?' Jātūkarnya says 'one should not honour even with a word (much less with food &c.) in rites for gods and Manes bad brāhmanas void of good conduct, even though they be endowed with learning and be born in a good family.' This insistence on worth was due to the conception that pitṛs assuming an aerial form enter brāhmaṇas at the time of śrāddha. Vide Brahmāndapurāṇa (Upodghātapāda 11. 49).

873. तदुक्तमग्निपुराणे। किं कुलेन विशालेन वृत्तहीनस्य देहिनः। कृमयः किं न जायन्ते कुक्षुमेषु सुगन्धिषु॥ जातूकर्ण्योऽपि। अपि विद्याकुलैर्युक्तान् वृत्तहीनान् द्विजाधमान्। अनर्हान् हव्यकव्येषु ब्राह्मणेनापि नार्चयेत्॥ हेमाद्रि pp 443–444, श्रा. प्र p 74.

These requirements of learning, character and good conduct would naturally make it incumbent on the performer of a śrāddha to inquire into the antecedents, qualities and defects of the brāhmanas to be invited. Manu and others lay down several rules about the testing of the brāhmanas to be invited. Manu III. 149, Visnu Dh.[874] S. 82.1–2, provide 'at an offering to the gods let a man not enquire into (the qualities of) a brāhmana (when he wants to invite), but at a śrāddha offering to the Manes close inquiry (into qualities) is declared to be proper and just.' Manu III. 130 says that even if a brāhmana be master of the Veda, one should enquire far (into his ancestry). The Vāyupurāṇa[875] appears to provide that inquiry into (the qualifications of) brāhmanas should not be always undertaken when gifts are to be made, but enquiry is declared (necessary) in the case of rites for gods and Manes. The Anuśāsanaparva provides[876] that in rites meant for gods a ksatriya knowing the rules about gifts should not (closely) inquire into the qualifications of brāhmanas, but in rites for the gods and Manes such inquiry is quite proper. Vrddha-Manu and the Matsya-purāṇa[877] lay down that a brāhmana's character is to be inquired into at the place where he resides for a long time, his purity by his acts and transactions with other people, his intelligence by discussion with him: with these three one should inquire whether the brāhmana (to be invited) is a worthy person.

874. दैवे कर्मणि ब्राह्मणं न परीक्षेत। प्रयत्नात्पित्र्ये परीक्षेत। विष्णुध. सू. 82. 1–2.

875. न ब्राह्मणान्परीक्षेत सदा देये तु मानवः। दैवे कर्मणि पित्र्ये च श्रूयते वै परीक्षणम्। वायु 83. 51 q. by हेमाद्रि p 511 (reads दैवे तु).

876 ब्राह्मणान्न परीक्षेत क्षत्रियो दानधर्मवित्। दैवे कर्मणि पित्र्ये तु ज्याय्यमाहुः परीक्षणम्॥ अनुशासन 90. 2 q. by हेमाद्रि p 511.

877. परीक्षाप्रकारस्तु वृद्धमनुमत्स्यपुराणयोर्दर्शितः। शीलं संवसनाज्ज्ञेयं शौचं संव्यवहारतः। प्रज्ञा संकथनाज्ज्ञेया त्रिभिः पात्रं परीक्ष्यते। हेमाद्रि p. 513, आ. प्र. p. 102.

The Nrsimhapurāna [878] forbids close inquiry into the character and learning of one who comes by chance as a guest at the time of śrāddha. That inquiry was allowed as to brāhmaṇas who were invited and not as to those who came by chance uninvited as atithis. There are no doubt certain passages particularly in the Purāṇas where scrutiny into a brāhmaṇa's qualifications is condemned. For example, the Skandapurāna quoted by Aparārka (p. 455) and Kalpataru (on śr. p. 102) states 'The Vedic revelation is that śrāddha is to be offered (to a brāhmaṇa) after inquiry (into his learning and character), but straightforward action is better than scrutiny. When one offers śrāddha straightforwardly without inquiry his pitṛs are gratified and also gods'. The Bhaviṣyapurāna (q. by Bālambhaṭṭī) states 'it is my view also that one should not test (the qualifications of) brāhmaṇas; one should only consider their caste and not their virtues'. Such passages are explained away as referring to a śrāddha at sacred places or as applicable to gifts or to atithis (vide Hemādri on śrāddha p. 513, and Bālambhaṭṭī on ācāra p. 494) [878a].

Brāhmaṇas were declared to be apāṅkteya [879] (not fit to sit in the row of brāhmaṇa diners or as defiling a row of diners at śrāddha) on various grounds, such as bodily and mental defects and diseases, pursuit of certain avocations, moral lapses, being guilty of crimes, being followers of unorthodox systems, being inhabitants of certain countries. A distinction has to be made between brāhmaṇas who should not be invited and brāhmaṇas that are apāṅkteya or paṅktidūṣaka. For example, one should not ordinarily invite a friend or a sagotra brāhmaṇa even 878 न परीक्षेत चारित्र्यं न विद्यां न कुलं तथा। न शीलं न च देशादीनतिथेरागतस्य हि॥ मन्येत विष्णुमेवैनं साक्षान्नारायणं हरिम्। अतिथिं समनुप्राप्तं विचिकित्सेत्क थंचित्॥ हरिंहपुराण q by आ म p 102; अविज्ञातं द्विजं श्राद्धे न परीक्षेत पण्डितः। सिद्धा हि विप्ररूपेण चरन्ति पृथिवीमिमाम्। तस्मादतिथिमायान्तमभिगच्छेत्कृताञ्जलिः॥ ब्रह्माण्ड, उपोद्घातपाद, 15. 7.

---

878 a. इत्यादीनि विप्रपरीक्षानिषेधकानि तानि श्राद्धेतरदानपराणि नित्यश्राद्धपराणि वा तीर्थश्राद्धपराणि अतिथिपूजापराणि वा। बालम्भट्टी on आचार, p. 494

879. मेधातिथि on मनु III. 167 explains अपाङ्क्तेय (derived from पङ्क्ति) as follows: अपाङ्क्तेयाः पङ्क्तिं नार्हन्ति। भवार्थे ढक् कर्तव्यः। अनर्हत्वमेव पङ्क्तावभवनमनेन प्रतीयते। अन्यैर्ब्राह्मणैः सह भोजनं नार्हन्ति। अत एव पङ्क्तिदूषका उच्यन्ते। तैः सहोपविष्टा अन्येऽपि दूषिता भवन्ति। पा. IV.I.20 is श्रीभ्यो ढक्.

though learned, but these are not apāṅkteya. The Ap.[880] Dh. S. states that one suffering from white leprosy, a bald man, the violator of another man's bed, the son of a brāhmaṇa who was a soldier by profession, the son of (brāhmaṇa who had become like) a śūdra from a brāhmaṇa woman—these defile the company if they are invited at a śrāddha repast. Vas. Dh. S. XI. 19 also gives a brief list viz. 'one should avoid naked (ascetics), those suffering from white leprosy, impotent men, blind men, those who have black teeth, those afflicted with black leprosy and those who have deformed nails.' Very long lists of persons unfit to be invited at a śrāddha are given by Gaut. XV. 16–19, Manu III. 150–166, Yāj. I. 222–224, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 82. 3–29, Atri (verses 345–359 and 385–388), Bṛhad-Yama III. 34–38, Bṛhat-Parāśara pp. 149–150, Vṛddha-Gautama pp. 580–581, the Vāyu-purāṇa 83.61–70, Anuśāsana-parva 90.6–11, Matsyapurāṇa 16.14–17, Kūrma (II. 21. 23–47), Skanda VII. 1.205.58–72, VI. 217.11–20, Varāhapurāṇa 14.4–6, Brahmapurāṇa 220. 127–135, Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa (Upodghāta 15.39–44 and 19.30–41), Mārkaṇḍeya 28.26–30, Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 15.5–8), Nāradapurāṇa (pūrvārdha 28.11–18), Saurapurāṇa (19.7–9) and several other works. The list in the Manusmṛti is one of the longest and that is set out here. One should not invite a brāhmaṇa that is (1) a thief, (2) an outcaste, (3) an impotent man, (4) an atheist, (5) one who wears his hair in braids (a student yet learning Veda); (6) one who does not study the Veda, (7) one who is afflicted with a skin disease, (8) a gambler, (9) one officiating as a priest for a multitude of men, (10) a physician, (11) temple priest (who worships images for money), (12) vendor of meat, (13) one who makes his livelihood as shopkeeper, (14 and 15) a paid servant of a village or of a

---

880. श्वित्री क्लिविदिः परतल्पगाभ्यासुधीयसुवः शूद्रोत्पन्नो ब्राह्मण्यामित्येते श्राद्धे भुञ्जानाः पङ्क्तिदूषका भवन्ति। आप. ध सू. II. 7.17 21 As the son of a śūdra male from a brāhmaṇa woman was treated as a cāṇḍāla in many smṛtis and therefore could not possibly have been intended to be invited at a śrāddha. Kapardin explained the words शूद्रो...ब्राह्मण्याम् as meaning 'born of a brāhmaṇa male that had become practically a śūdra by first marrying a śūdra woman, then a brāhmaṇa woman and procreating a son on that śūdra wife and then on the brāhmaṇa wife.' This latter (as the son of a शूद्रसम ब्राह्मण) is 'अपाङ्क्तेय'; शूद्रोत्पन्नो ब्राह्मण्यां असमवर्णदारपरिग्रहे ब्राह्मण्यां पुत्रमुत्पाद्य शूद्रायामुत्पादितपुत्र इति कपर्दी' कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 90), हरदत्त follows कपर्दी हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 496) omits all reference to marrying a śūdra wife first and explains 'यो विशुद्धजातीयायामपि ब्राह्मण्या शूद्रात् शूद्रसमानाद् ब्राह्मणादुत्पन्नः'.

king, (16) one with deformed nails, (17) one whose teeth are black (naturally), (18) one who opposes his guru, (19) one who has forsaken his sacred fire (śrauta or smārta) without a proper cause, (20) a usurer, (21) one suffering from consumption, (22) one who subsists by tending cattle (though not in distress), (23 and 24) a younger brother who marries or kindles sacred fires before his elder brother, (25) one who neglects the five (daily) sacrifices, (26) an enemy of brāhmanas or of Veda, (27 and 28) an elder brother who marries or kindles sacred fires after his young brother, (29) one who is a member of a guild or corporation, (30) an actor or singer, (31) one who has broken the vow of student-hood by unchastity, (32) one whose (only or first wife) is a śūdra female, (33) the son of a remarried woman, (34) a squint-eyed or one-eyed man, (35) one in whose house a paramour of his wife resides, (36) one who teaches for hire, (37) one who is taught by a hired teacher, (38) one whose teacher is a śūdra. (39) one who instructs śūdra pupils, (40) one whose speech is harsh and untrue, (41) the son of an adulteress, (42) the son of a widow, (43) one who forsakes his mother, father or teacher without (adequate) cause, (44) one who has contracted an alliance with patitas either through the Veda (i. e. as teacher or pupil) or through marriage, (45) an incendiary, (46) one who undertakes sea-voyages, (47) a bard, (48) an oil-man, (49) a false witness (or forger of documents or counterfeiter of coins), (50) one who has a dispute with his father in a law court, (51) one who induces others to gamble, (52) one who drinks wine, (53) one afflicted with a disease (in punishment for crimes in former lives), (54) one accused of a grave sin, (55) a hypocrite, (56) a vendor of substances used for flavouring food (such as sugar-cane juice or molasses), (57) a manufacturer of bows and arrows, (58) one who is the husband of a woman married before her elder sister, (59) the betrayer of a friend, (60) the keeper of a gambling house, (61) one who learns (the Veda) from his own son, (62) an epilectic man, (63) one who has scrofulous swellings of the glands, (64) one afflicted with white leprosy, (65) an informer, (66) a lunatic, (67) a blind man, (68) a caviller of the Veda, (69) a trainer of elephants, horses, oxen or camels, (70) one subsisting by the practice of astrology, (71) a bird-fancier, (72) one who gives instructions in the use of weapons, (73) one who diverts watercourses, (74) one engaged in obstructing watercourses, (75) one subsisting by teaching or practising architecture, (76) a messenger, (77) one who plants trees for money, (78) a breeder of sporting dogs, (79) a falconer, (80) a defiler of a maiden (or who ascribes falsely fault to a maiden), (81) one given to injuring living beings, (82) one who gains his livelihood from śūdras, (83) one who officiates at a sacrifice on behalf of guilds, (84) one who does not follow the ordinary rules of conduct (as welcoming a guest &c), (85) one who has no energy for religious acts, (86) one who constantly begs for gifts, (87) one who subsists by agriculture (carried on personally), (88) one who suffers from elephantiasis, (89) one who is condemned by good men, (90) a shepherd, (91) a keeper of buffaloes, (92) the husband of a remarried woman, (93) a carrier of dead bodies (for money)[881]. Manu III. 167 says that a brāhmana who knows the sacred laws should avoid or shun at both (sacrifices to Gods and to Manes) the worst of brāhmaṇas enumerated above whose conduct is reprehensible and who are unworthy of sitting in a row of brāh-

---

881. There is some divergence of views among the commentators about the meanings of certain words occurring in Manu III, 150-166. For reasons of space that matter is not discussed here in detail. A few points alone are noted here निराकृतिः is explained in two ways viz (1) one who does not perform the daily five Mahāyajñas, (2) one who after learning the Veda forgets it. The evil diseases are said by Devala to be eight 'उन्मादः श्वित्रदोषो राजयक्ष्मा श्वासो नखुनेहो भगन्दरो महोदरमश्मरीत्यष्टौ पापरोगाः', q by अपरार्क p. 451, स्मृतिच. (आ) p. 401. वृषली is explained in various ways by Skandapurāṇa VII 1. 205 77-80 as meaning a śūdra woman, as one who abandoning her husband cohabits with another, as a girl who is not married though she has reached the age of puberty, as a prostitute, as one who is sterile, or one all whose children are dead अग्रेदिधिषूपति :—When a younger sister gets married before her elder sister the former is called अग्रेदिधिषू while the latter is called दिधिषू. देवल says 'ज्येष्ठायां यद्यनूढायां कन्यायामुह्यतेऽनुजा। सा चाग्रेदिधिषूर्ज्ञेया पूर्वा च दिधिषूर्मता॥' q. by अपरार्क p 451, मिता on या III. 265. अग्रेदिधिषूपति is taken by मेधातिथि as equal to two words viz. अग्रेदिधिषू and दिधिषूपति. The latter means, while the former means 'one who is the first husband of a remarried woman' पुनर्भूर्दिधिषूरूढा द्वित्तस्या दिधिषूः पतिः। स तु द्विजोग्रेदिधिषू सैव यस्य कुटुम्बिनी॥ अमरकोश q. by हरदत्त on गौ 15 15. मनु. III 173 explains दिधिषूपति as one who lasciviously dallies with the widow of his deceased brother, though she be appointed (to bear a son by him) according to the sacred law. The स्मृति said that the brother appointed should cohabit as an act of duty and not through passion for the widow. Hemādri p 485 gives another meaning of अग्रेदिधिषू 'जीवत्स्वाम्रातुर्भार्यायामनुरक्तोग्रेदिधिषूः'. वसिष्ठ I. 18 includes both अग्रेदिधिषू and दिधिषूपति among those who are called एनस्विन Even the तै ब्रा. III. 2.8. 12 mentions अग्रेदिधिषु as a sinner and आप ध च (II. 5. 12. 22) mentions both.

manas at a śrāddha repast. Manu III. 170–182 indulge in pointing out how feeding such unworthy brāhmanas results in the loss of the gratification of pitrs and state that the food eaten by such unworthy persons becomes or is to be deemed as equal to foul things. The Kūrmapurāna [882] forbids inviting at śrāddhas Bauddha ascetics, Nirgranthas (devotees who have withdrawn from the world and wander about naked or as beggars), those that follow the Pañcarātra and Pāśupata doctrines, those that are kāpālikas (devotees of Śiva of the left hand order) and other similar heretical people. The Viṣnupurāna (III. 18. 70 ff) narrates how a king after a bath in a holy place talked with a heretic and had to pass in consequence through the bodies of a dog, a jackal, wolf, vulture, a crow, a crane and peacock and ultimately became freed from the taint by a bath at the avabhṛtha in an Aśvamedha sacrifice. The same Purāna provides (III. 18 97) that one should avoid talking with or touching heretics, particularly at the time of a religious rite or when one has consecrated for a solemn sacrifice. The Vāyupurāna [883] provides that people who are 'nagna' should not be allowed to see a śrāddha and then defines 'nagna' people as follows: 'the three Vedas are declared to be a protective covering for all beings and therefore those who foolishly abandon the Vedas are called 'nagna'; those who vainly keep matted hair, those who shave their heads for no purpose, those who are nagna (naked) without any cause, those who engage in certain observances and mutter certain words aimlessly are called nagnādaḥ'. Just as certain countries were declared unfit for the performance of śrāddhas (vide note 853 above), so certain brāhmaṇas hailing from certain countries were declared in some 882. क्षुद्रश्रावकनिर्ग्रन्थाः पञ्चरात्रविदो जनाः। कापालिकाः पाशुपता' पाषण्डा ये च बह्विधाः॥ कूर्म (उत्तरार्ध) 21. 32 q by हेमाद्रि p 476 and 365, क्षुद्रश्रावकनिर्ग्रन्थशाक्ताजीवककापिलाद। ये धर्मानुवर्तन्ते ते वै नग्नादयो जनाः॥ ब्रह्माण्डपुराण III 14 38-39 q. by हेमाद्रि p 520. The same verse occurs in a corrupt form in वायु 78.30-31.

---

883. सर्वेषामेव भूतानां त्रयी संवरणं स्मृतम्। परित्यजति यो मोहात्ते वै नग्नादयो जनाः॥...वृथा जटी वृथा मुण्डी वृथा नग्नश्च यो द्विज.। वृथा व्रती वृथा जापी ते वै नग्नादयो जनाः॥ वायुपुराण 78.26 and 31. q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p 520 (the first verse from ब्रह्माण्डपुराण). The स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p. 411 reads वर्णानां for भूतानां and ascribes that verse to the ब्रह्माण्डपुराण. ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद 14 35-41) has these verses अपरार्क. 473 ascribes verse सर्वेषामेव भूतानां to ब्रह्माण्डपुराण, which is found in उपोद्घातपाद 14.35.

works as not fit to be invited at a śrāddha.[884] For example, the Matsyapurāṇa states that brāhmaṇas that are ungrateful, that are atheists, that stay in Mleccha countries or the countries of Triśaṅku, Karavīra, Āndhra, Cīna, Draviḍa and Koṅkaṇa should be carefully avoided at the time of śrāddha. Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 505) quotes from the Saurapurāṇa the following: 'Brāhmaṇas hailing from the countries of Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Saurāṣṭra, (Kāṭhiawar), Gurjara, Ābhīra, Koṅkaṇa, Draviḍa, Dakṣiṇāpatha, Avanti and Magadha should be avoided at śrāddhas. It will be noticed that putting the above two passages together, brāhmaṇas from half of modern India would have been ineligible for being invited at śrāddhas if these passages were literally followed. This was probably a counsel of perfection prompted by the false pride and prejudices of the authors of those works. The Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara (pp. 39–41) contains one of the longest lists of persons unfit to be invited at a śrāddha.

The following reason is advanced by the Varāhapurāṇa[885] and others for honouring a guest who comes by chance at the time when a śrāddha rite is in progress: "Yogins wander over the earth assuming different forms that prevent recognition, but doing good to people; therefore a wise man should honour a guest who arrives at the time of the performance of a śrāddha". The Bhaviṣya-purāṇa[886] similarly says that an atithi (guest) at a śrāddha is one who comes when least thought of and not one who had arrived before the śrāddha rite started. The Mārkaṇḍeya (26. 30) provides that one should not ask such an atithi about his gotra or caraṇa or his Vedic study nor should one consider whether he has a fine appearance. Hemādri (on śrāddha pp. 430–433) quotes verses from the Śivadharmottara,

---

884. कृतघ्नाश्चास्तिकाश्चैव म्लेच्छदेशनिवासिनः । त्रिशङ्कुचरवीराख्यचीनद्रविड[1]। वर्जयेद्विद्विजः सर्वान् श्राद्धकाले विशेषतः । मत्स्य 16 16–17 q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 505, कल्पतरु (श्रा. p 94).

885. योगिनो विविधै रूपैर्नराणामुपकारिणः । भ्रमन्ति पृथिवीमेतानविज्ञातस्वरूपिणः ॥ तस्मादभ्यर्चयेत् प्राज्ञं श्राद्धकालेऽतिथिं बुधः । श्राद्धक्रियाफलं हन्ति द्विजेन्द्राभ्यर्चितो हि सः ॥ वराह 14. 18–19, विष्णुपुराण 15 23–24; compare वायुपुराण 79 7–8 (सिद्धा हि विप्ररूपेण चरन्ति पृथिवीमिमाम्। तस्मादतिथिमायान्तमभिगच्छेद् कृताञ्जलिः).

886. अचिन्त्योऽभ्यागतो यस्मात्तस्मादतिथिरुच्यते ॥ अतिथिं तं विजानीयात् न पूर्वमागतः ॥ भविष्य. I. 184. 9–10 q. by हेमाद्रि p 427; न पृच्छेद्गोत्रचरणं स्वाध्यायं चापि पण्डितः। शोभनाशोभनाकारं तं मन्येत प्रजापतिम् ॥ अचिन्त्य हि स्थितो यस्मात्तस्मादतिथिरुच्यते । मार्कण्डेय 26. 30–31.

Visnudharmottara and Vāyu (71.74–75) Purānas that gods, siddhas and yogins wander over the earth in the form of brāhmana atithis in order to favour people and to see how śrāddhas are being performed. About the definition of an atithi and the necessity and mode of honouring a guest in general, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 749–756.

Hemādri (Śrāddhakānda, pp. 380–385) holds an interesting discussion as to whether a performer of śrāddha belonging to one recension of a Veda must restrict himself to inviting brāhmanas that are students of the same recension of the Veda or whether he can invite any brāhmana that may have studied any of the three Vedas. Some people relying on a maxim ('as in the case of a bride so in the case of an offering') invite only brāhmanas of their own śākhā possessed of the qualifications above set forth. Hemādri replies that this is a wrong notion, relies on Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 15. 9 'one should feed[887] in all (religious) acts brāhmanas that are pure (in their conduct) and that have studied the Veda' and asserts that no smrti, Itihāsa, Purāna, Grhyasūtra nor Kalpasūtra contains the restriction of inviting only brāhmanas of the performer's own śākhā. He further says that in such texts as 'trināciketastrimadhuh' (quoted in note 862a above) the rule laid down is to invite brāhmanas that have studied different śākhās and Vedas. He rejects the idea about any restriction as to selecting a bridegroom of the same śākhā as the bride's father and remarks that if some people are not prepared to give their daughters in marriage to young men belonging to other śākhās, that is due to ignorance about the families and is also due to pride and vanity. He winds up by saying that in Āryāvarta countries it is found on all sides that marriage connections are entered into with persons studying different śākhās but living in the same district, (such connections) not being condemned, while persons who study the same śākhā of the Veda but do not know each other do not enter into marital connections.[888] As a contrast to this commonsense view it should be noted that the author of the Bālambhatti recommends that 'Mahārāstra brāhmanas should not invite brāhmanas of other castes (of brāhmanas) and particularly the Konkanastha brāhmanas should be avoided and it goes so far as to say that a person belonging to one's own caste not possessed of good qualities and of a blemished character (provided he is not guilty of mahāpātakas or the like) should be preferred to one belonging to another sub-caste even if endowed with good qualities.

887. शुचीन् मन्त्रवतः सर्वकृत्येषु भोजयेत् । आप. ध सू II. 6. 15 9, on which हरदत्त explains 'मन्त्रवत अधीतवेदान्। सर्वकृत्येषु श्रौतेषु गार्ह्येषु स्मार्तेषु च कर्मसु दैवेषु पित्र्येषु मानुषेषु च भोजयेत्।'.

888 अत्र केचिद्यथा कन्या तथा हविरिति कन्यासाधर्म्येण हविषां स्वशाखीयमातिथ्यत्वं मन्यमाना. स्वशाखीयमेव श्रोत्रियत्वादिगुणविशिष्टं श्राद्धे नियोजयन्ति। तदसत्। स्मृतीतिहास-

(Continued on the next page)

The Vas Dh. S. provides [889] that the performer should invite ascetics, house-holders, well conducted men, who are not very old &c. The Kūrmapurāna states [890] 'that man whose offer-

---

(Continued from the last page)

पुराणगृह्यकल्पसूत्रेषु क्वचिदपि स्वशाखीयनियमाश्रवणात् । प्रत्युत स्मृत्यादिषु त्रिणाचिकेतस्त्रिमधुस्त्रिसुपर्णो ज्येष्ठसामग इत्यादिभिर्नानाशाखीयानां नानावेदाध्यायिनामेव विधिदर्शनाच्च .. किं च कन्यायामेव तावदेकशाखाध्यायिनियम कुतोऽवगतो यद्बलेन हविष्यपि साध्यते । ... आर्यावर्तेषु च समानदेशवासिनां नानाशाखाध्यायिनामप्युपलभ्यन्त एव परस्परमनवगीयमानाः सर्वतो विवाहसम्बन्धाः । अविज्ञातपरस्पराणामेकशाखाध्यायिनामपि नोपलभ्यन्ते ।.. अतो न कन्यादाने नापि हविर्दाने स्वशाखीयद्विजनियम इति सिद्धम् । हेमाद्रि (श्राद्ध) pp. 380-381. The words यथा कन्या तथा हविः occur as a verse of गर्ग 'नैकगोत्रे हविर्देद्याद्यथा कन्या तथा हवि. । अभावे ह्यन्यगोत्राणामेकगोत्रांस्तु भोजयेत् ।' q by श्रा प्र p. 75. हेमाद्रि p 450 reads it as नैक. .द्यात्समानप्रवरे तथा । न चाज्ञातकुले दद्याद्यथा कन्या तथा हवि ।', श्रा. क ल p 39 quotes this verse and the half verse अभावे ..न भोजयेत् also The निर्णयसिन्धु III. p 397 follows हेमाद्रि and relies on मनु III 145-146. एवमपि महाराष्ट्रैर्विजातीया न ग्राह्यास्तत्रापि कोङ्कणस्थादय· सर्वथा न ग्राह्या इति श्राद्धदीपकालिकादिषु ग्रामणिकनिबन्धेष्वित्ते सर्वशिष्टसमतम् ।...वर्ज्याश्च द्विविधा दोषवन्त सजातीया· गुणवन्तोऽपि विजातीयाः सुतरां दोषवन्त । तत्र सजातीयेषु अनिषिद्धलाभेऽभिशस्तत्वादिबलबद्दोषरहितो दुष्टोऽपि ग्राह्य । विजातीयस्तु गुणवानपि तत्त्वादेव त्याज्य किमुत दोषवान् ।... केवलं चिन्तयेज्जातिं.. । कन्यादानादिसम्बन्धयोग्यां जातिं यथा कन्या तथा हविरित्युक्तेस्तेन तेषि सर्वथा हेया एवेति दिक् । बालम्भट्टी on आचार p. 497.

889 पूर्वेद्युर्ब्राह्मणान् संनिपात्य यतीन् गृहस्थान्साधून्वा परिणतवयसोऽविकर्मस्थान् श्रोत्रियान शिष्यानन्तेवासिन. । वसिष्ठ XI 17, q by हेमाद्रि p 379 who explains 'यतय. प्रव्रजिता. तदसम्भवे गृहस्थान्'. The टोडरानन्द (श्राद्धसौख्य folio 37b) arranges the persons to be invited at a श्राद्ध in the following order: तदयं संक्षेपः । आदौ त्रिदण्ड्यतित्तदलाभे वानप्रस्थस्तदलाभे ब्रह्मचारी तदलाभे गृहस्थस्तत्रापि पङ्क्तिपावनादय उत्कृष्टास्तदलाभे यो ह्यसम्बद्धः सत्कर्मा च तदलाभे तत्सम्बद्धा अपि तदलाभे सदाचारः शिष्योऽपि ।.

890. प्रकृतेर्गुणतत्त्वज्ञो यस्याश्नाति यतिर्हविः । फलं वेदान्तवित्तस्य (वेदविदा तस्य ? सहस्रादतिरिच्यते ॥ तस्माद्यत्नेन योगीन्द्रमीश्वरज्ञानतत्परम् । भोजयेद्धव्यकव्येषु अलाभाद्वेतरान्द्विजान् । कूर्म (उत्तरार्ध 21. 17-18) q, by श्रा. प्र. p. 73, हेमाद्रि p. 413 (2nd) verse) and p. 417 (first verse).

ing (of food) is eaten by a yati that knows the truth about prakṛti (primordial matter) and the guṇas (sattva, rajas and tamas) reaps the reward (merit) of feeding a thousand (other brāhmaṇas). Therefore one should feed in offerings to gods and manes an excellent yogin who is intent on true knowledge of God and others only if such a one is not available.' Similar verses about ascetics and yogins occur in Varāhapurāna 14. 50, Skanda (VI. 217. 7 ff) and Vāyupurāna[891] chap. 71. 65–73, chap. 76. 28 &c. Bṛhaspati provides[892] a special rule that, if a person cannot afford to feed at a śrāddha more than one brāhmaṇa, then he should feed one who has studied the Sāmaveda, since in him all the three viz. Ṛks, the Yajus and Sāmans co-exist, that the father is pleased by Ṛks (i. e. by the feeding of a brāhmaṇa who has studied the Ṛgveda), the grand-father by Yajus, the great-grand-father by a Sāman and a chandoga (a chanter of the whole of Sāmaveda) is superior. A verse of Śātātapa is[893] quoted to the effect that if a student of the Atharvaveda is fed in a rite for the gods or manes, that yields endless and inexhaustible rewards.

Some of the smṛtis were very strict in laying down the qualifications of brāhmaṇas to be invited at a śrāddha. Auśanasa (chap. 4) asserts: 'that brāhmaṇa[894] is called durbrāhmaṇa and should never be invited at a śrāddha in whose family Veda study and Vedī (i. e. the performance of Śrauta sacrifices) have been stopped for three generations'. The same

---

891. गृहस्थानां सहस्रेण वानप्रस्थशतेन च। ब्रह्मचारिसहस्रेण योगी स्वैको विशिष्यते॥ वायुपुराण 71 69 q. by हेमाद्रि p. 413, श्रा प्र p. 73, it occurs also in ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद) 9 70. यतिस्तु सर्वविद्यानां सर्वेषामप्यशुभक्षयात्। इतिहासपञ्चमाच् वेदान् यः पठेत द्विजोत्तम॥ अनन्तरं यते. सोऽयं नियोक्तव्यो विजानता। त्रिवेदोऽनन्तरस्तस्माद् द्विवेदस्तदनन्तरः। एकवेदस्तत. पश्चाच्छयाध्यायी तत. परम्। वायुपुराण 79 53–55 q by हेमाद्रि (p. 419). The printed वायु reads सर्वेषामन्य उत्तमे; almost the same verses occur in ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद 15 24–26).

892 यद्येकं भोजयेच्छ्राद्धे छन्दोगं तत्र भोजयेत्। ऋचो यजूंषि सामानि त्रयं तत्र हु विद्यते॥ ऋचा हु तृप्यति पिता यजुषा हु पितामह. । पितु. पितामह. साम्ना छन्दोगो ह्यधिकस्ततः॥ बृहस्पति q. by हेमाद्रि p 385, स्मृतिसु p 765, कल्पतरु on श्राद्ध p 58.

893 भोजयेद्यद्यथर्वाणं दैवे पैत्र्ये च कर्मणि। अनन्तमक्षयं चैव फलं तस्येति वै श्रुति॥ शातातप q by हेमाद्रि p. 385, स्मृतिसु. p 765, कल्पतरु (श्रा) p. 59 author[895] further says that six persons are merely brahmabandhus (i. e. brāhmaṇas by birth or caste alone) viz. one who is hired by a śūdra or a king as a servant, who has a śūdra woman as his wife, who is a village priest and he who subsists by killing (animals) or by catching them. So early as the Mahābhāsya[896] it was stated that austerities (leading a life of restraint and strict observances), Vedic learning and birth (from brāhmaṇa parents) are the causes of (a man being called) a brāhmaṇa and that he who is devoid of the first two is a mere brāhmaṇa by caste (but not a real brāhmaṇa). It is curious to note that Yama stated that, if brāhmaṇas that do not declare (or point out) the auspicious naksatra or tithi or day or muhūrta and other auspicious matters, eat (śrāddha) food it becomes inexhaustible.

894 यस्य वेदश्च वेदी च विच्छिद्येते त्रिपुरुषम्। स वै दुर्ब्राह्मणो ज्ञेयः श्राद्धादौ न कदाचन॥ औशनसस्मृति (Jiv I p. 524), जै सू. परिभाषासूत्र I. 10. 6 (which reads नाम यश्चैव वृषलीपतिः), q by अपरार्क p. 286 and p 449 and हेमाद्रि p 357, as यम's Vide त्रिकाण्डमण्डन I 134–135 for similar definitions.

But the requisite qualifications were so exacting that it must have been found almost impossible to secure for a śrāddha brāhmaṇas altogether free from any of the blemishes set out above from Manu. Gautama (15 15–18) contains long lists[897] of over 50 kinds of brāhmaṇas that were not to be invited at a śrāddha dinner or at a sacrifice for gods, but Gaut. adds that according to some only those beginning with 'durvāla' (Gaut. in 15. 18) were to be shunned at a śrāddha (but could be invited at a sacrifice for the gods). The persons so to be shunned, according to some who flourished before Gautama (i. e at least before 600 B C) are. a bald man, a man who has deformed nails or has black teeth (naturally), one suffering from white

---

895. शूद्रप्रेष्यो भृतो राज्ञा वृषली ग्रामयाजकः। वधबन्धोपजीवी च पञ्चैते ब्रह्मबन्धव ॥ औशनस (Jiv. I.) p. 525, q. by अपरार्क p. 449. ब्रह्मबन्धु is a contemptuous term for one who is a ब्राह्मण in name only (and has not studied the Veda).

896 तपः श्रुतं च योनिश्चेत्येतद् ब्राह्मणकारकम्। तपःश्रुताभ्यां यो हीनो जातिब्राह्मण एव सः॥ महाभाष्य on पाणिनि II. 2 6 (ed by Kielhorn, vol I. p 411) This appears to be a quotation. अनुशासनपर्व 121. 7 is तपः....ब्राह्मण्यकारणम्। त्रिभिर्गुणैः समुदितो ततो भवति वै द्विजः॥ In the महाभाष्य on पा IV. 1. 44, vol II. p 220 ब्राह्मणग्रन्थ is defined as त्रीणि यस्यावदातानि विद्या योनिश्च कर्म च। एतच्छिल विजानीहि ब्राह्मणाग्र्यस्य लक्षणम्॥; 'नक्षत्रतिथिपुण्याहान् मुहूर्तान्मङ्गलानि च। न निर्दिशन्ति ये विप्रास्तैर्मुक्तं ह्यक्षयं भवेत्॥' यम q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p 390), कल्पतरु (श्रा p 62) नियमेषु तपःशब्दः। आप ध. सू. I. 2 5. 1. हेमाद्रि p 347 quotes a similar verse from बौधायन.

897. कुण्डाशि सोमविक्रय्यगारदाहि-गारदावकीर्णि-गणप्रेष्यागम्यागामि-हिंस्र-परिवित्ति-परिवेत्तृ पर्याहित पर्याधातृ त्यक्तात्म-दुर्वाल-कुनखि-श्यावदन्त-श्वित्रि-पौनर्भव-कितवाजप-राजप्रेष्य-भ्रातिरूपिक शूद्रापति-निराकृति-किलासि-कुसीदि-वाणिक्-शिल्पोपजीवि-ज्यावादित्रतालवृत्य-गीतशीलान्।... दुर्वालादीन् श्राद्ध एवैके। अकृतान्नश्राद्धे चैवम्। गौ. 15 18, 31-32. Words joined by sandhi rules have not been separated by a hyphen.

leprosy, the son of a re-married woman, a gambler, one who neglects japa (the recitation of Vedic mantras), a servant of the king, one who uses false weights and measures, one whose (only) wife is a śūdra female, one who does not perform the daily five sacrifices, one who suffers from a virulent skin disease, a usurer, one who lives by trade or by handicrafts, one who makes his living by (manufacturing) bows (and arrows) or by playing on musical instruments or by keeping time (when another is singing), or by dancing or singing. Vas. quotes a verse [898] as follows: If a brāhmana knowing the Vedas is afflicted with physical defects which (ordinarily) exclude a person from a row of diners, Yama declares that he is irreproachable and that he does sanctify the row of diners. But it must be said that even in modern times emphasis is laid on inviting learned and well-conducted brāhmanas for śrāddha. The idea (expressed by Manu III. 189 and the Padmapurāna) persists that the pitṛs enter into and hover round the invited brāhmanas and that the latter are to be looked upon as representing the pitṛs.[899] The Garudapurāna states that Yama allows the departed souls and the pitṛs to visit the world of men at the time of śrāddha from the nether regions.

The Visnu Dh. S. (79. 19-21) prescribes that the performer should avoid wrath, should not shed tears and should not do things in a hurry. The Varāhapurāna [900] provides that the performer should not employ twigs for brushing the teeth (but should rinse his mouth twelve times with water), should remain chaste and pure. Āp. Dh. S prescribes [901] that the performer should not eat food from the commencement (from the time he goes out to invite) up to the end of the śrāddha rite. The

---

898. अथाप्युदाहरन्ति। अथ चेन्मन्त्रविद्युक्त शारीरै. पङ्क्तिदूषणैः। अदुष्यं तं यमः प्राह पाङ्क्तपावन एव सः॥ वसिष्ठधर्मसूत्र XI. 20, q. by मेधातिथि on मनु III. 168. The verse is also आवे 350-51 and लघुशङ्ख 22

899. निमन्त्रितांश्च पितर उपतिष्ठन्ति तान् द्विजान्। वायुभूता निगच्छन्ति तथासीनांश्च पार्श्वते॥ पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 85-86) Vide note 759 above. श्राद्धकाले यमः प्रेतान् पितॄंश्चापि यमालयात्। विसर्जयति मानुष्ये निरयस्थांश्च काश्यप॥ गरुडपुराण, प्रेतखण्ड chap X. 28-29.

900 वराहपुराणे। दन्तकाष्ठं च विसृजेद् ब्रह्मचारी शुचिर्भवेत्। q by कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 104), श्रा. प्र. p. 112.

901 आरम्भे चाभोजनमा समापनात्। आप. ध सू II 7.17 24.

Kūrma (uttarārdha 22. 8) states that if a person first invites a brāhmana and then foolishly invites another (passing over the first) then he becomes a greater sinner (than the brāhmana who after accepting one invitation promises to dine at another śrāddha) and is born as a worm in human faeces. The Bhavisyapurāna [902] provides that honouring gods, pitrs and men and feeding (brāhmanas) should not be done without wearing an upper garment; otherwise the rite will bear no fruit.

About the number of brāhmanas to be invited at a śrāddha there were several options and several views. The Āsv. Gr. S. states [903] that at the Pārvana—śrāddha (performed on a parvan day i. e. on Amāvāsyā), the Ābhyudayika śrāddha, the Ekoddista or Kāmya, the larger the number of brāhmanas the greater is the reward, that in no case should a person invite only one brāhmana at a śrāddha meant for all pitrs or he may optionally invite only one brāhmana except at the first śrāddha, that he may invite one, two or three brāhmanas for each of the three paternal ancestors. The Sān. Gr. (IV. 1.2) and Kausitaki Gr III. 14. 1–2 prescribe that one should [904] invite an uneven number of brāhmanas, at least three, to sit down as (representing the) fathers. Gaut. requires [905] 'He shall feed an uneven number 902. पितृदेवमनुष्याणां पूजनं भोजनं तथा। नोत्तरीयं विना कार्यं कृतं स्याच्छिल्फलं यतः॥ भविष्य I 185 23.

---

903. ब्राह्मणान् श्रुतशीलवृत्तसम्पन्नानेकेन वा काले ज्ञापितान् स्नातान् कृतपच्छौचाचमनान्नाङ्गवदुखान् पितृवदुपवेश्यैकैकमेकस्य द्वौ द्वौ त्रींस्त्रीन्वा वृद्धौ फलभूयस्त्वं न त्वेवैक सर्वेषाम्। कोममनाद्ये। आश्व गृ सू IV. 7. 2–3. पितृवत् is explained in two ways by नारायण 'पितृवदिति वचनं ममैते पितर इति मनसा ध्यायन्नुपवेशयेदित्येवमर्थमित्येके।' अन्ये तु पितुर्वृद्ध पितामहाय वृद्धतरं प्रपितामहाय वृद्धतममित्येवं यथावय उपवेशनार्थमिति। 'The words नत्वेवैकं सर्वेषाम् in आश्व. are opposed to मनु III. 125. नारायण gives several meanings of अनाद्ये, viz. आद्य refers to सपिण्डीकरण which is the first of the śrāddhas for a deceased person in which three ancestors are invoked, आद्य may refer to पार्वण which is mentioned first by आश्व. गृ सू; or अनाद्य means अभोजन and so refers to आमश्राद्ध or हिरण्यश्राद्ध; or अनाद्ये means दुर्भिक्षे The words एकैकमेकस्य ... त्रींस्त्रीन्वा contradict आश्व गृ II. 5 11–12 'नवावरान् भोजयेत्' अयुजो वा.'

904. अथ मासि मासि पितृभ्यो दद्यात्। ब्राह्मणान्वेदविदुषोऽयुग्मान् त्रयवरार्ध्यान् पितृवदुपवेश्यायुग्मानि तिलपात्राणि तिलैरवकीर्य ब्राह्मणानां पाणिषु निनयेत्। कौपीतकिगृ. III. 14 1–2.

905 अमावास्यां पितृभ्यो दद्यात्।...नवावरान् भोजयेदद्युज। यथोत्साहं वा। श्रोत्रियान्वाग्रूपवय शीलसम्पन्नान्। ..एके पितृवत्। गौ ध. सू 15 2, 7–9, 11. हरदत्त explains 'एके मन्यन्ते पित्राद्यनुरूपं दानमिति। यथा पित्रे तरुणा पितामहाय वृद्धा, प्रपितामहाय वृद्धतरा इति' गौतम and others simply echo what is said in शतपथ-ब्रा. II. 4 2.7–8 about offering food to pitrs on amāvāsyā.

of brāhmanas, at least nine or as many as he is able (to feed) and that they should be learned in the Veda and endowed with polished speech, good appearance, mature age and good character'. If five were invited two would be for gods and three for pitrs; if seven, then four for gods and three for pitrs and so on. Vas. XI. 27 (= Manu III. 125 = Baud. Dh. S. II. 8. 29), Yāj. I. 228, Matsya 17. 13-14, Visnupurāna III. 15.14 provide that one must feed two brāhmanas at the rite for the gods and three for the manes or one only for each of the two purposes and even a rich man should not go in for a large company. The Padmapurāna (Srsti 9.98 and 141) says the same thing. So the number of brāhmanas to be invited did not depend so much upon the means of the inviter, but upon the point whether the inviter would be able to honour them all properly and with ease. The idea was that at the same time when śrāddha was to be performed two brāhmanas should be fed for gods and three for the pitrs. When only one brāhmana could be invited or was available, Vas. (XI. 30-31) provides that portions of the several foods cooked should be put in a vessel and should be placed at the place where Vaiśvadevika brāhmana would have been seated, then served in a plate and the viśve devāh be invoked and should be contemplated as present and then the food should be thrown into the fire or offered to a Vedic student (as alms) and then śrāddha rite should be continued. Śankha [906] 14.10 provides a similar rule. The result is that if a man can afford to invite only one brāhmana or can secure one only, then that brāhmana is meant for the rite in honour of pitrs and the offering for the gods is to be cast into fire. Baud. Dh. S. II. 8.30, Manu III. 126, Vas. XI. 28, Kūrma (uttarārdha 22 28) contain the same verse which emphatically states 'A large company destroys these five desiderata, viz the respectful treatment (of those invited), the securing of a proper place (such as one sloping to the south) and time, purity and (the choice of) meritorious brāhmanas; therefore one should not desire a large company'[907] The Kūrmapurāna (uttarārdha 22.32) insists that an atithi must be fed at a śrāddha or otherwise the śrāddha is not praiseworthy. Though these ancient works insisted upon the avoidance of large preparations and expenses for śrāddhas in honour of a deceased person, there were other smrtis that favoured lavish distribution of wealth in śrāddhas. For example, Brhaspati lays down: '(An heir) should lay aside half of the wealth that comes to him (by inheritance) for the benefit of the deceased owner and should expend it in the monthly, six-monthly and yearly śrāddhas'. The Dāyabhāga XI. 12 approves[908] of this and also quotes Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 13.3 'On the failure of a sapinda the teacher of the Veda takes the wealth of the deceased, on failure of the teacher, the pupil takes it and having inherited it he should employ it in the performance of works of charity for the benefit of the deceased' (or he himself may enjoy it). These passages show to what lengths the cult of benefit to the soul of the deceased was carried in India by certain writers. More practical authors such as Haradatta did not relish these extreme views. In several purāṇas such as the Vāyu[908a] and Visnu there are express directions that when a śrāddha is performed at Gayā, it should be on a profuse scale and no stinginess[909] (lit. cheating in money matters) in spending wealth should be shown there; otherwise the performer would not reap the benefit of the performance of śrāddha at that holy place. The Padmapurāna appears to inculcate profuse 907 सत्क्रियां देशकालौ च शौचं ब्राह्मणसम्पदः। पञ्चैतान् विस्तरो हन्ति तस्मान्नेहेत विस्तरम्॥ मनु III. 126.

---

906. भोजयेदथवाप्येकं ब्राह्मणं पङ्क्तिपावनम्। दैवे कृत्वा तु नैवेद्यं पश्चाद्वह्नौ तु तत्क्षिपेत्॥ शङ्ख 14.10. The आ क. ल. p. 40 remarks 'एकब्राह्मणपक्षे विश्वेदेवस्थाने पात्रं प्रकल्प्य दैवे निवेद्य तमेकं विप्रं पित्रादिषु मातामहादिषु च नियुञ्जीत' हेमाद्रि (आ p. 1523) explains Vas. XI.31 as 'अन्नस्य प्रत्येकमेकदेशं संहृत्य दैवतायतने वैश्वदेविकद्विजोपवेशनोचिते स्थाने पात्रमासाद्य तत्र परिवेष्य तत्रत्यासने च विप्रान् देवानावाह्य तान् पुरोवर्तिन इवानुध्याय ..विश्वेभ्यो देवेभ्य इदमन्नं स्वाहा ओं तत्सदिति उक्त्वा' &c The translation in S. B E. vol. 14 of दैवतायतने in Vas. XI.31 (at p. 54) is wrong

---

908. धनार्जनस्य हि प्रयोजनद्वयं भोगार्थत्व दानाद्यदृष्टार्थत्व च, तत्रार्जकस्य तु मृतत्वाद्भने भोग्यत्वाभावेनादृष्टार्थत्वमेव हिद्दम्। अत एव बृहस्पतिः। समुत्पन्नाद्धनादर्धं तदर्धं स्थापयेत्पृथक्। मासषाण्मासिके श्राद्धे पार्वणे च प्रयत्नतः॥ दायभाग XI.13. आपस्तम्बधर्मसूत्र II. 6.13 3 is तदभावे आचार्य आचार्याभावे अन्तेवासी हृत्वा तदर्थेषु धर्मकृत्येषु वोपयोजयेत्॥; हरदत्त explains 'वाशब्दात् स्वयं वोपयुञ्जीत'.

908 a. वित्तशाठ्यं न कुर्वीत गयाश्राद्धे सदा नरः। वित्तशाठ्यं तु कुर्वाणो न तीर्थफलभाग्भवेत्॥ वायु 82.19. This is quoted from another Purāna by the स्मृतिच. (श्राद्ध) p. 388, which adds 'अतो वित्तानुसारेण शारीरबलानुसारेण च गयायां श्राद्धं कार्यम्'.

909. सविलं नामगोत्रेण दद्याच्छक्त्या च दक्षिणाम्॥ गोभूहिरण्यवासांसि भक्ष्यानि शयनानि च। दद्याद्यविष्ठं विप्राणामात्मनः पितुरेव च॥ वित्तशाठ्येन रहित. पितृभ्यः प्रीतिमाहरन्। पद्मपुराण, भूमिखण्ड 9 179-181.

expenditure of wealth in all śrāddhas. The Vāyupurāna [910] (82. 26–28) further says that the brāhmanas of Gayā are supermen, that when they are gratified (at a śrāddha) the gods together with pitrs become gratified, that no question should be raised about the family, the character, the learning and the austerities (of the Gayā brāhmanas), that by honouring them a man attains liberation, that a man after honouring the brāhmanas should proceed according to his resources and strength to the performance of śrāddha, thereby he secures all heavenly desires and obtains the means of Moksa. The Skandapurāna goes so far as to say that Gayā brāhmanas even if they are depraved in their conduct and are backward deserve to be invited at śrāddha and are superior to brāhmanas who have mastered the Veda and Vedāngas. The Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 401) notes that, according to the Tristhalīsetu of his grandfather, this provision holds good only in the case of the śrāddha at the Aksayya Vata in Gayā and nowhere else. In modern times the brāhmanas at Gayā used to require the performer of śrāddha while he was in the sacred Phalgu river to make a declaration about his wealth and demanded fees accordingly, thereby carrying to the letter the words of the Vāyupurāna. Many people returned from Gayā thoroughly disillusioned and disgusted with the conduct of the brāhmanas at Gayā. In the Varāhapurāna [911] it is said that two verses were sung by the pitrs viz 'Would such a blessed and intelligent man be born in our family who will offer pindas (i. e. śrāddha) to us without being stingy about wealth and who would bestow on brāhmanas with reference to us (i. e. for our benefit) jewels, clothes, land, costly vehicles and all other kinds of wealth including water, when he has riches enough?' Here lavish expenditure on all śrāddhas (not only at Gayā-śrāddha) appears to be strongly recommended. Devala prc-

---

910. अमानुषतया विप्रा (अमानुषा गयाविप्रा?) ब्राह्मणा (ब्रह्मणा?) ये प्रकल्पिता । तेषु तुष्टेषु सन्तुष्टा. पितृभि. सह देवता ॥ न विचार्यं कुलं शील विद्यां च तप एव च । पूजितैस्तैस्तु राजेन्द्र मुक्ति प्राप्नोति मानवः ॥ तत प्रवर्तयेच्छ्राद्धं यथाशक्तिबलाबलम्। कामान्स लभते दिव्यान्मोक्षोपायं च विन्दति॥ वायु 82. 26–28. The first two verses are quoted from another (unnamed) पुराण by स्मृतिच (श्रा) pp 388–389, 'अथाचारपरिभ्रष्टा श्राद्धार्हा एव नागरा । बलीवर्दसमानोऽपि ज्ञातीयो यदि लभ्यते । किमन्यैर्बहुभिर्विप्रैर्वेदवेदाङ्गपारगै. ।' स्कन्दपुराण VI. 222. 23.

911. अपि धन्य. कुले जायादस्माकं मतिमान् नरः। अकुर्वन् वित्तशाठ्यं य' पिण्डान्नो निर्वपिष्यति॥ रत्नवस्त्रमहीयानं सर्वं तोयादिकं वसु। विभवे सति विप्रेभ्य' अस्माद्दित्वेय दास्यति॥ वराहपुराण 13 50–51, विष्णुपुराण III. 14. 22–23 (reads यानमहाभोगादिकं वसु).

vides that on the days of śrauta sacrifices, of the celebration of charitable acts, of śrāddhas on the anniversary of death or on amāvāsyā, on lucky occasions (vṛddhi), on Aṣṭakā days, one should never give a frugal or poor dinner to[911a] the worthy brāhmaṇas invited for dinner.

If no brāhmaṇa is available, then the Śrāddhaviveka, Śrāddhatattva and other digests say that effigies of brāhmaṇas made with seven or nine darbhas (except in the case of a performer following the Sāmaveda who is not restricted as to the number of darbhas) should be got ready and śrāddha should be performed and afterwards the fee and other materials may be given later on to other brāhmaṇas[912].

Rules were laid from very ancient times about the method of inviting brāhmaṇas. The Āp. Dh. S. states[912a] that the performer should make a request to the brāhmaṇas on the previous day, that on the day of the śrāddha he should request a second time (saying 'today is the śrāddha day') and then he should address them a third time (with the words 'food is ready, come'). Haradatta on the first of the three sūtras explains that the request should be 'tomorrow there is a śrāddha, you should do me the favour of being in the place of the Āhavanīya fire' i. e. you should partake of the food that will be prepared. Manu III. 187 also says that the invitation should be on the previous day or on the day of the śrāddha

---

911 a. इष्ट्वाऽपूर्वेद्युरहेत् दर्भेष्वेवाऽन्वहं च। पात्रेष्वप्येषु दातेषु हेयं नैव कुतोऽन्यत्॥ देखिए q. by स्मृत्यर्थ. (आ) p. 410.

912. ब्राह्मणान्पर्वो कुशलपक्षाह्मणे श्राद्धकर्म श्राद्धदिवसे।...ब्राह्मणानामन्त्रणं कृत्वा दर्भमयाद् द्विजान्। श्राद्धे कृत्वा विधानेन पश्चाद्विप्रेषु दापयेत्। इति श्राद्धप्रयोगसमुच्चयकारधृतवचनाच्च। श्राद्धतत्त्व p 194 and again at p 199 'पूर्वं ब्राह्मणानामन्त्रणं पश्चाद्यजमानेन दर्भमयब्राह्मणेभ्यो दानम्'. The three पक्ष are देव पितृ and मातामह.

912 a पूर्वेद्युर्निमन्त्रयेत्। अपरेद्युर्द्वितीयम्। तृतीयमाभन्त्रणम्। आप ध सू II 7 17. 11-13: हरदत्त explains 'अ. श्राद्धं भविता तत्र भवानाहवनीयार्थे भवान्। कर्मण्य इति।'. The exact procedure would be पूर्वेद्युर्निमन्त्र्य ब्राह्मणगृहं गत्वा दर्भमयानिमन्त्रयेत् पात्रिणां दक्षिणाजानुमण्डलं भूमौ संस्पृशन्नुपविष्टस्तिलोदकाभ्यां दक्षिणहस्तेन स्पृशन् श्रो म विश्वेदेवा इमं तत्र विश्वेदेवस्थाने आहवनीयार्थे भवद्भिः. इत्या स्वीकर्तव्यः प्रसीदत।' पृथ्वीचन्द्रोदय (on आद्ध) fol° 55a. For पैतृकब्राह्मणनिमन्त्रण the 3 Utterance will be पार्वणवत्तत्र दक्षिणाजानुस्थ नाचीनावीती उदङ्मुखं ब्राह्मणं &c itself. The Matsyapurāna[913] and Padma (Srsti-khanda 9.85–88) provide that the person intending to perform a śrāddha should in an humble manner invite the brāhmanas on the previous day or (in the morning of) the day of śrāddha, that he should touch the right knee (of the brāhmana to be invited) with the words 'you are given this invitation by me' and repeat in their hearing the following observance 'you should be free from anger, should be intent on purity (of body and mind) and should abstain from sexual intercourse and I, the performer of śrāddha, shall also act in the same way and that the pitrs in an aerial form wait upon the invited brāhmanas.' The Brhan-nāradiya-purāna states that the invitation should be in the words 'O best men! You should do me a favour and accept the invitation for śrāddha.' It is noteworthy that the Prajāpati-smrti (63) prescribes that one should invite brāhmanas for a śrāddha or sacrifice for gods in the evening of the previous day after uttering the verse 'akrodhanaih &c.'[914] The Skandapurāna VI. 217. 37 says that the performer should address the brāhmana as follows: 'my father (is or will enter) into this your body and so will my grand-father; let him (the grand-father) come with his father and you should strictly observe the vrata' (the rules). The invitation to the brāhmanas representing pitrs is to be given with the sacred thread in the prācīnāvīta form and to those for Vaiśvadevika in the yajñopavīta form. On the question whether the Vaiśvadevika brāhmanas were to be invited first or the brāhmanas for pitrs were to be invited first

---

913. पूर्वेद्युरपरेद्युर्वा विनीतात्मा निमन्त्रयेत्। निमन्त्रिताह्नि पितर उपतिष्ठन्ति तान् द्विजान्। वायुभूता हि गच्छन्ति तथासीनाह्युपासते॥ दक्षिणं जानुमालभ्य त्वं मया हि निमन्त्रितः। एवं निमन्त्र्य नियमं श्रावयेत्पितृबान्धवान्॥ अक्रोधनै शौचपरैः सतत ब्रह्मचारिभि। भवितव्यं भवद्भिश्च मया च श्राद्धकारिणा॥ मत्स्य 16. 17–20, q by श्रा क्रि कौ. p. 81, श्राद्धतत्त्व p 194. The verse निमन्त्रितान् occurs in मनु III. 189 (which reads वायुवच्चानुगच्छन्ति). हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p. 763) quotes the verse दक्षिणं जानुं (but reads श्रावयेत् पैतृकान् सुधः) and स्मृतिश्च (श्रा) p. 406 quotes both. पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 85–88) has the same verses with some slight variations. Vide हेमाद्रि (on श्रा) p. 1258.

914. अक्रोधनैः शौचपरैरिति गाथामुदीरयन्। सायमामन्त्रयेद्विप्रान् श्राद्धे दैवे च कर्मणि॥ प्रजापति 63. It is therefore likely that the Prajāpati-smrti is much later than the Matsyapurāna or it is possible that the verse अक्रोधनै is an ancient one and only repeated by the मत्स्य. Compare मनु III 192 where we have the words 'अक्रोधना शौचपरा. सतत ब्रह्मचारिण.' नारदपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 28 20) puts the request as 'श्राद्धे क्षणस्तु कर्तव्यः प्रसादश्चेति सत्तम'. This supports the Mit on Yāj I 225.

there is a conflict among smrtis and the medieval digests propose an option (vide Hemādri on śrāddha pp. 1154–1157). Manu III. 205 appears to lay down that the daiva brāhmana should be invited first (daivādyantam tad-iheta). Yama quoted by several digests [915] says that the performer should request in the evening of the previous day brāhmanas with the words 'You should all be free from exertions and should avoid passion and anger for the śrāddha in my house which is to be performed tomorrow,' that the brāhmanas should reply 'let it be so if the night passes happily and without any mishap to us.' The digests (e. g. Śrāddhakriyākaumudī p. 81, Śrāddhatattva p 194 and Nirnayasindhu III. p. 804) say that the verse 'sarvāyāsa &c' may be repeated when the invitation is given on the day previous to the day of śrāddha and the verse 'akrodhanaih' when the invitation is given on the morning of the śrāddha day. The words of invitation differ according to different authorities. For example, according to the Mit. on Yāj I. 225 the words are 'śrāddhe ksanah kriyatām.' Vide Śr. Pr. p. 106 also. Manu III. 187 and 191 show that the words 'nimantrana' and 'āmantrana' are used as synonyms. In the Śrāddhasūtra [916] of Kātyāyana the word 'āmantrana' is used. But Pānini [917] (III. 3 161) apparently makes a difference between the meanings of the two words and the Mahābhāsya explains that invitation is called 'nimantrana' which if rejected (without proper cause) involves a fault or sin, while that invitation which one is free to reject (without incurring blame) is called 'āmantrana.' Therefore, it must be held that the few writers such as Kātyāyana who employ āmantrana use it in a secondary sense. The invitation should be given by a performer himself or by his son,

---

915. प्रार्थयेत प्रदोषान्ते भुक्त्वान्नं शयितान् द्विजान्॥ सर्वायासविनिर्मुक्तैः कामक्रोधविवर्जितैः। भवद्भिर्भवितव्यं नः श्वोभूते श्राद्धकर्मणि॥ ते त तथेत्यविघ्नेन याति चेद्रजनी सुखम्। यथाश्रुतं प्रतीक्षेरन् श्राद्धकालमतन्द्रिताः॥ यम q. by श्रा क्रि कौ p 80, श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 194, मद पा 564 (from अत्रि)

916. अपरपक्षे श्राद्धं कुर्वीतोर्ध्वं वा चतुर्थ्या यदहः सम्पद्यते तदहर्ब्राह्मणानामन्त्र्य पूर्वेद्युर्वा। श्राद्धसूत्र I (of कात्यायन).

917. विधिनिमन्त्रणामन्त्रणाधीष्टसम्प्रश्नप्रार्थनेषु लिङ्। पाणिनि III. 3. 161. The महाभाष्य explains (Kielhorn, vol. II p. 165) यस्मियोगत कर्तव्य तस्मिन्नन्त्रणम्। किं पुनस्तत्। हव्यं कव्य वा। ब्राह्मणेन सिद्धं भुज्यतामित्युक्तेऽधर्म. प्रत्याख्याह्। आमन्त्रणे कानचार ॥ The श्रा क्रि कौ p. 82, दोडरानन्द (श्राद्धसौख्य folio 51) and श्राद्धतत्त्व p 192 refer to this distinction between the two words.

brother or a pupil or a brāhmaṇa, but it should not be given through a person of another varṇa [918] or a woman or a child or person belonging to another gotra nor from a distance (Prajāpati 64). Pracetas provides that a brāhmaṇa performer of śrāddha when giving an invitation should touch the right knee, a kṣatriya inviter the left knee of the invitee, a Vaiśya inviter should hold both feet of the invitee and a śūdra should prostrate himself at the feet of the invitee (vide Śr. Pr. p. 106 and S. K. L. p. 47). The Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 35) states an exception that if, when a śrāddha rite is going on, brāhmaṇas or Vedic students or ascetics come by chance begging for food, the performer should make them pleased by falling at their feet and feed them (i. e. no formal invitation is necessary in these cases). Vide Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 15. 12 for feeding uninvited ascetics. It is provided by Bhṛgu quoted by Hemādri that the brāhmaṇas on accepting the invitation should pronounce the finely-worded and comprehensive Vedic benediction quoted below.[919]

Uśanas [919a] provides that the performer should wash the floor of his house with water, cowdung it and cleanse the vessels on the day previous to the śrāddha and then give an invitation to the brāhmaṇas with the words 'tomorrow I am going to perform śrāddha'. The Varāhapurāṇa and the Kūrma also provide for this and for the washing of the clothes. Manu III. 206 also requires that the spot where śrāddha is to be performed should be clean, secluded, cowdunged and should slope to the south.

The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana [920] prescribes that a brāh-

---

918. अभोज्यं ब्राह्मणस्यान्नं क्षत्रियायैर्निमन्त्रितैः। स्कन्द VII. 1. 206. 4.

919. आ ब्रह्मन् ब्राह्मणो ब्रह्मवर्चसी जायतामास्मिन् राष्ट्रे राजन्य इषव्यः शूरो महारथो जायतां दोग्ध्री धेनुर्वोढाऽनड्वानाशुः सप्तिः पुरन्धिर्योषा जिष्णू रथेष्ठाः सभेयो युवाऽस्य यजमानस्य वीरो जायतां निकामे निकामे नः पर्जन्यो वर्षतु फलिन्यो न ओषधयः पच्यन्तां योगक्षेमो न कल्पताम्। तै. सं. VII. 5. 18, तै. ब्रा. III. 8. 13 (where this is explained), वाज सं. 22 22. Vide हेमाद्रि (on आ p 1159).

919 a तत्रोशना.। गोमयेनोदकेश्च भूमिमार्जनं भाण्डशौचं कृत्वा श्वः कर्तास्मीति ब्राह्मणान् निमन्त्रयेत्। स्मृतिच (आह्न) p. 409, आ. प्र p. 108, हेमाद्रि on आ. p. 51; वस्त्रशौचादि कर्तव्यं श्वः कर्तास्मीति जानता। स्थानोपलेपनं चैव कृत्वा विप्रान् निमन्त्रयेत्। वराहपुराण q by स्मृतिच. (आ) p. 403, आ क्रि. कौ. p. 76, हेमाद्रि (on आ) p 1150, आह्नतत्त्व p 192. हेमाद्रि explains 'आदिशब्दश्च प्रकारवचनः। तेन आह्नीपयोगिसम्भारसंपादनभाण्डमेलनशोधनादि गृह्यते'.

920. अनिन्द्येनामन्त्रितो नापक्रामेदामन्त्रितो वान्यदृक्षं न प्रतिगृह्णीयात्। आह्नसूत्र of कात्यायन (I) q. by आह्नतत्त्व p 189 (as गौभिल).

mana who has been invited (to a śrāddha dinner) by a faultless performer should not refuse the invitation nor should he, after being invited (and having accepted the invitation), accept a gift of even (uncooked) food from another person. Manu III 190 and Kūrmapurāṇa provide that if a brāhmaṇa after receiving an invitation for a sacrifice to gods or manes according to śāstra directions and after having accepted it violates the appointment, he incurs sin and becomes a hog [921] (in his next birth). This does not apply where he is unable to go on account of illness or other valid reason.

The smṛtis laid down some strict and elaborate rules which were to be observed by the brāhmaṇas invited for śrāddha and by the performer himself. Many of the rules are applicable to both. Gaut prescribes [922] that the brāhmaṇa who has partaken of śrāddha dinner should remain chaste (i. e. shun sexual intercourse) that whole day, and if he has intercourse with a wife of the śūdra caste he thereby makes his own pitṛs stay in the ordure of that wife. Vas XI. 37 makes this rule applicable both to the performer and the invited brāhmaṇa and as regards wives of all varṇas. Manu III. 188 provides that the brāhmaṇa invited to dine at a sacrifice in honour of pitṛs and the performer of the śrāddha should remain controlled (i. e. chaste and free from anger and passion) and should not study the Veda (except japa). Yāj. I. 225 (latter half) briefly puts the matter by saying 'they should be controlled as to their bodies, speech and thoughts'. The Matsyapurāṇa [923] prescribes that both the performer of śrāddha and the brāhmaṇa invited to dine at it should avoid dining again (after the śrāddha dinner), journey, going in a conveyance, exertions, sexual intercourse, study of the Veda, quarrel and sleeping by day. Similar rules to observe continence are laid down for both on the day of śrāddha if invitation be given on the morning of the day of 921. आमन्त्रितो ब्राह्मणो वै यो न्यायेनेह कुरुते क्षणम्। स याति नरकं घोरं शूकरत्वं प्रयाति च॥ कूर्म, उत्तरार्ध 22 7 q by आ. म p 110.

---

922 सद्यः श्राद्धी शूद्रातरगमनत्वपुरीषे मासं नयति पितॄन्। तस्मात्तदहर्भोक्तुं न व्रजेत्। गौ. 15. 23-24; on श्राद्धी हरदत्त explains "श्राद्धभोजनेन भुक्तमिति, अत्र इनिठनौ". This is पा V. 2. 85 'अस्मायामेधास्रजो विनिः'. This explains the two forms श्राद्धिन् and श्राद्धिक

923. पुनर्भोजनमध्वानं यानमासनमैथुनम्। आह्निकं च त्रयं भूयश्चैव सर्वमतद्विवर्जयेत्॥ स्वाध्यायं कलहं चैव दिवास्वप्नं च सर्वदा। भारुप 16 27-28 q. by आ. कि. गौ. p. 95 (which reads यूतमायासं) These verses are also पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड) 9. 123-124.

śrāddha and also on the previous day if invitation be given on the day previous to the śrāddha day. Vide Viṣṇu Dh. S. 69. 2–4. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 79 appears to strike a dissenting note about sexual intercourse with one's wife during the days from the 5th to the 16th; while most other medieval writers such as Hemādri (śr. pp. 1006–7) and Śr. P. p. 111 are opposed to this view. The Śrāddhasūtra[924] of Kātyāyana provides that the performer should, from the time of giving invitation to the time when the brāhmaṇas sip water (i. e. perform ācamana after śrāddha dinner), remain pure, free from anger, hurry, negligence, should speak the truth and should shun a journey, sexual intercourse, hard work and study of the Veda and control speech (should remain mostly silent) and the brāhmaṇas invited should observe the same rules Aušanasa (Jiv. vol I. pp. 526–527) contains verses very similar in import to Kātyāyana. The Brahmapurāṇa (220. 106–108), Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 31–33) and Anuśāsana 125.24 have identical verses[925] and Vāyu 79. 60–61 are very similar in import. Laghu-Śaṅkha 29, Laghu-Hārīta 75 and Likhita 60 have the same verse requiring the invited brāhmaṇas to avoid eight matters, viz. dining again, journey, carrying loads, Vedic study, sexual intercourse, making gifts, accepting gifts, performing homa, while Prajāpati 92 substitutes the brushing of the teeth (with a twig), tāmbūla, bath after applying oil to the body, and fast for the first four of the above eight The Anuśāsanaparva (90. 12–13) and Padma (Pātālakhaṇḍa 101. 94–95) also contain a list of actions that should be avoided Briefly put, the following were the observances for both inviter and invitee, viz avoidance of sexual intercourse, dining again, falsehood, hurry, vedic study, heavy work, gambling, carrying burdens, giving gifts and acceptance of gifts, theft, journey, sleep by day, quarrels; the performer alone was to abstain from eating tāmbūla, shaving, applying oil to the body, brushing the teeth with a twig; while the brāh-

---

924. तदह. शुचिरक्रोधनोऽत्वरितोऽप्रमत्त. सत्यवादी स्याद्ब्रह्मचैमैथुनश्रमस्वाध्यायगन्धर्जयेदाव्राहनादि वाग्यत ओपस्पर्शनादामन्त्रिताश्चैवम्। श्राद्धसूत्र I of कात्यायन. पुनर्भोजनमध्वानं भाराध्ययनमैथुनम्। दानं प्रतिग्रह होमं श्राद्धभुक्त्वष्ट वर्जयेत् ॥ लघुशङ्ख 29, q. by मिता on या I. 249 (without name), compare, कूर्मपुराण (II. 22. 6) and नारदीय (पूर्वार्ध 28. 4) for very similar verses.

925. श्राद्ध दत्त्वा च भुक्त्वा च पुरुषो य स्त्रिय व्रजेत्। पितरस्तस्य तं मास तस्मिन्रेतसि शेरते। अनुशासनपर्व 125 24 Almost the same words occur in मार्कण्डेय 28 32–33 and in अनुशासन 90 12–13, वसिष्ठ 11. 37. The मिता. on या I 79 says 'एव गच्छन् ब्रह्मचार्येव भवति। अतो यत्र ब्रह्मचर्यं श्राद्धादौ चोदितं तत्र गच्छतोऽपि न ब्रह्मचर्यस्खलनदोषोऽस्ति'.

mana invited was (alone) to observe the following, viz. not absenting oneself after accepting an invitation, making no delay when called for dinner (vide Śrāddhakalikā folio 4b and 5a and Pitr-bhakti on śrāddha [926]).

Elaborate provisions are made from ancient times about the substances and utensils proper for being used at śrāddha and about those that should not be used therein. Ap. Dh. [927] S. remarks: 'the materials in śrāddha are sesamum, māsas, rice, yavas (barley), water, roots and fruits; but the pitrs are extremely gratified by food that is mixed with clarified butter and for a very long time; so also they are gratified by wealth that is obtained lawfully and is bestowed on worthy persons'. Manu III. 267 (= Vāyu 83. 3) is to the same effect as Ap. Dh. S. Yāj. I. 258 is content to say that food which is fit to be offered in sacrifices (haviṣya) should be served. Manu III. 257 explains that food eaten by hermits in the forest, (cow's) milk, soma juice, meat that is not prepared with spices (or that is free from a bad smell), rock salt are by their very nature haviṣ (sacrificial food). According to Gaut. 27. 11 the sacrificial food (haviṣ) comprises boiled rice, food obtained by begging, ground barley (after being baked or fried), grain separated from husk, barley gruel, vegetables, milk, curds, clarified butter, roots, fruits and water. [928] Other smṛtis and digests very much elaborated these brief indications in the early works. The three kinds of wealth (viz. śukla, śabala and kṛṣṇa) and the several lawful or uncondemned means of acquiring wealth have been described already in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 130 ff. The Mārkandeya (29. 14–15) condemns the use in śrāddhas of wealth that is obtained by taking bribes or from a patita (one guilty of a grave sin), that springs from bride-price or that is declared to be unlawful or is obtained by saying to another 'give me for the sake of a śrāddha to be offered to my father' (q. by Śm. C. on śrāddha p. 412). The Skandapurāna emphasizes that at a śrāddha purity (śuddhi) must be specially secured in seven matters viz. the body (of the performer), the materials, the wife, the place (where śrāddha is to be performed), the mind, the mantras and brāhmanas.[929] Manu III. 235 (=Vas. 11.35) states: three are the sanctifying things in a śrāddha, viz. a daughter's son, a Nepal blanket and sesamum grains and three are commended in śrāddha viz. cleanliness, freedom from anger and absence of hurry.[929a] Pracetas mentions several kinds of corn that are commended as food in śrāddha. Manu III, 255 summarises that in śrāddha the riches (i. e. the most important matters) are afternoon, darbhas, proper cleansing of the place (or house) for śrāddha, sesame, generous expense (on food &c.), seasoning food, eminent brāhmanas.

926. निमन्त्रितः श्राद्धकर्ता च पुनर्भोजने श्रमं हिंसां स्त्रीं प्रमादं भारोद्वहनं दूरगमनं कलहं शस्त्रग्रहणं च वर्जयेत्। शुचिः सत्यवादी क्षमी ब्रह्मचारी च स्यात्। पितृभक्ति of अपरार्क.

927. तत्र द्रव्याणि तिलमाषा व्रीहियवा आपो मूलफलानि। स्नेहवति स्नेहाक्षे पितॄणां प्रीतिर्द्रव्यैर्यावंतं च कालम्। तथा धर्माहृतेन द्रव्येण तीर्थमतिपन्नेन। आप. ध. सू. II. 7. 16. 22–24.

928. चरुभैक्षसक्तुकणयावकशाकपयोदधिघृतमूलफलोदकानि हवींष्युत्तरोत्तरं प्रशस्तानि। गौ 27.11. On आश्व गृ I. 9 6 नारायण quotes a verse of similar import 'पयो दधि यवागूश्च सर्पिरोदनतण्डुलाः। सोमो मांसं तथा तैलमापस्तानि वशैव तु॥'.

The Mārkandeya-purāna says that several kinds of corn-yielding plants (some due to tillage in villages and some growing wild) were produced by Brahmā when he milked the earth for famished people, while Brahmavaivarta (q. by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 537) affirms that when a few particles fell down on the earth while Indra drank Soma, from them arose such corn as śyāmāka, wheat, yava, mudga and red paddy and as they were produced from soma they were like nectar to the pitrs and food prepared from these should be offered to pitrs. The Mārkandeya speaks of seven kinds of grāmya corn and seven kinds of wild (āraṇya) corn. Prajāpati 119 recommends the use of eight kinds of corn, viz. nīvāra, māsa, mudga, wheat, paddy, yava, grain and sesamum. The Matsya (q by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 538) narrates that when the Sun drank nectar some drops fell down from which arose the several kinds of

---

929. शरीरद्रव्यदाराभूमनोमन्त्रद्विजन्मनाम्। शुद्धिः सप्तसु विज्ञेया श्राद्धकाले विशेषतः॥ स्कन्द VII. 1. 205. 17.

929 a. त्रीणि श्राद्धे पवित्राणि दौहित्रः कुतपस्तिलाः। त्रीणि चात्र प्रशंसन्ति शौचमक्रोधमत्वराम्॥ मनु. III. 235, वसिष्ठधर्मसूत्र XI. 35. This very verse (the first half) is quoted in several Purānas as in विष्णुपुराण III. 15 52, भविष्य I. 185. 20, मार्कण्डेय 28. 64, स्कन्दपुराण (प्रभासखण्ड 205. 13). The पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 47. 278-279) has the whole verse but reads श्राद्धे त्रीणि.. दौहित्रं and सत्यमक्रोधमत्वरा It appears clear from the preceding verse that in Manu at least दौहित्र means daughter's son. But in the स्कन्द (प्रभासखण्ड 205 14 ff) several meanings of दौहित्र are given such as 'a vessel made of the horn on the nose of the rhinoceros' or 'clarified butter made from the milk of a cow of variegated colour.' The word कुतप also has nine meanings acc. to a Smrti text quoted by Aparārka p. 474 'ब्राह्मणः कम्बलो गावः सूर्योऽग्नेस्तिथिरेव च। तिला दर्भाश्च कालश्च नवैते कुतपाः स्मृताः॥'; vide note 847 for कुतप paddy, mudga, sugarcane and that therefore sugar is sacred and may be employed in sacrifices to gods and manes. The Mārkaṇḍeya [930] mentions several kinds of corn that may be employed for śrāddha food. The Brahma-purāṇa 220. 154-155, Vāyu 82. 3, Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 16. 5-6, Viṣnu, Dh. S, [931] Brahmāṇḍa II. 7. 143-152 and III 14. contain similar lists of different kinds of corn that may be used in śrāddhas. The Vāyupurāṇa (80. 42-48) mentions various desirable eatables prepared from corn of various kinds, sugar and clarified butter and milk.[932]

Certain kinds of corn and cereals were forbidden. For example, the Matsya-purāṇa and Padma (Sṛstikhaṇḍa, chap. 9 62-66)[933] declare that masūra, linseed, niṣpāva, rājamāṣa, kusumbhika, kodrava, udāra, gram, kapittha, madhūka and linseed are forbidden Viṣnu Dh S. 79. 18 provides that the performer should avoid the bean called rājamāṣa, masūra, stale food and salt manufactured from seawater. The Sat-trimśanmata [934] forbids the use in śrāddha of all kinds of cereals covered with dark husk except sesamum, mudga and māṣa.

---

930. राजश्यामाकइक्षागाकौ तद्वच्चैव मक्षासिका। नीवारा पौष्करा श्चैव वन्यानि पितृतृप्तये॥ यवव्रीहिसगोधूमतिलमुद्गा ससर्षपा। प्रियङ्गव. कोद्रवाश्च निष्पावाश्चातिशोभनाः। वर्ज्या मर्कटका. श्राद्धे राजमाषास्तथाणव। विप्लविका मसूराश्च श्राद्धकर्मणि गर्हिता॥ मार्कण्डेय 29,9-11 q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा. pp 542-43) and explained as मक्षान्तिकाः मध्यदेशे प्रसिद्धो धान्यविशेष. पौष्कराः पद्मबीजानि निष्पावा. वल्ला' The last are called वाल in modern Marathi

931. तिलैर्व्रीहियवैर्माषैरद्भिर्मूलफलैः शाकै श्यामाकैः प्रियङ्गुभिर्नीवारैर्मुद्गैर्गोधूमैश्च मासं प्रीयन्ते। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 80 1

932. द्वेष्याणि संप्रवक्ष्यामि श्राद्धे वर्ज्यानि यानि तु॥ मसूरराजनिष्पावराजमाषकुसुम्भिकाः। कोद्रवोदारचणका कपित्थ मधुकातसी॥ मत्स्य 15 36-38 q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा) pp. 548-549 and श्रा म p. 40, पद्मपुराण (V. 9.64-67) q by हेमाद्रि p 548 has almost the same list. हेमाद्रि explains मधुक as ज्येष्ठीमधु and reads कोद्रेबोद्दालवरक-कपित्थ. in मत्स्य. वरक is वरी in Marathi.

933 राजमाषमसूरपर्णुषितकृतलवणानि च। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 79, 18; राजमाषान्मसूरांश्च कोद्रवान् कोरदूषकान्। लोहितान् वृक्षनिर्यासान्च श्राद्धकर्मणि वर्जयेत्॥ शङ्ख 14 21 q by हेमाद्रि on श्राद्ध p. 548, who explains कोरदूषक. वनकोद्रव.

934 षट्त्रिंशन्मते। कृष्णधान्यानि सर्वाणि वर्जयेच्छ्राद्धकर्मणि। न वर्जयेत्तिलांश्चैव मुद्गान्माषास्तथैव च। q by हेमाद्रि (श्राद्ध) p. 544, श्रा. प्र. p. 38, 'हविष्यं श्राद्ध-हविर्योग्यं व्रीहिशालियवगोधूममुद्गमाषसुन्यञ्जकालशाकमहाशल्कैलाशुण्ठीमरीचहिङ्गुगुडशर्करा-कर्पूरसैन्धवसाम्भरपनसनालिकेरकदलीबदरगव्यपयोदधिघृतपायसमधुमासप्रभृति स्मृत्यन्तर-प्रसिद्धं वेदितव्यम्। हविष्यसित्यनेनैवार्थोग्यस्य स्मृत्यन्तरप्रसिद्धस्य कोद्रवमसूरचणककु-लित्थपुलाकनिष्पावराजमाषकूष्माण्डवार्ताकबृहतीद्वयीपोदकीवशाशुरुविष्पलीवच्चाशतपुष्पीपर-विडलवणमाहिषचामरक्षीरदधिघृतपायसादीना निवृत्तिः। मिता on या. I, 240

From considerations of space this matter cannot be pursued further. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 240 puts together a long list of allowed and of condemned kinds of grains and other articles.

What milk should be ordinarily partaken of and what should be avoided has been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 782–783. A few words are added here. Manu III. 271 and Yāj. I. 258 provide that if cow's milk or rice cooked therein (called pāyasa) is offered in śrāddha the pitṛs are satisfied for one year. Vāyu 78. 17, Brahma[935] 220 169, Mārkandeya 32 17–19, Viṣṇupurāna III.16.11 forbid the use in a śrāddha of the milk of a she-buffalo, of a camarī or female deer, of sheep or ewes, of she camels, of human females and of all animals with one hoof and the use of the curds and clarified butter prepared from such milk. But ghee prepared from buffalo milk was allowed by Sumantu and Devala (q. by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 572).

The Mārkandeyapurāna[935] (29.15–17), Vāyu (78.16) and Viṣnupurāna (III 16 10) lay down that the water to be employed in śrāddha must not have a bad smell, must not be foamy, or taken from a puddle or a small reservoir which cannot slake the thirst of a cow, must not have been brought overnight, must not be taken from a reservoir not dedicated to all or from a trough or the like meant for beasts.

Several rules are laid down about the fruits, roots and vegetables recommended or condemned for use in śrāddha. For example, the Brahma-purāna (220.156–158) enumerates several kinds of fruits such as mangoes, bilva, pomegranate, cocoanut, dates, grapes, as fit to be given in śrāddha. Vide Śankha 14 22–23 also. Vāyu (78 11–15) states[936a] that garlic, leeks and onions, other things that are of bad odour or taste 935 माहिषं चामरं मार्गमाविकैकशफोद्भवम्। त्रैणमौष्ट्रमाविकं च (°द्रमजावीकं?) दधि क्षीरं घृतं त्यजेत्॥ ब्रह्मपुराण 220.169 q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 573.

---

935. दुर्गन्धि फेनिलं चाम्भ तथैवाल्पतरोदकम्॥ न लभेद्यत्र गौस्तृप्तिं नक्तं यच्चाप्युपाहृतम्। यच्च सर्वार्थमुत्सृष्टं यच्चाभोज्यनिषानजम्॥ तद्वर्ज्यं सलिल तात सदैव पितृकर्मणि॥ मार्कण्डेय 29. 15–17 Vide also ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद 14. 26)

936 a. लशुनं गृञ्जनं चैव पलाण्डुं पिण्डमूलकम्। करम्भाद्यानि चान्यानि हीनानि रसगन्धत॥...अवेदोक्ताश्च निर्यासा लवणान्यौषराणि च। श्राद्धकर्मणि वर्ज्यानि याश्च नार्या रजस्वला॥ वायु 78 12 and 15 q in हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 555) and स्मृतिच. (श्रा) p 416. The स्मृतिच (श्रा p. 415) quotes a verse and a half from Suśruta for ten varieties of पलाण्डु.

and all exudation from trees not permitted by the Veda and sa gathered from saltish earth, should be avoided in śrāddha. Th Viṣnudharmasūtra[937] (79.17) contains a long list of fruits bulbs and vegetables that were not to be employed in śrāddha. The Rāmāyāna states[938] that Rāma when an exile in the Daṇḍakā forest gratified his pitṛs by offering the fruits of inguda, badara, and bilva trees and generalises that deities are offered that food which is partaken of by a person (who is a devotee of that deity). From considerations of space detailed references to the smṛtis and purānas are passed over. The Smṛtyarthasāra pp. 52–53, Śrāddhaviveka (pp. 43–47) of Rudradhara and other digests collect in one place the foods, vegetables, fruits and roots that are allowed to be offered in śrāddha and that are condemned in śrāddha. Manufactured salt was forbidden, but natural salt from a lake (called saindhava) was allowed. Salt was not to be served directly (as Viṣnudharmasūtra 79. 12 says) but when put in while cooking vegetables it was not prohibited. There was a difference of opinion about the employment of asafœtida (vide Hemādri on Śrāddha p. 565). The Viṣṇudharmasūtra (79. 5–6) provides that flowers having a strong (or nasty) odour or no odour at all, the blossoms of thorny plants and red flowers should not be given, but one may give white and sweet-smelling flowers even though they are taken from thorny plants and flowers though red in colour may be taken from aquatic plants. Śankha (14. 15–16) is to the same effect (q. by Hemādri p 684). Vāyu (75. 33–35) is to the same effect and adds that the flowers called Japā, Bhaṇḍi, Rūpikā (of arka plant), Kurantaka should be avoided in śrāddha. The Brahmapurāna (220. 162–165) specifies the several kinds of flowers that may be offered in śrāddha such as jāti, campaka, mallikā, mango blossom, tulasī, tagara, ketakī and various kinds of lotuses (white, blue and red &c.). The Smṛtyarthasāra includes tulasī among things to be avoided in śrāddha. The Sm. C. notes this and remarks

---

937. पिप्पली-शुकुण्वक-भूस्तृण-शिग्रु-सर्षप-सुरसा-सर्जक-सुवर्चल-कूष्माण्ड-अलाबु-वार्ताकु-पालङ्क्या-उपोदकी-तण्डुलीयक-कुहुम्भ-पिण्डालुक-महिषीक्षीराणि वर्जयेत्। विष्णु-धर्मसूत्र. 79. 17.

938. इङ्गुदैर्बदरैर्बिल्वै रामस्तर्पयते पितॄन्। यद्वत्तं पुरुषो भुङ्क्ते तद्वत्तस्तस्य देवताः॥ रामायण, अयोध्या 103 30, 104.15 q. by हेमाद्रि on श्राद्ध p 561, मेधातिथि on मनु V. 7, स्मृतिच. (श्रा) p 416. स्कन्द (नागरखण्ड) 220. 49 is 'यद्वत्तं पुरुषोऽश्नाति तद्वत्तस्तस्य देवता.'.

that it is not clear on what this dictum prohibiting tulasī is based[938a].

Kuśas are required in śrāddha. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 657 for general remarks on kuśas. A few words may be added here. The Śat. Br. VII. 2. 3. 2 states that the waters that loathed Vṛtra went out to waterless deserts and became bushes of darbhas[939]. Similarly, Āśv. Gr. III. 2.2 summarizes a Brāhmaṇa text stating that darbhas are the essence of waters and herbs (apām vā esa osadhīnām raso yad-darbhāḥ). Prajāpati (verse 98)[939a] provides that darbhas should be gathered from a pure spot in the morning by a brāhmaṇa, should have mantras repeated over them, should be greenish in colour, should be as long as a cow's ear and then they are holy. The Gobhila gr. (I. 5. 16–17) states 'the barhis consists of kuśa grass cut off at the points at which the blades diverge from the main stalk and that the blades should be cut off near the roots at the rites meant for the Fathers'. Daksa (II. 33 and 35) provides that the second part of the day (divided into eight parts) is the proper time for collecting fuelsticks, flowers and kuśas. The Gobhilasmṛti (I. 20–21) says[940] that the darbhas used in sacrifices are greenish, those to be used in Pākayajñas should be yellowish, those in rites for the pitṛs must be taken out from the roots and those that are to be used in Vaiśvadeva should be dark-pale, and that 938 a. उपोदकी—तुलसी—कृष्णातसी-शिग्रुर्महासर्षप-पत्रशाक-कृष्णसर्षप-पूतिगन्ध-शाकानि कूष्माण्डपोलकाद्याश्च (वर्ज्यानि)। स्मृत्यर्थसार p. 53; स्मृत्यर्थसारे तु तुलस्यपि वर्ज्यंयुक्तं तत्र मूलं चिन्त्यं प्रसिद्धस्मृतिसमुच्चयेषु तुलसीनिषेधस्यादर्शनात् । स्मृतिच (आ) p 435. The डोढरानन्द (आद्धसौख्य) remarks: ग्रन्थान्तरे तुलसीनिषेधस्तु शाकविषयः प्रेतश्राद्धविषयश्च । तत्र तुलसीवर्ज्यं भृङ्गराजादि ग्राह्यम्। (folio 47 b.).

---

939. The शतपथब्राह्मण has the following legend about darbha and derives the word from दृम् 'आपश्च ह्येता ओषधयश्च या वै वृत्राद् बीभत्समाना आपो धन्व दृमन्त्य उदायंस्ते दर्भा अभवन् यद्दृमन्त्य उदायंस्तस्माद्दर्भाः। ता हैताः शुद्धा मेध्या आपो वृत्राभिप्रक्षरिता यद्दर्भास्तेनौषधय उभयेनैवैनमेतदवेन भीणाति। VII. 2.3.2.

939 a. मन्त्रपूता हरिद्वर्णाः मातर्विप्रसमुद्भूताः। गोकर्णमात्रा दर्भाः स्युः पवित्राः पुण्यभूमिजाः॥ प्रजापति 98. The उत्पाटनमन्त्र is 'विरिञ्चिना सहोत्पन्न परमेष्ठिन् निसर्गज॥ नुद पापानि सर्वाणि भव स्वस्तिकरो मम॥ q. by. स्मृतिच. I. p. 107, अपरार्क p 458.

940. हरिता यज्ञिया दर्भाः पीतकाः पाकयज्ञिकाः। समूलाः पितृदेवत्या. कक्षमात्रा वैश्वदेविका॥ गोभिलस्मृति I. 21 q. by स्मृतिच I. p. 109, अपरार्क p. 458, आ. कि कौ. p. 46 (which last explains: समूला मूलसमीपे लूना इत्यर्थः); हरिता वै सपिञ्जूला शुद्धाः स्निग्धा समाहिताः। रत्निमात्रा. प्रमाणेन पितृतीर्थेन संस्कृता॥ गोभिलस्मृति I 21 and ब्रह्माण्ड, उपोद्घातपाद 11. 74–75, quoted as from ब्रह्मपुराण by अपरार्क p. 458, which explains 'बद्धमुष्टेः करो रत्नि, संस्कृता परामृष्टा..' Vide वायुपुराण 75.38–39 for a similar verse greenish darbhas together with ends uncut, that are smooth and well nourished, one aratni in length and touched with that part of the hand called pitrtirtha are pure. The Padmapurāna (Srstikhanda 11.92) and Skanda VII.1. 205.16 state that kuśas and black sesamum spring from the body of Visnu and the Visnudharmottara I. 139.12 says that tilas and darbhas sprang from the perspiration and hair of Visnu in the Boar incarnation. The Matsya (22.89) says the same.

The Garuḍa [941] (Pretakhanda 2.21–22) states that all the three gods dwell in kuśa grass viz. Brahmā at its root, Visnu in the middle and Saṅkara at the end and that brāhmanas, mantras, kuśas, fire, tulasī leaf—these do not become nirmālya (stale and so unfit to be used again) even when the same are employed again and again. But an exception is made by Gobhila [942] that those darbhaś which are spread on the ground for placing pindas on them or that are used in tarpana and those that are held in the hand while a man is answering the calls of nature should be given up (and not used again). The Visnu Dh. S. 79.2 and Vāyu 75.41 provide that if kuśas are not available, kāśa grass or Dūrvā may be substituted. The Skandapurāna VII (Prabhāsakhanda) part 1.206.17 says that straight darbhas are used in giving gifts, at baths, in japa, homa, dinner and worship of gods, but they are double-folded when used in rites for pitṛs. The Skanda VII. 1 205.16 provides that the top of darbhas is for divine rites, while darbha with the root and tip is meant for paitrka rites. This is based on the Sat. Br II 4. 2.17 which states that the top of the darbha belongs to gods, the middle to men and the root part to the fathers.

Great importance was attached to the use of tila (sesamum) in śrāddha. The Jaiminigrhya II.1 states that the whole house should have sesamum grains scattered about in it. Baud Dh. S II. 8 8 provides that when the invited brāhmanas come they should be given water mixed with sesame. The Baud. gr. II. 11.64 provides that sesamum grains are holy in śrāddha for making gifts of them or as part of food or for being mixed in 941. विना मन्त्रा कुशा वह्निस्तुलसी च खगेश्वर। नैते निर्माल्यतां यान्ति क्रियमाणा. पुनः पुन. ॥ गरुड (प्रेतखण्ड 2. 22).

942. पिण्डार्थं ये स्तृता दर्भा स्तरणार्थं (दर्भास्तर्पणार्थे?) तथैव च। धृतैः कृते च विण्मूत्रे त्यागस्तेषां विधीयते ॥ गोभिलस्मृति I. 22, q. by अपरार्क p 458, हेमाद्रि p 640, श्रा. क्रि. कौ. p 49.

water. The Prajāpatismṛti speaks[943] of four kinds of tilas viz. white, black, very black and jartilas and states that each succeeding one gives greater gratification to the pitṛs than each preceding one. The Tai. S. V. 4.3.2 refers to jartilas and Jai. X. 8.7 holds a discussion thereon. The Nāradapurāna (pūrvārdha 28 36)[944] provides that the performer of śrāddha should scatter tilas in the midst of the brāhmanas invited and at the doors with the mantra 'apahatā' (may the asuras and evil spirits that sit on the altar be struck and run away). Yaj. I. 234 also recommends this mantra (which is Vāj. S. II. 29). The Kūrmapurāna (II. 22. 18) states that sesame should be scattered all round and a goat should be tied near the spot, since śrāddha polluted by asuras becomes purified by sesame and a goat. The Viṣnupurāna (III. 16.14) prescribes that by tilas scattered on the ground one should ward off evil spirits (Yātudhāna). The Garudapurāna[945] (Pretakhanda 2. 16) makes Śrīkṛsna say 'tilas have sprung from the perspiration on my body and are holy; asuras, dānavas and daityas run away on account of tilas.' The Anuśāsana-parva (90.22) says that yātudhānas and goblins snatch away the havis when the śrāddha is offered without tilas. The Kṛtyaratnākara (p. 540) quotes a verse as follows: 'he who applies as unguent tilas, who bathes with water in which tilas are mixed, offers tilas into fire, makes gifts of tilas, eats tilas and who grows tilas—these six never sink (i. e. are not unlucky nor in trouble).

A great deal is said about the vessels to be used in offering arghya (water for honouring the invited brāhmanas and pindas), for cooking śrāddha food, for dining and for serving. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana[946] provides that the arghya water

---

943. शुक्ल. कृष्ण. कृष्णतरश्चतुर्थो जातिलास्तिल। उत्तरोत्तरतः श्राद्धे पितॄणा तृप्तिकारका॥ प्रजापति 99. जातिलs are wild tilas The तै सं V. 4.3.2 has this passage 'जातिलयवागवा वा जुहयादूवीधुकयवागवा न ग्राम्यान् पशून् हिनस्ति नारण्यानथो खल्वाहुर्नाहुतिर्वै जातिलाश्च गवीधुकाश्चेत्यजक्षीरेण जुहोति'. शबर appears to quote काठकसंहिता 6 3 also The conclusion arrived at by Jai. X 8 7 is that the passage about जातिलs is an अर्थवाद for praising पयोहोम The स्मृतिच. (श्राद्ध) p. 433 says जातिलास्तु तिला प्रोक्ता. कृष्णवर्णा वने भवा इति सत्यव्रतेनाभिधानात्

944. The मन्त्र is अपहता असुरा रक्षासि वेदिषदः। वाज सं II 29.

945 श्रीकृष्ण उवाच। मम स्वेदसमुद्भूतास्तिलास्तादर्थं पवित्रका.। असुरा दानवा दैत्या विद्रवन्ति तिलैस्तथा॥ गरुड (प्रेतखण्ड) 2 16; तिलोद्वर्ती तिलस्नायी तिलहोता तिलभक्षः। तिलभक्षी तिलावापी षट्तिली नावसीदति॥ q. by कृत्यरत्नाकर p 540.

946 यज्ञियवृक्षचमसेषु पवित्रान्तर्हितेषु एकैकास्मिन्नप आसिञ्चति शन्नो देवीरिति।... सौवर्णराजतौदुम्बरब्रह्ममणिमयानां पात्राणामन्यतमेषु यानि वा विद्यन्ते पत्रपुटेषु वैकैकरयैकेन ददाति सपवित्रेषु हस्तेषु। श्राद्धसूत्र (of कात्यायन) II should be taken in camasas (cups) made of sacrificial trees (such as palāśa, aśvattha, udumbara) or in vessels of gold, silver, copper, rhinoceros horn, precious stones whichever may be available, or in a vessel made of leaves. The Visnu Dh. S. (79. 14–15) provides that the performer should employ metallic vessels, particularly vessels made of silver. The Mārkandeya (31.65) and Vāyu (74.3) state that in a vessel of silver the (ancient) pitrs milked svadhā and hence a silver vessel is highly desired by pitrs and brings delight to them. Yāj. I. 237 also specially recommends silver vessels. The Vāyu (74. 1–2), Matsya (17. 19–22), Brahmānda (Upodghāta 11. 1–2) and Padma (Srstikhanda 9. 147–150) state that vessels of gold, silver or copper are the (proper) ones for pitrs; that even the talk about silver or the sight or gift of silver gives inexhaustible results to pitrs in heaven, that vessels to be used for arghya, for pinda and for the food to be offered should be preferably of silver and that in rites for gods a silver vessel is not auspicious. Atri (q by Sm. C. II. p. 464) says that in rites for the gods and pitrs, vessels of gold and silver should be respectively employed and in default of these vessels of other metals (such as copper, bell-metal) should be used (as stated by Visnu Dh. S. 79.22 and 24). The Padma provides[947] that the vessels may be of sacrificial wood or of palāśa or of silver or made from a sea product (such as conch shell) and that since silver was produced from the eye of Śiva, it is a great favourite with pitrs. Prajāpati (111) provides that the three pindas should be cast in a vessel of gold or silver or copper or bell-metal or of rhinoceros horn but not in earthenware or a wooden vessel, that (verse 112) the cooking vessels should be of copper or of any metal, but an earthen vessel baked in fire and immersed in water is the best (for cooking), that food cooked in an iron vessel is like crow's flesh, that (115) the vessels to be used for taking food by the brāhmanas should be made of gold, silver or of an alloy of five metals or they may take their food in patrāvali (i. e. leaves stitched together); vide also Matsya

947. पात्रं वनस्पतिमयं तथा पर्णमयं शुभ ॥ राजतं वा प्रकुर्वीत तथा सागरसम्भवम्। सौवर्णं राजतं पात्रं पितृणां पात्रमिष्यते। ...वार्यपि श्रद्धया दत्तमक्षय्यायोपकल्पते। अर्घार्थं पितृपिण्डेषु पितृणां राजतं स्मृतम्।...शिवनेत्रोद्भवं यस्मादतस्तत्पितृवल्लभम्। पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 147–151). तथार्घ्यपिण्डभोज्यादौ पितृणां राजतं मतम्। शिवनेत्रो...वल्लभम्। अमङ्गल्यं तयत्नेन देवकार्येषु वर्जयेत्॥ मत्स्य 17. 22–23.

17. 19–20. The use of plantain leaves for bhojana is forbidden[947a] by some. Brāhmanas should not take ācamana from a vessel made of bell-metal, kharpara, śukra, stone, clay, wood, fruit or iron. Ācamana should be performed with water from a copper vessel. Atri (153) prescribes that no food should be served from an iron vessel; if so served the food is like ordure to the diner and the server goes to hell. The vessels for cooking śrāddha food are to be made of gold, silver, copper or bell-metal or even of clay provided the last are new ones and strong (well baked) but never of iron. Vide Sr. Pr. p. 155 for details. The Visnu Dh S. (79. 24) quotes a verse which says that food offered in vessels of gold, silver, copper, rhinoceros horn or of phalgu wood becomes inexhaustible.

Visnu Dh. S 79. 11 provides that for unguents (anulepana) to be applied to the bodies of the invited brāhmanas, sandal-wood, saffron, camphor, aguru, padmaka may be used. The Brahmapurāna (220. 165–166) mentions kustha, jaṭā-māṁsī, nutmeg, uśīra, mustā and some others as proper perfumed articles to be used at śrāddhas.

It has already been seen at pp. 413–14 what kinds of food were recommended or condemned for śrāddha. The Matsyapurāna [948] states that food containing milk and curds and clarified butter from cow's milk mixed with sugar gives satisfaction to all pitṛs for one month and that whatever food, whether cow's milk or ghee or rice cooked in milk, is mixed with honey, yields inexhaustible results. The Brahmapurāna also (220. 182–184) provides that such eatables as are sweet and oily and are slightly sour and pungent should be served in śrāddha and one should shun eatables that are very sour or very saltish or very pungent, since they are āsuraa (fit for asuras). Great emphasis was laid on serving preparations of food made from māṣa

---

947 a यच्चाङ्गिरसोक्तम् 'न जातिकुसुमानि न कदलीपत्रम्' इति कदलीपत्रमत्र भोजनमिति पात्रतया मांसं निषिध्यते। स्मृतिच (आ) p 434. Others said that there is an option as to कदलीपत्र, as certain smṛtis (e. g. लघ्वाश्वलायन 23. 42) allowed plantain leaves. ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद् 21. 35–40) mentions that the leaves of पलाश, अश्वत्थ, उदुम्बर, विकङ्कत, काश्मर्य, खदिर, प्लक्ष, न्यग्रोध, बिल्व may be used for taking food in and that vessels made of Phalgu wood, of Bilva wood and bamboo are allowed and yield certain good rewards.

948. अन्नं सदधिक्षीरं गोघृतं शर्करान्वितम्। मासं प्रीणाति वै सर्वान् पितॄनित्याह केशव ॥ यत्किञ्चिन्मधुसंमिश्रं गोक्षीरं घृतपायसम्। दत्तमक्षयमित्याहुः पितरः पूर्वदेवताः ॥ मत्स्य 17. 30–36, the first being q by स्मृतिच (आ) p. 431, beans. The Aušanasa[949]—smrti pronounces the threat that the brāhmana, who, when dining at śrāddha, does not eat māsa food, becomes a beast for twenty-one births after death. The Śm. C. quotes a smrti text saying that a śrāddha in which no māsa preparation is offered is as good as not performed.

The greatest divergence has prevailed about the employment of flesh at śrāddhas among writers from the earliest times. The subject of flesh-eating in general has been discussed at great length in the History of Dharmaśāstra, vol. II. pp 772–782. A few remarks about flesh in relation to śrāddha will not be out of place here. The Āp. Dh. S. prescribes[950] that the obligatory śrāddha (to be performed every month) must contain food mixed with fat, the best course (for supplying fat) is to employ clarified butter and flesh; on failure of these two, sesamum oil and vegetables may be employed. The same sūtra also provides[951] that the pitrs are gratified for a year by the offering of cow's flesh in a śrāddha, that by the flesh of a buffalo the gratification of pitrs extends to more than a year, that this rule extends to the flesh of wild animals (like hares) and village (or domesticated) animals (like goats) that are declared to be fit for being sacrificed, that the gratification of pitrs extends to endless time if the flesh of a rhinoceros is offered to brāhmanas seated on rhinoceros skin, so also by the flesh of the 949 यो नाश्नाति द्विजो मांस नियुक्त पितृकर्मणि। स प्रेत्य पशुतां याति सप्तजन्मेकविंशतिम्॥ औशनसस्मृति (V.) p. 531 (Jiv.-I.).

950. नैयमिकं तु श्राद्ध स्नेहवदेव दद्यात्, सर्पिर्मासामिति प्रथम. कल्प। अभावे तैल शाकमिति। आप ध सू II. 8. 19. 13–15.

951. संवत्सरं गव्येन प्रीति। भूयासमतो माहिषेण। एतेन ग्राम्यारण्याना पशूना मांसं मेध्य व्याख्यातम्। खड्गोपरतरणे खड्गमांसेनानन्त्यं कालम्। तथा शतबलेर्मत्स्यस्य मांसेन वार्ध्राणसस्य च। आप. ध सू II 7.16 25—II 7.17.3. वार्ध्राणस or वार्ध्रीणस is explained as a red-coloured goat that is tripiba (whose ears are so long that they touch the water it drinks), that is old and the foremost of the herd त्रिपिबमिन्द्रियक्षीणं यूथस्याग्रचर तथा। रक्तवर्ण तु राजेन्द्र छागं वार्ध्राणसं विदु॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I 141. 48 q. by स्मृतिच. (श्रा p. 431) The Mit On या I. 260 and मेधातिथि on मनु III. 271 quote a slightly different verse त्रिपिबमिन्द्रियक्षीण श्वेतं वृद्धमजापतिम्। वार्ध्राणस तु तं प्राहुर्याज्ञिका श्राद्धकर्मणि॥ and Mit. explains त्रिपिब as 'पिबत. कर्णौ जिह्वा च यस्य जल सपृशन्ति स त्रिभि पिबतीति त्रिपिब.'. अपरार्क p. 552 cites this verse as a निगम. हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p 590) states that the 2nd verse is a various reading of the first अपरार्क p 553 quotes another verse according to which वार्ध्राणस is a white-feathered bird with red head, and dark throat 'कृष्णग्रीवो रक्तशिराः श्वेतपक्षो विहङ्गम। स वै वार्ध्राणस मोक्ष इत्येषा नैगमी श्रुतिः॥' Several forms are met with in printed works viz वार्ध्राणस or वार्ध्राणस or वार्ध्रीणस The दीपकलिका gives the two explanations of वार्ध्रीनस (this is the reading of the printed work) as a white goat and as a bird.

fish called 'śatabali' and the flesh of a Vārddhrīnasa. Vas. XI. 34 contains the following remarkable verse: 'an ascetic, when invited in a rite for the gods or pitṛs, who avoids (does not partake of) flesh, dwells in Hell for as many years as the number of hair (on the body of the animal whose flesh he avoids).' Even the Visnudharmottarapurāna (I. 140. 49–50) emphatically asserts that he who does not partake of flesh-food in a row of diners at a śrāddha which has been properly employed goes to hell Manu V. 35 and Kūrma II. 17.40 contain a similar verse applicable to all those who are invited as brāhmanas at a śrāddha The Kūrmapurāna II. 22.75 provides that the brāhmana who is employed for the performance of a śrāddha and does not eat flesh offered therein becomes a beast for 21 births. Manu III. 257 states that the following are said to be proper offerings in a śrāddha by their very nature viz. food (prepared from nīvāra grain and the like) fit for a forest hermit, milk, soma juice, flesh that does not emit foul smell and unmanufactured salt. An ascetic was ordinarly required not to partake of flesh; but Vasistha insisted on his partaking of it when invited at a śrāddha.

Manu III. 267–272, Yāj. I. 258–260, Visnu Dh. S. 80 1 ff, Anuśāsanaparva chap. 88, the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyan (kandikās. 7–8), Kūrmapurāna II. 20. 40–42, 29. 2–8, Vāyu 83. 3–9, Matsya 17. 31–35, Visnupurāna III. 16.1–3, Padmapurāna (Srsti 9. 158–164), Brahmapurāna 220 23–29, Visnudharmottara I 141.42–47 state at length the periods of time for which pitrs are gratified by the flesh of certain animals being served at śrāddha. The verses of Yāj being the shortest in all these works are given below. Yāj.[952] states; Pitrs are gratified by the serving of sacrificial food (such as rice, fruits, roots & c) for a month, for a year by (cows's milk or) rice cooked in cow's milk, for 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 months respectively by the flesh of fishes (pāthīna), of (red coloured) deer, of ram, of a bird (such as a tittiri), of a goat, of a spotted deer, of a dark-coloured deer, of a ruru deer, of a wild boar, of a hare the offering of rhinoceros flesh, of a fish called Mahāśalka, o

952. हविष्यान्नेन वै मासं पायसेन तु वत्सरम्। मात्स्यहारिणकौरभ्रशाकुनच्छागपार्षतैः। ऐणरौरवबाराहशाशैर्मासैर्यथाक्रमम्। मासवृद्ध्याभितृप्यन्ति दत्तैरिह पितामहाः। खड्गामिषं महाशल्कं मधु सुन्यक्तमेव वा। लौहामिषं महाशाकं मांसं वार्ध्रीणसस्य च॥ यद्ददाति गयास्थश्च सर्वमानन्त्यमश्नुते। या I 258–261. महाशाकं is explained as कालशाकं by the मिता क्षरा, while the स्मृतिच (श्रा p. 431) frankly admits that it does not know what कालशाक is. 'कालशाक कीदृशमिति न विद्मः॥'

honey, of food fit for hermits (wild corn such as nīvāra), the flesh of a red goat, of Mahāśāka (i. e. Kālaśāka), and the flesh of Vārdhrīnasa—these secure inexhaustible fruit There is some divergence of views among the several works. For example, Manu III. 267 and 271, Kātyāyana (in śrāddhasūtra 7) appear to hold that by offering food prepared from village corn (such as rice, māsa & c.) or wild eatables (such as nīvāra or fruits and roots) the gratification is only for one month and the flesh of Vārdhrīṇasa produces gratification for twelve years only (and not for all time). Visnu Dh. S. 80.10 and Manu III. 270 bring in buffalo flesh and tortoise flesh as giving gratification for ten and eleven month respectively. Hemādri (on śrāddha p 590)[953] is careful to point out that these words about the duration of time are not to be taken literally but what is really intended is to convey greater and greater gratification of the pitrs according to the kind of flesh offered. Pulastya quoted by the Mit and Aparārka p. 555 provides that a brāhmana should generally or mainly offer at a śrāddha hermit's food, a ksatriya or a vaiśya should offer flesh, a śūdra should offer honey and all varnas may offer anything else (except these three) which is not forbidden.[954] Whoever may be the offerer, the eater at a śrāddha dinner was to be a brāhmana alone and so it follows that brāhmanas invited to a śrāddha by a ksatriya or vaiśya had to eat flesh. Yet it is remarkable that even the Mitāksarā and the Kalpataru written about 1100–1120 A. D. do not expressly say that in the Kali age flesh-eating at śrāddha is totally prohibited at least for brāhmanas. It has been shown already (H. of Dh. vol III. pp. 775–776) that even when animal sacrifices were the order of the day in the Rgveda and the Brāhmanas there was an undercurrent of thought that the offerings of fuel-sticks or of boiled rice when made with heart-felt devotion to the gods were as good as flesh offerings for securing their favour. In course of time that conception grew stronger and stronger, so much so that Manu (V. 27–44 and V. 46–47) and Vasistha appear to be in two minds (vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 778–780). Gradually the offering of flesh in Madhuparka and in śrāddhas came to be totally condemned in works of the 12th and 13th centuries and onwards as a matter prohibited in the Kali age (Varātithipitṛbhyaśca paśūpākaranakriyā). (Vide H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 945–946 and p. 964). Now except among the brāhmanas (in Northern India) who have no objection to include fish in diet as permissible to them no brāhmana offers flesh in śrāddha. The usage of Northern India would be in accordance with the view set out in Brhannāradīya purāna that one should offer honey, flesh and other things according to the usage of the country, as explained by the Prthvīcandrodaya.

953. इह सर्वत्र भौत्यतिशयो विवक्षित.। न तु यथाश्रुत एव काल । तथा सति द्वादशवर्षपर्यन्तं पितॄणां तृप्तत्वात् श्राद्धाकरणे प्राप्ते सति न 'प्रतिवर्षं यत्नात्कार्यम्' इत्येतद्वचन विरुध्यत इति हरिहरादय.। हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 590)

954. अत्र यद्यपि मुन्यन्नमांसमध्वादीनि सर्ववर्णानां सामान्येन श्राद्धे योग्यानि दर्शितानि तथापि पुलस्त्योक्ता व्यवस्थादरणीया। मुन्यन्नं ब्राह्मणस्योक्तं मांसं क्षत्रियवैश्ययो.। मधुप्रदानं शूद्रस्य सर्वेषां चाविरोधि यत्। मिता on या I 260, तथा च श्राद्धप्रकरणे बृहन्नारदीये यथाचारं प्रदेयं तु मधुमांसादिकं तथा—इति। तथा मांसादनं तथा श्राद्धे इति कलिवर्ज्यनियमाभिधाय देशाचाराः परिग्राह्यास्तद्देशीयजैर्नरै. । अन्यथा पतितो ज्ञेय. सर्वधर्मबहिष्कृत. ॥—इति तत्रैवाग्यत्राभिहितत्वात् । पृथ्वीचंद्रोदय on श्राद्ध (folio 416) quoting नारदीयपुराण.

Manu (V.11–18) contains long lists of animals, birds and fishes whose flesh was not to be eaten even by those who were flesh-eaters.

If a person is destitute, some of the Purānas such as the Visnu (III. 4.24–30) and the Varāha (13.53–58) mercifully provide in identical[955] verses that instead of entertaining brāhmanas with a sumptuous dinner or flesh the poor man may offer only uncooked corn, or some vegetables growing wildly or some slight daksinā if he cannot offer even uncooked food or vegetables, or he may offer a few grains of sesamum (7 or 8) to a brāhmana with water in his folded hands, or grass to a cow enough for one day and if he cannot afford even any one of these, then he may repair to a thicket of trees, raise his arms so that his armpits are exposed and loudly address the guardians of the worlds such as the Sun in the following words: 'I have neither wealth nor money nor anything else fit to be offered by way of śrāddha; I bow to my pitrs; may the pitrs be satisfied by my devotion; I have stretched these arms in space!' (lit. the path of the wind).

955. असमर्थोऽदानस्य धान्यं मांसं स्वशक्तितः।...सर्वाभावे वनं गत्वा कक्षमूलमदर्शकः। सूर्यादिलोकपालानामिदमुच्चै: पठिष्यति॥ न मेऽस्ति वित्तं न धनं न चान्यच्छ्राद्धस्य योग्यं स्वपितॄन्नतोऽस्मि। तृप्यन्तु भक्त्या पितरो मयैतौ भुजौ ततौ वर्त्मनि मारुतस्य॥ वराहपुराण 13. 57–58 = विष्णुपुराण III. 14. 29–30, q by मद. पा pp. 515–16 from विष्णु and by निर्णयसिन्धु III p. 467 from both This passage explains the origin and the present meaning of the Marathi phrase खाका वर करणें बृहत्पराशर (chap. 5 p 152) has similar provisions. The पृथ्वी० (folio 56 b) notes 'धान्यं मासमित्यत्र वर्ज्यं शाकमिति वराहपुराणीयः पाठ'; in the printed विष्णुपुराण the reading is not धान्यं मासं, but the निर्णयसिन्धु had these words and it appears that the text was tampered with in modern times.

It is now time to describe the procedure of the Pārvaṇa-śrāddha[955a] which is the pattern or norm (prakṛti) of the other śrāddhas[956] (even including the Aṣṭakās). Here one meets with great divergences of views even from the times of the sūtras up to modern times. Though the main items and stages in the rite of śrāddha are generally the same, there is variation in the mantras, the details and sometimes in the order of the several items. Kātyāyana lays down that every man has to follow his own sūtra as to the use of the word 'svāhā' or the words 'svadhā namaḥ', as to wearing the sacred thread in the yajñopavīta or prācīnāvīta way and as to the number of āhutis[957].

It would be very interesting first to find out the vestiges of the sacrifice to the fathers in the most ancient Vedic texts. The Tai. S. (I. 8 5. 1–2) deals[958] with the Mahāpitṛyajña per-955 a. Terms already explained such as 'Pārvaṇa' and 'Ekoddiṣṭa' are not explained again. Vide n. 855 above for those two words Śrāddha on amāvāsyā is obligatory (nityā) as laid down by Gaut 15 1 q. in note 935 above while the śrāddhas performed on the other tithis of the dark half of a month are kāmya.

956. The अनाकुला of हरदत्त on आप. गृ 21.1 states 'पुनरपि पाकयज्ञानन्तरं पुरुषत्रयसंमदानकं वाङ्नामानक्कादीनां प्रकृतिभूतं नास्तिक्यंशकं पित्र्यं कर्मोपदिश्यते.'

957. तथा च कात्यायनः। स्वाहा स्वधा नमः सम्यगपसव्यं तथैव च। आहुतीना तु या संख्या सादगम्या स्वसूत्रत Il q. by नद्. पा p. 392, स्मृतिच. (आ p 458). हेमाद्रि (आ p 356) says 'एते देवादिविधयो महीयेषु कल्पसूत्रग्रन्थेष्वुक्तास्ते तदीया एवेति व्यवस्थया बोद्धव्या'।

958. सोमाय पितृमते पुरोडाशं एकपालं निर्वपति पितृभ्यो बर्हिषद्भ्यो धानाः पितृभ्योऽग्निष्वात्तेभ्योऽभिन्यार्यै दुग्धे मन्थमेतत्ते त्त पे च त्वामन्वेतत्ते पितामह मपितामह पे च त्वामन्वत्र पितरो यथाभागं मन्दध्वं सुसंहृतं त्वा वयं मघवन्निन्द्रियानिहे। प्र यूयं पूर्णवन्धुरः स्थात्रो यात्ति वर्हा अहु। योजा न्विन्द्र ते हरी। अक्षन्नमीमदन्त ह्यव प्रिया अधूषत। अस्तोषत स्वभानवो विप्रा नविष्ठया मती। योजा न्विन्द्र ते हरी। अक्षन् पितरोऽमीमदन्त पितरोऽमीतृपन्त पितरोऽमीमृजन्त पितरः। परेत पितरः सोम्या गम्भीरैः पथिभिः पूर्व्यैः। अधा पितॄन् सुविदत्राँ अपीत यमेन ये सधमादं मदन्ति॥ तै. सं I.8 5. 1–2. सायण explains अभिन्यार्या दुग्धवत्सा धेनुः। क्षीरे पर्याप्टे मन्थिन्य निश्रीकृतं द्रव्यं मन्थ। सायण quotes तै ब्रा I. 6 8 'अभिन्यार्यै दुग्धे भवति सा हि पितृदेवत्यं दुहे' and explains 'सूता· पुरुषाः पितरो भवन्ति। अभिन्या च वृषवत्सेति सजातीयत्वाच्च तेषां प्रीतिः'. The milk of an अभिन्या cow is kept in a vessel in which are put half-ground barley grains, then the milk is stirred once or thrice with a piece of sugarcane to which a string is tied. This preparation is called मन्थ Vide मैत्रायणीसंहिता I 10 17 (चतुर्थे मन्थस्तेन पितृयज्ञोऽभिन्याया गोर्दुग्धे स्यात्.. इक्षुशलाकयोपनद्यति) and आप. श्रौ 8.14 14. The Tai Br. (I. 6. 8–9) expounds the above Tai. S passage in its own way. The two verses सुसंहृतं and अक्षन्नमीमदन्त are वाज. सं III. 52 and 51 and are the same as तै. सं. I. 10 3. तै ब्रा. II. 6 16 brings together the mantras employed in पिण्डपितृयज्ञ as याज्या, पुरोनुवाक्या or सामिधेनी verses.

formed in Sākamedha, the third of the four Cāturmāsyas: "He offers to Soma accompanied by the pitrs a cake baked on six potsherds, to the pitrs Barhisadah (sitting on darbha grass or in a yajña) fried grains, for the pitrs called Agnisvātta he milks a drink from a cow which has to be won over (to another calf). This for thee, O father and for those who come after thee (i. e. for thy descendants); this for thee, O grandfather, great-grandfather and for those who come after thee; do, ye Pitrs rejoice in your portions. May we gladden thee, O Indra, that castest thy glance at us, come forth now with full chariot seat; being praised (by us) thou goest to places desired by you. Yoke, O Indra, thy two bay steeds. They (pitarah) have eaten, they have rejoiced, the dear ones have dispelled (evil); the radiant sages have been praised with newest hymn, Yoke, O Indra, thy two bay steeds. The pitrs have eaten, the pitrs have rejoiced, the pitrs have been glad, the pitrs have purified themselves. Go away, O Pitrs, that art soma-loving by your majestic ancient paths. Then reach ye the pitrs that well know you (or everything) and that revel in the company of Yama."

In the Tai.[959] Br. I. 2 10 the Pindapitryajña is dealt with at some length. In the note below the important passages are set forth leaving out the legends, repetitions and matters not relevant to our purpose: "Therefore the rite (called pindapitryajña) is performed the day previous (to the Darśeṣṭi),

---

959. तस्मात्पितृभ्यः पूर्वेद्यु क्रियते।...सोमाय पितृपीताय स्वधा नम इत्याह।...अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इत्याह। य एव पितृणामग्निस्तं प्रीणाति। तिस्र आहुतीर्जुहोति त्रिर्निदधाति षट्सम्पद्यन्ते। षड् वा ऋतव। ऋतूनेव प्रीणाति।...ऋतवः खलु वै देवा. पितरः।... सकृदाच्छिन्नं बर्हिर्भवति। सकृदिव हि पितरः। त्रिर्निदधाति। तृतीये वा इतो लोके पितरः। तानेव प्रीणाति। पराङावर्तते। ह्रीका हि पितर.। ओष्मणो व्यावृत्त उपास्ते। उष्मभागा हि पितरः।... अवभ्रेयमेव तत्रैव प्राशितं नेवाप्राशितम्। वीरं वै पितर. प्रयन्तो हरन्ति। वीरं वा ददति। दक्षां छिनत्ति। हरणभागा हि पितर.। पितृनेव निरवदयते। उत्तर आयुषि लोम छिन्दीत। पितृणामेतर्हि नेदीय.। नमस्करोति। नमस्कारो हि पितृणाम्। नमो वः पितरो रसाय नमो वः पितरः शुष्माय। नमो वः पितरो जीवाय। नमो व. पितरः स्वधायै। नमो वः पितरो मन्यवे। नमो वः पितरो घोराय। पितरो नमो वः।. एष वै मनुष्याणां यज्ञः। देवानां वा इतरे यज्ञाः। तै ब्रा I. 3. 10. 1–10. The words नमो व पितरो रसाय to पितरो घोराय occur in वाज. सं. II. 32 and मै स I, 10. 3 but in a slightly different order and वाज सं. reads शोषाय for शुष्माय It may be noted that though the तै. ब्रा. speaks of three āhutis it mentions only two deities; the third is supplied by the सूत्रकार in the words यमायाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते स्वधा नम.। Vide note 781 above. On 'देवा. पितरः' सायण says 'द्विविधा हि पितरः देवात्मका मनुष्यात्मकाश्च। पितृलोकस्वामिनो देवात्मकाः। मृताः सन्तो भोगार्थलोकं प्राप्ता मनुष्यात्मकाः।'. On वीरं...ददति, सायण explains 'वैकल्ये पुत्रं मारयन्ति साकल्ये पुत्रं प्रयच्छन्ति। अत्र वैकल्यस्य दुष्परिहरत्वेन पुत्रप्रत्याम्नायत्वेन वक्राग्रमीषत्सूत्रं छित्वा पिण्डेषु निदध्यात्।'.

He says 'to Soma drunk by the pitrs, svadhā! Adoration!' He says 'to Agni, the carrier of kavya, svadhā! Adoration! (Thereby) he pleases the fire that pertains to the pitrs. He offers (into fire) three oblations; he puts down (on the darbhas spread on the ground) three pindas. (These) thus come to six in number. Six indeed are the seasons. He (thereby) pleases the seasons The seasons are indeed the shining (or divine) pitrs.....The darbha grass is cut with one stroke; the pitrs have as it were (passed away) once for ever. He puts down thrice (the pindas) The pitṛs are indeed in the third world from here. He (thereby) pleases them. He (the performer) turns his face away (to the north from the south), for the Fathers are shy. He remains with his face turned away till the steam (of the boiled rice of the pindas) ceases to rise, for the Fathers have the steam of rice as their share; he should simply smell (the piṇḍas). That as if does not amount to eating or non-eating. The pitṛs when departing (from the śrāddha rite) take away or grant a valiant son. He cuts off the fringe (of a garment to place it on the piṇḍas), for the share of Fathers is taking away (what is offered). He (thereby) allots their proper share to the pitrs (and dismisses them). When (the performer) is in the latter part of life (i e. over 50 years of age) he cuts off hair (from his chest instead of presenting a daśā) At that time he is nearer to the pitrs (when above 50 years of age). He offers adoration, because adoration (namaskāra) is dear to the pitrs. Adoration to you, O Fathers, for vigour; adoration to you, O fathers, for life, adoration to you, O fathers, for svadhā, adoration to you, O fathers, for ardour; adoration, O fathers, for the terrible! O fathers! here is adoration to you. This (piṇḍapitryajña) is indeed a sacrifice of men (i e. sacrifice to departed men) and other sacrifices belong to the gods" In the Tai Br. I 4 10 the Pitryajña performed in sākameḍha is praised (in 2) and further on it is said that Ṛtus (seasons) are pitrs and they offered pitryajña to Prajāpati, their father. This passage supports the provision made in Manu and some of the digests that the Ṛtus are to be identified with pitrs and obeisance is to be made to them.[960]

960 तस्मात्साकमेधैर्यजमान. इष्ट्वावस्तरीणां स्वस्तिमाशास्त इत्याशासीत। यत्पितृयज्ञेन यजते देवानेव तद्भ्रूवस्पति। 2...अथर्तवः पितर. प्रजापतिं पितरं पितृयज्ञेनायजन्त। त एतं लोकमजयन् यस्मिन्नृतव.। यत्पितृयज्ञेन यजते एतमेव लोकं जयति यस्मिन्नृतव.। ऋतूनामेव साङ्ग्यमुपैति। तै ब्रा. I 4 10.8 The word पितृयज्ञ here and in तै सं III. 2 2 3, मै. सं. I.10 17 (यद्वेष पितृयज्ञस्तेनैवास्य पितरोऽभीष्टा प्रीता भवन्ति) means a sacrifice

(Continued on the next page)

The Śat. Br. (II. 4. 2) contains the following somewhat fuller account of the Piṇḍa-pitryajña, omitting legendary or other irrelevant matters —When the moon is not seen either in the east or in the west, then he (the performer of the Darśa sacrifice) presents food to the Fathers in each month ..... He presents it in the afternoon. The forenoon indeed belongs to the gods; the midday to men; and the afternoon to the Fathers; therefore he presents (food to the Fathers) in the afternoon. While seated behind the Gārhapatya fire with his face turned towards the south and the sacred thread on his right shoulder he takes that material (for the offering from the cart). Thereupon he rises from thence and threshes the rice while standing north of the Dakṣina fire and facing the south. Only once does he clean the rice, for it is once for all that the fathers have passed away. He then boils it. While it stands on (the Dakṣina fire) he pours some clarified butter on it. After removing it (from the fire) he offers to the gods two oblations in the fire ..... Here he is engaged in a sacrifice to the Fathers; hence he thereby propitiates the gods and being permitted by the gods, he presents that food to the Fathers. He offers to both Agni and Soma .. He offers with the formula 'To Agni, the carrier of kavya (what is offered to the Manes), svāhā!', 'To Soma accompanied by the Fathers, svāhā!' (Vāj S. II 29). He then puts the pot-ladle (mekṣaṇa) on the fire, that being in lieu of the Svistakṛt. Thereafter he draws (with the sphya, the wooden sword) one line south of the Dakṣina fire, that being in lieu of the altar. He then lays down a firebrand at the further (south) end of the line. For, were he to present that food to the Fathers without having laid down a firebrand, the Asuras and Rākṣasas would certainly tamper with it. ... He lays it down with the text 'whatsoever Asuras roam about being attracted by the svadhā (offering to Fathers), assuming various shapes, be they large-bodied or small-bodied, may Agni expel them from this world (Vāj S. II 30) ... He then takes the water jar and makes the Fathers wash (their hands) merely saying 'N. N., wash thyself' (naming) the sacrificer's father; 'N. N. wash thyself (naming the sacrificer's) grandfather; 'N. N., wash thyself offered to the manes, while it is doubtful whether in Ṛg X. 16. 10 the word पितृयज्ञ means the same thing But as the verse that immediately follows (Ṛg. X. 16 11) mentions pitṛs in the plural, it looks as if the meaning of पितृयज्ञ being well known was used in a secondary sense in Ṛg. X. 16.10.

---

(Continued from the last page)

(naming) the sacrificer's great-grandfather. As one would pour out water (for a guest) when he is about to take food, so in this case. Now those (stalks of sacrificial grass) are severed with one stroke and cut off near the root; the top belongs to the gods, the middle part to men and the root part (of darbhas) to the fathers. Therefore they are cut off near the roots ..... He spreads them along with the line with their tops towards the south. Thereon he presents (to the fathers the three round cakes of rice). He presents thus:— for the gods they offer thus for men they ladle out; and in the case of the fathers they do in this very way; therefore he presents (the cakes to the fathers) thus With 'N. N., this for thee!' he presents one cake to the sacrificer's father. Some add 'for those that come after thee', but let him not say this, since he himself is one of those to whom it would be offered in common. Let him therefore merely say 'N. N., this for thee!' as to the sacrificer's father; 'N. N., this for thee' as to his grandfather; 'N N., this for thee' as to his great-grandfather He then mutters 'Here, O fathers, regale yourselves; like bulls come hither each to his own share!' (Vāj. S. II. 31). Whereby he says 'Eat each his own share'. He then turns round to the left so as to face the opposite (north) side; for the fathers are far away from men; and thereby he also is far away (from the fathers). 'Let him remain (standing with bated breath) until his breath fail' say some; 'for thus far extends the vital energy'. However, having remained so far a moment—he again turns round (to the right) and mutters 'the Fathers have regaled themselves; like bulls they have come each to his own share' (Vāj. S. II. 31); whereby what he says is 'they have eaten each his own share'. Thereupon he takes the water jar and makes them wash themselves (by pouring water on the pindas), merely saying 'N. N., wash thyself' (naming) the sacrificer's father; 'N. N. wash thyself' (naming) his grandfather; 'N. N., wash thyself' (naming) his paternal great-grandfather. Even as one would pour out (water for a guest). When he has taken his meal, so it is here. He then pulls down the tuck (of the sacrificer's garment) and performs obeisance. The tuck is sacred to the Fathers; therefore he performs obeisance to them after pulling down the tuck. ... Six times he performs obeisance, for there are six seasons and the fathers are the seasons. He mutters 'Give us houses, O fathers', for the fathers are the rulers of houses; and this is the prayer for blessing at this sacrificial performance. After the pindas have been put back (in a dish) the sacrificer smells at (the rice); this (smelling) being the sacrificer's share. The stalks of darbha cut with one stroke he puts on the fire; and he also throws away the firebrand on to the fire.[960a]

It will be noticed that many of the fundamental conceptions of a pārvaṇa-śrāddha are very clearly brought out in the Śat. Br. Wearing the sacred thread on the right shoulder, afternoon as the proper time, cleansing the paddy only once, boiling the rice on the Daksina fire, offering into the same fire two oblations to the gods first, the two formulas of presentation to Agni Kavyavāhana and to Soma Pitrmat, drawing a line or furrow to the south of the Dakṣiṇa fire, laying down a firebrand, making the three paternal ancestors wash (avanejana),[961] darbha grass severed from near the root, spreading the darbhas on the line or furrow and offering three pindas to the three ancestors to regale themselves, turning away from the pindas for a moment and then resuming his position and saying that the ancestors have regaled themselves, offering water for washing (pratyavanejana), pulling down the tuck and performing obeisance six times (and identifying the Fathers with seasons) and praying to the Fathers to bestow houses, smelling the boiled rice, throwing the darbhas and firebrand into the fire—these are the principal matters even now in the Pārvaṇa-śrāddha performed by students of the Śukla Yajurveda, although several other details (such as the introduction of the mother's paternal ancestors) and some mantras are added. The Kātyāyana Śr. IV. 1. closely follows the Śat. Br., but adds certain details viz. he folds his hands and repeats the six mantras (Vāj. S. II. 32 'namo vah pitaro rasāya' &c) throwing three threads on each pinda with the mantra 'etadvah' (Vāj. S. II. 32) or the woollen fringe of a garment or hair from the chest of the sacrificer when he is beyond fifty years of age, sprinkling water on the pindas or on the ground near them with (Vāj. S II. 34)[962].

960 a अथैनं (प्रजापतिं) पितरः प्राचीनावीतिनः सव्यं जान्वाच्योपासीदंस्तानब्रवीन्मासि मासि वोऽन्न स्वधा वो मनो जवो वश्चन्द्रमा वो ज्योतिरिति। शतपथ II. 4. 2 2... मासि मास्येव पितृभ्यो ददतो यदैवैष न पुरस्तान्न पश्चाद्दृष्टस्तेऽथैभ्यो ददाति...(7)।...स वा अपराह्णे ददाति पूर्वाह्णो वै देवाना मध्यन्दिनो मनुष्याणामपराह्ण पितृणां तस्मादपराह्णे ददाति। स जघनेन गार्हपत्यं प्राचीनावीती भूत्वा दक्षिणासीन एतं गृह्णाति। स तत एवोपोत्थायोत्तरेणाग्नाहार्यपचनं दक्षिणा तिष्ठन्नवहन्ति सकृत् फलीकरोति सकृद्धु ह्येव पराञ्च पितरस्तस्मात्सकृत् फलीकरोति। (9) तं अपयति तस्मिन्नधिश्रित आज्यं प्रत्यानयति...। (10) स उद्धास्याग्नौ द्वे आहुती जुहोति देवेभ्य.।.. अथैतत्पितृयज्ञेनैवाचरति्. .स देवैः मनूतोऽथैतत्पितृभ्यो ददाति। ... (11) स वाग्नये सोमाय च जुहोति ..। (12) स जुहोति। अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहेत्यग्नौ मेक्षणमभ्यादधाति तस्त्विष्टकृद्धाजनमथ दक्षिणेनान्वाहार्यपचन सकृद्धुलिखति तद्वेदिभाजनम्...। (13) अथ परस्ताद्धुल्लुकं निदधाति। स यदनिधायोल्लुकमथैतत्पितृभ्यो दद्यादसुररक्षसानि हैषामेतद्विमथ्नीरन्..। (14) स निदधाति। ये रूपाणि प्रतिमुञ्चमाना असुराः सन्तः स्वधया चरान्ति। परापुरो निपुरो ये भरन्त्यग्नेष्टाँल्लोकात्प्रणुदात्यस्मादिति।...। (15) अथोदपात्रमादायावनेजयति। असाववनेनिक्ष्वेत्येव यजमानस्य पितरमसाववनेनिक्ष्वेति पितामहमसाववनेनिक्ष्वेति प्रपितामहं तद्यथाक्षिण्यंतेऽभिपिञ्चेदेवं तत्। (16) अथ सकृदग्निच्छिन्नान्युपमूलं छिनानि भवन्ति अग्रमिव वै देवाना मध्यमिव मनुष्याणा मूलमिव पितृणां तस्मादुपमूलं छिनाने भवन्ति. । (17) तानि दक्षिणोपस्तृणाति। तत्र ददाति स वा इति ददातीतीव वै देवेभ्यो जुह्वत्युद्धरन्ति मनुष्येभ्योऽथैवं पितृणां तस्मादिति ददाति। (18) स ददाति। असावेतत्त इत्येव यजमानस्य पित्रे ये च त्वामन्वित्थ हैक आहुस्तदु तथा न ब्रूयात्स्वं वै तेषा सह तेषा सह। तस्मादु ब्रूयादसावेतत्त इत्येव यजमानस्य पित्रेऽसावेतत्त इति पितामहायासावेतत्त इति प्रपितामहाय...। (19) तत्र जपति। अत्र पितरो मादयध्वं यथाभागमावृषायध्वमिति यथाभागमश्नीतेत्येवैतदाह। (20) अथ पराङ् पर्यावर्तते। तिर इव वै पितरो मनुष्येभ्यस्तिर इवैतदञ्चति स वा आतमितोरासीतेत्याहुरेतावान्ह्यसुरिति स वै मुहूर्तमेवासित्वा। (21) अथोपपक्षौ जपति। अमीमदन्त पितरो यथाभागमावृषायिषतेति यथाभागमावृषायिषुरित्येवैतदाह। (22) अथोदपात्रमादायावनेजयति। असाववनेनिक्ष्वेत्येव यजमानस्य पितरमसाववनेनिक्ष्वेति पितामहमसाववनेनिक्ष्वेति प्रपितामहं तद्यथा जक्षुरेऽभिपिञ्चेदेवं तत्। (23) अथ नीविमुद्धृत्य नमस्करोति। पितृदेवत्या वै नीविस्तस्मान्नीविमुद्धृत्य नमस्करोति...षट्कृत्वा नमस्करोति षड्वा ऋतव ऋतवः पितर ...गृह्णाः पितरो दत्तेति गृह्णाणां ह पितर ईशते। एषो एतस्याशीः कर्मणोऽश्नाजिघ्रति मत्यवधाय पिण्डान् स यजमानभागोऽग्नौ सकृदग्निच्छिन्नान्यभ्यादधाति पुनरुल्लुकमपि मृजति। (24).

The other saṁhitās also contain identical mantras. For example, the Vāj. S. II. 29-34[963] are mantras most of which are

961. On 'wash thyself' the com. on kātyā śrau sū IV. 1. 10 says 'अपसव्यं यथा स्यात् हस्तस्य सव्यप्रदेशाद्दक्षिणप्रदेशेनोदकनिनयनं यथा स्यात्तथाङ्गुष्ठप्रदेशिन्योरन्तरालेनावनेजयति अवानिक्ताञ् शुचीन् करोति पिण्डदानाय। असाविति सम्बुद्ध्यन्तगोत्रनामादेशपूर्वक, अमुकसगोत्र यजमानस्य पितरमुकशर्मन्नवनेनिक्ष्व'. Some other sūtra-Āāras provide अमुकगोत्र for अमुकसगोत्र

962. About the use of the words 'those that come after thee' vide n. 781 for the Tai. S passage where those words are employed and also notes 1040, 1052, 1053. 'He presents them thus'—When the pinda is to be offered to the Fathers it is done with the pitṛtīrtha (the part of the hand between the thumb and forefinger) This is indicated by the teacher by means of a gesture 'He then pulls down the tuck—' The sacrificer (or adhvaryu) puts on an upper garment when the rite commences, the daśā or unwoven edge of which he tucks under the waistband. This he loosens or pulls out at this stage It will have been noticed that the Sat. Br. in dealing with Piṇḍapitṛyajña employs Vāj. S II. 29 (except 'apahatā asurā rakṣāṁsi vediṣadaḥ'), 30, 31.

963. अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा। अपहता असुरा रक्षांसि वेदिषदः॥ ये रूपाणि॥...मग्दुदात्यस्मात्॥ अत्र पितरो मादयध्वं...तृपायिषत॥ नमो व पितरो रसाय.. नमो वः पितरो मन्यवे नमो व पितरः पितरो नमो वो गृहान्न पितरो दत्त सतो employed in the Pindapitryajña in Sākamedha[964]. Similarly, in the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā[965] I. 10.3. 10–21 these are mantras for the pitryajña employed in Sākamedha many of which are the same as in Vāj. S. or Tai. Br. M. S. I. 10. 3.11 is the same as Vāj. S. III 52 and M. S. I. 10, 3. 17–20 are the same as Vāj. S. III. 51, 53–55. M. S. I. 10. 3. 13–14 greatly resemble Vāj. S. II. 32 and Tai. Br. I. 3. 10. 8.

(Continued on the next page)

Coming to the sūtra literature, it is best to begin with the procedure of pārvaṇaśrāddha as described in the Āśv. gṛ. IV. 7–8[966]. It is stated by the Anākulā on Āp. gṛ. 21.1 that the वः पितरो देष्मैतद्वः पितरो वास आधत्त॥ आधत्त.. सत्॥ ऊर्जं वहन्तीरमृतं घृतं पयः कीलालं परिस्रुतम्। स्वधा स्थ तर्पयत मे पितॄन्॥ वाज सं. II 29–34 The verse ये रूपाणि and the mantras अत्र . तृपायिषत are quoted above in n. 960a from the शतपथब्रा For नमो व. पितरो, vide n. 959 and for आधत्त ..सत् n 780. Both the commentators, Uvaṭa and Mahīdhara, of Vāj S., hold that rasa, śoṣa and the other four are to be identified with the six seasons from spring (madhu etc.) and some of the digests provide for the worship of ऋतुs in śrāddha in this way. The कात्या. श्रौ सू (V. 9 24–25) states that with this mantra (Vāj. S. II. 32) the performer folds his hands or makes six obeisances Vide Hemādri (Śr pp. 1459–60) who quotes the Vāj S. (II. 32) and Tai. Br and explains them.

---

(Continued from the last page)

964 अक्षन्नमीमदन्त...ते हरी॥ सुसन्दृशं ..ते हरी॥ मनो न्वाह्वामहे नाराशंसेन स्तोमेन। पितॄणां च मन्मभि॥ आ न एतु मनः पुनः क्रत्वे दक्षाय जीवसे। ज्योक् च सूर्यं दृशे॥ पुनर्नः पितरो मनो ददातु दैव्यो जनः। जीवं व्रातं सचेमहि॥ वाज सं III. 51–55. वाज. सं. III. 51–52 are the same as Rg I. 82 2–3.

965. मै सं I 10.3 13–14 are as follows. अमीमदन्त पितरो नमो व पितर इषे, नमो व पितर ऊर्जे, नमो व पितरः शुष्माय, नमो वः पितरो रसाय, नमो वः पितरो यज्जीव तस्मै, नमो व. पितरो यद्धोरं तस्मै, स्वधा व. पितरो नमो नमो वः पितर.। एषा युष्माकं पितर इमा अस्माक जीवा वो जीवन्त इह सन्तः स्याम। Compare also अथर्ववेद 18.4. 81–85.

966. अथात पार्वणे श्राद्धे काम्य आभ्युदयिक एकोद्दिष्टे वा। ब्राह्मणान् श्रुतशील... सर्वेषाम्। काममनाचे। पिण्डैर्व्याख्यातम्। अप. प्रदाय। दर्भान् द्विगुणशुद्धानासनं प्रदाय। अपः प्रदाय। तैजसाश्ममयमृण्मयेषु त्रिषु पात्रेष्वेकत्रयेषु वा दर्भान्तर्हितेष्वप आसिच्य शन्नो देवीरभिष्टय इत्यनुमन्त्रितासु तिलानावपति तिलोऽसि सोमदेवत्यो गोसवे देवनिर्मितः। प्रत्नवद्भिः प्रत्तः स्वधया पितॄन्मौँल्लोकान् प्रीणयाहि नः स्वधा नम् इति प्रसव्येन। इतर पाण्यङ्गुष्ठान्तरेणोपवीतित्वाद् दक्षिणेन वा सव्योपगृहीतेन पितरिदं ते अर्घ्यं पितामहेदं ते अर्घ्यं प्रपितामहेदं ते अर्घ्यमिति। अप्पूर्वम्। ताः प्रतिगृह्यिष्यन्त्सकृत्सकृत् स्वधा अर्घ्या इति। प्रष्टा अनुमन्त्रयेत या दिव्या आपः पृथिवी सम्भवन्त्युर्या अन्तरिक्षा उत पार्थिवीर्या। हिरण्यवर्णा यज्ञियास्ता न आपः शंस्योना भवन्त्विति। संस्रवान्समवनीय ताभिरद्भिः युक्तकामो सुखमनक्ति। नोच्छेत्स्यधर्मं पात्रं पितृणामर्घ्यपातितम्। आवृतास्तत्र तिष्ठन्ति पितरः शौनकोऽब्रवीत्॥ एतस्मिन्काले गन्धमाल्यधूपदीपाच्छादनानां प्रदानम्। उच्छ्रित्य घृताक्तमन्नमनुज्ञापयत्यग्नौ करिष्ये करवै करवाणीति प्रत्यभ्यनुज्ञा क्रियतां कुरुष्व कुर्विति। अथाग्नौ जुहोति यथोक्त पुरस्तात्। अभ्यनुज्ञायां पाणिष्वेव वा। अग्निमुखा वै देवा. पाणिमुखा. पितर इति हि ब्राह्मणम्। यदि पाणिष्वाचान्तेष्वन्यदन्नमनुदिशन्ति अन्नमस्ते। सूदं दत्तभुक्तकामिति। तृप्ताञ्ज्ञात्वा मधुमती श्रावयेदक्षन्नमीमदन्तेति च। सम्पन्नमिति पृष्ट्वा यद्यदन्नमुपभुक्तं तत्तत्स्थालीपाकेन सह पिण्डार्थमुद्धृत्य क्षेमं निवेदयेत्।

(Continued on the next page)

monthly śrāddha (māsi-śrāddha) is the prakṛti of Aṣṭakā and other śrāddhas in which three ancestors are to be invoked. It is as follows: Now then at a Pārvaṇa-śrāddha, or at a śrāddha celebrated for securing some desired object, or at an Ābhyudayika-śrāddha or at an Ekoddiṣṭaśrāddha, the performer causes to sit down brāhmaṇas who are endowed with learning, moral character and proper conduct or who are endowed with (at least) one (of these three characteristics), who have been invited already in proper time, who have taken a bath, whose feet are washed (by the performer) and who have sipped water (taken ācamana), as representatives of (or equal to) the Fathers, with their faces turned to the north, one for each of the Fathers, or two for each or three for each. The larger the number of brāhmaṇas invited the greater is the fruit or reward. But in no case (should he invite) only one for all (the Fathers), or he may invite only one brāhmaṇa except at the first śrāddha [967]. By the exposition of the Piṇḍapitṛyajña the rules for the pārvaṇa-śrāddha have been declared. Having given water (into the hands of the invited brāhmaṇa or brāhmaṇas after they sit down) and double-folded darbha blades as a seat (on which the darbhas are to be kept), having again given water to them and having poured water into three vessels of metal (silver &c.), of stone and of earthenware or into three vessels made of the same substance (out of these three) which are covered over with darbha blades and having recited (over the water in the vessels) the verse 'śanno &c.' (Rg X. 9.4) [968] the performer puts sesamum grains into the water with the mantra "Sesamum art thou, Soma is thy deity, at the Gosava [969]

(Continued from the last page)

अभिमतेऽद्धमते वा शुक्तवत्स्वनाचान्तेषु पिण्डान्निदध्यात् । आचान्तेष्वेके । प्रकीर्याजमुपवीयों स्वधोच्यतामिति विसृजेत् । अस्तु स्वधेति वा । आश्व गृ सू IV 7-8. For the second and third sūtras vide n. 903. कृतपञ्चौचान्-मद्य IV. 76 states आर्द्रपादस्तु भुञ्जीत, which is almost the same as अनुशासनपर्व 104 61-62. The first half of the verse या दिव्या आपः occurs in तै. ब्रा II. 7. 15. 4. The ब्राह्मणसर्वस्व reads प्रलम्भि पृक्त and मीणाहि (folio 78), and explains अद्भिः पृक्त. जलेन मिश्रितः पितॄन् लोकान् पितृपितामहान्-वृन् प्रलं चिरकालं स्वधया स्वधोच्चारणेन प्रीणाहि प्रीतान् कुरु This yields a good sense Different editions of the आश्व. सू number the sūtras differently. Here the Nirn edition of 1894 is relied upon.

967. Vide n 903 above for the several meanings of 'anādye'.

968. The verse is शं नो देवीरभिष्टय आपो भवन्तु पीतये । शंयोरभि स्रवन्तु नः ॥ ऋ. X 9.4. This मन्त्र is recited only once

969. For the गोसव sacrifice, vide H. of Dh vol II. p 1213 n 2644. The mantra about sesamum is repeated over each of the three vessels.

sacrifice thou hast been created by the gods, thou hast been offered by persons who are like ancient ones; through the svadhā mayst thou make the Fathers and these worlds pleased with us! svadhā! Adoration!" The different items of the rite are performed from the right to the left[970]. With the part of the other hand (i. e. left) between the thumb[971] (and forefinger) since he wears the sacred thread over the left shoulder, or with the right which he seizes with the left, (he offers the Arghya water) to Fathers with the words 'Father, this is the arghya for thee; Grand-father, this is the arghya for thee; Great-grand-father, this is the arghya for thee, after first offering (ordinary) water to the Fathers. When about to induce the brāh-

---

970. The rules about Pindapitryajña have been set forth in Āśv. Sr. S. II. 6 Nārāyaṇa notes (on Āśv gr. IV 7 2) that Āśvalāyana treats of only the procedure relating to the rite for pitrs and that he does not at all refer to the dinner given to daiva or Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas at the time of śrāddha It is therefore possible that feeding daiva brāhmanas was added to the ancient ritual, though it must be said that Manu III. 125, Yāj. I. 224–28 and Vas XI. 27 prescribe such feeding. Dr. Caland (in 'Ahnencult' p 161) asserts that he can prove that the detail of feeding daiva brāhmanas spread from the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana to the other sutras and he relies on the fact that Kātyāyana (in Kandikā 2) prescribes that the viśve devāh should be invoked with the verse 'Viśve devāsa āgata' and the performer should mutter the verse 'viśve devāḥ śṛnutemam' which are respectively Vāj S. VII. 34 and XXXIII 53. But Dr. Caland tries to prove too much. The first verse occurs twice in the Rg. (II 41. 13 and VI 52 7) and the second occurs in Rg. VI. 52 13, Tai S II 4 14 5. They are not found only in the Vāj. S as Dr. Caland seems to have thought It is possible that other works took over those mantras from the Rgveda or the Tai S It may also be noted that Yāj. I. 229 mentions only 'Viśve devāsa' and specifies that it is a rk (and not a mantra or yajus). So Yāj. at least does not appear to have borrowed the prescriptions of Kātyāyana. It is not necessary to examine the other arguments.

971 The part of the hand between the thumb and forefinger is called पितृतीर्थ and water is offered by that part of the hand for the pitrs; vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 316 note 652. नारायण explains इतरपाण्यङ्गुष्ठा॰ in two ways as follows: 'येन पाणिना कर्म करोति दक्षिणेन वा सव्येन वा तस्मिन्नंसे यज्ञोपवीते स्थिते प्राचीनावीती भवति ततोऽन्यस्मिन्नंसे स्थिते उपवीती भवति। अत्र सूपवीतित्वात्प्राचीनावीतित्वसिद्ध्यर्थं सव्यपाणिपितृतीर्थेन दातव्यमित्यर्थः। अथवा सव्यपाणे. शिष्टगर्हितत्वाद्दक्षिणं पाणिं सव्येन पाणिना गृहीत्वा दक्षिणेनैव पाणिनोपवीत्येवार्घं प्रयच्छेत् ॥. The कल्पतरु. (on श्रा. p. 148) explains: मसव्येन वामेन हस्तेन। तत्रापि न केवलं वामेनैव अपि तु इतर पाण्यङ्गुष्ठान्तरेण इतरस्य दक्षिणस्य पाणेः अंगुष्ठान्तरेण पितृतीर्थेन। तेनैतदुक्तं भवति। वामहस्तेन अर्घ्यपात्रं भूत्वा दक्षिणहस्तेन पितृतीर्थं संस्पृश्य यथा ब्राह्मणहस्तेषु जलं पतति तथा देयमिति।. अर्घ्य is respectful offering of water or water with husked rice grains, flowers etc to gods or venerable persons.

manas to accept the arghya water he should once only (for each brāhmana or group of brāhmanas for each of the Fathers) say to them 'svadhā! these are arghya waters' and then over the waters that are poured out he recites the verse (separately for each brāhmana) 'The heavenly waters which have been produced on the earth, in the aerial regions and the waters that are terrestrial, that are golden-hued, and fit for sacrifice-may these waters bring us welfare and be favourable to us'. Pouring together (in the first vessel) what has been left in the vessels (for holding arghya water) he anoints his face with that water if he (the performer) desires that a son be born to him. 'He should not remove the first vessel into which the arghya water for the Fathers has been poured (till the end of the rite). The Fathers dwell therein concealed; thus did Śaunaka say'[972]. Just at that time the gifts of sandalwood paste, flowers, incense, lamp, and clothes are to be offered (to the brāhmanas).[973] Having taken some food (from the Sthālīpāka prepared for Pindapitryajña) and smeared it with ghee he asks the brāhmanas' permission in the words 'I shall offer it in the fire' or in the words 'let me offer in the fire'. The permission is given (by the brāhmanas) in the words 'Let it be done' or in the words 'do it'. He then sacrifices in the fire as stated before[974] or (if the brāhmanas give permission) in the hands of the brāhmanas; since the Brāhmana text says 'fire is verily the mouth of the Fathers'. If he offers in the hands of the brāh-972. 'He should not remove etc' नारायण gives two explanations of this verse of Saunaka 'तृतीयेन पात्रेण प्रथमपात्रस्यापिधानमिच्छन्ति। अन्ये तु तत्रोत्तरार्धे सप्तमी। अर्घ्यपतितं प्रथमं पात्रं न्यञ्चिलं कुर्यात् तच्च नोद्धरेदा समाप्तेरिति व्याचख्युः" आश्व. गृ IV. 8 14.

---

973. Gifts of गन्ध etc.—नारायण notes on आश्व. गृ IV, 7. 10 that from अर्घ्यदान up to (excluding) the gift of the five articles गन्ध etc the performer is यज्ञोपवीती (i. e wears the sacred thread on the left shoulder and under the right arm). When giving these he becomes प्राचीनावीती (i. e wears the sacred thread on the right shoulder and under the left arm) manas[975], then he assigns other food to them after they have sipped water and the food (that remains) is mixed with the food that is served to the brāhmanas, since it is said 'what is abandoned and given to (brāhmanas)[976] brings prosperity'. When he sees that the brāhmanas are satiated (with the food served at the dinner) he (the performer) should recite to the brāhmanas the verses containing the word 'madhu' (Rg. I. 90.[977] 6-8) and also the verse 'they have eaten, they have enjoyed themselves' (Rg. I. 82.2). Having asked the brāhmanas 'was the dinner perfect?' (they should reply that it was) and then having taken (portions of) the different foods that were enjoyed by the brāhmanas together with the sthālīpāka food in order[978] to make lumps (pindas) thereof he should present all (the rest of the food) to the brāhmanas. After the brāhmanas have either accepted (the rest of the food) or given him permission (to use it for his family and friends), and after they have finished eating he should, before they have sipped water (performed ācamana after finishing their dinner), put down the lumps[979] (pindas) for the Fathers. According to some teachers (piṇḍas are put down) after the brāhmanas have sipped water (on getting up from the dinner). Having strewn the food on the ground (near the remnants of food) and wearing the sacred thread on his left shoulder[980] he should (after turning the first vessel with top upside and after giving dakṣiṇā to the brāhmanas) bid adieu to the brāhmanas saying 'utter Om!

974 यथोक्तं पुरस्तात् The reference is to आश्व श्रौ सू II. 6. 12 which reads: प्राचीनावीतीध्ममुपसमाधाय मेक्षणेनादायावदानसम्पदा जुहोति। सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इति.' The word अथ in आश्व. गृ IV. 8, 4 indicates that all the items of the पिण्डपितृयज्ञ upto होम (i. e excluding it) are performed before this stage is reached If the performer has no sacred fire and offers into the hands of the brāhmanas the same mantras are employed. The आश्व. श्रौ. सू II. 6.13 allows an option viz the word स्वाहा may be used but then the order of मन्त्रs will be अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा, सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा and he will be यज्ञोपवीती.

---

975. 'If in the hands.' मनु III. 212 provides that if a man has no Smārta fire, he should offer in the hand of the brāhmana only. सुष्टं is explained by हरदत्त and नारायण as प्रभूतम्.

976 On IV. 8. 7. नारायण remarks. अर्थद्वयमत्र विधातुमिष्टमिति गम्यते। तत्राद्यौ कृत्वा भोजनेषु भोजनार्थमन्यदक्षमनुदिशति ददात्येकोऽर्थः। यदि पाणिहोमः कृतस्तदाचान्तेषु अन्यदन्नं ददातीत्यपरः।

977. Rgveda I. 90 6-8 (मधुवाता ऋतायते etc.) are called मधुमती verses because each contains the word मधु several times

978 On 'स्थालीपाकेन सह' नारायण observes 'स्थालीपाकेन सहेति नाम्नापूर्वः स्थालीपाकश्चोद्यते।.. तेन यत्र स्थालीपाको विहितस्तत्र तेन भुक्तशेषेण च पिण्डनिपरणं भवति। यत्र तु स्थालीपाकविधिर्नास्ति तत्र भुक्तशेषेणैव केवलेन निपरणं भवति।'. In some श्राद्ध such as काम्यश्राद्ध, आमुदयिक, अष्टमीश्राद्ध and एकोद्दिष्ट there is no स्थालीपाक.

979. 'He should put down the lumps'. Here आश्वलायन appears to differ from मनु III. 253, 260.

980 The word 'उपवीय' shows that till then the performer was प्राचीनावीती.

Svadhā' or he should say 'Om! Svadhā!' (and they should reply 'Om! Svadhā!'). 980a

From considerations of space it is impossible to set out all the differences among the several grhyasūtras of the Ṛgveda, of the Taittirīya śākhā (viz. Baudhāyana, Āp., Hir., Bharadvāja and Vaikhānasa), of the Vājasaneya śākhā (such as Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana), of the Sāmaveda (such as Gobhila and Khādira) and of the Atharvaveda (being Kauśika sūtra) A few matters may be set out by way of illustration. The Āp. gr. (21. 3–4)[981] states that (after the brāhmaṇas are invited for śrāddha dinner) from the food prepared for the dinner a portion is taken out in a vessel and therefrom seven āhutis are cast into the fire with the seven mantras beginning with 'yan me mātā' (in Āp. M. P. II. 19. 1–7), the first two for the father, the next two for the grand-father, next two for the great-grand-father and the 7th to pitṛs in general with svāhā (but without naming any one) and then six oblations of clarified butter are offered with the six formulas beginning with 'svāhā pitre' (Āp. M. P. II. 19 8–13). Thus the agnaukaraṇa in Āp consists of two parts viz. āhutis of food and of clarified butter, while in Āśv it is made only with food. Then the performer should touch all food (cooked food and the remainder of what is employed for offering into fire) with the three mantras 'esa te tata madhumān' (Āp M. P. II. 19. 14–16), he should make the brāhmaṇas touch the food served to each with the Yajus formula 'the earth is thy vessel' (Āp. M. P. 2. 20. 1) quoted in n. 992 below.

Āp. gr. prescribes the mantra, 'putrān pautrān' (Āp. M. P. II. 20. 24) for moistening the piṇḍas, while Baud. gr. and Vaikhānasa gr. (IV. 6) employ the mantra 'ūrjam vahantīr' (Vāj. S. II. 34) for the same purpose. It may be noted that 980 a. It will be noticed that Āśv. omits several details viz. (1) he does not say that the brāhmaṇas for all the gods are to be seated, facing the east, (2) he mentions no mantra such as 'ye agnidadghā &c.,' (3) nothing is said about dakṣiṇā or about the performer following the brāhmaṇas a few paces and then returning with their permission.

981. The Āp. gr. 20. 9 sets down the whole procedure very succinctly after the brāhmaṇas have taken the dinner as follows: भुक्तवतोऽन्नव्रज्य प्रदक्षिणीकृत्य द्वैधं दक्षिणाग्रान् दर्भान् संस्तीर्य तेषूत्तरैरपो दत्त्वोत्तरैर्दक्षिणापवर्गान् पिण्डान् दत्त्वा पूर्ववदुत्तरैरपो दत्त्वोत्तरैरुपस्थायोत्तरयोदपात्रेण त्रिः प्रसव्यं परिषिच्य न्युब्ज्य पात्राण्युत्तरं यज्ञुरनवानं ब्रूयुरा॰ वर्यमावर्तयित्वा प्रोक्ष्य पात्राणि द्वन्द्वमन्युदाहृत्य सर्वतः समवदायोत्तरेण यज्ञुषा शेषस्य प्राशा॰ वराद्यं प्राश्नीयात्।. The mantras referred to here occur in Āp. M. P. II. 19. 1 to II. 20. 26.

these sūtras which belong to the Taittirīya śākhā employ a verse from another recension viz. the Śukla Yajurveda.

The Hir. Gr. (II. 10–13) is more elaborate than the Āp. Gṛ. and not only sets out at length many of the mantras in Āp. M. P. II. 19–20, but adds some more. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana (1–3) sets out the procedure of the monthly śrāddha almost in the same way as the Yājñavalkyasmṛti (which is set out below). It states that in the monthly śrāddha first come the daiva rites and then the various items occur as in the Pinda-pitryajña 'pindapitryajña-vad-upacārah' (first sūtra of the 2nd kandikā) Some details which it contains (and Yāj. does not expressly mention) may be set out here. It gives in full the mantras 'tilosi', 'yā divyā' (both of which occur in Aśv. gr.), 'prthivī te pātram' (which is Āp. M. P. II. 20.1). It prescribes that in addition to the Gāyatrī and the Madhumatī verses the word 'madhu' should be repeated thrice. The holy texts to be repeated while the brāhmanas are engaged in eating according to Kātyāyana are the Gāyatrī (once or thrice), the five Rākṣoghnī verses (Rg. IV. 4. 1–5, Vāj. S. XIII. 9–13, Tai. S. I 2. 14. 1–2), Puruṣasūkta, the Apratiratha hymn (Rg. X. 103. 1–13 = Vāj. S. 17. 33–34, 46 = Tai. S. IV. 6. 4 1–4) and others. It expressly states that the svadhāvācana (Yāj. I 244) relates to both paternal and maternal ancestors. Besides the blessing contained in Yāj I. 246, Kātyāyana provides that the performer is to pray for and the brāhmanas are to pronounce two more viz. 'May the pitṛs be kind (lit not dreadful) to us' and 'May our family prosper'. Dr Caland in his learned work 'Altindischer Ahnencult' (pp. 150–152) appears inclined to hold that when a sūtrakāra has not actually said anything on certain items in the śrāddha ritual, one has no right to anticipate, on the authority of later authors, that those items existed in the times of that sūtrakāra. I demur to this conclusion. Dr. Caland has attached no weight to the fact that Jaimini (as stated in H. of Dh. vol III p 870) laid down the principle that one may include certain items from another śākhā. Jaimini's sūtras cannot be supposed to have laid down those propositions for the first time. Jaimini's sūtras are at least as old as some of the extant śrauta sūtras such as that of Kātyāyana Therefore hardly any chronological conclusions can be drawn with certainty from the silence of a sūtrakāra as to a certain item in the śrāddha ritual.

We shall now turn to the metrical smṛtis. Manu treats of the procedure of śrāddha at some length in III. 208–265. But as the procedure prescribed by the Yājñavalkyasmṛti (I. 226–249) is more compact and at the same time more lucid it is set out here. "When the invited brāhmanas come in the afternoon the performer having a pavitra[982] in his hand should seat them on seats and make them sip water. The brāhmanas invited should be even in number (2, 4 &c.) according to the performer's resources at the daiva rite (i. e. the Vaiśvadevika brāhmanas should be two, four &c.) and uneven (three or five &c.) at a (pārvana) śrāddha for the pitṛs; the brāhmanas should be seated in a pure (cowdunged) plot screened on all sides and sloping towards the south. At the daiva (part of pārvana-śrāddha when Viśve-devāh are to be invoked) two brāhmanas facing the east should sit down and three brāhmaṇas facing the north should be seated in the rite for the pitṛs or only one may be seated for each (i. e. in daiva and in pitrya). The same rule applies to a śrāddha for maternal ancestors. In both (pitṛśrāddha and mātāmahaśrāddha) the worship of Viśve-devas may be performed separately or simultaneously[983]. Then having poured water on the hands of the brāhmanas (meant for the rite in honour of viśve-devāh) and having given kusa blades for a seat[984] (towards their right side on the seat already 982 For the meaning of pavitra see H of Dh vol II p 657 notes 1553–54. It is a ring-like loop of darbhas to be worn in the right hand or in both hands on the finger next to the little finger. The Mit. supplies that the invited brāhmanas also should have a pavitra The गोभिलस्मृति I, 28 defines it and is quoted by अपरार्क pp 43 and 480.

983. On Yāj I. 228 'तन्त्रं वा', the मिता remarks यदा तु द्वावेव ब्राह्मणौ लब्धौ तदा तु वैश्वदेवे पात्रं प्रकल्प्य उभयत्र एकैकं ब्राह्मणं नियुञ्ज्यात्। यथाह वसिष्ठ । Vide p. 403 above for Vas. 11. 30–31 which the मिता quotes. The विष्णुपुराण III. 15. 16 says. तथा मातामहश्राद्धं वैश्वदेवसमन्वितम्। कुर्वीत भक्तिसम्पन्नं तन्त्र वा वैश्वदेविकम्॥ तन्त्र means उभयोद्देशेन सकृदनुष्ठानम् or as शबर on जै. XI 1 1 explains 'यत् सकृत् हूतं बहूनामुपकरोति तत् तन्त्र यथा बहूनां ब्राह्मणानां मध्ये कृत प्रदीप '. Yāj I 228 contains several options about the number of brāhmanas. तन्त्रं वा–If the three paternal ancestors and the three maternal ancestors are to be invoked in one śrāddha one may separately invite two वैश्वदेवब्राह्मणs for पितृत्रय and two वैश्वदेवब्राह्मणs for मातामहत्रय . or only two ब्राह्मणs may do as वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मणs for both पितृत्रय and मातामहत्रय. Or even one may do as वैश्वदेवब्राह्मण for both

984. For विष्टर (in या I 229), a seat made with 25 darbhas, vide H. of of Dh. vol. II p. 543 n. 1259. The मिता says that in addition to the vedic verse, a smārta verse should be recited for invoking the विश्वेदेवा. viz. 'आगच्छन्तु महाभागा विश्वेदेवा महाबला। ये यत्र विहिता. श्राद्धे सावधाना भवन्तु ते॥'. This verse is स्कन्दपुराण VII 1, 217. 32–33 and गरुडपुराण I 218.7. On p. 478 अपरार्क attributes this स्मार्तमन्त्र to बृहस्पति and to the ब्रह्मपुराण on p. 481. The occupied), he should, with the permission of the invited brāhmanas, invoke the Viśvedevāḥ with the verse 'O! all the gods come!' (Rg. II. 41. 13 or VI. 52. 7; Vāj. S. VII. 34) Having scattered on the ground (near the brāhmanas representing Viśve-devāh) barley grains and then having cast into a vessel (of metal &c) covered with a pavitra water with the verse 'śan no devīr' (Rg. X. 9. 4, Vāj. S 36.12, Tai. Ār. IV. 42.4) and barley grains with the mantra 'Yavosi' (Vāj. S. V. 26, Tai. S. I. 3. 1. 1) and (also sandalwood paste and flowers) he should place in the hands (of the brāhmanas) the arghya[985] water with the verse 'yā divyā' (those heavenly waters &c., Tai. Br. II. 7. 15. 4). Then he should pour water into the hand (of the Vaiśva-deva brāhmana or brāhmanas) for washing the hand and give to them perfumes, flowers, incense, lamp[986] and garment. Then wearing the sacred thread on the right shoulder[987] and

(Continued on next page)

---

(Continued from last page)

कल्पतरु (on श्रा pp. 142, 151) also attributes it to both. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा. p. 1226) quotes it from the ब्रह्मपुराण, while the मद p. 574 quotes it as बृहस्पति's. The मिता notes that this and the following items up to (including) the gift of perfumes and four other things should be done by the performer being यज्ञोपवीती and having his right side towards the brāhmanas "एतच्च यज्ञोपवीतिना प्रदक्षिणं च कार्यं 'अपसव्यं ततः कृत्वा पितृणाममदक्षिणम्' इति पित्र्ये विशेषस्मरणात्।" अपसव्यं तत. कृत्वा—is या. I. 232 latter half. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा pp 1257–58) explains 'प्रदक्षिणादन्यदप्रदक्षिणम्। प्रदक्षिणं नामाभिमुखप्रुरुषवामाङ्गोपलक्षितं प्रदेशं प्रति कर्मणो निर्वहणं यथा पूर्वाभिमुखोपविष्टदैविकपङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यद्विजादारभ्य तत् पङ्क्तिचरमद्विजापवर्गना'

985. 'Arghya water'—The मिता. states 'विश्वेदेवा इदं वो अर्घ्यमित्यर्घ्योदकं विनिक्षिपेत्.' The arghya is to be offered to each ब्राह्मण separately as required by गोभिलस्मृति III 74 'अर्घेऽक्षय्योदके चैव पिण्डदानेऽवनेजने। तन्त्रस्य तु निवृत्तिः स्यात्स्वधावाचन एव च॥' The printed मिता reads the मन्त्र as यवोसि धान्यराजो वा, which is not found in the Vāj. S. or other samhitās. Similarly, the मिता reads the मन्त्र 'या दिव्या आप: पयसा' for अर्घ्य, which is probably Rg. VII. 49 2 with the order of words changed. अपरार्क (p 479) states that if there are two वैश्वदेवब्राह्मणs then water and yavas should be put in two vessels and the मन्त्र is to be repeated each time when putting water, putting यवs and at each अर्घ्य. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा p. 1229) defines: 'अर्घ्यो नामार्हणीयान. पुरत. संमाननार्थः प्रशस्तद्रव्यप्रक्षेपः'.

986. 'दीपे च विशेषः शङ्खेनोक्तः। घृतेन दीपो दातव्यस्तिलतैलेन वा पुनः। वसामेदोभवं दीपं प्रयत्नेन विवर्जयेत्॥' मिता. on या. I. 231. The विष्णुधर्मोत्तर has the verse घृतेन (I. 141 12).

987. या. I. 232—अपसव्यं ततः. The Mit quotes बृद्धशातातप that from hence the performer should face the south 'उदङ्मुखस्तु देवानां पितृणां दक्षिणामुखः। प्रदद्यात् पार्वणे सर्वं देवपूर्वं विधानतः॥'. 'Double-folded kuśas'—compare Āsv.

(Continued on next page)

under the left arm (i. e. being prācīnāvīti) the performer should offer to the pitrs (i. e. to the three brāhmanas representing them) double-folded kuśas (with water) for a seat on the left (i e on the seats already occupied kuśas should be placed on the left side for a unstara), he should then invoke[988] the pitrs after taking the permission of the brāhmanas with the rk 'uśantas-tvā' (Rg. X. 16. 12, Vāj. S. 19. 70, Tai. S. II. 6. 12. 1), and should then recite in a low voice the mantra (āyantu nah pitarah) 'may the pitrs come to us' (Vāj. S 19. 58). The performer, having scattered sesamum seeds all round (the brāhmanas) with the mantra 'Apahatā' (Vāj S II. 29), should employ sesamum for all purposes where yavas were employed (in the daiva part of the ceremony) and should perform all the items such as giving arghya (water for worship) for the pitrs as before (for the daiva rite). After offering arghya water, he should collect the drops of the arghya water fallen from the hands (or fingers) of the brāhmanas in one vessel (the pitr vessel), them turn it upside above (p. 434). The स्कन्दपुराण (VII. 1. 206. 17) provides 'दाने स्नाने जपे होमे भोजने देवतार्चने। देवानामृजवो दर्भाः पितृणा द्विगुणास्तथा॥' In offering each of the things in daiva or pitrya rite in śrāddha water must be given before and after. The मिता says that here the method called काण्डानुसमय (and not पदार्थानुसमय) has to be followed. These two are dealt with in Jai. V. 2 1–15. Vide H of Dh vol II. pp. 739–740 In this case if there are three brāhmanas, water, kuśas and water are all to be given to one, then the same three to the second and the same three to the third This is काण्डानुसमय If water is given one after another to the three, then kuśas one after another to them, then water one after another to three, that would be पदार्थानुसमय. काण्ड means पदार्थवर्ग. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा pp. 759–766) has an exhaustive and lucid discussion on these two He states that पदार्थानुसमय is the rule but काण्डानुसमय also has to be followed in certain cases I or example, on p 764 he says 'चरणप्रक्षालनाचमनमद्दानासनोपवेशनानि पदार्थानुसमयेन। आसनक्षणावाहनार्घगन्धपुष्पधूपदीपाच्छादनानां पदार्थानां कृत्स्न काण्डे वैश्वदेविकेषु द्विजेष्वपवर्ज्य पैतृकेष्वारभ्भणीयम्' and relies on या I. 229–234 to show that all items relating to वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मण are first finished and those relating to पैतृकब्राह्मण are then taken up i e. there is काण्डानुसमय as to वैश्वदेविक and पैतृकब्राह्मण. Vide हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p. 1215 also.

---

(Continued from last page)

988. आवाह्य (या. I 233). The मिता. remarks "अथ पितॄन् पितामहान् प्रपितामहांनावाहयिष्य इति ब्राह्मणान् पृष्ट्वा आवाहयेति तैरनुज्ञात उशन्तस्त्वा निधीमहि इत्यनयर्चा पित्रादीनावाह्य 'आयन्तु नः पितरः' इत्यादिना मन्त्रेणोपतिष्ठेत". It may be noted that in all cases where a question is to be put or permission is to be asked the performer addresses the chief among them or all of them as the श्राद्धसूत्र of काश्य—'सर्वेषु प्रश्नेषु पङ्क्तिमुख्यं पृच्छति सर्वान्वा (2nd कण्डिका of श्राद्धसूत्र).'

down[989] on the ground (over a bunch of kuśas with ends turned towards the south) with the mantra 'thou art a place for the pitṛs.'[990] Then, being about to perform 'agnaukaraṇa' (offering in sacrifice), he takes the food mixed with clarified butter and asks the brāhmaṇas (in the words 'I shall offer into the sacred fire') and when permitted by them with the words 'do so', he offers into the fire (two portions cut off from the food mixed with ghee) with a mekṣaṇa[991] according to the

989. The मिता remarks that on the vessel turned upside down the pavitras covering the three vessels should be placed and unguents, flowers, incense, lamp and garment should be offered to the brāhmaṇas with the words 'पितरयं ते गन्धः' etc.

990 पूर्ववत्—The मिता very briefly sets forth how the items are to be repeated for पैठ्यब्राह्मण: 'राजतादिषु पात्रेषु त्रिष्वप्युन्मकुशनिर्मितकूर्चान्तर्हितेषु 'इं नो देवी.' इति मन्त्रेणाप क्षिप्त्वा 'तिलोसि सोमदेवत्यः' इत्यादिमन्त्रेण तिलान् गन्धपुष्पाणि च क्षिप्त्वा स्वधार्घ्यं'—इति ब्राह्मणाना पुरतोऽर्घपात्राणि स्थापयित्वा या दिव्या इति मन्त्रान्ते पितरिदं ते अर्घ्यं पितामहेदं ते अर्घ्यं प्रपितामहेदं ते अर्घ्यमिति ब्राह्मणानां हस्तेष्वर्घ्यं दद्यात्। Vide आश्व गृ in note 966 above for इं नो देवी, तिलोसि, या दिव्याः The मन्त्र is 'अपहता असुरा रक्षांसि वेदिषदः' (वाज. सं. II. 29) The बहुचगृह्यपरिशिष्ट, अपरार्क (p 484) and others say that the name and gotra of the ancestors should be mentioned in offering पाद्य, अर्घ्य, गन्ध etc Therefore the अर्घ्य will be offered in the form 'अमुकगोत्र पितरमुकशर्मंस्तेतस्तेऽर्घ्यम्'. हलायुध (folio 18a on श्राद्धसूत्र) notes that in the case of वाजसनेयs the last words are एष ते ऽर्घः

991 मेक्षण is a rod of Aśvattha wood one aratni long having at one end a square board four angulas in length (to be used like a mixing spoon). Two offerings are made with the words अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नमः, सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः (वाज सं II. 29 where the same formula occurs with स्वाहा for स्वधा नम.) Acc to Baud. Dh S II. 8. 8-11 the offerings are three viz to सोमाय पितृपीताय, यमायाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते, अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्विष्टकृते Acc. to मद् पा. p. 590 this is peculiar to Baudhāyanīyas The ब्रह्मपुराण q. by मद्. पा. (p 591) speaks of आहुतित्रय and so does Brahmānda (upodghāta, 11.93–94) If the performer is आहिताग्नि and has observed सर्वाधान method he offeres into दक्षिणाग्नि; if he is not आहिताग्नि or has followed अर्धाधान method he offers into gṛhya or āvasathya fire and if he has neither the śrauta or gṛhya fire he offers into the hand of the brāhmaṇa. For the procedure of पिण्डपितृयज्ञ (which varies from one saṁhitā and sūtra to another) vide H. of Dh vol. II pp 1085–1090 and मनु III. 212 for पाणिहोम. The food offered on the hand has to be mixed with the food served in the plate and then eaten. When there are several pitṛya brāhmaṇas invited the पाणिहोम is to be made on the hand of the best of the brāhmaṇas acc. to the मद्. पा. 585 and स्मृतिच (आ. p. 462), both of which quote गोभिल II 120 'पित्र्ये यः पङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यस्तस्य पाणावनग्निमान्। हुत्वा मन्त्रवदन्येषां तूष्णीं पात्रेषु निक्षिपेत्॥'. हलायुध holds that, since या. (I. 237 हुतशेष प्रदद्यात्तु भाजनेषु समाहित.) employs the word भाजनेषु without any qualification, the remnants of the food for होम should be put in all plates including those for दैवब्राह्मण The सौरपुराण (19.22) says. अग्नेरभावाद्विप्रस्य पाणौ होमो विधीयते। महादेवस्य पुरतो गोष्ठे वा श्रद्धयान्वित॥ procedure laid down for Piṇḍapitryajña. He, being intent (only on performing śrāddha correctly), should serve the food that remains after (making the two offerings mentioned above) in plates (except earthen one) that he may be able to secure, and particularly silver oness (plates are meant for feeding pitrya brāhmanas). After serving the food in the plates, he should invoke over the plates the mantra 'the earth is thy[992] support', he should take hold of the thumb of the brāhmanas and put it on the food (served in the plates) with the mantra[993] 'idam Visnur' ('Visnu strode over this' Rg. I. 22. 17, Vāj. S. V. 15, Tai S. I. 2. 13. 1). The performer should then mutter the Gāyatrī verse (Rg. III 62. 10, Vāj. S. III. 35, Tai. S. I. 5. 6. 4) together with 'Om' and the 'Vyāhrtis' and the three verses beginning with 'Madhu vātā' (Rg. I. 90. 6–8, Vāj. S. 13. 27–29, Tai. S IV. 2 9. 3), he should say 'partake (of the food) as you please' and the brāhmanas also should eat the food silently. He should serve without anger or bustle food fit for being offered as havis (in a śrāddha) and liked by the brāhmanas till they are satiated (so that some food is left in their plates) and should repeat (while the brāhmanas are engaged in eating) sacred texts and the texts for Japa (Gāyatrī &c. already referred to in Yāj I. 239 above). The sacred texts to be repeated according to the Mit on Yāj. I. 240 are the Purusasūkta (Rg. X. 90. 1–16), the Pāvamānī verses (i. e. verses like 'svādisthayā madisthayā' from the 9th mandala of the Rgveda as stated by Medhātithi on Manu III. 86 and Haradatta on Gautama (19. 12). Manu III. 232 mentions other works for recitation such as the dharmaśāstras, ākhyānas, itihāsa (Mahābhārata), purānas and khilas (like Śrīsūkta and Vidyāsūkta). There is great divergence of views about the sacred texts to be recited by the performer in a low voice, while the brāhmanas are engaged in partaking the food

992. yā I. 238. The मन्त्र meant is, पृथिवी ते पात्रं द्यौरपिधानं ब्राह्मणस्त्वा मुखे जुहोमि ब्राह्मणाना त्वा प्राणापानयोर्जुहोम्यक्षितमसि मैषा क्षेष्टा अमुत्रामुष्मिँल्लोके। आप. म. पा. II. 20 1. The मन्त्र is addressed to the remainder of the food used for अग्नौकरण. पात्र means support. As stated in n. 783, in श्राद्ध the आहवनीय is the ब्राह्मण invited for dinner. About अङ्गुष्ठ, यम q. by कल्पतरु (श्रा p 183) says: अङ्गुष्ठमात्रो भगवान् विष्णुः पर्यटते महीम्। राक्षसाना वधार्थाय को मेऽद्य प्रहरिष्यति॥ तस्माच्छ्राद्धेषु सर्वेषु त्वङ्गुष्ठग्रहणं स्मृतम्। These are quoted also by अपरार्क p. 494, स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p. 462 and by हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 1378.

993. यम q. by अपरार्क p. 494 says 'विष्णो हव्यं च कव्यं च त्र्यायुरक्षेति च क्रमात्.' The मिता quotes it as मनु's and says that in the पित्र्य rite the performer being प्राचीनावीतिन् should say 'विष्णो कव्यं रक्ष.'

cooked for śrāddha Vide note 1005 below. It may be that the japa of sacred texts is to be done by the performer wearing the sacred thread in the upavīta way as stated by Hemādri p. 1070 and the Madana-pārijāta p. 599, but the Śrāddhatattva (p. 231) is opposed to this and relies on Manu III. 279. Certain verses from the Purānas also are to be recited such as the verses from the Varāhapurāna (14. 26-31) and Visnupurāna (III. 15. 31-36, which are identical with the preceding) quoted by the Kalpataru on śrāddha (p. 197), Aparārka (p. 502) and Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 109), the first and last of which are quoted in the note below [994]. The Garuḍapurāna (Ācārakhanda 218.20 ff.) prescribes that while the brāhmanas are eating one may recite a eulogy of pitṛs such as the 'saptavyādha' verses [994a]. Then, after holding the food in his hands, the performer should ask the brāhmanas 'are you satisfied' (and after they reply that they are satisfied) he should tell them that there is food still left (and ask them what to do with it) and after taking their per-

---

994. The first and last verses are: पिता पितामहश्चैव तथैव प्रपितामहः। मम तृप्तिं प्रयान्त्वद्य विप्रदेहेषु संस्थिताः ॥...यज्ञेश्वरो हव्यसमस्तकव्यभोक्ताध्यात्मा हरिरीश्वरोऽत्र। तत्संनिधानादपयान्तु सद्यो रक्षांस्यशेषाण्यसुराश्च सर्वे ॥.

994 a. The सप्तव्याध verses from the हरिवंश (I. 24. 20-21) and गरुडपुराण are. सप्तव्याधा दशार्णेषु मृगाः कालञ्जरे गिरौ। चक्रवाकाः शरद्वीपे हंसाः सरसि मानसे ॥ तेभिजाताः कुरुक्षेत्रे ब्राह्मणा वेदपारगाः। प्रस्थिता दूरमध्वानं यूयं किमवसीदथ ॥. On these the श्राद्धतत्त्व (p. 231) says 'अपहृतगुरुगवींमांसकृतश्राद्धमहत्त्वप्रकाशकपितृगाथात्वेन सप्तव्याधा इति च पठ्यते'. These very verses occur in the अग्निपुराण chap. 117. 56-57. The story is very clearly set out in हरिवंश 1, chapters 21-24 and the Matsyapurāna chap 20-21. Seven pupils of Garga guarding their guru's cow thought of eating that cow as they were famished. But the youngest said 'let us make use of the cow's flesh in śrāddha, so that we may be saved from sin'. Two of the brothers became daiva brāhmanas, three became pitr-brāhmanas, one became the giver and the 7th became a guest. They told the guru that the cow was eaten by a tiger They passed through several births first as seven hunters, then deer in Kālañjara hill and so on Śrāddha ultimately saved them. The same story is narrated in Padma V. 10.49-125, and V. 47.282-304 (in which last the disciples are said to have been those of वसिष्ठ) After becoming hamsas three of them became kings (a king and two ministers, acc. to मत्स्य) and cared not for the other world. The four others knew the path to moksa, sent word to the three with these verses saying that they four had started on the long road to the other world (प्रस्थिता ..ध्वानं) and asking the other three not to be immersed in the mire of worldliness (यूयं...दथ). The story also occurs in the शिवपुराण (उमासंहिता chap. 41.24 ff). It is interesting to note that in the Jaina Uttarādhyayana-sūtra (S. B. E vol. 45 p 56) the echoes of this story of the brothers are heard for illustrating the influence of karman, mission[995] (in the words 'partake of it along with your friends and relations'), he should spread (in front of the brāhmaṇas for pitṛs) the remaining food on (darbhas with their ends to the south placed over) the ground (with the mantra 'ye agnidagdhāḥ', those that were cremated and those that were not cremated &c.) and he should pour water once for each into his hand (for rinsing the mouth). Collecting all the cooked food (i. e. portions from each food) with sesamum mixed with it, the performer facing the south should offer the piṇḍas near the remains of the food (eaten by the brāhmaṇas) according to the procedure of the piṇḍapitṛyajña. For maternal ancestors also the same procedure is to be followed (from invoking the Viśvedevāḥ to offering piṇḍas). Then he should give water to the brāhmaṇas for sipping. Then (he should say to the brāhmaṇas 'pronounce benediction'); after making the brāhmaṇas say 'svasti', he should offer water into their hands for saying 'let it be inexhaustible (after he requests them 'let it be inexhaustible'). Then after giving to the brāhmaṇas dakṣiṇā (fee or presents)[996] according to the ability of the performer, he should say to the brāhmaṇas "may I request you to repeat the word 'svadhā'" and when they permit him in the words 'do request us', he should say 'let svadhā be pronounced for the persons concerned' (i. e. the pitṛs and maternal ancestors). Then the brāhmaṇas should say 'let there be svadhā'. On the brāhmaṇas saying so, he should sprinkle water on the ground and say 'let the Viśvedevāḥ be pleased' and when the brāhmaṇas have responded with 'let the Viśve-devāḥ be pleased' he should mutter the follow-

---

995 तदन्नं विकिरेन्भूमौ दद्याच्चाग्रे. सकृत् सकृत्। या I. 241 The मिता comments: तदन्नं पितृस्थानब्राह्मणस्य पुरस्ताद्दर्भोपरिसन्निधौ दक्षिणाग्रदर्भान्तरितायां भूमौ तिलोदकप्रक्षेपपूर्वकं 'ये अग्निदग्धा' इत्यनया ऋचा निक्षिप्य पुनस्तिलोदकं प्रक्षिपेत्। तदनन्तरं ब्राह्मणस्तेषु पण्डपार्थे सकृत्सकृदपो दद्यात्। ये अग्निदग्धा—this is Rg. X, 15 14 translated above (p 196). Sesamum grains and water were to be cast before as well as after placing the food on the ground The Mit. speaks of the verse ये अग्निदग्धा as a ṛk, so it should be taken to be Rg X. 15. 14; but later works like the आह्निकतत्त्व (pp 231-32) prescribe that the two verses quoted in the beginning of note 1007 below should be recited here. Vide तै. ब्रा III 1. 1. 7 for pitṛs that were अग्निदग्ध and that were not so in another connection.

996. या. I. 244 दत्त्वा तु दक्षिणां शक्त्या—देवल prescribes that दक्षिणा was to be given to the पित्र्यब्राह्मण first and then to the वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मण 'दक्षिणां पितृविप्रेभ्यो दद्यात्पूर्वं ततो द्वयोः' q. by स्मृतिच. (आ. p 483). मत्स्य 17 50-52, वायु 75. 14-15 specify the various gifts. Vide n. 1008.

ing:[997] 'May donors increase in our family, may the (study or teaching of) Vedas prosper and progeny increase (in our family); may our faith (in rites for pitṛs) not vanish and may there be plenty of things for us to make gifts'[998]. Having muttered this, having spoken pleasing words to the brāhmaṇas,[999] having fallen at their feet (after going round them) he being pleased in his heart should dismiss the brāhmaṇas with the mantra 'Vāje vāje' (Rg. VII. 38.8, Vāj. S. 21.11, Tai. S. I. 7 8.2), the sending them away being so arranged that the brāhmaṇas representing the pitṛs start first,[1000] (i. e. first goes the representative of the great-grandfather, then the one for the grandfather, then the one for the father and then the one representing the Viśvedevāḥ). The vessel in which the drops of arghya water from the hands of the brāhmaṇas had been collected before should be turned face upwards[1001] and then the brāhmaṇas should be dismissed. After following the departing brāhmaṇas (up to the boundary) and going round them, he (should return) and should eat the food that (remains in the 997 दातारो नो—या I 246 This very verse occurs in मनु III. 252, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 73.28, पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 117), मत्स्य 16 49-50, विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I 140.42.

---

998 The विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 73.30, मत्स्य 16 50-51, पद्म (सृष्टि 9 118) add another verse to या I 246 viz. अन्नं च नो बहु भवेदतिथींश्च लभेमहि। याचितारश्च नः सन्तु मा च याचिष्म कंचन ॥.

999 इत्युक्त्वोक्त्वा प्रिया वाच—या I 247. अपरार्क p 512 quotes from बृहस्पति two verses stating what should be said 'अद्य मे सफलं जन्म भवत्पादाभिवन्दनात्। अद्य मे वंशजाः सर्वे गतास्तेनुग्रहाद् दिवम् ॥ अत्र शाकादिपानेन क्लेशिता ये मयेदृशाः। तत्क्लेशजातं चित्तेन विस्मृत्य क्षन्तुमर्हथ ॥.'

1000. For पितृपूर्वं विसर्जनम् (या°I 247), compare विष्णुपुराण III 15 48 and विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 140. 15 which say 'वैश्वदेवनिवेशाना चरमं हस्तधावनम्। विसर्जनं च निर्दिष्टं तेषु रक्षा यत. स्थिता ॥'. The मिता adds, following the मत्स्यपुराण 17 59, that before dismissal he should touch the brāhmaṇas with the tip of a darbha 'वाजे वाजे इति जपन् कुशाग्रेण विसर्जयेत्'.

1001. The Mit. notices that the upturning of the vessel should be done (as the termination त्वा in कृत्वा indicates) first before the mantra 'vāje vāje' (Yāj I. 247) is recited and after the brāhmaṇas recite the benedictory mantras, and then the brāhmaṇas start. Compare Jai IV.3.37 for क्त्वा denoting पूर्वकालता. संस्रव has two meanings, viz. (1) the drops of water fallen from the hands of the brāhmaṇas when arghya water was offered to them (Mit.), (2) the drops of water that remain in the arghya vessels. श्रीदत्त in his पितृभक्ति (D C Ms 153 of 1892-95) says 'संस्रवपदं ब्राह्मणहस्तस्रुतजलपरमिति निबन्धाः। कर्कभाष्ये तु अर्घपात्रस्थशेषीभूतजलं संस्रवपदमित्युक्तम्। युक्तं चैतत्। शेषे प्रतिपत्तेरपेक्षितत्वात्।' folio 25b.

house after) the brāhmanas representing the pitrs have partaken of it. He and the brāhmanas that partook of the śrāddha dinner should abstain from sexual intercourse on the night of the śrāddha day [1002].

Many of the Purānas contain detailed descriptions of the śrāddha to be performed on every amāvāsyā; for example, Matsya 17. 12-60 (closely resembling Yāj. 225-259), Visnupurāna III. 15. 13-49, Mārkandeya 28 37-60, Kūrma (II. 22. 20-62), Padma (sṛstikhanda) 9. 140-186), Brahmānda (Upodghātapāda, chap. 12), Skanda VI. 224. 3-51, Visnudharmottara I. 140. 6-44. The Agnipurāna chap. 163 verses 2-42 are the same (with very slight variations and the omission of 2½ verses) as Yāj. I. 227-270; while Agni chap. 117 contains many verses that closely follow the Āśv. Gr and Yāj. Similarly the Garudapurāna contains numerous verses that are identical with Yājñavalkya's. For example, compare Yāj. I. 229-239 with Garuda I. 99. 11-19. The Purānas closely follow the Grhyasūtras, Manu and Yājñavalkya and often employ the same mantras and formulas, though here and there they introduce some details. As remarked by the Varāhapurāna 14 51, the procedure for śrāddha is the same in all Purānas (iyam sarvapurānesu sāmānyā paitrikī kriyā). For sample, a summary of the procedure in the Padma (srsti 9. 140-186) is set out here. The performer having honoured the Viśve-devāh (i e. the brāhmana or brāhmanas invited to represent them) with a seat and with yava grains and flowers should fill two vessels with water and should place them on a pavitra of darbhas The water should be offered with the verse 'śam no devīr' (Rg. X. 9.4) and the yava grains with 'Yavosi'. Theyo should be invoked with the verse 'Viśve devāsah' (Rg. II. 41 13) and yavas should be scattered about with the two verses 'Viśve devāsah' (Rg. II. 41. 13-14) and he should scatter about yava grains with the verse 'thou art yava, the king of grains &c.' (quoted [1003] below). After decking the brāhmanas with sandalwood paste and flowers 1002 या I. 249. मिता. adds that by reason of the word 'tu' in Yā I 249 the performer and the brāhmanas have to shun eight actions enumerated in n. 924 above.

---

1003. यवोऽसि धान्यराजस्तु वारुणो मधुमिश्रितः। निर्णुद सर्वपापानो पवित्रमूर्वि- संस्तुतम्॥ पद्म (सृष्टि) 9.144 कौ. घ सू III. 6 5 is almost identical The मिता. on या. I. 231 refers to the मन्त्र 'यवोसि धान्यराजो वा' which appears to be the same. अपरार्क p 479 speaks of 'यवोसि' as a yajus.

he should honour them with water with the verse[1004] 'yā divyā' (vide n. 985). After taking leave of the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas that have been honoured with arghya he should begin the pitṛ yajña. He should prepare seats with darbhas on them, worship three vessels, place pavitras on them and pour water in them with 'śam no devīr' (Rg. X. 9 4), should cast sesamum grains in them with 'tilosi' and then put in them sandalwood and flowers. (Then verses 147–152 speak about the vessels to be employed). He then should announce the names and gotra of his ancestors and give darbhas in the hands of the brāhmaṇas. He should then request brāhmaṇas with the words 'I shall invite the pitṛs' and when they reply 'let it be so' he should invoke the pitṛs with the two verses 'uśantas tvā' (Rg. X. 16.12) and 'ā yantu' (Vāj. S. 19.58). Then, having offered arghya to the brāhmaṇas (representing the pitṛs) with 'yā divyā' (vide n. 985), having given them sandalwood paste and the other things including garment as the last, he should collect the remainder of the water (in the arghya vessels) into the vessel meant for the father and should keep aside the latter to the north with its top turned downwards with the words 'thou art a seat of the pitṛs'. Then he should begin to serve various kinds of food after bringing the utensils in which the food was cooked and holding them with both hands. (Verses 157–165 speak of the various foods to be offered and the periods of gratification caused thereby to the pitṛs). While the brāhmaṇas are engaged in eating he should recite the Vedic hymns[1005] referring to 1004. मिता. on या I. 231 refers to the मन्त्र 'या दिव्या आपः पयसा'. The mantra in आश्व. गृ. IV. 7.13 'या दिव्या आप पृथिवी' has been translated above, as also the mantra 'tilosi' from Āśv. gr. IV. 7.8. How the offering of tila water in the midst of mango trees serves two purposes is finely stated in the following verse एको मुनिस्ताम्रकराग्रहस्तो ह्याम्रेषु मध्ये सलिलं ददाति। आम्राश्च सिक्ताः पितरश्च तृप्ता एका क्रिया द्व्यर्थकरी प्रसिद्धा॥ पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 11 77), वायु 111. 37, अग्नि 115. 40, compare महाभाष्य 'आम्राश्च सिक्ताः पितरश्च प्रीणिताः।' vol. I p 14.

---

1005 The verses of the पद्म (सृष्टि 9. 165–169) about what is to be recited are quoted by अपरार्क p 502, the first verse स्वाध्यायं etc. being मनु III. 232. Compare नारदपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 28 65–68) which among others mentions राक्षोघ्न, वैष्णव and पैतृक (Rg X. 15 1–13) मन्त्रs, पुरुषसूक्त, त्रिमधु, त्रिसुपर्ण. The Śāntika chapter, acc. to हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 1075, is वाज सं. 36.10 ff which begins इं नो वात. पवताम्; The मधुब्राह्मण is what is called मधुविद्या contained in the बृह. उ II 5 (beginning with इयं पृथिवी सर्वेषां भूताना मधु) and छान्दोग्य III 1 (beginning with असौ वा आदित्यो देवमधु). The मण्डलब्राह्मण is an उपनिषद् (vide Indische Studien III, p. 325). हेमाद्रि (on श्रा) p. 1075 says 'यदेतन्मण्डलं तपतीत्यादि मण्डलब्राह्मणम्.

(Continued on the next page)

the Fathers, all the Purānas, various eulogies of Brahmā, Visnu, the Sun, Rudra and the Vedic hymns addressed to Indra, Rudra and Soma and the Pāvamānī verses, the Sāmans called Brhat, Rathantara and Jyestha Sāman, the chapter on Śānti rites (propitiatory rites for removing evil events or prognostications), the Madhubrāhmana, the Mandala Brāhmana and whatever else gives pleasure to the brāhmanas and the performer, and the Mahābhārata also should be recited, as it is very dear to the pitrs. After the brāhmanas have finished their dinner the performer should collect together in a lump portions from all kinds of food, put water over them and spread[1005] it (on the ground over darbhas) in front of the plates of the dining brāhmanas and should say[1007] 'May those persons in our

---

(Continued from the last page)

These verses of the पद्मपुराण about what it is to be repeated occur in मत्स्यपुराण also (17.37-39). The राक्षोघ्नमन्त्रs are five verses (Rg IV. 4 1-5=Vā. S. XIII. 9-13=Tai S. V. I. 2.14). हेमाद्रि (श्रा pp. 1069-1073) first sets out the texts mentioned by मनु, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र and the पुराणs, then gives the vedic texts to be repeated by the respective followers of the four Vedas (pp 1073-1074), then deals with the Saptārcis mantra (vide note 1020). Ultimately Hemādri and Śr. P. say that if a man does not know much he should engage in गायत्रीजप.

1006. The verse सार्ववर्णिकमन्नाद्य · विकिरन्भुवि in पद्म (सृष्टि 9 170) is the same as Manu III. 244, मत्स्य 17.41 and विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81.21

1007 अग्निदग्धाश्च ये जीवा येऽप्यदग्धा कुले मम। भूमौ दत्तेन तृप्यन्तु तृप्ता यान्तु परां गतिम्॥ येषा न माता न पिता न बन्धुर्न चान्यामेत्र न तथान्नमस्ति। तनृप्तयेऽन्न भुवि दत्तमेतत्प्रयान्तु योगाय यतो यतस्तत्॥ असस्कृतप्रमीतानां त्यागिना कुलयोषिताम्। उच्छिष्टभागधेयाना दर्भेषु विकिरान्नम्॥ पद्म. (सृष्टि 9 171-173) These verses occur in मत्स्य 17. 42-44 which presents some various and better readings (viz प्रयान्तु लोकेषु सुखाय तद्वत् and त्यक्तानां कुलयोषिताम्), यौ यू सू II 10.42 (येऽग्निदग्धा जाता जीवा ये ये त्वदग्धा . गतिम्॥) is almost the same as the first verse. The verse असंस्कृत० is मनु III 245, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81 22, and Skandapurāna VI. 218 10-11. कात्यायन as quoted by अपरार्क p 505 reads 'ये अग्निदग्धा ये अनग्निदग्धा जीवा जाता कुले मम। भूमौ ..गतिम्॥' Halāyudha in his com on Kātyāyana's Śrāddhasūtra holds that अदग्ध is the proper reading and अनग्निदग्धा is a bad reading and relies on a verse of the Brahmapurāna (folio 26b) त्यागिना कुलयोषिता in मनु III 245 and elsewhere is explained in different ways. The words may mean 'of persons who abandoned wives descended from good families' or 'of women who forsook their families' or 'of those who committed suicide and of childless women' One can appreciate the kindly and noble sentiments underlying the above verses. In honouring the pindas, Manu III. 217 (which speaks of salutation to the six seasons) is deemed to provide for salutation of the six seasons as identified with six ancestors mentioned in the words रसशोषजीवस्वधावीरमन्यु named in वाज स. II. 32 'नमो व. पितरो रसाय ..पितरो मन्यवे' Vide श्राद्धतत्त्व pp. 241-242.

family that were cremated or not cremated be gratified by the food offered on the ground and being gratified may they attain the highest world (or bliss)! May this food offered on the ground for the gratification of those that have neither father nor mother nor relative nor any other friend and have no food (offered by any one else in śrāddha) proceed for union with them wherever it may have to go'! The remainder of the food cooked for śrāddha and food spread on the ground are the lot (or share) of those that died without the samskāras (caula, upanayana and the like) being performed on them, that abandoned their gurus and of (unmarried) women of the family. Finding that the brāhmanas are satisfied (by the dinner) he should give water once in the hand of each brāhmana, should place on the ground smeared with cow's dung and urine darbhas with their ends turned to the south and place on them pindas made from all kinds of foods (cooked for the śrāddha dinner) following the method employed in Piṇḍapitṛyajña after washing them with water. He should then utter the names and gotra (of the ancestors to whom the pindas are to be offered) and should offer flowers and the rest and should again wash them (pindas). He should perambulate the pindas thrice holding darbhas in his hand and he should light lamps and offer flowers for the pindas. When the brāhmanas sip water after eating the dinner, he should himself sip water and give water once to each of the brāhmanas and flowers and aksatas and then aksayyodaka with sesamum grains. He should then make according to his means presents (to the brāhmanas) of cows,[1008] land, gold, clothes, splendid beds and whatever else was liked by the brāhmanas or by the performer himself or his father. He should not be stingy in his presents. Then he should request the brāhmanas to say 1008. पद्म (सृष्टि 9 180) ११ गोभूहिरण्यवासांसि भव्यानि शयनानि च। दद्याद्यद्विष्ट विप्राणामात्मनः पितुरेव च॥. There is epigraphic and other recorded evidence for gifts of land in śrāddhas An inscription of Karnadeva, son of Gāngeyadeva of the Cedi year 793 (1042 A. D) records the grant of a village (called Susi) to a brāhmana on the occasion of the Sāmvatsarika śrāddha of Gāngeyadeva at Prayāga. Vide I A vol. 16 pp. 204–207 for the grant of a village by the Chandella king Devavarmadeva in samvat 1107 (1050–51 A D.) on the anniversary of his mother's death and a grant in 1790 A. D. by Fattesing Bhosle, prince of Akkalkot, to a learned brāhmana of thirty bighas of land on the 10th day of his father's death (Bhārata-itthāsa-samśodhana-mandala, vol. 29, parts 1 and 2, 1948 p. 41). In the Āśramavāsikaparva 14 3–4 युधिष्ठिर is said to have made gifts of gold and jewels, slaves, blankets, villages and fields, elephants and horses with their trappings and of girls to ब्राह्मण्स in श्राद्ध for भीष्म, द्रोण, दुर्योधन and others.

---

'svadhā' and they should do so. Then he should request the brāhmaṇas to pronounce the following benedictions and should receive them from them while he faces the east They are 'May the pitṛs be kind (not dreadful) to us'; the brāhmaṇas should say 'let it be so'; 'May our family increase!'; they should say 'so be it'; 'May donors in my family prosper and also (the study of) the Vedas and progeny and may these benedictions come out true!'; they should respond 'let it be so'. He should then remove the piṇḍas and request the brāhmaṇas to utter the word 'svasti' and they should do so. The remains of the food eaten by the brāhmaṇas remain (unremoved or unwiped) till the brāhmaṇas are dismissed; then he should perform the (usual) daily rites Vaiśvadeva, balihoma[1009] &c. The remnants of food that lie on the ground are the share of the group of slaves that were straight-forward and not roguish (dishonest or shirkers). The performer holding a vessel full of water and muttering the verse 'vāje vāje' (Ṛg. VII. 38 8, Vāj S. IX. 18, Tai. S I 7. 8. 2) should touch the brāhmaṇas with the tip of kusas and dismiss them. He should follow them out of his house for eight paces, should circumambulate them, should then return with his relatives, sons and wife, should then perform the daily Vaiśvadeva and balihoma. Then after Vaiśvadeva he should together with his relatives, sons, guests and servants partake of the food that remains in the cooking pots after what was eaten by the brāhmaṇas.

It should be noticed how closely the Padmapurāṇa follows the procedure (including the mantras) contained in Yājñavalkya. What procedure the author of a Purāṇa follows depends upon his learning and the sūtra that he studied. For example, the Viṣṇudharmottara I.140 appears to rely on the Āp gr. and the Āp. M. P. (II. 19–20), since I. 140. 12 refers to Āp M. P. II. 19.1, I. 140. 29–30 to Āp. M. P. II. 19. 14–16, I. 140. 35 to Āp M P. II. 20. 1. Similarly, Skanda (VI 224 3–51) closely follows Āśv. gr and Yāj.

Owing to the difference in details of śrāddha in the several gṛhyasūtras, the smṛtis and the purāṇas, an important question arises whether a person should perform a śrāddha rite only in accordance with the gṛhyasūtra of his own Veda or Śākhā or whether he may perform it after the inclusion (upasaṃhāra) of the several items found in other sūtras and smrtis though not included in the kalpa or grhya sūtra of his own Śākhā. This topic is discussed at great length by Hemādri (on śrāddha) pp. 748–759 and briefly by Medhātithi on Manu II. 29 and XI. 216, by the Mit on Yāj. III. 325, Aparārka p. 1053 and others. Those who are for strictly following the details in one's own sūtra alone argue as follows: If one were at liberty to include details other than those contained in one's own sūtra, the order of the details (krama) given in one's sūtra and the time specified for each detail would be interfered with. Besides, if the addition of details were permissible, one would be liable to the charge of giving up the usages of one's own family handed down for generations. These objectors rely upon such passages as that of the Visnudharmottara which states 'He who violating (the dictates of) his own sūtra acts according to a sūtra meant for others, treats thereby his own sage (the author of his sūtra) as unauthoritative and incurs (the blame of) doing what is improper.'[1010] The smrtis that contain additional details may be meant for those men who have no kalpa or grhya sūtra of their own or they may be useful for śūdras.

1009. पद्म, भूमिखण्ड 9. 185–186 are the same as मनु III. 265. 246 and Matsya 17. 56–57.

Those who espouse the view that as far as possible all details found in several grhyasūtras and smrtis on one rite should be included by every one rely mainly on Jaimini II. 4. 8–33 which is called 'śākhāntarādhikarananyāya' or 'sarvaśākhāpratyayanyāya'. The principal sūtra is Jai. II. 4. 9.[1011] It is established in this sūtra that the prayojana (purpose) or phala (reward to be secured) of the rite is the same in different sūtras and smrtis. For example, the rewards of śrāddha are stated to be the same in all sūtras and smrtis (vide notes 787–790 above); then the dravya (materials) and the deity are the same (in Pārvana śrāddha the deities are the paternal ancestors and the materials, 1010. यः स्वसूत्रमतिक्रम्य परसूत्रेण वर्तते। अप्रमाणमृषिं कृत्वा सोऽन्यधर्मेण युज्यते॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर II. 127. 148–149.

---

1011. एकं वा संयोग-रूप-चोदनाख्याविशेषात्। जै II. 4. 9 (separate as चोदना+आख्या+अविशेषात्), on this शबर explains 'तदेव प्रयोजनमुद्दिश्य तदेव विधीयमानं मत्यभिजानीमः। रूपमप्यस्य तदेव द्रव्यदेवतम्। पुरुषप्रयत्नस्तादृश एव चोद्यते। नामधेयं चाविशिष्टम्। तेन तदेव कर्म सर्वशाखास्विति प्रत्ययः।'. The तन्त्रवार्तिक explains 'संयोग इति माधान्यात् फलसंयोगग्रहणम्।...चोदनेति सर्वधात्वर्थभावनाविषयो विधिः।'. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III, p. 870 for a brief explanation of this सर्वशाखाप्रत्ययन्याय. मेधा. on मनु XI. 216 puts the maxim very briefly as 'आप्यायस्व सं ते पयांसि-इति स्मृत्यन्तरोक्तो विधिरपेक्षितव्यः। एकशास्त्रत्वात्सर्वस्मृतीनामसति विरोधे समग्रं योज्यं विरोधे तु विकल्पः।'.

viz. kuśas, tilas, water, vessels, foods &c. are the same in all works). The effort that is enjoined (the vidhi) is the same and the name (Pārvaṇaśrāddha, Ekoddista śrāddha &c.) is the same. Therefore, on account of these various signs one easily recognizes that the same rite is being dealt with by all sūtras, even if many of them differ in details. It cannot be said that smṛtis will be useful for those who have no sūtras of their own. Each man of the first three varnas is attached to some sūtra or other by the tradition of his family or caste. Similarly, the smṛtis cannot be held to be meant for śūdras alone, since the smṛtis mainly deal with upanayana, the study of the Vedas, agnihotra and other matters with which a śūdra has no concern. Similarly, the objection that if details were allowed to be inserted from other sūtras and smṛtis the krama and kāla prescribed in one's sūtra might have to be set aside, the reply is contained in Jai. I. 3. 5–7 (explained at great length in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 841–848).[1012] The śruti says 'after getting ready a bundle of kuśa grass he prepares the vedi (altar)'. Here a certain order of acts is laid down. If after a bundle of kuśas is got ready, the man has a sneeze, he has to sip water (perform ācamana) immediately as laid down by Manu V. 145 and Vas. III. 38 before he prepares the vedi. So the objector says the krama will be interfered with. The reply is that the sequence (krama) is only a characteristic of the items in the śruti passage, that all that is meant is that the making of the altar follows the getting ready of a kuśa bundle, but that it is not meant that the making of the vedi should follow immediately after the bundle is got ready. Therefore, the conclusion is that whatever in detail is not in conflict with one's own śākhā or sūtra may be included in the rite one is about to perform, but if there is a direct conflict, then one should stick to one's own sūtra. As observed by Kātyāyana 'whatever is declared, whether in great detail or in brief, in one's own grhyasūtra about a rite, if he performs that much, it may be taken that he has done all that is required of him; but what is not handed down in one's śākhā (or sūtra) but is contained in another śākhā and is not in conflict with one's own śākhā, should be performed by the learned, as in the case of 1012. अपि वा कारणाग्रहणे प्रयुक्तानि प्रतीयेरन्। जै. I. 3. 7 On this śābar observes: आचान्तेन कर्तव्यं यज्ञोपवीतिना कर्तव्यं ... इत्येवंलक्षणान्युदाहरणानि। किमेतानि श्रुतिविरुद्धानि न कर्तव्यानि उताविरुद्धानि कार्याणि चेत्पश्यसि तैरप्युष्टीयमानैर्वेदिके किंचिन्न कुप्यति तस्मादविरुद्धानीति। नैतदेवम्। शाखपरिच्छिन्नं हि क्रमं बाधेरन्। कथम्। वेदं कृत्वा वेदिं कुर्वीतेतीमां श्रुतिमुपरुन्ध्यादन्तरा वेदं वेदिं चाक्रष्टीयमानमाचमनादि'. This pūrvapakṣa is refuted later on.

āgnihotra and the like'.[1013] The first verse of Kātyāyana may be explained as applying where one's śākhā or sūtra deals with a matter without requiring any addition or as the next best course where one is not able to supplement one's sūtra owing to some unseen cause or owing to human difficulties. The Sangraha says that where different items of the śrāddha rite are declared to be performed at different times and there is no agreement among the sages, one should follow one's grhya-sūtra, but where one's grhyasūtra is silent as to a certain item or as to the stage when it is to be performed, there is an option and one may follow the opinion of some sage as to that item.[1014] It appears that even the ancient grhya sūtras exhibit tendencies that led to the sarvaśākhā-pratyaya-nyāya e. g. Āśv. gr. (q. in n 966) employs several passages (such as 'Tilosi', 'Yā divyā,' which do not occur in the Ṛgveda.)

It is owing to this maxim of 'sarvaśākhā-pratyayanyāya' that medieval digests go on heaping up details from all smṛtis and purānas in their descriptions of the several śrāddhas, the procedures of which were not originally very extensive.

The Kūrmapurāna[1015] provides that the performer should before noontime is past bring to his house the invited brāhmanas

---

1013. अविरुद्धानि तु परशाखाम्नातानि सर्वाण्यप्यङ्गान्युपसंहृत्य कर्मानुष्ठेयम्। तदुक्तं भविष्यपुराणे। यच्चाम्नातं स्वशाखायां पारक्यमविरोधि यत्। विद्वद्भिस्तदनुष्ठेयमग्निहोत्रादिकं यथा॥ इति। हेमाद्रि (on आ) p 759 This verse is गोभिलस्मृति I. 35 (reads परोक्तमविरोधि and ० होत्रादिकर्मवत्). अपरार्क p 8 and स्मृतिच. I p 5 quote this verse as कात्यायन's and also another of his 'बह्वल्पं वा स्वगृह्योक्तं यस्य कर्म प्रकीर्तितम्। तस्य तावति शास्त्रार्थे कृते सर्वं कृतो भवेत्॥'. हेमाद्रि (on आ) p 756 quotes this last verse as वैजपायन's Both verses (बह्वल्पं० and यच्चाम्नातं०) are quoted as from the परिशिष्ट by हलायुध in his com. on the श्राद्धसूत्र of कात्यायन (folio 30 a). The स्मृतिच (I p 5) adds another half verse of कात्यायन viz. आत्मतन्त्रे तु यत्रोक्तं तत्कुर्यात्पारतन्त्रिकम्' In आत्मतन्त्र, तन्त्र means सिद्धान्त (i e. one's सूत्र) अग्निहोत्रादिकं यथा—This is explained by श्राद्धसौख्य (दोडरानन्द folio 64a) as follows. 'यथा छन्दोगानामनुक्तोपि यजुर्वेदविहितोग्निहोत्रविधि क्रियते'

1014 यान्यत्र कालभेदेन कर्माणि मुनयो जगुः। स्वगृह्योक्तानुसारेण विकल्पस्तेषु युज्यते॥ न गृह्यादिस्मृतिर्येषां श्राद्धादावुपलभ्यते। कर्तुर्महन्ति ते कृत्स्नं यस्य कस्य मुनेर्मतम्॥ संग्रह q by हेमाद्रि (आ. p 1484) The श्रा कि. कौ p. 125 briefly puts the position as follows 'आकाङ्क्षितं परशाखोक्तमपि कर्तव्यमनाकाङ्क्षितं तु न कर्तव्यमेव। पुराणोक्तं तु आकांक्षितमनाकाङ्क्षितं वा सामान्यधर्मत्वात्सर्वैरेवानुष्ठेयम्। तत्रापि स्वशाखोक्ताविरोधिना कार्यमिति।' The following verse quoted from Gobhila by the com. on Sān Sr. S IV 4. 10–15 takes a very strict view 'ऊनो वाप्यधिको वापि यः स्वशाखोदितो विधि। तेन सन्तनुयाद्यज्ञं न कुर्यात्पारतन्त्रिकम्॥' who have shaved themselves and pared their nails, should offer them materials for brushing the teeth and request them to sit down on separate seats, then give them oil and water for bathing. It will be seen that here the purāna has added several details that were not provided for by the Āśv. gr. (n. 966), Manu (III. 208), Yāj. (I. 226) and even by some of the purānas such as the Varāha 14. 8, which begin the procedure with seating the brāhmanas in the afternoon on seats after welcoming them. Many more examples could be given, but that attempt is not made owing to considerations of space.

1015 ततो निवृत्ते मध्याह्ने भुक्तवोननखान् द्विजान्। अवगम्य (अभिगम्य?) यथामार्गं प्रयच्छेद्वन्तधावनम्। आसध्वमिति सङ्कल्पजासीरंस्ते पृथक् पृथक्। तैलमभ्यञ्जनं स्नानं स्नानीयं च पृथग्विधम्। कूर्मे (उत्तरार्ध 22 20–21) In B I edition the order of verses is different. The first is quoted by हेमाद्रि (on आ) p 1167 from देवल and कूर्म and by कल्पतरु (आ p. 117) from देवल.

Before proceeding to give some idea as to how the pārvaṇa-śrāddha was dealt with in medieval and modern times, observations must be made on several relevant matters, on which there is a difference of views or which are important in a general way.

When the invited brāhmanas come after noon, it is provided in some of the purānas that two maṇḍalas should be made in front of the performer's residence for receiving the brāhmanas. For example, the Nāradapurāna states[1016] 'the mandala for a brāhmana performer should be square (four cornered) in size, for a kṣatriya triangular, circular for a vaiśya and for a śūdra mere sprinkling of the ground with water is enough.' The maṇḍalas should be made on ground smeared with cowdung and with water mixed with cow's urine. Of the two mandalas one should be on the northern side sloping towards the north and the other on the southern side sloping towards the south. On the northern mandala kuśas with points towards the east should be placed along with aksata (unbroken or whole) grains and on southern one double-folded kuśas should be placed along with sesamum grains. The northern mandala should generally be two cubits on each side while the southern one should be four cubits on each side. The brāhmana or brāhmanas that represent the Viśvedevāh should be honoured in the northern mandala first by the performer himself with water for washing their feet after bending his right knee and the brāhmanas representing the pitrs should be then honoured in the southern mandala with water for washing the feet (hence called pādya) after bending his left knee. The mantra at the time of offering pādya is 'śan no devīr' Rg. X. 9. 4).[1017] After the mantra is recited he should give the water to the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas and to the pitrya brāhmaṇas as noted below (in n.1017). After the pādya water is offered the brāhmaṇas should come in front of the maṇḍalas and sip water (take ācamana).

1016 श्राद्धार्थं समनुज्ञात· कारयेन्मण्डलद्वयम् । चतुरस्र ब्राह्मणस्य त्रिकोणं क्षत्रियस्य च । वैश्यस्य वर्तुलं ज्ञेयं शूद्रस्याभ्युक्षणं भवेत् ॥ नारदपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 28 32-33); सौरपुराण (19. 13-14) has almost the same verse as चतुरस्रं etc. Vide अपरार्क p 475 for मण्डलs.

The ancient sūtras and smṛtis like those of Manu and Yāj. (I. 229) say generally that the Viśvedevāḥ are to be invoked, but some of the later smṛtis (such as Prajāpati, verses 179–190) and purāṇas contain verses enumerating ten names of Viśvedevās and assign two each (out of the ten) to five classes of śrāddhas They say: [1018] "in śrāddha performed in an iṣṭi the Viśvedevas are Kratu and Dakṣa, in a Nāndīmukha śrāddha they are Vasu and Satya, in Kāmyaśrāddha Dhuri and Locana, in naimittika śrāddha Kāla and Kāma and in Pārvaṇa-śrāddha Purūravas and Ārdrava'. According to the Sm. C. and Hemādri a seat (āsana) is to be given to the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas and invocations are to be made in the several śrāddhas after taking the names enumerated above. The Mit on Yāj I. 229, Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 1225) and other digests state that the mantras

---

1017. ॐ नो देवीरिति मन्त्रं पठित्वा पुरूरवार्द्रवसञ्ज्ञका विश्वेदेवा इदं वः पाद्यमिति दद्यात्। एवं पित्र्यौ ब्राह्मणपादयोरपि शन्नो देवीति मन्त्रान्ते पितरस्त्वकगोत्रासुकशर्मन् वसुरूप इदं ते पाद्यमिति दद्यात्। मद. पा p. 567.

1018. क्रतुर्दक्षो वसु सत्यः काल कामस्तथैव च। धुरिश्चारोचनश्चैव तथा चैव पुरूरवा:। आर्द्रवश्च दशैते तु विश्वे देवाः प्रकीर्तिता। बृहस्पति q. by अपरार्क p 478, कल्पतरु (श्रा. p. 142), स्मृतिच (श्रा pp 442-443); the words विश्वे देवाः are to be kept separate and not compounded. 'इष्टिश्राद्धे क्रतुर्दक्ष सत्यो नान्दीमुखे वसु' नैमित्तिके कालकामौ काम्ये च धुरिलोचनौ॥ पुरूरवा आर्द्रवश्च पार्वणे समुदाहृतौ। वृद्ध q. by अपरार्क p. 478, श्रा. म p 23, मद् पा (p 573-574) which explains 'इष्टिश्राद्धमाधानादौ क्रियमाण ... । नैमित्तिके सपिण्डीकरणे। कामनयानुष्ठेयगयामहालयादि श्राद्धे काम्यम्। इष्टिश्राद्ध is the कर्माङ्गश्राद्ध, 9th among the 12 श्राद्धs quoted above from विश्वामित्र (in n 858) The श्रा. म p. 23 notes the different readings of some of the names such as पुरूरवस् and आर्द्रव, some saying the first is पुरूरव and the second is मार्द्रव The printed आद्धतत्त्व p 199 has मार्द्रव and so has दोडरानन्द (श्राद्धसौख्य folio 57 a) श्राद्धतत्त्व explains इष्टिश्राद्ध as इच्छाश्राद्ध and नैमित्तिक as एकोद्दिष्ट. The श्रा कि कौ (p 56) reads पुरोरवा' and मार्द्रवः' कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 142) reads मार्द्रवश्च दशैते तु The ब्रह्माण्डपुराण (III. 3. 30–31) enumerates the ten विश्वेदेवा somewhat differently. It reads 'पुरूरवो मार्द्रवसो रोचमानश्च' The ब्रह्माण्ड (III. 12. 3 ff.) states that ten sons were born to विश्वा, one of the daughters of दक्ष. When they performed severe tapas on a Himālaya peak Brahmā gave them the boon they wanted (आद्धेरमाऊ भवेद्देशो क्षेत्र न क्षालितो वर.) and the pitrs agreed. The pitrs said (verse 13) 'अग्रे दत्त्वा तु युष्माकमस्माकं दास्यते तत। विसर्जनमथास्माकं पूर्वं पश्चात्तु दैवतम्॥.' This legend is obviously an attempt to explain the usage about vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas at a श्राद्ध.

for invoking the Viśvedevas in Pārvana-śrāddha are two viz. 'Viśvedevāsa āgata' (Rg. II. 41. 13) and 'āgacchantu mahābhāgā' (q. above in note 984), while the Sm. C. (p. 444) prescribes an additional mantra 'viśve devāh śrunuta' (Rg. VI. 52. 13).

The general rule is that the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas are to be seated facing the east and the pitrya brāhmanas facing the north (Yāj I. 228, Varāha 14. 11), but there were at least five differing views about the directions which the brāhmanas were to face as Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 1200) points out. It is further pointed out by Hemādri and others (like Yāj I. 247) that in all items in the procedure of śrāddha the Vaiśvadevika brāhmanas have precedence except in the matter of washing the hand smeared with the remains of food and the final dismissal of the brāhmanas at the end of the śrāddha.[1019] It may be noted that in southern and western India brāhmanas invited at śrāddha are worshipped, while in Bengal it is the effigy made with darbhas (darbhabatu) that is worshipped as shown by the late M. M. Haraprasad Shastri (Catalogue of Mss. vol. III p. 406). The Śrāddha-tattva (folio 2b) of Raghunandana provides for the same: 'purūravā-mādravaso viśvesām devānām pārvana-śrāddham kuśamayabrāhmane karisye iti prcchet.'

In the Vāyupurāṇa[1020] it is stated that the following mantra should be repeated thrice at the beginning and end of a śrāddha and at the time of offering pindas; on repeating it the pitrs come quickly to the śrāddha and rāksasas run away and that the mantra saves the pitrs in all the three worlds. The mantra is 'Perpetual adoration to the gods, to pitrs and to the great Yogins, to svadhā, to svāhā'. The Sm C (on śrāddha

---

1019. उच्छिष्टावलिसहस्तक्षालनं विसर्जनं च वर्जयित्वा सर्वेषा श्राद्धीयपदार्थानां वैश्वदेविकपूर्वकत्वात् । हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p 1196 This is supported by विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 140. 15 'वैश्वदेवनिविष्टानां चरमं हस्तधावनम्। विसर्जन च निर्दिष्ट तेषु रक्षा यत. स्थिता ॥ '

1020. मन्त्रे वक्ष्याम्यह तस्मादमृतं ब्रह्मनिर्मितम्। देवताभ्यः पितृभ्यश्च महायोगिभ्य एव च। नम स्वधायै स्वाहायै नित्यमेव भवन्युत। आद्यावसाने श्राद्धस्य त्रिरावर्त जपेत्सदा। पिण्डनिर्वापणे चैव जपेदेतत्समाहितः। पितर. क्षिप्रमायान्ति राक्षसा. प्रद्रवन्ति च। पितृंस्तत्त्रिषु लोकेषु मन्त्रोऽयं तारयत्युत ॥ वायुपुराण 74 15–18. These verses are स्कन्द VII. 1. 206. 114–116, ब्रह्माण्ड III. 11. 17–18, विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I 140. 68–72 (with slight variations). The मन्त्र occurs in गरुडपुराण (आचारखण्ड) 218 6. कल्पतरु (श्रा) p. 144 quotes these. In most other purānas the मन्त्र ends 'नित्यमेव नमो नमः' हेमाद्रि (on श्राद्ध pp 1079 and 1208) calls it ससार्चिस् and notes that it occurs in seven purānas. It is stated in some works that the reading भवन्युत is for followers of सामवेद अत्र सम्बन्धनामगोत्रशब्दानां नानाक्रमदर्शनाद्विकल्पः। स ऐच्छिकः शाखाभेदेन वा व्यवस्थित. । श्रा प्र. p. 29.

p. 441) states that the mantra should be repeated after the brāhmaṇas come and sit down and before kuśas are placed on the seats of the brāhmaṇas This mantra occurs also in Brahmapurāna 220. 143, Brahmānda (Upodghātapāda 11. 22), Viṣṇudharmottara I. 140 68–70 and is styled 'saptārcis' by the last two and is said to be equal to Aśvamedha

A certain order of words about referring to the ancestors in offering a seat, offering kuśas on seat, and arghya is laid down by Brhaspati,[1021] some of the purāṇas and the digests. As almost in every case there are different views here also. Bṛhaspati says: 'when giving a seat, when offering arghya, or pindas, in offering ablutions of water on pindas, the performer has to declare his relation to each of the ancestors, the names and gotras of the ancestors and also the form in which each of the ancestors is to be contemplated (viz as Vasu, Rudra, Āditya respectively). It is further laid down that the genitive is to be employed for the ancestor's name in offering a seat (to the pitṛya brāhmaṇa) and akṣayyodaka, the objective in invoking the pitṛs, the dative in offering food, the vocative in other cases.

It is laid down that the performer has to take ācamana (sip water) in śrāddha rite six times viz., at the commencement of śrāddha, when washing the feet of invited brāhmanas, in worshipping them, in making the vikara, in offering pindas and at the end of the śrāddha [1022]

1021 आसने चार्घ्यदाने च पिण्डदानेऽवनेजने। सम्बन्धनामगोत्राणि यथार्हमनुकीर्तयेत्॥ बृहस्पति q. by हेमाद्रि (on श्रा p 1257). The word आसन is only illustrative and is meant to include आवाहन and other विश्व items. अक्षय्यासनयोः षष्ठी द्वितीयावाहने तथा। अन्नदाने चतुर्थी स्याच्छेषाः सम्बुद्धयः स्मृता॥ सम्बन्धं प्रथमं ब्रूयात् नामगोत्रं ततैव च। पश्चाद्रूपं विजानीयात् क्रम एष सनातन॥ श्राद्धकालिका folios 6b and 7a, श्राद्धसंग्रह q by स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p. 442 and p. 449. The verse अक्षय्यासन० is found in नारदपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 28. 38) also. The स्मृत्यर्थसार (p 50) quotes it as from श्लोकसंग्रहकारस्मृति. The formula may be 'ओं अमुकगोत्राणाममुकशर्मणामस्मत्पितृणां सपत्नीकानां वसुरूपाणामिदमासनम्'; then in place of पितृणां पितामहानां and प्रपितामहानां and in place of वसुरूपाणां, रुद्ररूपाणां and आदित्यरूपाणां will have to be respectively employed The words may also be employed in the singular as the स्मृतिच. (श्रा p 449) says 'एतासु च षष्ठ्यादिविभक्तिषु सर्वत्रैकवचनबहुवचनयोर्विकल्प एव स्मृतिपुराणगृह्यादिषु पितृपितामहादिशब्दानां क्वचिदेकवचनान्तया क्वचिद्बहुवचनान्तया च प्रयोगदर्शनात्।'.

1022. स्मृत्यन्तरे। आद्यारम्भेऽवसाने च पादशौचे द्विजार्चने। विकिरे पिण्डदाने च षट्सु चाचमन चरेत्॥ q by पृथ्वीचन्द्र (on श्रा) folio 62a.

An important question which exercised the minds of many medieval writers was 'who was the real recipient (sampradāna)[1023] of the offerings made in śrāddha, whether the brāhmaṇas or the pitṛs'. Relying on the words of the Āśv. gr. IV. 8. 1 (quoted above in n. 966 'etasmin kāle ... dānam) and passages of the purāṇas such as the Varāha (13. 51) 'vibhave sati viprebhyo asmān uddiśya dāsyati', the Mahārṇavaprakāśa, Harihara and some others held that brāhmaṇas were the recipients, while others like Śrīdatta, relying on indications furnished by śruti passages like Vāj. S. 19. 36 (akṣan pitaraḥ amīmadanta pitaraḥ) and such formulas as 'pitar-etat te arghyam' or 'etadvaḥ pitaro vāsaḥ,' hold that the real recipients intended were the pitṛs, but, as the pitṛs had gone to another world and could not be bodily present to receive the gifts of such things as sandlewood paste, flowers and clothes, the latter were only handed over or assigned to the brāhmaṇas who were for the moment contemplated as not different from the pitṛs.[1023a] Vide Sm. C. (śrāddha pp. 447–449), Śr. Pr. pp. 30–31 for a discussion of these two view-points. It should, however, be noted that the water given to the brāhmaṇas and the dakṣiṇā given to them were only meant for the brāhmaṇas, the former for purification and the latter for the inexhaustible merit that dakṣiṇā to brāhmaṇas conferred.

It is to be noted that in the invocation (āvāhana) of the pitṛs there is a divergence of views as to the mantras to be employed and also as to the stage when it is to be made. Hemādri (śrāddha, pp. 1254–56) states that there were five different views on the latter point, the three most important of which were that āvāhana should come before giving darbhas as āsana on the left side of the seats of the pitṛya brāhmaṇas or after giving such darbhas or after agnaukaraṇa. As regards the former (viz. the mantras), Yāj. (I. 232–233), the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa and several others say that the invocation mantra is 'uśantas-tvā' (Rg. X 16. 12, Vāj. S 19 70, Tai S II. 6. 12. 1) and after the āvāhana the performer should perform japa of the verse 'ā yantu naḥ' (Vāj. S. 19. 58). The Viṣnudharma-sūtra[1024] (73. 10–12) states 'The performer after having received 1023. For the meaning of संप्रदान, vide पा. I. 4 32 'कर्मणा यमभिप्रैति स संप्रदानम्'.

1023 a. Vide n. 911 for the विष्णुपुराण passage (III 14. 22–23) which means 'that will give jewels &c to brāhmaṇas for our benefit'.

1024. ततो ब्राह्मणाऽनुज्ञातः पितॄनावाहयेत्। अपचन्त्वसुरा इति द्वाभ्यां तिलैर्यातुधानानां विसर्जनं कृत्वा। एत पितरः सवीरेतानग्न आ मे यन्त्वेतद्वः पितर इत्यावाहनं कृत्वा ...। विष्णु.

(Continued on the next page)

permission from the brāhmanas should invite the Manes. Having driven away the Yātudhānas (demons) by strewing grains of sesamum and by reciting the two mantras (the first of which begins with 'may the Asuras go away') he should invite the Manes with the four mantras 'come near, ye Manes!', 'conduct them here, O Agni!', 'May my (ancestors) come near', 'this is your (share), O Manes'. Hemādri (śrāddha pp. 1260–1267) points out how the mantras differ according to different writers.

There is a great deal of discussion about agnaukarana mentioned in Yāj. I. 236–237. The Mit points out that if a man has kept śrauta fires by the sarvādhāna method then in the pārvana-śrāddha that he offers after pindapitryajña he offers homa in the Daksināgni, as he has no aupāsana (i. e. grhya) fire and supports this by quoting a passage which occurs in the Visnudharmottara-purāna.[1025] But if a man consecrates the śrauta fires by the ardhādhāna[1026] method, then he has to offer pārvana homa in the aupāsana fire and one who is without śrauta fires and has kept up only aupāsana fire has to offer homa in that fire. One who has neither the śrauta fires nor the grhya fire offers it in the brāhmana's hand only. The Mit. relies on Manu III. 212 and on two verses from a grhya and comes to the conclusion that one who has consecrated śrauta fires performs homa in daksina fire in the case of Anvastakya śrāddha, the śrāddha on the day previous to Astakā, the śrāddha

---

(Continued from the last page)

धर्मसूत्र 73. 10–12. The commentator notes that here it is the काठकीय-श्राद्ध-प्रयोग that is set out Compare काठकगृह्य 63. 2–4, 10 for all these mantras except one 'पितृनावाहयिष्यामीत्युक्त्वा। अपयन्त्वसुरा इति द्वाभ्यां तिलै. सर्वतोऽवकीर्य। एत पितर आगच्छत पितर आ मे यन्त्वन्तर्धे पर्वतैरिति जपित्वा। ये मामका. पितर एतद्वः पितरोऽयं यज्ञ इति तिसृभि. कल्पितान्नमभिमृशति।.' Dr. Caland (the editor) notes that these are not found in the printed काठकसंहिता. The विष्णुधर्मोत्तर (I. 140. 9–10) corresponds with the विष्णुधर्मसूत्र completely as to the mantras. अन्तर्धे पर्वते.—is आप. म पा II 19. 4.

1025 यथाह मार्कण्डेय.। आहिताग्निस्तु जुहुयाद्दक्षिणाग्नौ समाहितः। अनाहिताग्निस्त्वौपसदे अरण्यभावे द्विजेऽपि वा॥ मिता on या. I. 236. This is विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 140. 18, as हेमाद्रि says 'तदेतदाह विष्णुधर्मोत्तरे मार्कण्डेय.' (श्रा p 1330).

1026 For सर्वाधान and अर्धाधान, vide above n. 991. यतः आद्याङ्गमग्नौकरणहोमो लौकिकाग्नौ न युक्त. किंतु दक्षिणाग्नावेव स च दर्शे एव भवति। अतो दर्शेन विना नाग्नेयोत्रिणः श्राद्धम्। टोडरानन्द (on श्राद्ध folio 24a). न दर्शेन विना श्राद्धमाहिताग्नेर्द्विजन्मनः॥ मनु III. 282, which कुल्लूक explains as 'आहिताग्नेर्द्विजस्य नामावास्याव्यतिरेकेण कृष्णपक्षे दशम्यादौ श्राद्धं विधीयते.'

performed in the dark half of each month on some day from the 5th and in the case of pārvana-śrāddha, but he performs, in the case of kāmya, ābhyudayika, Ekoddista and Astakā śrāddhas, homa only on the pitrya brāhmana's hand; while for one who has kept no sacred fire the homa is to be made only in the pitrya brāhmana's hand. Vide Hemādri (śrāddha pp. 1328–1344), Bālambhatti (on ācāra p. 518). The Todarānanda (śrāddha-saukhya) following Manu III. 282 states that one who is an Agnihotrin cannot perform a pārvana-śrāddha on any day except on darśa (i. e. on amāvāsyā).

Another important question on which there is great divergence concerns the number of āhutis to be offered in agnaukarana, the deities to whom the homa was to be offered, the order in which the deities were to be named and the form of words to be used. On these matters there appears to have been divergent views from very ancient times. According to the Śat. Br. II. 4. 2. 12–13 the āhutis were only[1027] two, they were offered to Agni and Soma in that order and the word svāhā was used at the end. According to the Tai. Br I 3. 10. 2–3[1028] the āhutis were three, they were to be offered to Soma, Agni and to Yama in that order and the formula ended with 'svadhā namah' (and not with 'svāhā'). It is therefore that a verse of Kātyāyana[1029] says "whether to employ the word 'svāhā' or the words 'svadhā namah', whether and when to wear the sacred chord in the yajñopavīta form or prācīnāvīta form and what was to be the number of āhutis—all these have to be understood from one's own sūtra." The difference of views which is noticed as far back as the Brāhmanas persists in the sūtras, smrtis, purānas and is briefly indicated here. The Āp. Gr S. (quoted above in n. 981) speaks of thirteen āhutis, seven with food and 1027. स जुहोति। अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहेत्यग्नौ मेक्षण-मभ्याधाति तत्स्विष्टकृद्भाजनम्। शतपथब्रा. II. 4. 2. 13 The words अग्नये... पितृमते स्वाहा are वाज. सं. II. 29.

---

1028. सोमाय पितृपीताय स्वधा नम इत्याह। ... अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इत्याह य एव पितृणामग्निस्तं प्रीणाति। तिस्र आहुतीर्जुहोति। तै. ब्रा. I 3 10. 2–3, on which सायण explains 'झाखान्तरगतेन यमाधाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते स्वधा नम इति मन्त्रेणैका-माहुतिमभिमेत्य त्रित्वं विदधाति' Vide अथर्व. 18 4. 71–74 also. आप श्रौ. (I 8, 3–4 and 6) says 'सोमाय पितृपीताय स्वधा नम इति दक्षिणाग्नौ जुहोति। यमायाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते स्वधा नम इति द्वितीयाम्। अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इति तृतीयाम्। न यमाय जुहोतीत्येके।'

1029. स्वाहा स्वधानमः संन्यमपसव्यं तथैव च। आहुतीनां तु यो संख्या सोवगम्या स्वसूत्रतः॥ कात्यायन q. by स्मृतिच. (श्रा. p. 458).

six with clarified butter. Two āhutis only are mentioned by Āśv. Śrauta II. 6. 12 (quoted in note 974), Āsv. gr. IV. 7. 20, Śankha-Likhita,[1030] Kāthaka-gṛhya, Nārada-purāna (pūrvārdha 28. 48) and Mārkandeya-purāna. Three āhutis are mentioned by most of the smṛtis and purānas, such as Baud. Dh. S. II. 14. 7,[1031] Śān. Śrauta IV. 3 and gṛhya IV. 1. 13, Viṣnu Dh. S. 73. 12, Manu III. 211, Varāhapurāna[1032] (14. 21–22), Brahmānda-purāna (Upodghātapāda 11. 93–94), Viṣnudharmottara I. 140. 19. It is here that various combinations of the order of the deities and of the words 'svāhā' and 'svadhā' occur. The texts of a few works are cited below for illustration. Some give the order as 'Soma accompanied by the pitṛs, Agni the carrier of kavya, Yama Aṅgiras;' while others give it as 'Agni the carrier of kavya, Soma accompanied by the pitṛs, Yama Vaivasvata &c.' It is further provided that the āhuti to Agni is made to the southern side of the fire, to Soma on the northern part of it and in the middle of the two sides to Vaivasvata (Yama).[1033]

Various rules of etiquette about serving food, about the way brāhmanas are to eat and related matters have been laid down from ancient times and are observed even now. The Sm. C (p. 465–470), Hemādri (śrāddha pp. 1367–1384), the Śr. Pr. pp. 116–123 and other digests contain elaborate rules on these matters. Yāj. I. 237 prescribes that what remains after offering homa should be served in the plates meant for the brāhmanas representing the Fathers and the plates should preferably be 1030 धूपगन्धमाल्यैरलङ्कृत्य ब्राह्मणान्सघृतमन्नमश्नुवाप्य दर्भेर्दक्षिणाग्रैरग्निं परिस्तीर्य जुहुयादग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहेति। शङ्खलिखितौ q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p. 1354), मद् पा p 589; अग्नौ करवाणीत्युक्त्वा। अग्निं परिस्तीर्य सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमोऽग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इत्यग्नौ हुत्वा। काठकगृह्य 63. 89, उपासनाग्निमाधाय स्वगृह्योक्तविधानतः। सोमाय च पितृमते स्वधा नम इतीरयेद्॥ अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इतीह वा। स्वाहान्तेनापि वा प्राज्ञो जुहुयात्पितृयज्ञवत्॥ नारद (पूर्वार्ध 28. 48–49).

---

1031. अन्नस्यैव तिस्र आहुतीर्जुहोति। सोमाय पितृपीताय स्वधा नमः स्वाहा। यमायाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते स्वधा नम. स्वाहा। अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्विष्टकृते स्वधा नमः स्वाहेति। तच्छेषेणान्नमभिधार्यान्नस्यैता एव तिस्रो जुहुयात्। बौ. ध. सू. II. 8. 8–12 It should be noted that बौ employs both स्वधा नमः and स्वाहा. अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा यमायाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते स्वाहेति। शाङ्खायनश्रौत IV. 4 1.

1032. अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहेति प्रथमाहुतिः। सोमाय वै पितृमते दातव्या तदनन्तरम्॥ वैवस्वताय चैवान्या तृतीया दीयते हुति.॥ वराहपु. 14 21–22, सोमायादौ पितृमते कव्यवाहनाय चाग्नये। यमाय चैवाङ्गिरसे हुत्वा प्रयतमानसः। विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 140. 19–20; मार्कण्डेय (28.47–48) prescribes the आहुतिs as अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा, सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा, यमाय वैवस्वते स्वाहा।.

1033. दक्षिणतोऽग्नये नित्यं सोमायोत्तरतस्तथा। एतयोरन्तरे नित्यं जुहुयाद्वै विचक्षणे॥ q. by कल्पतरु (श्रा. p. 169).

of silver. Kātyāyana says that the performer who has no fire (either śrauta or smārta) should offer the homa on the hand of the most eminent among the pitrya brāhmaṇas to the accompaniment of a mantra and should offer the remainder in the plates of the other pitrya brāhmaṇas.[1033] The Sm. C. notes that Yama and the Vāyupurāna say that the homa should be in the hand of the daiva brāhmaṇa and that on account of this conflict there is an option. It is further provided that a portion of the food from which agnaukaraṇa was effected should be kept aside for making piṇḍas (Mārkaṇḍeya and Garuḍa). The food should be served by the performer himself wearing the sacred thread in the yajñopavīta form or by his wife of the same caste or by some attendant who is purified. Manu (III. 224–229, 231–233, 236–238) contains several rules[1034a] 'Himself holding the vessels full of food with both hands the performer should slowly place them near the brāhmaṇas seated for dinner while thinking of his ancestors. That food, which is brought near the brāhmaṇas without (the containing vessel being held in) both hands, is snatched away by wicked asuras. The performer being himself pure and concentrating his mind (only on the serving of food) should place the vessels containing the 1034. पिण्डे यः पाङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यस्तस्य पाणावनग्निमान् । हुत्वा मन्त्रवदन्येषां तूष्णीं पात्रेषु निक्षिपेत् । गोभिल II. 120 q by स्मृतिच. II p. 462.

---

1034 a. मनु III. 225 is almost the same as Baud. Dh. S II. 8. 22 and Vas XI. 25. मनु III 224 is पाणिभ्यां तूपसंगृह्य स्वयमन्नस्य वर्धितम् । विमान्तिके पितृन्ध्यायञ् शनकैरुपनिक्षिपेत्॥. अन्नस्य is to be taken as अन्नेन and पितॄन् is to be understood after वर्धितम्. The श्राद्धतत्त्व (p. 229) explains: 'पाकस्थालया आकृष्य मधुसंभोजनपात्रे न देयं किन्तु स्थाल्यादिकं पाणिभ्यां पात्रसमीपे भूमौ संस्थाप्य पश्चादुभाभ्यां पाणिभ्यां पात्रान्तरिताभ्यां श्राद्धे परिवेशयत्' and relies on मत्स्य 17. 28 'उभाभ्यामपि हस्ताभ्यामादृत्य परिवेशयेत्'. ब्रह्मोद्याश्च—मनु III. 231. ब्रह्मोद्यs are such riddles, questions and answers as are found in Tai. S. VII. 4 18, वाज स ञ23. 9-12 (क. स्विदेकाकी चरति etc.) and 23. 45–62; Ait Br. (अथ ब्रह्मोद्यं वदन्त्यग्निर्गृहपतिरिति हैक आहु. ॥) Or ब्रह्मोद्य may mean, as explained by मेधा० (ब्रह्मणि वेदे या उद्यन्ते कथ्यन्ते ता ब्रह्मोद्याः), the legends of the wars of gods and asuras, the slaughter of Vṛtra, the story of Saramā &c. Or ब्रह्मोद्या कथाः may mean 'talks relating to the exposition of Brahma' (the cause of the world), as Kullūka explains. विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81. 19 is हविर्गुणाश्च ब्राह्मणा ह्युदाहृता पृष्टाः. This is like Manu III 236. मनु III. 237 is the same as वसिष्ठ XI 32, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 81. 20, Aṅgiras verse 133, Bṛhad-Yama III. 27, Laghu-Śātātapa 103, Viṣṇudharmottara I. 140 46. About the sacred texts and other verses to be recited by the performer (being upavītin) while the brāhmaṇas are dining, vide above p 445 and notes 994 and 994a. जमदग्नि says 'अपसव्येन कर्तव्यं सर्वं श्राद्धं यथाविधि । सूक्तस्तोत्रजपं कृत्वा विप्राणां च विसर्जनम्'' q. by श्राद्धम of पृथ्वीच folio 101a.

side dishes viz. broths, vegetables, milk, curds, ghee and honey on the ground (and not on a wooden stool or the like). The vessels placed on the ground should contain various kinds of food (such as sweetmeats, pāyasa), fruits and roots, delicious flesh, spiced or perfumed drinks. Having brought near the brāhmanas all the vessels containing food, he should serve it in the plates declaring the characteristic of each kind of food (saying ' this is sweet, this is sour ' &c.). The performer while serving should not shed tears (remembering his ancestors), he should not become angry, should not utter falsehood, he should not touch the (vessel containing) food with his foot and should not serve food with a violent jerk. Whatever is liked by the brāhmanas should be served to them without any grumbling and he should talk about Brahma (or about Vedic riddles), because that is agreeable to the pitrs. The performer himself, being pleased, should (by his sweet speech) gladden the brāhmanas, should make them partake of food without hurry, and should urge them on frequently (to take more food) by declaring the good points of the various items of food. All food should be steaming hot and the brāhmanas should partake of it silently and should not themselves speak of the good points of the food even when questioned by the performer. When the food is hot, when the brāhmanas eat in silence and when the good qualities of the food are not declared by the brāhmanas, the Fathers partake of it. When a brāhmana (at a śrāddha dinner) partakes of food, having his head covered with a garment (a turban &c)or facing the south or having his sandals on, evil spirits partake of the food (and not the Fathers).' As early as Gaut., it is provided that the food for the brāhmanas should be of the highest sort and should be enriched by condiments and flavoured.

Some of the other rules are : The Prajāpati-smrti (verses 57–62) states who should cook the food for the śrāddha dinner. The wife, any fortunate (or handsome) woman of the performer's gotra whose husband is living and who has a son or brother and is devoted to waiting upon her elders, the performer's teacher's wife, his maternal uncle's wife, paternal or maternal aunt, his sister, his daughter or daughter-in-law, all of them having their husbands alive, should engage in the cooking of the food for śrāddha. Women of good family, who have a large progeny, whose husbands are alive and who are about 50 years old or these women if they have become widows, and the wife of one's paternal uncle or brother, one's mothers (natural or step-mothers) and the mothers of one's father may cook the śrāddha food and also a woman of the same gotra who is mild by temper. In the Anuśāsana parva (92.15) it is stated that a woman belonging to a gotra other than that of the deceased should not be employed for cooking śrāddha food. One's brother, paternal uncle, brother's son, sister's son, one's son, pupil, one's daughter's son or daughter's husband may also engage in cooking the śrāddha food, but not a woman who wears a white and wet garment, who has let her hair loose, who does not wear a bodice, who is ill or who has bathed her head. Before the brāhmaṇas begin to eat, the food should be first served in the plates for the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas and then in those of the pitrya brāhmaṇas (Viṣṇu Dh S. 73 13–14), but once the brāhmaṇas have begun to eat there is no such precedence, whatever each brāhmaṇa may be noted as requiring should be served to him (as indicated by Manu III. 231). The performer of the śrāddha when serving food to the brāhmaṇas (including pitrya) wears his sacred thread in the upavīta form Though it is said that the food should be hot, that does not apply to such eatables as curds, fruits and roots and flavoured[1035] drinks (as Śaṅkha XIV.13 and Skandapurāṇa say) As Hemādri (śrāddha p. 1371) points out, the serving of food in a śrāddha rite should be done with the right hand supported by the left; besides, nothing should be served with the bare hand or with a single hand, but with a wooden ladle or other utensil (but not an iron one). All cooked food, all side dishes and ghee should be served with a ladle (and not with the bare hand) but not water or eatables like laḍḍus No salt was to be directly served (Viṣṇu Dh S. 79. 12). In Kātyāyana's Śrāddha-sūtra it is provided[1036] "The food that remains after agnaukaraṇa should be served in the plates of the pitrya brāhmaṇas and the performer should touch each plate for those brāhmanas after repeating the mantra 'the earth is thy vessel, the sky is the cover, I offer nectar in the brāhmana's nectar-like mouth; svāhā'. Then the performer plunges the (-right) thumb of the pitrya brāhmana in the food (the remains of the homa in fire) with the rk or yajus addressed to Visnu; and after scattering sesamum grains all round the place where the dinner is to go on with the mantra 'the asuras and rāksasas) are struck and driven away' he (the performer) should serve hot food very much liked (by the departed or by the brāhmanas)". Yāj. I. 238 briefly refers (as translated above) to the mantras and the item of plunging the thumb of the brāhmanas in the food; and so does the Baud. Dh. S. also (II. 8. 15–16). The Kālikā-purāna prescribes[1037] that the thumb of the brāhmana should be moved about in the food covered with ghee and honey with the mantra 'the earth is thy vessel &c.' because Visnu in the form of the thumb protects food meant for sacrifices to gods and manes. The Baud. Pitrmedhasūtra provides that while plunging the thumb of the brāhmana in the food served it should be so arranged that the nail of the thumb is not smeared with food.[1038] Vasistha provides that the brāhmanas eating śrāddha food should always hold the plate from which they are eating with (the left) hand till the end of the dinner. Śankha-Likhita provide[1039] that brāhmanas (eating śrāddha food) should not declare the good or bad points of the food served, should not say what is untrue, should not praise each other, nor should they say 'there is plenty of food and drink (and so do not serve more food),

---

1035. उष्णमन्न द्विजातिभ्यः श्रद्धया विनिवेदयेत्॥ अन्यत्र फलपुष्पेभ्य. पानकेभ्यश्च पण्डित.॥ हस्ते दत्त्वा तु वै स्नेहाँल्लवणव्यञ्जनानि च। आयसेन च पात्रेण तद्वै रक्षांसि भुञ्जते॥ स्कन्दपुराण VII 206 37-39; शङ्ख (14 12–13) has the first verse but with slight variations and also कूर्म II. 22. 64, शक्तितः प्रकर्षेद् गुणसस्कारविधिरन्नस्य। गौ. 15. 6.

1036. पिण्डपितृयज्ञवद्धुत्वा हुतशेषं दत्त्वा पात्रमालभ्य जपति पृथिवी ते पात्रं द्यौरपिधानं ब्राह्मणस्य मुखे अमृते अमृत जुहोमि स्वाहेति वैष्णव्यर्चा चक्षुषा वाङ्मनसेऽवघ्राप्यहता इति तिलान् प्रकीर्योष्णं स्विष्टमन्नं यथाशक्त्या वा। कात्या० श्राद्धसूत्र 3 quoted and explained by हेमाद्रि on श्राद्ध p 1374. The वैष्णवी rk is 'इदं विष्णुर्विचक्रमे' (ऋ I. 22.17) and वैष्णवी yajus is 'विष्णो हव्यं रक्षस्व' (तै सं. I. I. 3. 1. वाज सं. I. 4), अपहता:—is वाज. सं. II. 29.

---

1037. भूत्वाङ्गुष्ठं द्विजाना तु आवर्त्याज्यमधुप्लुते। पृथिवी त इति मन्त्रेण हव्यकव्ये च रक्षयेत्॥ विष्णुर्ह्यङ्गुष्ठरूपेण तस्य चान्नस्य रक्षिता। कालिकापुराण q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1378) अथैतानि ब्राह्मणेभ्य उपनिक्षिप्य ब्राह्मणस्याङ्गुष्ठेनानखेनानुदिशति-असृग्मा उपतिष्ठतु—इति। बौ पितृमेधसूत्र II. 9 19 (Mysore ed)

1038 तस्माद्दक्षिण (न्य?) हस्तेन कुर्याद्दक्षसुपागतम्। भोजनं (भाजनं?) वा समालभ्य तिष्ठेतोच्छेषणे शुभे (०तोच्छेषणाद् द्विज ?)॥ वसिष्ठ 11 26 explained by हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p 1024 as 'तस्माद्यदैवान्नसुपागत भवति तत प्रभृत्योच्छेषणात् भुक्तशिष्टान्नस्य भाजनाद्वहि.-करणपर्यन्त वामहस्तेन भाजनं विधृत्य तिष्ठेत्। कण्डूयनाद्यर्थं वामहस्तव्यापारसमये तु दक्षिणहस्तेन भाजन समालभ्य वर्तेतेति तात्पर्यार्थ' श्रा प्र. p 119 reproduces this explanation verbatim.

1039 शङ्खलिखितौ। ब्राह्मणा अन्नगुणं दोषं नाभिवदेयुर्नानृतं ब्रूयुरन्योन्यं न प्रशंसेयुरन्नपानं न प्रभूतमिति ब्रूयुरन्यत्र हस्तसज्ञाया। q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p 1019, श्रा प्र p 118, which says पात्रे प्रभूतमन्नमस्ति अन्यत्र परिवेष्यमिति भोक्तृभिर्न वक्तव्यं किंतु हस्तसङ्केतेन सूचनीयमित्यर्थ'। except by signs made with the hand.' Whatever is offered in a brāhmana's hand (by way of agnaukarana) and whatever food is placed in the plates should be mixed up and eaten. Hemādri quotes passages from the Maitrāyanīya-sūtra and from the Skandapurāna setting out the mantras wherewith certain articles were to be served; e. g. the Skandapurāna says that pāyasa should be served with the verse 'namo vah pitaro' (Vāj. S. II. 32. Tai. S. III. 2. 5. 5), clarified butter with the mantra 'Tejosi śukram', curds with the mantra 'dadhikrāvno' (Rg. IV. 39. 6, Vāj. S. 23. 32, Tai. S. 1. 5. 11. 4). Ap Dh. S. (II. 8. 18. 11) provides that the leavings of a śrāddha dinner should not be given to one who is inferior to the invited brāhmanas in qualities and Manu III. 249 states that the man who after eating śrāddha dinner gives the leavings to a śūdra falls in the Kālasūtra Hell.

The Matsyapurāna and some other works provide that the brāhmanas should pronounce blessings on the performer (who faces the east) after they have sipped water and have been given water, flowers and akṣata grains. The performer prays 'May our Fathers be not terrible (i. e. be kind) to us.' The brāhmanas reply 'let it be so'. The performer prays 'May our family grow', 'May donors increase in our family and also food', 'May these blessings turn out to be true'. To all these the brāhmanas reply after each one of the prayers[1040] 'May it be so'. There are rules about the time when the leavings or particles of food in the plates of the brāhmanas that ate the dinner should be removed or swept away Vas. (XI. 21–22) and the Kūrmapurāna provide that the leavings of food should not be removed till the Sun sets, since streams of nectar flow from them, which are drunk by the (spirits of) those departed persons for whom no water was offered. Manu III. 265 (which is the same as Matsya 17 56 and Padma, Srstikhanda 9.185) provides another rule that the leavings of the food in the plates may remain where they are till the brāhmanas are dismissed and depart.

1040. तत स्वधावाचनिक विश्वेदेवेषु चोदकम् ॥ दत्त्वाशी प्रतिगृह्णीयाद् द्विजेभ्य· प्राङ्मुखो शुध: । अघोरा· पितर: सन्तु सन्त्वित्युक्त· पुनर्द्विजै ॥ गोत्र तथा वर्धता नस्तथेत्युक्तश्च तै: पुन: । दातारो नोऽभिवर्धन्तामिति चैवमुदीरयेत् ॥ एता सत्याशिष· सन्त्वित्युक्तश्च तै पुन । स्वस्तिवाचनिक कुर्यात्पिण्डाञ्छ्रुत्य भक्तित. ॥ मत्स्य 17 52–55 q by हेमाद्रि (आ. p 1482), स्मृतिच (श्रा) p 482, कल्पतरु (श्रा. p. 220). Compare आप औ. I. 10. 4 गृहान् पितरो दत्त सदो वा पितरो देवम । Yāj. I 246 (दातारो नो etc.) is the same as भविष्य I. 185 28

Hemādri (śrāddha, p. 1512)[1041] therefore provides that if the performer has another house the leavings may not be removed till sunset, but if he has only one house, they may be removed after the brāhmanas have gone away (vide Yāj I. 257, Matsya 17.56). It is further provided by Brhaspati[1042] that the plates should not be removed before the brāhmanas pronounce the word 'svasti', and Jātūkarnya[1043] and the Skandapurāna say that the plates and the leavings should be removed by the performer himself or by his pupil or son, but not by women nor by a child nor by one who is not of the same caste Manu III. 258 provides that, after the brāhmanas have left, the performer should look at the south and pray to the pitrs for certain blessings contained in Manu III. 259 which are the same as Yāj I 246 translated above (vide p. 447), Visnu Dh. S 73. 28, Matsya 16. 49–50. The Āp. gr. 209 (q. in note 981), Āp Dh. S II 7. 17. 16, Manu III. 264, Yāj. I. 249 provide that the performer should partake of the remainder of the food cooked for the śrāddha along with his wife, paternal and maternal relatives after reciting (according to Haradatta) the Yājusa mantra (Āp. M. P. II. 20.26) which means 'entering the life breath I offer nectar; my soul is centred in Brahman for the sake of immortality.' The Āp. gr and Āp. Dh. S. provide[1044] that the performer must eat at least a morsel of the food left after serving to the brāhmanas. Vyāsa and Devala prescribe that on the day of śrāddha the performer must not observe a fast (even if he usually does so as on Ekādaśī or Śivarātra). A way out was provided by the Brahmavaivarta-purāna by recommending that the performer should merely smell the remnants of the śrāddha food. Vide

---

1041. श्राद्धे नोद्वासनीयानि उच्छिष्टान्या दिनक्षयात् । श्रद्योतन्ते हि सुधाधारास्ताः पिबन्त्यकृतोदका ॥ वसिष्ठ XI 21, नोद्वासयेत्तदुच्छिष्टं यावच्चास्तमितो रविः । कूर्मपुराण II 22 85 कल्पतरु (श्रा p 227) remarks 'नोद्वासनीयान्युच्छिष्टानीति भूमिष्टोच्छिष्ट-विषयम्। उच्छिष्टं न प्रमृज्यात्-इति भूमिगतोच्छिष्टपात्रविषयम् ।'.

1042. भाजनेषु च तिष्ठत्सु स्वस्ति कुर्वन्ति ये द्विजाः। तद्दत्तमसुरैर्भुक्तं निराशैः पितृभिर्गते ॥ बृहस्पति q. by स्मृतिच. (श्रा p. 482), हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1485)

1043. पात्राणि चालयेच्छ्राद्धे स्वयं शिष्योऽथवा सुतः। न स्त्रीभिर्न च बालेन नासजात्या कथंचन ॥ जातूकर्ण्य q. by स्मृतिच. (श्रा p 482), हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p. 1486, न स्त्रीभिर्न च बालेन नान्येनैव च केनचित्। श्राद्धे पिण्ड च पात्र च स्वयमेव प्रचालयेत् ॥ स्कन्द (नागर खण्ड) q. by हेमाद्रि (श्राद्ध) p 1486.

1044 सर्वेषु वृत्तेषु सर्वतः समवदाय शेषस्य शासावरार्ध्यं प्राश्नीयाद्यथोक्तम्। आप ध सू II 7 17.16. यथोक्त refers to आप गृ 20 9 The यजुस् referred to in the latter is प्राणे निविष्टोऽमृतं जुहोमि ब्रह्मणि मे आत्मामृतत्वाय । आप म पा. II 20. 26. This मन्त्र occurs also in तै. आ X 33.

Hemādri (śrāddha, pp. 1519–1521) for the discussion. Hemādri (p. 1485) refers to the practice (observed even now) that after the performer receives the blessings referred to above, his son, grandson and the like should offer adoration to the devatās in the form of pindas. The brāhmanas should praise the good characteristics of the food served at the end of the śrāddha ceremony.[1045] The brāhmanas should not get up from the dinner, carelessly leaving remnants of food in their plates, but they may leave in the plates a little food except milk, curds, honey or barley flour.[1046]

There were several views as to the exact stage at which the offerings of pindas were to be made. According to Śān. Gr. IV. 1.9., Āśv. gr. IV. 8. 12,[1047] Śankha 14. 11, Manu III. 260–261, Yāj. I 242 and several other works, the performer offers the lumps of boiled rice after the brāhmanas have finished eating their dinner. The pindas are made with boiled rice mixed with sesame and are placed on darbhas on a clean spot and at a distance of about one aratni from[1048] the plates in which the brāhmanas ate and the performer faces the south. Here again there are two opinions, one being that pindas were to be offered before the brāhmanas sip water (perform ācamana) after dinner (e. g. Āśv. gr. IV. 8. 12–13, Śrāddha-sūtra of Kātyāyana, kandikā 3), while others hold that they were to be offered after the brāhmanas have rinsed their mouth and taken ācamana. Another view referred to as the view of some by Śān. gr. IV. 1. 10 and Manu III. 261 was that pindas were to be offered to the ancestors first after honouring the invited brāhmanas or after agnaukarana and then the brāhmanas were to partake of the dinner The 1045. आद्धावसाने कर्तव्या द्विजैरन्नगुणस्तुति । वृद्धवसिष्ठ q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p. 1019).

---

1046. तदाहोशना. । भोजन तु न निःशेषं कुर्यात्प्राज्ञ कथंचन । अन्यत्र दध्नः क्षीराद्वा क्षौद्रात्सक्तुभ्य एव च ॥ q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1026) Acc to मनु III 245–46, विष्णु 81. 22–23, मत्स्य 17. 56–57, the leavings of food in the plates of ब्राह्मणs and the विकिर were the lot of persons of the family dying young, while the leavings of food that fell or were left on the ground were the share of deceased slaves. 'पात्रगतस्योच्छिष्टसमस्रक्षतप्रमीतानां भूमिगतं दासवर्गस्य' हलायुध on कात्यायनs श्राद्धसूत्र (folio 30a) Vide n 1007 above for मनु III 245.

1047. अभिमतेनुमते वा भुक्तवत्स्वनाचान्तेषु पिण्डान्निदधात् । आचान्तेष्वेके । आश्व गृ. IV. 8. 12–13.

1048 सतिलेन ततोऽन्नेन पिण्डान्दर्भे सदैव तु । पित्रुद्दिश्य दर्भेषु दद्याद्दक्षिणसक्थिनो मार्कण्डेयपुराण 28 55 अरत्नि is the hand from the wrist to the small finger.

Brahmāndapurāna [1049] emphatically asserts that this is the correct position as stated by Brhaspati. The Visnu Dh. S. (73 15-24) provides that the pindas are to be offered to the ancestors while the brāhmanas are actually eating. A fourth view is that of the Āp. gr. 24.9, Hir gr. (II. 12.2-3) which state that the performer[1050] should, after the brāhmanas have eaten and gone away and he has followed and circumambulated them, offer pindas. Owing to this conflict of views Hemādri (quoting smrti) and the Madanapārijāta (p 600) say that each one should follow the procedure laid down in his own śākhā [1051] Hemādri adds that those in whose grhyasūtra no special time is mentioned for pindadāna should follow the view that pindas are to be offered after the brāhmanas have partaken of the dinner and sipped water. The Śr. P. (p. 247) endorses this view.[1052] The pindas were to be deposited on bunches of (25) darbhas for each pinda. Aparārka on Yāj. I. 24 states that in all cases without exception pindas were to be offered near the plates from which the brāhmanas took their meals, while Hemādri who relies on Kātyāyana's word 'ucchistasannidhau' says that where the performer is an āhitāgni the pindas were to be offered near his sacred fire, but when a performer had not kept the sacred fires pindas were to be offered near the plates from which brāhmanas ate the śrāddha food. The Śrāddhasāra (p 163) quotes Atri to the effect that pindas should be offered at a distance of three aratnis from where the brāhmanas ate the śrāddha dinner and that in such śrāddhas as Navaśrāddhas Vaiśvadeva is to be performed before pindadāna and that it is to be performed after 1050. भुक्तवतोऽनुमन्त्रय शेषमनुज्ञाप्योदकुम्भं दर्भस्तृतिं चावाय दक्षिणपूर्वमवान्तर-देशं गत्वा दक्षिणाग्रान्दर्भान् संस्तीर्य तेष्ववाचीनपाणिर्दक्षिणापवर्गास्त्रिस्तृदकाञ्जलिं निनयति मार्जयन्तां पितरः सोम्यासः मार्जयन्तां पितामहाः सोम्यासः मार्जयन्तां प्रपितामहाः सोम्यास इति। असावनेनिक्ष्वासावनेनिक्ष्वेति वा। तेष्ववाचीनपाणिर्दक्षिणापवर्गान् पिडान्ददाति। हिरण्य. गृ. II. 12. 2-3. For आप. गृ. vide n 981.

---

1049 पूजनं चैव विप्राणा पूर्वमेवेह नित्यश ॥ तद्धि धर्मार्थकुशलो नेत्युवाच बृहस्पति. । पूर्वं निवेदयेत् पिण्डान् पश्चाद्विप्राश्च भोजयेत् ॥ ब्रह्माण्ड, उपोद्घात 12 24-26. These verses are quoted from ब्रह्मपुराण by कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 221). The सौरपुराण 19. 23 says 'पिण्डनिर्वपणं कृत्वा ब्राह्मणांश्चैव भोजयेत्। केचिदप्येवमिच्छन्ति नैव भानोर्मतं द्विजा. ॥'

1051. तथा च स्मृति. । मुनिभिर्भिन्नकालेषु पिण्डदानं तु यत्स्मृतम्। तत् स्वशाखामतं यत्र तत्र कुर्याद्विचक्षणः ॥ हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1408), who adds 'उपलक्षणं चैतत् स्व-गृह्याद्यनुमतेः। ' pindadāna in Sāmvatsarika śrāddha, Mahālaya and the like (p. 164).

1052 येषां तु गृह्यादौ पिण्डदानकालो नोक्तस्तेषा सौकर्यादाचान्तेष्वित्येव पक्षो ग्राह्य इति बहवः। श्रा. प्र p. 247.

There is another conflict of views as regards the ancestors to whom pindas are to be offered at the śrāddha on amāvāsya. Most of the ancient Vedic works refer only to the three paternal ancestors as the devatās of the Pārvana-śrāddha and not to any other relatives. The three paternal ancestors are separately the devatās of śrāddha and not cumulatively, as indicated by the Āśv. Śrauta II. 6. 15 and Visnu Dh S. 73 13-14. The important questions are whether the wives of the paternal ancestors, viz. the mother, the grandmother and the paternal great-grandmother were associated with their husbands in ancient times and secondly, whether the three paternal ancestors of one's mother viz. the maternal grandfather, the maternal great-grandfather and the maternal great-great-grandfather were invoked together with their wives in the Pārvana The answer to both these questions so far as the Vedas and Brāhmanas are concerned is in the negative. Vide Tai. S. I. 8. 5.1, Tai. Br. I. 3. 10, II. 6. 16, Vāj. Ś. 19 36-37, Śat. Br. II. 4. 2. 16, in all of which the only persons expressly named are the pitrs and three paternal ancestors It may be noted, however, that in Vāj S. 9. 19 (which is cited by Kātyāyana at the end of Śrāddhasūtra 3 as the mantra to be recited when following the brāhmanas that are dismissed) there is a clear reference to paternal ancestors and also to mothers Almost all sūtras also are silent as regards the invocation of the maternal ancestors in Pārvana-śrāddha along with paternal ones. Vide[1053] Āśv. Śr.; Sudarśana on Āp. gr. VIII. 21. 2 states that the Sūtrakāra and Bhāsyakāra did not speak of Mātāmahaśrāddha as it is not obligatory for a daughter's son to offer it. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana[1054] speaks of three pindas being made for the paternal ancestors and three for the mother's paternal ancestors. The Gobhilasmṛti provides[1055] that six pindas should be offered except in the Anvastakāśrāddha, the first śrāddha (on the 11th day), the sixteen śrāddhas and the yearly śrāddha for a deceased person. Dhaumya[1056] prescribes that where the paternal ancestors are honoured (or fed) the maternal ancestors also should be certainly honoured without making any difference (between the two classes); if he makes a distinction the performer will go to Hell. The Visnupurāna,[1057] the Brahmāndapurāna and the Varāhapurāna say that some hold that a śrāddha for maternal ancestors is to be performed separately while other sages hold that one śrāddha is to be offered at the same time to the paternal and maternal ancestors. Brhaspati (q. by Kalpataru on śrāddha p. 204) prescribes[1058] that one should offer pindas made from all food cooked for the śrāddha and mixed with honey and sesamum grains for both paternal and maternal ancestors according to the rules of one's grhyasūtra. The Varāhapurāna (14 40-41) says that pitrya brāhmanas should be dismissed first and then the daiva brāhmanas together with those for the mother's ancestors and that separate pindas were to be offered to the mother's paternal ancestors (14 37). Some held the view that the offering of pindas to maternal ancestors was obligatory for the putrikā-putra[1059] (son of the appointed daughter) or for a daughter's son that inherited the wealth of his maternal grandfather. Brhat-Parāśara (chap. V. p. 153) mentions several views on this point. It seems probable that when the appointment of a

---

1053. तस्या पिण्डान् निर्वपणीयात्परावीनपाणिः पित्रे पितामहाय प्रपितामहायैतत्तेऽसौ ये च त्वामन्वान्वित्रे । आश्व श्रौ. II 6, 15 on which नारायण explains 'निवपणं पिण्डेयेव तीर्थेन । पाणेरुत्तानत्वमञ्जलिवद्व पित्र्येण तीर्थेन यदा कुर्यात् तदा परावीनपाणिर्भवति । असावित्यस्य स्थाने सम्बुद्धयन्तानि पित्रादीनां नामानि गृह्णीयात्।', तस्या refers to त्रेस्रायां

1054. सर्वमन्नमेकतोद्धृत्योच्छिष्टसमीपे दर्भेषु त्रींस्त्रीन् पिण्डानवनेज्य वध्यादाचान्ते-त्विप्येके । ... वाच्यतामित्यनुज्ञात. पितुभ्यः पितामहेभ्य. प्रपितामहेभ्यो मातामहेभ्यः प्रमाता-महेभ्यो वृद्धप्रमातामहेभ्यश्च स्वधोच्यताम् । ... वाजे वाजेऽवतेति विसृज्य आ मा वाजस्यप्रवक्ष्यत्येनुव्रज्य प्रदक्षिणीकृत्योपविशेत् । कात्यायनस्य श्राद्धसूत्र III The मन्त्र reads 'आ मा वाजस्य प्रसवो जगम्यादेने द्यावापृथिवी विश्वरूपे । आ मा गन्तां पितरा मातरा च मा सोमो अमृतत्वेन गम्यात् । वाज. सं 9. 19.

1055. कर्पूसमन्वितं भुक्त्वा तथाद्यश्राद्धषोडशम् । प्रत्याब्दिकं तु शेषेषु पिण्डाः स्युः षडिति स्थिति ॥ गोभिलस्मृति III. 73. कर्पूसमन्वितं is explained by निर्णयसिन्धु (III p 395) and हेमाद्रि as सपिण्डीकरण and by श्रा क्रि. कौ. p 93 as अष्टकाश्राद्ध

1056. पितरो यत्र पूज्यन्ते तत्र मातामहा ध्रुवम् । अविशेषेण कर्तव्य विशेषान्नरकं व्रजेत् ॥ धौम्य q by श्रा. प्र p 14, स्मृतिच. (श्रा p 337) quotes it as स्मृत्यन्तर, the स्मृत्यर्थसार p. 56 merely quotes it (without name) and श्रा. क्रि. कौ. p 93 quotes it from योगियाज्ञवल्क्य.

1057 पृथक्तयो. केचिदाहु श्राद्धस्य करणं नृप । एकत्रैकेन पाकेन वदन्त्यन्ये महर्षय ॥ विष्णुपुराण III 15 17, पृथङ्मातामहानां तु केचिदिच्छन्ति मानवाः । त्रीन् पिण्डानानुपूर्व्येण साङ्कुशान् प्रदिशेन्नाम् ॥ ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद) 11, 61. The verse पृथक्तयो.० is also वराहपुराण 14 12.

1058. सर्वरमात्मकृतादन्नात् पिण्डान् मधुतिलान्वितान् । पितृमातामहादीनां दद्याद्गृह्य-विधानत. ॥ बृहस्पति q by स्मृतिच. (श्रा p. 479), हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p. 1428. It may be noted that या (I. 242) does not mention honey.

1059 Vide मनु IX. 132 and H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 647 and 657 (for पुत्रिकापुत्र).

daughter as a son became rare or went out of vogue the maternal ancestors came to be associated with the paternal ancestors in pārvaṇa-śrāddha.

The question when the wives of ancestors became associated with the male ancestors cannot be solved satisfactorily. The pitāmahī is not mentioned in the extant Vedic Literature. But it is certain that the wives of male ancestors had come to be associated with their husbands in the sūtra period. For example, the Hir. Gr. II. 10 associates the mother, the paternal grandmother and the paternal great-grandmother with their respective husbands in the monthly śrāddha performed in the dark half. Similarly, the Baud. gr. II. 11.34 not only associates in the Aṣṭakā śrāddha the male maternal ancestors with the male paternal ancestors, but also their respective wives. The Āp. M. P.[1060] has mantras referring to the three male paternal ancestors as well as their wives. The Śān. gr. (IV. 1.11) provides that behind the lumps for the paternal ancestors the performer places the lumps for their wives, putting something between the two sets of pindas and the commentator explains that darbhas are placed between the two sets. The Kauśika sūtra (88 12) also provides for the offering of pindas to the wives of male ancestors to the south of the pindas for male ancestors. The Āśv. gr. (II. 5. 4–5), while speaking of the Anvastakya rite, refers to pindas to be offered to the wives of ancestors with the addition of rum and the scum of boiled rice. The Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra IV. 7 (after describing the Pinda-pitryajña in IV. 5–6) notes that the difference between it and the ordinary monthly śrāddha is that in the latter pindas are offered to the wives of the pitṛs[1061]. Dr. Caland (in 'Ahnencult' p. 164) thinks that this inclusion of the women ancestors among those to whom pindas were to be offered was made by taking over from Anvastakya ceremonial described above. This conjecture does not look very probable. The Aṣṭakā rites existed from remote antiquity as shown above. If the offering of pindas to women ancestors were borrowed from the Anvastakya 1060. मार्जयन्तां मम पितरो मार्जयन्तां मम पितामहा मार्जयन्तां मम प्रपितामहा॰ ॥ मार्जयन्तां मम मातरो मार्जयन्तां मम पितामह्यो मार्जयन्तां मम प्रपितामह्य । आप. म पा. II. 19. 2–7.

1061. अथ श्राद्धं मासि मासि मासपरपक्षेऽन्यतमेऽन्यज्जन्मर्क्षे ब्राह्मणनिमन्त्रणादि सर्वमटकावत्। तथाज्यचरू हुत्वार्क्षं पिण्डार्थं पात्रे समवदाय ब्राह्मणान्भोजयित्वा नमो व॰ पितरो रसायेति पिण्डं प्रथमं पितृभ्यो नमो वः पितरः सोम्यास इति द्वितीयतृतीयौ पितामहप्रपितामहाभ्याम्। पितृभ्यस्तत्पत्नीभ्यः पिण्डानर्पयतीति विशेषः। वैखानसशास्त्र IV. 7.

this item would have figured in all sūtras just as Aṣṭakā śrāddha does. It is rather more probable that the extension to women was a natural growth in course of time. Some of the smṛtis emphasize the participation of the wives of paternal ancestors in the pārvaṇaśrāddha offerings. Śātātapa states[1062]: 'In what is offered to the pitṛs after Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa, the mother is a participant everywhere. A śrāddha may be separately offered to the mother in the Anvaṣṭakā rites, in Vṛddhi-śrāddha, at Gayā and on the anniversary of the day of her death; but in other cases it is performed along with the husband'. It is stated by Bṛhaspati that the mother partakes of the śrāddha food along with her husband (i. e. the father of the performer); that the same rule applies to the paternal grandmother and the paternal great-grandmother[1063]. The Kalpataru[1064] and others held that the wives of the paternal ancestors were not devatās in the pārvaṇa-śrāddha, but they only enjoyed the ethereal food which came to the pitṛs, while Hemādri and other southern writers held that the mother and other female ancestors were among the devatās of pārvaṇa-śrāddha, but not the step-mother. There was a divergence of views whether the words 'mother', 'paternal grandmother' and 'paternal great-grandmother' included the co-wives (sapatnīs) of these. Hemādri (on śrāddha pp. 97–104) has a long disquisition on this question. According to one view the step-mother, the co-wife of the pitāmahī and the co-wife of the prapitāmahī would be included in 1062. सपिण्डीकरणादूर्ध्वं यत्पितॄन्प्रतीयते। सर्वत्राऽऽभहरा माता इति धर्मेषु निश्चयः॥ अन्वष्टकासु वृद्धौ च गयायां च क्षयेऽहनि। मातुः श्राद्धं पृथक् कुर्यादन्यत्र पतिना सह॥ शातातप q by आ प्र. p. 9, स्मृतिच (आ) p. 369 as स्मृत्यन्तर.

1063. स्वेन भर्त्रा सह श्राद्धं माता भुङ्क्ते स्वधामयम्। पितान्ही च स्वेनैव तथैव प्रपितामही॥ बृहस्पति q. by स्मृतिच (आ.), p. 369, हेमाद्रि (आ) p. 99, आ-प्र p. 9.

1064. न सपत्नीकानां देवत्वनिति कल्पत्वप्रभृतयः। हेमाद्रिप्रभृतयो दक्षिणात्यास्तु... एकस्यामेव आद्धव्यक्तौ पितॄन् तद्योषितश्च देवतात्वेनोद्दिश्येति विधीयते। आ-प्र pp. 9–10. The argument of those who hold the former view is 'सपत्नीकपितृकश्राद्धेऽपि स्त्रीत्वेन पितुरेव देवतात्वं भवेन्न तु विशेषणीभूतायाः पत्न्याः—इति।' डोढरानन्द (आद्धतत्त्व) folio 3a. The आद्धतत्व p. 190 similarly says 'उक्तश्रुत्यादिषु पित्रादीनां प्रत्येकनिर्देशात्, अत्र पितरो देवता इत्यापस्तम्बसूत्रे देवता इति बहुवचननिर्देशात्, न योषिद्भ्य इत्यादिवचनाच्च पित्रादीनां प्रत्येकेन पत्नीनिरपेक्षेण च देवतात्वम्।'. Vide n. 783 for the आप. ध सू passage. न योषिद्भ्य—is apparently गोभिलस्मृति II. 102 'न योषिद्भ्यः पृथग्दद्याद्वसानदिनाहते। स्वमूर्तिपिण्डनाताच्च तृप्तिरासां यतः स्मृता॥'. The कल्पतरु (आद्धकाण्ड p 4) says: नापि पित्रादेः सपत्नीकस्य देवतात्वं तथात्वे प्रमाणाभावात्। मत्स्यु न योषिद्भ्यः पृथदृद्याद्वसानदिनाहते। स्वमूर्तिपिण्डनाताम्यास्तृप्तिरासां यतः स्मृता॥ इति शातातपवचने मर्तृसम्बन्धि पिण्डभागस्यैव पत्नीतृप्तिहेतुत्वेनाभिधानाद् विपरीतमेव प्रमाणमस्ति। कल्पतरु, आ. p. 260.

the presentation formula (as quoted below), while according to Hemādri only the real mother, the real paternal grand-mother and the real paternal great-grandmother would ordinarily be included except on rare occasions such as a Mahālayaśrāddha or a śrāddha at Gayā.[1065]

As regards the mantra to be recited when offering each of the pindas there is some divergence of views, which reaches far into antiquity. The pinda[1066] is offered to each ancestor after stating his gotra, his relationship to the performer and name (all in the vocative). According to several writers the form of the presentation of the pinda is 'this is for thee, O Father! N. N. (by name) and so and so by gotra.' In the Tai. S. I. 8.5 1, in the Ap. M. P. II. 20.13 and in some sūtras, the following is added 'and for those who follow thee' (ye ca tvām-anu)[1067] In the Gobhila-grhya IV. 3 6 and Khādiragrhya the formula is still longer 'This pinda is thine, O father! and of those who follow thee and of those whom thou followest.[1068] To thee, Svadhā!'. The Bhāradvaja[1069] gr. II. 12 introduces slight changes. It has been already noted above (n. 781) how the Śat. Br. disapproves of

---

1065. तदेवमेतल्लिम्पूर्द्धं यद्वहुपत्नीकपित्रादिदेवत्यमावास्यादिसाधारणकालिकश्राद्धप्रयोगे अस्मत्पितर्यंशवत्तशर्मन् वासिष्ठगोत्रामुकाशुकनामिकाभिर्पासिष्ठगोत्राभि. पत्नीभिः सहैतत्तुभ्यमन्नमित्यादिभिः स्त्रीपुसोद्देशोपलक्षितैर्वाक्यैरनुष्ठानं कर्तव्यमिति। This is the पूर्वपक्ष view. हेमाद्रि replies 'अत्र सिद्धान्तोऽभिधीयते। तत्र तावन्नुरुत्वे पार्वणे जननीव्यतिरिक्तानां पितृपत्नीना न सहोद्देशः कार्यः। नापि पितृजननीव्यतिरिक्तानां पितामहपत्नीनां नापि पितामहजननीव्यतिरिक्तानां प्रपितामहपत्नीनाम्। हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p 100 हेमाद्रि adds (p 102) 'यदा तु नानापितृतृप्तिकामनया विशिष्टे महालयादिकालविशेषे गयादितीर्थविशेषे वा श्राद्धं कुर्यात्तदा पुत्रवतीनामपुत्राणां वा मातृसपत्नीनामपि श्राद्धं कुर्यात्।'

1066. अर्धदानेऽथ सङ्कल्पे पिण्डदाने तथा क्षये। गोत्रनामसम्बन्धनामानि यथापरमितिपादयेत्॥ पारस्कर q. by अपरार्क p. 506, हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p. 1434), श्रा. प्र. p. 258 which explains 'सङ्कल्पे अन्नदाने'. The form of the address will be 'अमुकगोत्रास्मत्पितरमुकशर्मन् एतत्तेऽन्नं (or एष ते पिण्डः) स्वधा नम इदममुकगोत्रायास्मत्पित्रे अमुकशर्मणे न ममेति' हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1436). It should be noted that this formula is to be employed only by the Vājasaneyins.

1067. एतत्ते ततासौ ये च त्वामनु, एतत्ते पितामहासौ ये च त्वामनु, एतत्ते प्रपितामह ये च त्वामनु। आप. म पा. II. 20. 13.—Vide note 781 for तै. सं. passages and n. 1053 for आश्व. श्रौ passage.

1068. असावत्रनेनिक्ष्व ये चात्र त्वामनु यांश्च त्वमनु तस्मै ते स्वधेति। गोभिलगृह्य III. 3. 6 and खादिरगृह्य III. 5. 17. The ज्ञेतरानन्द (श्राद्धसौख्य folio 77a) gives the formulas for followers of यजुर्वेद and सामवेद as follows: अमुकगोत्रपितरमुकशर्मंस्त्वत्तेऽन्नं स्वधेति यजुर्वेदिनामुत्सर्गवाक्यम्। अमुकसगोत्र पितरमुकवेदशर्मंस्त्वत्तेऽन्नं ये चात्र त्वामनु यांश्च त्वमनु तस्मै ते स्वधेति छन्दोगानाम्।; compare श्राद्धवरर p. 237 and श्रा. प्रि. की. p. 70 for similar formulas 1069. यांश्च त्वमन्नाप्नोसि ये च त्वामनु। भारद्वाजगृह्य II. 12.

the usage of the Tai. S. in this matter, the reason being[1070] that when the son offers a pinda to his father and employs the formula 'this is thine and of those that follow thee', he would be included among those that follow the father and be thus offering a pinda to himself, which is inauspicious. It is provided by Gobhila-grhya[1071] that if he does not know the names of his ancestors he should put down the first pinda with the Formula 'svadhā to the Fathers dwelling on the earth', (he should put down) the 2nd pinda with the formula 'svadhā to the fathers dwelling in the air', the third with the formula 'svadhā to the Fathers dwelling in heaven' and should recite in a low voice the words 'Here, O Fathers, gladden yourselves, show your vigour each according to his own part.' Yama quoted by Kalpataru (on Śr. p 203), following Gobhila provides generally (whether the ancestors be known or not) that the first pinda should be offered to the father with the expression 'prthivī', the second to the grandfather in the aerial regions and the third to the paternal great-grandfather with the mantra 'dyaur darvī'. The Viṣnu Dh. S (73 17–19) has similar provisions, the mantras respectively being 'prthivī darviraksitā', 'antariksam darviraksitā,' dyaur-darviraksitā'. Medhātithi on Manu III. 194 says (following Āśv. Śr and others) that if the names of the ancestors are not known he should simply say 'O Father, Grandfather' &c. If the gotra be not known then he should employ the gotra name Kaśyapa.[1072]

Certain matters pertaining to pindas must be stated in one place once for all. There is a good deal of discussion about the 1070. तदेतदमङ्गल्यमभिधानं भवति । यतोऽयं पिण्डदानं कुर्वाणः पुत्रादिः ये च त्वामनु इति मन्त्रेण येषां प्रमीतानां सहेत्याह तेषां पश्चाद्भूतः स्वयमेव सह भवति । अतश्चासौ स्वस्मा एव पिण्डदानं करोतीति प्रतिभाति । हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p. 1437.

---

1071. यदि नामानि न विन्द्यात् स्वधा पितृभ्यः पृथिवीषद्भ्य इति प्रथमं पिण्डं निदध्यात् । स्वधा पितृभ्योऽन्तरिक्षसद्भ्य इति द्वितीयं स्वधा पितृभ्यो दिविषद्भ्य इति तृतीयं निधाय जपति अत्र पितरो मादयध्वं यथाभागमावृषायध्वमिति । गोभिलगृह्य IV. 3. 10–11 q. by हेमाद्रि p. 1443 and श्रा प्र 260. Compare तै. सं I. 8. 5. 1 एतत्ते तत ... प्रपितामह ये च त्वामन्वत्र पितरो यथाभागं मन्दध्वम्' and वाज सं II. 31 'अत्र पितरो मादयध्वं यथाभागमावृषायध्वम्'. The आश्व श्रौ. सू II. 6. 24 says 'नामान्यविद्वांस्ततपितामहप्रपितामहेति'.

1072. गोत्राज्ञानेऽप्याह व्याघ्रपाद.—गोत्रनाशे तु कश्यपः—इति । गोत्राज्ञानं कश्यपगोत्रग्रहणं कर्तव्यम् । कश्यपसगोत्रस्य सर्वसाधारणत्वात् । तथा च स्मृति. । तस्मादाहुः सर्वाः प्रजाः काश्यप्य इति । स्मृतिच. (श्रा. p. 481), vide श्रा प्र p. 260 for a similar provision. The शूद्रकमलाकर p 49 says, यद्यपि तस्मादाहुः सर्वाः प्रजाः काश्यप्य इति शतपथश्रुतेः ... कश्यपं गोत्रमस्ति तथापि श्राद्ध एव तत् । 'सर्वाः प्रजाः काश्यप्य.'—These words occur in शतपथब्राह्मण VII 5. 1. 5.

size of the pindas. Marīci (quoted by Aparārka p. 507) provides that in pārvana-śrāddha the pinḍa should be of the size of undried āmalaka fruit, of the size of a bilva fruit in Ekoddista, in navaśrāddhas the pinḍa should be bigger than in any one of the preceding when offered every day during the days of impurity on death. The Skandapurāna says that pindas should be of such a size as would enable a calf two years old to put it easily into its mouth.[1073] Angiras (q. by Sm. C p. 475 and Hemādri, śrāddha p. 1429) prescribes that the pindas may be of the size of kapittha or bilva fruit or of the size of a hen's egg or of an āmalaka or badara fruit. In the Maitrāyaṇīya-sūtra[1074] it is said that the pinḍa for the paternal grandfather should be bigger than that for the father and should be in the middle (of the three pindas), that the pinḍa for the great-grandfather should be the largest of all. The next point is from what materials the pindas were to be made. If pindas were offered before agnaukarana they were to be made from the boiled rice (caru) prepared for agnaukarana. If made after agnaukaraṇa, the pindas were to be made from the cooked food (remaining after agnaukarana) mixed with sesamum (vide Yāj I. 242). If pinḍas were to be offered after the brāhmanas took their dinner, the pindas were to be made from the remainder of the food cooked for the brāhmanas which was to be mixed with the boiled rice for agnaukarana as stated in Kātyāyana's Śrāddha-sūtra.[1075] The pindas were to be placed according to the Matsya[1076] on darbhas spread on the ground cleaned with water mixed with cow's dung and urine. There were others such as Devala, the Brahmapurāna and Bhavisyapurāna that prescribed that an altar, either circular or square, of sand was to be raised on ground 4 fingers in height and one cubit in extent near the plates from which brāhmanas were to eat and thereon darbhas 1073. द्विहायनस्य वत्सस्य विशन्त्यास्यं यथासुखम्। तथा कुर्यात्प्रमाणेन पिण्डान् व्यासेन भावितम्॥ स्कन्द VII. 1. 206. 41 q. by स्मृतिच (श्रा. p. 475) and हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 1429 as व्यास's.

1074. द्रव्यौदूरयोदूतेषु पिण्डान्निवपति पितुर्नाम्नाऽऽवेतत्ते ये चात्र स्थास्तान् तानमे तेभ्यश्च स्वधेति प्रथमं, पितामहस्य नाम्ना स्थवीयांस मध्यमं, प्रपितामहनाम्ना स्थविष्ठं दक्षिणं द्वयोः परयोर्नामनी गृह्णन् मूलवेशे लेपं निर्माष्टि। मैत्रायणीयसूत्र q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p. 1430, श्रा प्र. p. 257.

1075. तूष्णं रम इत्यनुज्ञातः शेषमन्नमनुज्ञाप्य सर्वमन्नमेऽग्नौकरणोदूरयोरिडासमीपे दर्भेषु त्रीन्त्रीन्पिण्डानवनेज्य दद्यात्। श्राद्धसूत्र of कात्या III.

1076. उपलिप्ते महीपृष्ठे गोशकृन्मूत्रवारिणा। निधाय दर्भान् विधिवद्दक्षिणाग्रान्प्रयत्नतः। सर्ववर्णेन चान्नेन पिण्डांस्तु पितृयज्ञवत्। मत्स्यपुराण 16. 45-46.

were to be placed and then piṇḍas. The Vāyupurāna provides that a line should be drawn on the altar or the ground with the root of a darbha to the accompaniment of the following mantras viz.[1077] 'I destroy whatever is impure; I have killed all asuras, dānavas, rākṣasas, yakṣas, piśācas (goblins), guhyakas and yātudhānas' and the mantra 'struck down (are the asuras and rākṣasas sitting on the Vedi)'. In Āp. Śr. I. 10.2, Manu III 217, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 73.17–19, Yama (q. by Hemādri p. 1440), the Kalpataru (on Śr. p. 203), Mahārṇavaprakāśa (q by Hemādri), Hemādri (Śr. pp. 1440–42) and Śr. P pp. 266–267 reference is made to adoration of the six seasons and the obeisance (namaskāra) to the pitṛs in the words 'namo vaḥ pitaro' (Vāj S II. 32)[1078] and the repetition of three mantras when each of the three piṇḍas is offered, some holding that the seasons were to be deemed as identified with 'rasa', 'śoṣa' and four other words (in Vāj. S II. 32), while others held that the adoration of the seasons is quite distinct from the namaskāras to the pitṛs. In the Śaunakātharvanaśrāddha-kalpa, the piṇḍas are offered in the reverse order i. e. first to the great-grandfather, then to the grandfather and then to the father (Hemādri on śrāddha p. 1442). Āp. Śr. I. 9. 4 refers to this method in 'pitāmahaprabhṛtīn vā'.

1077. निहन्मि सर्वं यदमेध्यवद्भवेद्धताश्च सर्वेऽसुरदानवा मया। रक्षांसि यक्षाश्च पिशाचसङ्घा हता मया यातुधानाश्च सर्वे॥ अनेन मन्त्रेण सुसंयतात्मा वेदीं च सर्वां सकुशोल्लिखेच्च॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by कल्पतरु (श्रा) p. 214, 216, श्रा प्र p. 251. This is cited as from ब्रह्माण्डपुराण by अपरार्क p. 478 (which reads °सुसंयतात्मा तिलान् क्षिपेद्दिक्षु तथा विदिक्षु). The verses are वायुपुराण 75 45–46 and are mentioned as from वायुपुराण in श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 235 Both अपरार्क and श्रा. प्र. add the vedic mantra 'अपहताः' (वाज सं. II. 29) here.

1078. पूर्वपिण्डं प्रयच्छेत्तु पितरं च पृथिवीति च। पितामहाय त्वपरमन्तरिक्षे च दापयेत्॥ प्रपितामहाय च ततस्तृतीयं तु निवेदयेत्॥ द्यौर्दवीरिति मन्त्रेण श्रुतिरेषा सनातनी॥ यम q by कल्पतरु (श्रा p 203), हेमाद्रि (श्रा p 1440). उच्छिष्टसन्निधौ दक्षिणाग्रेषु दर्भेषु पृथिवी दवीरक्षिता इत्येकं पिण्डं पित्रे निदध्यात्। अन्तरिक्षं दवीरक्षिता इति द्वितीयं पितामहाय। द्यौर्दवीरक्षिता इति तृतीयं प्रपितामहाय। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 73. 17–19 आचम्योदक् परावृत्य त्रिरायम्य शनैरसून्। पङ्क्तूंश्च नमस्कुर्यात् पितॄनेव च मन्त्रवित्॥ मनु III. 217. The मन्त्र is पृथिवी दवीरक्षिता तृप्तिः स्वधानुपदस्तां पृथिवी दवीमक्षितां तृप्तिं स्वधामनुपदस्तामग्नेरिव पृथिवीमुपजीवासौ ये चात्र त्वामन्वेषा ते स्वधा. In the other two mantras in honour of पितामह and प्रपितामह substitute अन्तरिक्षं and द्यौः for पृथिवी, वायुः and सूर्यः for अग्निः wherever necessary. The meaning is 'the earth is a ladle giving inexhaustible gratification' &c. The काठकगृह्य (63 14) provides 'पृथिवी दवीरिति निपरणं कुर्यात्' and the कौशिकसूत्र (88. 8–10) also mentions the three mantras uttered at the time of offering the three piṇḍas (viz पृथिवी दवीरक्षिता, अन्तरिक्षं दवीरक्षिता, द्यौ दवीरक्षिता). Compare काठकसंहिता IX. 23.

About the final disposal (pratipatti) of the pindas several views were entertained. We have already seen (note 780) that the Vāj. S. and several sūtras provided that the middle one of the three pindas for paternal ancestors was to be eaten by the wife of the performer of the śrāddha if she was desirous of a son. Manu (III. 262–263) provides that the dharmapatnī (i. e. a wife of the same varna and married before any other wife) should eat the middle pinda with the mantra 'ādhatta pitaro garbham' (q. in n. 780) and then she gives birth to a son who lives long, secures fame, is intelligent and obtains wealth and progeny and who is of a good and righteous turn of mind. The same rule is provided for by the Laghu-Āśvalāyana 23.83, the Kūrma II. 2. 71, 76, Matsya 16.52, Vāyu 76.31, Visnudharmottara I. 171 8, 220. 149, Padma (srstikhanda 9.121) and other purānas. As regards pindas in general, the Āśv. Śr. (II. 7. 14–17) says that the other two pindas (except the middle one) should be cast into water or in fire or they may be eaten by a brāhmana who has suddenly developed a distaste for food or they may be partaken by one who has been suffering from a serious disease (such as tuberculosis or leprosy) and that in the latter case the man either recovers or dies. The Gobhila-gr. (IV. 3. 31–34) provides that the pindas should be thrown into water or in fire or should be given to a brāhmana or a cow to eat. Manu (III. 260–261) says the same and adds that they may be given to a goat for eating and that some allow them to be devoured by birds Yāj. I. 257, Matsya 16.52–53, and Padma[1079] mention the same five ways of disposal but the last adds one more viz. placing them near a mound of earth. The Varāha-purāna[1080] (190 121) says that the performer may eat the first pinda himself, he should give the middle to his wife and the third he should cast into water. The Anuśāsanaparva (125.25.26) provides that the first and the third should be thrown into water or fire and the middle pinda should be eaten by the wife. It is provided by Brhaspati that if the wife is suffering from a disease or is already pregnant or is staying in some other place, then an old bull or a goat may eat the middle pinḍa (quoted by Sm. C. on Śr. p. 486, Kalpataru on Śr p 224). The Visnudharmottara (I. 141. 8) prescribes that when a śrāddha is performed at a tīrtha, the pindas should be cast into the sacred water. The Anuśāsanaparva 125. 38–40 and some of the purānas such as Vāyu (76 32–34) and Brahma (220 150–152) provide that certain consequences follow from the disposal of pindas in one way or another viz. the best worlds by giving pindas to cows, intellect and fame from casting into water, long life from offering them to birds &c. Vide also Brahmānda (upodghāta, chap. 12. 31–35) which provides that if given to cows the result is best complexion, if to cocks then delicacy, long life if given crows In this connection it should be noted that pindas of rice or of flour were not to be offered in all śrāddhas. The Śrāddha-kalpalatā (pp. 86–89) has a long discussion about the śrāddhas in which the offering of pindas of food is forbidden. For example, it quotes Pulastya to the effect that in śrāddhas performed on the two ayana days, on the two equinoctial days, on any sankrānti, no pindas are to be offered, so also in śrāddhas on Ekādaśī, Trayodaśī, on Maghā and Krttikā naksatras, if a man desires to have sons and wealth.

1079 पिण्डांश्च गोजविप्रेभ्यो दद्याद्वग्नौ जलेपि वा। वप्रान्ते वाथ विकिरेदापोभिरथ वाहयेत्॥ पद्म (सृष्टि 9 120), अपरार्क p. 550 and हेमाद्रि read विप्रान्ते and वयोभिरथ वाशयेत्। (p. 1504) That birds should be allowed to eat the pindas is natural since it was believed as stated above (p 339) that the pitrs wander about in the form of birds Vide कूर्म II 22.83 for a similar verse.

1080 भक्षयेत् प्रथमं पिण्डं पत्न्यै देयं तु मध्यमम्। तृतीयमुदके दद्याद्श्राद्धे एवं विधिः स्मृतः॥ वराहपुराण 190 121.

On the question as to what is the principal item in the śrāddha there are three views. Some, like Govindarāja,[1081] hold that feeding of brāhmanas is the principal thing and they rely on Manu III. 129 which says 'One may feed even a single learned brāhmana in a rite for gods and manes and not many who do not know vedic mantras; by doing so he reaps abundant reward'. Here the reward or fruit is associated with feeding a learned brāhmana There is a maxim[1082] of the Pūrvamīmāmsā that 'whatever is mentioned in proximity with an action that has a reward or fruit but has no special reward of its own, is subsidiary (anga) to what is declared to have a reward.' Besides, there is no pinḍadāna in certain śrāddhas such as āmaśrāddha, śrāddha on the Yugādi days.[1083] 1081. पुष्कलं फलमामोतीत्यभिधानात् ब्राह्मणस्य भोजनमत्र प्रधानं पिण्डदानादि त्वङ्गमित्यवसीयते । गोविन्दराज on मनु III. 129 (Mandlik's ed.). कुल्लूक on the same verse refers to this opinion.

1082. The न्याय is फलवत्संनिधावफलं तदङ्गम् mentioned by शबर on जै. IV. 4. 19 and by शङ्कर on वेदान्तसूत्र II. 1. 14. Vide जै. IV. 4. 29–38.

1083. तथा च पुलस्त्यः । अयनद्वितये श्राद्धं विषुवद्द्वितये तथा । युगादिषु च सर्वासु पिण्डनिर्वपणाद्दते ॥ इति । कर्तव्यमिति शेष । स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p 369, vide हेमाद्रि (श्रा) pp 334–336.

Others like Karka hold the view that pindadāna is the principal item in śrāddha. They rely upon the fact that in the śrāddha at Gayā it is the offering of pindas that is the most important matter and upon the fact that in the Visnudharmasūtra (78. 52-53, and 85. 65-66) and in several Purānas such as the Varāha (13.50), Visnu (III. 14.22-23), Brahma (220.31-32), Visnudharmottara (I 145.3-4) the pitrs are stated to have expressed a deep yearning for a son who would offer them pindas at Gayā and water on sacred rivers &c (vide note 911). Further support is sought for this view in the fact that in the śrāddha on the birth of a son and in śrāddha offered even by a good śūdra the feeding of brāhmanas is forbidden. A third view is that both the feeding of brāhmanas and the offering of pindas are the principal matters in a śrāddha. The Gobhila-smrti, after stating[1083] the other two views and some of the reasons therefor, tells us that the author of it is himself in favour of this third view. In cases where the word śrāddha is employed and there is neither brāhmana feeding nor pindadāna as in Daiva śrāddha, the word śrāddha is applied in a secondary sense (gauna). Vide Hemādri (śraddha) pp. 157-160. In the Dharmapradīpa it is said that among the followers of the Yajurveda (i e. Vājasaneyins) the offering of pindas is principal, among the followers of the Rgveda the feeding of brāhmanas is principal, while among the followers of the Sāmaveda both are principal. In this way śrāddha partakes of two characters viz it is a yāga (sacrifice) and also[1085] a gift (dāna) Haradatta, Hemādri, Kapardi and others appear to hold that all three (bhojana pindadāna and agnaukarana) are principal. Vide Samskāra-ratnamālā p. 1003.

The Matsyapurāna says in a famous passage 'ancestors from the fourth (i. e. the father, grand-father and great-grand-father of the great-grandfather of performer) are entitled only to the wipings of the articles of food (sticking to the hand of the performer of śrāddha); the father, (the grand-father and great-grandfather) are entitled to the pinda; the offerer of the pinda is the 7th; thus sapinda relationship extends to seven generations[1086]. The Mārkandeya-purāṇa states that three ancestors beginning from the paternal grandfather of the paternal grandfather enjoy the wipings (of the hand of the performer when he offers pindas).[1087] The Brahmapurāna (220. 84–86) has similar verses. Manu provided[1088] that the performer should place three pindas on darbhas and then wipe off from his hand the particles of food and water sticking to it with the roots of the darbhas (on which the pindas were placed) and that such wipings are meant for those who are called 'lepabhāgin' (the three paternal ancestors after the paternal great-grand-father). Similar provisions are made by the Visnu Dh. S. 73.22, Varāhapurāna 14.36, Garudapurāna (Ācārakānda 218 24), Kūrma II. 22.52. Medhātithi on Manu III. 216 says that even if no food or water sticks to the hand still the performer rubs the hand against the roots of the darbhas on which the first pinda was placed. A special rule was provided by Devala quoted in Śrāddhakalpalatā (p. 14) that if the father or mother became a mleccha (by forcible or voluntary conversion &c.) one should not observe any impurity for him or her and no śrāddha should be offered and when offering the three pindas in place of the father the name of Visnu should be uttered.

---

1084 प्राधान्यं पिण्डदानस्य केचिदाहुर्मनीषिण.। यथादौ पिण्डमाचं तु दीयमान-निदर्शनात्॥ भोजनस्य प्रधानत्व वदन्त्यन्ये महर्षय.। ब्राह्मणाना परीक्षाया महायज्ञे प्रदर्शनात्। आमश्राद्धविधानस्य विना पिण्डै. क्रियाविधिः। तदालभ्याप्यनध्यायविधानश्रवणादपि॥ विद्वन्मतमुपादाय ममाप्येतद्धृदि स्थितम्। प्राधान्यमुभयोर्यस्मात्तस्मादेष समुच्चय.॥ गोभिल-स्मृति III. 160-163.

1085. धर्मप्रदीपेपि। यजुषां पिण्डदानं तु बह्वृचानां द्विजार्चनम्। श्राद्धशब्दाभिधेयं स्याद्रुभयं सामवेदिनाम्॥ तत्र पितॄन्यजेत पितृभ्यो दद्यादित्युभयप्रयोगदर्शनाद्यागदानोभया-त्मकम्। निर्णयसिन्धु III. उत्तरार्ध p. 372.

One question that exercised the minds of well-known writers was whether the daily Vaiśvadeva should be performed before starting the śrāddha ceremonies or after the latter were finished. We have to remember first that several works state that rites for pitrs deserve pre-eminence over those for the 1086. लेपभाजश्चतुर्थाद्याः पित्राद्या. पिण्डभागिन.। पिण्डदः सप्तमस्तेषां सापिण्ड्यं सप्तपौरुषम्॥ मत्स्य 18 29. These very verses occur in पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 10. 34–35), which reads सपिण्डाः सप्त पूरुषा. They are quoted from मत्स्यपुराण by अपरार्क p 507. मत्स्य 16 38 is तेषु दर्भेषु तं हस्तं निमृज्यालेपभागिनाम्।.

---

1087 लेपसम्बन्धिनश्चान्ये पितामहपितामहात्। प्रभृत्युक्तास्त्रयस्तेषां यजमानश्च सप्तम.। इत्येवं मुनिभिः प्रोक्त. सम्बन्ध सप्तपौरुष.। मार्कण्डेय 28. 4–5 q by दायभाग XI 41 (which connects these verses with the rules of impurity on death) The printed दायभाग reads पिण्डलेपभुजश्चान्ये 1088. न्युप्य पिण्डांस्ततस्तास्तु प्रयतो विधिपूर्वकम्। तेषु दर्भेषु तं हस्तं निमृज्यालेपभागिनाम्॥ मनु III. 216. The latter half occurs in मत्स्य 16.38.

gods[1089]. Manu (III. 265) states[1090] that after the brāhmanas have been dismissed the performer of śrāddha shall offer the (daily) domestic bali offering and that this is the settled rule of dharma. Medhātithi explains that the word 'bali' is merely illustrative. The Matsyapurāna[1091] 17 61, the Varāhapurāna (14.43), Skanda VII. 1. 266. 101–102, Devala, Kārsnājini and others provide that after the rites for the fathers are finished Vaiśvadeva should be performed. When Vaiśvadeva is performed after the completion of śrāddha rites, it is to be offered from the food that remains after being utilized for the śrāddha dinner. But Hemādri (pp. 1058–1065) holds a long discussion and arrives at the following conclusions In the case of an āhitāgni (p. 1064), Vaiśvadeva is to be performed before śrāddha except in the case of the śrāddha on the 11th day after death. In the case of one who has not kept the sacred fires there are three optional times for Vaiśvadeva, viz. after agnaukarana or after the vikira (scattering of food on darbhas for those dying without the samskāras being performed for them), or after the brāhmanas are dismissed on the completion of the śrāddha (p 1064). If Vaiśvadeva is to be performed before śrāddha or in the midst of it, then the cooking of food must be done separately for Vaiśvadeva and for śrāddha. In the case of all, whether sāgnika or anagnika, Vaiśvadeva must be performed with the remainder of the food left after use in śrāddha, if the former is performed after the latter. There were sages like Paithīnasi[1092] that held that Vaiśvadeva should not be performed with the food cooked for śraddha without first offering the food to the brāhmanas invited for śrādda dinner i e, Vaiśvadeva must be performed after śrāddha if the same food is to be used 1089. देवकार्याद्द द्विजातीना पितृकार्यं विशिष्यते। मनु III. 203, ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद 10. 104), मत्स्यपुराण 15 40, वायु 73. 55.

---

1090 ततो गृह्यबलिं कुर्यादिति धर्मो व्यवस्थित॰ ॥ मनु III 265. मेधातिथि remarks 'ततो गृह्यबलिं निष्पन्ने श्राद्धकर्मण्यनन्तरं वैश्वदेवहोमान्वाहिकातिथ्यादिभोजन कर्तव्यम्। बलिशब्दस्य प्रदर्शनार्थत्वात्।'.

1091. निवृत्य प्रणिपत्याथ पर्युक्ष्याग्निं समन्त्रवत्। वैश्वदेवं प्रकुर्वीत नित्यक बलिमेव च ॥ मत्स्य 17. 61, निवर्तेतान्यद्भुज्ञात आहारान्तमद्भवजेत्। ततस्तु वैश्वदेवाख्या कुर्यान्नित्यक्रिया तत ॥ वराह 14. 43, पितृपाकात् समुद्धृत्य वैश्वदेव तु होमयेत्। देवल q by हलायुध in his com. on कात्यायन's श्राद्धसूत्र (folio 31a). The verse निवृत्य प्रणिपत्याथ occurs in पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 190) also.

1092. पितृणामनिवेद्य तस्मादन्नाद्वैश्वदेवादिकमपि न कार्यम्। तथा च पैठीनसि। पितृपाकात्समुद्धृत्य वैश्वदेव करोति य.। आहुर तद्भवेच्छ्राद्ध पितृणा नोपतिष्ठते ॥ स्मृतिच. (श्रा) p. 410, दोडरानन्द (folio 75b).

for the former. The Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 459) states that as most smṛtis place the performance of Vaiśvadeva after śrāddha and as many writers of commentaries and digests such as Medhātithi and Smṛtiratnāvali do the same all should perform Vaiśvadeva after finishing śrāddha.

It is now necessary to illustrate how pārvaṇa śrāddha is performed in modern times. Here the greatest variety prevails. The details of the rite vary in the different parts of India. They vary also according as the performer belongs to a particular Veda or a particular recension of the Veda, they vary according to the particular eminent writer that is followed and further additions are made according as the performer is a Vaiṣṇava or a Śaiva. Such differences have to be passed over here, particularly because they are not material. We saw above that the Pārvaṇa-śrāddha was very simple in the days of the Brāhmaṇas and most of the sūtras. There was then no express mention of the worship of Viśvedevāḥ in Pārvaṇa-śrāddha, or of the maternal ancestors or of the wives of any ancestors. Gradually these came to be added and by the time of the Yājñavalkyasmṛti there was special invocation of the Viśvedevāḥ But these latter were probably not expressly divided into groups at the time of that work. During the smṛti period groups of Viśvedevāḥ came to be assigned to different kinds of śrāddhas (vide p 457 note 1018). The Purāṇas prescribed several Paurāṇic mantras for being recited during the śrāddha rite, such as the verse 'āgacchantu' (note 984) and the verse 'devatābhyaḥ pitṛbhyaśca' (p. 458 note 1020). Then there arose the principle of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā that all rites described in the different śākhās and sūtras constitute but one rite, and that one may take over from another śākhā or sūtra details described therein, which are not opposed to one's own śākhā or sūtra (vide pp 453-55 notes 1011-1013). This principle tended to make the śrāddha rites all inclusive and the whole procedure became swollen to an enormous extent. How even the slightest variation causes difference in the details may be illustrated by an example. In Mithilā villages even among poor men eleven brāhmaṇas are invited for pārvaṇa-śrāddha, but it is often difficult to secure a very learned man (who is called pātra or mahāpātra) to officiate. In such a case where a mahāpātra or a pātra brāhmaṇa is not available the śrāddha is called apātraka-pārvaṇaśrāddha (for which really there is no śāstric authority) and is distinguished from the sapātraka pārvaṇa-śrāddha in several matters, two of which in the case of the Vājasaneyins may be stated here. Though the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana, which is of special authority among Vājasaneyins, declares (at the end of kandikā III) that the brāhmanas are to be dismissed at the end of the śrāddha with the verse 'Vāje vāje' (Vāj. S 9. 18) and the performer should circumambulate the brāhmanas with the mantra 'ā mā vājasya' (Vāj S. 9. 19), it is not the practice among the śistas in Mithilā according to the editor of the Śrāddharatna to observe these directions in what is called 'apātraka-pārvana-śrāddha' in these days. In Rudradhara's Śrāddhaviveka (pp. 138–146) the 'apātraka-pārvana-śrāddha-prayoga' is set out at length.

In medieval and modern times in the different provinces of India different manuals are followed by the followers of the several Vedas. For example, in Bengal the Sāmavedins, Yajurvedins and Ṛgvedins follow the procedure of pārvana-śrāddha laid down in the manuals (or paddhatis) of Bhavadeva, Paśupati and Kālesi respectively and there are many persons who follow the rules laid down by Raghunandana in his Śrāddhatattva and Yajurvediśrāddha-tattva. In Mithilā, Śrīdatta wrote his Pitrbhakti for Yajurvedins and the Śrāddha-kalpa for Sāmavedins and the Śrāddha-ratna of Mahāmahopādhyāya Laksmīpati (between 1500 to 1640 A. D) which is printed at Darbhanga and claims to be the traditional manual for Maithilas (Maithila-sāmpradāyika-śrāddhapaddhati) in several places says that it follows the Sugatisopāna of Pratihastaka for Chandogas and also for Vājasaneyins. In the Madras State Vaisnava brāhmanas follow special treatises on Pūrva and Apara kriyās of Vaidika-Sārvabhauma or Hārita Venkatācārya or Tolappar and Smārta brāhmanas follow the Smrtimuktāphala of Vaidyanātha, which does not much differ in major matters from the works of Vaidikasārvabhauma. Often the only differences are in the sankalpa and at the end It is impossible to exhibit in this work the contents of all these manuals and to compare and contrast them. Therefore I shall set out here a model pārvanaśrāddha rite as performed by Ṛgvedins in Western India and then a Śukla Yajurveda rite. The Pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha[1093] rite for Ṛgvedins in 1093 The darśaśrāddha differs only very slightly from the above The summary here is taken from the 'Ṛgvedibrahmakarma-samuccaya' published by the Nirnayasāgara Press in Bombay in Pothi size, folios 98–108 (ed of 1936, śake 1858).

Western India may be set out as follows :—(From the references added in the text and notes it will be clear that this modern rite is all inclusive i. e. it follows the Āśv. Śr. often taking passages verbatim from it, the smrtis and purānas). The performer wears white garments (lower and upper) and sits on a seat of kuśas or of wool or deer skin and then sips water twice and wears a pavitra on the finger next to the small finger with Rg. IX. 83 1. He ties his top knot on the head and sacred thread with kuśas, and ties three kuśa blades with tilas on the left of the dhoti worn by him. Then he performs prānāyāma and declares the resolve (saṅkalpa)[1094] to perform (the Sāmvatsarika) śrāddha after referring to the time and place and together with agnaukarana, pindadāna &c The invited brāhmanas reply 'do so'. Then the performer puts into a copper vessel water with the mantra 'imam me Gange' (Rg X. 75. 5), sandalwood paste with the mantra 'Gandhadvārām,' yava grains with the mantra 'thou art yava, king of cereals, Varuna is thy patron, thou art endowed with sweetness, thou art the remover of all sins and art known by all sages as holy', betelnut (with Rg X. 97,15), gold (or some coin) with the mantra 'Hiranyarūpah' (Rg. II. 35.10), flowers and basil leaves. (Then he becomes prācīnāvītī)[1095] and puts sesamum grains in the water

---

1094 The सङ्कल्प will be श्रीमद्भगवतो महापुरुषस्य विष्णोराज्ञया प्रवर्तमानस्य ब्रह्मणो द्वितीये परार्धे..भरतवर्षे दक्षिणापथे दण्डकारण्ये देशे शालिवाहनशके अमुकनाम संवत्सरे गोदावर्या दक्षिणे तीरे (उत्तरे तीरे वा)... अमुकतिथौ अमुकवासरे . पुरूरवार्द्रवसंज्ञकानां विश्वेषा देवाना अस्मत्पितृपितामहप्रपितामहानाममुकशर्मणा अमुकसगोत्राणा वसुरुद्रादित्यस्वरूपाणां एतेषां श्रेयोर्थं मोक्षार्थं मम पितृणा प्रतिसावत्सरिकश्राद्धं सदैव सपिण्डं साग्नौकरण पार्वणेन विधिना अक्षेन हविषा सद्य. करिष्ये. The performer becomes प्राचीनावीती when repeating the words अस्मत्पितृ ..स्वरूपाणा and reverts to उपवीत form when saying एतेषा etc. Among the Mādhvas the सङ्कल्प contains the words 'पित्रन्तर्यामिणो विश्वेदेवान्तर्यामिणोऽनिरुद्ध-प्रद्युम्न-सङ्कर्षण वासुदेव-चतुर्मूर्त्यात्मक-श्राद्धस्वामि-श्रीमध्वजनार्दनस्य समाराधनं करिष्ये ।.'

1095. The terms प्राचीनावीतिन्, यज्ञोपवीतिन् or उपवीतिन्, सव्यं and अपसव्यं occur almost at every step in the श्राद्धप्रयोग. They will be explained once for all here and instead of repeating lengthy translations the original Sanskrit words will be kept in the prayoga set out hereafter. Gobhila gr. I. 2 2–3, Khādiragr I. 1. 4–6 and Manu II. 63 define yajñopavītin or upavītin as one who suspends the sacrificial chord round his neck and raises the right arm so as to wear the chord on his left shoulder and prācīnāvītin as one who raises the left arm and wears the chord on his right shoulder Savya means left. Acc to लाट्यायन I 91 when the sacred chord hangs down from the left shoulder (and under the right arm) that is said to be 'savyam' and when the chord hangs down from the right shoulder (and under the left arm) that is अपसव्यम्

(in another vessel) with the mantra 'Tilosi' (quoted in note 966), Bhṛngarāja leaf with the mantra 'mā kākam' (Rg. VI. 48. 17), betelnut, gold (or coin). Then he repeats the Puruṣa-sūkta [1096] (Rg. X. 90), Rg X 128 1–9, IX 58 1–4, Rg X. 126. 1–8, Rg. IV. 40 5, Rg. VII. 89 5, the sacred Gāyatrī with om and the three Vyāhṛtis, Rg. VII 56. 12, Rg VIII. 44. 21, 17, Rg. VIII. 95. 7–9. Then after repeating the well-known verse 'apavitrah pavitro vā' [1097] (whoever, whether pure or impure or being in any state whatever, remembers the name of Viṣnu becomes pure externally as well as internally), he requests 'May everything such as the place and the materials be rendered pure'. The brāhmaṇas reply 'let it be so.' Then placing some coin on the ground, the performer having in his hand sesamum grains, water and kūśas goes round (pradakṣinā) the brāhmaṇas thrice, and repeats three verses (in classical sanskrit) in praise of the dust of the feet of brāhmaṇas and a Vedic passage from Tai Ā. II. 15 [1098] 'All the devatās reside in a brāhmaṇa who knows the Veda; therefore every day one should perform obeisance to brāhmaṇas knowing the Veda. He should not utter anything derogatory or evil (either true or false) about them. (By doing so) he pleases all these devatās.' After making obeisance (to the brāhmaṇas) twice he should be prācīnāvītī, repeat the verse 'akrodhanaih' (note 913 p. 407 above) and request the brāhmaṇas 'may you be pleased to say that I have complete adhikāra to perform the sāmvatsarikaśrāddha of my pitṛs this day.' The brāhmaṇas should reply 'let there be this adhikāra for the performance of śrāddha.' Then being upavītin the performer requests 'may you declare that this time is the proper time and that the food cooked is fit for being offered' The brāhmaṇas reply 'let it be so.' Then he asks the permission to give invitation to the brāhmaṇas. They give it. Then he touches the right knee of one brāhmaṇa and says 'you should find time to accept the invitation to act as representing the Viśve-devas named Purūrava and Ārdrava in this pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha of my pitṛs'. The brāhmaṇa replies 'yes, be it so.' Then the performer addresses the second Vaiśvadevika brāhmaṇa in the 1096. Hardly any sūtra or any single digest prescribes the recital of so many mantras as is done here.

1097. This occurs in the Garuḍapurāṇa (ācāralāṇḍa) chap. 216 1–2

1098. यावतीर्वै देवतास्ताः सर्वा वेदविदि ब्राह्मणे वसन्ति तस्माद् ब्राह्मणेभ्यो वेदविद्भ्यो दिवे दिवे नमस्कुर्यात्। नाश्नील कीर्तयेदेता एव देवताः प्रीणाति। तै. आ. II. 15 (at end).

same way (if two brāhmanas have been invited for the purpose) and then wearing the sacred thread in the prācīnāvīta way should touch the left knee of the brāhmana (pitrya) and say to him 'you should accept the invitation to represent my father, grandfather and great-grandfather in this pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha.' The brāhmana should reply 'so be it.' He should request 'you should repair to my house.' The brāhmana replies 'I shall do so' Then he should make mandalas [1099] for the daiva and pitrya brāhmanas. Then savyam. The performer should offer seat, sandalwood paste, flowers and say 'may all the items (upacāras) of showing honour be complete by means of yava grains.' Then apasavyam. He offers āsana (seat), sandalwood paste and flowers and declares 'may all the upacāras be completed by means of sesamum grains.' Then savyam. He offers welcome to the daiva brāhmanas, to which they respond by saying 'susvāgatam' (it is a good welcome). Then he should say 'here is pādya for you, O Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava! Bhūr-bhuvah-svah to the (daiva) brāhmana'; the response is 'supādyam'. He should wash the feet of (the daiva) brāhmana or brāhmanas with the mantra 'śan no devīr' (Rg X. 9.4, vide n. 968). Then he wears the thread in the apasavya way and offers welcome to the pitrya brāhmana or brāhmanas representing the three male ancestors [1100] and offers to give pādya to them and they respond with the words 'susvāgatam' and 'supādyam'. He also employs the verse 'śan no devīr' as in the case of daiva brāhmanas.

Then the performer casts away the pavitra worn so far, washes his hands and feet, performs ācamana and wears two pavitras. Then savyam. He says 'welcome to all.' They respond with 'susvāgatam'. Then holding the right hand (except the thumb) of the daiva brāhmanas he says 'Ye gods, occupy seats'; they respond by saying 'susamāsmahe' (we have well occupied them). Then apasavyam. He addresses similar words to pitrya brāhmanas who respond in a similar way. Then savyam. He seeks permission in the words 'I shall perform the Pratisāṁvatsarika śrāddha of my pitṛs that has been begun'. The brāhmaṇas say 'do so'. Then the verse 'śam no devīr' (Ṛg. X. 9. 4) is repeated and also the words 'thou art yava, separate from us those who hate us and who are our enemies'. Then apasavyam. The following texts are repeated viz. Ṛg. X. 9.4, Ṛg. X. 15.1 and with the mantra 'The asuras, rākṣasas, the piśācas, that dwell along the earth are struck down; may they go from this place elsewhere wherever their mind may be fixed', he scatters sesamum grains everywhere and repeats the mantra, Ṛg. X. 87.1 There are eight Vasus, eleven Rudras and twelve Ādityas. Let there be protection given by Viṣṇu at the door where śrāddha is being performed and may this spot be Gayā. The brāhmaṇas reply 'Let it be a good spot.' Then savyam. He sprinkles drops of water with darbhas over the food that is cooked for the śrāddha dinner with the mantras viz. Ṛg. IX. 58, 1, IX. 67. 26–28 and with the three Vyāhṛtis and the Gāyatri. Then he requests 'May there be purity of the cooking' and 'may the sprinkling of the cooked food be according to the rules prescribed,' to which the response is 'so be it.' Then the verse 'āgacchantu mahābhāgāḥ' (vide note 984) is recited and the brāhmaṇas reply 'we are careful (or attentive).' Then apasavyam. He announces 'contemplating upon this spot where śrāddha is being performed as Gayā and concentrating the mind on Gadādhara (Viṣṇu) and the pitṛs in the form of Vasus and the like, the śrāddha (rite) proceeds'. The brāhmaṇas say 'do proceed.' Then savyam. He gives water on the hand of the daiva brāhmaṇas, places on the right side of the seat occupied by them two darbhas together with yavas with his upturned right hand held by the left hand and says with the Vyāhṛtis (Bhūr, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ) 'this is the seat for the brāhmaṇa representing the Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava'. The brāhmaṇa replies 'svāsanam'. This is done also for the second daiva brāhmaṇa. He then says 'Please sit down here, though art Dharma' and seizing the brāhmaṇa's hand (except the thumb) he says 'accept the invitation for being daiva brāhmaṇa in the Pratisāṁvatsarika śrāddha.' The response is 'so be it.' Then reaching the arghya water, he sprinkles the ground in front of the (daiva) brāhmaṇas with water, spreads two darbhas (in front of each daiva brāhmaṇa) with their tips towards the east, places down two vessels with their tops turned downwards, sprinkles water over them with the Gāyatrī mantra, raises the vessels up (i. e. turns their tops upwards), again sprinkles water over them and places over them (the two vessels) two kūrcas [1101] with the tips turned to the east, pours into them water and invokes the water once with the mantra, 'śan no devīr' (Rg. X. 9. 4). Then he puts yava grains into the two arghya vessels for daiva brāhmanas with the mantra 'Yavosi dhānyarājo vā' (note 985) and also sandalwood paste, flowers, basil leaf and performs obeisance. He says 'May all the upacāras be completed by means of yavas; the two arghya vessels for daiva brāhmanas are fully ready'. The response is 'susampanne'. He says 'svāhā, these are arghya waters'. The response is 'let there be arghya waters'. Placing his left hand in which he holds kuśas and yava grains on the right knee of the daiva brāhmana and holding in his (right) hand yava grains he says 'I shall invoke the Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ardrava to be present in you' They respond 'do invoke'. He invokes the Viśve-devas with the mantra 'viśve devāsa' (Rg II. 47. 13) separately repeated as regards each daiva brāhmana. He says, 'I invoke the Viśve devas with the mantra 'viśve devāh śrnutemām' (Rg. VI. 52. 13). Having invoked Viśve devas he casts the remaining yava grains on the ground near the feet of the daiva brāhmanas. Then he gives water to them (daiva brāhmanas) and he puts in their hands the darbhas placed over the arghya vessels; he says 'O Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava! this is arghya water for you; svāhā, adoration'. They respond 'let there be arghya'. Repeating the mantra 'yā divyā āpaḥ' (vide Āśv. Gr. IV. 7. 13 above in n. 966) he says 'this arghya has been offered, it is no longer mine.' They respond 'let it be so offered'. The same process is followed as to the second daiva brāhmana. Then he offers fragrant [1102] substances (sandalwood paste etc.), flowers, basil leaves, incense, lamp, and cash according to his ability as substitute for garment, gopīcandana for unguent, sacred chord and two kuśa blades for pavitra with the words 'O Viśve devāh, called Purūrava and Ārdrava! these are fragrant substances for you according 1101. कूर्च is a bundle of fifteen darbhas one cubit long having tops of four angulas in length and having a knot two angulas from the bottom part. पञ्चदशदर्भैर्ग्रथितं चतुरङ्गुलाग्रं द्व्यङ्गुलग्रन्थि हस्तमात्रं मोक्षणकूर्चम्। वैखानसस्मार्त-सूत्र I. 8.

1099. For mandalas vide above pp 456-457.

1100. The पाद्य would be offered in the words 'पित, अमुकशर्मन् अमुकगोत्र वसुरूप ब्रह्मणे भूर्भुव. स्व, इदं ते पाद्यम्'. In the case of the पितामह and प्रपितामह the words रुद्ररूप and आदित्यरूप would respectively be substituted for वसुरूप. We have to construe as ब्रह्मणे ते पाद्यम् (अस्तु) and भूर्भुव. स्व. as the mantra accompanying the पाद्य.

---

1102. Each of the things is offered with the same formula and as to each there is a response from the brāhmanas with 'su' prefixed to each article offered. It would be like this 'सुरूरवार्द्रवसंज्ञका विश्वेदेवाः यथा भागशः अमी वो गन्धा स्वाहा नमः। सुगन्धाः। सुरू..विश्वेदेवा यथा भागश एष वो दीपः स्वाहा नमः सुदीपः' and so on.

to your portions; svāhā, adoration'. When offering a garment or cash therefor he recites 'yuvā suvāsāḥ' (Ṛg. III. 8.4). Then he says 'these items viz. gandha, leaves, flowers, incense, lamp ending with covering (garment) be all of them complete. Let there be good worship in the rite of worship; May that which is wanting or is excessive be according to prescribed rules'. The brāhmanas respond 'astu vidhivat' and the performer recites the verse 'I do obeisance to Acyuta by remembering whom or by uttering whose name whatever is wanting in tapas (observances) or sacrifices becomes at once perfect'.

Then he says to the pitrya brāhmanas 'with your permission I shall offer worship to the pitrs'. They reply 'do offer.' Then apasavyam. After bending his right knee, the performer says 'Bhūr bhuvah svah to Brahman, this is the seat for my father, grandfather and great-grandfather, named N. N., whose gotra is so and so and who are identical with Vasu, Rudra and Āditya'. So saying he offers double-folded darbhas with sesamum grains to the pitrya brāhmanas who reply 'svāsanam'. Then follows the same procedure as regards pitrya brāhmanas which has been already set out as to daiva brāhmanas. The only difference is that instead of two darbhas three darbhas are spread on the ground with their tips towards the south, three vessels are placed towards south-east with faces downwards and three double-folded darbhas are placed on each of the three vessels, instead of 'yavosi' the mantra is 'tilosi somadevatyaḥ' (vide note 966) and instead of 'svāhā namah' the words 'svadhā namah' are employed, and instead of tulasi leaf bhrngarāja leaf is employed. In āvāhana the performer places his left hand holding kuśas and sesame on the left knee of the pitrya brāhmana and the verse repeated is 'uśantas tvā' (Ṛg. X. 16. 12) as to each pitrya brāhmana and he should honour the pitrs by repeating one mantra 'ā yantu nah' (Vāj. S. 19. 58). He offers arghya[1103] water with the right hand supported by the left to the father and the other two paternal ancestors. He brings together the samsravas[1104] in the first pitrya vessel and anoints his face with that water if he desires a son. The brāhmanas respond 'may you have a son'.

1103. The form will be: अयो दत्त्वा पात्रोपरिस्थदर्भान् विमृष्टे दत्त्वा अस्मत्पितरिदं ते अर्घ्यम्। अस्त्वर्घ्यम्। अपसव्यम्। या दिव्या आपः पृथिवी०। पितरे इदमर्घ्यं दत्तं न मम। अस्तु दत्तम्। सव्यम्। पितामहेद तेऽर्घ्यम्। अस्त्वर्घ्यम्। अपसव्यम्। या दिव्या०। पितामहायेदमर्घ्यं दत्तं न मम। and so on for प्रपितामह.

1104. For संस्रव, vide note 1001.

He places the vessel containing saṁsravas with the top upside down on darbhas to the north of the daiva vessel, with the mantra 'thou art a place for the pitrs.' Then gandha, flowers with tulasī and bhṛngarāja leaves, incense, lamp, garment or cash therefor, gopīcandana, sacred chord, betelnut, kuśas for pavitra are offered to the pitrs and he repeats the verse 'idam pitṛbhyaḥ' (Rg. X. 15. 2). After repeating the verse 'yat smṛtyā' (vide above) there is 'savyam'. The performer says 'with your permission I shall prepare maṇḍalas and place the plates'. The response is 'do so'. On the spot where the plates for daiva brāhmaṇas are to be placed a four-cornered maṇḍala beginning from the south-west to north-east and made with the right hand towards it and on the spot for the plates for pitrya brāhmaṇas the maṇḍala is circular beginning from north-east to south-west made with the left hand towards it. Then the plates for the diners are to be placed inside those maṇḍalas. Then taking holy ashes (apasavyam) he draws a line round the plates for pitrya brāhmaṇas with the mantra 'piśaṅga-bhṛiṣṭim' (Rg. I. 133. 5). Then savyam. Then round the plates of the daiva brāhmaṇas he draws lines with the mantras 'rakṣā no' (Rg. IV. 3. 14) and 'brahma ca' (Rg. X. 4. 7) and two more verses (probably Paurāṇic) which pray that the mark made with ashes may guard all, just as Viṣṇu protects the worlds. Just as Viṣṇu renders ineffective the eyes of all men of evil sight, so one should make a maṇḍala with ashes and when this is done there is no blemish in sitting in the same row for dining. Then the purification of the hand (right) of the brāhmaṇas is done, beginning with the pitrya brāhmaṇa first. Then the performer requests 'let me perform agnaukaraṇa with your permission in the hand[1105] of the (pitrya) brāhmaṇa.' The reply is 'do so'. Then apasavyam. Taking some cooked food and anointing it with clarified butter and dividing it into parts, having touched the two parts placed towards the south he says 'this for Soma accompanied by the Pitṛs, this for Agni, the carrier of kavya' and having spread the left hand underneath the right hand, having cut off portions from the middle and the part to the east according to the rules for avadānas[1106]

1105 If there are three brāhmaṇas to represent the three paternal ancestors, then he should say 'in the hands of the brāhmaṇas'. The Nirnayasindhu (III. Uttarārdha p. 440) says that a widower performs agnaukaraṇa in the hand of the daiva brāhmaṇa.

1106 As laid down in Āśv. gr I. 7. 10-12 the अवदानधर्मs are उपस्तरणं द्विरिश्रोवदानं हविरवदानयोश्च मत्यभिधारणम्.

and having poured clarified butter on the food in the vessel and on the food cut off for oblations, he should offer the oblations with the words 'To Soma accompanied by pitṛs, svadhā and adoration; this for Soma with the pitṛs and it is not (now) mine' and 'to Agni the bearer of Kavya, svadhā and adoration; this is for Agni Kavyavāhana and not mine.' This is the mode everywhere. He touches water with the left hand and repeats the following (which is called 'samsthā-japa' and occurs in Āśv. Śr. I. 11.15) 'Om ca me.. te namah'. Obeisance to Agni. Svaṣṭi. Then he prays 'O Kavyavāhana! bestow on me faith, memory, glory, intelligence, learning, intellect, wealth, strength, long life, brilliance, health.' He says 'offering has been made on the hand'. The response is 'suhutam'. Then he pours ghee on the vessel containing the food and repeats 'mūrdhānam divah' (Rg VI 7. 1) Then the brāhmaṇas should cast the food on their hands in the vessel over which ghee has been poured and then mutter Triśuparṇa,[1107] the hymns to anna (Rg. I. 187. 1–11 and several others) and other hymns Then certain pauranic verses should be repeated, viz 'Devatābhyah' (note 1020), the verse 'one should always recite at a śrāddha these holy places viz Kuruksetra, Gayā, Gangā Prabhāsa and Puskara', the two verses[1108] 'saptavyādhā' (note 994a) and three more verses, one speaking of adoration to pitṛs and the other two praying to Viṣnu and Śiva for favours. Then savyam. Then he sprinkles water (proksana) on the food with the Gāyatrī mantra. Then bending his right knee he silently spills water. Then holding the plate with the right hand above and the left hand below he utters the mantra 'the earth is thy vessel[1108a], the heaven is the lid I sacrifice thee in the brāhmaṇa's mouth. I sacrifice thee in the Prāna (breath) and Apāna (breath) of learned brāhmaṇas. Thou art imperishable. Do not perish for these (Fathers) here and in the next world.' Then he repeats 'ato devā' (Rg. I. 22. 16) and 'O Viṣṇu, guard the sacrificial food'. With the hand 1107. For Triśuparṇa, vide p. 364 note 862a. The अनसूक्त are Rg I. 187. 1–11, IV. 31. 1–3 and several others which the brāhmaṇas are in the habit of reciting in these days.

---

1108. The meaning of the two verses (in note 994a) viz. सप्तव्याधा has been stated above on p 445.

1108 a. For 'Pṛthivī te pātram' vide note 992 turned downwards he thrusts in the food (served in the plate) the root of the thumb of the brāhmana turned downwards and should revolve it (in the food) from right to left. Then touching the plate with his left hand the performer should say 'The Viśve devās called Purūrava and Ārdrava are the deity, this food is the sacrificial offering, this brāhmana serves as āhavanīya fire, this place is Gayā, this brāhmana diner is Gadādhara, this food is Brahma, the golden vessel is the shade of the Akṣayyavata (at Gayā). This food together with the flavouring dishes which is already served (in the plate) and which may be served therein (later), is the sacrificial food offered to the Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava till this brāhmana is satisfied. Adoration. It is not mine. Om Tat Sat. May the food offered at the fourteen spots such as Visnupada at Gayā be inexhaustible!'. So saying he should cast on the ground towards the left side of the plate water mixed with darbhas and yavas. He says 'May Gadādhara (Visnu) of Gayā be pleased'. The brāhmaṇas respond 'May he be pleased'. Then he repeats 'Ye devāso' (Rg. I. 139.11). Then he says 'with the permission of the daiva brāhmanas I shall present food to the Father and others'. They reply 'do so'. Then apasavyam. Then silently sprinkling water round the plate, and touching the plate (of the pitrya brāhmana) with the left hand above and the right hand below it, he repeats the formula 'prthivī te pātram ..loke' (vide p 444 note 992) and the verse 'idam Visnur' (Rg. I. 22. 17) and say 'O Visnu! guard the kavya food,' he should thrust the root of the thumb of the (pitrya) brāhmana in the food (served in the plate) and revolve it from right to left. Then touching the plate (of the pitrya brāhmana) with the left hand he should say 'the father, grand-father and great-grand-father are devatā, this food is of the nature of kavya, the brāhmana is in place of the āhavanīya fire, this place is Gayā, this dining brāhmana is Gadādhara, this food is Brahma, this silver plate is the shade of the Akṣayyavaṭa (at Gayā), svadhā to my father, grandfather and great-grandfather named so and so, of gotra so and so, that are Vasu, Rudra and Āditya respectively, this food with the side dishes that is already served in the plate and that may be served (later) is kavya up till this brāhmana is satiated. Adoration! It is not mine. Tat sat. May the food given at the 14 spots such as Rudrapada at Gayā be inexhaustible May Gadādhara of Gayā be pleased.' The brāhmana replies 'May he be pleased.' He then repeats the verse 'ye ceha pitaro' (Rg. X. 15. 13) and says 'May the food intended for the pitrs please them'. Then savyam.[1109] Then naivedya is offered with the verse 'brahmārpanam' (Gītā 4. 24) and with three more verses in which Hari is said to be giver and the enjoyer and the food as having both natures viz. those of pitrs and devas and ultimately he winds up by saying 'tat sat brahmārpanamastu'. Then apasavyam. Then two verses are repeated in which adoration is offered to the feet of Śiva, Viṣnu, Brahmā and other gods, in which even remembrance of Gayā-kṣetra is highly eulogised. Adoration to Kāśī Viśveśvara! adoration to Viṣnu and Gadādhara at Gayā! Then savyam. Then he says 'I shall repeat in your hearing the madhumatī verses beginning with 'madhu vātā' (Ṛg. I 90. 6-8). Then he repeats the word 'madhu' thrice. The brāhmaṇas respond 'sumadhu, all food is sweet.' Then apasavyam. Then a verse in praise of Viṣnu (eko Viṣnur &c.) 'there is one great Being viz. Viṣnu &c.' is recited and the performer says 'May Janārdana Viṣnu who has assumed the form of my father, grandfather and great-grandfather be pleased by this feeding of brāhmaṇas at the pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha of my pitrs'. The response is 'may he be so pleased'. Tat sat brahmārpaṇam-astu. Then having given water to the brāhmaṇas for apośana[1109a] (then savyam) he says 'partake of (the food) at your pleasure' and 'though art the first layer of nectar'. Then he repeats the mantra[1110] 'fixing myself in faith and in Prāṇa I offer nectar; being beneficent enter me without burning me. Svāhā to Prāṇa'. This is repeated as to Apāna, Vyāna, Udāna, Samāna with the substitution of each of these four remaining life-breaths. Then he winds up 'my soul is in Brahma for the sake of immortality' and then 'svāhā to Brahma'. Then the hands are purified (by washing them with water). After muttering the Gāyatrī verse ten times or three times, he repeats the hymn to Śraddhā (Ṛg.

1109. The printed text is पितृभ्यः सङ्कल्पितः प्रीयताम् This makes hardly any sense. I take that what is intended is पितॄन् सङ्कल्पितमन्न प्रीणयतु or पितर. सङ्कल्पितेन (अन्नेन) प्रीयन्ताम्.

1109a. 'Apośana' literally means 'taking or drinking water' It is a technical term applied to the sipping of water before beginning a meal with the words 'amṛtopastaraṇamasi' and after the eating is finished with the words 'amṛtāpidhānamasi'. Vide Tai Ā. X. 32, Āp, M. P. II.10.3-4, Āśv. gr I.24.12, Yāj. I.31 and 106.

1110 The mantras are श्रद्धायां प्राणे निविष्टोऽमृतं जुहोमि शिवो मावेशाप्रदाहाय। प्राणाय स्वाहा। श्रद्धायामपाने निविष्टो॰ and so on प्राणे निविष्टोऽमृतं जुहोमि ब्रह्मणि म आत्मामृतत्वाय—is आपु म पा II. 20.26. The whole passage from प्राणे निविष्टो to अमृतत्वाय occurs in तै. आ. X 34.

X. 151. 1-5). Then the performer requests 'you should ask for what is wanted; seating yourself you should with minds at ease eat at your pleasure. You should take from the foods and vegetables that are cooked and are ready whatever pleases you and should discard what you do not like You should eat at ease'. They respond 'we partake (of the food)'. He says 'I shall recite the hymns called Rāksoghna [1111] as far as I can.' They respond 'repeat'. Then towards the end of the dinner a little boiled rice with curds (should be served) and nectar-like Ganges water. He says 'everything is perfect Ask for whatever you like out of the sacrificial food that is cooked'. They respond 'we have had enough'. He says 'I shall recite the Madhumatī verses (Rg. I. 90 6-8) in your hearing'. They respond 'recite them'. Then apasavyam. He recites Rg. I.82.2 [1111a] and should say 'The śrāddha called so and so is completed'. They should respond 'susampannam' Then savyam. He asks 'Ye Viśvedevāh! are you satisfied?' They reply 'we are satisfied'. Then apasavyam. He asks 'Ye (brāhmanas) representing my father, grandfather and great-grandfather! are you satisfied?'. They reply 'We are satisfied'. He asks 'what is to be done with the food that remains?'. They reply 'it may be eaten in the company of your friends (and relatives)'. Then savyam.

Then the performer declares that he would perform in the Prati-sāmvatsarika-śrāddha pindapradāna (the offering of lumps of rice) together with water and sesamum grains. They reply 'do so'. 'Let food be given to those who take as their share what remains outside the plates of the brāhmana diners'. The performer says [1112] 'May all the (deceased) men and women slaves that were born in the performer's household obtain satisfaction by the food given by me on the ground'. (Then he offers water to the brāhmanas with the words) 'thou art the nectarial lid' (or covering). He says 'May the water given to those who hanker for it, who dwell in Padma and Arbuda and 1111. The hymn beginning with कृणुध्वं पाजः (Rg IV. 4. 1-15) is called रक्षोघ्न. The first five verses of it are वाज सं. 13. 9-13 All fifteen verses occur in तै सं I. 2. 14. 1-6. So also are Rg. X 87 (beginning with रक्षोहणं वाजिनमाजिघर्मि), Rg. VII. 104 (beginning with इन्द्रासोमा तपतं रक्ष उब्जतं), Rg. X 118, Rg X. 162.

1111 a अक्षन्नमीमदन्त ह्यव प्रिया अधूषत...हरी॥ This is ऋ. I 82.2, वाज. सं. III 51, तै. सं. I. 8. 5. 2.

1112 Compare मनु III. 246, which is the same as विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81.23, मत्स्य 17.57, पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9 186).

Raurava (hells) full of pus reach them inexhaustibly'. Then apasavyam. He repeats the mantra [1113] 'The asuras and rākṣasas that sit on the altar are struck and driven away' (Vāj S. II. 29). Sprinkling the ground with water and strewing thereon darbhas cut with one stroke that have their tips turned towards the south-east he says [1114] 'May the Fathers wash themselves, may the grandfathers wash themselves, may the great-grandfathers wash themselves'. In the same way he should sprinkle on the kuśa grass water mixed with sesamum grains for the mothers and the rest. Then he says 'This (food) is for thee, my father named so and so, of such and such gotra, who is (to be contemplated) as Vasu and for those who come here after thee; this is the pinda for thee [1115], svāhā! This pinda occupying the position of a pinda offered at Gayā is presented to my father named so and so and of such and such gotra and who is in the place of Vasu, it is (now) not mine'. Similar formulas are repeated for the pinda offered to the grandfather (who is styled 'Rudrarūpa' instead of 'Vasurūpa') and to the great-grandfather (who is styled 'Ādityarūpa'). Then he utters 'Tat sat.' 'May whatever is offered in Gayā at the fourteen spots such as Viṣṇupada be inexhaustible'. Then he wipes off on the roots of [1116] the darbhas on which the pindas are placed the particles (of rice, ghee and water) sticking to his hand for the gratification of those that are entitled to the wipings. Having uttered [1117] once over the pindas the mantra 'O fathers; regale yourselves here, come as bulls each to his share', he should turn towards the north with the left side of his body, 1113. He draws with the roots of darbhas as many lines (as the number of pindas offered, 3 or 5) repeating this mantra at each line (Vāj. S. II 29).

---

1114 This is taken from आश्व श्रौ. सू II 6 14-15 'मेक्षणेनानुप्रहृत्य प्राचीनावीती लेखां त्रिरुदकेनोपनयेत् शुन्धन्तां पितरः . प्रपितामहा इति। तस्या पिण्डान् निपृणीयात् पराचीनपाणिः. पित्रे पितामहाय प्रपितामहायैतत्तेऽसौ ये च त्वामन्वत्रीति।' Compare आप. श्र प्र II 20. 4-7 मार्जयन्तां मम पितरो etc q. in note 1060 above; vide n 1053 for पराचीनपाणिः.

1115. With the food that remains after अन्वाहार्यकरण mixed with honey, sesamum grains and ghee pindas are made by the performer or are got made by his wife and are offered by the पितृतीर्थ. Vide note 962.

1116. For लेपभाज. vide n. 1086 above.

1117. Vide n. 960a for अत्र पितरो मादयध्वं ..यथाभाग् and अमीमदन्त पितरो... यीपत The words in the text are taken from आश्व श्रौ सू II 6 16-21 on पिण्डपितृयज्ञ 'निपृतानुमन्त्रयेतात्र पितरो मादयध्वं यथाभागमिति। सव्यापसव्यावृत्तावर्त्य यथाप्रक्रमणमासित्वाभिपर्यावृत्यामीमद...यीपतेति। 'चरोः' प्राणभक्षं भक्षयेत्।'.

and having held his breath according to his ability he should return to the original position and utter the words 'the Fathers regaled themselves and came like bulls, each to his share' and having smelt the remains of the boiled rice from which pindas are made from the left side (to the right) he should cast the pindas (on the darbhas) and should partake of the boiled rice by taking in as much steam and flavour out of it as he can by smelling it. He should say 'my father! N. N. by name, so and so by gotra, apply unctuous substance'; with these words he should anoint the pindas by means of darbhas with ghee or sesamum oil. And he should apply collyrium to the pindas with the words 'O father! N. N. by name and so and so by gotra apply collyrium'. He should put on the pindas unctuous substance, collyrium and garment,[1118] the last being the fringe of a garment or a tuft of wool with the words 'O fathers! this is the garment for you, do not take up any other (garment) than this'. Then savyam. He then says 'I shall offer worship to the pindas for the prosperity of my family'. He then offers to the pitrs present in the pindas pādya, arghya, water for ācamana, bath, gandha, flowers, bhrngarāja leaf, incense, lamp and naivedya of apūpa (cakes) and pāyasa (rice cooked in milk), tāmbūla and daksinā, using the word 'svadhā' after each of them. Then he should worship[1119] them with the mantra 'Fathers! obeisance to you for the sake of food, for strength, for śusma, for the non-terrible (aghora), for jīva, for rasa; svadhā to you, O pitrs, obeisance to you; these are yours, O pitrs! these are ours; we are your living (descendants), may we be alive here'! He then recites the verses[1120] Rg. X. 57. 3-5. Having thus worshipped them he then (apasavyam) with the palm of the hand turned upwards moves the pindas with the mantra[1121] 'paretana' which means 'O fathers who love soma

1118 Vide आश्व श्रौ सू II 7 6 'वासो दद्याद् दशामूर्णास्तुकां वा पञ्चाशद्वर्षताया ऊर्ध्वं स्वं लोम एतद्वः पितरो वासो मा नोतोन्यत् पितरो युग्वमिति' The text translated is based on this, when the performer is over 50 years of age he may place on the pinda the hair from his chest.

1119. नमो वः पितर इषे नमो व. पितर ऊर्जे ... सन्त. स्याम—This passage is taken verbatim from आश्व श्रौ सू II. 7. 7.

1120 मनो न्वा हुवामह इति तिसृभि·। आश्व श्रौ सू II 7. 8. आप श्रौ सू I. 10. 5 calls them मनस्वती verses, as the word मन. occurs in each of the three.

1121. परेतन—compare तै सं. I. 8. 5. 2 'परेत पितर सोम्या गम्भीरैः पथिभिः पूर्वे ।' The 2nd half is different. The आश्व श्रौ सू II. 7 8 says that he should pour a stream of water with this mantra on the pindas which represent the Fathers for the time being.

drink! Go away by the sombre ancient paths, after bestowing on us wealth and endow us here with auspicious prosperity and all valiant sons'. He should repeat thrice the prayer 'O fathers! bestow on us a valiant son'[1122].

Then savyam. On the ground near the plates of the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas he scatters food together with yavas and water with the verse 'I shall offer food scattered (vikira) near the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas to those gods to whom no soma drink is offered and who are bereft of a share in sacrifices; this scattered food is offered to Viśvedevas who do not partake of the soma drink; it is not (now) mine'. Then apasavyam He says 'I shall offer food scattered near pitrya brāhmanas on the ground covered with darbhas to those who died without the saṃskāras being performed for them and to those women of my family who left the family (for bad deeds); this scattered food is presented to those boys and girls that came out of the womb; it is not mine'. So saying he strews food with water and sesamum seeds and then says after reciting Rg. X. 15.14 'this pinda made from the remainder of the food and occupying the position that a pinda given at Gayā occupies, has been offered to those persons who were born in my family and died and who were cremated or were not cremated; this is not mine'. So saying he offers near the pitrya brāhmanas a ball of rice and water mixed with sesamum grains.

Then he washes his hands and feet, sips water twice and puts on his finger a pavitra with the mantra 'pavitravantaḥ' (Rg IX. 73. 3). He then requests that the water in the hands of the daiva brāhmanas be auspicious (or beneficial). The brāhmanas reply 'may the waters be auspicious.' In the same way there are requests for goodwill, for protection due to yavas, for long life, welfare, peace, prosperity, contentment and responses by the daiva brāhmanas giving blessings as to these. Then apasavyam. Then the same request for auspiciousness of waters, goodwill, protection by sesamum grains &c. and blessings about them by pitrya brāhmanas. Then the performer requests 'may my family increase (or prosper) and may the procedure of worshipping the pindas be good,' to which the pitrya brāhmanas respond 'may 1122. वीरं मे दत्त पितर.—If the wife desires a son then with this mantra the middle pinda is given over to her and she eats it with the mantra आधत्त पितरो गर्भम्. Vide note 780 for that mantra The आश्व श्रौ सू. II 7. 12-13 says 'वीरं मे दत्त पितर इति पिण्डानां मध्यमम्। पत्नी प्राशयेदाधत्त. . सादिति'.

it be so.' Then raising the pranītā [1122a] vessel the performer requests 'May you say that the water and food and the like offered in the Pratisāmvatsarikaśrāddha to pitr, pitāmaha and prapitāmaha, so and so by name and gotra, be inexhaustible.' The pitrya brāhmanas reply 'so be it.' Then savyam. The same request is made to the daiva brāhmanas and the reply is the same. Then gold is given to the daiva brāhmaṇas and silver to pitrya brāhmanas and the performer says 'may the daksinās (fees) given to the brāhmanas that ate the śrāddha dinner protect (me).' They reply 'may they do so.' Then he says 'I shall request you to utter the word svadhā!' They reply 'do so.' Then apasavyam. Then he says 'May (the brāhmanas representing) father, grandfather and great-grandfather utter the word svadhā.' They reply 'let there be svadhā.' Then he should place over the pindas sesamum grains and water. Then he says 'May you declare that svadhā be accomplished.' They reply 'may svadhā be accomplished.' Then savyam. Then he says 'may you say that the gods led by Agni be pleased.' They reply 'may the Viśvedevāḥ be pleased.' Then apasavyam. Then he requests 'May you declare that the pitrs led by the Vasus be pleased'. They reply 'may the pitrs be pleased.' Savyam. He says 'May you declare that there is accomplishment of the sankalpa' (made at the beginning of the rite). They reply 'May there be accomplishment of the sankalpa'. He asks 'were the vegetables and cooked food liked by the pitrs'. They reply 'they were most excellent'. Then the performer decks himself by applying sandal paste to his forehead. After doing obeisance to the pindas he requests for blessings for his family (which are the same as those set out above from the Padmapurāna on p 452 above) and one more blessing 'May persons beg of us but may we not beg of any one' (vide n. 998). The brāhmanas reply in the same words only employing the words 'you' or 'your' for 'us' or 'our'.

He says 'I shall remove the pindas'. They reply 'do remove'. Then he repeats the verses 'Tad Visnoh' (Rg. I. 22.20), 'Tad viprāso' (Rg. I 22.21) and two more verses and then a Paurānic verse enumerating the seven holy cities of Ayodhyā, Mathurā, Māyā, Kāśī, Kāñcī, Avantikā and Dvārakā. He says 'May there be peace, prosperity and contentment on the spot where the pindas are'. They reply 'these (peace &c) dwell in their own places'. He says 'I shall 1122 a. For प्रणीतापात्र vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 208, 1022-23.

remove the plates in which the brāhmanas had their dinner.' Then he lays aside the kūrca. He then recites the verse 'Vāje vāje' (Rg. VII. 38. 8). Then savyam. Then he says 'O pitrs, get up together with the devas' and repeats the verses 'ā mā vājasya' (Vāj. S. 9. 19), 'svādusamsadah' (Rg. VI. 75 9), 'brāhmanāsah pitarah' (Rg. VI 75. 10), 'ihaiva stam' (Rg. X. 85. 42). Then he recites 'may the grandfathers being pleased grant to men (their descendants) long life, progeny, wealth, learning, heaven, moksa, happiness and kingdom' (Yāj. I. 270, but reads 'prayacchantu' for 'prayacchanti'). Then he prays 'May these blessings turn out to be true, may my family prosper, may this Pratisāmvatsarika-śrāddha have the same fruits as that of a śrāddha performed at Gayā! May the pitrs secure inexhaustible gratification.' Then he proceeds 'Today my birth has had its reward by bowing to your feet &c.' (vide n. 999 for the two verses repeated here). The brāhmanas reply 'we forget the trouble and excuse you.' Then he says 'Today this tithi is like a day sacred to the sun, the brāhmanas invited are like Vyāsa, Vasistha and Vāmadeva; may you declare that whatever is lacking as regards seats, dinner, mantras, procedure, materials and fees in this pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha of my pitrs performed by me today become all perfect at the words of brāhmanas'. They reply 'May all be perfect'. Then he recites the two verses 'Vasisthāsah pitrvad' and 'devān vasistho' (Rg X. 66. 14-15) and then at the end he repeats the verse containing a salutation (the word 'namah') viz 'idam pitrbhyo namo astvadya' (Rg. X. 15. 2). Therefore at the end (of a śrāddha rite) one does obeisance to the pitrs (in the words 'namo vah pitaro &c'). Therefore they say "should one repeat the pitryā verses with āhāva mantra specially recited with each verse or without repeating the āhāva mantra separately with each verse, for it is better not to finish Pitryajña quickly. He who separately recites the āhāva with each verse makes the pitryajña that is imperfect, complete and therefore one must recite specially employing the āhāva with each verse."[1123] The conclusion is 1123. The words in the प्रयोग (p 108a) are 'इदं पितृभ्यो नमो अस्त्वद्येति नमस्कारवतीमन्तत शंसति तस्मादन्तत. पितृभ्यो नमस्क्रियते। तदाहुर्व्याहावं पिण्या. शंसेदेत् अव्याहावं ३ इति। व्याहावमेव शंसेदसंस्थितं वै पितृयज्ञस्य साव्वसंस्थित वा एष पितृयज्ञ संस्था-पयति यो व्याहावं शंसति तस्माद् व्याहावमेव शंसत्व्यम्।' The passage इदं पितृभ्यो नमो... up to शंसत्व्यम् is taken verbatim from the ऐतरेयब्राह्मण 13th chapter 13th khanda (end). The khanda (13) starts with the question whether the one should repeat each verse with āhāva separately uttered. The performer should follow the brāhmanas up to the boundary (of the village). He says 'whatever blemish there may be in japa, tapas or śrāddha rite—may all that become free from blemish by the favour of brāhmanas. I do adoration to that Acyuta (Visnu) by remembering whom &c. O best of brāhmanas! may this śrāddha, even if devoid of mantras, or of some rite or of faith, become perfect by your favour'. Then he concludes 'May Janārdana Vāsudeva who assumes the forms of father, grand-father and great-grand-father be pleased by this sacrifice, viz. the pratisāmvatsarika-śrāddha of the pitrs This is a sacrifice to the manes. Tat sat. May it be dedicated to Brahma.' Then he repeats the verse 'Vasat te' (Rg. VII. 99 7) and then says 'adoration to Visnu (Visnave namaḥ) thrice and sips water twice. The fruit of offering pindas is stated by Brhaspati and Vrddha-Parāśara as follows: If the pitrs are in the world of gods they are gratified by the food offered in fire, if they are in the world of pitrs they are gratified by the dinner to brāhmanas and if in hell they are gratified by the balls offered on the ground.[1123a]

(Continued on the next page)

Comparing the above rather elaborate and exhaustive procedure with the procedure of pratisāmvatsarikaśrāddha as

---

(Continued from the last page)

verse 'devānām patnīr' (Rg V. 46 6) or the rk verse referring to Rākā should be recited first in the आग्नेमाचतशस्त्र in तृतीयसवन. The conclusion reached is that the verse referring to देवपत्नीs should be recited first by the होतृ. In the same context a question is raised whether the Yāmī verse (Rg X 14 4 'Imam yama prastaram') or the Pitryā verses (Rg. X 15 1-3) should be recited first. The conclusion is that the यामी verse should be first recited, then the Kāvya verse (Rg X. 14. 3 'Mātalī kavyair') and then the pitryā verses, out of which Rg X. 15. 2 (इदं पितृभ्यो नमो अस्त्वद्य) is recited last in which the word नम. occurs. आहाव means the mantra ज्ञोंरेसावोश्म्. The figure 3 is a sign of the प्लुत accent. The sign of प्लुत shows deliberation आहु —we have to understand ब्रह्मवादिन as the subject Then comes the question whether the आहाव should be recited at the beginning of each of the three pitryā verses or not The conclusion is that the आहाव should be recited at the beginning of each of the three pitryā verses Apparently it is rather difficult to say why this passage of the ऐतरेयब्राह्मण should occur in this प्रयोग The only reason appears to be that the ऐ ब्रा. passage has something to say about पितृs and hence as this is a प्रयोग for पितृs it is introduced here 1123 a. पिण्डदानफलमाह बृहस्पतिः । अग्नौ हुतेन देवस्था. पितृस्था द्विजतर्पणे. । नरकस्थाश्च तृप्यन्ति पिण्डैर्दत्तैस्त्रिभिर्भुवि ॥ वृद्धपराशरोपि । ये देवलोक पितृलोकमासु प्राप्तास्तथैवं नरकं नरा ये । अग्नौ हुतेन द्विजभोजनेन तृप्यन्तु पिण्डैर्भुवि ते प्रदत्तै. ॥ q in पृथ्वीचन्द्र folio 110 b.

practised in Madras in these days only a few points of differences in detail emerge. In the Madras procedure the numerous mantras as set out above (p. 448) do not occur nor does the Tai. Ā. passage occur therein, but the verses in praise of the dust of brāhmana's feet do occur. Most of the mantras both Vedic and Paurānic are the same. The blessings (āśīrvādas) in the Madras manual are more elaborate and include even the performer's cattle in the blessing of health and long life. In the Madras manual several mantras are set out as 'annasūkta' mantras in the procedure itself. The Madras paddhati adds at the end the well known verse 'kāyena vācā manasendriyairvā'.

The procedure for Yajurvedins of the Mādhyandina Śākhā in Bengal as set out by Raghunandana in his Yajurvedi-śrāddhatattva is entirely based on the 2nd and 3rd kandikās of the Śrāddha-sūtra of Kātyāyana. The Pārvanaśrāddhā-prayoga in Halāyudha's Brāhmanasarvasva closely follows Kātyāyana and I am assured by a careful student of Dharmaśāstra that the procedure of pārvanaśrāddha followed by Mādhyandinas at Bhatpara in Western Bengal is in strict conformity with the procedure laid down by Raghunandana. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana is translated here with some explanations and additions made by Halāyudha and Raghunandana and the whole text, being not very extensive, is given in the note below[1124].

1124. दैवपूर्वं श्राद्धं पिण्डपितृयज्ञवदुपचारः. पित्र्ये। द्विगुणास्तु दर्भाः पवित्रपाणिर्दक्षिणाप्रदासीनः सर्वत्र। प्रश्नेषु पङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यं पृच्छति सर्वान्वा। आसनेषु दर्भानास्तीर्य विश्वान् देवानावाहयिष्य इति पृच्छत्यावाहयेत्यनुज्ञातो विश्वे देवास आगतेत्यनयावाह्याववीर्य विश्वेदेवाः शृणुतेममिति जपित्वा पितृनावाहयिष्य इति पृच्छत्यावाहयेत्यनुज्ञात उशन्तस्त्वेत्यनयावाह्यावकीर्य आयन्तु न इति जपित्वा यज्ञियवृक्षचमसेषु पवित्रान्तर्हितेष्वेकैकस्मिन्नप आसिञ्चति ह्रो नो देवीरिति। एकैकस्मिन्नेव तिलानावपति तिलोसि सोमदेवत्यो गोसवे देवनिर्मितः। प्रत्नमद्भिः पृक्तः स्वधया पितॄँल्लोकान् प्रीणाहि नः स्वाहेति। सौवर्णराजतौदुम्बरस्रक्षडङ्गमणिमयानां पात्राणामन्यतमेषु यानि वा विद्यन्ते पत्रपुटेषु वैकैकस्यैकैकेन ददाति सपवित्रेषु हस्तेषु या दिव्या आप पयसा सम्बभूवुर्वा अन्तरिक्षा उत वा पार्थवीर्यीः। हिरण्यवर्णा यज्ञियास्ता न आप शिवाः शं स्योनाः सुहवा भवन्त्विति। असावेष तेऽर्घ इति। मधमे पात्रे संस्रवान्समवनीय पितृभ्यः स्थानमसीति न्युब्जं पात्रं निदधाति। अत्र गन्धपुष्पदीपवाससां च प्रदानम्। उद्धृत्य घृताक्तमन्नं पृच्छत्यग्नौ करिष्य इति। कुरुष्वेत्यनुज्ञातः पिण्डपितृयज्ञवदुहुत्वा हुतशेष दत्त्वा पात्रनाल्रप्य जपति पृथिवी ते पात्रं द्यौरपिधानं ब्राह्मणस्य मुखे अमृते अमृतं जुहोमि स्वाहेति। दैवण्यर्चा यजुषा वाङ्गुष्ठमक्षेऽवगाह्यापहता इति तिलान्प्रकीर्य उच्छं रिक्षेमलं दधाच्चक्रुषा वा। अन्नवन्तं जपेद् व्याहृतिपूर्वां गायत्रीं सप्रणवां सकृत्त्रिर्वा राक्षोघ्नीं. पित्र्यमन्त्रान् पुरुषसूक्तमतिरथमन्यानि च पवित्राणि। तृप्ताञ्ज्ञात्वाऽन्नं प्रकीर्य सकृत्सकृदपो दत्त्वा पूर्ववद्वायत्रीं जपित्वा मधुमतीर्मधुमन्तीं मन्थिति च। तृप्ताः स्थेति पृच्छति। तृप्ता. स्मेत्यनुज्ञात शेषमन्नमनुज्ञाप्य सर्वमन्नमेकतोद्धृत्यो

(Continued on the next page)

"The pārvana-śrāddha is preceded by the rite for Viśvedevas. The procedure follows that of Pindapitryajña[1124a]. In the rites for the pitrs double-folded darbhas are to be used (while in Vaiśvadevika rite straight darbhas are used). Whenever any thing is to be gifted, the performer (in all daiva as well as pitrya rites) wears a pavitra and makes the gift sitting. (When questions are to be asked) the performer puts the question to the most eminent in the row of diners (to the best daiva brāhmana in daiva rites and to the best pitrya brāhmana in pitrya rites) or he may put the question to all (and the reply is given by one or by all) Spreading darbhas on the seats (he makes the brāhmanas occupy them), he puts the question 'shall I invoke the Visvedevas (to the daiva brāhmana)'. Being permitted (by the daiva brāhmanas) in the words 'do invoke', he invokes the Viśvedevas with the mantra[1125] 'Viśve devāsa āgata' (Vāj. S. 7. 34 'Ye All Gods, come, listen to this my call and sit down on this darbha grass'). Then he scatters yavas (in front of the brāhmanas), mutters a mantra 'Viśvedevāḥ srunutemam' (Vāj. S. 33. 53, 'Ye All Gods, hear this call of mine'). After this japa he asks (the pitrya brāhmanas) 'I shall invoke the pitrs'. When permitted (by the pitrya brāhmanas) in the words 'do invoke', he invokes them with the mantra 'usantas tvā' (Vāj. S. 19. 70, 'O Agni! we longing for our fathers place you down' &c.). Then he scatters (sesamum

---

(Continued from the last page)

च्छिष्टसमीपे दर्भेषु त्रीन्त्रीन्पिण्डानवनेज्य दद्यादाचान्तेष्वित्येके । आचान्तेषूदकं पुष्पाण्यक्षताक्षण्योदकं च दद्यात् । अघोरा पितर. सन्तु सन्त्वित्युक्ते गोत्रं नो वर्धता वर्धतामित्युक्ते-दातारो नोभिवर्धन्ता वेदा. सन्ततिरेव च । श्रद्धा च नो मा व्यगमद्बहु देयं च नोस्त्वित्यक्षिप. प्रतिगृह्य स्वधावाचनीयान्सपवित्रान् कुशानास्तीर्य स्वधा वाचयिष्ये इति पृच्छति । वाच्यतामित्यनुज्ञातः पितृभ्य. पितामहेभ्य. प्रपितामहेभ्यो मातामहेभ्य. प्रमातामहेभ्यो वृद्धप्रमातामहेभ्यश्च स्वधोच्यता-मिति । अस्तु स्वधेत्युच्यमाने स्वधावाचनीयेभ्यो निविशेत्यूजमिति । उक्तानं पात्रं कृत्वा यथा-शक्ति दक्षिणा दद्याद् ब्राह्मणेभ्यो विश्वे देवा. प्रीयन्तामिति दैवे वाचयित्वा वाजे वाजेऽवतेति विसृज्या मा वाजस्येत्यनुव्रज्य प्रदक्षिणीकृत्योपविशेत् ।

1124 a. पिण्डपि ... चार —so the result is: अपराह्णः काल·, श्राद्धकर्तुः प्राचीनावीतिता, दक्षिणाभिमुखता, वामजानुनिपात·, पितृतीर्थं, अप्रादक्षिण्य, दक्षिणापवर्गता, दर्भाणां दक्षिणाग्रता चेत्यादय. पैतृका. धर्मा From this it follows that in वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मणोपचार there are यज्ञोपवीतिता, कर्तुरुदङ्मुखता, दक्षिणजानुनिपात·, दैवतीर्थं, प्रादक्षिण्य, उदगपवर्गता, प्राग्रता चेत्यादयो दैविकधर्मा . There are of course a few exceptions to the first part, such as दक्षिणादान, स्तोत्रजप and विप्रविसर्जन.

1125. It may be noted that almost all mantras quoted by Kātyāyana are very apt and appropriate for the purposes for which they are to be repeated. For reasons of space the full texts and translation of the mantras could not be given here.

grains in front of the pitrya brāhmanas) and mutters the mantra 'ā yantu naḥ pitarah' (Vāj. S. 19. 58, 'May the soma-loving pitrs come to us' &c.). Then he pours water in each of the cups made of a sacrificial tree (such as palāśa, udumbara &c.), in which a pavitra is dipped with the mantra 'śan no devīr' (Vāj. S. 36. 12, 'May the divine waters be for our happiness' &c.). (He puts yavas in the vessel for daiva rite). He puts in each of the cups sesamum grains with the mantra 'Thou art Tila[1126] &c.'. He offers on the hands of each of the brāhmanas (first daiva and then pitrya) that wear a pavitra water in a vessel made of gold, silver, copper, rhinoceros horn or precious stone or in whatever vessels may be available or in vessels made of bunches of leaves with the mantra 'yā divyā[1127] āpah &c.'. The water is offered in the words 'O father' N. N. by name, this is arghya for you' (and then to other ancestors). Having mixed together in the first vessel (meant for the father) the drops of water remaining in the other vessels[1128] for other ancestors, he puts down on the ground the first vessel face downwards with the words 'thou art a place for the pitrs'. Then (at this stage) gandha[1129] (sandalwood paste), flowers, incense, lamp and garment are offered (to the brāhmanas representing the ancestors).

Having taken out in another vessel some food from out of the food already cooked for śrāddha and having anointed it with ghee he (the performer) asks 'I shall perform agnau-karana'. Being permitted by the brāhmanas in the words 'do so', he offers into (grhya) fire oblations[1130] as in Pinda-

---

1126. तिलोसि This mantra occurs in आश्व. गृ. सू. quoted in note 966 above हलायुध and रघुनन्दन state that यवs are to be scattered with the mantra 'यवोऽसि यवयास्मद् द्वेषो यवयारातीः' (वाज. सं 5.26) and sesamum grains are to be scattered with the mantra अपहता असुरा रक्षांसि वेदिषदः (वाज. सं 2.29). Vide या. I. 230.

1127. For the मन्त्र 'या दिव्या etc.' vide note 966 above.

1128 There are six ancestors, three paternal and three maternal and therefore six vessels, drops of water from five vessels are poured into the first vessel रघुनन्दन adds that the first vessel is covered with the vessel for great-grandfather and is then put down with top downwards. The ब्राह्मणसर्वस्व explains 'तत्र च पितरस्तिष्ठन्तीति बृहस्पतिः। आवृतास्तत्र तिष्ठन्ति पितरः श्राद्धदेवता'.

1129. रघुनन्दन adds 'गन्धादीनां द्वन्द्वनिर्देशान्मिलितानामेव तन्त्रेण पित्रादिकमुद्दिश्य उत्सर्गः'.

1130. Both हलायुध and रघुनन्दन state that the two मन्त्रs in अग्नौकरण are 'ओं अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा, ओं सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा'.

pitryajña, having served (into all the plates for all the brāhmaṇas invited) the food that remains after being offered in fire, he touches with his hands (above and below each plate) and repeats the mantra 'The earth is thy vessel &c.' (notes 992, 1108a). (He keeps some food aside for making piṇḍas later on). Then (having served the food in the plates) he plunges the thumb of the brāhmaṇas in the food with a ṛk (Ṛg. I. 22. 17, 'idam Viṣṇur vicakrame') addressed to Viṣṇu or with a Yajus so addressed ('Viṣṇo kavyamidam rakṣasva'). Then he scatters about (yavas before daiva brāhmaṇas silently and) sesamum grains with the mantra 'apahatā asurā rakṣāṅsi vedisadah' (Vāj. S. 2. 29). Then he should serve hot food very much liked (by diners or by the departed) or he may serve such food as he can afford. While the brāhmaṇas are engaged in eating (the dinner) he should perform japa of the following [1131], viz. the sacred Gāyatrī once or thrice preceded by om and the vyāhṛtis, the verses called Rākṣoghnī (note 1111), mantras addressed to the pitṛs (Ṛg. X. 15. 1–13 beginning with 'udīratām-avara ut parāsah)', Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 1–16), Apratiratha hymn (Ṛg. X. 103. 1–13) beginning with 'āśuḥ śiśānaḥ') and other holy texts. Then finding that the brāhmaṇas are satiated with food, he should scatter some food in front of the dining brāhmaṇas, he should give to each brāhmaṇa water once (for apośana at the end of dinner). Then he should mutter as before the Gāyatrī, the (three) Madhumatī verses (Ṛg. I. 90 6–8) and the word 'madhu' (thrice). Then he asks 'are you satiated'. Being permitted by them in the words 'we are satiated', he makes them give their consent as to the rest of the food, collects together all food in one vessel (in order to make piṇḍas from it); he offers (two sets of three piṇḍas, three for paternal ancestors and three for maternal ancestors) on darbhas near the spot where [1132] the brāhmaṇas dined and left uneaten food in plates and pours water over the piṇḍas for ablution [1133]. Some authors say that piṇḍas are to 1131. It may be noted that in Bengal the numerous verses that are prescribed here for japa are apparently not muttered in modern times.

---

1132. उच्छिष्टसमीपे-गदाधर notes 'ब्राह्मणानामग्रतोऽन्नं प्रकिरेदिति कर्काचार्याः। पङ्क्तिमूर्ध्न्यस्योत्तरदिग्भागे अरत्निमात्रे विकिरं दद्यादिति हेमाद्रिः'.

1133. एकतोद्धृत्य is grammatically irregular; it should be एकत उद्धृत्य. The पिण्ड are offered to paternal ancestors with their wives (सपत्नीक) and to maternal ancestors with their wives The formula would be, अमुकगोत्र be offered after the brāhmanas perform ācamana at the end of the dinner. After they perform ācamana he gives to the brāhmanas water, flowers, akṣatas and akṣayyodaka[1134]. Then he prays for the following blessings. He prays 'may the pitrs be not terrible (i. e. be kind) to us'. The brāhmanas reply 'may they be so'. He prays 'May our family prosper'. They reply 'may it be so'. He prays 'May donors increase in our family'. They reply 'let it be so'. He prays 'May Vedas and our progeny prosper'. The reply is 'May they do so'. He says 'May faith not depart from me'; they say 'May it not depart'. He says 'May we possess many things that we can donate'. They reply 'so be it'. After receiving these blessings he spreads kuśas called svadhāvācanīya[1134a] together with pavitras (on the ground near the pindas or, on the pindas themselves according to Devayājñika and others); he asks (all the brāhmanas or the most eminent one) 'shall I request you to utter the word svadhā'. Being permitted by them in the words 'May svadhā be recited' he prays 'May there be svadhā to the pitrs, to the grandfathers, to the great-grand-fathers, to the maternal grandfather, maternal great-grandfather and maternal great-great-grandfather'. When the brāhmanas reply 'May there be svadhā' he sprinkles water over the svadhāvācanīya darbhas with the mantra 'ūrjam vahantīr' (Vāj S. II. 34). Then he turns the vessel top upwards (which had been placed with top downwards) and he should give to the brāhmanas dakṣinā according to his ability. He should make the daiva brāhmanas repeat 'May all the gods be pleased'. He should then dismiss the brāhmanas with the mantra 'Vāje vāje' (Vāj. S 9. 18), he should follow the brāhmanas (up to the village boundary) with the mantra 'ā mā vājasya' (Vāj S. 9. 19), circumambulate them and then enter his own house.

(Continued on the next page)

(Continued from the last page)

अस्मत्पितरमुकशर्मन् सपत्नीक वसुरूप एतत्ते ऽर्घ्यं स्वधा । इदममुकगोत्रायास्मत्पित्रेऽमुकशर्मणे सपत्नीकाय वसुरूपाय न मम The same formula with appropriate changes is to be employed for पितामह, प्रपितामह, मातामह etc. Some writers proposed that nine pindas may be offered, three to पितृवर्ग, three to मातृवर्ग and three to मातामहवर्ग हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1445 and 1447) provides that a line for मातृवर्ग should be drawn to the west of the one for पितृवर्ग and another line to the west of the one for मातृवर्ग for मातामहवर्ग and पिण्डs should be offered in that order.

1134. On अक्षय्योदक, गदाधर explains 'अक्षय्योदकशब्देन दत्ताक्षपानादेरानन्त्यप्रार्थनसम्बन्धि जलमभिधीयते।' तच्च पितृब्राह्मणेभ्य एवेति कर्कः। सर्वेभ्यो दयादिति स्मृत्यर्थसारे ।.'

1134-a. सपवित्रान् कुशानास्तीर्य-कर्क and गदाधर explain 'सपवित्रान्साग्रानित्यर्थः'.

It is to be noted that in the Bengal Manual of Pārvaṇa-śrāddha based on the Brāhmaṇasarvasva of Halāyudha and also on Raghunandana's Yajurvedi-śrāddhatattva the following details are added after the piṇḍas are placed on the darbhas and before the dismissal of the brāhmaṇas. He turns towards the north and says 'O pitṛs, regale yourselves here and come like bulls each to his portion.' Then he turns round to his former position and says 'the pitṛs regaled themselves and came like bulls each to his own share.' Then he loosens [1135] the side of his dhoti which has been tucked up and then folds up his hands (i. e. offers six namaskāras) with the mantra [1136] 'Namo vaḥ pitaro rasāya' (Vāj. S. II. 32). He smells [1137] the piṇḍas and gives the middle one to his wife, if she desires a son, with the mantra 'ādhatta' (Vāj. S II. 33).

From considerations of space the procedure of pārvaṇa śrāddha among Hiraṇyakeśins in modern times is passed over here. Moreover, it closely resembles the procedure in Āśv. Gṛ. set out above, the principal difference being that some of the mantras are different. The Saṃskāraratnamālā of Gopīnātha deals with this from p. 985 onwards But one noticeable feature of this last work is that of making hair-splitting distinctions. On p. 985 it refers to two śrāddhas (other than piṇḍa-pitṛ-yajña) to be performed on amāvāsyā, viz. māsi-śrāddha and māsika-śrāddha, the first being described by the Dharmasūtra of Hiraṇyakeśin and the second by the Gṛhyasūtra. Gopīnātha further says that māsikaśrāddha is the model of the other śrāddhas described in the Gṛhyasūtra and māsiśrāddha is the model of śrāddhas described in the Dharmaśāstras, such as Mahālayaśrāddha or Sāṃvatsarika-śrāddha, that Darśaśrāddha itself is māsi-śrāddha (p. 988) and that māsika-śrāddha may be performed on each darśa or on any one darśa day in a year and that māsi-śrāddha follows immediately after Piṇḍapitṛyajña as 1136 नमो वः पितरो रसाय-vide note 963 above. रघुनन्दन (यजुर्वेदिश्राद्धतत्त्व) remarks that in नमो वः पितरो रसाय...मन्त्रेण he offers obeisance to the pitṛs identifying them with the six seasons, that in 'namo vaḥ pitaraḥ' (Vāj S. 2 32) he offers namaskāra to the pitṛs as identified with Agni Kavyavāhana and then prays to the pitṛs to bestow on them a house in the words 'namo vo gṛhān naḥ pitaro dattā' Vāj. S 2. 32).

---

1135. About नीवीविस्रसन, vide शतपथ ब्रा॰ in n. 960a. बृद्धयाज्ञवल्क्य says 'दक्षिणे कर्णविवरे तु तिलैः सह कुशत्रयम्।'

1137. Vide Manu III. 218 अनाजिघ्रेच्च तान् पिण्डान् and note 960 towards the end laid down by Manu (III. 122) and māsikaśrāddha may be performed after māsi-śrāddha. In modern times no one performs māsiśrāddha or māsika-śrāddha strictly in accordance with the ancient rules. Śrāddha is supposed to be performed by feeding a brāhmana and giving him a daksinā of a few annas. The Śrāddhatattva (Jiv., part 1 p. 254) provides, after quoting Matsya and Bhavisya, that, if a person is unable to perform a pārvanaśrāddha every month, he should perform one at least thrice a year when the sun is in the zodiacal signs of Kanyā, Kumbha and Vrsabha and that if he is unable to perform even thrice then he should perform at least once when the sun is in the sign of Kanyā.

The two meanings of sapinda given by the Mit. and the Dāyabhāga have already been explained at great length in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 452–458 and pp. 472–477. The Dāyabhāga propounded the theory that whoever conferred greater spiritual benefit on the deceased by the performance of śrāddhas and the offering of pindas was entitled to be preferred as an heir to the deceased's wealth. The Mit. said that heirship depended on blood relationship and the nearest in blood to the deceased was the preferential heir. But even under the Mit. whoever took the wealth of the deceased was bound to pay his debts (Yāj. II. 51) and to offer śrāddha and pinda to him. This subject and the several propositions deduced from the texts have been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 734–745.

One thing to be remembered is that in determining the preferential right regard is to be had to the capacity of a person and the efficacy of the pindas when offered. After a person takes the wealth of the deceased, there is no legal machinery to enforce his duty to offer pindas[1138]. It was argued in Nalinaksha v. Rajani Kanto 35 C. W. N. 726 that, if an heir does not offer pindas or refuses to offer them to his ancestor, he was not entitled under Hindu Law to succeed to him. This argument was repelled by the judges with the remark that there was no authority for such a proposition and that the right to inheritance is based under the Dāyabhāga not on offering pinda but on the capacity to offer it (p. 729). Vide Gooroo Gobinda Saha v. Anand Lal 5 Beng. L. R. 15 (F. B.) and Digamber v. Motilal 9 Cal. 563 (F. B.) for the statement that the principle of spiritual benefit is the sole foundation of the theory of inheritance propounded in the Dāyabhāga. But in certain later cases such as Akshayachandra v. Hari Das 35 Cal. 721 it was rightly pointed out that spiritual benefit is not always the guiding principle under the Bengal school of law, that the principle of spiritual efficacy as the guiding principle fails in all classes of female relations such as the wife, the daughter and the mother whose rights are really based on special texts and that the reason for inheritance by a re-united coparcener was not spiritual benefit but was based on a quasi contract and affection.

1138. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 740 and note 1431.

The question about how śrāddha was to be performed if one or more of the three paternal ancestors were alive engaged the thoughts of writers from very ancient times. The Āśv.[1139] Śr. S (II. 6. 16-23) first sets out the views of Gānagāri, Taulvali and Gautama and then refutes them. Gānagāri held that out of the three paternal ancestors pindas should be offered to those that were dead and those that were alive should be honoured in person, since the śrāddha rite is meant for pleasing the ancestors; Taulvali opined that pinḍas should be offered to all the three ancestors, whether living or dead, since in the rite of śrāddha they are only a secondary matter (a detail). Gautama thought that pinḍas should be offered to dead ancestors, upto three from the father if the latter was living, from the grand-father if he was alive and from the great-grandfather if all the three be living. Āśv. replies; one cannot offer pinḍas to three ancestors[1140] beyond the father, grand-father or great-grandfather, since one has no adhikāra to do so; one cannot offer pindas to an ancestor after whom there is an ancestor (within three degrees) living. One may offer homa into fire to those that are alive. (If all three ancestors are alive) all the three pindas must be cast into fire or he may not begin the rite at all. The Kātyāyana śr.[1141] sūtra provides 1139. तस्मै तस्मै च एषां प्रेता. स्युरिति गाणगारि. प्रत्यक्षपित्तरानर्चयेत् तदर्थत्वात्। सर्वेभ्य एव निपृणीयादिति तौल्वलिः क्रियागुणत्वात् । अपि जीवन्त एव आ त्रिभ्यः प्रेतेभ्य एव निपृणीयादिति गौतम· क्रिया ह्यर्थकारिता । उपायविशेषो जीवमृतानाम् । न परेभ्योऽनधिकारात्।" न प्रत्यक्षम्। न जीवेभ्यो निपृणीयात्। न जीवान्तर्हितेभ्यः। जुहुयाज्जीवेभ्यः। सर्वहुतं सर्वजीविन ॥ आश्व. श्रौ II. 6. 16-23.

1140 One can offer pindas only to three ancestors beginning with the father according to Vedic passages quoted in notes 958, 960a above and Manu IX 186. So there is no ancient authority to offer pinḍa to 4th or 5th or 6th ascendant.

1141. प्रेतेभ्यो ददाति। जीवत्पितृकोपि । जीवान्तर्हितेपि । जीवपितृकस्य होमान्तमनारम्भो वा। न व्यवेते जातूकर्ण्यो न जीवन्तमतिददातीति । कात्या श्रौ. सू IV. 1. 23-27. Vide also शाङ्खायन श्रौ. सू. IV. 4. 12-15 for similar rules.

that pindas are offered only to deceased ancestors; therefore if a person's father be alive or if there is a deceased ancestor between whom and the performer there is an ancestor that is alive, then one whose father is alive can only perform homa (into fire, but no piṇḍadāna) or he should not undertake at all (the rite of pinda-pitryajña or pārvaṇaśrāddha); that Jātūkarnya prescribes that no piṇḍadāna is possible when a living ancestor (father) intervenes between the performer and a deceased ancestor, since a śruti text says 'one does not offer pindas to ancestors that are beyond a living ancestor.' Manu (III. 220-222) deals with this question as follows: If the performer's father be alive he should offer pindas to three ancestors beginning from the paternal grand-father or he may request the father to dinner as he would do to a stranger brāhmaṇa and offer piṇḍas to the deceased grand-father and great-grand-father. If the father be dead and the grandfather be alive, he may offer a piṇḍa only to the father and the great-grandfather (i. e only two pindas) or the grand-father who is alive may be invited to dinner as if he were the stranger brāhmaṇa invited to represent a deceased grand-father or if permitted by the grandfather who is alive he may offer piṇḍas to father, great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather. The Viṣṇudharmasūtra (chap. 75) has several rules of a similar character. Some of the Purāṇas such as Skanda VI 225.24-25, Agni 117.58-59 deal with this matter. Gobhilasmṛti (II. 93 ff) has a long passage on this question, one verse of which is quoted below.[1142] Many of the commentaries and digests hold divergent views on this subject, viz. the Mit. on Yāj. I. 254, Kalpataru (śr. pp 240 ff), Śr. K. K. pp. 552-556 and Nirṇayasindhu (III. pp. 499-503). It is impossible to reconcile all the views. The Kalpataru (on śr. p. 240) states that there are three alternative courses for him whose father is alive, (1) he should pass over the father that is alive and offer pindas to those three ancestors to whom his father offers pindas; (Manu. III, 220, Viṣṇu Dh. S 75.1); (2) he should simply offer homa into fire as stated in Āśv. Śr. S. quoted above, (3) he should not engage in the rite of pindapitryajña or pārvaṇaśrāddha at all (Gobhila-smṛti II. 93). The Nirnaya-sindhu says that there are numerous alternatives mentioned by different writers, that they are forbidden in the Kali age and that one view is that a man whose father is alive cannot engage in a pārvaṇaśrāddha and that the real conclusion is that śrāddha may be offered to those to whom the father (of the performer) who is living offers piṇḍas. It is clear that one whose father is living should have nothing to do with piṇḍadāna for deceased ancestors. Manu (in latter half of III. 220) allowed an alternative viz. one should feed one's father at a dinner (and honour him with the details of worship such as gandha, dhūpa, dīpa) and offer piṇḍas to the deceased grandfather and great-grandfather. When any one or two out of the three paternal ancestors are alive and śrāddha is permitted to a descendant several alternatives become possible by permutation and combination, which are passed over here from considerations of space and utility. But the various views held by different writers as described above show clearly what a firm grip the theory of the supreme benefits to be derived from śrāddhas had on the minds not only of common people but of learned men, who, in spite of the fact that the father was alive and was there to offer piṇḍas to his three ancestors, allowed even the son (whose father was living) to offer piṇḍas to the same three ancestors. The Viṣṇu Dh. S. extends the procedure about 'jīvatpitṛka' to one's mother's paternal ancestors (changing the mantra where necessary).[1142a] Similar rules apply where the performer's mother is alive (Agnipurāṇa 117.60 'evam mātṛādikasyāpi tathā mātāmahādike').

1142. सपितृकृत्येषु अधिकारो न विद्यते। न जीवन्तमतिक्रम्य किंचिद् वधादिति श्रुतिः॥ गोभिलस्मृति II. 93, q. by अ. कि. को p 552. Compare कात्या श्रौ सू q. in note 1141.

It is provided by Gobhilasmṛti (III. 157) that a śruti injunction should be made effective by means of anukalpa (of some substituted procedure) if the primary procedure cannot be carried out.[1143] If a person cannot secure several brāhmaṇas but can secure only one, he should perform Pārvaṇa-śrāddha in which six piṇḍas are to be offered with a single brāhmaṇa, provided he is paṅkti-pāvana[1144] (sanctifier of a row of diners) and in such a case, naivedya should be offered in place of the dinner

---

1142 a मातामहानामप्येवं श्राद्धं कुर्याद्विचक्षणः । मन्त्रोहेण यथान्यायं शेषाणां मन्त्रवर्जितम् ॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 75.8. मन्त्रोहेण—This is to be understood as follows: "'शुन्धन्तां पितरः' इत्यादौ शुन्धन्तां मातामहा इत्यादिपदक्षेपेण । शेषाणां पितृव्यमातुलादीनां मन्त्रवर्जित आवाहनादिमन्त्रवर्जित कुर्यादित्यर्थः ।" पृथ्वीच्च folio 222 a.

1143. चरितार्था श्रुतिः कार्या यस्मादप्यनुकल्पतः ।' अत्रैव देयं यथाशक्ति श्राद्धकाले समागते ॥ कात्यायन q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1522). The first half occurs in गोभिलस्मृति III. 157, but the 2nd half is different 1144. भोजयेदथवाप्येक ब्राह्मण पङ्क्तिपावनम्। दैवे कृत्वा तु नैवेद्य पश्चाद्वह्नौ तु तत्क्षिपेत् ॥ शङ्ख 14 10; हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1524) reads पश्चात्तस्य तु निर्वपेत्.

to the daiva brāhmanas and the food should be thrown into fire; so says Śankha 14.10. If even a single brāhmana cannot be had for a pārvanaśrāddha, then one should prepare with kuśas the effigy of brāhmana students (batu) and the performer should himself ask the questions and give the answers required in pārvanaśrāddha.[1145]

When one cannot secure a brāhmana nor materials, or when one is on a journey, or on the birth of a son, or when one's wife is in her monthly illness, one may perform āmaśrāddha (śrāddha with uncooked grains).[1146] This is stated by the Skandapurāna VII. 1. 206. 52. Kātyāyana and Saurapurāna 19.32 have similar verses 'a twice-born person should perform āmaśrāddha when he is on a journey or is in distress, or if he has no fire for cooking and those who are weak may always perform it.' The Madanapārijāta (p. 483) states that one who has the adhikāra for pārvanaśrāddha can alone offer āmaśrāddha. Hārīta says that when there is an obstacle in performing a śrāddha, āmaśrāddha is prescribed except in the case of māsika and sāmvatsarika śrāddhas.[1147] Āmaśrāddha is always prescribed for śūdras. It was further provided that the grains offered in śrāddha should be utilized by the brāhmanas for eating the cooked food for themselves and were to be applied for no other purpose (Hemādri, Śr. p. 1527). Vyāsa provides[1148] that the quantity of grains should be at least two or three or four times as much as the grains required for offering cooked food. Some words employed in the various items such as āvāhana[1149]

1145. निधाय वा दर्भबटूनासनेषु समाहित'। मैषाक्षमेषसंयुक्त विधान मतिपादयेत्॥ देवल q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p 1526), श्रा कि कौ. p 89 (ascribes to सत्यव्रत and reads निधायाथ दर्भचयम्)

1146. द्रव्याभावे द्विजाभावे प्रवासे पुत्रजन्मनि। आमश्राद्धं प्रकुर्वीत यस्य भार्या रजस्वला॥ स्कन्द VII. 1. 206 52, quoted as व्यास's in स्मृतिच. (श्रा. p. 492), आपद्यन्नौ तीर्थे च प्रवासे पुत्रजन्मनि। आमश्राद्धं प्रकुर्वीत भार्यारजसि सकमे॥ काल्या. q. by निर्णयसिन्धु III p 462, मद पा p. 480, कल्पतरु p. 234 explains 'अनग्निश्चात्र पाकसमर्थाग्निरहितः। न पुनरनग्निरनाहिताग्नि.।'.

1147. श्राद्धविघ्ने द्विजातीनामाश्राद्धं प्रकीर्तितम्। अमावास्यादि नियतं माससवत्सराद्वते॥ हारीत q. by अपरार्क p. 468, स्मृतिच (श्रा. p 492), श्रा. कि. कौ p. 26 (लघुहारीत)

1148. आमं ददद्धि कौन्तेय तद्वानं द्विगुणं भवेत्। त्रिगुण चतुर्गुणं वापि न त्वेकगुणमर्पयेत्। व्यास q by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p 1528).

1149 आवाहने स्वधाकारे मन्त्रा जप्या विसर्जने। अन्यकर्मण्यनूह्याः स्युरामश्राद्धे विधि स्मृत॥ q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1529), स्मृतिच (श्रा. p. 492) ascribes to मरीचि and explains "स्वधाकारे 'नमो वः पितर इदे' इत्यादिमन्त्रे इप इतिपदस्थाने आमद्रव्यायेत्यूहः।" svadhākāra and dismissal of the brāhmaṇas had to be changed e. g in āvāhana the verse employed is 'uśantastvā' (Vāj. S. 19 70) which ends with the words 'havise attave' (which means 'in order to eat the havis') the words 'havise svīkartave' would have to be substituted.

Āmaśrāddha is to be performed in the first part of the day, ekoddiṣṭa in the noon, the pārvaṇaśrāddha in the afternoon and vṛddhiśrāddha in the first part of the day (divided into five).[1149a]

If even uncooked food grains cannot be offered the performer should perform hemaśrāddha (śrāddha with money) When the sun passes from one sign of the zodiac into another, in default of food and brāhmaṇas, on a journey, on the birth of a son, in an eclipse, in the case of women and śūdras hemaśrāddha is allowed or when one's wife is in her monthly illness. In āmaśrāddha twice the quantity of grains required in offering cooked food and in hemaśrāddha four times (the price of the grains required for cooked food) has to be offered. If no money can be had the digests prescribe several modes which have already been set out above (vide p 425, n. 955).

1149 a आमश्राद्धं तु पूर्वाह्णे एकोद्दिष्टं तु मध्यतः। पार्वणं चापराह्णे तु मातृवृद्धि-निमित्तकम्॥ हारीत and शातातप q. in अपरार्क p. 468, पृथ्वीच. folio 124a.

CHAPTER X

EKODDIṢTA AND OTHER ŚRĀDDHAS

Having dealt at great length with Pārvaṇaśrāddha which is the model of all śrāddhas it is now time to speak of Ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha that is a modification of Pārvaṇaśrāddha[1150] The word Ekoddiṣṭa means 'that in which only one deceased person[1151] is intended (to be invoked or benefited)'. The Pārvaṇa-śrāddha is intended for three paternal ancestors and is thus distinguished from Ekoddiṣṭa. In Śān gr. IV. 2, Baud. gr. III. 12.6, the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana (kaṇḍikā 4), and Yāj. I. 251–252, the points of difference between the two are clearly set out.[1152] In this śrāddha only one arghya is offered, there is only one pavitra and only one piṇḍa is offered, there is no āvāhana (as there is in Pārvaṇa), no agnau-karaṇa, there are no brāhmaṇas invited to represent the Viśve-devas; the question about being satiated by the dinner is to be asked in the word 'svadiṭam' (did it taste well) and the brāhmaṇas reply with 'susvadiṭam') (it had excellent taste); instead of saying 'may it be inexhaustible,' the formula here used is 'May it approach' (or wait upon the deceased person), when the brāhmaṇas are sent away at the end of the dinner the word used is 'be satisfied (or delighted)' and they reply 'we are delighted.' The Viṣnu-purāṇa (III 13. 23-26) and Mārkaṇḍeya (28 8–11) closely follow the Śrāddhasūtra and Yāj. According to Śān gr. (IV. 2. 7),[1153]

1150. अथेत्यनेनैकोद्दिष्टस्य पार्वणानन्तर्याभिधानं तयोः प्रकृतिविकृतित्वं सूचयति। श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 244.

1151. एक उद्दिष्टो यस्मिन् श्राद्धे तदेकोद्दिष्टमिति कर्मनामधेयम्। मिता on या I 251, elsewhere it says 'तत्र त्रिपुरुषोद्देशेन यत् क्रियते तत्पार्वणम्, एकपुरुषोद्देशेन क्रियमाणमेकोद्दिष्टम्'। मिता. on या I. 217. हलायुध (folio 32 b) on श्राद्धसूत्र says 'एकोत्र संप्रदानत्वेनोद्दिष्ट इति।'.

1152. अथैकोद्दिष्टेषु नाग्नौकरणं नाभिश्रावण न पूर्वं निमन्त्रणं न दैवं न भूप न दीप न स्वधा न नमस्कारो नाचापूपम्। बौ. गृ. सू. III. 12. 6.

1153. अथैकोद्दिष्टम्। एकोऽर्घ एकं पवित्रमेक. पिण्डो नावाहन नाग्नौकरण नात्र विश्वे-देवाः स्वदितमिति तृप्तिप्रश्नः सुस्वदितमितीतरे ब्रूयुरुपतिष्ठतामित्यक्षय्यस्थानेऽभिरम्यतामिति विसर्गोऽभिरताः स्म इतीतरे। श्राद्धसूत्र 4 (कात्यायनीय) Almost the same words occur in कौषीतकिगृह्य 4. 2 (Benares S. Series). The यजुर्वेदिश्राद्धतत्त्व (Jiv. II, p. 495) explains 'एक एकदलरूप पवित्रम्'.

Manu III. 257, Mārkandeya (28. 11), Yāj. I. 256 and others, for one year after the death of a twice-born person till the sapindīkarana śrāddha is performed this is the way in which śrāddha is to be performed for the preta every month. The Visnudharmasūtra 21. 2 provides that suitable changes (ūha) should be made in the mantras employed (e. g instead of 'atra pitaro mādayadhvam' the mantra should be 'atra pitarmādayasva' (O father![1154] regale thyself here). In Ekoddista such a formula as 'ye ca tvām-anu' (those that come after thee) cannot be employed and the word 'pitr' is not to be employed (till sapindīkarana is performed), but the word 'preta' (Aparārka p. 525 quoting Śaunaka-grhyapariśista).[1155]

As seen above (p 262, note 591a) Ekoddista śrāddhas are of three kinds, nava, navamiśra and purāna Navaśrāddhas are those that are performed till the 10th or 11th day after death, navamiśras (or miśras) are those that are performed after the 11th day till one year (or six months, according to some) after death. Aparārka quotes a verse from Vyāghra[1156] that Ekoddista-śrāddha is performed on the 11th day, on the 4th day, at the end of each month for a year after death and every year on the day of death and a verse of Kātyāyana that (ekoddista) śrāddha should be performed for one who had kept sacred fires on the 11th day after the day of cremation and that the Dhruva śrāddhas should always be performed on the day of death. Aparārka explains 'Dhruvāni' as meaning those that are performed after three fortnights from death. About the navaśrāddha there is again a divergence of views. One meaning has already been given above on p 262 note 593. The Skandapurāna VI (Nāgarakhanda) 205. 1–4 and Garudapurāna (pretakhanda 5. 67–69) state that navaśrāddhas are nine viz. the three performed where a man died, where the funeral procession rested on the way and where the burnt bones were collected and six more performed on the 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th days after death.

1154. एकवन्मन्त्रानूहेतैकोद्दिष्टे। विष्णुध सू 21. 2 On this the दीपकलिका explains "अत्र पितरो मादयध्वमिति बहुवचनान्तेषु अत्र पितर्मादयस्व इति एकवचनेनोहः कार्य ".

1155. ये च त्वामनु इत्यादि मन्त्रो न युज्यते। पितृशब्द न कुर्वीत नमो वः पितर इत्यादि मन्त्रं न पठेत्। कल्पतरु (श्रा) p 246.

1156. तत्र व्याघ्रः। एकादशे चतुर्थे च मासि मासि च वत्सरम्। प्रतिसंवत्सरं चैवमेकोद्दिष्ट मृताहनि॥ कात्यायन.। श्राद्धमग्निमत. कार्यं दाहादेकादशेऽहनि। ध्रुवाणि तु प्रकुर्वीत प्रतीताहनि सर्वदा॥ अपरार्क p. 521 This last is गोभिलस्मृति III. 66 which reads प्रत्याब्दिक प्रकुर्वीत.

Numerous works lay down that there are sixteen śrāddhas which must be performed for a deceased person and that if these are not performed then his spirit is not freed from the condition of being a preta and a piśāca.[1157] There is a great deal of divergence of views about what these sixteen śrāddhas are, some works including sapiṇḍīkaraṇa among the 16, others excluding it therefrom. Gobhilasmṛti III. 67 enumerates[1158] the 16 as follows: The twelve monthly śrāddhas (performed every month on the tithi of death), the first (i. e. the śrāddha on the 11th day), two śrāddhas on (a day prior to the expiry of) every six months from the tithi of death and sapiṇḍīkaraṇa are the sixteen śrāddhas. The Garudapurāṇa[1159] refers to three groups of sixteen, one of which enumerates the 16 śrāddhas as those performed on the 12th day (after death), after three fortnights, after six months, after every month and at the end of the year, while the Padmapurāṇa[1160] enumerates them as follows: the sixteen śrāddhas are those performed on the 4th day after death, at the end of three fortnights, after six months, after a year and twelve śrāddhas performed each month (on the tithi of death) The Kalpataru p. 25 and Brahmapurāna q. by Aparārka (p. 523) state that the 16 śrāddhas are those performed on 4th, 5th, 9th and 11th days after death and the twelve monthly śrāddhas (on the tithi of death[1161]). Laugākṣi and

---

1157. यस्यैतानि न दीयन्ते प्रेतश्राद्धानि षोडश। पिशाचत्वं ध्रुवं तस्य दत्तैः श्राद्धशतैरपि॥ यम q by आ कि. कौ. p 362 The same verse occurs in गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड 5. 50–51), लिखितस्मृति 16 (reads यस्यैतानि न कुर्वन्ति एकोद्दिष्टानि), लघुशङ्ख 13 (with variations), पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 47. 272 reads न सन्देह यथाशक्त्या च श्रद्धया) The verse is quoted by the मिता on या० I. 254 (reading न दत्तानि and प्रेतत्वं सुस्थिरं तस्य) प्रेतलोके तु वसतिर्नूणां वर्ष प्रकीर्तता। क्षुत्तृष्णे प्रत्यहं तत्र भवेता भृशनन्दन॥ मार्कण्डेयः q by मिता. on या. I. 253

1158. द्वादश प्रतिमास्थानि आद्यषाण्मासिके तथा। सपिण्डीकरणं चैव एतद्वै श्राद्धषोडशम्॥ गोभिलस्मृति III 67. The word आद्य has been explained by या I 256 as मृतेऽहनि प्रकर्तव्यं प्रतिमासं तु वत्सरम्। प्रतिसंवत्सरं चैवमाद्यमेकादशेऽहनि॥ on which the मिता: says 'आद्यं सर्वकोद्दिष्टप्रकृतिभूतमेकोद्दिष्टमेकादशेऽहनि'. गरुड (प्रेत० 5 51) says: एकादशे द्वादशे वा दिने आद्यं प्रकीर्तितम्। But अपरार्क p. 543 explains आद्य differently 'आद्यशब्देन नवश्राद्धान्युच्यन्ते'. षाण्मासिके is explained by गोभिलस्मृति III 68 as एकाहेन तु षण्मासा यदा स्युरपि वा त्रिभि। न्यूनोः संवत्सराच्चैव स्यातां षाण्मासिके तथा॥ q by अपरार्क p 522, आ कि. कौ. p 338 and explained as 'एकेनाह्ना त्रिभिर्वा अहोभिर्यदा षण्मासा न्यूनाः स्यु संवत्सरश्च तावत्संख्यया न्यूनोस्ति तदा षाण्मासिके श्राद्धे कार्ये इत्यर्थ'.

1159. द्वादशाहे त्रिपक्षे च षण्मासे मासिकेऽब्दिके। तृतीयां षोडशीमेता वदन्ति मतभेदतः गरुड (प्रेतखण्ड 5.49–50); the other two groups are at chap 35. 33–36 and in 37.

1160 चतुर्थाहे त्रिपक्षे च षण्मासे चाब्दिके तथा। द्वादश प्रतिमास्थानि श्राद्धान्येतानि षोडश। पद्म, सृष्टिखण्ड 5. 271.

1161. ब्रह्मपुराणे। तृणां तु त्यक्तदेहानां श्राद्धाः षोडश सर्वदा। चतुर्थे पञ्चमे चैव नवमैकादशे तथा। ततो द्वादशभिर्मासैः श्राद्धा द्वादशसंख्यया। q. by अपरार्क p. 523.

others say that after performing the 16 śrāddhas according to the procedure for Ekoddista śrāddhas sapindana should be performed.[1162] The Madanapārijāta (p. 615), the Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 599) and others say that in this conflict of views one should follow the usage of one's country, Vedic Śākhā or family. There were two views about the śrāddha on the 11th day. It should be remembered that Yāj. III. 22 laid down impurity on death for 10, 12, 15 and 30 days respectively for the four varnas. One view espoused by Śankha and Paithīnasi was that in spite of the days of impurity not being over śrāddha must be performed on the 11th day (and for the moment the performer becomes pure for that purpose). The other view was that of the Matsyapurāna and Visnudharmasūtra 21.1 that the first śrāddha (ekoddista) was to be performed on the expiry of āśauca.

In the case of ascetics dying it is provided by Uśanas[1163] that by the fact of their taking to the order of sannyāsa (of the ekadandi kind in the Kaliyuga) they have not to undergo the condition of being preta, no Ekoddista nor Sapindīkarana should be performed for them by their son or other relative but only pārvanaśrāddha on the 11th day and every year thereafter. Śātātapa provides[1164] that no Ekoddista, no water, no pinda and no cremation rites should be offered to an ascetic nor mourning should be observed, but pārvana-śrāddha should be performed. Pracetas quoted by Mit. on Yāj I. 256 states that no ekoddista is to be performed for an ascetic nor sapindīkarana, but only pārvana on the day of death every year in Bhādrapada dark half. The Śivapurāna (Kailāsa-samhitā) chapters 22 and 23 deal with the rites to be performed on an ascetic's death on the 11th and 12th days.

In the Navaśrāddhas no incense, no lamps are employed. All mantras having the words 'pitr' and 'svadhā namah' are 1162. श्राद्धानि षोडशापाद्य विदधीत सपिण्डनम्। लौगाक्षि q by मिता on या. I 255, निर्णयसिन्धु p. 599, भट्टोजि on चतुर्विंशतिमतसंग्रह p. 168, ascribed to वायुपुराण by अपरार्क p. 532, सपिण्डीकरणादर्वाक् कुर्याच्छ्राद्धानि षोडश। एकोद्दिष्टविधानेन कुर्यात्सर्वाणि तानि तु॥ q. by अपरार्क p 522.

---

1163. एकोद्दिष्टं न कुर्वीत यतीनां चैव सर्वदा। अहन्येकादशे मासे पार्वणं तु विधीयते॥ सपिण्डीकरणं तेषां न कर्तव्यं सुतादिभिः। त्रिदण्डग्रहणादेव प्रेतत्वं नैव जायते॥ उशनस् q by मिता on या I. 255, परा मा I 2 p. 458, श्रा क्रि कौ pp. 444–445.

1164. एकोद्दिष्टं जलं पिण्डमाशौचं प्रेतसत्क्रियाम्। न कुर्याद्वार्षिकादन्यद् ब्रह्मभूता हि ते स्मृताः॥ शातातप q. by मद पा p. 627, श्रा क्रि कौ. p. 445, अपरार्क p 538 (reads पार्वणादन्यद् ब्रह्मभूताय भिक्षवे).

omitted and so is the word 'anu' omitted and there is no japa and no recital of mantras in the hearing of the brāhmaṇas. As stated in the Brahmapurāṇa, the śrāddhas performed in the house at the end of impurity on the 12th day, at the end of a month etc. are called ekoddiṣṭa. It follows that the rites called navaśrāddhas offered during the days of impurity are performed at the place of death or in the cemetery or at a place where water and piṇḍa are offered (and not in the house), vide Sm. C. (āśauca p. 176). In the navamiśra śrāddha mantras are employed according to some. In former times and now also all the 16 śrāddhas are performed on the 11th day. Hardly any one waits for one year to perform Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa. In former times it was laid down (e. g. by the Mit) that in times of difficulty, Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa should be performed even before a year elapses after performing the sixteen śrāddhas. But now this exception has become the rule.

Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa or Sapiṇḍana is the reception of a deceased person into the community of pitṛs to whom piṇḍas are offered. Several times were prescribed by ancient works for this. Acc to the Kauṣītaki gr. IV. 2 this śrāddha could be performed after the death of the deceased at the end of a year or at the end of three fortnights or on the happening of a lucky event (like the birth of a son or a marriage). The Bhāradvāja[1165] gr (III 17) allowed it at the end of a year (after death) or in the 11th or 6th or 4th month or on the 12th day. The Baud. Pitṛmedhasūtra II. 12.1 mentions five times for sapiṇḍīkaraṇa viz one year, 11th, 6th or 4th month or 12th day. The Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa 6 53-54) states the time of Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa to be one year, six months, three fortnights, the 12th day or on a lucky occasion. The Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 13. 26ff) makes similar provisions about sapiṇḍīkaraṇa (which is an ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha). Aparārka (p. 540) after a long discussion holds that there are three times for a performer who is an āhitāgni viz 12th day, some day between the end of āśauca and the first amāvāsyā (after death) or the first amāvāsyā after āśauca ends and prescribes four times for one who has not kept sacred fires, viz a year, six months, three fortnights or when a lucky event occurs. The Madanapārijāta quotes a verse of Vyāsa that the 12th day is commended (for the sapindana śrāddha) because family usages are innumerable, because man's life is short and because the body is evanescent. The Viṣnu Dh S. (21.20) provides that for śūdras 12th day after death is the only day for Sapindīkarana (but without Vedic mantras). Gobhila laid down that after Sapindīkarana was performed, there was to be no performance of śrāddhas every month, but Gautama (or Śaunaka, according to Aparārka p 543) held the view that they may be performed according to the procedure of ekoddista śrāddhas. Bhattoji says[1166] that when sapindīkarana is performed before the end of the year, then all the sixteen śrāddhas must be performed before Sapindīkarana, yet the monthly śrāddhas should again be performed at their proper times for one year. Yāj. I. 255 and Viṣnu Dh. S. 21. 23 prescribe that even if Sapindīkarana is performed for a deceased person within less than a year from death still for one year food and a jar of water should be given to a brāhmana for the whole year (for the benefit of the deceased). Uśanas provides that even if the heirs of a deceased person are divided in wealth, still the naraśrāddhas, the sixteen śrāddhas, and sapiṇḍīkarana must be performed by one alone[1167] (e. g. the eldest son), but Pracetas provides that when a year has (elapsed) śrāddha may be performed separately by each heir[1168].

1165. संवत्सरे सपिण्डीकरणमेकादशे मासि षष्ठे चतुर्थे द्वादशेऽनि। भारद्वाजगृह्य III 17.1; आनन्त्यात्कुलधर्माणां पुंसा चैवायुष क्षयात्। अस्थिरत्वाच्छरीरस्य द्वादशाहो प्रशस्यते॥ व्यास q. by मद् पा p. 631, श्रा कि. कौ p. 350 (ascribes to व्याघ्र), पृथ्वीच folio 237 a (ascribes to व्याघ्र), भट्टोजि p. 176 of चतुर्विंशति°, श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 301.

The procedure of Sapindana or Sapindīkarana is described in numerous works such as the Śān. gr. V. 9, Kauṣītaki gr. IV. 2, Baud Pitrmedhasūtra III. 12.12, Śrāddha-sūtra of Kātyāyana (kandikā 5), Yāj. I. 253–254, Viṣnupurāna III. 13.27 ff, Viṣnu Dh. S 21. 12–33, Padma (Sṛṣtikhanda 10. 22–33), Mārkandeya-purāna 28. 12–18, Garuda-purāna I. 220, Viṣnudharmottara II. 77, Smṛtyarthasāra pp. 57–58, Nirṇayasindhu (III. p. 614). It is briefly set out here.[1169] As said by Baud.

1166. यदा संवत्सरपूर्वं प्रागेव सपिण्डीकरणं क्रियते तदा यद्यपि षोडश श्राद्धानि प्रागेव कृतानि-श्राद्धानि षोडशादत्वा न कुर्याच्च सपिण्डनम्—इति वृद्धवसिष्ठोक्तेः, तथापि स्वस्वकाले पुनरपि मासिकादीन्यावर्तनीयानि। भट्टोजि on चतुर्विंशतिमतसंग्रह p 171

1167. नवश्राद्धं सपिण्डत्वं श्राद्धान्यपि च षोडश। एकेनैव हि कार्याणि संविभक्तधनेष्वपि॥ उशनस् q. by अपरार्क p. 524, मिता. on या. I. 255 (without name). This verse is गरुडपुराण, प्रेत० 34. 128–129.

1168. अर्वाक् सवत्सरात्सर्वे कुर्युः श्राद्धं समेत्य वै। संवत्सरे व्यतीते तु कुर्युः श्राद्धं पृथक् पृथक्॥ प्रचेतस् q. by अपरार्क p. 524.

1169 The सङ्कल्प in सपिण्डन will be somewhat as follows. अमुकगोत्रस्यामुकशर्मणः प्रेतस्य प्रेतत्वनिवृत्त्या पितृलोकप्राप्त्यर्थमसुकगोत्रै. अमुकशर्मभिर्वसुरुद्रादित्यस्वरूपै. प्रेतपितृपितामहप्रपितामहै. सह सपिण्डीकरण मृताहाद् द्वादशेऽह्नि पार्वणेकोद्दिष्टविधिना करिष्ये।.

Pitrmedhasūtra III. 12.12, in this śrāddha there is invitation to the brāhmanas the previous day, there is agnaukarana, there is the recital of Vedic texts when the brāhmanas are engaged in eating, Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas are honoured, the Viśvedevas are Kāma and Kāla (vide n. 1018), there is the presentation of incense and lamp, there is svadhā and also namaskāra. Four vessels for arghya should be got ready and filled with sandal-wood paste, water and sesamum grains, one being for the deceased (the preta) and three for his paternal ancestors, two daiva brāhmanas should be invited, one to represent the preta and three to represent the three paternal ancestors of the preta; if a man is unable to invite so many brāhmanas, he should invite three, one for Viśvedevas, one for the preta and one for the three paternal ancestors. He should request 'I shall unite the vessel for the preta with the vessels for his three paternal ancestors' When permitted in the words 'do unite', he should cast the kuśas in the vessel for the preta into the vessels for his three paternal ancestors, should keep a little water mixed with kuśas in the vessel for the preta and distribute the rest of the water from the preta vessel into the three vessels for his ancestors with the two mantras[1169a] 'ye samānā' (Vāj. S. 19. 45-46) Arghya is offered to the brāhmana representing the preta with the water that remains in the preta vessel, arghya is offered to the three pitrya brāhmanas from the three pitrya vessels. Four pindas should be prepared, one for the preta and three for his ancestors and then the performer requests 'I shall unite the pretapinda with the pindas for the three ancestors of his'; when permitted in the words 'do unite', the performer divides the pretapinda into three parts and puts each third into each of the three pindas with the same two mantras (Vāj. S 19. 45-46). The Garudapurāna (I. 220.6) strikes a discordant note in that it states that the pretapinda is to be divided in two parts, each of which is to be placed inside the pindas for pitāmaha and prapitāmaha only.

1169a. The two mantras are. ये समाना समनस्क पितरो यमराज्ये। तेषा लोक स्वधा नमो यज्ञो देवेषु कल्पताम्॥ ये समानाः समनसो जीवा जीवेषु मामका। तेषां श्रीर्मयि कल्पतामस्मिँल्लोके शतं समा.॥ वाज. स. 19. 45-46, काठकसंहिता 38 23-24 भारद्वाज-गृह्य III 17 sets out the following formula for तिलप्रदान 'ये समाना ये सजाता इति द्वाभ्यामसौ पितृभिः पितामहेभि प्रपितामहेभि सहैतत्ते तिलोदकं तस्मै ते स्वधा नम इति तिलो वुकमदानम्।' In place of असौ one has to use the vocative 'अस्मत्पितरशुकगोत्रा-शुकशर्मन् एत' पितामहेभि. and प्रपितामहेभिः are Vedic Instrumentals (plural).

Sapindikarana partakes of the character of both ekoddista and pārvana, the first applying to the preta and the 2nd to the three ancestors of the preta, so that in it two kinds of śrāddhas are combined. When the sapindīkarana rite is completed by the giving of daksinā to the brāhmanas, then the preta ceases to be so and himself becomes a pitr. The status of being a preta involves the experiencing of great torments due to hunger and thirst and becoming a pitr means being brought in contact with the śrāddha devatās called Vasu, Rudra and Āditya.[1170] The word preta has two meanings, (1) a person who is dead and (2) one who being dead has not the sapindikarana performed for him The result of sapindana is that the[1171] great-grandfather of the deceased whose sapindana is performed drops out from the list of pitrs entitled to pinda and becomes one called 'lepabhāk' (entitled to only wipings of the hand) and the former preta becomes one of the pitrs and entitled to participate in the pindas offered at a pārvanaśrāddha thereafter. As stated in the Garudapurāna I. 220. 2 the sapindīkarana-śrāddha is to be performed like the pārvana in the afternoon.

It may be noted that in some works the mantras recited at the time of pouring the water from the preta vessel into the pitr vessels are different For example, the Visnu Dh. S. 21. 14 says[1172] the mantras are 'Samsrjatu tvā prthivī' (May the earth unite thee) and 'samānī va ākutiḥ' (Rg. X. 191. 4), while the

---

1170. प्रेतत्वं च क्षुत्तृष्णोपजनितात्यन्तदु.खाद्भवावस्था। यथाह मार्कण्डेय । प्रेतलोके तु वसतिर्नृणां वर्ष प्रकीर्तिता। क्षुत्तृष्णे प्रत्यहं तत्र भवेतां भृगुनन्दन॥ इति। पितृत्वप्राप्तिश्च वस्वादिश्राद्धदेवतासम्बन्धः । मिता on या I. 254. या I. 255–256 presuppose this idea

1171. सपिण्डीकरणादूर्ध्वं पितुर्यः प्रपितामह । क्षतलेपभुजो याति प्रक्षयपितृपिण्डकः॥ मार्कण्डेय 29. 1; ततः प्रभृति वै प्रेत. पितृसामान्यमाप्नुयात्। विन्दते पितृलोकं च तत. आर्द्धं प्रवर्तते॥ हारीत q. by कल्पतरु (श्रा) p. 256, हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1640), श्रा क्रि कौ p. 262 which last explains 'पितृसामान्यं पितृभि सह पार्वणश्राद्धभोक्तृत्वमित्यर्थः। तेन पञ्चदश-श्राद्धाना प्रेतत्वपरीहार. फलं सपिण्डनस्य तु प्रेतत्वपरीहार पितृलोकप्राप्तिः पितृभिः सह पार्वणभोक्तृत्वं च फलत्रयमिति।' Vide also स्मृतिच on आशौच (Mysore University ed.) p 158 quoting प्रचेतस् and विष्णु.

1172. संवत्सरान्ते प्रेताय तत्पित्रे तत्पितामहाय तत्प्रपितामहाय च ब्राह्मणान् देवपूर्वान् भोजयेत्। अत्राशौकरणमाग्रहनं पार्थं च कुर्यात्। संसृजतु त्वा पृथिवी समानी व इति प्रेतपात्र्यपार्त्रं पितृपात्र्यपात्रत्रये योजयेत्। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 21. 12-14. q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1640). The mantra is संसृजतु त्वा पृथिवी वायुरग्नि प्रजापति.। संसृजध्वं पूर्वेभि. पितृभिः सह॥ The काठकगृह्य 66 7 prescribes that when parts of pretapinda are mixed up with पितृपिण्ड, this mantra and two more viz. 'samānā va ākūtāni' and 'sam vo manāmsi' (काठकसंहिता 10. 38-39) are recited.

Grhya-pariśista [1173] of Āśv. employs the three Madhumatī verses (Rg. I. 90.6–8) and the three fine verses at the end of the Ṛgveda beginning with 'sangacchadhvam' (Rg. X. 191. 2–4, 'May you unite' &c.).

Yāj. (I. 254) and Mārkandeya (28. 17–18) provide that Ekoddista and Sapindīkarana śrāddhas are performed for women also (but, not pārvana nor ābhyudayika). About the Sapindīkarana of the mother there are somewhat conflicting dicta. If a woman dies sonless and her husband is alive, her sapindana is effected with her mother-in-law (Gobhilasmrti II. 102). If a woman dies leaving no son and the husband also is dead, then no sapindana can be performed for her. If she died either on the funeral pyre of her husband [1174] or afterwards (as a Satī) then her son should perform her sapindana with her husband (i. e. the son's father) and there is no separate sapindana for her. If she was married in the āsura form or she was made a putrikā, then the son should perform his mother's sapindana with his maternal grandfather; while a son born of a woman married in the Brāhma and three other proper forms may perform her sapindana with her husband or the paternal grandmother or the maternal grandfather. In the case of these three alternatives if there is a certain family usage that should be followed; otherwise there is an option. If a woman has a step-son, the latter should perform her sapindana with his father, as Manu IX. 183 (= Vas. 17. 11) indicates. Vide the Mit on Yāj I. 253–254 and Sm. C. (on śśauca p 169) for discussion of these points and for various alternatives [1175]

The Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 388) says that there is no sapindana for one whose upanayana was not performed when 1173. प्रेतपिण्डं त्रिधा विभज्य पितृपिण्डेषु त्रिष्वादधाति मधु वाता इति तिसृभिः सङ्कच्छध्वमिति द्वाभ्यामनुमन्त्र्य शेषं पार्वणवत्कुर्यात्। आश्व. गृ. परि 3.11.

---

1174. सपिण्डीकरणं तासां पुत्राभावे न विद्यते। प्रतिसंवत्सरं कार्यमेकोद्दिष्टं नरैः स्त्रिया॥ मार्कण्डेय 28.18 on which रुद्रधर (श्राद्धविवेक p 113) says: अत्र पुत्राभाव इत्युपलक्षणं पतिपुत्राभाव इति द्रष्टव्यम्।

1175. स्वेन भर्त्रा समं श्राद्धं माता भुक्ते सुधामयम्। पितामही च स्वेनैव स्वेनैव प्रपितामही॥ बृहस्पति q by स्मृतिच. (श्रा.) p. 449, कल्पतरु (श्रा.) p. 259 (reads स्वधामय and तथैव प्रपितामही) and श्रा. क्रि. कौ. p. 428, मातुः सपिण्डीकरणं पितामह्या सहोदितम्। गोभिलस्मृति II. 102 श्रा. क्रि. कौ. p. 428, पितुः पितामहे यद्वत् पूर्णे संवत्सरे मृते। मातुर्मातामहे तद्वदेषा कार्या सपिण्डता॥ उशनस् q by मिता. on या. I. 253–254 The गरुड (प्रेत 34.121) says 'पितामह्या समं मातुः पितुः सह पितामहैः। सपिण्डीकरणं कार्यमिति तात्पर्यं मतं मम॥.' Therefore the मिता. says 'मातुः सपिण्डीकरणेपि विरुद्धानि वाक्यानि दृश्यन्ते।'.

he died, but if he was more than five years old then the 16 śrāddhas are performed for him (though not sapindana) and pinda is offered on bare ground. It may be noted that no auspicious rite like marriage in which ābhyudayika śrāddha is necessary can be performed until the sapindana of a deceased person of the family has been effected (except in the case of such absolutely necessary ceremonies as sīmantonnayana).

Manu (V. 89–90) prescribes that no water and other rites like sapiṇḍīkarana are offered and performed for those who had left off their faith, who were born of condemned mixed marriages, who entered ascetic orders, who had committed suicide (by hanging, poison &c.), who had embraced heretical doctrines, for women that wilfully seek illicit connection with men, that did harm to their foetus or husband (were guilty of abortion and murder of husband) and that were addicted to drinking surā. Yāj. III. 6 contains similar provisions. It has to be noted that every kind of suicide is not condemned by the ancient smrtis. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III, pp. 939, 958–9 for cases where suicide was not condemned. Except in those cases Yama (q by the Mit. on Yāj. III. 6) provides that in the case of the persons mentioned in Manu and Yāj. there is to be no āśauca observed, no water offered, no tears shed, no cremation and no last rites. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 6) quotes Vrddha Yājñavalkya and Chāgaleya that in the case of those who are guilty of condemned suicide the procedure of Nārāyanabali should be resorted to after a year and then śrāddha may be offered to them. Then the Mit. describes at length the procedure of Nārāyanabali. Vide note 838 b p. 370 above for the Skandapurāna, Nāgarakhanda 219. 19–21 on the view that śrāddha may be performed on the 14th of the dark half for persons who committed suicide or who met a violent death.

The Ābhyudayika-śrāddha is to be now described. Āśv. gr. IV. 7 mentions in one place only four śrāddhas viz. Pārvana, Kāmya, Ābhyudayika and Ekoddista (note 966 above). Many of the sūtras such as Āśv. gr. II. 5. 13–15, Śāṅ. gr. IV. 4, Gobhila gr. IV. 3. 35–37, Kausītaki gr. IV. 4, Baud. gr. III. 12. 2–5, the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana (kandikā 6) briefly describe this śrāddha. According to most of these sūtras this śrāddha is performed when there is a lucky event such as the birth of a son, or his caula, upanayana or marriage or there is the commencement of a charitable (pūrta) act (such as the dedication of a well or a tank or a park to the public). Āśv.

gr. and Gobhila gr. are very brief. They say that in this śrāddha performed on auspicious occasions or on the undertaking of meritorious acts an even number of brāhmaṇas is to be fed, that the rite is to be performed from left to right and that yavas (barley) are to be used instead of sesamum grains. As this śrāddha is only a modification (vikṛti) of pārvaṇa (as said by Aparārka p. 514) all rules of the latter will be applicable to the former except where special directions are given. The Āśv. gr. pariśiṣṭa II. 19, Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 56), Pitṛdayitā pp. 62–71 give a compact but tolerably full description of this śrāddha.

In this śrāddha which is to be performed in the morning (except on the birth of a son when it is to be done at once) the Viśve-devas are called Satya and Vasu, it is performed in the forenoon, the brāhmaṇas to be invited must be even in number, the darbhas are to be straight (and not doublefolded) and are not to be with their roots; the performer wears his sacred thread in the usual form (and not in the prācīnāvīta form), all actions are to be done from left to right (pradakṣiṇam and not prasavyam); the word svadhā is not to be used; yava grains are to be employed instead of sesamum grains, he invites them with the words 'find time to attend Nāndīśrāddha'. The brāhmaṇas say 'be it so'. He says 'May you two come (to my house)'; they reply 'we two shall come'. The performer faces the east or north (but never the south); the mantra about yavas is 'yavosi' (vide note 966)[1176] he requests 'I shall invoke the pitṛs called Nāndīmukha'.[1177] When permitted by the brāhmaṇas in the words 'do invoke' he says 'may the Nāndīmukha pitṛs be pleased'; he offers arghya only once with the words 'O Nāndīmukha pitṛs! this is the arghya for you'. Sandalwood paste, incense, lamp are to be given twice; the homa is made on the hand of the brāhmaṇa, the two mantras being 'to Agni, the bearer of havya! svāhā' and 'to Soma accompanied by the pitṛs! svāhā'. While the 1176. The mantra here repeated is 'यवोसि . मत्तः मुष्टया (in place of स्वधया) नान्दीमुखान् पितॄन् ..नः स्वाहा नमः (instead of स्वधा नमः)'.

1177. The सङ्कल्प will be somewhat as follows: ओम्, अद्यामुकगोत्राणां मातृपितामहीप्रपितामहीनामसुकासुकासुकदेवीनां नान्दीमुखीनां तथासुकगोत्राणां पितृपितामहप्रपितामहानाममुकामुकामुकशर्मणां नान्दीमुखानां तथासुकगोत्राणां मातामहप्रमातामहवृद्धप्रमातामहानाममुकासुकासुकशर्मणां नान्दीमुखानामसुकगोत्रस्य कर्तव्यासुककर्मनिमित्तकमाभ्युदयिकश्राद्धमहं करिष्ये। श्राद्धविवेक of चण्डेश्वर p. 149. For देवीनां it is usual to put वृद्धानां.

brāhmanas are eating the dinner, the Rāksoghna mantras and mantras addressed to Indra and propitiatory mantras may be recited but not the mantras addressed to pitrs (viz. Rg. X. 15. 1–13); when he sees that the brāhmanas are satiated, he recites the five verses (Rg. IX. 11. 1–5) beginning with 'upāsmai gāyatā naraḥ' (O men! sing for this soma) instead of the Madhumatī verses (viz. Rg. I. 90. 6–8) and at the end he makes the brāhmanas hear the mantra 'the pitrs have partaken (of the food), they have regaled themselves'. The performer should ask 'I shall request the nāndīmukha pitrs to utter benedictions' at the stage where (in Pārvana) 'aksayyodaka' is asked for, to which the brāhmanas respond with the words 'do request.' The performer employs the word 'sampannam' (was it perfect) in asking about the gratification of the brāhmanas, who reply with the word 'susampannam' (it was quite perfect). On the brāhmanas sipping water after their dinner, he cowdungs the places where the dinner was taken, strews darbha grass thereon with their tips turned towards the east and offers thereon two pindas for (each of the ancestors) made with the food that remains after the brāhmanas have eaten mixed with curds, jujube fruit and prsadājya [1178] (mixture of curds and clarified butter). The pindas are offered to the mātrs, to the three paternal ancestors and the three maternal ancestors (viz. mother's father, mother's paternal grandfather and her paternal great-grandfather). Some do not offer pindas in this śrāddha (as stated by Āśv. gr. parisista II. 19). The Pitrdayitā and Śrāddha-tattva (Jiv. p. 297) say that no mātrśrāddha is to be performed in Ābhyudayikaśrāddha by the followers of the Sāmaveda. It is possible that the śraddha for the mother, paternal grandmother and paternal great-grandmother was inspired by the Anvastakya śrāddha, as the sūtras from Āśv. gr. quoted below will indicate.[1178a]

The words Nāndīśrāddha and Vrddhiśrāddha are synonymous When Yāj I. 250 says[1179] that the Nāndīmukha pitrs should be worshipped with pindas when there is vrddhi (a lucky or auspicious event), he indicates that Nāndīśrāddha and Vrddhi-

---

1178 पृषदाज्य is defined in आश्व गृ. IV. 1. 17 as 'दधन्यत्र सर्पिरानयन्त्येतत्पित्र्य पृषदाज्यम्'.

1178 a अपरेद्युरन्वष्टक्यम्।...पिण्डपितृयज्ञे कल्पेन। हुत्वा मधुमन्थवर्जं पितृभ्यो दद्यात्। क्षीरश्च सुरा चाचाममित्यधिकम्। आश्व. गृ II. 5 1, 3–5.

1179. एवं प्रदक्षिणावृत्तो वृद्धौ नान्दीमुखान् पितॄन्। यजेत दधिकर्कन्धूमिश्रान् पिण्डान्यवैः क्रिया.॥ या. I. 250.

śrāddha mean the same thing. As noted by the Mit. on Yāj. I. 250 quoting Śātātapa this śrāddha is made of three parts, viz. mātr-śrāddha, pitṛśrāddha and mātāmahaśrāddha.[1180] On the other hand the Bhavisya-purāna I. 185. 15 states that there are two śrāddhas in this viz Mātṛ-śrāddha and Nāndīmukha-pitṛ-śrāddha. Ābhyudayika-śrāddha and Vrddhiśrāddha are treated as synonyms in some works such as the Padmapurāna,[1181] though it may be said that Ābhyudayika śrāddha is wider in import than Vrddhiśrāddha, since it is also applicable to śrāddha performed on the commencement of a pūrta act.

The Visnupurāna III. 13. 2–7, Mārkandeya 28. 4–7, Padmapurāna (srsti 9. 194–199), Bhavisyapurāna I. 185. 5–13, the Visnudharmottara I. 142. 13–18 describe briefly the procedure of Nāndiśrāddha and also the occasions on which it is to be performed. The occasions specified are[1182]: on the marriages of sons and daughters, on entering a new house, on naming a child, at the time of Cūdākarma, at Simantonnayana, on the birth of a son, a householder should honour the group of pitrs called Nāndimukha. The Mārkandeya-purāna 28. 6 notes that some desire that this śrāddha should not have Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas, but the Padmapurāna (sṛstikhanda 9.195) says that in this Vrddhiśrāddha the mothers are to be first honoured, then the fathers, then the mātāmahas and then the Viśve-devas Hemādri (śr. p. 107) quotes two verses from the Brahmapurāna to the effect that the father, paternal grandfather and paternal great-grandfather are called aśrumukha pitrs, while the three paternal ancestors beyond the great-grandfather are called Nāndīmukha pitrs.[1183] The Kalpataru (on śrāddha p 270) explains these verses as meaning no more than this that in case the three paternal ancestors of a man are living and there is a lucky event, then the devatās for Nāndiśrāddha in his case would be the three

---

1180. यद्यपि पितृन्यजेतेति सामान्येनोक्तं तथापि श्राद्धत्रयं क्रमश्च स्मृत्यन्तरादवगन्तव्यः। यथाह शातातपः। मातृ श्राद्धं तु पूर्वं स्यात्पितृणां तदनन्तरम्। ततो मातामहानां च वृद्धौ श्राद्धत्रयं स्मृतम्॥ मिता on या. I 250, कल्पतरु (श्रा) p. 271

1181 तृतीयमाभ्युदयिकं वृद्धिश्राद्धं तदुच्यते। पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 194).

1182. कन्यापुत्रविवाहेषु प्रवेशे नववेश्मनि। नामकर्मणि बालानां चूडाकर्मादिके तथा। सीमन्तोन्नयने चैव पुत्रादिमुखदर्शने। नान्दीमुखं पितृगणं पूजयेत् प्रयतो गृही। पितृपूजाविधिः प्रोक्तो वृद्धावेष समासतः। विष्णुपुराण III. 13. 5–7, quoted by अपरार्क p. 515 (except the last half) paternal ancestors beyond the great-grandfather. The Bhavisya-purāṇa notes that according to family usage some did not offer piṇḍas in Vrddhiśrāddha [1183a].

1183. पिता पितामहश्चैव तथैव प्रपितामहः। त्रयो ह्याश्रुमुखा ह्येते पितर समकीर्तिता॥ तेभ्यः पूर्वे त्रयो ये तु ते तु नान्दीमुखा इति॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by हेमाद्रि (श्रा p 107), कल्पतरु (श्रा.) p. 270, मद् पा p. 633. नान्दी means समृद्धि acc. to ब्रह्मपुराण q. by कल्पतरु (श्रा) p. 268.

The word 'mātarah' has two meanings. Gobhilasmrti [1184] prescribes that at the beginning of all rites the Mātrs together with Ganeśa have to be worshipped and it names fourteen mātrs such as Gaurī, Padmā, Śacī (I. 11–12).[1185] In the Mārkandeya-purāna (88.11–20 and 38) they are said to be seven viz Brahmāṇī and others. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 217–218 for the Mātrs and their worship.[1186] Aparārka (p. 517) quotes verses to the effect that in Vṛddhiśrāddha one must offer worship to the seven mātrs (Brahmāṇī and others), then to one's mother, paternal grandmother, and paternal great-grandmother, then to the Nāndīmukha pitrs and then to the mātāmahas together with their wives The Śrāddhaprakāśa (of Vīramitrodaya) quotes Vrddha-Vasistha to the effect that in the Mātṛśrāddha (as part of Vrddhi-śrāddha) if a sufficient number of brāhmanas be not available then for the groups of mātrs and of mātāmahīs four women (for each group) whose husbands are living and who have a son or sons should be invited to dinner [1186a] and honoured.

The Pratisāmatsarika or Pratyābdika śrāddha has already been described above at great length. It is to be performed every year on the day of death (Gobhilasmrti III. 66). It is 1183a पिण्डनिर्वपणं कुर्याच्च वा कुर्याद्विचक्षण । वृद्धिश्राद्धे महाबाहो कुलधर्मा-नवेक्ष्य तु ॥ भविष्यपुराण; on this the प्रथ्वीच० folio 167a remarks 'अतश्चाग्नौ-करणादीनामपि निषेध । तथा। अग्नौकरणमर्घं चावाहनं चावनेजनम्। पिण्डश्राद्धे प्रकुर्वीत पिण्डहीने निवर्तते॥'.

---

1184. कर्मादिषु तु सर्वेषु मातरः सगणाधिपाः। पूजनीया. प्रयत्नेन पूजिता. पूजयन्ति ता ॥ गोभिलस्मृति I. 13, q by कल्पतरु (श्रा. p 272).

1185. ब्रह्माण्याद्यास्तथा सप्त दुर्गाक्षेत्रगणाधिपान् । वृद्धादौ पूजयित्वा तु पश्चान्नान्दी-मुखान् पितॄन् ॥ मातृपूर्वान् पितॄन्पूज्य ततो मातामहानपि । मातामहीस्ततः केचिद्युग्मा भोज्या द्विजातय ॥ q by अपरार्क p 517.

1186 The worsbip of the mother Goddess or of mother Goddesses is one of the oldest and most widespread forms of religion The mother Goddess appears in the civilizations of Mesopotamia and Syria, in prehistoric Europe and west Africa Rude female figures, which represent idols of the mother Goddesses; have been discovered in the earliest deposits of pre-historic cultures Vide 'Mother Goddesses' by Mr. S K Dikshit (Poona).

1186a. मातृवर्गे मातामहीवर्गे वा ब्राह्मणालाभे पतिपुत्रान्विताश्चतस्रश्चतस्र सुवासिन्यो भोजनीया इत्युक्तं वृद्धवसिष्ठेन। मातृश्राद्धे तु विप्राणामलाभे पूजयेदपि । पतिपुत्रान्विता भक्त्या योषितोऽष्टौ सुदान्विता. ॥ श्राद्धप्रकाश p. 298.

laid down that in the case of one's parents this śrāddha partakes of the character of pūrvana.[1186b] The Bhavisya-purāna and Skanda state that the Sāmvatsarika śrāddha is the most eminent among śrāddhas and that if a son does not perform the yearly śrāddha of his parents on the day of death he goes to the horrible Hell called Tāmisra and then is born as a pig in a town.[1187] In connection with this, if the tithi or month of death or both are not known then Brhaspati, the Skandapurāna, Padma and Bhavisyapurāna lay down certain rules, viz[1188] (1) if the tithi is known but the month is not known, then the śrāddha should be performed on that tithi in the month of Mārgaśirsa or Māgha; (2) if the month is known but the tithi is not known, then the śrāddha should be performed on the amāvāsyā of the month; (3) if both the tithi and the month are not known, then one should take the tithi and the month when the deceased started from home; (4) if even the day and month of starting be not known, then the tithi and month in which a person hears of the death of a relative should be taken. It is to be noted that the month in pitrya rites is lunar and the words 'dina, ahah, vāsara' in connection with pitrya rites mean 'tithi' (Aparārka p. 545). There is no pratyābdika śrāddha in an intercalary month (Skanda VII. 1. 206. 59).

A few words may now be said about some other śrāddhas.

A well-known śrāddha is the Mahālayaśrāddha Some of the Purānas deal with this. The Padmapurāna (Srsti-khanda) says 'In the fifth fortnight (paksa) beginning from the Full Moon day of Āsādha, one should perform a srāddha, whether the Sun is by that time in the zodiacal sign of Kanyā (Virgo) or not. The sixteen days when the Sun is in Kanyā are equal to the solemn sacrifices which are completed with the gift of the 1186 b. एतच्च मृताहपार्वणं मातापित्रोरेव। तथा च हेमाद्रिधृतकात्यायनवचन 'सपिण्डीकरणादूर्ध्वं पित्रोरेव हि पार्वणम्। पितृव्यभ्रातृमातृणामेकोद्दिष्टं सदैव तु॥ मातृपदं सपत्नीमातृपरम्।' श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 304.

---

1187. सर्वेषामेव श्राद्धानां श्रेष्ठं सांवत्सरं स्मृतम्। क्रियते यत्खगश्रेष्ठ मृतेऽहनि बुधैः सह॥ स याति नरकं घोरं तामिस्रं नाम नामत। ततो भवति दुष्टात्मा नगरे सूकर खग॥ भविष्य. I. 183. 20 and 25. The first occurs also in स्कन्दपुराण VII 1. 205. 43.

1188. मृताहस्य यदा मासो न ज्ञायेत कथंचन। मार्गशीर्षेऽथवा माघे श्राद्धं तद्दिवसे स्मृतम्॥ यदा तु वासराज्ञानं मासज्ञानमथैव च। अमायामेव तन्मासं श्राद्धं सांवत्सरं भवेत्॥ पद्म (पातालखण्ड 101. 73-74). Vide भविष्यपुराण I. 183, 28-29, स्कन्द VII. 1. 205 52 for similar rules बृहस्पति q. by अपरार्क p. 545 has similar verses and adds 'विनमासौ न विज्ञातौ मरणस्य यदा सुत। मध्यमादिनमासौ तु ग्राह्यौ पूर्वोक्तया विशा॥' best of daksinās. If it is not possible to perform the śrāddha in the dark half (when the Sun is in Kanyā), one may perform it when the Sun is in Tulā (Balance). When the Sun enters the sign of Scorpion (without a śrāddha being performed), the Fathers go away losing all hope and after pronouncing a terrible curse (on their descendants) they return to their abode.'[1189] The fifth fortnight from the Full Moon day of Āsādha is the dark half of Bhādrapada. The dark half is the preserve of pitrs. In Bhādrapada the Sun is in the middle of its apparent motion in daksināyana. Therefore the dark half of Bhādrapada is specially chosen as the best period for śrāddha to the pitrs i. e. for the Mahālaya The śrāddha performed in Bhādrapada dark half is called Mahālaya-śrāddha, since that fortnight is the abode (ālaya) as it were of the maha (i. e. festival day) for pitrs. The real idea is that the dark half of Bhādrapada is specially to be welcomed for a śrāddha when the Sun is in Kanyā during that fortnight and that even if the Sun is not in Kanyā the dark half of Bhādrapada is still a good time for a srāddha to the pitrs. The Skandapurāna[1190] also says 'In the fifth fortnight from the Full Moon of Āsādha, when the Sun occupies the sign of Kanyā, the pitrs of him who offers a śrāddha on the tithi of the death (of one's father) certainly derive gratification for one year thereafter.' The Kalpataru quotes the Bhavisyapurāna to the effect that if a man has not performed śrāddha in

---

1189. आषाढीमवधिं कृत्वा यस्तु पक्षस्तु पञ्चम.। तत्र श्राद्धं प्रकुर्वीत कन्यां गच्छतु वा न वा॥ कन्यागते सवितरि यान्यहानि तु षोडश। क्रतुभिस्तानि तुल्यानि समाप्तवरदक्षिणै.॥ ...अमावात् कृष्णपक्षादौ तुलायां कर्तुमर्हति॥ अतो वृश्चिकमायाते निराशाः पितरो गताः। पुन· स्वभवनं यान्ति शापं दत्त्वा सुदारुणम्॥ पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 47. 225-228). The first verse आषाढी० occurs in अग्निपुराण 175.33 and is ascribed to जातूकर्ण्य by श्रा. क्रि कौ p. 283 and अपरार्क p 423, which reads the third पाद as श्राद्धकालः स विज्ञेयः The verse कन्यागते० is ascribed to the ब्रह्मपुराण by श्रा क्रि कौ p 285 (which reads तुल्यानि देवो नारायणोऽब्रवीत्) and to ब्रह्माण्डपुराण by अपरार्क p. 424 (which reads last पाद as तत्र दत्तं महाफलम्) and to श्लोकगौतम by श्रा क ल p 99. यान्यहानि तु षोडश—These words are explained in two ways. 'कदाचित् पक्षवृद्धौ षोडशदिनात्मकोऽपि नभस्यस्यापर पक्ष श्राद्धकर्मणि कालो न तु पञ्चदशदिनात्मको वेति दर्शयितुमुक्तम्। यद्वा अमावास्याया अनन्तरभूताया प्रतिपत्तिथ्या अपि संग्रहणार्थं 'तिथिषोडशक.' इत्युक्तम्। प्रतिपदोपि क्षीणचन्द्रत्वे सापरपक्षतुल्यत्वात्। स्मृतिच (श्रा p. 365). There is also a third way viz including the preceding full moon day along with the 15 days of the dark half. प्रजापतिस्मृति verse 161 is very similar to the verse कन्यागते० and कल्पतरु (श्रा. p. 16) quotes it from ब्रह्माण्ड

1190 आषाट्या पञ्चमे पक्षे कन्यासंस्थे दिवाकरे। मृताहनि पुनर्यो वै श्राद्धं दास्यति मानवः॥ तस्य संवत्सर यावच्चृप्ता. स्यु पितरो ध्रुवम्। स्कन्द. VI. 216. 96-97, q. by श्राद्धकल्पलता p 98.

Mahālaya (i. e. in the dark fortnight of Bhādrapada when the Sun is in the sign of Kanyā) he should offer it on the 15th day (of the dark half of Āśvina) on which, it is well-known, lamps are lighted.[1191] The Śrāddha-sāra (p. 113) and the Smṛtimuktāphala (on śrāddha p. 745) quote Vrddha-manu to the effect that the latter half of Bhādrapada when the Sun is in Kanyā is called Mahālaya and also Gajacchāyā. Various views are held on the question of the exact day on which the Mahālayaśrāddha is to be performed, viz. it may be performed on any day from the first tithi of the dark half of Bhādrapada to the amāvāsyā or from the fifth of the dark half to the amāvāsyā of Bhādrapada or from the 8th or 10th of the dark half to amāvāsyā or from the 5th of the dark half of Bhādrapada to the 5th of the next fortnight or on any day on which the Sun is in Kanyā or on any day till the Sun enters Scorpion.[1192] Prajāpati states that there are numerous śrāddhas described by the Purānas, all of them yield rewards but the Mahālaya (śrāddha) is the most eminent among them.[1193]

The Mahālayaśrāddha is to be performed, as stated by the Mārkandeyapurāṇa, in accordance with the procedure of Pārvaṇaśrāddha.[1194] The Smṛtyarthasāra states that if it is not possible to perform all śrāddhas (except sapindīkaraṇa) according to the detailed procedure of Pārvaṇaśrāddha they should be performed by the procedure called 'Sankalpavidhi', which consists in performing the details laid down for Pārvaṇa as far as possible except the details of āvāhana, arghya, homa and piṇḍadāna.[1195] The Madanapārijāta (pp 609–610) also states that when a man has to perform a 'sankalpa-śrāddha' he need not go through the details of arghyadāna, vikira and there is no āvāhana, no agnaukarana and no pindadāna even, but he has simply to feed a brāhmaṇa or brāhmaṇas

---

1191. येयं दीपान्विता राजन् ख्याता पञ्चदशी भुवि। तस्यां दद्यात्तु चेद्दत्तं पितृणां तु महालये॥ भविष्यपुराण q. by कल्पतरु (on आ p 17) and आ कि की p 291, स्मृतिषु (आ p 747 ascribes to सुमन्तु)

1192. तदेवं कृत्स्नः पञ्चमः पक्ष पञ्चम्यादिदर्शान्तमद्यम्यादिदर्शान्त-दशम्यादिदर्शान्त-पञ्चमीदर्शयोः मध्ये अनियमेनैकं वा दिनं महालयश्राद्धकाल। स्मृतिषु (आ p 747)

1193 श्राद्धान्यनेकशः सन्ति पुराणोक्तानि वै नृणां। फलप्रदानि सर्वाणि तेषामाद्यो महालयः॥ प्रजापति verse 37.

1194. कन्यागते सवितरि दिनानि वृश पञ्च च। पार्वणेनैव विधिना तत्र श्राद्धं विधीयते॥ मार्कण्डेयपु. q. by स्मृतिषु (आ p. 745).

1195 सपिण्डीकरणवर्ज्यं सर्वश्राद्धेषु विस्तृतपार्वणविधिनासम्भवे सङ्कल्पविधिनैव कार्यम्। सङ्कल्पविधानं मामावाहनार्घ्यहोमपिण्डवर्जं पार्वणोक्त यथासम्भवं भवति। स्मृत्यर्थसार p 60.

In the Mahālayaśrāddha the Viśvedevas are Dhurī and Locana. This śrāddha is performed for the benefit not only of the paternal and maternal ancestors with their wives, but also for other relatives and persons that are dead (together with their wives, sons and husbands if these be dead) viz one's step-mother, one's wife, son, daughter, paternal uncle, maternal uncle, brother, paternal aunt and maternal aunt, sister, paternal uncle's son, son-in-law, sister's son, father-in-law, mother-in-law, ācārya, upādhyāya, guru, friend, pupil and any other relative.[1196] Some perform only for the paternal ancestors with their wives and the maternal ancestors with their wives. The day on which the moon is in Bharanī naksatra in the dark half of Bhādrapada is called Mahābharanī and śrāddha performed on that day is said to be equal to Gayāśrāddha (Matsyapurāna q. by Śr. K. L p 99) The Mahālaya-śrāddha is to be performed on the 12th tithi of Bhādrapada dark half in the case of a sannyāsin and on no other tithi and his yearly śrāddha is to be performed by his son according to pārvaṇa method as in the case of householders. The dvādaśī is sacred to Visnu and yatis always repeat the words 'namo Nārāyanāya' and therefore the 12th is the special tithi for the mahālaya-śrāddha of yatis. The Mahālayaśrāddha is not to be performed in an intercalary month (malamāsa).

Two more śrāddhas that are performed even to this day may be mentioned here. One is called 'Mātāmahaśrāddha' or 'Dauhitra-pratipad-śrāddha'. A daughter's son whose parents are alive can alone perform a śrāddha for his maternal grand-father (together with the maternal grand-mother if she also be dead) on the first tithi of the bright half of Āsvina[1197]. A daughter's son can perform it even if his maternal grand-father has a son or sons living It may be performed with or without pindadāna (generally without it) and it may be performed even if the daughter's son has not been invested with the sacred thread. The Śrāddhasāra notes that the mātāmaha-śrāddha is based only on the usage of śistas (p. 24).

Another is the 'Avidhavānavamīśrāddha', which is performed for one's mother or other women of the family who died while the husbands were alive. It is performed on the 9th of the dark half of Bhādrapada. It ceases to be performed when the husband dies after the woman's death. The Nirnayasindhu notices several views about this and says that one should follow the usage of one's country [1198]. According to the Mārkandeyapurāna in this śrāddha not only a brāhmana but also a woman whose husband is alive is to be fed and presents of a girdle, a garland and bangles are to be made to her.

1196. Vide धर्मसिन्धु II. p. 79 for the सङ्कल्प in महालयश्राद्ध

1197 गर्भस्थोऽपि च दौहित्रो अश्वयुक्प्रतिपद्दिने । कुर्यान्मातामहश्राद्धं पितरौ यदि जीवतः ॥ प्रजापतिस्मृति verse 170.

It will have been seen from the translation of Āśv. gr., Yāj and the Padmapurāna that daksinā, according to one's ability, has to be given in each śrāddha towards the end of the rite. The Skandapurāna (VI. 218. 12-14) provides that whatever is wanting in mantras or the proper time or in procedure becomes perfect by daksinā. Śrāddha without daksinā is like rain on an arid place or like dancing in the dark or like singing before a deaf person, that he who desires the permanent gratification of himself and his Manes should not offer a śrāddha without daksinā. The Rāmāyana shows how on the 12th day after the death of king Daśaratha gifts of jewels, of hundreds of cows, wealth, food in abundance and vehicles, of male and female slaves, of spacious houses were made to the brāhmanas. [1199] The Āśramavāsikaparva (14 3-4) recounts the valuable gifts to brāhmanas in honour of Bhīsma, Drona, Duryodhana and other fallen warriors, adding that persons of all varnas were treated to profuse food and drink The Vāyupurāna (chapter 80) propounds in great detail the rewards of various kinds of gifts made in śrāddhas From considerations of space those descriptions are passed over here and only a brief eulogy of the gift of cooked food is given in the note below.[1200] The Śantiparva (chap 42. 7)

1198. अत्र भर्तृमरणोत्तरं पूर्वमृतश्राद्धं न कार्यमिति केचिदाहु पठन्ति च श्राद्धं नवम्या कुर्यात्सन्मृते भर्तरि लुप्यते-इति तदेतन्निर्मूलत्वान्मूर्खमतारणमात्रम्। श्राद्धदीपकलिकाया त्राह्मे-पितृमातृकुलोत्पन्ना या कास्मिन्मृता स्त्रिय । श्राद्धार्हा मातरो ज्ञेया श्राद्ध तत्र प्रदीयते॥ इति। अत्र देशाचाराद् व्यवस्था। निर्णयसिन्धु II p 154

1199 ताते दशाहेऽतिगते कृतशौचो नृपात्मज। द्वादशेऽहनि संप्राप्ते श्राद्धकर्माण्य कारयत्॥ ब्राह्मणेभ्यो ददौ रत्नं धनमन्नं च गुरुकलम्। वास्तिक बहुशुक्लं च गाश्चापि शतशस्तदा। दासीदास च यानं च वेश्मानि सुमहान्ति च। ब्राह्मणेभ्यो ददौ पुत्रो राज्ञस्तस्यौर्ध्वदेहिकम्। रामायण, अयोध्याकाण्ड 77, 1-3 (M. L. J edition, 1933). ततोऽनन्तरमेवात्र सर्ववर्णा-न्महामते। अन्नपानरसौघेण श्रावयामास पार्थिव ॥ आश्रमवासिकपर्व 14. 12

1200 अन्नदो लभते तिग्मः कन्याकोटीस्तथैव च। अन्नदानात्परं दानं विद्यते नेह किंचन। अन्नाद् भूतानि जायन्ते जीवन्ति च न संशय.॥ जीवदानात्पर दानं न किंचिदिव विद्यते। अन्नेजीवति चैलोक्यमखिलंचैव हि तत्फलम्। अन्ने लोका प्रतिष्ठन्ति लोकदानस्य तत्फलम्। अन्नं प्रजापतिः साक्षात्तेन सर्वमिदं ततम्॥ वायुपुराण 80. 54-57.

states that while Yudhisthira performed the after-death ceremonies of the fallen heroes he erected sabhās, prapās, water reservoirs and the like intending them for each separately. Devala states. 'when the brāhmanas have sipped water after dinner, daksinā is to be given' and Bṛhaspati prescribes 'Daksinā should be given to all the brāhmanas according to the learning of them by means of (gifts of) cows, land, gold, clothes. He should do this in such a way that they feel satisfied, one who is well-off should do this specially.'[1201] The Āśvamedhika-parva (62. 2–5) states that Vāsudeva offered śrāddha to his sister's son Abhimanyu and donated to sixty thousand brāhmanas, gold, cows, bed-steads, clothes and fed them. A special rule was provided by Brhaspati that the clothes, ornaments, bed-stead and the like, the horse and the like that were used by the father during his lifetime should be presented to the brāhmana invited for śrāddha after honouring him with sandalwood paste and flowers.[1201a] The Anuśāsana-parva (chapt. 96) states the origin of the practice of giving an umbrella and sandals on the completion of a śrāddha.

Something must be said about the gift of the bed-stead (śayyā) used by the deceased on the 11th or 12th day after death. The Garudapurāna (Pretakhanda 34. 69–89), Padma (srstikhanda 10. 12), the Matsyapurāna highly eulogise the gift of śayyā to a brāhmana and his wife. The Matsyapurāna states that on the 2nd day after the end of impurity on death the performer (of śrāddha) should donate a bed-stead possessing special characteristics; on it the golden image of the deceased should be placed and also fruits and clothes. After honouring a brāhmana couple with many ornaments this should be done; then a bull should be let loose (for the benefit of the deceased) and the gift of a dark brown cow should also be made.[1202] The Garudapurāna (Pretakhanda 34. 73–82) gives a more elaborate description which appears to be almost identical with the 1202. सूतकान्ताद् द्वितीयेऽह्नि शय्यां दद्याद्विलक्षणाम् । काञ्चनं पुरुषं तद्वत्फलवस्त्रसमन्विताम् । सम्पूज्य द्विजदाम्पत्यं नानाभरणभूषणैः । वृषोत्सर्गं च कुर्वीत देया च कपिला शुभा ॥ मत्स्यपुराण 18. 12–14 q. by श्रा क. ल. p 213, श्राद्धरत्न p. 199.

---

1201. बृहस्पतिरपि । मद्यादक्षिणां तेषा सर्वेषामनुरूपत. । गोभूहिरण्यवासोभिस्तुष्टिमुक्तवतां यथा । तथा भवति कर्तव्य समर्थेन विशेषत.' q. by पृथ्वीच folio 112b; यद्यद्विष्टतमं लोके यच्चास्य दयितं गृहे । तत्तद्गुणवते देयं तदेवाक्षयमिच्छता ॥ मार्कण्डेय 32.91, वामनपुराण 14 106.

1201 a वस्त्रालङ्कारशय्यादि पितुर्यद्वाहनादिकम् । गन्धमाल्यैः समभ्यर्च्य श्राद्धभोक्त्रे तदर्पयेत् ॥ बृहस्पति q. by स्य म p 129, श्रा. क ल. p 213.

verses of the Bhavisya quoted by Hemādri. The Bhavisya-purāna quoted by Hemādri (and from Hemādri by the Nirnaya-sindhu p. 596) states the mantra to be recited viz 'just as the bed-stead of Krsna is never devoid of Laksmī, the daughter of the ocean, similarly my bed may not be empty in each birth that I may have to undergo.'[1203] Acceptance of the gift of a śayyā was looked down upon in former times and even now it is only the poor brāhmanas (that are not generally learned) that accept this gift The Padmapurāna condemns the acceptance of the gift of śayyā in no measured terms. It says 'when a brāhmana accepts the gift of a bed-stead, he should have to undergo the ceremony of upanayana again. In the Veda as well as in the Purāna (the gift of) a bed-stead is everywhere condemned and all those who accept the gift go to hell.'[1204]

Certain other matters connected with śrāddhas may be briefly touched upon. In very ancient times twelve kinds of sons were recognized out of whom the ksetraja,[1205] the putrikā-putra and dattaka were most important All these were the sons of two fathers. The question mooted was: to whom were they to offer pindas ? The Madanapārijāta (pp 607–608) quotes a passage from the Hārīta-dharmasūtra[1206] and explains it. Hārīta says. 'seed does not grow without a field Since it is seen that both are necessary the child born is the child of both. Out of the two (fathers) the procreator is to be first invoked

1203 मन्त्रस्तु—यथा न कृष्णशयन शून्यं सागरजातया। शय्या ममाप्यशून्यास्तु तथा जन्मनि जन्मनि॥ यस्मादशून्यं शयनं केशवस्य शिवस्य च। शय्या जन्मनि॥ नि सि III p. 597. The गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड 34 81) has the verse यथा न etc

1204. गृहीताया तु शय्यायां पुन संस्कारमर्हति। वेदे चैव पुराणे च शय्या सर्वत्र गर्हिता॥ ग्रहीतारस्तु जायन्ते सर्वे नरकगामिन॥ पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 10 17–18)

1205. The ksetraja son was procreated on the wife or widow of a sonless man by a sagotra (a brother or other agnate) or even an asagotra according to the rules of niyoga, the procreator being called bījin and the husband on whose wife or widow the son was begotten was called ksetrin. The putrikāputra is of two kinds, (1) a sonless man gives his daughter in marriage to another with the stipulation that the son born of the marriage will be the son of the girl's father (Vas. 17. 17, Manu IX 127). (2) A daughter herself may be made a son (Vas 17. 16). A dattaka is a son whom his father or mother gives to another as a son confirming the gift with water (Manu IX. 168). Vide H. of Dh vol. III. pp. 647–650 for detailed explanations about these and other secondary sons.

1206. तत्र हारीत। नाक्षेत्रे बीजं रोहति। उभयदर्शनादुभयोरपत्यमिति। तेषामुत्पाद-यितुः प्रथम. प्रवरो भवति। द्वौ द्वौ पिण्डौ निर्वपेत्। अथवैकपिण्डे द्वावनुकीर्तयेत्। द्वितीये पुत्र-स्तृतीये पौत्रो लेपिनश्च त्रीनन्वाचक्षाण आ सप्तमादित्येके। मद पा pp 607–608 and कल्पतरु (on श्रा pp. 241–242).

(and then the ksetrin). He (the son) may offer two pindas to each grade of the ancestors or he may offer a single pinḍa (to the father and) may repeat the names of both (fathers) as to that single pinda. The son (of the son of two fathers) may repeat two names as to the 2nd pinda (i. e. the pinda for paternal grand-father); the grand-son (of the son of two fathers) may do the same as to the third pinḍa (viz. the pinḍa for paternal great-grandfather).' Manu IV. 140 and Gobhila-smṛti II. 105 say about the putrikāputra[1207] that he presents the first pinda to his mother (as she was appointed as a son), the 2nd to her father and the third to his father's father. This appears to be one order in which pindas are to be offered by the putrikāputra, while Manu IX. 132 sets out another method since it says that a putrikāputra inherits the entire wealth of his own father if he is sonless and he gives two pindas (i. e. performs two śrāddhas) for his own father and for his maternal grandfather. The Śān. Śr. S. provides[1208] that if there be two fathers, the son should recite the names of both (bījin and ksetrin) with reference to the same pinda. Even Yāj. says 'The son procreated according to the rules of niyoga by a sonless man on the wife of another inherits the wealth of both and offers pinda to both.'[1209] The Mit. adds that if a person appointed to procreate a son on another's wife has a son, then the son so begotten becomes the son of the ksetrin alone and not of the bījin. As the ksetraja and putrikāputra have become obsolete for several centuries the subject has only an academic interest now. But the dattaka is still in vogue and a few words must be said here about the persons to whom the dattaka offers pinḍas. The Kalpataru quotes from the Pravarādhyāya a passage on this point which is as

---

1207. मातुः प्रथमतः पिण्ड निर्वपेत् पुत्रिकासुतः। द्वितीयं तु पितुस्तस्यास्तृतीयं तु पितुः पितुः॥ गोभिलस्मृति II 105. कुलूक appears to be wrong in explaining पितु. पितु. in मनु IX. 140 as 'तृतीयं मातु. पितामहाय दद्यात्।'. मनु IX. 132 is 'दौहित्रो ह्यखिलं रिक्थमपुत्रस्य पितुर्हरेत्। स एव दद्याद् द्वौ पिण्डौ पित्रे मातामहाय च॥'. Here दौहित्र means पुत्रिकापुत्र.

1208 असावेतत्ते ये च त्वामन्वायिति पिण्डान् यथावनेजितं निधायोभावेकस्मिन् पिण्डे पितृभेदे। शाङ्खायनश्रौ सू. IV. 3 10-11 q by कल्पतरु p 241 (on श्रा.). The आप. श्रौ I 9. 7 says 'यदि द्विपिता स्यादेकैकस्मिन् पिण्डे द्वौ द्वावुपलक्षयेत्।'.

1209. अपुत्रेण परक्षेत्रे नियोगोत्पादितः सुतः। उभयोरप्यसौ रिक्थी पिण्डदाता च धर्मत॥ या II. 127; यदा तु नियुक्तः पुत्रवान् केवलं क्षेत्रिणः पुत्रार्थं प्रयतते तदा तदुत्पन्नः क्षेत्रिण एव पुत्रो भवतीति न बीजिन.। स च न नियमेन बीजिनो रिक्थहारी पिण्डदो वेति। मिता.

follows: [1210] 'If these (i. e. those who are bījin) have no issue born of their own wives, (the sons begotten by niyoga or given in adoption) should inherit their wealth and offer pindas to them up to three ancestors; if both (the bījin and ksetrin or the giver and taker in adoption) have no other son, then they (sons begotten or adopted) should offer pinda to both, in one and the same śrāddha they should repeat (the names of) the two ancestors respectively (of the acceptor and that of the begetter) after having separately intended the same pinda for both up to the third ancestor.' The Baud. Dh. S. [1211] quotes a verse as follows 'The son of two fathers shall give the pinda (to his two fathers and pronounce) two names with each pinda; three pindas will thus serve for six persons (ancestors).' It would be seen from the passage quoted above from Hārīta that some authorities allowed two separate pindas for each degree of ancestors when there were two in the same degree. Manu IX. 142 lays down 'the son given should not take the gotra and wealth of his natural father, the pinda follows the gotra and wealth; the svadhā (obsequies) of him who gives (his son in adoption) cease or fail (so far as that son is concerned).' This verse has been so interpreted by some decisions of the High Courts and of the Privy Council as to mean that the son adopted becomes totally severed from the family of his birth. This subject has been discussed at great length in H. of Dh. vol III pp 690–697 and it is established there that the severance of the son given in adoption is only partial, that the gotra of the natural family persists even after adoption into another family for purposes of marriage and āśauca and that the Nirnayasindhu, [1212] the Dharma-sindhu and the Dattaka-candrikā declare that the son given away in adoption into another family can perform the śrāddha of his natural father, 1210. अथ यद्येषा स्वभार्यास्वपत्यं न स्यादुभयेषु हरेयु. पिण्डं चैम्यस्त्रियुरुषं दद्युरथ यद्युभयोर्न स्यादुभाभ्या दद्युरेकस्मिन्श्राद्धे पृथगुद्दिश्यैकपिण्डे द्वावनुकीर्तयेत् प्रतिग्रहीतार चोत्पादयितारं च तृतीयात्पुरुषात् । q by कल्पतरु (आ. p. 241) with variations The same passage is cited as from कात्यायन by the व्य. म p. 115 (my edition), and from कात्यायन and लौगाक्षि (quoted in प्रवरमञ्जरी) by नि सि. III p. 389.

---

1211. अथाप्युदाहरन्ति। द्विपितुः पिण्डदानं स्यात् पिण्डे पिण्डे च नामनी। त्रयश्च पिण्डाः षण्णां स्युरेवं कुर्वन्न मुह्यति ॥ इति। बौ ध सू II 2. 22–23.

1212. दत्तकस्तु जनकस्य पुत्राद्यभावे दद्यात्स तत्सत्त्वे। गोत्ररिक्थे जनयितुर्न भजेद्दत्रिमः सुत'। गोत्ररिक्थाहृग. पिण्डो व्यपैति ददत. स्वधा॥ इति मनूक्तेः । इद जनकस्य पुत्रसत्त्वविषयम्। नि सि III p. 389, दत्तकस्तु जनकपितृ पुत्राद्यभावे जनकपितु श्राद्धं कुर्याद् धनं च गृह्णीयात्। धर्मसिन्धु III. (उत्तरार्ध) p 371.

if the latter has no son at the time of his death and can also take his wealth.

Vrsotsarga (the letting loose of a bull). This topic has been dealt with by several sūtra works such as the Śān. gr. III. 11, the Kausītaki gr. III 11 (in Benaras S. S. and III. 6 in Madras University Series), Kāthaka gr. 59, 1 ff., Pāraskara gr. III. 9, Visnu-dharmasūtra, chap. 86. 1–20. In numerous works some verses called gāthās sung by the pitrs are set out one of which expresses the yearning of the pitrs as follows:[1213] 'one should desire to have many sons; since if even one (of the sons) goes to Gayā (and offers śrāddha after his father's death) or if he performs a solemn horse sacrifice or lets loose a dark-coloured bull (the man having such a son will secure final release)'. The description in the Visnudharmasūtra being tolerably full is set out here;[1214] "(This ceremony) takes place on the full moon day in Kārtika or Āśvina In this rite he must first examine the bull The bull must be the offspring of a milch cow having young ones living, he must have all auspicious 1213. एतेष्वा बहवः पुत्रा यद्येकोपि गयां व्रजेत् । यजेत वाश्वमेधेन नीलं वा वृषमुत्सृजेत्॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 85. 67, बृहस्पतिस्मृति verse 21, लघुशङ्ख 10, मत्स्यपुराण 22 6, ब्रह्मपुराण 220. 32–33, वायुपुराण 83 11–12, पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 11.68), ब्रह्माण्ड (उपोद्घातपाद 19 11), विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 146.58 and I. 144 3. The meaning is 'बहूनां पुत्राणां मध्ये एकेनापि गयाश्राद्धकरणे पितृमुक्तिर्भवति,' as stated in स्कन्दपुराण, नागरखण्ड, chap. 216 114–117 The first half occurs in अनुशासनपर्व 88 14 and the whole verse in मत्स्य 207. 40 (which says it is an ancient gāthā and reads the third pāda as 'गौरीं वाप्युद्वहेत्कन्यां'). Compare कूर्म० II. 20. 30–31.

---

1214 अथ वृषोत्सर्गः। कार्तिक्यामाश्वयुज्यां वा। तत्रादावेव वृषभं परीक्षेत। जीवद्वत्सायाः पयस्विन्या पुत्रम्। सर्वलक्षणोपेतम्। नीलम्। लोहितं वा। सुखपुच्छपादशृङ्गखुरम् । यूथस्याच्छादकम्। ततो गवा मध्ये सुसमिद्धमग्निं परिस्तीर्य पौष्णं चरुं पयसा अपचित्वा पूषा गा अन्वेतु न इह रतिरिति च हुत्वा वृषभस्य स्कारस्त्वङ्नयेत्। एकस्मिन् पार्श्वे चक्रेणापरस्मिन् पार्श्वे शूलेन । अङ्कितं च हिरण्यवर्णा इति चतसृभिः शं नो देवीरिति च स्नापयेत्। स्नातमलङ्कृतं स्नातालङ्कृताभिश्चतसृभिर्वत्सतरीभिः सार्धमानीय रुद्रान् पुरुषसूक्तं कूष्माण्डीश्च जपेत् । पिता वत्सानामिति वृषभस्य दक्षिणे कर्णे पठेत्। इम च। वृषो हि भगवान्धर्मश्चतुष्पादः प्रकीर्तितः। वृणोमि तमहं भक्त्या स मे रक्षतु सर्वतः॥ एतं युवानं पतिं वो वदामि तेन क्रीडन्तीश्चरत प्रियेण। मा हास्महि प्रजया मा तनूभिर्मा रधाम द्विषते सोम राजन्। वृषं वत्सतरीयुक्तमैशान्यां कारयेद्दिशि। दोतुर्वस्त्रयुगं दद्यात्सुवर्णं कास्यमेव च॥ अयस्कारस्य दातव्यं वेतनं मनसोप्सितम्। भोजनं बहुसर्पिष्कं ब्राह्मणांश्चात्र भोजयेत् ॥ उत्सृष्टो वृषभो यस्मिन् विचरत्यथ जलाशये। जलाशयं तत्सकलं पितॄंस्तस्योपतिष्ठति ॥ शृङ्गेणोल्लिखते भूमिं यत्र क्वचन दर्पितः। पितॄणामक्षयान्नं तत्प्रभूतमुपतिष्ठति॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 86. 1–20. The काठकगृह्य (59.3) reads 'इह रतिरिति हुत्वा'. The commentator gives ten mantras here of which इह रतिरिति is the 2nd. The first half of एतं युवानं occurs in तै सं III. 3.9.1 (reads परि वो ददामि). The whole verse occurs in a corrupt form in विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 147 12 and the verse वृषो हि is विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I 147. 10.

marks (i. e. must not be deficient in any limb), must be dark-coloured [1215] or red but having a white mouth, white tail, white feet and white horns, he must be one that can protect the herd (or that throws into the background by his height all the herd). Then after having kindled a blazing fire among the cows (in the cowpen) and having strewn kuśa grass around it let him boil with milk a dish sacred to Pūsan and offer (two oblations) with the mantra 'May Pūsan follow our cows' (Rg. VI. 54.5) and the mantra 'here is pleasure' (Vāj. S. 8.51); a blacksmith should then mark the bull, on one flank with a discus and on the other flank [1216] with a trident Let him wash the bull after he is marked with four mantras beginning with 'the golden-coloured' (Tai. S. V. 6.1. 1-2) and with the (five) mantras beginning with 'May the divine (waters) bring us happiness' (Rg. X. 9. 4-8). Having washed and decked the bull he should bring him together with four young cows which also should have been washed and decked and mutter the Rudras (Tai S. IV 5. 1-11), the Purusasūkta (Rg 10. 90. 1-16) and the Kūsmāndis (Vāj S. XX. 14-16, Tai Ā. X. 3-5). Then let him recite in the right ear of the bull the mantra [1217] 'father of calves' and the following mantras 'The holy dharma [1218] is a bull and is declared to have four feet; I choose him with devotion (as the object of worship); may he protect me on all sides. This young bull I give you as husband (O young cows!), roam

---

1215. A नीलवृष is variously defined The मत्स्यपु 207 38 and विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I, 146 56 define 'चरणानि मुखं पुच्छं यस्य श्वेतानि गोपतेः। लाक्षारससवर्णश्च तं नीलमिति निर्दिशेत्॥'. In विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 146 42-55 and मत्स्य 207 the characteristics of auspicious and inauspicious bulls are given The आ क ल. p. 214 quotes शौनक as 'लोहितो यस्तु वर्णेन मुखे पुच्छे च पाण्डुरः। श्वेत. खुरविषाणाभ्या स नीलो वृष उच्यते॥' This is ascribed to ब्रह्माण्डपुराण (रेवाखण्ड) by आ प्र and शु प्र p. 226.

1216 The विष्णुधर्मोत्तर says शूलेन दक्षिणे पार्श्वे वामे चक्रेण निर्दहेत्। I. 147.6; while the भविष्योत्तर q by शु प्र p 227 says 'ततो वामे त्रिशूलं च दक्षिणे चक्रमालिखेत्'

1217. The श्राद्धविवेक of रुद्रधर (p 75) sets out the whole verse as 'पिता वत्सानां पतिरघ्न्यानामथो पिता महता गर्गराणाम्। वत्सो जरायु प्रतिधुक् पीयूष आमिक्षा घृतं तद्वदस्य रेत॥' It is a corrupt reading of तै. स. III. 3, 9. 2 (which reads पतिरग्नेः यानां and आमिक्षा मस्तु घृतमस्य रेत).

1218. The holy dharma .... four feet—This refers to the idea that Dharma, when in pristine glory in the कृतयुग, has four feet, but in each succeeding युग one foot is lost; vide मनु I 81 (= शान्तिपर्व 232 37). Dr. Jolly is not right when he refers (in SBE vol. 7 p. 262) the words to नारद I. 11 (SBE vol 30 p 7) where व्यवहार is said to have four feet of which धर्म is one. Vide H. of Dh. vol III. pp 259-262 for explanation about sportingly with him as your lover. May we not lack progeny, O king Soma, nor physical fitness and may we not succumb to our enemy'. He must drive away the bull together with the young cows in the north-eastern direction and give a pair of garments, gold and a vessel of bell metal to the hotr (officiating priest). The blacksmith should be given wages as desired by him and food seasoned with a good deal of clarified butter should be served to (three) brāhmanas (at least). That[1219] pool at which a bull let loose (in honour of a deceased person by his son or the like) drinks water serves (reaches) the manes. Wherever a bull (let loose) exulting in his strength scratches (or digs up) the earth, that earth becoming abundant food and water waits upon the manes."[1220] In the Anuśāsanaparva the pitrs are represented as saying that by letting loose a dark-coloured bull, by offering water mixed with sesame and by lighting lamps in the rains a man becomes free from the debt he owes to the pitrs (chap. 125. 73–74).

In the Garudapurāna it is stated that the deceased person for whom a bull is not let loose on the 11th day after death permanently remains a preta, even if hundreds of śrāddhas are offered for him. The same Purāna further provides that if a bull be not available on the 11th day, then the effigy of a bull made of darbhas and flour or clay should be symbolically let loose.[1221] In the Bhavisyapurāna the 12th day after death is prescribed for the letting loose of a bull (N. S. III. p. 505). The Nirnayasindhu says that the making of an effigy of a bull with clay, darbhas and flour is without authority. Even at present people let loose a bull but owing to the rise in the prices of bulls this is becoming less frequent. Several medieval digests such as the Pitrdayitā (pp. 84, 94), Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara (pp. 69–77), Nirnayasindhu (III. pp. 595–596), Śuddhiprakāśa 1219. 'That pool' etc. The वायुपुराण (83. 45–48) contains verses of similar import, only two of which are quoted here 'वृषोत्सृष्टा पुनात्येव वृशतीं-तान्दशावरान् ...शृङ्गै' खुरैर्वा यद्द भूमिमुल्लिखत्यनिशं वृष। मधुकुल्याः पितॄंस्तस्य अक्षयास्ता भवन्ति वै ॥' 45, 48.

---

1220. The वृषोत्सर्गविधि in विष्णुधर्मोत्तर (I 147. 1–19) closely follows the विष्णुधर्मसूत्र

1221. एकादशाहे प्रेतस्य यस्योत्सृज्येत नो वृषः। प्रेतत्वं सुस्थिरं तस्य दत्तैः श्राद्धशतैरपि॥ ...एकादशेह्नि संप्राप्ते वृषालाभो भवेद्यदि। दर्भैः पिष्टैस्तु संपाद्य त वृषं मोचयेद्बुध ॥ गरुडपुराण II. 5.40, 44–45. बृहस्पति q. by श्रा. क. ल. p. 214 and यद्दत्रिंशन्मत q. by शु प्र p 225 have a verse very similar to the first and the 2nd is ascribed to संग्रह by the श्रा. क ल

pp. 225–230, Antyestipaddhati of Nārāyanabhatta present a far more elaborate description, but from considerations of space they are passed over here. It is provided in these and other digests that such a bull should not be seized by anyone nor made to draw a vehicle and the cow or cows let loose along with him should not be milked nor confined in a cow-pen. A bull is not let loose for a deceased woman, but a cow may be donated together with its calf without being branded and after being decked with sandal-wood paste.[1221a]

What is the idea underlying the letting loose of a bull after the death of a person? If a conjecture may be hazarded, it appears to have been thought that if a bull were freed from toil (that is the lot of most bulls) and placed in the midst of pleasant surroundings, that act of the relatives of the deceased may in a vicarious manner conduce to the happiness of the departed spirit in the other world.

One remarkable matter about śrāddhas is yet to be mentioned. The Baud. grhyaśesasūtra III. 19, the Lingapurāna (II 45. 8–90, some of which are quoted by Śr. Pr. pp 363–364), the Kalpataru (on śrāddha pp. 277–279), Hemādri (Śr. pp. 1704–1717), the Śrāddhaprakāśa (pp. 361–371) and a few other digests describe the procedure of Jīvat-śrāddha or Jīva-śrāddha, which a man was allowed to perform for the benefit of his own soul, while he was himself alive. Baudhāyana's being probably the most ancient extant description it is briefly set out here "A man who desires his own highest happiness should fast on the 13th tithi of the dark half and bring together materials on the same day, which are required in the funeral rites of deceased persons, viz six garments, a golden needle, a goad, a noose made of (cotton) threads, a ragged garment, a stalk of palāśa leaves, a chair of udumbara wood, jars and other materials also On the next day he bathes; after standing in the midst of water he comes out and makes (the brāhmanas) pronounce 'this is an auspicious day, may there be happiness and prosperity (for you)'; he makes a gift of garments, a ring and daksinā and facing the south eats rice boiled in milk and mixed with ghee.

1221 a. वाचस्पतिमिश्र wrote a work called चन्दनधेनुदान in which he quotes two verses of देवल from the रत्नाकर as follows जीवद्भर्त्री तु या नारी म्रियते पुत्रिणी यदि । सवत्सामङ्किता धेनुमाचार्याय प्रदापयेत् ॥ पतिपुत्रवती नारी म्रियते चाग्रतस्तयो । वृषं नैवोत्सृजेत्पुत्र पिता यावच्च जीवति ॥. Vide Descriptive Cat. of Sanskrit Mss. under the care of the Asiatic Society of Bengal by M M Haraprasad Shastri, vol. III (smṛti Mss.) pp 405–406 No 2310.

He kindles the fire according to the general[1222] procedure laid down for homa, spreads round it darbhas, cooks food on the fire and offers from the cooked food four oblations of food into the fire; the first is made after first reciting the Puronuvākyā[1222a] (invitatory prayer) 'catvāri śṛngā' ('Agni has four horns,' Rg. IV. 58. 3, Tai. Ā X. 10. 2) and offers the oblation with the Yājyā (offering prayer) 'tridhā hitam' (placed in three plates, Rg. IV. 58. 4) The Puronuvākyā and Yājyā of the 2nd oblation of rice are 'tatsavitur varenyam' (Rg. III. 62. 10, Tai. S, I. 5 6 4) and 'yojayitrī sūnṛtānām'. Of the third oblation the Puronuvākyā and Yājyā are respectively 'ye catvārah' (Tai. S V. 7. 2. 3) and 'Dve srutī' (Rg. X. 88. 15, Tai Br. I. 4. 2. 3); the Puronuvākyā and Yājyā of the 4th oblation are respectively 'agne naya' (Rg I. 189 1, Tai. S. I. 114. 3) and 'yā tiraścī' (Br. Up. VI. 3 1).[1223]. Then he offers oblations of clarified butter with the Purusasūkta of 18 verses (Vāj. S. 31. 1–18, Tai. Ā. III. 12) and 1008, 108 or 28 oblations of clarified butter with the Gāyatrī verse. Then he goes to a spot where four roads meet, makes a gift of the needle, goad, ragged garment, the rope to a short-statured brāhmana who has a dark skin and having made him repeat the words 'May the servants of Yama be gratified' he places the jars on grains of rice. Having wound round the jars that are full of water threads he prepares an effigy of a human being, three threads for the head, three for the mouth, 21 for the neck, 4 for the body, two on each arm, one for the male organ, five for each of the feet with the words 'May the revered Yama be pleased.' Then making ready the chair, washing it with pañcagavya, he makes the effigy of a human being on black antelope skin with palāśa stalks, he establishes the prānas in the effigy made on the jar and placing his body on the body made with stalks he should sleep. When he rises, 1222. For the general procedure of homa, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 207–211.

1222 a The पुरोनुवाक्या (or simply अनुवाक्या) is so called because it is recited to make the deity favourable before the sacrifice is offered (पुर पूर्वं यागादेवतामनुकूलयितु या ऋगुच्यते इति व्युत्पत्त्या). Yājyā is the offering prayer It is preceded by ये यजामहे and followed by vasat (pronounced as वौ३ षट्). Both these are uttered by the hotṛ in a high tone. Vide H. of Dh. vol, II. pp. 1058–1060. The yājyā is recited while standing, but the Puronuvākyā is recited sitting. The verse योजयित्री सूनृतानां appears to be an adaptation of चोदयित्री सूनृतानां (Rg. I. 3.11).

1223. The verse is. या तिरश्ची निपद्यते (से?) अहं विधरणी इति। ता त्वा घृतस्य धारया यजे संराधनीमहम्॥ बृह. उ. VI. 3.1, he should himself bathe his body with (the water in) the jars with verses of Purusasūkta and with pañcagavya and pure water and eat in the evening food mixed with sesamum grains together with clarified butter. He should give dinner to brāhmanas for the gratification of the servants of Yama. On the 4th day he burns (the effigy) with mantras. He should offer water, and pinda with the words 'pinda to me of such and such a gotra for benefit in the next world, svadhā namah.' With these words he should bring to a close the rite. He should observe impurity for ten days for himself, but his agnates have not to observe impurity for him. On the 11th day he performs ekoddista. They also cite the following verse 'one who is in distress, a woman and a śūdra having burnt one's body (i. e effigy) with mantras should perform all rites on that very day. This is the revelation.' In the case of women the rite is performed silently or with (?) Vedic mantras. In this way he should perform his own śrāddha every month for a year and at the end of each year up to twelve years. And then he should stop. When he is not able to do all these (himself) his son and the like may perform them. They also recite the following verse; 'Although heirs may be alive one may perform one's śrāddha while alive, having quickly set about doing everything according to the rules, except Sapindana. One should not make delay as to the time specified above, since life is evanescent'."

It may be noted that the Baud. grhyaśesasūtra III. 22 contains a very brief procedure of the same rite, but therein two verses of Kanva and one of Visnu are quoted. It appears that this is a later addition. The text of Baud. grhyaśesasūtra III. 19 is quoted by Śr. Pr. pp. 361–363. But the Śrāddhaprakāśa also quotes a long passage from the Lingapurāna and explains it (pp. 363–368). The procedure in the Lingapurāna, however, materially differs from that of Baudhāyana. It is passed over here from considerations of space. The Śrāddhamayūkha also gives an elaborate description. Some of its provisions are stated here. In Jīvat-śrāddha the word preta should nowhere be used. An effigy of the person is made with fifty kuśas and is to be burnt by another with the mantra 'kravyādam-agnim' (Rg. X. 16, 9). The person has to kindle fire on the banks of a river with his face to the south with his grhya fire or ordinary fire and has to dig up a pit and make a prayer to the earth as in the case of an actual death.

In the Bombay University Library there is a Ms. of Jīvatśrāddha ascribed to Śaunaka in the Bhadkamkar Collection.

It contains a far more elaborate procedure than that of Baudhāyana and is in prose. It contains many of the provisions of Baudhāyana. Further details are passed over here.

The provision of a śrāddha for a living person offered by himself is a perversion of the ancient idea of śrāddha. The basic and fundamental conception of a śrāddha was to gratify the spirits of deceased ancestors. People had gone crazy with the idea of śrāddhas and invented this new mode to satisfy that craze. I have known persons that performed Jivat-śrāddha, though they had sons, younger brothers and nephews who would have certainly performed śrāddhas for them on their death.

It is customary to make a gift of a cow with a calf to a brāhmana, preferably a kapilā cow, on the 2nd day after the period of āśauca Often times this is the only cow given, and the cow called Vaitaraṇī referred to above (p. 183, note 427) is rarely donated in the midst of the sorrow and turmoil immediately on the death of a dear and near relative. A declaration is first made that a gift of a cow will be made and then water is poured on the hand of a brāhmana. Then holding kuśas in his hand the donor makes a gift of the cow with a formula noted below[1224]. The donee replies with the words 'om svasti' (Yes, may it be well!). Then daksinā (in gold or silver coins) is given and the brāhmana says 'om svasti', holds the tail of the cow and repeats a Kāmastuti (eulogy of Kāma)[1225] according to the recension of the Veda he has studied. The Anuśāsana-parva (57. 28–29) eulogises the gift of a kapilā cow with the calf, given with a milking pail of bell-metal, whose horn tips are decked with gold, by stating that such a gift not only saves the donor in the other world but also his sons, grandsons and family for seven generations. The Anuśāsanaparva (77.10 ff) sets out a legend why the kapilā cow is the best of all cows.

The Purānas and digests devote a good deal of space to śrāddhas at tīrthas and at Gayā. Vide Atri 55–58, Vāyupurāna 83. 16–42, Hemādri (on Śr.) pp. 1568 ff and 1575 ff. This subject will be briefly dealt with in the section on tīrthas.

1224. ओम् अद्याशौचान्ते द्वितीयेह्नि अमुकगोत्रस्य पितुरमुकप्रेतस्य स्वर्गप्राप्तिकामः इमां कपिला गां हेमशृङ्गीं रौप्यखुरां वस्त्रयुगच्छन्नां कांस्योपदोहां मुक्तालाङ्गलभूषितां सवत्सां रुद्रदैवत्यामसुकगोत्रायासुकशर्मणे ब्राह्मणाय तुभ्यमहं संप्रददे। श्राद्धविवेक of रुद्रधर p. 77.

1225. For कामस्तुति, vide p. 184, n 430 above.

Much is said on the question whether śrāddhas should be performed in the intercalary month. The intercalary month is called by various names, viz. Malimluca (Kāthaka Sam. 38. 14),[1226] Samsarpa or Amhasaspati (Vāj S. 7.30 and 22.31), Malamāsa, Adhimāsa. An intercalary month is known even to the Rgveda (Rg. I. 25.8). The vendor of soma and the thirteenth month are condemned as pāpa (sinful) in the Aitareya Brāhmana[1227]. The Purānas tried to bolster up the intercalary month by calling it Purusottama-māsa (i. e. the month of Visnu) but the original stigma attaching to the 13th month seems to have persisted. The general rule about an intercalary month is stated by the Grhyapariśista.[1228] 'the month called Malimluca is polluted and springs from sin; it is condemned for all acts; it should be discarded in all rites in honour of gods and pitrs.' But exceptions to this sweeping prohibition have been recognized. Hārita provides[1229] that all śrāddhas that come after Sapindana are not to be performed in an intercalary month. Vyāsa laid down[1230] that such ceremonies as jātakarma, annaprāśana, the navaśrāddhas, śrāddha on Maghā and the thirteenth tithi, the sixteen śrāddhas, bath, gifts, japa and śrāddha at the time of the eclipse of the sun or moon—these should be performed even in an intercalary month. The Smrtimuktāphala concludes (p. 728) that there is no blemish in performing a śrāddha in an intercalary month provided it is to be performed before the end of one year from death. It is provided by Bhrgu[1231] that the sāmvatsarika śrāddha of those who die in an intercalary month 1226. मलिम्लुचो नामासि त्रयोदशो मास इन्द्रस्य शर्मासि। काठकसं. 38. 10 (161-162); संसर्पोऽस्यंहस्पत्याय खेत्याहास्ति त्रयोदश मास इत्याहुस्तमेव तत् प्रीणाति। तै. सं. VI, 5 3.4.

---

1227. तं (सौमं) त्रयोदशान्मासादक्रीणंस्तस्मात्त्रयोदशी मासो नानुविद्यते न वै सोमविक्रय्यनुविद्यते पापो हि सोमविक्रयी। ऐ. ब्रा III, 1 (com त्रयोदशमासो नानुविद्यते शुभकर्माङ्गकूलो नार्हति).

1228 मलिम्लुचेस्तु मासो वै मलिनः पापसम्भवः। गर्हितः पितृदेवेभ्य. सर्वकर्मसु तं त्यजेत्। गृह्यपरिशिष्ट q. by आ. कि. कौ p 38

1229. सपिण्डीकरणादूर्ध्वं यस्किञ्चिच्छ्राद्धिकं भवेत्। दृष्टं वाप्यथवा पूर्तं तच्च कुर्यान्मलिम्लुचे॥ हारीत. q. by स्मृतिच. (आ. p. 374), आ. कि. कौ. p 323, श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 252 (as लघुहारीत).

1230. जातकर्मान्नयकर्माणि नवश्राद्धं तथैव च। मघात्रयोदशीश्राद्धं श्राद्धान्यपि च षोडश। चन्द्रसूर्यग्रहे स्नानं श्राद्धं दानं तथा जप.। कार्याणि मलमासेऽपि नित्यं नैमित्तिकं तथा॥ व्यास q. by श्राद्धतत्त्व p. 283, स्मृतिच (आ. p 373 ascribes to यम).

1231 मलमासे मृतानां तु श्राद्धं यत्मतिवत्सरम्। मलमासेऽपि तत्कार्यं नान्येषां तु कर्हिचित्॥ भृगु q. by स्मृतिच. (आ. p. 375). The नि. सि III. p 474 says 'मलमासमृतानां तु यदा स एवाधिकः स्यात्तदा तत्रैव कार्यमन्यथा शुद्ध एव'.

may be performed in the intercalary month, but if there be none such then in the ordinary month of the same name. When the tithi for performing a śrāddha comes and there is then an intercalary month, Vrddha-Vasistha says that śrāddha should be performed in both months.[1232]

Further discussion about what may be done in Malamāsa and what is prohibited therein will be taken up in the section on Kāla. The question as to the day on which a śrāddha is to be performed if the tithi is spread over two days or if there is a kṣaya of the tithi will also be discussed in that section.

Some of the works on śrāddha such as the Pṛthvī-candrodaya deal with what is called 'saṅghāta-śrāddha.'[1232a] When on the same day several persons die, but not at the same time, then the śrāddhas for them should be performed, as said by Ṛsyaśrnga, in the order in which they died. But if five or six persons die at the same time on the same day (as when a vessel sinks in the sea or a market is burnt down all at once), then the order in which śrāddhas are to be performed is determined by the nearness of relationship to the performer of śrāddha in the case of each. For example, if a person's wife, son, brother and paternal uncle meet death at the same time, then the order should be this that the śrāddha of the wife is performed first, then of the son, then of the brother and then of the uncle. If the parents die at the same time by accident, then the father's cremation or other rites should be first performed and then of the mother.

Provision is made if the performance of a śrāddha is rendered impossible by some obstacle. Ṛsyaśrnga provides[1233] 1232. आद्धीयाहनि संप्राप्ते अधिमासो भवेद्यदि। मासद्वयेऽपि कुर्वीत आद्धमेवं न मुह्यति॥ वृद्धवसिष्ठ q by स्मृतिच. (आ. p. 375), नि. सि. p. 13.

1232 a. तत्रैकस्मिन्नहनि क्रमेण मृतानां मरणक्रमेणैकेन कर्त्रा आद्धं कर्तव्यम्। तदाह ऋष्यशृङ्गः। कृत्वा पूर्वमृतस्यादौ द्वितीयस्य ततः पुनः। तृतीयस्य तत. कुर्यात्संनिपाते स्वयं क्रमः।...भवेद्यदि सपिण्डानां युगपन्मरणं तदा। सम्बन्धासत्तिमालोच्य तत्क्रमाच्छ्राद्धमाचरेत्॥ पृथ्वीच folio 265 a; जाबालि.। पित्रोस्तु मरणं चेत्स्यादेकदैव यदा तदा। पितुर्दाहादिकं कृत्वा पश्चान्मातुः समाचरेत्॥ ibid folio 266 a.

1233. देये पितृणां श्राद्धे तु आशौचं जायते यदि। आशौचे तु व्यतिक्रान्ते तेभ्यः श्राद्धं प्रदीयते॥ एकोद्दिष्टे तु संप्राप्ते यदि विघ्नः प्रजायते। मासेऽन्यस्मिंस्तिथौ तस्यां श्राद्धं कुर्यात्प्रयत्नत॥ ऋष्यशृङ्ग q. by अपरार्क p. 561, श्रा क्रि कौ. p 480, मद. पा. 618. स्कन्दपुराण VII. 1. 206. 70 is a very similar verse and the verse एकोद्दिष्टे तु is गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड 45,9),

'if impurity (on death) intervenes when a śrāddha is to be offered to the pitṛs, śrāddha should be offered at the end of the period of impurity. If an obstacle arises at the time when an ekoddiṣṭa is to be performed, the śrāddha should be performed in another month on the same tithi'. This last refers to a monthly śrāddha. If any of the sixteen śrāddhas fails owing to an obstacle it should be performed on the amāvāsyā or better still on the 11th day of the dark half. If there is an obstacle owing to impurity on death in the performance of a monthly śrāddha or yearly śrāddha it should be performed at the end of the impurity or on amāvāsyā.[1234] The Padmapurāna (Pātālakhaṇḍa 101. 68–70) provides similar rules. If the obstacle is the performer's illness or his inability to collect materials or his wife being in her monthly illness, he may offer āmaśrāddha described above.

It may be noted that while great emphasis was laid on inviting a very learned brāhmaṇa at a śrāddha, that object was often frustrated in practice by the provisions made in certain smṛtis that one[1235] should not partake of śrāddha food for three years after sapiṇḍana (which is often one year after death) and that by dining at a śrāddha in the first year one eats the bones and marrow of the deceased, in the second year his flesh, in the third year his blood and śrāddha in the 4th year is (somewhat) pure. Vide Par. M. vol. II part 1 p 423, where smṛti passages prescribing prāyaścittas for partaking of food at various śrāddhas including sāṃvatsarika are set out Hārīta says: one partaking of food at Navaśrāddha should undergo Cāndrāyaṇa, the Prājāpatya for dining at a monthly śrāddha and fast for one day for dining at a pratyābdika śrāddha. This is on the same lines as acceptance of gifts A donor collected merit by making gifts, but it was for the acceptor to decide whether he should accept gifts. The ideal

---

1234. मासिकाब्दे तु संप्राप्ते स्वल्पा मृतमृतके। वदन्ति शुद्धौ तत्कार्यं दर्शे वापि पित्र्यकृत्॥ यद्यनिश्चितस्तु by अपरार्क p. 561; मासिकान्युदकुम्भानि आद्धानि प्रथमेषु च। प्रतिसंवत्सरं आद्धं दूनानन्तरे विदुः॥.. एकादश्यां कृष्णपक्षे कर्मार्थं शुभमिच्छता। तत्र स्यन्निष्फले हेतावन्यां क्रियते तु तदा पक्षे (पातालखण्ड 101. 65 and 71)

1235. अथ शुद्धआद्धं दिवोदासीये। सपिण्डीकरणाद्ध्वं यावदब्दत्रयं भवेत्। तावदेव न भोक्तव्यं क्वचेद्दानि कदाचन॥. प्रथमेऽहनि मन्त्रा च द्वितीये मांसभक्षणम्। तृतीये रुधिरं भोक्तं आद्धं शुद्धं चतुर्थकेनिति आद्धकारिकोक्तेः। नि सि III p 475, चान्द्रायण स्यात् आद्धे भोजापत्यं तु निश्चिके। एकार्दं तु दुगणेतु प्रायश्चित्तं विधीयते॥ इतिच p 12 पंक्ति 11 I. p 423; see आद्धविवेक of रुद्रधर p 113, आ. कि कौ. p. 345 for similar rules from other स्मृतिः; पद्म V. 10. 19 says 'नवआद्धे न भोक्तव्यं भुक्त्वा चान्द्रायणं चरेत्'.

placed before brāhmanas was that one, though entitled to accept gifts on account of his vedic learning and tapas, should not accept gifts, if he desires to secure the highest world (Yāj. I. 213), while Manu IV. 186 affirms [1236] that though entitled to accept gifts a brāhmana should not again and again resort to that method, since the spiritual power that he acquires by Vedic study is lost by accepting gifts. Manu IV. 85–86 (= Padma V. 19. 236–237) say that acceptance of a gift from the king is terrible (in its consequences) and Padma warns that gift appears sweet like honey but is like poison (i e. deadly in its effects). This reasoning applied with greater force to officiating and dining at a śrāddha, where not only gifts are to be received, but also sumptuous food that will please the palate is served in abundance.

It has been seen above how the most ancient literary monument, viz the Ṛgveda, shows that the funeral rites performed immediately after death were prompted by affectionate concern for the departed spirit mingled with some element of fear, that the object of those rites was to provide sustenance to the departed spirit and to endow it with an intermediate body before it became one of the pitṛs. It has also been found that in the most ancient times of which we have literary evidence, there were rites for the worship of ancestors, being the Piṇḍa-pitryajña performed every month on amāvāsyā, the Mahāpitṛ-yajña performed in the Śākamedha and the Aṣṭakā śrāddhas. Gradually the rites for deceased ancestors became more and more frequent, all-inclusive and elaborate, so that ultimately an exaggerated importance came to be attached to the cult of śrāddhas over which there was an enormous expenditure of time, effort and wealth. The question now arises what Indians of the 20th century should do about śrāddhas. One finds that in these days when many brāhmanas even do not engage in any of the five daily obligatory yajñas (the pañca-yajñas), they are solicitous to offer śrāddha at least once a year to their ancestors. The following may be therefore suggested as a via media for all kinds of people. Those who have faith in the duty of performing śrāddhas and their efficacy for the benefit of 1236. प्रतिग्रहसमर्थोऽपि प्रसङ्गं तत्र वर्जयेत् । प्रतिग्रहेण ह्यस्याशु ब्राह्मं तेज: प्रशाम्यति ॥ मनु IV 186, vide पद्म IV. 19. 268 for a similar verse राजन् प्रतिग्रहो घोरो मध्वास्वादो विषोपम । तद् ज्ञायमान कस्मात्त्व कुरुषेऽस्मल्लोभनम् ॥ दशघ्नासमश्वक्रीं... तेन तुल्यस्ततो राजा घोरस्तस्य प्रतिग्रह.॥ पद्म V 19 235.

---

the dead may perform them on a small scale, bearing in mind the emphatic admonition of Manu (III. 125–126), the Kūrmapurāna II. 22. 27, Padmapurāna V. 9. 98[1237] that one should desist from extravagance in the matter of śrāddhas, particularly in the number of brāhmanas to be invited. Those whose faith is shaken or shattered by the onrush of modern ideas and English education or firm belief in the doctrines of karma and punarjanma should also remember one thing. The main underlying conception of śrāddha is certainly admirable, viz. a tender and affectionate regard for one's near and dear relatives. It is a good practice to set apart at least one day in a year for the remembrance of one's near and dear relatives that are no more, to invite relatives, friends, and learned people to a dinner in memory of the dead and to bestow monetary gifts on poor but learned persons of character and devoted to the practice of plain living and high thinking. This will be in keeping with our past traditions and will also give a new orientation to and infuse new life into practices and usages that have become lifeless and meaningless to many people. From very ancient times one of the fundamental conceptions of our faith has been the idea of three debts owed to sages, gods and pitrs. The debt owed to the ancestors is paid off by the procreation of a son who would offer pindas to his (and therefore also to his father's) ancestors. This is a grand conception. Nothing can be more sublime than the formula which one has to repeat at the time of offering pindas and water (with sesame) at Gayā 'may those of my ancestors that are in the form of pretas be all satiated by means of the (balls made) of barley flour mixed with sesame and may everything, whether moving or immoveable from Brahmā up to blades of grass derive satisfaction from the water offered by me.' If the implication of this formula be thoroughly understood and 1237. द्वौ दैवे पितृकृत्ये त्रीनेकैकमुभयत्र वा। भोजयेदप्रश्नरोपोह्य न कुर्याद्विस्तर बुधः॥ पद्म V. 9. 98 जायमानो ह वै ब्राह्मणस्त्रिभिर्ऋणवा जायते ब्रह्मचर्येण ऋषिभ्यो यज्ञेन देवेभ्यः प्रजया पितृभ्य एष वा अनृणो य. पुत्री यज्वा ब्रह्मचारिवासी। तै सं VI. 3 10 5; ऋणमस्मिन् संनयत्यमृतत्व च गच्छति। पिता पुत्रस्य जातस्य पश्येज्जीवतो मुखम् ॥ ऐ. ब्रा. 33.1 This subject has been dealt with already in H of Dh. vol III. pp. 414–416 and may be further dilated upon under Gayāśrāddha ये केचित्प्रेतरूपेण वर्तन्ते पितरो मम। ते सर्वे तृप्तिमायान्तु सक्तुभिस्तिलमिश्रितै ॥ आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्त यत्किंचित्सचराचरम्। मया दत्तेन तोयेन तृप्तिमायान्तु सर्वदा॥ वायुपुराण 110. 63–64 Compare also a similar invocation in वायु. 110 21–22 and the Mettasutta in the Suttanipāta.

---

implemented by actual practice, it will make the whole world kin. Therefore, while discarding the heavy accretions accumulated through ages, we Hindus of these days must see to it that we do not throw overboard the gold that lies buried under the crust of ritual and ill-understood ceremonies.*

---

* In passing I may mention that my friend Mr. N. G. Chapekar, B. A., LL. B., retired First Class Subordinate Judge residing at Badlapur in the Thana District, has been celebrating the yearly śrāddha of his mother in the manner indicated above for about twenty-five years.

SECTION IV

CHAPTER XI

TĪRTHAYĀTRĀ (pilgrimages to holy places)

All religions have laid great emphasis on the sacredness of certain localities and have either enjoined or recommended with great insistence pilgrimages to them. Among the five incumbent practical religious duties[1237] of a Moslem, pilgrimage at least once in his life to Mecca and Medina, the birth place and burial place of the prophet Mohammad, is one. The four places of pilgrimage for Buddhists have been the place of the birth of Buddha (Lumbinī or Rummindei), the place where he attained perfect enlightenment (Bodh Gayā), the place where he set in motion the wheel of dharma by delivering his first sermon (at Sārnāth near Benares) and the place where he passed away into the state of nirvāna (Kusinārā). Vide Mahāparinibbānasutta (S B. E vol. XI. p 90). For Christians Jerusalem has been the holiest place and no religious community except the Christians undertook in historic times several great military pilgrimages. The crusades were launched to free the Holy Land of Christians from the domination of Moslems. In spite of what Gibbon says [1238] somewhat cynically about those who joined the crusades, it must be admitted that there were thousands among the crusaders who risked their lives and fortunes in the pursuit of an ideal. In India holy places have played a very important part. Large rivers, mountains and forests have always been venerated as sacred[1239]

1237. Vide S B E vol. VI, Introduction LXXI, for the five duties The pilgrimage is called Hāj and the Moslem who performs it is entitled to be called Hājī

1238 Gibbon remarks 'At the voice of their pastor, the robber, the incendiary, the homicide arose by thousands to redeem their souls by repeating on the infidels the same deeds which they had exercised against their christian brethren and the terms of atonement were eagerly embraced by offenders of every rank and denomination' Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. VII (ed of 1862) p 188.

1239 Tagore in his 'Sādhanā' (p 9) remarks 'India chose her places of pilgrimage wherever there was in nature some special grandeur or

(Continued on the next page)

and as the abodes of gods. In ancient and medieval India pilgrimages brought many advantages to the community as well as to the pilgrims themselves. Though India was divided into many kingdoms and the people of India followed several cults and sub-cults, pilgrimages tended to foster the idea of the essential and fundamental unity of Indian culture and of India also. Benares and Rāmeśvara were held sacred by all Hindus, whether they hailed from the north of India or from the peninsula. Though the Hindu community was broken up into numerous castes and suffered from caste exclusiveness, pilgrimages tended to level up all men by bringing them together to the same holy rivers or shrines. The traditions associated with holy places, the discipline through which the pilgrims passed, association with holy and philosophic men and the whole atmosphere and environment at tīrthas made it easy for pilgrims to remain at a high spiritual level and inculcated in them a mood of reverence that lasted long even after they returned from the pilgrimage. Pilgrimages supplied the much needed stimulus to draw ordinary men away from selfish pursuits and to make them think of the higher and more enduring moral and spiritual values These obvious benefits and the belief that a holy place was the abode of some divinity led ancient dharmaśāstra writers to lay emphasis on visits to tīrthas The Visnu Dh. S. provides [1240] that the dharma common to all men comprises the following: forbearance, truthfulness, restraint of the mind, cleanliness, charity, control of the senses, ahimsā, obedience to elders, visiting holy places, compassion, straightforwardness,

---

(Continued from the last page)

beauty so that her mind could come out of its world of narrow necessities and realize its place in the Infinite This was the reason why in India a whole people who once were meat-eaters gave up taking animal food to cultivate the sentiment of universal sympathy for life, an event unique in the history of mankind ' There is a fundamental difference in the outlook of modern Westerners and that of ancient and medieval Indians (which persists to a large extent even now) If there is a beauty spot anywhere most men in the West would think of building a hotel there for tourists, while ancient and medieval Indians would have thought of erecting a shrine there

1240. क्षमा सत्यं दमः शौचं दानमिन्द्रियसंयम । अहिंसा गुरुशुश्रूषा तीर्थानुसरणं दया। आर्जवं लोभशून्यत्वं देवब्राह्मणपूजनम्। अनभ्यसूया च तथा धर्मः सामान्य उच्यते॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र II 15–17 Vide विष्णुधर्मोत्तर II. 80 1–4 for a list of सामान्यधर्मs such as अहिंसा, सत्यवचन, तीर्थानुसरण and H. of Dh vol II p 11 notes 28–30 for quotations about सामान्यधर्मs from शान्तिपर्व, वामनपुराण, ब्रह्मपुराण and other sources freedom from avarice, honouring gods and brāhmaṇas and freedom from jealousy. Modern men whose faith in some of the aspects of the religious beliefs of our forefathers has been weakened or altogether sapped by the sight of the professional ministrants at the tīrthas and their rapacity and ignorance should not judge the ancient attitude towards tīrthas harshly.

The word tīrtha occurs frequently in the Ṛgveda and other Vedic saṃhitās. In several passages of the Ṛgveda tīrtha appears to mean a road or a way (e. g. in Ṛg. I. 169 6 'tīrthe nāryah paumsyāni tasthuh', Ṛg I. 173 11 'tīrthe nācchā tātṛsānam-oko', Ṛg IV. 29. 3 'karan-na Indrah sutīrthābhayam ca.' In some places tīrtha may be taken to mean a ford in a river, as in Ṛg VIII. 47. 11' 'sutīrtham-arvato yathānu no nesathā sugam &c.', Ṛg. I. 46. 8 'aritram vām divas-pṛthu tīrthe sindhūnām rathah'. In Ṛg. X 31 3 'tīrthe na dasmam-upa yantyūmāh', tīrtha probably means 'a holy place'. On Ṛg VIII. 19. 37 'Suvāstvā adhi tugvani' the Nirukta IV. 15 explains that Suvāstu is a river and tugvan means 'tīrtha' (either a ford or a holy spot) In the Tai. S. VI 1. 1. 1-2 [1241] it is said that the sacrificer is to bathe at a tīrtha (probably a holy river). The Rudras are said to prowl about tīrthas (ye tīrthāni pracaranto srkāvanto nisanginah) in Tai S IV. 5.11.1-2 and Vāj S. 16. 61 (reads 'srkāhastā'). In the Śāṅkhāyana Br. [1242] it is said that Day and Night are the sea that absorbs everything and the twilights are the unfathomable tīrthas (of the sea)'. Tīrtha also means the way between the 'utkara' and 'cātvāla' pit for going to or coming from the sacrificial ground (the vihāra).[1242a] Vide H of Dh vol II. p. 984.

It is said that, just as some parts of the human body (e. g. the right hand or ear) are held to be purer (than others), so some localities on the earth are held to be very holy. Tīrthas are held to be holy (on three grounds, viz.) on account of some wonderful natural characteristic of the locality or on account of the peculiar strikingness (or grandeur) of some watery place or on account of the fact that some (holy) sages resorted to 1241. अप्सु स्नाति साक्षादेव दीक्षातपसी अवरुन्धे तीर्थं स्नाति। तै. सं VI. 1.1.1-2 Vide जैमिनि III. 4. 14-16 for a discussion on the purpose of this passage 1242. समुद्रो वा एष सर्वेहरो यदहोरात्रे तस्य एते अगाधे तीर्थे यत्सन्ध्ये तथा अगाधार्ण्यां तीर्थार्ण्यां समुद्रमतीयात्ताद्वत् तत्। शां. ब्रा. II 9.

1242 a. ते अन्तरेण चात्वालोत्करा उपनिष्क्रामन्ति तद्धि यज्ञस्य तीर्थमायानं नाम। शां. ब्रा 1 8 9 them (for bathing, austerities &c.). Tīrtha, therefore, means a locality or spot or expanse of water which gives rise to the accumulation of righteousness (merit) owing to its own peculiar nature without any adventitious circumstance (such as the presence of Śālagrāma near it).[1243] Or it is better to say that those localities that have been technically spoken of by wise and great sages as tīrthas are tīrthas, just as Pāṇini employs such technical terms as Nadī and Vṛddhi in his grammar. The Skandapurāna[1244] says that a spot of the earth resorted to by ancient good men for the collection of merit is called tīrtha and that the main thing is to go to (i. e associate with holy) men and pilgrimage is only a secondary object.

In the Ṛgveda waters, rivers in general and certain named rivers[1245] are referred to with great reverence as holy and are deified. In Ṛg VII. 49 the refrain of all four verses is 'may the divine waters protect me' (tā āpo devīr-iha māmavantu). In Ṛg. VII. 49. 1 waters are spoken of as purifying (punānāh). Ṛg. VII. 47, X. 9, X. 30[1246] are hymns addressed to waters as divinities. They are said to purify a man not only physically but are also invoked to rid a man of all sins and lapses from the right path. The Tai S. II. 6. 8. 3 asserts that all deities are centred in waters (āpo vai sarvā devatāh). In the Atharvaveda[1247] (I. 33.1) waters are described as holy and purifying and are invoked to confer happiness. About twenty rivers in all 1243. यथा शरीरस्योद्देशाः केचिन्मेध्यतमाः स्मृता. । तथा पृथिव्या उद्देशाः केचित् पुण्यतमा स्मृता ॥ प्रभावादद्भुताद्भूमे सलिलस्य च तेजसा। परिग्रहान्मुनीनां च तीर्थानां पुण्यता स्मृता॥ पद्मपुराण (उत्तरखण्ड) 237 25-27, स्कन्द, काशीखण्ड 6 43-44, नारदीय-पुराण II 62. 46-47 These verses are quoted by कल्पतरु on तीर्थ pp 7-8 (ascribes them to महाभारत) and by तीर्थप्र p 10 Similar verses occur in अनुशासनपर्व 108 16-18 'शरीरस्य यथोद्देशा शुचय परिकीर्तिता । तथा पृथिव्या भागाश्च पुण्यानि सलिलानि च ।...परिग्रहाच्च साधूना पृथिव्याश्चैव तेजसा । अतीव पुण्यभागास्ते सलिलस्य च तेजसा ॥'.

---

1244. श्रुत्या पुरुषयात्रा हि तीर्थयात्रानुषङ्गत । सङ्गि. समाश्रितो भूप भूमिभागस्तथोच्यते॥ स्कन्द I 2. 13 10, यद्धि पूर्वतमै सद्भि सेवितं धर्मसिद्धये। तद्धि पुण्यतमं लोके सन्तस्तीर्थं प्रचक्षते॥ स्कन्दपुराण q. by पृथ्वीच० folio 135 b

1245 Vide H of Dh vol II. p. 12 for the rivers mentioned in the Ṛg 1246 इदमाप. प्रवहत यत्किं च दुरितं मयि। यद्वाहमभिदुद्रोह यद्वा शेप उतानृतम् ॥ ऋ X 9.8.

1247. हिरण्यवर्णा शुचय पावका यासु जात सविता यास्वग्नि.। या अग्निं गर्भं दधिरे सुवर्णास्ता न आप शं स्योना भवन्तु॥ अथर्व० I. 33. 1.

flood of the Sarasvatī impinging by its powerful waves against the tops of hills is referred to in Rg. VI. 61. 2 and 8 [1250]. In VII. 96. 1, Sarasvatī is spoken of as asuryā (of divine origin) among rivers. Sacrifices are said to have been performed on the Drsadvatī, the Āpayā and Sarasvatī (Rg. III. 23. 4). In Rg. II. 41. 16 Sarasvatī is called the best of rivers and goddesses (ambitame nadītame devitame Sarasvati). Rg. I. 3. 11–12 praise [1251] Sarasvatī as a river and a deity, as a purifier (pāvaka), as the impeller of sweet but truthful words and the inspirer of good thoughts and as bringing to notice its great flood of waters. From Rg. VII. 95. 2, VII. 49. 2 and I. 71. 7 it is obvious that the Rgvedic sages knew that the seven rivers fell into the sea. It would be proper to hold that the seven rivers are Sindhu (Indus), the five rivers of the Panjab and the Sarasvatī. Though from the Rgveda passages cited above it appears that in the times of the hymns of the Rgveda Sarasvatī was a big river with abundant waters, that it flowed between the Yamunā and Śutudrī (X. 75. 5), in the times of the Brāhmanas it disappeared in the sands It is now generally identified with the modern Sarsuti which is lost in the desert at Bhatnair. The Vāj. S. 34. 11 says that five rivers together with their tributary streams fall into Sarasvatī. [1252] There were three sattras called Sārasvata, viz the first in honour of Mitra and Varuna, the 2nd for Indra and Agni and the third for Aryaman The dīksā (consecration ceremony) was to be performed on the south bank of the dry bed of the Sarasvatī where it disappeared underground [1253]. Vide Tāndya Br.

1250. इयं शुष्मेभिर्बिसखा इवारुजत्सानु गिरीणा तविषेभिरूर्मिभिः। ऋ. VI. 61.2; यस्या अनन्तो अह्रुतस्त्वेषश्चरिष्णुरर्णवः। अमश्वरति रोरुवत् ॥ ऋ VI. 61 8 The निरुक्त II. 23 remarks 'तत्र सरस्वती इत्येतस्य नदीवत् देवताच्च निगमा भवन्ति' and explains Rg VI 61.2 as a verse where सरस्वती is described as a river.

1251 चोदयित्री सूनृतानां चेतन्ती सुमतीनाम्। यज्ञं दधे सरस्वती॥ महो अर्णः सरस्वती प्र चेतयति केतुना। ऋ. I. 3. 11–12. For this last, vide निरुक्त XI. 27.

1252. पञ्च नद्य सरस्वतीमपि यन्ति सस्रोतसः। सरस्वती तु पञ्चधा सो देशेऽभवत्सरित्॥ वाज सं. 34. 11.

1253 सरस्वत्या विनशने दीक्षन्ते। ..इषद्वत्या अप्यपेऽपोनप्त्रीय चरुं निरूप्याथातियन्ति। चतुश्चत्वारिंशदाश्वीनानि सरस्वत्या विनशनात् क्षुद्र. भ्रात्रव्यः तावद्दितः स्वर्गो लोकः सरस्वतीसंमितेनाध्वना स्वर्गलोक यन्ति। ... यदा क्षुद्रं भ्रात्रव्यमागच्छन्त्यथोत्थानम्। . कारपचवं प्रति यमुनामवभृथमभ्यवयन्ति। ताण्ड्य 25 10 1, 15, 16, 21, 23. मनु II 17 defines ब्रह्मावर्त as the country between the divine rivers सरस्वती and इषद्वती and (II 21) मध्यदेश as the country between the Himālaya and Vindhya mount-

(Continued on the next page)

25. 10 for the first Sārasvata-sattra, 25. 11 for the 2nd and 25.12 for the third. The land between Vinaśana and Plaksa Prāsravana (which was the source of the Sarasvatī) was the proper locality for Sārasvata sattra. At the confluence of Sarasvatī and Drsadvatī an iṣṭi to Apām Napāt was performed wherein boiled rice (caru) was the offering. From the place where the Sarasvatī disappeared up to Plaksa-Prāsravana the distance was a journey on horse-back for forty days and nights When the sacrificers (in the sattra) reach Plaksa Prāsravana they should stop the performance of the items of the sattra and undergo the Avabhrtha bath near the river Yamunā (modern Jumna) which flows through the country called Kārapacava (and not in the Sarasvatī even if it had water) For details, vide Kātyāyana Śrautasūtra (10. 15-19) which mentions (in 10. 19. 1) a spot called Parīnah in Kuruksetra where the Vedic fires were to be kindled, the Āśv. Ś. S 12 6 1-28 which adds that at the distance of each throw of the Śamyā from the Vinaśana one day is to be spent by the sacrificers, the Kātyāyana Śrauta-sūtra (24. 5-6) which states that the isti at the confluence of the Drsadvatī and Sarasvatī is to be offered to Agni Kāma, Āp. Ś. S 23. 12-13 (which gives more details than any one of the other three sūtras) In the Ait. Br. a story is narrated that the sages performed a sattra on the Sarasvatī and Kavasa who was sitting amongst them was driven out by them as not a brāhmana but the son of a female slave and left in a sandy desert with the idea that he would die of thirst, but he praised the waters or Apām napāt with the hymn, Rg. X. 30 ('pra devatrā brahmane') called 'Aponaptrīya' and Sarasvatī came rushing towards the place where Kavaśa stood and surrounded it, which (spot) thence-ains, which is to the east of विनशन and west of Prayāga For the mention of विनशन in the Baud. Dh. S , Vanaparva and Śalyaparva, vide H of Dh vol. II p. 14 note 35. Dr. D. R. Patil in his thesis 'Cultural History of Vāyupurāna' (p. 334) remarks that the institution of pilgrimage was first started by Buddhists and Jains and that later on it became common to all faiths in India. This is quite wrong The Brāhmana and Śrautasūtra passages clearly show that there were holy places in the comparatively small part of India up to the Yamunā where the Sārasvata sattras had to be carried on The importance of holy places, visiting them and performing religious rites there were known in the Brāhmana period at least a thousand years before Buddhism and Jainism began to spread.

---

(Continued from the last page)

forward came to be called [1254] 'Parisaraka'. This shows that in the times of the Ait. Br. and long before it the bed of the Sarasvatī was dry. Devala [1255] mentions several places as Sārasvata tīrthas. The Ṛgveda [1256] VIII. 6.28 appears to hold that the valleys of mountains and the confluences of rivers are sacred. Mountains have been held by most ancient peoples to be the abodes of gods. Mount Parnassus north of Delphi was one of the most holy mountains in classical Greece and Olympus was supposed to be the home of the gods. In the Ṛgveda Parvata is a dual deity with Indra 'O, Indra and Parvata! may you two sharpen (or purify) us (our intellects)' Rg I 122 3 [1257]; O, Indra and Parvata! May you two, being in the forefront of battle, kill with the thunderbolt every one who desires to attack us with an army' Rg. I. 132. 6. In Rg. VI. 49. 14 a prayer is addressed to Parvata separately 'May the god Ahibudhnya, may Parvata and may Savitr bestow on us food together with the waters on account of our prayers'. In Rg III. 33 1 the two great rivers Vipāś (modern Beas) and Śutudrī are described as issuing from the lap of mountains. Here the word 'Parvata' is used in its ordinary sense. The Atharvaveda [1258] speaks of a salve (āñjana) from Traikakuda peaks of the Himālaya mountain 'May that salve which comes off the Himālaya from Traikakuda (peaks) destroy all wizards and all witches'. The Hir. Gr. I. 3 11.5 (S. B. E. vol. 30 p. 168) also 1254. ऋषयो वै सरस्वत्या सत्रमासत। ऐ ब्रा 8 1, माध्यमाः सरस्वत्यां सत्रमासत तद्धापि कवषो मध्ये निषसाद। तं हेम उपोद्वदास्या वै त्वं पुत्रोऽसि न वयं त्वया सह भक्षयिष्याम इति। स ह क्रुद्धः प्रद्रवत्सरस्वतीमेतेन सूक्तेन तुष्टाव तं हैयमान्वियाय। शां. ब्रा. XII. 3. It may be noted that the Vanaparva chap 83 when enumerating the numerous tīrthas on the Sarasvatī and in कुरुक्षेत्र mentions a famous tīrtha called Saraka which is said to contain in it the sanctity of three crores of tīrthas (verses 75–76) This सरक appears to be the same as the परिसरक tīrtha of सरस्वती.

---

1255. प्लक्षप्रस्रवणं वृद्धकन्याकं सारस्वतमादित्यतीर्थं कौवेरं वैजयन्तं पृथूदकं नैमिशं विनशनं वशोद्भेदं प्रभासमिति सारस्वतानि। देवल q by तीर्थकल्पतरु p. 250.

1256 उपह्वरे गिरीणां सङ्गथे च नदीनाम्। धिया विप्रो अजायत॥ ऋ. VIII. 6. 28 =वाज सं 26. 15 (which reads सङ्गमे)

1257 शिशीतमिन्द्रापर्वता युवं नस्तन्नो विश्वे वरिवस्यन्तु देवाः॥ ऋ. I. 122. 3 (सायण explains पर्वतः पर्ववान् वृष्ट्यादिपूरणवान् पर्जन्यः); युवं तमिन्द्रापर्वता पुरोयुधा यो नः पृतन्यादप तंतमिद्धतं वज्रेण तंतमिद्धतम्। ऋ. I. 132 6 (सायण explains पर्वत पर्ववान्मेघः। तदभिमानी देव.), तक्षोऽहिर्वज्र्यो अद्भिरर्कैस्तत्पर्वतस्तत्सविता चनो धात्। ऋ VI. 49. 14.

1258. यदाञ्जनं त्रैककुदं जातं हिमवतस्परि। यातूंश्च सर्वाञ्जम्भयत्सर्वाश्च यातुधान्यः॥ अथर्व० IV. 9.9. vide also Sat. Br. in SBE vol. 26 p. 15.

refers to this salve. Gaut., Baud Dh S. and Vas. Dh. S. have the same sūtra [1259] stating that the 'deśas (localities) that are holy and hence destroyers of sin are all mountains, all rivers, holy lakes, places of pilgrimage, the dwellings of sages (rsis), cowpens and temples of the gods' The Vāyupurāna [1260] and Kūrma state that all parts of the Himālaya are holy, the Ganges is holy everywhere, all rivers falling into the sea and all seas are holy. The Padmapurāna (Bhūmikhanda 39. 46-47) says that all rivers, whether flowing through a village or a forest, are holy and that where no name of a tīrtha on rivers is known it should be called Visnutīrtha. Kālidāsa speaks of the Himālaya as devatātmā (as vivified by the presence of gods) in the Kumārasambhava (I. 1). The Bhāgavata V. 19.16 names 27 holy mountains while the Brahmānda (II. 16. 20-23) names thirty. The grandeur and sublimity of snow-capped mountains, of large life-sustaining rivers and of great forests easily impress the minds of almost all people and induce them to think that there is something divine about them, that the Supreme

---

1259 सर्वे शिलोच्चयाः सर्वा नद्यस्तीर्थान्यृषिनिवासा गोष्ठपरिस्कन्दा इति देशाः। गौ 19, 14 = वसिष्ठ 22 12 = बौ ध सू III. 10 12 (which reads ऋषिनिकेतनानि गोष्ठक्षेत्रपरिष्कन्दा इति॰)

1260. सर्वे पुण्य हिमवतो गङ्गा पुण्या च सर्वत । समुद्रगा. समुद्राश्च सर्वे पुण्या. समन्तत ॥ वायुपुराण 77. 117, सर्वत्र हिमवान् पुण्यो गङ्गा · नतः। नद्य. समुद्रगा. पुण्याः समुद्रश्च विशेषत ॥ कूर्म II 37 49-50, 'राजा समस्ततीर्थानां सागर सरिता पति'॥ नारदीय (उत्तर) chap 58 19; सर्वे प्रस्रवणा पुण्या सर्वे पुण्या शिलोच्चया । नद्य पुण्या सदा सर्वा जाह्नवी तु विशेषत ॥ शङ्ख 8 14 (reads सरांसि च शिलोच्चया) q by तीर्थप्रकाश p 14, सर्वा. समुद्रगा पुण्या सर्वे पुण्या, नगोत्तमा । सर्वमायतनं पुण्य सर्वे पुण्या वनाश्रमा ॥ श्लोक q by तीर्थकल्प॰ p 250, पद्म IV. 93 46 has almost the same words (reads वराश्रमा) The great mountains (called कुलपर्वतs) generally enumerated are. महेन्द्रो मलय सह्य· शुक्तिमानृक्षपर्वत । विन्ध्यश्च पारियात्रश्च सप्तात्र कुलपर्वता ॥ कूर्म I. 47 23-24, वामन 13. 14-15, वायु I 85, मत्स्य 113 10-12. ब्रह्म 18 16 enumerate them somewhat differently. The बार्हस्पत्यसूत्र III. 81 says 'तत्रापि दैवतकविन्ध्यसह्यकुमारमलयश्रीपर्वतपारियात्रा सप्त कुलाचला ।' The नीलमतपुराण 57 reads 'महेन्द्रो॰ ऋक्षवानपि। विन्ध्यश्च पारियात्रश्च न विनश्यन्ति पर्वता ॥' The ब्रह्माण्डपुराण (II 16 39) and वायु (45 108) observe about rivers falling into the sea तास्तु नद्यः सरस्वत्य सर्वा गङ्गा सङ्गता । विश्वस्य मातर सर्वा जगत्पापहरा स्मृता ॥ In some Purāṇas certain great rivers are said to be specially holy at certain times For example, देवीपुराण quoted by कल्प॰ (on तीर्थ) p 242 states 'कार्तिके ग्रहणं श्रेष्ठं गङ्गायमुनसङ्गमे। मार्गे तु ग्रहणं पुण्यं देविकाया महामुने॥ पौषे तु नर्मदा पुण्या माघे सन्निहिता शुभा। फाल्गुने वरणा ख्याता चैत्रे पुण्या सरस्वती॥ वैशाखे तु महापुण्या चन्द्रभागा सरिद्वरा। ज्येष्ठे तु कौशिकी पुण्या आषाढे तापिका नदी। श्रावणे सिन्धुनामा च भाद्रमासे च गण्डकी। आश्विने सरयूश्चैव भूय पुण्या तु नर्मदा॥ गोदावरी महापुण्या चन्द्रे राहुसमन्विते॥, 'एवमादिष्वन्यान्येषु तीर्थेषु सरिद्वरासु सर्वेष्वपि स्वभावेषु पुलिनेषु प्रस्रवणेषु पर्वतेषु निकुञ्जेषु वनेषूपवनेषु गोमयलिप्तेषु मनोज्ञेषु। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 85.

Being is partially revealed in such surroundings. In Protestant Europe and the U. S. A. hardly anyone performs a pilgrimage to a holy place in these days. Instead, they tour different countries for rest, health and in search of natural beauty and a respite from humdrum existence But pilgrimage to a place supposed to be holy for the curing of disease is not rare even now. When one reads a work like that of Louis Carell, a great surgeon and a winner of the Nobel prize, on the miracles worked at Lourdes in France (in 'a Journey to Lourdes') one sees that pilgrimage has taken on a new motive in the West. Similarly, pilgrimage to the tombs of unknown warriors has become common owing to the two world wars.

In Rg X. 146 a large forest [1261] (Aranyānī) is invoked as a deity. The Vāmanapurāna mentions [1262] seven forests in Kuruksetra as holy and as removers of sin, viz. Kāmyaka, Aditivana, Vyāsavana, Phalakīvana, Sūryavana, Madhuvana and Punyaśitavana.

In the Sūtras and ancient smrtis like those of Manu and Yājñavalkya tīrthas do not occupy a very prominent position. But in the Mahābhārata and the Purānas they are highly lauded and placed even above sacrifices. In the Vanaparva [1263] a comparison is made between sacrifices to gods and pilgrimages. Sacrifices require numerous implements, collection of materials, the co-operation of priests and the presence of a wife and so

---

1261. अरण्यान्यरण्यान्यसौ या प्रेव नश्यसि। कथा ग्रामं न पृच्छसि न त्वा भीरिव विन्दतीः॥ ऋ. X 146 1. The निरुक्त 9. 30 explains this verse and says अरण्यानी means अरण्यस्य पत्नी, while the वार्तिक 'हिमारण्ययोर्महत्त्वे' on पा IV. 1. 49 holds that अरण्यानी is formed from अरण्य in the sense of महत्त्व

1262. शृणु सप्त वनानीह कुरुक्षेत्रस्य मध्यत । येषां नामानि पुण्यानि सर्वपापहराणि च॥ काम्यक च वनं पुण्यं०। वामनपुराण 34. 3-5.

1263 ऋषिभि. क्रतव प्रोक्ता देवेभ्यिव यथाक्रमम्। फलं चैव यथातथ्यं प्रेत्य चेह च सर्वश ॥ न ते शक्या दरिद्रेण यज्ञा भातु महीपते । बहूपक्रणा यज्ञा नानासम्भारविस्तरा.॥ प्राप्यन्ते पार्थिवैरेते समृद्धैर्वा नरै क्वचित् । नार्थन्यूनैर्नावगणैरेकात्मभिरसाधनै.॥ यो दरिद्रैरपि विधि शक्यः प्राप्तु नरेश्वर। तुल्यो यज्ञफलै पुण्यैस्तं निबोध सुधां वर॥ ऋषीणां परमं गुह्यमिदं भरतसत्तम । तीर्थाभिगमन पुण्यं यज्ञैरपि विशिष्यते॥ महाभारत, वनपर्व 82. 13–17, q by तीर्थकल्पतरु p 37, तीर्थप्र p 12 (which explains अवगणै. तक्षादिसहायरहितै., यज्ञस्य कुण्डमण्डपादिसाध्यत्वात्, एकात्माभिः, पत्नीरहितैः, असंहतैः ऋत्विगादिसङ्घातरहितै ।. The अनुशासनपर्व (107 2–4) has almost the same verses as न ते शक्या ..शक्यः प्राप्तुं सदा भवेत्; मत्स्यपुराण (chap 112. 12–15) has these verses (except the half verse नार्थन्यूनै. साधनैः and पद्मपुराण, आदिखण्ड 11. 14–17, 49. 12–15. vide विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III. 273. 4–5 for the same ideas in almost the same words.

they can be performed only by princes or rich men. They cannot be performed by poor men, who are devoid of wealth, who are without a wife and without friends, who are helpless. The reward that a man gets by visiting holy places cannot be secured by performing such sacrifices as Agnistoma in which large fees are paid (to priests); therefore visiting holy places is superior to sacrifices. But the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva 82, 9-12 and Anuśāsana 108. 3-4) lays the greatest emphasis on the cultivation of high moral and spiritual qualities if the full reward of pilgrimages is to be reaped. It says [1264] 'He whose hands, feet and mind are well controlled and who possesses knowledge, austerities and a good reputation derives the (full) reward of pilgrimages. He who turns his face away from receiving gifts and is content with what little he gets and is free from vanity obtains the rewards of pilgrimages. He, who is free from hypocrisy (or deceit), is not engaged in various undertakings (for earning money), is not a heavy eater, has subdued his senses and is (therefore) free from all sins; so also he who does not fly into a rage, who always speaks the truth, who is firm in his observances, and acts towards all beings by treating them like himself, obtains the full reward of pilgrimages'. The idea seems to be that pilgrimages may help to remove the sins of men who are not possessed of the above characteristics, while those who possess these acquire a great store of merit in addition. The Skanda (Kāśikhanda 6.3) asserts 'snāna cannot be predicated of a man whose body alone is flooded with water; that man who is plunged in restraint of senses, who is pure, relieved of all taint and is stainless, is alone to be called snāta' (as having had a bath). The Anuśāsana has almost the same

---

1264. यस्य हस्तौ च पादौ च मनश्चैव सुसंयतम्। विद्या तपश्च कीर्तिश्च स तीर्थफलमश्नुते॥ प्रतिग्रहादुपावृत्त सन्तुष्टो येन केनचित्। अहङ्कारनिवृत्तश्च स तीर्थफलमश्नुते॥ अकल्कको निरारम्भो लघ्वाहारो जितेन्द्रियः। विमुक्तः सर्वपापेभ्य. स तीर्थफलमश्नुते॥ अक्रोधनश्च राजेन्द्र सत्यशीलो दृढव्रतः। आत्मोपमश्च भूतेषु स तीर्थफलमश्नुते॥ वनपर्व 82 9-12 q. by the तीर्थकल्पतरु pp. 4-5, तीर्थप्र p. 13 (only 9 and 12) 'हस्तयोः संयम· परपीडावीर्यादिनिवृत्त्या, पादयो. सयम· अगम्यदेशगमनपरताडनादिनिवृत्त्या। मनस. सयमः कुत्सितसङ्कल्पादिनिवृत्त्या। विद्या अत्र तत्तत्तीर्थगुणज्ञानम्, तप. तीर्थवासादि, कीर्ति· सच्चरितत्वेन प्रसिद्धि.' तीर्थप्र. p. 13. 'अकल्कक: दम्भरहितः, निरारम्भोऽधार्जनादिव्यापाररहितः' तीर्थकल्पतरु p. 5. Vide also वनपर्व 92.11, 93. 20-23. The above verses of the वनपर्व occur in पद्म, आदिखण्ड 11. 9-12 and the first two in पद्म, उत्तरखण्ड 237. 30-32; all occur in स्कन्द, काशीखण्ड 6. 48-51, वायु 110. 4-5 are the same as the first two, the verse यस्य हस्तौ च is शङ्खस्मृति 8. 15, ब्रह्म 25 2, अग्नि 109 1-2, the स्कन्द (I 2.2 5-6) says that Angiras sang the gāthā यस्य... संयतम्। निर्विकारा क्रियाः सर्वा स · इच्छते words (108.9).[1264a] The Vāyupurāna states[1265] 'A steadfast (or wise) man visiting tīrthas with faith and controlling his senses would be purified even if he has been guilty of sins; what need is there to say about him whose actions have been pure? One who has no faith, who is full of sins, whose mind is not free from doubts (about the rewards of pilgrimages and the rites there), who is an atheist and who is bent on bad reasoning—these five do not reap the rewards of pilgrimages'. The Skandapurāna (I. 1. 31. 37) remarks that all holy places, sacrifices and various gifts are meant for cleansing the mind (of its sins and sinful proclivities, manaḥ-śuddhi). The Padmapurāna (IV. 80. 9) remarks· sacrifices, vratas, tapas and dāna cannot be carried out fully in the Kali age; but bathing in the Ganges and taking the name of Hari are free from all defects. The Viṣnudharmottarapurāna[1266] puts the matter very clearly when it says 'When resort is made to a tīrtha, it removes the sins of the sinful and tends to the increase of merit in the case of the good and that a holy place yields fruit to men of all varnas and āśramas.' Some of the Purānas (such as Skandapurāna, Kāśikhanda 6, Padma, Uttarakhanda, 237) say that in addition to the holy places on land (bhauma) there are certain virtues that may be called mental tīrthas (in a figurative sense). According to them 'truthfulness, forbearance, restraint of the senses, compassion for all beings, straight-forwardness, charity, self-control, contentment, celibacy (brahmacarya), sweet speech, knowledge, patience, austerity, are tīrthas and the highest tīrtha is purity of mind.' They further state that a man who is avaricious, wicked, cruel, hypocritical and immersed in pleasures of senses is still sinful and impure even if he bathes in all tīrthas and that fish are born and die in holy waters but they do not go to heaven because their minds are not purified and that even charity, sacrifices, austerity, 1264 a नोदकक्लिन्नगात्रस्तु स्नात इत्यभिधीयते । स स्नातो यो दमस्नातः सबाह्याभ्यन्तरः शुचिः॥ अनुशासन 108 9.

---

1265. तीर्थान्यनुसरन् धीरः श्रद्दधानो जितेन्द्रियः । कृतपापो विशुध्येत किं पुनः शुभकर्मकृत्॥ अश्रद्दधानाः पापात्मानो नास्तिका स्थितसंशयाः। हेतुदृष्टा च पञ्चैते न तीर्थफलभागिन ॥ वायु 77. 125 and 127 q by तीर्थकल्प० pp. 5–6, ती. चि. p 4 (which explains पापात्मा बहुपापग्रस्तस्तस्य पापशमन तीर्थं भवति न तु यथोक्तफलम्) These verses occur also in स्कन्द, काशीखण्ड 56 52–53.

1266 पापानां पापशमनं धर्मवृद्धिस्तथा सताम् । विज्ञेयं सेवितं तीर्थं तस्मात्तीर्थपरो भवेत्॥ सर्वेषामेव वर्णाना सर्वाश्रमनिवासिनाम्। तीर्थं फलप्रदं ज्ञेयं नात्र कार्या विचारणा॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III. 273. 7 and 9.

cleanliness, frequenting sacred places, learning—all these are not tirthas, if the mind is not pure [1267] The Brahmapurāna (25.4–6) states 'a heart that is wicked is not purified by baths at holy places, just as a vessel in which surā (liquor) was carried remains impure even after being washed with water hundreds of times, that tirthas, gifts, vratas, or (residence in) hermitages do not purify a man whose heart is wicked, who resorts to hypocrisy and whose senses run away (are uncontrolled). Wherever a man who has his senses under control may dwell, there are present Kuruksetra, Prayāga and Puskara'. The Vāmanapurāna has a fine[1267a] Rūpaka about the soul being a river full of the water of control, flowing with truth and having character as the bank and the waves of compassion (for all beings) and states that the soul cannot be purified by water. The Padmapurāna (II. 39. 56–61) extends the meaning and scope of tirthas by remarking that places where Agnihotra and śrāddha are performed, a temple, a house where Veda is being studied, a cowpen, the place where a soma drinker dwells, parks, a place where the Aśvattha exists, a place where Purāna is being recited or where one's teacher stands or where a chaste housewife dwells, or where a father and a worthy son dwell are all holy.

Numberless tirthas and holy shrines have been mentioned from ancient times. The Matsyapurāna states [1268] that Vāyu declared that there are 35 millions of tirthas in the sky, in the aerial regions and on the earth and all of them are centred in the Ganges; while the Vāmanapurāna 46. 53 states that there are 35 millions of Lingas. The Brahmapurāna says that the number of tirthas and shrines is so large that they cannot be 1267. सत्यं तीर्थं क्षमा तीर्थं ..तीर्थानामुत्तमं तीर्थं विशुद्धिर्मनसः पुनः। .जायन्ते च म्रियन्ते च जलेष्वेव जलौकसः। न च गच्छन्ति ते स्वर्गमविशुद्धमनोमलाः॥ दानमिज्या तपः शौचं तीर्थसेवा श्रुतं तथा। सर्वाण्येतान्यतीर्थानि यदि भावो न निर्मलः॥ स्कन्द, काशीः 6. 28–45, पद्म, उत्तरखण्ड 237. 11–28, compare मत्स्य 22 80 (सत्यं तीर्थं दया तीर्थः).

---

1267 a आत्मा नदी संयमतोयपूर्णा सत्यावहा शीलतटा दयोर्मिः। तत्राभिषेकं कुरु पाण्डुपुत्र न वारिणा शुध्यति चान्तरात्मा॥ वामनपुराण 43. 25

1268. तिस्रः कोट्योऽर्धकोटिश्च तीर्थानां वायुरब्रवीत्। दिवि भुव्यन्तरिक्षे च तत्सर्वं जाह्नवीं स्मृता॥ मत्स्यपुराण 110 7, नारदीय (उत्तर) 63. 53–54, and पद्म IV. 89. 16–17 and V. 20 150 (last पाद is तानि ते सन्ति जाह्नवी); वराह 159 6–7 षष्टिकोटिसहस्राणि षष्टिकोटिशतानि च। तीर्थान्येतानि देवाश्च तारकाश्च नभस्तले। गणितानि सनस्तानि वायुना जगदायुषा॥, तिस्रः कोट्योऽर्धकोटी च तीर्थानि भुवनत्रये। तानि स्नातुं समायान्ति गङ्गायां सिंहगे गुरौ॥ ब्रह्मपु. 175 83; तस्माच्छृणुष्वं वक्ष्यामि तीर्थान्यायतनानि च। विस्तरेण न शक्यन्ते वक्तुं वर्षशतैरपि॥ ब्रह्मपुराण 25 7–8.

enumerated in detail even in hundreds of years. The Vanaparva [1269] remarks that Naimisa is the (best) tīrtha on the earth and Puskara in the ærial region, while Kuruksetra is the most distinguished in all the three worlds and that all the ten thousand crores of tīrthas are present in Puskara (chap 82.21) New tīrthas were added from time to time and the monetary benefits derived by the permanent residents and particularly by the tīrtha priests led them to prepare numerous māhātmyas of an apocryphal character and father them on Vyāsa, the reputed author of the Mahābhārata and the Purānas. Most of the writers of digests on tīrthas follow a process of selection. The Tīrthakalpataru of Laksmīdhara, one of the earliest digests (about 1110–1120 AD), devotes more than half the work to Vārānasī and Prayāga alone, assigns only two or three pages to such famous tīrthas as Puskara, Prthūdaka, Kokāmukha, Badarikāśrama, Kedāra. The Nrsimhaprasāda (Tīrthasāra) mostly deals with tīrthas in the Deccan and southern India such as Setubandha, Pundarīka (modern Pandharpur), Godāvarī, Krsnā-venyā, Narmadā. The Tristhalīsetu of Nārāyanabhatta devotes two-thirds of it to Benares and its sub-tīrthas and the rest to Prayāga and Gayā. This unequal treatment arose from various causes, such as the localities where the authors lived, their familiarity with the holy places and their predilections. There was also another tendency among the authors of Purānas, Māhātmyas and digests viz. that of great exaggeration and over-statement which is often repellent. If a man reads the description of one tīrtha and does not discount much as sheer hollow laudation, he is likely to feel that a pilgrimage to a certain tīrtha will yield all the desires in this life as well in the next and that after visiting a holy tīrtha like Kāśī or Prayāga he need not go to any other tīrtha, nor need he perform any yajña or act of charity and the like. A few striking passages may be cited here. The Vanaparva remarks that [1270] even gods and sages secured 1269. पृथिव्यां नैमिषं तीर्थमन्तरिक्षे च पुष्करम्। त्रयाणामपि लोकानां कुरुक्षेत्रं विशिष्यते॥ वनपर्व 83 202, q. by तीर्थम p 19 and तीर्थकल्पतरु p 178; नीलकण्ठ explains: नैमिषारण्ये कृतं पुण्यं पृथिव्यामेव सप्ततिसपत्तिसार्वभौमादिपदप्राप्तिहेतुरित्यर्थ, अन्तरिक्षे सूर्यचन्द्रादिमार्गे नक्षत्रादिचक्रेषु पुष्कर मापयतीत्यर्थ। The same verse occurs in मत्स्य 109.3, पद्म (आदिखण्ड 27.87) and the first half in वामन 7. 37.

---

1270 पुष्करेषु महाभाग देवाः सर्षिगणा पुरा। सिद्धिं समभिसंप्राप्ता पुण्येन महतान्विता॥ तत्राभिषेकं य. कुर्यात्पितृदेवार्चने रत । अश्वमेधादवाप्नोति फलं प्राहुर्मनीषिण ॥ वनपर्व 82. 26-27; नास्मात्परतर तीर्थं लोकेऽस्मिन्परिपठ्यते। पद्म (5th खण्ड, 27 78).

perfection at Puskara and that whoever takes a bath there and devoutly worships gods and his pitrs secures rewards ten times of what the performance of Aśvamedha might give. About this very tīrtha viz. Puskara, the Padmapurāna says that there is no holier tīrtha in this world. The Vanaparva (83. 145) in its eulogy of Prthūdaka asserts that Kuruksetra is holy, that Sarasvatī is holier than Kuruksetra and that Prthūdaka is holier than all other tīrthas The Matsyapurāna puts the[1271] comparative holiness of several tīrthas thus 'the waters of the Sarasvatī purify after (one bathes for) three days, those of Yamunā in seven days, those of the Ganges at once, while the water of the Narmadā purifies a man at sight of it.' In its eulogy of Vārānasī the Kūrma-purāna states 'there is no place higher than Vārānasī nor will there be one' (I. 31 64). The inveterate habit of exaggeration goes so far that it is said that by merely residing in Kāśī till one's death not only does a man become free from the great sin of brāhmana murder but from the never-ending cycle of births and deaths and is not born again.[1272] The Lingapurāna says the same thing. The Vāmana-purāna remarks[1273] that mukti (release from samsāra) can be secured in four ways, viz. by knowledge of Brahman, by śrāddha at Gayā, by loss of life in repelling the carrying away of cows and by residence in Kuruksetra and that those who die in Kuruksetra never come down (to the earth) Mere residence in Kāśī was so much lauded that the Matsya (181 23), the Agni (112. 3) and other Purānas say that after repairing to Kāśī one should smash one's feet with a stone (in order that

---

1271. त्रिभि. सारस्वत तोयं सप्ताहेन तु यामुनम्। सद्य पुनाति गाङ्गेयं दर्शनादेव नार्मदम्॥ पद्म, आदिखण्ड 13. 7, मत्स्य० 186.11. The अभिलषितार्थचिन्तामणि (Mysore ed.) I. 1.130 has a very similar verse 'सरस्वती त्रिभि स्नानै पञ्चभिर्यमुनाजहत्। जाह्नवी स्नानमात्रेण दर्शनेनैव नर्मदा'॥

1272. आ देहपतनाद्यावत्तत्क्षेत्रं यो न मुञ्चति। न केवलं ब्रह्महत्या प्राकृत च निवर्तते। प्राप्य विश्वेश्वरं देवं न स भूयोऽभिजायते। मत्स्य 182 16–17, q. by तीर्थकल्प० p. 17 (which reads प्राकृतश्च that is explained as संसारबन्ध) and तीर्थचि p. 345 which quotes the passage from लिङ्गपुराण, but those verses are not found in chap 92 of the लिङ्गपुराण (Venk. ed.) which deals with वाराणसीमाहात्म्य लिङ्गपुराण I. 92 63 is विषयासक्तचित्तोपि त्यक्तधर्मरतिर्नरः। इह क्षेत्रेमृत. सोपि संसारे न पुनर्भवेत्। कामं ह्यत्र मृतो देवि जन्तुर्मोक्षाय कल्पते॥ लिङ्ग० I. 92 94. The verse आ देहपतनात् occurs in स्कन्द, काशीखण्ड 25. 67.

1273 ब्रह्मज्ञान गयाश्राद्ध गोग्रहे मरणं ध्रुवम्। वास कुरुक्षेत्रे मुक्तिरुक्ता चतुर्विधा॥ ग्रहनक्षत्रताराणां कालेन पतनाद्भयम्। कुरुक्षेत्रमुताना च पतनं नैव विद्यते॥ वामन-पुराण 33.8 and 16; the first occurs in वायु० 105 16, अग्नि 115. 5-6.

one may not be induced to visit another tīrtha) [1274] and stay in Kāśī forever.

The Brahmapurāna classifies tīrthas into four divisions [1275] viz. daiva (created by gods), āsura (those associated with such asuras as Gaya), ārsa (those established by sages) such as Prabhāsa, Naranārāyana and mānusa (created by kings like Ambarīsa, Manu, Kuru) and provides that each preceding one is superior to each succeeding one. It enumerates six rivers to the south of the Vindhya and six rivers having their sources in the Himālayas as most holy and as devatīrthas, viz. Godāvarī, Bhīmarathī, Tungabhadrā, Venikā, Tāpī, Payosnī, Bhāgīrathī, Narmadā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, Visokā, and Vitastā. Similarly, Kāśī, Puskara and Prabhāsa are devatīrthas (Tīrthapr. p 18). The Brahmapurāna (175. 31–32) assigns daiva, āsurā, ārsa and mānusa tīrthas respectively to the Krta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali yugas.

There is a good deal of discussion in the Purānas and digests about those who are entitled or have the eligibility or capacity (adhikāra) for tīrthayātrā. The Vanaparva [1276] provides that brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras, when they have bathed in holy places, are not born again. The same work further states that whatever sin a man or a woman may have committed from birth, the moment a person takes a bath in the holy Puskara all that sin vanishes [1277] Therefore not only men but women also had the right to undertake tīrthayātrā. The Matsyapurāna [1278] goes further and asserts that 'Avimukta

---

1274. अश्मना चरणौ हत्वा वसेत्काशी न हि त्यजेत्। अग्नि 112.3; अविमुक्त यदा गच्छेत् कदाचित्कालपर्ययात्। अश्मना चरणौ भित्वा तत्रैव निधनं व्रजेत्॥ मत्स्य 181.23, which last is quoted in तीर्थकल्प० p. 16. अश्मना चरणौ हत्वा वाराणस्या वसेन्नरः। कूर्म I 31 35 q by तीर्थप्र p 140.

1275. चतुर्विधानि तीर्थानि स्वर्गे मर्त्ये रसातले। दैवानि मुनिशार्दूल आसुराण्यारुषाणि च। मानुषाणि विलोकेषु विख्यातानि सुरादिभिः। ..ब्रह्मविष्णुशिवैर्देवैर्निर्मितं दैवमुच्यते। ब्रह्मपुराण 70 16–19 q by तीर्थप्रकाश p. 18, which also quotes the verses from ब्रह्मपुराण 70 33–35 about the twelve rivers (देवतीर्थs) आरुष stands for आर्ष. Vide ब्रह्म 70 33–40 for examples of the four kinds of तीर्थs

1276. ब्राह्मणा क्षत्रिया वैश्याः शूद्रा वा राजसत्तम। न वै योनौ प्रजायन्ते स्नातास्तीर्थे महात्मन। वनपर्व 82 30–31 q by तीर्थप्र p 19 (which reads न वियोनिं व्रजन्त्येते, meaning 'are not born in a condemned or low body')

1277. जन्ममृत्यृति यत्पापं स्त्रिया वा पुरुषेण वा। पुष्करे स्नातमात्रस्य सर्वमेव प्रणश्यति॥ वनपर्व 82 33–34 q. by तीर्थप्र p 23.

1278 नानावर्णा विवर्णाश्च चण्डाला ये जुगुप्सिता'। किल्बिषैः पूर्णदेहाश्च प्रकुष्टैः पातकैस्तथा। भेषज परम तेषामविमुक्तं विदुर्बुधा.। मत्स्यपुराण 184. 66–67, कूर्मपु. I. 31. 42–43 q. by तीर्थकल्पतरु p 26, तीर्थप्र. (on p. 140), तीर्थचि p. 140.

(Vārānasī) is the highest cure for men of numerous castes, for men not (recognized as) belonging to any particular varṇa, for cāṇḍālas who are abhorred (by people) and for persons whose bodies are full of diseases and of aggravated sins' It is stated in the Vāmanapurāna:[1279] persons of all the four āśramas (i. e. brahmacārins, householders, forest hermits and sannyāsins) by bathing in the tīrtha (mentioned by it) save seven generations in their families and that persons belonging to the four varnas and women, when they bathe in tīrthas with devotion, see the highest goal. It was provided by the Brahmapurāna that a brahmacārin can undertake a pilgrimage only if ordered or directed by his guru, and that a householder whose wife is alive and is chaste must go on a pilgrimage with her; otherwise he would not reap the fruit of pilgrimage The Padmapurāna (Bhūmikhanda chap. 59–60) narrates the story of a vaiśya called Krkala who went on a pilgrimage without his virtuous wife and did not reap the fruits of a long pilgrimage (bhāryām vinā yo dharmaḥ sa eva viphalo bhavet, 59. 33). The Tīrthacintāmani and Tīrthaprakāśa quote a passage (from the Kūrmapurāna) which glorifies Vārānasī (called Avimukta there) as follows[1280] 'brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas, śūdras, persons of mixed castes (varnasankara), women, mlecchas and others who are born in evil forms and are of mixed blood, worms, ants, birds and beasts when they die in Avimukta are born as human beings in Benares and no one guilty of sins dying in Avimukta goes to Hell' As regards[1281] women and śūdras, a smrti verse provided 'Japa, tapas, pilgrimage to holy places, becoming an ascetic (sannyāsin), efforts to attain mastery over mantras and worshipping deities (as a priest)—these six lead to sinfulness in the case of women and

---

1279. ब्रह्मचारी गृहस्थश्च वानप्रस्थो यतिस्तथा। कुलानि तारयेत्स्नात सप्त सप्त च सप्त च॥ ब्राह्मणा. क्षत्रिया वैश्या· स्त्रिया शूद्राश्च तत्परा। तीर्थस्नाता भक्तियुता पश्यन्ति परम पदम्॥ वामनपुराण 36 78–79.

1280. ब्राह्मणा क्षत्रिया वैश्या शूद्रा ये वर्णसङ्करा। स्त्रियो म्लेच्छाश्च ये चान्ये सङ्कीर्णापापयोनय॥ कीटा पिपीलिकाश्चैव ये चान्ये मृगपक्षिण। कालेन निधनं प्राप्ता अविमुक्ते धरानने।...शिवे मम पुरे देवि जायन्ते तत्र मानवा। नाविमुक्ते मृत कश्चिन्नरकं याति किल्बिषी। कूर्म I 31. 32–34, मत्स्यपुराण 181. 19–21 q. by तीर्थचि p. 346, तीर्थम p. 139 (which quotes from कूर्मपुराण and adds नाविमुक्ते मृत कश्चिन्नरक याति किल्बिषी। ईश्वरानुगृहीता हि सर्वे यान्ति परा गतिम्। नाविमुक्ते मृत· कश्चिन्नरक याति किल्बिषी। कूर्म I. 31 31–34 q by तीर्थचि p. 346, तीर्थम p 139 The same verses occur in पद्म I 33. 18–21

1281. जपस्तपस्तीर्थयात्रा प्रव्रज्या मन्त्रसाधनम्। देवताराधन चेति स्त्रीशूद्रपतना नि षट्॥ q. by तीर्थम p 21, ascribed to मनु by भट्टोजि in त्रिस्थलीसेतुसारसंग्रह p 2.

śūdras.' This was explained away by stating that this text refers to undertaking pilgrimage without the husband's permission (in the case of a woman) and as to a śūdra in such a way as to be opposed to the primary duty of a śūdra to wait upon learned brāhmanas (as laid down in Manu X. 123). Kātyāyana[1282] as quoted in the Vyavahāramayūkha provides 'whatever a woman does that relates to (benefit in) a future state (i. e. state after death) without the permission of her (husband's) father, husband or son, would become fruitless' It is clear therefore that it was recognized early that tīrthayātrā was a popular way for redemption of sins in the case of all classes of men and women. Though a Hindu woman succeeding as heir to her husband's estate has only a limited and qualified ownership over it, judicial decisions have recognized that she can alienate a small portion of her husband's estate for the expenses of a pilgrimage to Gayā for performing her husband's śrāddha for the latter's spiritual benefit or of a pilgrimage to Pandharpur. Vide Muteeram v. Gopal 11 Beng. L. R. 416; Darbari Lal v. Gobind 46 All. 822; Ganpat v. Tulsiram 36 Bom. 88 (pilgrimage to Pandharpur).[1283] It was also provided that there was no question of untouchability[1284] when bathing in holy waters.

1282 नारी खल्वनुज्ञाता पित्रा भर्त्रा सुतेन वा। विफलं तद्भवेत्तस्या यत्करोत्यौर्ध्व-देहिकम्॥ कात्या q. by व्य. म ; p. 113, this verse is quoted by चतुर्वर्ग० on व्रत I. p. 327 as from आदित्यपुराण and और्ध्वदेहिकं is explained as व्रतानि.

1283. Strangely enough, the Calcutta High court has held that a widow cannot validly alienate a part of her husband's property inherited by her as heir for a pilgrimage to Benares; vide Hari v. Bajrangi 13 C. W N. 544 at p. 547. But a gift to the temple of Jagannātha at Purī for bhog (offerings of cooked food) to the deity and for the maintenance of the priests there for the salvation of the husband and the members of his family and for the widow's own salvation was upheld by the Privy Council in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari 49 I. A. 383. As seen in note 1294 below, a person on returning from a pilgrimage had to honour and feed brāhmanas In Dinanath v. Hrishikesh 18 C. W. N. 1303, 1306, where a widow on returning from a pilgrimage to Gayā for the benefit of her husband's soul incurred a debt for feeding brāhmanas and her husband's relatives and alienated a portion of her husband's property, it was held that the debt was one for a spiritual purpose and was binding on the reversioners after the death of the widow.

1284. तीर्थे विवाहे यात्रायां संग्रामे देशविप्लवे। नगरग्रामदाहे च स्पृष्टास्पृष्टिर्न दुष्यति॥ बृह q by कल्पतरु on शुद्धि p 169, स्मृतिच. I p 122 This is variously explained, The तीर्थप्र. p 41 says 'तीर्थे विवाह इत्यनेनानिवार्य-तीर्थाद्यधिकरणकास्पृश्यस्पर्शो न दोषायेत्यभिधानात्। स्पृष्टास्पृष्टिर्न दुष्यतीति वचनं पक्वान्नशुद्धौ कल्पतरुकृता लिखितं तीर्थे पक्वान्नस्पर्शे न दोष इति। अत एव पुरुषोत्तमक्षेत्रादौ तथैव शिष्टाचार इति।'. Vide above note 750 for the same quotation The शुद्धिप्र. p. 130 explains तीर्थादौ अस्पृश्य-स्पर्शने नाचमनस्नानादि

There is a verse of Bṛhaspati: 'At holy places, in marriages, in a religious festival (or procession), in a battle, when there is an invasion of the country and when a town or village is on fire, no blame attaches on the ground of incurring contact with untouchable persons or things.'

In order to guard against the facile assumption that without a change of heart or change in one's sinful mode of life a mere physical act of pilgrimage and bath in holy waters would be enough, some of the texts in the Mahābhārata and Purānas adopted two propositions: viz the one noted above that it is the pure mind that is a real tīrtha and further emphasized that it is better to stay at home and perform all the duties of a householder including the performance of vedic sacrifices than to go on a pilgrimage. The Śāntiparva [1285] in the dialogue between Tulādhāra and Jājali (a brāhmana proud of his tapas) asserts that purodāśa is the holiest of offerings, that all rivers are (holy like) Sarasvatī and all hillocks (and not merely Himālaya and the like) are holy, that one's soul is a tīrtha and advises Jājali not to be a guest (i. e. to be wandering in quest of tīrthas) to several countries. The Tīrthacintāmaṇi and Tīrthaprakāśa quote passages from the Brahmapurāna that a brāhmana should wander about tīrthas after his capacity to perform sacrifices has come to an end, that it is better for a man to stay at home and perform the duties of an householder when he has the capacity and authority to perform iṣṭis and yajñas, and that all the tīrthas do not come up (in their rewards) to the performance of agnihotra. [1286] The Kūrmapurāna [1287] has the following remarkable verses on this point. 'That person who abandoning his proper duties[1287] resorts to tīrthas does not reap the fruits of 1285 पुरोडाशो हि सर्वेषां पशूनां मेध्य उच्यते। सर्वा नद्यः सरस्वत्य सर्वे पुण्याः शिलोच्चयाः। जाजले तीर्थमात्मैव मा स्म देशातिथिर्भव। एतानीदृशकान् धर्मानाचरन्हि जाजले। कारणैर्धर्ममन्विच्छन् स लोकानाप्नुते शुभान्। शान्तिपर्व 263. 40-42. नीलकण्ठ explains 'यत्रैवात्मसमाधानं तत्रैव सर्वाणि तीर्थानि सन्तीत्यर्थ ।'.

---

1286. यज्ञाधिकारेऽप्यथवा निवृत्ते विभक्तु तीर्थानि परिभ्रमेत।...यस्यैतियज्ञेष्वधिकारितास्ति वर गृहं गृहधर्माश्च सर्वे। एवं गृहस्थाश्रमसंस्थितस्य तीर्थे गति. पूर्वतरैर्निषिद्धा। सर्वाणि तीर्थान्यपि चाग्निहोत्रतुल्यानि नैवेति वय वदाम। ब्रह्मपुराण q by तीर्थकल्पतरु p 9, तीर्थचि pp. 5-6 and तीर्थप्र p. 19. Vide नारदीय (उत्तर) 62 22 for the first verse.

1287. य. स्वधर्मान् परित्यज्य तीर्थसेवा करोति हि। न तस्य फलते तीर्थमिह लोके परत्र च॥ प्रायश्चित्ती च विधुरस्तथा यायावरो गृही। मकुर्यात्तीर्थसेवा यथान्यत्राहृतो जनः॥ सहाग्निर्वा सपत्नीको गच्छेत्तीर्थानि यत्नत.। सर्वपापविनिर्मुक्तो यथोक्तां गतिमाप्नुयात्॥ ऋणानि त्रीण्यपाकुर्याकुर्वन्वा तीर्थसेवनम्। विधाय वृत्तिं पुत्राणा भार्यां तेषु निधाय च॥ कूर्म II. 44. 20-23.

pilgrimage in this world as well as in the next. A person who has to undergo an expiation (for a sin), or who is a widower or who is a householder of the yāyāvara[1288] type or similar persons may resort to pilgrimages. One may go to holy places with his vedic fires or with his wife; he becomes free from all sins and secures the best goal as stated above. One who wants to go on pilgrimages should pay off the three debts, should provide means of maintenance for his sons and should consign his wife to their care.'

Ancient writers on Dharmaśāstra favoured pilgrimages by prescribing, as stated in the Viṣnu Dh. S, that[1289] no money was to be demanded from a Vedic student, a forest hermit, an ascetic, a pregnant woman and a pilgrim by a ferryman or by a toll officer and that if he took money from such persons he was to be made to return it. But this prescription was not invariably followed even by Hindu Kings The Rājataraṅgiṇī (VI 254-255 and VII. 1008) notices that a tax was levied on Kashmirians performing śrāddhas at Gayā.[1290] It appears that Siddharāja king of Anahilavād (1095-1143 A. D.) levied a tax on pilgrims going to Somanātha at the frontier town Bāhuloda, that he remitted the tax at the intercession of his mother and that the tax thus remitted amounted to 72 lakhs of rupees every year (this last may be an exaggeration to glorify Siddharāja).[1290a] Moslem kings levied this tax. It appears that a great writer called Kavīndrācārya took up the cause of Hindu pilgrims visiting Prayāga and Kāśī and so eloquently pleaded it before Emperor Shah Jehan that the latter remitted the tax altogether

---

1288. A householder is said to be of two sorts, śālīna and yāyāvara. The latter is one who subsists by picking up grains that fall down when the corn that is reaped is taken from the fields to the house or threshing floor or who does not accumulate wealth or who does not earn his livelihood by officiating as a priest or by teaching or by accepting gifts. Vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 641-642 and notes 1501-1504. For the three debts to Gods, Manes and sages, vide. H of Dh. vol II. pp. 270 and 425

1289. ब्रह्मचारिवानप्रस्थभिक्षुगर्विणीतीर्थाध्वसारिणां नाविकः शौल्किकः शुल्कमादद्दानश्च। तच्च तेषां दद्यात्। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र V. 132-133.

1290. काश्मीरिकाणा यः श्राद्धशुल्कोच्छेत्ता गयान्तरे। सोऽप्येरमन्तकः शूरः परिहासपुराश्रय.॥ बद्ध्वा महाशिलां कण्ठे वितस्ताम्भसि पातित.। राजत VI. 254-55.

The valiant एरमन्तक of परिहासपुर who had relieved Kashmir residents from the tax at Gayā was drowned in Vitastā (by queen Diddā) with a big stone tied round his neck.

1290*a*. Vide Bom G. vol. I part 1 p. 172 and Prabandha-cintāmani (tr. by Tawney p 84) and conferred upon the great scholar [1291] the title of 'Sarva-vidyā-nidhāna'. People throughout India felt such relief at the remission of the tax that congratulatory letters and addresses (several of them couched in very poetic language) poured upon Kavīndrācārya. These have been published in a work styled 'Kavīndra-candrodaya' by Dr. Har Dutta Sharma and Mr. M. M. Patkar (in the Poona Oriental series), a characteristic verse from which is quoted below.[1292] In a remarkable copper-plate Inscription in Sanskrit [1293] and Kannada issued by the Hoysala king Narasimha III in Māgha śake 1200 (1279 A. D) it is said that the king granted the revenues (amounting to 645 niskas a year) of a village called Hebbāle to the pilgrims of Kāśī and to god Śrīviśveśvara for the purpose of enabling the pilgrims to Benares (including those from the whole of Karnāṭaka, from the countries of Telingana, Tulu, Tirhut, Gauda and others) to pay off the tax levied by the Turuskas (Moslem kings).[1293]

The digests quote certain verses of the Brahmapurāna about the rites to be performed when a person decides to start on a pilgrimage. The Brahmapurāna provides that the intending pilgrim should restrain his senses the previous day, should observe a fast and on the next day he should offer worship to Ganeśa, the gods, the pitrs and honour good brāhmanas according to his ability and when he returns from the pilgrimage he should offer similar worship and honour.[1294] The digests 1291. Vide I A vol 41 (1912) p 7 at p 11 for an account by the late M. M. Haraprasad Shastri of the abolition of the pilgrim tax by Shah Jeha n.

1292. येन श्रीसाहिजाहाँ नरपतितिलकः स्वस्य वश्य कृतोऽभूत्कि चावश्य प्रपञ्च पुनरपि विहितः शाहिदाराशकोहः । काशीतीर्थप्रयागप्रतिजनितकरग्राहमोक्षैकहेतुः सोयं श्रीमान्कवीन्द्रो जयति कविगुरुस्तीर्थराजाधिराजः ॥ कवीन्द्रचन्द्रोदय p. 23 No. 169. There is possibly a veiled allusion to गजेन्द्रमोक्ष in the words 'ग्राहमोक्ष'.

1293 Vide Epigraphia Carnatica, vol 15 No 298 pp. 71-73 (containing transliterated text) and p 12 of the dynastic list; the important words in Kannada are 'Ellā-ksetravāsi-galu Turahkarige ... Kula karnāṭigaru Telugaru .Tuḷu-Maleylaru. .Tirabhukti-garu...Gavudigaru' &c. This inscription indicates that the expression 'Turuskadanda' occurring in certain Gāhadvāla Inscriptions such as those in E I IX at p 305, E I XIII p 295, E. I. XIV p. 195 meant a levy imposed by Moslem raiders and rulers 1294. यो यः कश्चित्तीर्थयात्रा तु गच्छेत्सुसंयतः स च पूर्व राहे स्वे। कृतोपवास. शुचिर्-यमवत् सम्पूजयेद्गणेशानमो गणेशम्॥ देवान् पितॄन् ब्राह्मणाश्चैव साधून् धीमान् पितॄन् ब्राह्मणान् पूजयेच्च। प्रत्यागतश्चापि पुनस्तथैव देवान् पितॄन् ब्राह्मणान् पूजयेच्च। ब्रह्मपुराण q. by तीर्थ-कल्प° p. 9, तीर्थचि p 6 (explains सुसंयत इति पूर्वदिने कृतैकभक्तादिनियम.), तीर्थप्र.

(Continued on next page)

explain that on return there is no fast and no worship of Ganeśa. He should perform śrāddha in which there is plenty of ghee, honour three brāhmanas (at least) with the offer of sandalwood paste &c. and then make a resolve (saṅkalpa) to go on pilgrimage The Vāyupurāna [1295] and the digests lay down that (after the worship of Ganeśa, the planets and the deities) he should put on the dress of a kārpaṭī viz. wear a copper-ring, a copper bracelet and reddish garments. Bhattoji (p 5) states that according to some the apparel of kārpatika is to be put on by a pilgrim going to Gayā. The Padma (IV. 19. 22) prescribes the pilgrim's dress for other tīrthas also. The Tīr. C. adds that this dress is to be worn only on the journey to a tīrtha, when the pilgrim is in a tīrtha, but not at the time of performing his daily duties such as taking meals (p. 9).

There is a difference of opinion among the digests as to whether tonsure of the head is obligatory when starting on a pilgrimage. The Padmapurāna [1296] and Skandapurāna appear to make it obligatory. The Tīrtha-Kalpataru does not [1297] refer to tonsure at all, while a fast at a tīrtha is declared by it to be optional. The tendency of later digest-writers is generally to make every religious act more elaborate and harder. The tonsure of the head and beard was prescribed for a sacrificer p. 23 (which states 'सुसयतः पूर्वदिने कृतैकभक्तादिनियम इति केचित्, ब्रह्मचर्यादियुक्त इति तु युक्तम्॥'). In Dnanath v Hrishikesh 18 C. W. N. 1303 this passage of the Brahmapurāna is quoted and relied upon. These verses occur in नारदीय (उत्तर) 62. 24–25). The स्कन्दपु (काशीखण्ड 6. 56–57) and पद्म have similar verses तीर्थयात्रा चिकीर्षुं प्राग्विधायोपोषणं गृहे। गणेशं च पितॄन् विप्रान् साधून् शक्त्या प्रपूज्य च। कृतपारणको हृष्टो गच्छेत्तियमधूक् पुन । आगत्याभ्यर्च्य च पितॄन् यथोक्तफलभाग्भवेत्॥ पद्म, उत्तरखण्ड 237. 36–38 ब्रह्म 76. 18–19 provide नान्दीमुखश्राद्ध, देहशुद्धि, ब्राह्मणभोजन, remaining celebate and not talking with patita people, when one is on a pilgrimage to गोदावरी.

---

(Continued from the last page)

1295. उद्यतश्चेद्वया गन्तुं श्राद्धं कृत्वा विधानत. । विधाय कार्पटीवेषं कृत्वा ग्रामं प्रदक्षिणम्। ततो ग्रामान्तर गत्वा श्राद्धशेषस्य भोजनम्। वायुपु 110 2–3, q. by तीर्थचि p 7, तीर्थप्र p. 29 (which explains 'कार्पटीवेषः ताम्रमुद्राताम्रकङ्कणकापायवस्त्रधारणम्') The तीर्थचि remarks that although these requirements are mentioned in connection with Gayā, these hold good as to pilgrimages to all holy places. Besides, this kārpatika apparel is to be worn only when actually travelling and not when the pilgrim performs his daily duties or takes his meals or offers śrāddha

1296. तीर्थोपवास कर्तव्य शिरसो मुण्डनं तथा। शिरोगतानि पापानि यान्ति मुण्डनतो यत । पद्म (उत्तरखण्ड 237. 45), स्कन्द (काशीखण्ड 6. 65).

1297. तीर्थोपवासश्च फलविशेषार्थ । तीर्थमभिगम्य व्रतोपवासनियमयुक्तस्त्र्यहमवगाहमानस्त्रिरात्रमुषित्वा सर्वपापै. प्रमुच्यते स्वस्तिमांश्च भवतीति देवलवचनात्। तीर्थकल्प० p 11, when undertaking such solemn Vedic sacrifices as Cāturmāsyas and Agnistoma.[1298] The termination of the stage of Vedic studenthood (samāvartana) was also marked by tonsure.[1299] Further, tonsure was prescribed when undergoing prāyaścitta for sins (vide p. 122 above). The Tīr. C. and Tīr Pr. both quote a verse of Visnu [1300] from the Smrtisamuccaya, viz. 'at Prayāga, on a pilgrimage, on the death of one's father or mother one should cut one's hair; but one should not cut one's hair without cause.' The Mit. on Yāj. III. 17 quotes a verse as follows: 'On the Ganges, in Bhāskaraksetra, on the death of one's father, mother and guru, at the time of consecrating Vedic fires and at a soma sacrifice—tonsure is prescribed in these seven cases. Some read 'satsu' and therefore they take the first two words as meaning 'on the Ganges only at Prayāga.' Both Tīr C. and Tīr. Pr. quote a verse [1301] which says that tonsure and fast are acts that must be done at all tīrthas except at Kuruksetra, Viśālā (Ujjayinī or Badarikā), Virajā (river in Orissa) and Gayā.' In the case of a snātaka, all the hair except the top-knot is cut and 1298. Vide Sat. Br II 6. 3 14 ff. (S. B E. vol. 12 pp 448).

---

1299. Pāraskara gr. II 6. 17, Khādira gr. III. 1. 2. 23, Sāṅ. gr. III. 1. 1-2 (S. B E. vol. 29. p 314, p. 408, p. 91 respectively). The Khādira gr. is 'prāśya vāpayet śikhāvarjam kesasmaśrulomanakhāni '

1300. मनुष्याणां हि पापानि तीर्थानि प्रतिगच्छताम्। केशमाश्रित्य तिष्ठन्ति तस्मात्तद्वपनं चरेत्॥ पद्म, पातालखण्ड 19. 21; उपवासदिने क्षुण्डनमपि। प्रयागे तीर्थयात्राया पितृमातृवियोगत. । कचाना वपनं कुर्याद्बुधा न विकचो भवेत्॥ इति स्मृतिसमुच्चयधृत-विष्णुलिखितवचनात्। तीर्थचि p. 7, तीर्थप्र p. 28. This verse is नारदीय (उत्तर) 62 28. The मिता. on या III. 17 quotes the following verse गङ्गाया भास्कर-क्षेत्रे मातापित्रोर्गुरोर्मृतौ॥ आधानकाले सोमे च वपन सप्तसु स्मृतम्॥. भास्करक्षेत्र is प्रयाग acc. to some and कोणार्क acc to others It is not correct to translate 'ādhāne' as 'in the Garbhādhāna ceremony' (as Dr. Chaudhuri does on p 55 of his English Intro. to गङ्गावाक्या०) आधान by itself in धर्मशास्त्र works generally means अग्न्याधान गर्भाधान is referred to by the word निषेक or गर्भाधान itself भास्करक्षेत्र is really कोणार्क and not प्रयाग, which latter is called प्रजापतिक्षेत्र in मत्स्य 104 5 and 111. 14.

1301. क्षुण्डन चोपवासश्च सर्वतीर्थेष्वयं विधिः । वर्जयित्वा कुरुक्षेत्रं विशालां विरजां गयाम्॥ वायु. 105. 25 q by तीर्थचि p 14 (ascribes to स्कन्दपुराण), तीर्थप्र p 50 (ascribes to देवल and स्कन्द). The तीर्थप्र. (p 50) refers to the view of तीर्थकल्प० 'यद्यपि कल्पतरुकारेण तीर्थे क्षुण्डन नोक्त न वा तत्र प्रमाणं दर्शित तथापि क्षुण्डनं चोपवासश्चेत्यादिवाक्यस्य सकलशिष्टपरिगृहीतत्वात्तत्कर्तव्यमेव'. The तीर्थचि. p. 32 also does the same. In the गंगावाक्या० second half is read as वर्जयित्वा गया गङ्गा विशालां विरजां तथा॥ and is said to be from स्कन्दपुराण. The बालम्भट्टी on या III. 17 explains विरजं as दक्षिणदेशस्थं लोणारक्षेत्रमपि विरजमित्यादित्यपुराणे ' The first half is अग्नि 115 7 and the whole verse is ascribed to अग्निपुराण by the पृथ्वीचन्द्रोदय folio 141a and occurs also in नारदीय (उत्तर) 62. 45.

in the case of women whose husbands are living only two finger-breadths of hair are cut. Vṛddha-Hārīta (IX. 386–387) lays down that in the case of women whose husbands are living tonsure of the head should not be carried out, but that holding up all their hair only three finger-breadths should be cut off. Other smṛtis like Āpastamba in verse (I. 33–34), Angiras verse 163, Yama 54–55, Parāśara q. by the Mitāksarā on Yāj. III. 263–264 lay down that tonsure is limited to the cutting of two finger-breadths of hair in the case of woman (nārī). Par. M.[1302] II. 1. p. 291 reads 'evam nārīkumārīnām' and holds that nārī means here 'a woman whose husband is alive'. Although the smṛti passages occur in the section on prāyaścitta still by analogy they are to be applied to the tonsure in holy places. As regards widows, ascetics[1303] and śūdras all hair are to be cut. The Tīrthaprakāśa finds fault with Vācaspatimiśra for saying that there is no tonsure on the Ganges. When there is such a conflict of views, the final decision rests with the usage of each country or the individual's choice. The Tīr. K. (p 10) appears to hold that honouring the pitṛs at the time of starting on a pilgrimage is specially obligatory on a man with means. The texts make a difference between ksaura and mundana. The latter means 'shaving the hair on the head as well as the moustache and beard,' while ksaura means only shaving the head. Therefore the Nāradīya says that all sages did not prohibit ksaura even at Gayā but only mundana is forbidden there[1303a] and there is no mundana on the Ganges anywhere except at Prayāga The Tīrthendusekhara (p 7) gives it as its opinion that tonsure and fast are not obligatory but are only kāmya (i. e. to be done if certain rewards are desired) and points out that śistas do not resort to these two at many tīrthas.

1302. स्त्रीणां पराशरेण विशेषोऽभिहितः। वपनं नैव नारीणां... सर्वान्केशान्समुद्धृत्य छेदयेदङ्गुलिद्वयम्। सर्वत्रैवं हि नारीणां शिरसो मुण्डनं स्मृतम्॥ मिता on या III. 263–264; सर्वान् केशान्... मुण्डनं भवेत्॥ इत्यस्य प्रायश्चित्तप्रकरणे श्रुतस्याकाङ्क्षातौल्येनात्राप्यन्वयात्। प्रयागादावपि तासा द्व्यङ्गुलकेशाग्रकर्तनमात्रं वपनम्। तीर्थप्र pp 50–51.

1303. यति शूद्रश्च विधवा सशिखं वपनं चरेत्। इति दाक्षिणात्याः। वाचस्पतिमिश्रास्तु-वर्जयित्वा गया गङ्गां विशाला विरजा तथा-इति पठित्वा गङ्गाया न मुण्डनमिति मलपन्ति। तत्र साधीयः। अस्य पाठस्य शिष्टैरपरिग्रहात्। तीर्थप्र p. 51.

1303 a गयादावपि देवेशि श्मश्रूणां वपनं विना। न क्षौरं मुनिभि. सर्वैर्निषिद्धं चेति कीर्तितम्॥ सश्मश्रुकेशवपनं मुण्डनं तद्विदुर्बुधा.। न क्षौरं मुण्डनं शुभ्र कीर्तितं वेदवेदिभि.॥ नारदीय (उत्तर) 62. 54–55, प्रयागव्यतिरेके तु गङ्गायां मुण्डनं नहि। ibid chap. 62.52.

The Purānas and digests devote some attention to the mode of travel. The Matsya (106. 4–6) states that [1304] if a pilgrim goes to Prayāga in a conveyance drawn by bulls he falls into hell and his pitṛs do not accept the water offered by him at the holy place and if a pilgrim because of riches or avarice or foolishness goes in a conveyance (not drawn by bulls) all his effort (as a pilgrim) becomes fruitless and therefore a pilgrim should avoid journey in a conveyance. According to the Kalpataru (on Tīrtha p. 11) using a conveyance is forbidden only in the case of pilgrimage to Prayāga (and not in the case of other tīrthas), while the Tīr. C. (p. 8) and Tīr. Pr. (p. 45) quote a verse [1305] which provides that if a pilgrim uses a cart drawn by bulls he is guilty of govadha (killing a cow), if he travels on horse-back (or in a horse-drawn carriage) his pilgrimage yields no fruit, if he is carried by men (in a palanquin or the like) he secures only half the merit but if he travels bare-footed then he wins the full merit. The Padma-purāna (IV. 19. 27) has a similar verse. The Tīr. Pr. p. 34 quotes a verse from the Kūrmapurāna that those who are unable to perform a pilgrimage otherwise do not incur blame (or loss) by making use of a conveyance drawn by men or a chariot which is drawn by mules or horses. Similarly, a verse of the Viṣnupurāna [1306] quoted by both Tīr C and Tīr. Pr. (pp. 34–35) provides that one should always go on a journey wearing shoes and holding an umbrella in the rains or in summer and armed with a staff at night or in a forest. The Visnudharmottara takes a more practical view when it says that to make a pil-

---

1304. प्रयागतीर्थयात्रार्थी यः प्रयाति नरः क्वचित्। बलीवर्दसमारूढः शृणु तस्यापि यत्फलम्॥ नरके वसते घोरे गवां क्रोधो हि दारुणः। सलिलं न च गृह्णन्ति पितरस्तस्य देहिनः॥ ऐश्वर्यलाभमोहाद्वा गच्छेद्यानेन यो नरः। निष्फलं तस्य तत्सर्वं तस्माद्यानं विवर्जयेत्॥ मत्स्य. 106. 4–5 and 7. These verses are quoted by तीर्थचि p 8 (its reading ऐश्वर्यलाभमाहात्म्यात् is better) and तीर्थप्र pp. 33–34 The verse ऐश्वर्यलाभमाहात्म्यात् is q. by गाय तत्त्व p 492. The कूर्म (I. 37 4–5) has the verse ऐश्वर्यलोभमोहाद्वा। ... वर्जयेत् The गङ्गाभक्ति° p 13 reads ऐश्वर्यमदमोहेन and remarks 'मत्स्यपुराणीयवचनस्य प्रयागयात्राप्रकरणस्थत्वात् ऐश्वर्यमदशून्यस्यैव प्रयागगमनेपि दोषाभावः।'

1305. गोयाने गोवधः प्रोक्तो हययाने तु निष्फलम्। नरयाने तदर्धं स्यात् पद्भ्यां तत्र चतुर्गुणम्॥ q. by गङ्गाभक्ति° p. 13, तीर्थचि. and तीर्थप्र, 'उपानद्भ्यां चतुर्थांश गोयाने गोवधादिकम्' पद्म° IV. 19.27.

1306. वर्षातपादिके छत्री दण्डी राज्यटवीषु च। शरीरत्राणकामो वै सोपानत्कः सदा व्रजेत्॥ इति विष्णुपुराणीयवचनेन निष्प्रतिपक्षसदाशब्दस्वरसात् तीर्थयात्रायामपि उपानत्परिधानमावश्यकमिति। तीर्थचि. pp. 8–9. This verse is विष्णु III 12. 38, नारदीय (उत्तर) 62. 35 is almost the same, तीर्थाद्यसरणं पद्भ्यां तपः परमिहोच्यते॥ तदेव कृत्वा यानेन स्नानमात्रफलं लभेत्॥ विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III. 273. 11–12.

grimage on foot is the highest tapas (austerity) and that if a pilgrimage be made in a conveyance the pilgrim will reap only the reward of the bath. The Tīr. Pr. (p. 35) allows the use of a vessel to reach holy places like Gangāsāgara which cannot be reached otherwise.

The Tristhalī-setu (pp. 1–3) has a long discussion about the saṅkalpa[1307] (declaration) to be made at the time of starting on a pilgrimage. The conclusions reached are that the declaration should not include the names of all the holy places intended to be visited, but should expressly state the last one up to which one desires to go, that persons from southern or western India should make a saṅkalpa about Gayā (and pilgrimage to Prayāga and Kāśī will be implied) and that a person from East India should make a saṅkalpa about Prayāga (and pilgrimage to Gayā and Kāśī will be included as a matter of course) and that (as an alternative method) a man from south or west India should at first make a sankalpa about pilgrimage to Prayāga, then while in Prayāga he should make a sankalpa about visiting Kāśī and then in Kāśī he should make a saṅkalpa about visiting Gayā. A pilgrim from Eastern India should first make a sankalpa about Gayā, then, while in Gayā, he should make one about Kāśī and so on. The Tīrthaprakāśa (p. 326) appears to criticize the first method proposed by the Tristhalisetu and states its own view to be that those who intend to visit many sacred places should make a sankalpa in the form 'I shall perform pilgrimage' (Tīrtha-yātrāmaham karisye). The Tīrthaprakāśa, however, approves of the second method proposed as an alternative.

That the merit of a pilgrimage could be collected in a vicarious manner is laid down by the Smṛtis and Purānas. Atri (50–51) provides[1308] 'He for whom an effigy made with kuśa grass intending it as a representative is dipped in the waters of a holy place secures one-eighth part of the merit (that he would have secured by himself bathing in the waters). If a man takes a bath (in a holy place) having in view (the benefit

---

1307. The saṅkalpa may take the form ओं अद्य प्रतिपदमश्वमेधयज्ञजन्यफलसनफलप्राप्तिकामोऽमुकतीर्थयात्रामहं करिष्ये।

1308. प्रतिकृतिं कुशमयीं तीर्थवारिषु मज्जयेत्। यमुद्दिश्य निमज्जेत अष्टभागं लभेत स ॥ मातरं पितरं वापि भ्रातरं सुहृदं गुरुम्। यमुद्दिश्य निमज्जेत द्वादशांशफलं लभेत् । अत्रि 50–51. The first verse is quoted as पैठीनसि's by तीर्थकल्प p. 11 and by तीर्थचि pp 13–14 and occurs in स्कन्द (काशी 6. 64), the 2nd is q. by प्राय तत्त्व. 492, as from अत्रि The गङ्गावाक्यावली (p 59) reads लभेच्च सं. and attributes it to गरुडपुराण of his mother, father, brother, friend or guru, these latter receive one-twelfth of the fruit (of the pilgrimage). Another verse of Paithīnasi says that he who visits a holy place for money (wages) from another gets only a 16th part of the merit, but he who goes to a tīrtha while bent on another purpose or errand (such as study, business, waiting on a guru) [1309] reaps only half the merit. The Viṣnudharmottara has a similar verse. It was owing to this idea of collecting merit and God's Grace that wealthy men built Dharmaśālās, tanks, and annasattras and wells for the conveniences of pilgrims and the planting of trees by the sides of roads had in view the comfort of pilgrims as well as of the general public The Prabhāsa khanda remarks 'A wealthy man who enables another to perform pilgrimage by providing his own money or conveyances gets one-fourth of the merit of the pilgrimage.' [1310]

The Prāyaścittatattva of Raghunandana quotes from the Brahmāndapurāna some verses which enumerate fourteen acts that a pilgrim has to give up after reaching the Ganges viz. śauca (punctilious performance of bodily purification), ācamana (sipping water on various occasions in the day), hair (dressing), wearing nirmālya (flowers taken away after being offered in worship), repeating the Aghamarsana hymn (Rg. 190. 1-3), shampooing the body, sports, acceptance of gifts, sexual dalliance, devotion to another tīrtha, praising another tīrtha, the gift to others of clothes (worn by oneself), striking any one and swimming across the water of the tīrtha.

One noticeable rule is that, though Manu III. 149 requires strict examination of the ancestry and learning of brāhmaṇas to be invited at a śrāddha, some of the Purāṇas provide [1311] that

---

1309. पैठीनसिः। षोडशांशं स लभते य. परार्थेन गच्छति। अर्धं तीर्थफलं तस्य यः प्रसङ्गेन गच्छति। तीर्थकल्प. p. 11, भाग. तत्त्व. p. 492 (explains परार्थेन वेतनादिना प्रसङ्गेन उद्देश्यान्तरप्रसङ्गेन), तीर्थप्र p. 36 (प्रसङ्गेत्र गुरुसेवाध्ययनवाणिज्यादिरेव विहिताविहितरूप) This is found in स्कन्द (काशी० chap. 6.63). The first half is पद्म VI. 237 43

1310. यश्चान्यं कारयेत् शक्त्या तीर्थयात्रां तथेश्वरः। स्वकीयद्रव्ययानाभ्यां तस्य पुण्यं चतुर्गुणम्॥ प्रभासखण्ड q. by तीर्थप्र. p. 36; तीर्थे प्राप्यानुपङ्गेण स्नानं तीर्थे समाचरेत्। स्नानजं फलमाप्नोति तीर्थयात्राफलं न तु॥ शङ्ख 8 12 q. by स्मृतिच I. p. 132 and कल्पतरु (तीर्थ) p. 11. Almost the same verse occurs in पद्मपु. VI. 237. 41-42, vide विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III 273.10 for a similar verse.

1311. तीर्थेषु ब्राह्मणं नैव परीक्षेत कथंचन। अन्नार्थिनमनुप्राप्तं भोज्यं तं मन्त्रवद्विदुः॥ पद्म V 29.212 and देवीपुराण q by तीर्थकल्प० p 10; ब्राह्मणाश्च परीक्षेत श्राद्धे क्षेत्रनिवासिनः। सुमहान्परिवादोऽस्य ब्राह्मणाना परीक्षणे॥ स्कन्द० (प्रभासखण्ड) quoted by पृथ्वीचन्द्रोदय folio 130 b; न परीक्ष्यो द्विजस्तीर्थेऽन्नार्थी भोज्य एव च। सक्तुभिः पिण्डदानं च चरुणा पायसेन वा। स्कन्द० (काशी० 6, 56-57).

one should not enter upon an examination of the worth of brāhmanas at holy places and this view is endorsed by several digests such as the Kalpataru on tīrtha (p. 10), the Tīr. C. (p. 10) and the Tīr. Pr. (p 73). The last work remarks that brāhmanas who are known for certain to possess defects deserving condemnation should be avoided. The Varāhapurāna goes[1312] so far as to say that at Mathurā a pilgrim should prefer to honour a brāhmana born and bred up in Mathurā rather than a brāhmana who has studied the four Vedas (but is a stranger to Mathurā). Similar passages from the Vāyu and Skandapurāna have been quoted above in note 910 and there is another similar passage in Skanda. It is provided by the Vāyupurāna[1313] that when a son goes to Gayā, he should invite only those brāhmanas that have been settled in Gayā by Brahmā and that such brāhmanas are above ordinary mortals, that when they are gratified the gods together with one's pitrs become pleased, that one should not enter upon a consideration of their family, their character, their learning or their austerities and that when the Gayā brāhmanas are honoured the man doing so secures release (from samsāra). In Vāyu 106 73-84 and Agni 114. 33-39 and Garuda it is narrated that, after Gayāsura fell down and asked for boons which were granted by Visnu, Brahmā bestowed upon the Gayā brāhmanas 55 villages and Gayātīrtha extending over five krośas, gave them well-appointed houses, desire-yielding cows and trees, but he enjoined on them not to beg or accept a gift from others. The brāhmanas, however, greedy as they were, officiated at a sacrifice performed by Dharma (Yama) and begged him for fees and accepted them. Then Brahmā cursed them that they would always be in debt and took away the Kāmadhenu and Kalpavrksa and other gifts. The Agnipurāna [1314] (114. 37) adds that Brahmā cursed them to be bereft of all learning and to be full of greed. The brāhmanas then begged Brahmā to favour them with some means of livelihood (as they had been deprived by the curse of Brahmā of all that had been bestowed on them). Brahmā pitied them and told them that they would maintain themselves at Gayā-tīrtha 1312. चतुर्वेदं परित्यज्य माथुरं पूजयेत्सदा। मथुराया ये वसन्ति विष्णुरूपा हि ते नरा.। ज्ञानिनस्तान् हि पश्यन्ति अज्ञा. पश्यन्ति तान् हि। वराह 165. 57-58.

---

1313. यदि पुत्रो गयां गच्छेत्कदाचित्कालपर्ययात्। तानेव भोजयेद्विप्रान् ब्रह्मणा ये प्रकल्पिता.। अमानुषतया विभ्रा ब्राह्मणा (ब्रह्मणा?) ये प्रकल्पिता । वायु 82 25-27.

1314 स्थिता यदि गयायां ते शास्तस्ते ब्रह्मणा तदा। विद्याविवर्जिता यूय तृष्णायुक्ता भविष्यथ॥ अग्नि 114. 36-37.

till the end of the world and that those who would perform śrāddha at Gayā and worship them (by engaging them as officiating priests and pay them) would secure the merit of having worshipped Brahmā. From this it is clear that the Gayā brāhmaṇas at the time of the composition of the section on Gayā at the end of the Vāyupurāṇa possessed the same characteristics as the modern Gayā brāhmaṇas (Gayāls or Gayāwals as they are called) and made the Gayā pilgrimage their business even then (as now). One of the early historic references to Gayāl brāhmaṇas occurs in the Śaktipur copper-plate of king Lakṣmaṇasena of Bengal in his 6th year (i. e. about 1183 A. D.)[1315].

The result of this teaching of the Purāṇas was that the brāhmaṇas at Gayā became a guild or a close corporation and the Gayāwals resent the intrusion of an outsider. Disputes between Gayāwals and outside priests and cases of Gayāwals have come before the courts and have gone up even to the Privy Council in England. It has been a usage for orthodox Hindu pilgrims going to Gayā to shave themselves at the river called Punpun,[1315a] then on arrival at Gayā to worship the feet of one of the Gayāwal brāhmaṇas. The Gayāwal himself or his agent takes the pilgrim to the sacred spots (Vedīs) in and around Gayā. The priest is paid a fat fee near the Akṣaya-vaṭa and the Gayāwal puts a garland of flowers on the folded hands of the pilgrim and pronounces the word 'suphala' and utters a blessing that the pilgrim's ancestors would go to heaven on account of the pilgrim's visit to Gayā. In order to keep this business in their own families the Gayāwals have adopted loose and peculiar customs. If a Gayāwal is sonless he makes a gift of his office (called gūdī or gaddī) to another Gayāwal, who describes himself as the adopted son of the Gayāwal making the gift. There is no real adoption in the strict sense. Therefore, the so called adopted son retains his rights in the family of birth, he is not severed from his natural family and it is not rare to find that one Gayāwal claims to have succeeded to four gūdīs (i. e. claims to be the son adopted by several persons simultaneously). The Gayāwals have got books in which they enter the names and addresses of 1315. Vide E. I. vol. XXI. p. 211 at p. 219 'श्रीबल्लालसेनदेवप्रदत्त गयाल-ब्राह्मणहरिदासेन प्रतिगृहीतपञ्चशतोत्पत्तिकक्षेत्रपाटकाभिधानशासनविनिमयेन'.

1315 a. The गरुडपुराण says: वाराणस्यां कृतश्राद्धस्तीर्थे शोणनदे तथा। पुनः पुना महानद्यां श्राद्धं स्वर्गं पितॄन्नयेत्॥ q. in पृथ्वीच. folio 141 a.

their clients, who sign such entries and enjoin upon their descendants to make members of that particular Gayāwal family their gurus whenever they might visit Gayā. Thus large incomes and properties come to the hands of the Gayāwals. They send their agents throughout India, who bring as many pilgrims as possible. In Lachman Lal v. Kanhaya Lal the Privy [1316] Council had to deal with the case of a Gayāwal who claimed to be an adopted son without loss of his interest in the property of the natural family on the ground of these peculiar practices of the Gayāwals and that claim was upheld. In Lachman Lal v. Baldeo Lal [1317] the Patna High Court gives a brief summary of the origin, history and customs of the Gayāwals, remarks that though in former times there were several hundred families of Gayāwals their number is now reduced to about 150, that the Gayāwals so-called gaddi is not a hereditary office, but only a business to which a goodwill is attached. The Calcutta High Court decided in Dwarkanath Misser [1318] v. Rampertab Misser that persons who require religious ceremonies to be performed for their benefit are at liberty to choose the priest by whom they shall be performed, that plaintiffs are not entitled to a declaration that they along with defendants are exclusively entitled to officiate as priests when pilgrims, on their way to the holy city of Gayā, perform the śrāddha ceremony of their ancestors on the bank of the sacred river Punpun, and that the plaintiffs could be given a declaration that they are entitled to officiate as priests for such pilgrims as may choose to employ them for the purpose of religious ceremonies and that the defendants are not entitled to prevent the plaintiffs from the exercise of their calling. In Narayan Lal [1319] v. Chulhan Lal the Calcutta High Court decided how the books containing the names and addresses of pilgrims kept by a joint family of Gayāwals were to be divided at the time of the partition of all the properties of the family.

The literature on tīrthas is probably far more extensive than on any other single topic of Dharmaśāstra Not to mention the Vedic Literature, the Mahābhārata and the Purānas 1316. 22 Cal 609 at pp. 615-618 (P. C) = 22 I. A. 51.

1317. 2 Patna Law Journal 705.

1318. 13 C. L J. p. 449.

1319. 15 C. L J. p. 376.

contain on a very modest calculation at least 40000 verses on tīrthas, sub-tīrthas and legends connected with them. In the Vanaparva (chap. 82–156) and Śalyaparva (chap. 35–54) alone there are about 3900 verses on tīrthayātrā. To mention only a few of the Purānas, the Brahmapurāna devotes about 6700 verses (i. e. nearly half of its total extent of 13783 verses) to tīrthas, the Padma about 4000 verses out of the 31000 verses of the first five khandas, the Varāhapurāna devotes about 3182 verses to tīrthas (out of which about 1400 refer to Mathurā) out of about 9614 verses, the Matsya about 1200 verses out of 14002. Besides these, the following well-known digests and works on tīrthas deserve mention. The Tīrthaviveeana-kānda of the Kalpataru of Laksmīdhara (G. O. S. series); the Caturvarga-[1320] cintāmani of Hemādri (1260–1270 A D) contained a section on tīrthas (no Ms. has yet been discovered), the Tīrthacintāmani of Vācaspati (1450–1480 A. D.) published in B. I. series, the Tīrthasāra, part of Nrsimhaprasāda about 1500 A. D. (published in the Sarasvatī-bhavana series); the Tristhalīsetu of Nārāyanabhatta (about 1550–1580 A. D.) printed by the Ānandāśrama Press, Poona; Tīrthasaukhya, a part of Todarānanda (1565-1589 A. D.), Tīrthatattva or Tīrthayātrāvidhitattva of Raghunandana whose literary activity lies between 1520–1570 A D. (printed in Bengali characters and over and above the 28 tattvas of his Smrtitattva), Tīrthaprakāśa by Mitramiśra about 1610–1640 (published in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series), the Tristhalīsetusāra-sangraha of Bhattoji (about 1625); Tristhalīsetusārasangraha of Nāgeśa, the Tīrthendusekhara of Nāgeśa or Nāgoji (published in the Sarasvatībhavana series, Benares, 1936). There are several works on tīrthas (not yet printed) mentioned in H. of Dh. vol 1. p. 554, of which the Tīrtharatnākara of Anantabhatta composed at the order of Anūpasimha is probably the largest work on tīrthas (ms no. 1822 in the Anup Library at Bikaner). Besides these there are special works on indivi-

---

1320. Vide H of Dh. vol 1 p 354 n. 838 which shows that Hemādri had completed his section on tīrtha when he commenced the Pariśesa-khanda. It may be noted that the त्रिस्थलीसेतु and the तीर्थप्रकाश had the work of Hemādri on tīrtha before them. For examples, the त्रिस्थलीसेतु p 53 'तथा च हेमाद्रयादिधर्मादिपुराणवाक्यानि ब्राह्मणस्यापि मरणविधायकानि, p. 55 'विशेषस्तु हेमाद्रीयशरीरोत्सर्गविधेरवगन्तव्यः.'; the तीर्थप्रकाश pp. 122, 123, 136, 377 refer to हेमाद्रि's quotations from the स्कन्दपुराण, भविष्यपुराण, जाबालोपनिषद् and कूर्मपुराण respectively, which unmistakably refer to tīrthas and p 478 speaks of तीर्थहेमाद्रि.

dual tīrthas such as the Gangā-vākyāvali[1321] (on the Ganges) of Vidyāpati (1400–1450 A. D.) published by Dr. J. B. Chaudhuri; Kāśīmrtimoksa-vicāra of Sureśvarācārya (published in the Sarasvatībhavana Texts series, Benares 1936); the Gayāśrāddha-paddhati of Raghunandana, the Purusottama-ksetratattva of Raghunandana (published by Jivananda). Only printed works have been drawn upon in this work (except where expressly stated otherwise).

The preliminaries before starting on a pilgrimage to any tīrtha prescribed by the purānas and digests may be brought together. On a certain day (when a person has decided on tīrtha-yātrā) he should take only one meal, then the next day he should shave himself (according to most digests) and observe a fast; then on the day after the fast he should perform his daily duties, should make a sankalpa (declaration of intention) in the form 'I shall perform a pilgrimage to such and such a place and I shall worship Ganeśa and my favourite deities for the accomplishment of the pilgrimage without obstacles'; offer worship to Ganeśa, to the planets (nine) and his favourite deities with five or sixteen upacāras,[1322] then perform a pārvana-śrāddha with plenty of ghee according to his own grhyasūtra, honour three brāhmanas at least and donate some money to them. Then he should put on a pilgrim's dress as described above (p. 573), go round the village in which his house is located (or at least round his own house), reach another village not more distant than one krosa (two or two and half miles) and break his fast by eating the remainder of the food cooked and ghee used for the śrāddha (this applies to pilgrimage to Gayā). He may break his fast 1321. The last verse of the Gangāvākyāvalī is कियज्जिवन्धमालोक्य श्रीविद्यापतिसूरिणा। गङ्गावाक्यावली देव्याः प्रमाणैर्विमलीकृता॥. This verse shows that the famous Maithila scholar Vidyāpati at least provides the authorities on which the work is based Some scholars hold that it is really Vidyāpati who wrote the work for commemorating the queen who had honoured and patronized him. The 2nd Introductory verse claims the work as Viśvāsa-devi's own In the दानवाक्यावली of धीरमति the last verse is निवन्धान् सम्यगालोक्य...सूरिणा। दानवाक्यावली देव्या....कृता॥ (D. C ms. No 216 of 1881-82.

1322 For the sixteen and five upacāras, vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 729-730. The ब्रह्मवैवर्तपुराण (Ānandāśrama ed.), ब्रह्मखण्ड, chap. 26 90-92 mention 16, 12 or five upacāras as follows: आसनं वसनं पाद्यमर्घ्यमाचमनीयकम्। पुष्पं चन्दनधूपं च दीपं नैवेद्यमुत्तमम्॥ गन्धं माल्यं च शय्यां च लालितां सुविलक्षणाम्। जलमङ्गं च ताम्बूलं साधारं देयमेव च। गन्धाक्षतल्पताम्बूलं विना द्रव्याणि द्वादश। पाद्यार्घ्यजलनैवेद्यपुष्पाण्येतानि पञ्च च॥.

in his own house (in the case of other tīrthas) and then start. Then the next day he should bathe with pure clothes on and then put on his pilgrim dress and start on his pilgrimage in the forenoon with his face to the east, preferably bare-footed. There are two views here. Some say that on the day on which a man reaches a tīrtha he should observe a fast, while the other view is that the pilgrim should fast on the day previous to his reaching the tīrtha. In the first case he will have to perform a śrāddha on the day of the fast and in that case he cannot actually taste the remnants of śrāddha food but should only smell the cooked food The Kalpataru (on tīrtha p 11) and the Tīrtha-cintāmani (p 14) quote Dəvala for the proposition that a fast on reaching a tīrtha is not obligatory, but if observed yields special merit.

CHAPTER XII

THE GANGES

Since the Ganges is the holiest of rivers and since such highly esteemed tīrthas as Kanakhala, Haridvāra, Prayāga and Kāśī are situated on it, it would be most proper to begin the treatment of individual tīrthas with the Ganges.

It has been already seen (p. 556) how the Ganges is the first among the many rivers invoked in the famous Nadīstuti hymn (Rg X. 75 5–6). In Rg[1323] VI 45 31 we have the word 'Gāngyah' which most probably means 'growing on the Ganges'. In the Śatapatha Brāhmana XIII. 5 4 11 and 13 and Ait Br. 39. 9 the victories and sacrifices of Bharata Dausanti on the Gangā and Yamunā are mentioned. In Śat. Br XIII. 5 4 11 and 13 an ancient gāthā is quoted 'At Nādapit the Apsaras Śakuntalā conceived Bharata who after conquering the whole earth brought to Indra more than 1000 horses meet for sacrifice.' The Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana 26. 26–103) and the Purānas (such as Nāradīya, Uttarārdha, chap 38–45 and 51. 1–48, Padma V. 60. 1–127, Agni chap 110, Matsya chap. 180–185, Padma, Ādikhanda. chap 33–37) contain hundreds of verses eulogising the greatness and the sanctifying activity of the Ganges. The Skandapurāna, Kāsīkhanda, chap 29 (verses 17–168) contains one thousand names of the Ganges. It is not possible to reproduce here even a small fraction of what is said in these works about the Ganges To most men in India great rivers like the Ganges, great mountains like the Himālaya present a double aspect, viz the physical aspect and the spiritual aspect A great river apart from its volume of water is deemed to have a spiritual or divine life which animates it. Tylor (in 'Primitive Culture', 2nd ed. p 477) observes 'What we call inanimate objects-rivers, stones, trees, weapons and so forth—are treated as living intelligent beings, talked to, propitiated, punished for the harm they do.' There are separate treatises devoted to the glorification of the Ganges and the pilgrimage to it such as the 1323 अधि वृष्नु. पणीना वर्पिष्ठे मूर्धन्नस्थात्। उरु. कक्षो न गाङ्ग्य.॥ ऋ. VI. 45 31 The last pāda means 'like a broad patch of grass or bush growing on the banks of the Ganges'.

---

Gaṅgāpattalaka of Ganeśvara (1350 A D.), Gaṅgāvākyāvalī of Viśvāsadevī, queen of king Padmasiṃha of Mithilā, the Gaṅgābhakti-taraṅginī of Gaṇapati, the Gaṅgākṛtyaviveka of Vardhamāna. Vide H. of Dh. vol. I. p. 538 for the dates of some of these works.

The Vanaparva, chap 85, has a grand eulogy of Gaṅgā in verses 88–97, some of which may be translated here[1324]. "The Ganges is equal to Kurukṣetra wherever one may take a bath in it, but there is a speciality about Kanakhala and in Prayāga there is the greatest and highest (holiness). If a person, after committing a hundred bad deeds, sprinkles himself with Ganges (water), the waters of the Ganges burn all of them as fire burns fuel. In the Kṛta age all (places) were holy, in Tretā age Puṣkara was (the holiest place), in Dvāpara Kurukṣetra and in the Kali age the Ganges. The Ganges, when its name is uttered, purifies a sinner, when seen it yields good fortune, when a bath is taken in it or its water is drunk, it sanctifies the family up to the seventh ancestor. As long as (a particle of) the bones of a man touches Ganges water (i. e lies inside it), so long does the man remain happy (or honoured) in heaven. There is no holy place equal to the Ganges, there is no god higher than Keśava That country and that penance-grove where the Ganges flows should be known as the sacred spot of success (or perfection) since it attaches itself to the Ganges." The Anuśāsana (26.26, 30–31) asserts 'those districts and countries, those hermitages and mountains, in the midst of which the Ganges flows are pre-eminent in punya (religious merit) Even those men who, after committing sinful acts in the first part of their lives, resort afterwards to the Ganges reach the highest world (or goal). That increase (in merit) which comes to men that bathe in the holy waters of the Ganges and that then become pure in spirit, cannot be secured 1324. कुरुक्षेत्रसमा गङ्गा यत्र तत्रावगाहिता। विशेषो वै कनखले प्रयागे परमं महत्॥ यश्चकार्पशतं कृत्वा कृतं गङ्गाम्बसेचनम्। सर्वं तत्तस्य गङ्गाप्भो दहत्यग्निरिवेन्धनम्॥ 88, सर्वं कृतयुगे पुण्यं त्रेतायां पुष्करं स्मृतम्। द्वापरेपि कुरुक्षेत्रं गङ्गा कलियुगे स्मृता॥ ..पुनाति कीर्तिता पापं दृष्टा भद्रं प्रयच्छति। अवगाढा च पीता च पुनात्यासप्तमं कुलम्॥ यावदस्थि मनुष्यस्य गङ्गाया: सृजते जलम्। तावत्स पुरुषो राजन् स्वर्गलोके महीयते॥ 94.. न गङ्गासदृशं तीर्थं न देवः केशवात्परः।... यत्र गङ्गा महाराज स देशस्तत्तपोवनम्। सिद्धिक्षेत्रं च तज्ज्ञेयं गङ्गातीरसमाश्रितम्॥ वनपर्व 85 88–97=पद्म I 39.81–90. नारदीय. (उत्तर) 39. 46 is कुरुक्षेत्र .. गाहिता। हरिद्वारे प्रयागे च सिन्धुसङ्गे फलाधिका॥. The नारदीयपु (उत्तर) 38. 20 is कृते तु सर्वतीर्थानि त्रेतायां .कलौ गङ्गा विशिष्यते॥. The कूर्म I 27 37 has कृते तु नैमिषं तीर्थं, The same verse is quoted from भविष्य by तीर्थचि. p. 191.

---

even by the performance of hundreds of solemn Vedic sacrifices.'[1325]

In the Bhagavadgītā (X. 31) Lord Krsna says that among streams he is the Ganges (srotasāmasmi Jāhnavī). The Manusmrti setting out an exordium to a witness to tell the truth indicates that the Ganges and Kuruksetra were the most sacred spots in the age of the Manusmrti.[1326] Some of the Purānas describe the Ganges as flowing in Heaven (as Mandākinī), on the earth (as Gangā) and in the nether regions or Pātāla (as Bhogavatī). Vide Padma VI. 267. 47. The Visnupurāna[1327] and other Purānas state that the Ganges springs from the toe-nail of the left foot of Visnu. In some Purānas it is said that Śiva let off from his matted hair the Ganges in seven streams, three flowing towards the east (Nalinī, Hlādinī, Pāvanī), three to the west (Sītā, Caksus and Sindhu) and Bhāgirathī (vide Matsya 121. 38–41, Brahmānda II. 18 39–41, Padma I 3. 65–66). The Kūrmapurāna (I 46.30-31) and Varāha (chap. 82 in prose) state that the Ganges flows first in four different streams, Sītā, Alakanandā, Sucaksu and Bhadrā and that the Alakanandā flows towards the south, comes to Bhāratavarsa and falls into the sea with seven mouths[1328] In the Brahmapurāna (73. 68–69) the Ganges is described as sprung from the foot of Visnu and as established in the matted hair of Maheśvara (Śiva).

The Visnupurāna eulogises[1329] the Ganges as follows: The Ganges purifies all beings from day to day when its name is 1325 स्नाताना श्रुचिभिस्तोयैः गाङ्गेयैः प्रयतात्मनाम्। व्युष्टिर्भवति या पुंसां न सा क्रतुशतैरपि॥ अनुशासन 26 31, नारद (उत्तर) 39 30-31 and also 40. 64.

---

1326. यमो वैवस्वतो देवो यस्तवैष हृदि स्थितः। तेन चेदविवादस्ते मा गङ्गां मा कुरून्गम.॥ मनु 8. 92.

1327. वामपादाम्बुजाङ्गुष्ठनखस्रोतोविनिर्गताम्। विष्णोर्बिभर्ति या भक्त्या शिरसाहर्निशं ध्रुव॥ विष्णुपु II. 8 109, q. by कल्पतरु (तीर्थ) p 161 (reads शिव.), नदी सा वैष्णवी प्रोक्ता विष्णुपादसमुद्भवा। पद्म V. 25. 188.

1328. तथैवालकनन्दा च दक्षिणादेत्य भारतम्। प्रयाति सागरं भित्त्वा सप्तभेदा द्विजोत्तमा॥ कूर्म I 46.31.

1329. श्रुताभिलषिता दृष्टा स्पृष्टा पीतावगाहिता। या पावयति भूतानि कीर्तिता च दिने दिने॥ गङ्गा गङ्गेति यैर्नाम योजनाना शतेष्वपि। स्थितैरुच्चारितं हन्ति पापं जन्मत्रयार्जितम्॥ विष्णुपु II. 8 120-121 q by गङ्गावा p. 110, तीर्थचि p. 202, गङ्गाभक्ति० p 9. The 2nd verse is variously read in पद्म VI 21.8 and 23 12, ब्रह्म 175. 82 as गङ्गा ..यो ब्रूयाद्योजनानां शतैरपि। मुच्यते सर्वपापेभ्यो विष्णुलोकं स गच्छति; while पद्म I. 31.77 reads ०शतैरपि। नरो न नरकं याति किं तया सदृश भवेत्.

heard, when one desires to see (it), when it is seen or touched or when its waters are drunk or when one plunges into it or when one takes (or sings) its name; when people utter the name 'Ganges' even though living at a distance of hundreds of yojanas, their sins accumulated in three births are destroyed' The Bhavisyapurāna[1330] has a similar verse 'one becomes free from sins at once by seeing the Ganges or touching it or drinking its water and by uttering the name Gangā and also by remembering it.'[1331] The Matsya, Kūrma, Garuda and Padma remark that the Ganges is easy of access everywhere but is difficult to reach at three places viz at Gangādvāra (Haridvāra), at Prayāga and where it joins the sea and that those who bathe therein reach heaven and that those who die there are not born again The Nāradīyapurāna, on the other hand, says that the Ganges is difficult of access everywhere, but much more so at three places The man, whether desiring it or not, who draws near the Ganges and dies (near it) secures heaven and does not see hell (Matsya 107.4).[1332] The Kūrmapurāna represents that the Ganges[1333] is equal to all the 35 millions of holy places declared by Vāyu in the heaven, in mid region and on the earth and that all of them are represented by the Ganges The Padmapurāna asks 'what is the use of sacrifices rich in large wealth, what is the use of very difficult austerities when there is the Ganges honoured easily and gracefully that yields Heaven and moksa'? A similar verse occurs in the Nāradīya-purāna 'what is the use of Yoga with its eight angas, of austerities, of solemn (Vedic) sacrifices? Residence 1330. दर्शनात्स्पर्शनात्पानात् तथा गङ्गेति कीर्तनात्। स्मरणादेव गङ्गाया सद्य पापैः प्रमुच्यते॥ भविष्यपु q by तीर्थचि p. 198, गङ्गावा p. 12, गङ्गाभ० p. 9. The first half is अनुशासन 26.64, अग्निपु. 110 6, गच्छस्तिष्ठन् जपन्ध्यायन् शृण्वन् जाग्रत् स्वपन् वदन्। य स्मरेत् सततं गङ्गां सोऽपि मुच्येत बन्धनात्॥ स्कन्द (काशीखण्ड) पूर्वार्ध 27 37, नारद (उत्तर) 39. 16-17.

---

1331. सर्वत्र सुलभा गङ्गा त्रिषु स्थानेषु दुर्लभा। गङ्गाद्वारे प्रयागे च गङ्गासागरसङ्गमे॥ तत्र स्नात्वा दिवं यान्ति ये मृतास्तेऽपुनर्भवा॥ मत्स्य 106 54, कूर्म I 37 34, गरुड (पूर्व०) 81. 1-2, पद्म V 60 120. The नारदीय (उत्तर 40. 26-27) reads सर्वत्र दुर्लभा गङ्गा त्रिषु स्थानेषु चाधिका। गङ्गाद्वारे ·सङ्गमे॥ एषु स्नाता दिवं...भवाः॥.

1332. अकामो वा सकामो वा गङ्गाया योऽभिपद्यते। मृतस्तु लभते स्वर्गं नरकं च न पश्यति॥ मत्स्य 107 4, q. by कल्पतरु (तीर्थ) p 145 (reads यो विपद्यते). कूर्म I. 37.39 has the same verse with slight variations, compare पद्म I. 44.4.

1333 तिस्र कोट्योर्धकोटी च तीर्थाना वायुरब्रवीत्। दिवि भूम्यन्तरिक्षे च तानि सर्वाणि जाह्नवी स्मृता॥ कूर्म I. 39 8, पद्म I. 47.7, V. 60 59, मत्स्य. 102. 5 (reads तानि ते भवि जाह्नवि).

on the Ganges alone is superior to all these'[1334]. Two verses of the Matsya-purāna[1335] deserve mention here 'even a man of sinful deeds, on remembering the Ganges even at a distance of thousands of yojanas, attains the highest goal. A person is delivered from sin by uttering the name (of the Ganges), on seeing it a person sees happiness; by bathing in the Ganges and drinking its water he purifies his family up to the seventh ancestor'. It is stated in the Kāśikhanda that on the banks of the glorious Ganges all times are auspicious as well as all countries, and all men are fit for receiving gifts

In the Varāhapurāna (chap. 82) the name 'Gangā' is derived as 'gām gatā' (that has gone to the earth). The Padmapurāna (Srstikhanda 60. 64–65) specifies the mūlamantra about the Ganges as follows. 'Om namo Gaṅgāyai, viśvarūpinyai nārāyanyai namo namah'.

The Padmapurāna (srsti 60 35) holds that Viṣnu represents all the gods and the Ganges represents Visnu. It eulogises the Ganges as follows: Sons abandon their fathers, wives their husbands, friends and relatives abandon a friend or a relative if any one of these is adulterous, or patita, or wicked or becomes a cāndāla or kills his guru, or is full of all kinds of sins and hatreds, but the Ganges does not forsake such persons[1336].

The extent of the holy region of the Ganges is laid down in some purānas. The Nāradīya[1337] states. the region

---

1334. किं यज्ञैर्बहुवित्ताढ्यै किं तपोभि सुदुष्करै । स्वर्गमोक्षप्रदा गङ्गा सुखसौभाग्यपूजिता॥ पद्म V 60 39; किमष्टाङ्गेन योगेन किं तपोभिः किमध्वरै । वास एव हि गङ्गाया सर्वतोपि विशिष्यते॥ नारदीय (उत्तर) 38 38, q in तीर्थचि p 194 (reads गङ्गायां ब्रह्मज्ञानस्य कारणम्) and ग्राय तत्त्व p 498. The first verse किं यज्ञै is quoted as from ब्रह्माण्ड by तीर्थचि p 195 (last pāda is सुखसेव्या यतः स्थिता)

1335. योजनाना सहस्रेषु गङ्गाया. स्मरणाद्भर । अपि दुष्कृतकर्मा तु लभते परमां गतिम्॥ कीर्तनान्मुच्यते पापाद् दृष्ट्वा भद्राणि पश्यति। अवगाह्य च पीत्वा तु पुनात्यासप्तमं कुलम्॥ मत्स्य 104 14–15 q. by कल्पतरु (तीर्थ) p 160, vide also मत्स्य. 108 25–26 Compare वनपर्व 87 93 (पुनाति कीर्तिताः) quoted in n 1324, सर्व एव शुभ कालः सर्वो देशस्तथा शुभ । सर्वो जनो दानपात्रं श्रीमतीजाह्नवीतटे॥ काशीखण्ड 27. 69.

1336 जारजं पतितं दुष्टमन्त्यजं गुरुघातिनम् । सर्वद्रोहेण संयुक्तं सर्वपातकसंयुतम् ॥ त्यजन्ति पितरं पुत्रा प्रियं पत्न्य सुहृद्गणा । अन्ये च बान्धवा सर्वे गङ्गा तान्न परित्यजेत्॥ पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 60 25–26).

1337. तीरादूर्ध्वप्रतिमात्रं हु परित क्षेत्रमुच्यते। तीर त्यक्त्वा वसेत्क्षेत्रे तीरे वासो न चेष्यते ॥ एकयोजनविस्तीर्णा क्षेत्रसीमा तदह्वयात् । नारदीय (उत्तर) 43. 119–120 The first is quoted from स्कन्द by तीर्थचि p. 266, which remarks 'उभयतटे प्रत्येकं क्रोशद्वयं क्षेत्रम्' The half verse एक० is quoted from भविष्य by तीर्थचि. p. 267, within one gavyūti from the banks of the Ganges is called kṣetra; one should reside within the kṣetra limits, but not on the bank itself; residence on the bank (of the Ganges) is not desired. The limits of the kṣetra are of the extent of one yojana between both the banks' i. e. the kṣetra extends for two krośas from each bank. The general rule is stated by Yama that forests, mountains, holy rivers and tīrthas are without an owner, these cannot be possessed (by a person as owner). The Brahmapurāna[1338] says that measuring from the flowing waters for a distance of four hastas, God Nārāyana is the Lord (or owner) and no one should accept a gift in that strip even if he be on the point of death. A difference is made between the garbha (the inner circle) of the Gangāksetra, the tīra and the kṣetra. 'Garbha' extends up to that portion of the river stream which is reached on the 14th of the dark half of Bhādrapada; beyond that is the tīra (bank), which extends upto 150 hastas from garbha and kṣetra extends up to two krośas from each bank.

(Continued on the next page)

Let us suppose that the pilgrim has come to the Ganges. Then the question is, how is he to proceed about a bath in the Ganges. Many of the digests contain several alternate forms of the sankalpa to be made at the time of Gangā-snāna. For example, the Prāyaścittatattva (pp. 497–498) contains a very elaborate sankalpa. A simple one is quoted below from the Gangāvākyāvalī.[1339] The mode of bathing prescribed in the गङ्गावा. p. 136. गव्यूति is a measure of length or distance generally taken as equal to two krośas There was some difference about the measures of length. According to the Amarakośa a gavyūti is equal to two krośas 'गव्यूति. स्त्री क्रोशयुगम्'. According to the वायु 8 105–107 and 101. 122–126 and ब्रह्माण्ड II 7 96–101 the measures are 24 अङ्गुल्स = one हस्त, 96 अङ्गुल्स = धनुः (which is same as दण्ड, युग and नाली), 2000 धनुः = गव्यूति and 8000 धनु॰ = योजन, acc. to the मार्कण्डेय 46. 37–40, 4 हस्तs = धनुः or दण्ड, or युग or नालिका), 2000 धनु = क्रोश, 4 क्रोशs = गव्यूति which is the same as योजन. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 145 n. 185.

---

(Continued from the last page)

1338 प्रवाहमवधिं कृत्वा यावद्धस्तचतुष्टयम्। अत्र नारायण स्वामी नान्यः स्वामी कदाचन॥ न तत्र प्रतिगृह्णीयात्प्राणै कण्ठगतैरपि॥ भाद्रशुक्लचतुर्दश्यां यावदाक्रमते जलम्। तावद्भूमि विजानीयात्तद्दूर तीरमुच्यते। नारद (उत्तर) 43 116–118 q. by तीर्थचि. p. 266 and प्राय. तत्त्व p. 499 (from ब्रह्मपुराण and the verse भाद्र॰ from दानधर्म) and by गगावा p. 136 (the first verse from ब्रह्माण्ड). नारद (उत्तर) 43. 118 (last half) is सार्धहस्तशतं यावद्भूमेस्तीरं तत परम्॥. The digests read भाद्रकृष्ण॰ for भाद्रशुक्ल॰.

1339. अद्यामुके मासि अमुकपक्षे अमुकतिथौ सद्य.पापप्रणाशपूर्वक सर्वपुण्यप्राप्तिकामो गङ्गाया स्नानमह करिष्ये। गङ्गावा. p 141. Vide तीर्थचि. pp. 205–207 for several alternative सङ्कल्पs before गङ्गास्नान.

Matsyapurāna 102 is common to people of all varnas and students of all the different recensions of the Veda. The Matsyapurāna, chap. 102, which contains one of the earliest procedure of a religious bath, and which has been taken over by several digests such as the Gangāvākyāvalī (pp. 148–152) is summarised here. Cleanliness (of the body) and clean thoughts do not exist without a bath; therefore bathing is first prescribed for making the mind pure. One may bathe with water drawn (in a vessel from a well or stream) or with water not so drawn. A wise man should fix upon a holy spot after repeating the fundamental mantra 'namo Nārāyanāya' (reverent bow to Nārāyana). A man holding darbha grass in his hand and being clean and pure should perform ācamana (ceremonial sipping of water). He should select a spot four hastas square on all sides and invoke the Ganges (to come or be present there) with the following mantras 'you are sprung from the foot of Visnu, you are a devotee of Visnu, you worship Visnu; therefore save us from sins committed from birth to death. Vāyu declared that there are three and a half crores (35 millions) of holy places in heaven, on the earth and in mid air; all these, O Ganges (daughter of Jahnu), belong to you. Your name among the gods is Nandinī (the joy-giving) and also Nalinī and there are other names of yours viz. Daksā, Prthvī, Vihagā, Viśvakāyā, Amrtā, Śivā, Vidyādharī, Suprasāntā, Viśva-prasādinī, Ksemā, Jāhnavī, Śāntā, Śāntipradāyinī.[1339a] One should utter these holy names at the time of bathing; then the Ganges flowing in the three worlds would be near (even if a man bathed at home). He should, after folding his hands, cast on his head thrice, four times, five times or seven times water on which he has muttered the mantras seven times. After having invoked the clay (in the river bed) with the mantras 'O earth! Oh clay! you are crossed over by horses and chariots, by Visnu, remove my sin which I may have committed by my evil deeds; you were brought up (from the depths of the sea) by the Boar incarnation of Krsna with his hundred hands. O clay! you are given (to the world) by Brahmā and you had mantras repeated over you by Kāśyapa. Occupying my limbs may you drive away all my sin! Oh clay! Give us 1339 a. Verses 1–8 of मत्स्य० chap 102 are q. by the स्मृतिच. I. p. 182. The स्मृतिच I p 183 also gives the twelve names of गङ्गा differently. पद्म (IV. 89. 17–19) has the same holy names of the Gangas that the Matsya (102. 6–8) mentions For the thousand names of the Ganges, vide above p. 585, prosperity; everything is centered in you; a bow to you, that are virtuous and the source of all worlds'. Having thus bathed and having sipped water (ācamana) according to the procedure prescribed, he should get out of the Ganges and should put on two white and pure garments. Then he should perform tarpana[1340] for the satisfaction of the three worlds. (He should say) 'This water is being offered by me for satiating gods, yakṣas, nāgas, gandharvas, apsarases, asuras, cruel snakes, eagles, trees, jackals, birds, creatures that sustain themselves on air and water or that move in the sky, all beings that are without support and those that are devoted to the dictates of dharma'. The person (performing tarpana) should wear the sacred thread in the upavīta form (when satiating gods) and then wear it in the 1340 Tarpana (satiating with the offering of water) is of two kinds viz principal (pradhāna) and subsidiary (anga). The first has to be performed every day by a twice-born person (who has finished his studies) for the gods, sages and pitrs in that order The 2nd is performed as an anga of snāna. नित्य नैमित्तिकं काम्य त्रिविध स्नानमुच्यते। तर्पण तु भवेत्तस्याङ्गरूपेण प्रकीर्तितम्॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by गंगाभक्ति० p 162 तर्पण is an anga of bath as well as of brahma yajña Tarpana has been described at great length in H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 668–669 and pp 689–695. Therefore it is not necessary to make any lengthy remarks on tarpana here. A few matters that deserve attention are mentioned One rule is that one has to perform tarpana according to the provisions of his own recension of the Veda The persons to whom water is to be offered and the manner in which it is to be offered are set out on p 692 of vol II of H of Dh Another rule is that tarpana has to be done (even if the day is not auspicious) at a tīrtha, in Gayā, in pitrpakṣa (i e the dark half of Bhādrapada) with water mixed with sesame 'तीर्थे तिथिमवेक्षे (तिथिविक्षेपे?) च गयाया मेतपक्षके। निषिद्धेपि दिने कुर्यात्तर्पण तिलमिश्रितम्॥'. A widow also has to perform tarpana for her husband and his relatives at a sacred place. An ascetic (sannyāsin) has not to do it. A person whose father is living has not to perform tarpana, but acc. to Viṣnupurāna he offers three handfuls to gods, three to the sages and one to Prajāpati (in the form 'devās-trpyantām') Another rule is the one makes an offering in śrāddha or into fire with one hand only (the right hand) but in tarpana water is poured into the stream in which one is bathing or on land with both hands. 'श्राद्धे हवनकाले च पाणिनैकेन दीयते। तर्पणे तूभय कुर्यादेष एव विधि. स्मृत.॥' नारदीयपुराण (उत्तर) 57, 62–63. If a man is not able to perform the elaborate tarpana described in vol II. he should repeat the mantras from वायुपुराण 110 21–22 set out here and offer three añjalis of water mixed with sesame and kuśas, आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्त देवर्षिपितृमानवा। तृप्यन्तु पितरः सर्वे मातृमातामहादय॥ अतीतकुलकोटीना सप्तद्वीपनिवासिनाम्। आ ब्रह्मभुवनाल्लोकादिदमस्तु तिलोदकम्॥.

---

nivīta[1341] form (when satiating men). He should devotedly satiate men, the sages who were sons of Brahmā; he should say "May Sanaka, Sananda and Sanātana, Kapila, Āsuri, Vodhu, Pañcaśikha—may all these reach satiety by the water offered by me." Then he should satiate with water and akṣata grains (the sages) Marīci, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Pracetas, Vasistha, Bhrgu, Nārada; he should satiate all these devarṣis, and brahmarsis,[1342] and rṣis with water and akṣatas. Then wearing the sacred thread in the apasavya mode, bending his left knee on the ground, he satiates with water mixed with sesame and sandal-wood paste pitrs called Agniṣvātta[1343], Saumya, Havismat, Ūsmapa, Sukālin, Barhisad and others called Ājyapa. He should make a bow to Yama, Dharmarāja, Mṛtyu, Antaka, Vaivasvata, Kāla, destroyer of all beings, Audumbara, Dadhna, Nīla, Parameśthin, Vrkodara, Citra and Citragupta. With darbhas in his hand a wise man should satiate his pitrs. He should satiate with devotion his father and the rest by uttering their names and gotra and his maternal grandfather and others in the same way and should recite the following mantra 'May those who are my bandhus or not my bandhus or were my bandhus in some previous life reach satisfaction and also whoever desires satisfaction from me.' Then he should sip water (perform ācamana) in the prescribed way and draw the figure of a lotus in front of himself and offer thereon to the Sun arghya (respectful offering of water) with water mixed with red sandal-wood paste, flowers and aksatas (grains of rice) and repeat the names of Sūrya (the Sun) 'Bow to thee! that are Visnu in another form, that art the face of Visnu, that hast thousand rays and that art all refulgence. Bow to thee that art beneficent, the lord of the world. Bow to thee that art adorned with divine sandalwood, that art seated on a lotus, adorned with ear-rings and armlets, the lord of people; that awakenest (or enlightenest) the whole world, that goest everywhere and markest the good and evil 1341 निवीत मनुष्याणां प्राचीनावीतं पितृणामुपवीतं देवानाम्। तै सं. II. 5. 11. 1. For explanation of these three modes of wearing the sacred thread, vide H. of Dh. vol II pp 287–288 and apasavya has been explained in this volume in note 1095.

1342. Vide Vāyu 61 88–90 for definitions and enumeration of ब्रह्मर्षि, देवर्षि, राजर्षि and also Baud. Gr I. 7 and Devala q by अपरार्क pp. 442–443 for ऋषि and other terms 1343. For Agniṣvātta and other names of classes of pitrs, vide above pp. 343–344 and Brahmānda III. 10. 53, 75, 93, 96.

deeds; a bow to thee who art a god to all. O Bhāskara (Sun), be well disposed to me. A bow to thee, Divākara (maker of day). A bow to thee, Prabhākara (source of refulgence)'. Having thus bowed to the Sun and having circumambulated thrice (the lotus drawn for representing the sun) and touching a brāhmana, gold and a cow, the person (bather) should go to a temple of Visnu (or to his own house, according to another reading).[1344]

It may be noted that the verses of the Matsyapurāna (102. 2-31) summarised above occur (with slight variations of a word here and there) in Padma (Pātāla-khanda 89. 12-42) and Srsti-khanda, chap. 20. 145-176.

